RIGHT HONORABLE SIR WYLLIAM CECILL KNIGHT,

PRINCIPALL SECRETARIJ TO THE QUEENES MAIESTY, AND OF HIR PRIUIE COUNSAYLE, MAYSTER OF THE COURTES OF WARDES AND LYUERIES,

AND CHAUNCELOUR OF THE VNIUERSITIE OF CAMBRIDGE:

RICHARD GRAFTON CITEZEN OF LONDON, WYSHETH LONG HEALTH WYTH ENCREASE, OF HONOR.

OVBTLES, your Honor and other maye maruayle, or paraduenture mislyke, that after so many books alreadie set forth, bearing the names and tytles of Chronicles of Englande, I should accomber the Readers superfluouslye wyth one mo of the same matter: Neuerthelesse, the contentes of thys and the sayde other former bookes being compared, your wisedome can well discerne, and other shall easely perceyue, that this labor of mine was neyther altogether needelesse nor vnprofitable. For among so many writers, there hath yet none to my knowledge, published any full, playne and meere Englishe historie. For some of them of purpose meaning to write short notes in maner of Annales, commonly called Abridgementes, rather touch the tymes when things were done, then declare the maner of the doyngs, leaving thereby some necessitie of larger explication, and referring the desirous Reader to a further serch and study. Other have dealt but with the reignes of a few kings, & yet therof have made long bookes, with many tedious digressions, obscure descriptions & friuolous dilatations: which forme of writing if it should not be reformed, coulde not in the whole be followed without pestering the Reader with importable Volumes. Other haue intermyngled the affaires of other forreyne Nations with the matters of Englande, yea, euen where the one had no concurrencie or dependaunce of the other. Others, namely straungers, as well in their bookes written purposely of England, as in discourses enterlaced in their histories of their awne Countries, and specially concerning the actes of later times, both in matters of Religion and civill pollicie, partly following common reportes, and partly vsyng envious constructions have eyther by ignoraunce or malyce slaunderously written and erred from the manifest truth: so farre as to me seemeth a better worke could not be taken in hande, then that some learned Englishe man of good intelligence would by some speciall worke, written in such a language as other Nations might for the more part best vnderstand, detect, and with plaine declaration of the truth, confute such errors & vntruths as are written and scattred in foreyn stories concerning this realme: For some supply of all which defectes and errors conteyned in the said former Chronicles of Englande, I have to the best of my small skill & with the vttermost of my diligence, gathered this booke, conteining a complete and whole history from the first entrie and habitation of the Britons in this Islande, vnto the first yere of the reigne of our soueraigne Lady Queene Elizabeth, presently reigning. Large ynough (I trust) without tediousnesse, short ynough without darknesse, meerely and onely of Englande, not mingling the same with foreyne matters impertynent to oure state, and finally true without misreporting, so farre as the following of the best Aucthors & reporters & mine awne experience (hauing of long time seene and purposely noted much therof) could conceaue. And now having ended this worke, and seking to whom I might for testification of my speciall good will present it, or for patronage and defence dedicate it, and principally for all judgement and correction to submit it: Among many I have chosen your Mastership, moved therto by experience of your curteous judgement towardes those that trauaile to any honest purpose rather helping & comforting their weaknesse, then condempning their simple (but yet well meanyng) endeuours. By which your accustomed good acceptation of others, I am the rather boldened to beseeche your Maistership to receaue this my worke and me, in such maner as you doe those, in whome (howsoeuer there be want of power) there wanteth no poynt of good will and seruiceable affection. Wherefore at this present, not meaning to trouble your Maistership with any farther tedious matter, my prayer shall be to God for your long prosperous estate with encrease of Gods grace, and so thereby to direct your trauayles in the seruice of the Queenes most excellent Maiestie, and the common weale of this Realme, as you may alwayes leave to the posteritie happy and plentifull matter of worthy report.

TO THE GENTLE READER.

A S I have (with my no little trauayle) collected this History, which I name a Chronicle at large and mere History of the affaires of Englande, for that the same is not intermixed with foreine affayres: so most gentle & louyng Reader, I beseche thee take these my said traueyles not only in good part, but also pardon the rudenesse of my stile & lack of learning which I acknowledge, or otherwise the same should have beene better furnished. But for some instruction to the better vnderstanding of mine order observed in the discourse of this History: I thought best to admonish thee, that forasmuch as this Island of Briteyn (whereof the greater part is now called England) had the same time of creation that all the rest of the earth had: therfore I begin this booke at the creation of the world, and so continue the same with the blessed line and issue of Adam by Seth his sonne, vnto our Sauiour Christ. And by the waye, when Brute, as by the testimonie of most aucthors, first entred this Island and named it Briteyne: there beginneth mine History of this Realme, and from thence lyneally I proceede to the reignes of all such as succeeded Brute in state of kings, euen to the tyme of Wylliam the Conquerour, where I begin my second volume, because in the former parte (as maye at large appeere) thys Islande being first inhabited by Brute, was afterwarde conquered by the Romaynes, and then subdued and possessed by the Saxons, & lastly by the Danes, and so was it neuer in perfect state of gouernement, vntill the last conquest of the Normanes, from whence the Histories of times doe more plentifully and plainely appeere. And in the discourse of this Historie, following the common opinion of the deuision of this Islande in three partes made by Brute to hys three sonnes, Locryne, Albanact and Camber, that is to say, of the part nowe called Englande vnto Locryne his eldest sonne, and of that part nowe called Scotlande vnto Albanact his second sonne, and of that part nowe called Wales to Camber hys third sonne, of whose name the same part is called to thys day in welshe

Cambry. For asmuch, I say, as before this decision, this Island of Briteyn was but one entier Isle, therefore professing to write an History of the Princes of this part, now called Englande: I thought it not meete vtterly to omit Scotland, being a part of this Isle of Briteyn: And therfore in order as the Britones reigned, so I note also the succession of the kings of Scotlande, wherein I doe not professe to write of them any speciall Historie, farther then they had to doe with the kings of this Realme, or the kinges with them, but with a briefe recytall of their kings names & time of their reignes to passe them ouer.

I have also to admonishe you concerning the numbers that stande in the margent of this booke, from the creation of the worlde to the birth of Christ, having a lyne stryken betweene them. Those numbers that are about the lyne, are the yeres of the world from the creation: And those vnder the line, are the yeres before Christ. But after the comming of Christ, then the vppermost numbers are the yeres of Christ, and the nethermost are the yeres of every severall king and so it continueth to the ende of the booke.

Here also I must aduertise you that in the computation of yeres, I follow the accompt of the Hebrues, the which I take to be most true, the which accompt, I have at large set foorth in the. 55 page of my first Volume.

Also in the ende of this booke, ye shall finde an exact table, wherein is expressed not onelye the reigne of every king of this realme, sithen the time that the City of London hath beene governed by Bailifes, Maiors and Shrifes, and the day and yere that they first entred into their severall reignes: but also the names of those that then were and ever sithence have beene Maiors and Shiriefes of London, with the yeres, monethes and dayes of their entrie into their severall charge. Also I have placed in this booke two severall Tables*, the one in the ende of the first volume, and before the conquest, which I have devided into seven parts, according to the vij. Ages of the world, as may at large appere in the 55. page of the said Volume as aforesaid, & the other at the end of the second and last volume, that is, from the conquest to the reigne of our Sovereigne Ladye Queene Elizabeth, the which Tables serve for the readye fynd-

ing of anye name or speciall matter conteyned in the sayde booke, by the letter and order of the Alphabet.

And where I have in the xiij. yere of king Henry the first promised to place the maner & order that was first taken for the holding of the Parliament in the time of king Edwarde the thirde. I have sithen that time for sundry good causes thought meete to omit the same, and therfore I admonishe the Reader not to looke for it.

And here to conclude most gentle Reader, I beseeche thee louyngly and fauourablye to iudge and report of mee and my booke, to whose iudgement I most humbly submit the same, and such things as shall seeme to be a misse, or not so well penned and fully set foorth as by a learned and skilfull man the same might have beene, either favourably doe thy indeuour to amende the same, or else impute the fault to the diversitie and variance of Aucthors, among which differences, it shall be harde to trie the truth, and thus I bid the farewell.

RICHARD GRAFTON,

THOMAS N. TO THE READER.

CORASMVCH as the examples of good and euill doinges, in thys that the one sort doe allure to good, the other doe fraye from euill, doe tende both to one good ende in well disposed mindes, it hath euer beene thought a beneficiall woorke to the societie of men to set forth in historie and true report, the doinges and liues of men as they have deserved. And though vertue of it selfe be of worthynesse ynough to be loued for it selfe, and in honest mindes free from vanitie, is to her selfe sufficient recompense, yet hath God for commoditie of mankinde planted in nature a prayse worthye affection to be well spoken of for doing well, and shame to beare infamy for doyng euill. Thys hath made vertue comended to encrease: This hath restreyned those from sinne, whom conscience coulde not: This hath holden men in order for feare of the sight of men, whome the feare of God that seeth all withheld not: This hath raysed men out of drowsie idlenesse, whome the sounde of Gods promises and threatnings awaked not: This, whereby is quickened endeuour to lyue after death, is the very proofe in nature, that mans minde confesseth and hopeth for immortality.

As true reporting therfore an ayleth to the encrease of well doing, so good acceptation is profitable to the furtheraunce of the true reporters labour, and is the verie recompense that energy honest transpler in any good works shall be sure to finde at the hands of energy one that feareth not to heere shame for his euill deedes.

And as it is reason that good be done to him that doth good to many, so where the author and gatherer of this woorke hath with his honest labors made the noble actes and good deseruings of many to liue in good memorie, so I thought it not reason, specially hauing among infinite other receaued commoditie by his labors, that his owne well doyngs should altogether dye in forgetfulnesse. I must therefore good Reader, to the intent to prouoke thy fauourable receauing and construyng of thys worke, put thee in remembraunce how manye wayes the great labors of this man susteyned with great charge and perilles, haue bene to vs profitable, that we be not to him vnthankfull. It hath sufficed him to deserue well, it shall not suffise vs to receaue without receauing well, that is, to the encouragement of him and other to deserue well. That which he of modestie maye not vtter, we of honestie maye not hide. This therefore I am to affirme because I knowe it, and the more assuredly to affirme because many moe knowe it, and most reasonably to allege because the whole Realme hath profite by it, that the man hath not spent one quarter of hys lyfe to his owne ease or commoditie, but as a good Citezen for the benefite of the Citie of London, as a good Englisheman for the profite of the Realme of Englande, and as a good Christian for the furtheraunce of true religion. The Bible in English, that vnvaluable Iewell, we have by his trauayle, first with his charge and attendaunce procuring the translation thereof, then sundrie times copying the same out with his owne hande, thirdly printing it in Fraunce with his great expense and perill, when the rage of those holy fathers which then enuyed Christia mens christianity, not only would not suffer it to be done in England, but also procured the same beyng printed to be attached in Fraunce & openly burned, himselfe hardly escaping with his life. Not discouraged herewith, but still carried with zeale to doe good, he attempted the woorke againe, and to Gods great praise and to the edification of Christes Church, performed it. Sithence that, how beneficiall he hath beene in furthering good wittes to learning, in setting learned wittes to working, because the rehearsall in particularitie cannot but have some affinitie with exprobration, I leave to their remembraunce that haue tasted of it, and shall be mooued in their conscience where it maye doe him good, to testifie it. But the Citie of London may not forget, or forgetting may not be vntolde of it, or well remembering may not suppresse it, that moe maye be mooued by his example and their thankfulnesse, to be suche Citezens as he hath beene, how he hath trauayled in their affayres from time to time, as if anye private man among them had but a servaunt or factor of such faythfulnesse, policie and painefulnesse, as he hath shewed himselfe for them

all, it should not for shame be forgotten, I will not saye vnrecompensed. Who knoweth not his diligence in laboring for and attending on that noble worke of that most blessed Prince, King, yea saint, Edwarde the sixt, in erecting the Hospitalles? his labors and expences in ouerseing the same beyng erected, preferring it before all his awne businesse to his great hinderaunce? It is proueable ynough if any will be so past honest thankfulnesse to denie it. And nowe lastly, beside a number of good bookes by him published, he hath for the whole realme gathered thys Chronycle of Englande, wherein thou mayest readily see with small trauayle and coste that which heretofore scattered in manye woorkes was chargeable to get and troublesome to finde, beside very much that in none heretofore hath beene vttered.

In this he hath brought thinks vnknowne from darknesse, vntrue reportes from error, confusion of affayres from disorder, impertynent tediousnesse to reasonable proportion, and hath made a large, playne, true and meere historie of this Realme, wherby men may be certified of truth, the Reader may have delitefull & profitable knowlege: our Countrie men and the subjects, but specially the princes therof, delyuered from slaunderous reportes of foreyne writers: Kings maye learne to depende vpon God, and acknowlege his gouernaunce in their protection: the nobilitie may reade the true honor of their auncestours: The Ecclesiasticall state maye learne to abhorre trayterous practises and indignities done against kings by the Popishe vsurping Clergie: high and lowe may shonne rebellions by their dreadfull effectes, and beware how they attempt against right, how vnhable socuer the person be that beareth it: we all may be warned to thanke God for the most vertuous, wise and peaceable gouernement that we now eniove in comparison of terrible times heretofore: Eche man maye haue a glasse to see things past, whereby to iudge iustly of thinges present and wisely of things to come: To beholde the beautie of vertue and deformitie of vice: what sweetenesse remayneth after well doing, what stinges of repentaunce euill doing leaueth: Men of elder honor, maye learne not to deface their forefathers prayse: The newer sort maye seeke to bring light and dignitie to their houses: and finally all men in seing the course of Gods doings, may learne to dread his iudgementes and loue his prouidence: may see how good doings be defended, euill doings and wrongs reuenged, bloud with bloud, violence with violence, iniuries with miseries, and so growe into an affection to geue to eche matter his right iudgement, to eche superiour his right duetie, to eche other that which iustice or charitie wylleth, and to all well doers, & among others to this setter forth of so many well doyngs, such thankfull acceptation as his whole life employed to common benefite hath deserued, Receaue it therfore good Reader so, as thy selfe maiest haue most benefite of it, and he may in his age thinke his youth well spent in doing good to London, Englande and Christianitie. And aboue all thinges forget not, to geue God thankes for the Queenes maiesties most gracious reigne, so farre in comparison exceeding the tymes that here thou readest of: And beseeche him long to preserue her, without or after whome there is great daunger and small hope: and specially et euery one endeuour for himselfe, not to moue God for our sinnes to cal her home from vs to him to hastily:

Sera at in cœlum redeat, diúq; Læta vt intersit populo Britanno, Neu sinat hostes equitare inultos, Se duce, Christi.

THE FIRST AGE. AND FIRST PART OF #### THIS CHRONICLE.

THE FIRST AGE.

In The beginning God made Heauen and Earth: and Moses the deuine Prophet and Historiographer, (who was before the Incarnation of Iesu Christ. 1569. yeres) sheweth vs howe that GOD deuided hys woorke of Creation into. vj. dayes.

Creation of 7° world.

The first day he made the Light, and deuided the same from the darcknesse, and the The.j. days light he called Daye and the darcknesse Night.

The seconde day he ordeyned the Firmament, to be between the Waters, the which The ij. days deuided the waters from the waters, that is to saye, those that are about from them that are beneath.

The thirde daye he gathered all the waters together that couered the face of the Earth The. iij. day. into one place, that the earth might be drie, and that it might bring foorth Herbes and Trees.

The fourth day he beutified the Firmament with lights, and ordeyned the Sonne The 4 day. to shine in the daye, and the Moone and Starres in the night.

The fift daye he Created the Fishes in the Water, and Fowles vpon the Earth.

The. v. day.

The sixt day he Created Beastes, enery one in his kinde: and the same day (as the holy The vi. day. Scriptures doe witnesse) when the Heauen, the Earth, and all the furnitures thereof, were created and made, God then of the slyme of the Earth made Man, that most excellent Creation of man. Creature, vnto his awne likenesse, and similitude, and breathed into him the breath of lyfe. Thus was Heauen and Earth finished with all their Apparell in sixe dayes, and the seuenth day God rested from his labors and sanctified the same, and commaunded it to be The vij. day. kept as his holy Sabaoth:

After that GOD had created Man (as afore saide) he then gaue vnto him such grace-that without any instructions, but onely with the endowment of his original righteousnesse, he was perfectly learned and seene in all the liberall Artes and Sciences. He was also endewed with the knowledge of all Herbes, Trees, Metalles, Stones, Birdes, Beastes, Fowles, Fishes, Wormes, and all other Creatures. Also God gaue vnto him power ouer all things that were vpon the Earth, and in the Sea, so that vnto all Beastes, Fishes, and Foules, he gaue a proper & conueniet name according to their natures, ene in such sort as they are called at this day. Then was he brought by the Almightie Lorde into the pleasant place of Paradise replenished with all delights and pleasures, the felicitic of which place

Saint Augustine doth describe in this maner.

Man lyued in Paradise as he would, so long as he willed that God commaunded, he lyued having the fruition of God, of whome came his goodnesse, he lyued wanting nothing. Having in his power withall, so to lyue continually. Meate was ever ready and at hand bicause he should not be hungry, and drinke for that he should not thrust; and the trée of lyfe, that age shoulde not consume and ende his lyfe. No corruption was their eyther in his body or came of his body, which was to the lothsonnesse or annoyance of any of his senses. He feared vol. 1.

neither inward diseases nor outward violence. In his fleshe was most perfite health, and in euerie part of his soule no lesse tranquilitie and quietnesse. As in Paradise no griefe was felt through heat or colde, so likewise to the inhabitours thereof happened there nothing through valaufull desire, or feare, that might be to the impechment of his good and godly inclined will. In him was there no sorowfulnesse at all, nor yet any vaine mirth or gladnesse. True ioy was in him, continued by God, towards whome there issued a burning Charite out of a pure hart, a good conscience and an vnfayned faith: Betweene the Man and the Woman, there was semblably a faithfull societie, proceeding of verteous and honest looue, and agréeable watching of minde and bodye: and finally a kéeping of Gods commaundements without griefe or grudging, to wéete, that of all the trées in Paradise he might laufully eate, so that he absteyned from the trée of the knowledge of good and euill. Hitherto Saint Augustine.

Then God perceyuing that as yet there was no creature made like vnto Man which might be an helper and companion vnto him, he forthwith cast Adam into a slumber, and tooke a rib out of his side, filling the place with flesh, whereof he made the Woman, Creation of Woand named her Heauah, or Eue (that is to say, lyue or be lyuing) and brought her vnto him, whome when Adam sawe, he sayde: This is now bone of my bones and flesh of my flesh, she shall be called Woman, bicause she is taken out of the Man: wherefore Man shall forsake his father and mother and cleaue vnto his Wyfe, and they two shall be one flesh. And the Lord blessed and sayde vnto them. Increase and multiplie, and fill the earth and subdue it, and be ye Lorde ouer the Fishes of the Sea, the Fowles of the aire, and of all the Beastes that move on the earth.

Babell, Jerusa-

But after that Man was placed in the highe felicitie as aforesayde, he forgetting God, through the craft and subtiltie of the Serpent (which a little before was driven oute of Heauen) and by the prouocation of the Woman broke the commaundement, geuen to him by God, wherfore he with Eue his wyfe were driven out of Paradise and made subject to death, Sinne and all kindes of miserie: For the earth was restrayned, that it should no more bring foorth fruit of it selfe, but that by the sweate and painefull labors of theyr bodies, they should trauaile and leade their lyues. Then also came sicknesse vpon them, and heate and colde began to assayle their tender bodyes. For after they began to sinne, God did open the power of Sathan, but yet against him of the seede of the Woman: he promised that Christ should come and destroy his power, and deliuer vs from his thraldome, death and sinne. This was the first promulgation of the Gospell, at which tyme Adam and Eue, began the kingdome of Christ and the Church. And so Adam and Eue tooke comfort of the promise that was made of Christes comming, and of these two persons the Church

> ¶ And when Adam was thus for his disobedience and transgression cast out of Paradise, he fell to labour and tilling of the ground, according as almightie God had sayd vnto him, and soone after he knew his wyfe Eue (and as Iames Philip of Bergamo sayth, in the suppliment of his Chronicles) he begat on her. xv. yeres after the creation of the Worlde two Children at one tyme, a Sonne and a Daughter, that is to say, Cain, and Calmana, and. xv. yeres next following which was the. xxx. yere of the creation of the worlde, he begat againe at one tyme a Sonne and a Daughter, that is to say, Abell, and Delbora.

> The aforesayde two brethren Cain, and Abell, were the first founders of two contrarie Cities, Babell, & Ierusalem, by the one is vnderstand Confusion, and by the other, the vision of peace. Their father taught them to feare God, and to worship him with sacrifices. Cain was of a naughtye and vnhappie disposition, geuen vnto al vice and mischiefe, and was the first that tilled the earth, he offered alwayes the worst and most vile things vnto GOD: But Abeil the yonger Brother, was of contrarye conditions: he gaue himself to all vertue, and in all things that he went about, he thought God to be present, his occupation was the keping of Beastes, and he euer offred vnto God of the best things that he had. For in their Sacrifices his offering was euermore consumed with fire from Heauen, but his brother Cains remayned vntouched: wherefore Cain (perceyuing that his brothers doyng, was more acceptable before God than his) enuied him, and ought him most damnable hatred and malice, and in the ende most cruellye and shamefully murdered and slue him.

The But Adam heering of the death of his sonne Abell whom he loued most derely, Adam mourned mourned and lamented his death, and continued mourning for him by the space of one for the death of Abel an hunhundred yere. And as sayth Nicholas de Lira vpon the iiij. of Gene: Adam did with dreth yere. himselfe decree neuer more to have knowne Eue his wyfe: But afterward by Gods speciall will and providence, he did knowe her, to the intent that of that lyne our Saujour Christ should come, and not of the line of cursed Cain.

And after that Adam had knowne his wyfe againe, he begat on her his third sonne' named Seth, when he was. C.xxx. yeres of age, of whom came and discended Noe, Abraham, Isaac, Iacob, Dauid, and consequently our Sauiour Iesu Christ. And Adam (as saith Iames Philip) had beside Cain, Abell, Seth, and theyr sisters, other. xxx. Gene. iiij.

Seth.

Children, and lived. ix.C.xxx. yere.

Now after y Cain had done this horrible murther aforesayd, he fled fro his father, and builded a Citie in the Orient, which was the first Citie in the world, and named it Enoch, after the name of his first begotten sonne, whom he begat of his sister Calmana, Enoch the first in the lande of Inde after he had taken her to wife, as it was laufull for him then to doo for Worlde. the multiplication and encrease of the worlde, which Calmana was borne. xv. yeres after the creation of the worlde as Cain himselfe was. And as Saint Augustine in his S. August. booke of the Citie of God sayth, that as it was then laufull for the brother to take the sister to wyfe for the encrease of the worlde, so is it now most damnable to attempt or do the lyke, for that we are by the expresse worde of God prohibited and forbidden so to doo. This Cain was a great toyler and moyler in the earth, but very coueteous and full of malice withall, at the prosperitie of any other, which was the onely cause that he murdered and slue his awne onelye brother Abell as aforesaide: For the which fratricide or brother murthering, he Cain ye first Murtherers was by the sentence of almighty God publyshed for a vagabond and a ronnagate, & so reputed and taken all the dayes of his lyfe, as afterward it shall more plaintlye appeare in Gene. iiij. the discription, or rather in the Historie of Abell. Of the foresaide Enoch came afterward a great Nacion of people, but they were very wicked full of sinne, and aboue all other thinges they did exceede in the Sinne of the flesh, which was the greatest cause that his lyne did so wonderfully eencrease and multiplie. This Cain for that God had pronounced him to be accursed, and sayde that the Earth should not yeelde vnto him any fruite, as it is expressed in the. iiij. of Gene: for that cause he left off from the toyle and Gene. iiij. labor of the Earth, the which before he did exercise, and sought out by his wicked imagination the Mathematicall artes. And although he found in that trauaile great vexacion Cain the inuenter of mynd, and businesse, yet as the paine ceased not, so did not his auaricious couetous thematicallartes and greedye desire cease, by rapyne, spoyle, or by any other wicked meane to attaine to treasure and ryches, to the enryching of himselfe, without regarde or respect by what meane so euer he came by the same, not sparing neyther the robbery nor spoyle of his people, nor yet the robbery of his children, nor of his children children, and all that came of them or any of them: Of the which mischiefes he was a most chiefe and principal doctor. Also he altered and chaunged the honest and simple doings that before tyme had bene vsed by honest and good men in their exchaunges and traffiques, and caused all things to be done by weyghts and measures, and brought in craft and corruption.

The name of Cain by interpretation is as much to say as possession, and as Saint S. Augustia Augustine sayth in his. xv. Booke of the Citie of God in the. xvij. Chapter: Cain might well be called possession, for in a little tyme he and his posteritie possessed in a manner the whole Earth, but in the ende they were drouned and destroyed by Noes flood.

in his tender age learned the feare of God and his iustice, in such sort that in all his doings and affaires, he imagined God to be present, and that he coulde doe nothing out of Gods sight and knowledge, and therefore he endeuored himselfe to all vertue and good liuyng, and did sacrifice vnto God of all the chiefest and best of his Cattell. And therefore almightie God had respect and regarde vnto him, and did multiplie and encrease his Cattell and goodes, which was the cause that his brother Cain enuied him. For the saide Cain, being a laborer & toyler of the earth, and yet notwithstanding insaciable, greedye. and couetous coulde notabide to see his brother so greatly to prosper and encrease, and therefore by the prouocation of the Deuill, rather desiring to be deprived of all consolation and comfort, then to lyue and remaine in the fellowship and companie of his owne naturall and onely brother Abell, on a tyme sayde thus vnto his sayde brother Abell. brother let vs go foorth into the Fieldes: To the which innocent Abell not thinking of any guile or deceit did consent. And when they were together alone, sodainely Cain ranne vpon him and slue him, the sayde Abell being then one hundred yeres of age, the which Abell is accounted the first Martir, and the first that possessed Paradise. And when thou shalt labour the earth it shall not yeelde to thee any fruit. Thou shalt be as a Vacabond and fugitive vpon the earth all the dayes of thy lyfe. ¶ Iosephus writeth that Adam & Seth made two Columnes or Pillers, one of Brasse, the other of Stone, for they foreseing that the worlde should perishe and be consumed, once by water, as it came to passe at the generall flood, and afterward by fyre, which tyme is yet to come, graued in the sayde Pillers such things as they vnderstood of the glorie of almightie God, to the intent that Gods most holy worde might be preserved from perishing, and that the same should remaine to their posteritie, that those y followed might know what God had done in the former time. And he also writeth that Adam and Adam and Seth Seth deuyded the yere into. xij. Monethes, and did first observe and teache the course of into. xij. A digressio.

matter by Gods sufferance, that with such measure as himselfe had measured to his only & owne naturall brother whom he had most cruelly murthered, so he likewise at the last was murthered himselfe, and that by one that proceeded out of his owne lyne.

IN The beginning of the worlde most people went naked, saving that they were partly covered with the skinnes of some beast, & at that tyme they had no dwelling houses to defend them, neyther from the colde, nor yet from the heate, but after their owne phantasies they made with prety boughes and twigs of trees, such little pretye lodgings, as we call Cabons, or Boothes. And it so channeed that Cain beyng verye olde and also werye, happened one day to lay him downe to rest in a bush that was enclosed with grene boughes as afore-And Lamech one of the kindred of Cain in § fift degree, who by reason of his great age had lost his sight, & yet at a time was disposed to go abroad to kill some wilde Beast, and taking his How and Arrowes, he tooke also with him a little boy to lead and direct him where he might have a good shot. And when they drew somewhat neare vnto the Bush where Cain lay, the little boye espying the bush to wag, and seeing as it were a great thing in the midst thereof, he imagined that there lay some wilde beast, and the boy beyng afraid therof gaue knowledge vnto old father Lamech, that in a bush stading right before him and not farre off, there lay a great and terrible beast. And Lamcch vpon the report of the child stretched out his arme & drew a streight draught towarde the bush, where he slew his cosin Cain, that lay in the same after he had lived, vii. C. xxx. yeres, as sayth Philo. Of this ye may reade more in Nicholas de Lira vpon the fourth Chap. of Genesis.

Ranulphus.

¶ This Lamech as sayth Raynulph Monke of Chester, was the yii, in degree from Adam, and was of the lyne of Cain, and the most shrewe, for he was the first that brought in Bigamye and spousebreach against the lawe of God and nature, and against Gods owne doome.

¶ And this Lamech had a sonne called Iuball or Iabell, who was the first inventer of Portative tents the Portative tents or lodgings, the which first was practised and vsed by the Sepeneards Cattaile decided and keepers of Cattell. And he also was the first that decyded the Lambes from the Sheepe, one from ano-and one kinde of Cattell from another. ¶ The same Lamech had also another sonne named Tuball, who was a great louer of Musick, and was the first inventer of proporcions and measures; but he was not the maker of the Instruments, for that was invented long time after, in the time of Pithagoras. And this Tuball by the sounde of the Hammers that Tubalcaim his Brother being a Smith did vse, did imagine the distinction of soundes. Genesis. iiij.

¶ Tubalcaim the second sonne of Lamech was a warrelike Man, and begotten of his Wyfe Sela, this Man was a louer and inventer of all those things that were meete or neces-Forging of Iron. sarie for the warres: he founde oute the Arte of forging of Iron. He and his brother Tuball foreseing the two destructions of the worlde that were to come, the one by water and the other by fire did erect two great Columnes or rounde Pillers, the one of brent Brick to defend the fyre, and the other of Marble to defende the water: and therein did graue the Artes and Sciences that were by them invented: This Tubalcaim was the last of the

¶ Noemia the daughter of Lamech and of Sela the Sister of Tubalcaim did first finde out the vse of Linnen and Wollen, & the Spinning, Carding and weauing of the same, and made it into cloth, both for lightnesse and warmenesse, where before they did weare beastes skinnes as is mencioned in Cronica Cronicarum.

BVT Now to return again to the line of the just, where before mencion is made that Iared begat Enoch & Enoch begat Mathusalem, the sayde Enoch about this time was by God taken vp into heaven, which thing doth evidently set foorth vnto vs the immortalitie that remaineth after this lyfe, and that God wil saue those that are righteous and condemne them that are wicked.

the storie last before is written, for he came of the lyne of Cain, but this Lamech whereof mencion is now made made came of the lyne of Seth, and the same begat Noe as afore-

NOE The sonne of Lamech which came of the lyne of the just, when he was. v. C. yeres of age, begat Sem, Cham, and Iaphet, not all at one time, but he was so olde before he begat any of them. This Noe was a just & righteous Man & one that loued and feared Sem, Ham, Ia-God, by the which he obteined the blessing & fauor of almightie God. And after the re-phetocitall of the birth of the sonnes of Noe, foorthwith the holy Scripture declareth the occasion of the Flood, bicause sayeth almightie God, the worlde began to waxe wicked. amonge other the great vices of the Worlde, there is recyted the contempt of God, Adul- The causes of terie, Volupteousnesse and pleasure of the body, for thus the text hath: When that Men the flood. began to multiply opon the earth and brought foorth Daughters, the Children of God, seing the Daughters of men to be faire, tooke them to their wyues.

The holy Scripture calleth the children of God all those which discended from Seth, the thirde some of Adam. And those the children of men that discended from Cain the first some of Adam: For Adam commanded that the children of Seth should in no wise coople with the children of Cain, which was observed of a long time, vntill that the zeale and loue of vertue decayed. And God perceyuyng thereby that the wickednesse of man was great vpon the Earth, repented him that he had made man, not that there is any such passion in God, but that the Scripture so speaketh to vs after our familier and worldlye maner: and therefore he threatned a destruction to the worlde by a flood, and would therefore that Noe should declare this vnto the people. C.xx. yeres before it should come to passe. In the meane tyme God commaunded Noe that he should build an Arke, that should contein in length. CCC. Cubites Geometricall, every Cubite conteyning as S. Augustine saith. vj. common Cubits, which is. ix. feete, and so it was in length, two thousand, seuen hundred feete. In breadth it was fiftie Cubites, which was foure hundred fiftie feete, and in deepenesse from the vpper decke to the bottome, xxx. Cubits, which was two hundred seuentie feete, and the roofe ouer it was one Cubite highe, which was, ix. feete. Cooper. This Arke was not by mannes power brought into the Sca, but by the course of Cooper. the waters rysing vp, it was borne away: and rather by diuine prouidence, than by mans pollecye, it was gouerned from running to wreck. And Noe began to build this Arke in the. v. C. xxiii. yere of his age, and before the flood, as Berosus sayth, Ixxviii. yeres. Berosus.

In the vj. C. yere of the lyfe of Noe, and the second moneth, God saide vnto him y after. vij. dayes this flood should come, in which space he brought into the Arke his stuffe, provision and all other necessarye thinges for him, whereat every man laughed, & toke him as one out of his wit. But finally, as it is written in the Gospell, they were eating and drinking, they maryed and were maried even vnto the day that Noe entred into the Arke, and woulde not know it even. vntill the flood came and destroyed them all. For Noc shewed it vnto them, aswell in worde as in deede, and the building of the Arke was also a certaine declaration vnto them: But they were both without faith and the feare of God, for which cause they were worthely punished. Thus the time passing the seuenth day came, & that day Noe with his wife and his three sonnes and their wyues entred the Arke. And beholde, sodeinlye came together vnto him Beastes of all kindes, not brought thither A miracle most by ma, but even by the miracle of God: neyther did Noe take them, but suffered them as wonderfull. they came to enter into the Arke, neyther came there anye moe than of vucleane beastes two, a Male and a Female. Of cleane beastes seuen, foure Males, and three Females, of the which one Male was reserved for Sacrifice after the flood, the residue were kept

The last day of Ianuarie, Noe opened a window, and put foorth a Crowe. which was ever goyng and comming vntill such time as the waters were dryed vpon the earth, and then came no more againe. After. vij. dayes he put foorth a Doue, which for that she could finde no resting place, came againe at night. And after this he taried vet other. vij. dayes, and put foorth the Doue again, which at night returned vnto him and brought in her mouth a braunch of an Olive tree. And he taried yet other. vij. dayes and sent foorth the Done againe, but then she returned no more. Howbeit, yet he would not issue out but remayned for the commaundement of the Lord, who commaunded him not to go foorth yntill the. xvii. day of the second Moneth, wherby it appereth that he remayned a just yere and ten dayes in the Arke.

Refusal.

I Berosus the Chaldean wryteth of this flood in maner following. Before (sayth he) the famous flood of waters came, whereby the whole worlde perished, there preceded many yeres, which of our Chaldeans were faithfully observed. They wryte that about Libanum was a great citie of Gyantes called Enoch, who were lordes of the worlde from the rising of the Sonne vnto the setting of the same (that is from the East vnto the West) and they trusting in their strength and hougenesse of their bodyes, with armour that they had invented, oppressed all men. They devised Tents, Musicall Instruments, and all delicacies: they fed of Mans flesh and accompanied comonly with their Mothers, Daughters, Sisters, Men & Beastes. There was no wickednesse which they omitted. Then many prophesied and preached that destruction should come, which they did write in stones, but they scorned all things. And there was one of these Gyants wiser than all the other in Siria, whose name was Noa: he with his three sonnes, Samo, Iapeto & Chem, and their wyues, Titea, Pandora, Noela, and Noegla, fearing this destruction, which he perceyued by the Starres, began to make a Ship in fashion of an Arke. lxxviii. yeres before the flood. And in the same yere that the Ship was finished, sodeynely the Occean swelled, and all the Seas, Floods & Springs roase about the Mounteines with continuall raine that fell from the Heavens, whereby all mankinde perished (except Noe with his Familye) who were saued in the Ship, which the waters bare vp to the tops of the Mountaine Cordiei, where in my tyme remayned part thereof, hetherto the wordes of Berosus.

Here endeth the first Age of the worlde, which is from Adam vnto the Flood of Noe. and is after the account of the Hebrewes, xvi. C.lvi. yeres, and after the. lxx. interpretors, MM.CC.xlij. yeres.

THE SECONDE AGE, AND SECONDE PART OF THIS CHRONICLE.

THE SECONDE AGE.

THEN NOE had continued a yere in the Arke and more, and the waters being asswaged, and the Earth dryed, God commaunded him to come foorth, vuto whome whome incontinent he builded an Aultare, and offered of all cleane Beastes and Birdes, a delectable Sacrifice. Then God blessed him and sayde: Encrease and multiplie the Earth.

¶ And after God instituted as it were a newe worlde againe, and first he gave his worde, and promised that he would neuer more destroy the worlde with water, and for the confirmation thereof, he gaue the Rainebow for a sure token betwene him and man. For in The Rainbowe that Bow is expressed both the colours of Water & Fyre, the one part being blew, and the other red, that it might be a witnesse of both the Iudgements, the one past and the other to come. Also then he graunted libertie to men to eate fleshe, which the holy Fathers before the flood neuer vsed.

Moreouer, God gaue a newe precept for externall thinges and commaunded more A new complainely, that whosoeuer did shed any mans blood his blood should be shed againe, of maudemet. them to whom laufull authoritie for the judgement thereof was given (meaning the Ma-iestrates and Rulers) for that Man is made to the Image and similitude of God.

This Noe was faythfull vnto God, and another Father vnto mankinde. Hauing within the space of one hundreth yeres his issue wonderfully encreased, being also throughly learned in the knowledge of deuine and humaine things, in the revolution of tymes, in the Histories of the world passed: But most specially in Iustice & Religion, and The worlde Dehe deuided the world into three parts, which he himselfe in the residue of his life traueiled partes by Noc. and went through, leaving behind him in all places perpetuall monuments, both of his vertue and also of his Empire. He planted the first grape, and invented the vse of Wyne, The plating of with the which he was made dronke, so that he lay dishonestly discouered: who being the Grape first inuented by Noe. seene of Cham his sonne, the Father of Canaan, was of him Scorned, and he in derision brought his two brethren to behold that sight. But they moued with shamefastnesse and honestie, couered their Fathers mebers and would not see them. The which when Noe perceyued, he blessed them, but Cham he would not Cursse, bicause God had blessed him, and therefore he curssed Chanaan his Nephew the sonne of Cham, who as some suppose did deryde and mocke his Grandfather.

This Noe lived after the Flood CCC. L. yere, and for his sundrie benefites shewed vnto all Nations, they gaue unto him diuers names, among the which, these as the most Noe, Gyges, Fenix, Vranos, Coelus, Sol, Protheus, Ianus, famous are celebrated. Geminus, Innominus, Quirinus, Patulcius, Bacchus, Vortumnus, Chaos, Ileton, Seede of the World, and Father of all Gods and Princes. The Italians, after his decease, dedicated vnto him by the name of Vortumnus a Temple, and worshipped him with deuine

And also his wife Vesta, for her great prudence and worthy deserts obteyined these names following. Earth, Opes, Aretia, Vesta, Cybiles, the great Mother of the Gods, who taught the Maydens to kepe the holy Fire, whereof arose the error and ceremonies of the Virgines Vastalles.

After the Vniuersall Flood, the World by the Children of Noe was shortly replenished with people: for God or Nature neuer yet fayled the necessity of things: Of them there were many mighty nations as hereafter followeth.

The Sem the first sonne of Noe Prince of Asia, called also of some Melchisedech, a Asia. iust and peaceable King, and priest of almightie God from whome Christ lineally discended, Melchisedech. possessed all Asia, with his children. For of Elam came first the Persians: of Assur, the Assyrians: of Arphaxat, the Chaldeans: of Lud the Lidians: and of Aram the Sirians. Hetherto Languet.

¶ Asia is the thirde part of the worlde, deuided from Europa by the Sea called Bosphorus Thracius, & the Great Ryuer of Tanais: and from Affrique, by the famous river court. Nilus, and is in quantitie supposed to be as great as Europa and Affrique. Asia minor is a part of the other Asia, which is nowe called Turkey, and conteyneth in it these Realmes, Pontus, Bithinia, Phrigia, Coria, Lycia, Lidia, and Licaonia. Cooper.

Africa.

¶ Cham the seconde sonne of Noe, Prince of Aphrick called also Inuus Incumbus, Syluanus, Pana, Saturne of Egypt, the rayser and spreder of the wickednesse punished with the Flood, inhabited the South part of the World with his children. Of Canaan came the Cananites: of Phuth the Libians: of Mesraim the Egyptians: of Chus the Ethiopians: and of Saba the Arabians.

Isider.

Affrique as sayth Isidore in the. xiiij. booke of his Ethimologies, and the fift Chapter, doth begin at Egipt, and so passeth Southward vnto the Mounteyne Atlas, and toward the North, the same is enclosed with the Sea Mediterraneum, and endeth in the Sea Gadique. Some also say that it is called Affrique, of Afer, the sonne of Abraham, begotten of Cettura his wyfe, which conquered that country, and named it Affrique according to his awne name. And it is the same country that we now call Barbary, wherein is the Citie of Carthage.

Europa.

¶ Iaphet the thirde sonne of Noe Prince of Europa, called also Iapetus Priscus, Diris, Maurus and Athlas, receyued of his father Noe for his portion all the countries of Europe, from the Gades, called at this time streits of Marock, vnto the great ryuer Tanais.

Liidore.

¶ Europe, as sayth Isidore in the xiiij. of his Ethimologies, and iiij. Chap. beginneth at the Riuer Tanais, and so lyeth Westwarde by the great Northren Sea, vnto the ende of Spaine. And the East part and South part of the same is ioyned vnto the great Occean Sea, and it endeth at the Isles called Gades, and it is the same part of the world wherein we doe now inhabite. But Cooper sayth that Europa is deuided from Asia, with the Great Seas Hellespontus, Propontis, Bosphorus, Thracius, and Pontus Euxinus, and hath the vttermost boundes in the Northest, the Riuer Tanais, and from Affrique it is deuided by the middle Sea.

¶ Of Iaphet came these Princes and Nations: Comerus Gallus who first reigned in Italy. Magog of whome came the Scithians, and of them the Turkes. Madaus of whome sprang the Medes. Of Ianan the Grecians, which were called Ianes. Of Tuball the Spanyards. Of Mosoch the Muscouites, and of Tyras the Thracians.

Brute.

¶ And of this Iaphet came also Brute who first inhabited this Realme, of him called Briteyn. For Iaphet begat Ianau, and Ianan begat Sethum and he begat Siprius of whome Cypres had his first name, and he begat Saturnus, and he begat Iupiter, and he begat Dardanus, and he begat Erichtonius, and he begat Tros, and he begat Assaratus, and he begat Capis, and he begat Anchises, and he begat Eneas, and he begat Askanius, and he begat Siluius, who was the father of Brute.

I finde also alleged by Berosus that Noe had another Sonne borne after the flood, who was named Ionithus, or Ionichus, which was a great Astronomer, and was the first that atteined to the whole sevence of Astronomie, and thereby did deuine and shew before what should after happen to the iiij. principall Monarchies of the worlde. He was also Scholemaister to Nemroth who began the building of the towre of Babilon, and at that tyme all the people of the world spake but one tongue.

He builded the First Citie ofter the flood, the which hee named Salem, and at this day it is called Ierusalem (as sayth Iames of Bergamo) and of him came. xxvij. generations, and also the Patriarches, and Prophets, and finally our Sauiour and Redemer Iesu Christ. And the saide Sem in the. C. yere of his lyfe begat Arphaxat, of whome came the Chaldeans.

NEMROTH The Sonne of Chus, was among all the other that issued out of Noe, the Here I leave y' line of Sem and mightiest and most hardiest, and he was the first that tooke vpon him the Empire and go a little form government ouer his Subjects, and his abyding was at Babilon, which Citie he builded. with ye line of Cham who be-This Nemroth enterprised the building and erecting of an houge, great, and most highe begat Chus, and Tower made of Bricke, which was commonly called the Tower of Babell or Babilon, Chus begat Nemroth. &cc and he purposed that this Tower should have extended vnto heaven, to the entent that he would make an euerlasting memory of himselfe. But after that this Tower began to be of a great height, and was halfe finished, God almightie willing to abate and overthrow the great presumption and enterprise of Nemroth, confounded the speeches and languages of the workemen that wrought vpon the same Tower, so that no one of them vnderstood another.

¶ But for that the foresaid Tower is by certaine writers noted to be marueylous great and houge, I thought it good to note and mencion somewhat thereof vnto you. Tower & City of Babilon was compassed with foure walles square, every wall beyng fiftie Cubites in bredth, and two hundreth Cubites in heigth. And the length of every of the square walles, was xvj. Myles (after the accompt of our Myles.) So that the compasse of the foure walles were, lxiiii. Myles. And in the same Citie were one hundreth Gates of Brasse, and the sayde Towre was builded. CC. lxxij. pace highe. But some wryte that the sayde Towre was three Myle highe, and other wryte that it was fyne Myle highe and. C. lxx. paces, and was in bredth foure Myle. And throughe the middest thereof ranne the famous Ryuer Euphrates, whose heade spring came out of Paradice, and that the same was buylded with Tyle, and Pitch instede of Morter. Ranulph, Eliot, Cooper and other.

Ninus the thirde King of Babilon, was the sonne of Belus, the sonne of Nemroth, Ninus. that was first King of Babilon, and he reigned Lij. yeres, and maried Semyramis, which Semyramis, after the death of her husband Ninus reigned as Queene of Babilon, xlij. yeres, but not contented with the lymytes and circuite of that Realme, she made a conquest of the whole Countrie of Ethiope, and adjoyned the same vnto her Realme of Babilon, and she attempted also merueylous fierce and cruell warre against the people of Inde and by force entered into that Countrye and conquered the same, in such sort, that after that conquest the Indians neuer had other Emperour, King, nor other Prince but her and Alexander the great.

¶ Mesraim, otherwise called Osyris the seconde sonne of Cham, was the first King of Egypt. He is called Mesraim of Moses as apereth in the. x. of Gene. And Berosus in his booke of Antiquities calleth him Osiris. This Osiris (sayth Berosus) did find out in Osiris. Affrique the vse of Wheate, and the maner of sowing, reping and dressing of the same. Wheate. And afterward he came into Egypt where he invented the Plough, and all that ever ap-plough. pertayned vnto husbandrie. And from thence he passed trauayling through the rude. Countryes and people, who fed of Acornes and fruite, and had nothing else to feede vpon: Those also he taught his inuention. And by this meanes he became a souereigne Lorde and a great ruler through the vniuersall worlde, except vnto them which were vnder the Empire of the Babilonians. He also did first teach the Almaynes to sowe Corne, to set come, Trees, to plant Vines in places most commodious. And where there was no store nor plentie Trees, of wyne, there he taught them to make drinke of Barlye, Otes, and other Grayne, which Barly, drinke they called in theyr tongue, Ceruoys, somewhat applying to the name of his Sister, which ores, was called Ceres. And furthermore at the request of the people of Italy he discomfited the Gyauntes called cruell tyrantes, for that they most tyrannously did reigne ouer that countrye. He kept him selfe out of the Realme of Tuscane, and reigned ouer the Italians by the space of xv. yeres, being resident the greatest part of that tyme in the Citie of Viterbe, which afterward was called Vetulonia. And from thence he passed by Sea into Grece, that is to say, vnto the Prouince of Peloponesse, which is nowe called the Moores lande, and there he reigned in the Citie of Argos by the space of. xxxv. yeres, as Eusebius writeth, and in the end returned againe vnto Egypt. And after all these thinges thus done and finished, the malice of his brother Typhon an Egyptian, being as great as the malice of Cain was to his brother. Abell, conspired by treason to slave him, which at length he brought to passe and cut him in. xxvj. peeces and deuided the same among the conspirators, which were in number. xxvj. ¶ Laabin or Libycus surnamed Hercules, commonly called the great Hercules of Libia, was the sonne of Osyris (as Berosus sayeth) who did accompany his father in all his great warres and trauailes. And afterward for the reuengement of his fathers death, he offered open warre to all the Gyants of the world. And first he went into the land of Phenice, the which he conquered, and after he went into Frigia where afterward Troye was built, and their he slue Typheus the Gyant of that Cuntrie, and gaue the lande to his awne sonne Athus, and with the same one faire Ladie called Omphale. In lyke maner he discomfited Milinus king of the Ile of Candy. And from thence he came vnto Affrique, which now is called Barbary, and there he destroyed Antheus the Gyant and named the Cuntrie after his awne name Libia, which before was called Phuthee of the name of Phuth the thirde sonne of Cham. And there he set up a great and highe Colome or Piller in the memorie of his conquest. After he came into that parte of France that is Gaule Celtique, called, Gaule Celtique, where he maried Galathe, the onely daughter of Iupiter Celte, the. ix. king of the Frenchme. And in this pastime dyed Iupiter, by the death of whome, great Hercules reigned in France as the. x. king of that Realme with Galathe his Wyfe, where they builded a great Citie in the Cuntrie of Lauxois, the which he named Alexia, of the which Iulius Cæsur maketh often mention in his Commentaries. And then purposing to go into Italy, he chaunced to light vpon a great armie, and entered into the Countrie of Allobroges, which now is called Sauoy, and first he brake and tare in peeces the harde & stony rocks, and passed ouer the same rocks and Mountaines which we nowe call the Alpes, making away thorowe even by force of people, for it was a maruailous enterprise and a thing neuer lyke to be brought to passe, that in such a streight and so harde a rock and in so high and terrible a Mountaine withall, that there should be awaye made for an armie with their Cattell and Baggages to passe cleane ouer: and there he destroyed all the Theeus and Murderers that lay hidden in those Mountaines who did much hurte to such as were trauaylers by that Region. After he had passed the Mountaines he descended into Italy and there he made warre against the Titans, which were Gyants, who within x. yeres following, after he had bidden them divers battailes, he destroyed them and cleane droue them out of the Cuntrie. And the place where one of the battailes was foughten and they vanquished, is called at this daye, the Valley of § Gyants nere to the Citie of Tuscanel in Tuscane. And after this the great Hercules King of France was quietly possessed of all Italy, in the which he reigned after peaceably the space of. xx. yeres as sayth Berosus. And afterwarde when he had crowned Tuscus one of his sonnes, king of Italy, then he went into Spaigne and there dyed. And after his death the Spaniards made for him a sumpteous and costly Sepulture in the place which yet they call Gades Hercules, where standeth the Pillers called Hercules Pillers. Ianigenes, that is to saye, the children of Ianus. Bergamo.

Althous the sonne of Tuscus was after his father king of Italy. And in his time At-Italy. las Italus king of Spaigne did leaue his Realme to Sicorus his sonne, and came into Sicile, where he reigned a certaine time, and after he ariued in Italy, and there planted and placed himself as in his awne Realme, and called all the Cuntrie by his awne name Italy. RAGAV or Reu the sonne of Phalech in the. xxxij. yere of his age begat Seruch or Here I leaue the Saruch, & lyued after. CC.vij. yeres. In this time there were iiij. Realmes that tooke and returne their first beginning, that is to saye, the Realme of the Scithes, wherein first reigned againe to the Tanaus, of the which the River Tanais did first take his name. The second was the the which our realme of the Amasones the which as Iustine writeth were warlike women descending Saulour Iesu Christ came. from the Scithes. The. iij. is the Realme of Egypt. The. iiij. is the Realme of Boheme, Justine. the which was so called by a Prince named Bohemus, that was present at the building of Amasones. Egypt. the Tower of Babilon as sayth Bergamo.

¶ And in this time Nobilitie was advanced and tooke place, and that for dyuers and Nobilitie. sundry causes. First for necessitie: that the generation of Man so greatly encreased, and men prone and readic to all mischiefe, it was of force that the wickednesse of the euill must be suppressed by the honestie and discretion of the good, and therefore they chose some certaine Man more sage, wise and prudent, than other to rule the Commonaltie, to advance and procure vertue, to defend the innocents, and to punish the wicked. And hereof is he rightly called Noble, the which in vertues before other is notable. Whereof S. Iherom speaketh, I can see none other thing in Nobilitie (saith he) but that S. Iherom. they are by a certaine necessitie compelled to be Noble, least they should degenerate from the Noblenesse of their parents.

The second cause was the discord, variaunce and Brawles among the people for lacke of right judgement: wherefore it was most necessarie, that by the aucthoritic of the Nobilitie, they should be compelled to concord and vnitie as by them vnto whose judgement and aucthoritie they must obey.

¶ The thirde cause proceeded of the valyaunt courage and manly prowes of certaine notable persons declared in resisting and encountring the enimies of their Cuntrie and repressing their invasions. And such a one the people had in great reverence and estimation and worshipped and honored him as one that had delyuered their Cuntrie from daungers, and by this meanes most chiefely did the Cuntrie yeelde and geue vnto suche worthy Men the name of Nobilitie, to them and their heyres for euer, and for this purpose were they chiefely advanced to the dignitic of Noble men.

¶ The fourth cause, came of abundance of ryches, that when penurie and scarcetie came, then the common people were relieued and succoured of the ryche, for the which reliefe and succour the poore men had the ryche in great reuerence and estimation, and accompted them euer after as their Masters and Lordes.

Therefore all such as are discended of noble Parents and Auncestors, ought chiefely & before all others to call to often remembrance these foresayd causes of true Nobilitie. that thereby they maye be the more stirred to such souereigne vertues, for the which their worthy progenitors first became Noble, thinking themselves vnworthy the name, except they have withall those endowments and qualities for the which the same name was first geuen vnto them.

There were also certaine personages made Noble by Gods deuine prouidence (but not many of them) and some of them continued as Noble, as Dauid, and some were ouerthrowne in short time as Saul, Ieroboam, and many other.

There are many also that have made themselves Noble by violence and tiranny.

Recle. 10.

And here the olde and auncient writers of Histories doo note, that seldome or neuer among the Turkish and heathen people, there is anye roote or perpetuall successe of Nobilitie, bicause they enter by pride, & continue by violence and tiranny. And euen many among the Christians haue for the verie same cause bene oppressed and confounded according to the saiyng of Ecclesiasticus in the. x. Chapter. The high and mightie Princes for their pride and tiranny God hath ouerthrowne and cast downe, and hath aduaunced therevnto the lowly and meeke. And note also that no man can hate Nobilitie, for that euerie man desireth by nature to be accompted as Noble, euen as we desyre to be accompted verteous and religious. But yet manye verteous and holy men haue fled that vocation, for the great perill that is proper and annexed to the same, and this may at large and sufficiently appere in the Prophet Dauid, whome God himselfe did specially elect and choose. # THE THIRDE AGE, AND THIDE PART OF THIS CHRONICLE.

THE THIRDE AGE.

Abram.

Gene. Rij.

A Bram was a Man more prudet and expert in all thinges both divine and humaine, then any other before him was. He was the first that durst mainteyne God to be the Creator of all thinges, against the opinion of all the Chaldeyes, for the which he was compelled to forsake his country of Chaldey. And soone after, he by the will and commanualment of almightie God, with Thare his father, and his wyfe Sara, and his Nephew Loth departed from the sayde coutry of Chaldey, to go into Chanan, that is to say, into the lande of Chanance, which afterwarde was called the land of Iury, or the land of promes, & he first arrived in § land of Haran, which is in Mesopotania, there makyng some abode, where for some speciall causes he remayned vntill the death of Thare his father. And then God made his first promes vnto Abram saiyng. Get thee out of thy Countrye and from thy kyndred, and out of thy fathers house into a lande which I will shewe thee. And I will make of thee a mightie people, & I will blesse thee and make thy name great, that thou mayst be a blessing: And I will blesse them that blesse thee, and cursse them that cursse thee, and in thee shall be blessed all the generations of the Earth.

¶ And Abram went as the Lord commaunded him: and Abram was. lxxv. yeres olde when he departed out of Haran to go vnto Cananee. And he tooke with him Sara his wyfe, and Loth his nephew, with all their goodes which they had gotten, and all the Soules that they had begotten in Haran, and they departed to go into the land of Canaan. And when Abram was arryued in the lande of Canaan, God spake vnto Abram and sayd, vnto thy lyne and seede I geue all this lande. And soone after Abram buylded an Altare vnto the Lord in the same place where the Lord appered vnto him, vpon the which he offered sondry Sacrifices vnto the Lorde. After this, there came a dearth in the lande, and Abram went downe into Egypt to soiorne there. And knowing that the Egyptians were lecherous people, & fearing also that Pharao King of Egypt would not let to kill him, to the entent he might freely haue the vse of his wyfe which was one of the fayrest women in the worlde, he streightlye charged and commaunded her, that she shoulde declare none other vnto the Egiptians (and stoutly to stande therein) but that she was the sister of Abram and not his wife.

¶ And when Pharao was advertised of the great beuty of Sara, he caused her to be taken and sent home to his house, for the which God sent vnto him many plagues, which lighted both of him and all his householde. But after, when Pharao vnderstoode by his wyse men that the aforesayde plagues happened vnto him bicause of the rauishing & withholding of the wife of Abram: He foorthwith restored her vnto her husbande Abram, and did further commaunde that his seruauntes should safely conduct her, and all thinges that belonged vnto her, to the entent that nothing should be hurt or spoyled by the Egyptians. Reade. Genesis. xii.

Abram and Loth after they had bene a little time in Egypt, they returned into Ca-Gone, wiij.

nanee. And in the meane tyme Loth and he so greatly encreased in cattaile, that it was impossible for the lande to mainteyne the goodes of them both in that place, and there happened much brawle and vnquietnesse betwene the Shepards, and heardes of Loth, and the heardes & Shepards of Abram, wherefore Abram spake vnto Loth and sayde. My Brother and my Friende, thou seest daylye what discordes and variannees there happen betweene thy seruauntes and myne, for the keeping and feeding of our Cattaile, I pray thee hartely, because there shall aryse no malice nor displeasure betweene vs two, which I would not should come to passe, for we two are brethren, choose thee a place for thee and thine to go vnto, and if thou choose the ryght hand, I will go on the left. And if thou take the left, I will go on the right hand. Then Loth be holding the Countrey round aboute, and noting the goodly playnes & Medowes that led to the flood of Iordan, which was very pleasaunt for the comfort of his Cattaile, chose that part, and so leaving the East part or Country vnto Abram, departed toward Iordan into the place where afterwarde was Sodom and Gomorra consumed from Heaven with Fyre and Brymstone.

¶ And after the departure of Loth from Abram, the Lorde spake vnto Abram and sayde. Lift vp thine eyes and behold from the place where thou art Northward, Southward, Eastward, and Westwarde, for all the land which thou seest will I gene vnto thee and thy seede for euer. Gene. xiii.

¶ Then Abram seeing that he could have no issue by Sara his wyfe, did by the counsayle of the sayde Sara take one of his Maydens or bondwomen named Agar, and knew her, and she conceyved with childe and brought foorth a sonne which was called Ismaell, and of him is come the Nation of the Saracens.

Sodom. &c. Ektsbi. kvj. In this time also God destroyed Sodome, Gomorra, Adama, and Semois: The cause of that destruction as Ezechiell the Prophet saveth was, for their iniquitie, pride, superfluity of meate, abundance of ryches and ydlenesse, and they reached not foorth their handes vnto the poore, and did abhominations against nature. This place is now called Mare mortuum, the dead Sea, whose length and bredth containeth manye Miles. And at this day it is full of Pitche and boyleth continually out in Vapours, which is a wytnesse & testimony of the deuine indignation and wrath of almightie God vpon such wickednesse. At the time of this destruction God by his Angelies preserved Lot his Wyfe and two Daughters: But having a commaundement that none of them after they were come out of the Citie should looke back againe, it happened Loths Wyfe breaking the commaundement to looke back againe, and she was foorthwith turned into a Salt stone. Afterwards Loth by the incest of his Daughters begat Ammon and Moab the fathers of the Ammonites and Moabites. Genesis, xix.

¶ Isaac the sonne of Abraham by his Wife Sara, was in this time borne, a man be-loued of God, of whose lignage Christ descended. He represented the figure of Christ, when God commaunded his father to offer him in Sacrifice, whereby was signified that Christ should be an oblation which should satisfie for sinne and death. When he therefore should have been sacrificed by his father, and was come both to the Aultar and to his death, he exhorted his father that with a good hart he should obey and fulfill the commaundement of God, saiyng. My father it were not just, that any should be borne, if he would refuse the judgements of God and his father, or would not shewe himselfe obedient vnto their willes. After, when he came to the age of. xl. yeres, he tooke Rebecca to Wyfe: who being a long time barrein, at the last by the fauour of God, she brought foorth two children at one birth, the first Esau the Prince of the Idumeis: and Jacob

although the yonger, yet by the will of God, both blessed of him, and also endued by his father with the right of the first borne, and afterwarde was the father of the. xii. Patriarches. Finally after many troubles and temptations, and being with age also made blinde, he gaue his blessing not to Esau, to whome he would, but to Iacob to whome he would not. And herein is to be noted the prouidence of almighty God, who before purposed, that it should so come to passe. And when Isaac had lyued. C. lxxx, yeres ¶ Iacob the sonne of Isaac, surnamed Israell, that is the Prince of God, of whome the people of Israel had their beginning, in the. lxxj. yere of his lyfe, when he had gotten the blessing of his Father, he went into Mesopotamia to auoyde the displeasure of his Brother Esau, and there tooke a Wife; when he had served with his Vncle Laban. vij. yeres for his Daughter Rachell: but he gaue him Lya his daughter in her place, because Lya was the elder, he alleged that it was not their custome to mary the yonger before the elder, and after. vij. dayes Laban gaue also vnto Iacob Rachell his Daughter to be his Wyfe, and for her he serued other. vij. yeres, and Lea gaue him Bilha hir. immaculate shall be borne, which is the Lambe of God that by grace shall saue all men. whose kingdome shall be euerlasting and neuer corrupted. Therefore the great Lorde shall appere in earth as a man, and shall take vpon him a mortall body, and shall eate as a man: his Starre shall arise in heaven, and he shall shyne in the earth as the Sonne. The heavens shall open over him, and out of the Temple no little sanctification of glorie shall come vnto him. He shall poure out the spirite of grace vpo vs, and you shall be his children in the truth. He shall be from Leui a priest, and from Iuda a King, he shall be both God and Man, a Mediator betweene God and Man: and shall take awaye all darkenesse which is vnder the heauen; and there shall be peace thorow the valuersall world. The voyce of the euill doers shall be against him, not knowing his resurrection: But the blood of his innocencie, ye shall receive on your heads. And in his passion, the stones shall cleave asunder, the Sonne shall be darkened, and all other things shall be troubled, the invisible Spirites shall tremble, and Hell shall be spoyled: he shall open the gates of Paradise, and shall make the threatning sworde against Adam to stande, and shall geue vnto his Saints to eate the tree of life: Beliall shall be bounde by him. Then shall yee see Enoch, Noe, Sem, Abraham, Isaac, and mee your father, rysing in joye from the right hande of God, and shall geue power to his children to ouercome pernicious Spirites: and as many on the earth as beleue on him shall also rejoyce. Then shall all men arise againe, the Godly to glory and joye: and the yngodly to shame and perpetuall damnation: & most specially he shall judge Israell which would not beleue in him, hetherto Vincentius Gallus.

¶ In this tyme, Abraham that most holy Patriarche fynished his lyfe in this worlde. after whose death, there arose a great famine in the land of Canaan, for which cause

Isaac went to soiourne with Abimelech King of Palestine.

I Ioseph the sonne of Iacob, and Rachell, a man most chast and verteous, was in this time borne: he in his youth, by his excellent fauour, vertue, and wisdome, excelled all his brethren and was of his father aboue all other beloued: for which cause, and for his dreames, he was of his brethren had in great dispite, and by them solde into Egypt, where after long imprysonment, in the xxx. yere of his age, he expounded the dreames of Pharao, by whom he was made President of all Egypt, and was called among them the Saujour of the world. For God would by this maruelous occasion he should come into Egypt, that his power might be there knowne, & that helpe might be ministered to Iacob and his family in the tyme of famine and dearth. This Ioseph taught the Egyptians both Religion and Civile pollecye, which is most woorthy to be observed. And it is to be noted, that a man inspired with the holy Ghost (as Ioseph was) should institute so hard and so severe a maner of administration of justice among the Egyptians as he did, and yet draw together the whole Realme of Egypt (a Countrie beyng so large and wyde) and joyne them together as it were the members of one body without murmure or grudge. And here we may learne that sometyme severitie is to be used to keepe the people in obedience, and the same is here approued of God, although gentle gouernement is to be commended. But to our purpose: After that Ioseph had governed the Realme of Egypt by the space of. lxxx. yeres he then deceased, being of the age of. C. x. yeres, whose Bones he gaue charge in his death bed that the Hebrues should cary with them into the land of promes at their departure out of Egypt. The residue of his noble historye ye may read at large in the booke of Genesis, in the xxxvii. xxxviii. &cc.

Tof this Ioseph, Trogus Pompeius, and also his abreviator Iustine do write in this Trogus Pompeius maner: loseph was the yongest among the brethren, whose excellent wit they fearing, Paint. solde him vnto straunge Marchauntes, by whome he was brought into Egypt. Ioseph was in Egypt, and by diligent studie and in short tyme had learned the Magicall artes and scyences, he grewe in fauor with the king. For he was both expert in Prodigies, and also first found out the right interpretation and expounding of dreames: yea there was nothing neither of Gods law nor mans, that seemed vnto him vnknowen. Insomuch that he foreseeving the barennesse of the Fieldes to come, gathered in tyme corne to prouide for the dearth that followed. And so great was his wit and experience. that his aunsweres seemed not to come of man, but rather of God: But Iustine saith that Moses was the sonne of Ioseph, whose excellent fauor did much commend him. And the Egyptians when they were plagued wyth scabbes and filthinesse of body, were admonished that they should expell him with all the sicke people out of Egypt, least that

After the death of Ioseph, the people of God merueilously encreased, and lived quietly vntill there was another king in Egypt, to whome Ioseph was not knowne: Then by reason of their great multitude and aboundance of goodes, they were of the Egyptians greatlye hated, and by them kept vnder in miserable seruitude and bondage, which they susteyned. C. xliiii, yeres, vntill that by the mightie power of God, they were delyuered from thence.

¶ Aaron the sonne of Amram, nephew to Leui and brother to Moses, was at this tyme borne. And incontinently after his birth, Amenophis then King of Egypt, who also was the viij. Pharao, commaunded all the Hebrue children to be drowned: For Aaron was borne without any ieopardie, but so was not Moses. ¶ Whiles that the Hebrues were thus entangled in miserie and thraldom, God in a vision in the night apered vnto Amram promising him a sonne to be borne, who should both deliuer his people from the Egiptians seruitude, and also overthrow them, plague them, spoile them and drowne them in the Sea, which vision followed to be true. Therefore when Moses was borne, hys birth was kept secret (by the will of God) and iii. Monethes was he norished at home. But his father fearing the crueltie of the Egyptians, made a little vessell of Bulrushes, well pitched within wherein he put the childe, and set it in the River, commending it to the tuition of almightie God, who before had promised him to be borne. Then almightie GOD shewing that not by mannes wisedome and pollicie, but by his awne divine providence his determinate will and pleasure is brought to good effect, saued this little helplesse and innocent childe. For he caused Termuth the daughter of Pharao to walke to the Ryuer syde to sport her, where she save this little vessell swimming upon the water. Incontinent she commaunded it to be brought vnto her, and opening it, founde therein a wonderfull fayre and goodly Babe, at the which she reloysed not a litle, and according to the chaunce shee named it Moses, which signifieth preserved from the water. After this, for the favour and towardnesse of the childe, shee adopted him for her sonne, and caused him to be instructed in all the lernynges of Egypt. It chaunced on a time, that the King for his daughters sake tooke the childe in his armes, and set the crowne vpon his head: which Moses as it were childishly plaining, hurled it to the ground; and with his feete spurned at it. But the Priest the Soothsayer, beholding this, cryed out and sayde, that this was he, whome before he had prophecied should be borne which should destroy the Kingdome of Egypt, except he were by death prevented. But Termuth excused the childe, alleaging that his age had yet no discretion, and for proofe thereof, she caused burning coles to be put to his mouth, which the childe with his tongue licked, whereby hee euer after had impediment in his tongue: By this meanes their fury was for that tyme appeased.

In processe of time there arose cruell warres betwene the Ethiopians and the Egyptians: The Ethiopians destroyed Egypt, tooke their Tounes, wasted and ouerran their country euen vnto Memphis their principall Citie. On the other part, the Egyptians by this necessitie compelled, fled for counsaile to their Oracles and Diuinations: where they receiued aunswere that they must elect an Hebrue Captain of their armie, by whose helpe they should not onely expulse the Ethiopians from their borders, but also bring Memphis.

Moses both for his wisdome and personage was chosen them vnder their subjection. soueraigne Capiteine of this Armie, and he so pollitiquely led his host, that vnwares he set vpon them, and at the first battaile he discomfited them and put them to flight, not withoute the slaughter of a great number of them. And when they in no place were able to resist him, they fled to their strong Citie Saba. In which, whilste they suffered the siege, & Moses often tymes pollitiquelye and valiauntly assauting them, he was of the Kinges Daughter of Ethiope vehemently loued, which being no lenger hable to sustaine the force of loue, by certeyne faythfull ministers required of Moses mariage: he vpon condition that the Citie might be rendred vnto him, agreed therevnto, so by her meanes was the Citie geuen vp and she maried vnto him according to his promise. By this occasion he subdued all Ethiope, returning to Egypt with great triumph and victory: which prosperitie to the Hebrues was hope of libertie, and to the Egyptians cause of great feare: wherefore they sought dayly occasion how to destroy him. The which thing Moses perceyuing, diligently imagined how to anoyde their deceytes, and therfore denied himselfe to be the sonne of the daughter of Pharao, chosing rather to be afflicted with the people of God, then to enjoy sinfuli pleasure of the Worlde. Wherfore he slue an Egiptian that oppressed an Hebrue, and fled into Madian, not farre from the Mount of Synay, where he was received into the house of Iethro the priest of that Citie, who Lethre. gaue to him in mariage his Daughter Sephora: There he continued. xl. yeres and kept

¶ After this when king Pharao without all measure vexed the children of Israell, God sent Moses to deliuer his people out of Egypt, who after dyuers miracles by him done in the sight of Pharao for confirmation of his authoritie, at the last obtained of Pharao to lead and carie away the children of Israell out of Egypt, and he led them towarde the land of promission: But Pharao chaunging his minde, pursued the Israelites with most eger cruelty, entending to have vtterly destroyed them, for so much as they had at that time no place of refuge, nor succour. For on the one side they were enclosed with Hilles, and on the other side with the Sea, and he their most cruell enimie followed at their backs. But here God declared that when exstreme necessitie happeneth, and all mans helpe and strength fayleth, then is he readie and hereth the voyce of his people. For at the prayer of Moses and wayling of the Israelites, the water of the Sea contrarie to the natural course thereof, went back, and by the space of certaine Myles gaue way to the people to passe without daunger: which thing when Pharao and his host assayed to follow and were in the deepest, the Sea keeping againe his former course, swallowed him vp with all his power. Wherin God shewed a notable spectacle or example vnto vs, that we may assure our selues that he will be reuenged of the stubborne, impious, and cruell Tirantes, which vexe and persecute hys people.

Here endeth the thirde Age of the worlde, and is from Abraham to the departing of the children of Israell out of Egypt. CCCC.xxx. yeres.

THE FOURTH AGE, AND FOURTH PART OF THIS CHRONICLE.

THE FOURTH AGE.

Law. CommaundeThe fiftie daye after that the Israelites were thus departed out of Egypt, and were come to the Mount of Sinai, the lawe of the Decaloge or. x. Commaundemēts was to them geuen by almighty God, with a great and terrible magnificence. At which tyme also God gaue to them a certaine pollitique gouernaunce, and a speciall kingdome, in which nothing wanted that appertayned to the true worshippyng of God, Priesthood and Ciuil iustice, to the intent that a certaine people should be notably knowne, among whome the worde of GOD remayned: and of whome Christ in tyme to come shoulde be borne: So that among this people alway remayned the Church, the Kingdome and the true worde of God, vntill after Christ had suffered. Whereby all men may know that the Church hath alway beene: and that God from the beginning of the worlde hath both reueled and preserved his worde among his people.

In the xxxj. yere of the Dukedome of Moses, Atho, Prince of Meonia gaue vnto Dardanus part of his lande, who incontinent left all his right in Italy, and went to his newe possession, where he builded a Citie, which after his awne name he called Dardania, that after was called Troye. ¶ After the death of Moses the Israelites had Princes and Gouernors, which were created, partly by the aucthori of wise men, partly set vp by the special calling of God, by which Princes, many notable and famous thinges were done. And so God declareth that he is present, and doth continually defende his people, although they may seeme for a tyme to be tossed in the waves of these worldly troubles and perilles. These Gouernors after the custome of the Hebrues were first named Iudges.

And he was in so great fauor that almightie God declared vnto him that he would translate the office of Priesthood from the house of Heli, onely for the wickednesse of hys sonnes: and in his time the Arcke of God was restored againe by the Philistines. This Samuell by the commandement of almightie God did annoint Saul the sonne of Cis the first king of Israell.

¶ Here beginneth the Kinges of Israell.

1074 Saul ye first king of Israell.

SAul the sonne of Cis being of the Tribe of Beniamin, was at the importunate sute, peticion and request of the people, made and ordeined the first king vniuersall ouer all Israell. He was a mighty man and great and high of stature, and was so high that being among all the people, his shoulders were sene aboue any mans head. And as he was beutifull and comely in shape and proporcion of bodye, so was he also adorned and beutified with many singuler vertues, for he was prudent, sage and wise, and there was not found in all Israell one that did loue, feare, and obey God and his commaundements, more then he did. And for this cause God did chose him out before all the rest.

After that Samuell by the commaundement of almightie GOD had brought Oyle to annoynt the King, hee called together the people, and speciallye all the Trybes of Israell. To whome after he had declared vnto them the aucthoritie, right, power, prerogatiues, commaundementes, and executions that kynges shall dayly and from tyme to tyme haue ouer enery of them, as his Vassalles and subjectes, and also that their request to haue a King was against the will and minde of God, and many other persuasions he vsed to haue removed them from that opinion, but they would not, but still cryed out they would have a king. Then he caused lots to be cast out, to know who should be King, and the lot fell vpon the Tribe of Beniamin, and to conclude, in the ende it fell vpon Saule the sonne of Cis: by reason whereof he was immediately sought out, and annointed and confirmed King.

i. Regum. 3.

¶ Saule continued and perseuered in his former vertues the space of two yeres, as it may apeere in the. iij. Chapter of the first booke of Kynges: But afterward he despysed and brake the Commaundementes of almightie God, geuen vnto him by Samuell the Prophet. Wherefore it was declared vnto him that his reigne and continuance should not be perpetual, but that it should be taken from his lyne and issue, and genen vnto another. Finally, after many great injuries, vexations, persecutions, and wronges by him done to Dauid, which had maryed his Daughter, he was overthrowne in a battaile agaynst the Philistines in the mountaynes of Gelboe, in the which his whole armie perished. Three of his sonnes, that is to say, Ionathas, Abinadab, and Mechisne, with manie other were also slaine and murthered. And because Saule would not dye by the handes of the Philistines, after he had reigned xx. yeres, he fell vpon his awne sworde and slue himselfe, as appereth himself. in xxxi. Chapter of the first booke of Kinges.

NOW that we are come vuto the tyme that this our native country now called England was as the comon opinion is first inhabited by Brute and called of his name Britaine. It were not amisse that we shewed how this land hath bene heretofore called, and by whom the same hath bene before time inhabited: But for y herein the wryters of the Histories of this Realme do so greatly vary & are of sundry opinions, & also that almost no one of them all but speaketh doubtfully and diversly therof. I thought it best to passe over the vaine & fonde story written by the wryter of the English Historie, who sayth, that this Realme was first named Albion of Albine, the Daughter of Dioclesian King of Syria who had xxxij. daughters and were maried vnto. xxxij. Kings, and in one night they did cut all their Husbandes throtes: And that then Dioclesian their father beyng wrath with them for those cruell murthers, did therefore cause them all to be put into a Ship, without any person with them and turned them to the adventure of the Sea, and so by chaunce they arrived in this lande, and called the same Albion, of Albine the eldest Sister: And Albion that afterward Deuilles did accompanie with them, and begat Gyauntes and Monsters of them, and so this land was first inhabited: which story as it is most fabulous and foolishe, so is it also false and slaunderous to shew that this noble Realme should have so lewde a beginning. But sundrie other writers wryte otherwise: saiyng, that it was called Albion of the whyte Clifes that are seene vpon the East costes. But I will passe forwarde with the report of the Historians that have written in this our latter tyme, which say that Brute discending of the auncient blood of the Troyans, and beyng the sonne of Syluius Posthumus king of Troy, did ariue in this Island in the vere of the World, two thousand eight hundred fiftie and fiue, and the. xj.C.viij. yeres before the comming of our Saujour Iesu Christ, accompting the yeres after the accompt of the Hebrues contynued in the holy Scriptures, which accompt I observe throughout this whole Story. But Polichronicon Polichron. and Fabian say that Brute was the sonne of Siluius Aeneas, for they say Aeneas begat Fabian. first upon his wife Lauina, a sonne who was called Ascanius, & he had a sonne also by his first wife whom he named Siluius Aeneas, and this Siluius Aeneas was father to Brute: But other say otherwise, wherfore I refer it to the judgement of the reader. But now returning to the story of Brute, this following, I find written in an olde Pamphlet which hath no name.

The first entrie into the Historie of the Kinges of Briteyn.

FTER the Citie of Troy, by the false conjecture and treason of Aeneas, the Sonne Aeneasthe of Anchises and other (vpon peace to be had with the Grekes for themselves, their chises. friends, and parents, and vpon condicion also that their goodes might be reserved vnto them) was entered and destroyed: And the king thereof named noble Priamus taken and Priamus king of murdered ed.

murdered, and Polixena king Priamus Daughter taken and behedded vpon the Tombe of Achilles, and Helenus the sonne, and Cassandra, another daughter of king Priam taken and delyuered at large. And for that Aeneas at the time of the taking of the sayde Citie had hid and conueyed from the knowledge of the Grekes the sayde Polixena, and woulde not delyger her but by compulsion: Agamennon, and the other Grekes commaunded Aeneas to take his goodes and friends and to depart out of that lande, and so was he banished.

T After that Aeneas with Ascanius his sonne had bene in Sicile and there buried his father Anchises: And after that Aeneas with Ascanius had beene three yeres in Affrique, where Aeneas was louingly receyued of Queene Dido: And after the same Aeneas had Lauiny daughter taken to Wyfe Lauiny, daughter of Latyn king of Italy: And after his death Ascanius of Latyn King his aforenamed sonne tooke vpon him as king of that region: And after that his sonne Siluius had taken to Wyfe the Neece of Queene Lauiny, and had gotten hir with childe, of whose delyuerance she deceased, and the same childe was named Brute: And that the Brute first borne same Brute being of the age of. xv. veres was chased in exile out of Italy, for that by & then banished misaduenture he had killed his father Silvius in shooting and chasing of a Dere.

MM.viii.C.lv. and before the birth of Christ, M.C.viii, hee arryned in this Realize then called Albion and landed in the west part of the same in a Hauen then called Totnesse, where then inhabited certaine Gyants, whome afterwards he valiauntly oppressed and destroyed, and after that possessed and enjoyed all this Realme, and named it Briteyn

> This Brute gaue to Coryn his Cosyn a parte of the sayde land, which he named after his name Cornewall, and the people thereof Cornyshmen, which Country and people are so named at this day.

after his awne name, and called also the inhabitaunts thereof Briteyns.

This Coryn had no children but one daughter, named Gwendolena, which was maried to Locryne Brutes eldest sonne. For Brute begat on his Wyfe Innogen three sonnes, to Locryne the Locryne, Albanact and Camber, and gaue to Locryne his eldest sonne (as aforesayde) the land on this side Humber, which the same Locryne after his fathers death named Loegria. And to his second sonne Albanact he gaue that part of the Northside of Humber, which he named Albania, whereof a great part is nowe called Scotland. And to hys yonger sonne Camber, gaue he that parte of this land, which is beyonde the Ryuer of Seuerne, and he named the same after his awne name Cambria, which of the Welchmen is so called at this daye, but the Englishmen call it Wales.

> I How be it Fabian, and the English Chronicle and others say that Brute with his company after his first landing in this Island at Totnesse as aforesayde, he searched and trauailed throughout all this land, and found the same to be maruellous ryche and plentifull of wood and pasture, and garnished with most goodly and pleasaunt ryuers and stremes. And as he passed, he was encountred in sundry places with a great number of mightie and strong Gyants, which at that time did inhabite the same: Howbeit he alwayes ouerthrewe them and wan the victorie. But among all other, as sayeth the English The English Chronicle, there was one that was of passing strength named Gogmagog, the which he Chron. Caused to wrestle with Corineus his kinsman beside Douer: in the which wrestling the Gyaunt brake a ryb in Corineus side, by reason whereof Corineus being put in a chafe, with great strength ouerthrew the Gyaunt, and cast him downe the rock or cliffe of Douer, whereof the place was named the fall of Gogmagog, but sithen that tyme the name is Gogmagog. chaunged; and the place called the Fall of Douer, and so is it called at this day. For The fall of Doethis deede and other, Brute gaue vnto his sayd Nephew Corineus or Coryne, the whole uer.

Thus have you heard the opinion of the writer of the English Chronicle, and of Polichronicon, Fabian, and others: But forasmuch as in these our dayes and time, a learned, wise, & famous Man whose name is Thomas Cooper now Vicechauncelor of he Vniuersitie of Oxford, hath with great industrie and trauaile searched the Originall tames, and the first inhabitation of this Realme, and hath also shewed many evident and neat reasons and argumentes for the proofe thereof, aswell to condempne the fond congrures of such as slaunderously have written of the same, as also to confirme a truth, and to declare that which is most lykely and probable: I thought it therefore very meete in this place to insert his saiyngs in his last Dictionary, which he nameth Thesaurus linguæ

ALBION sayth he (the most auncient name of this Isle) conteyneth England and Albion Scotland: of the beginning of which name, have bene sundrie opinions, one late feygned by him, which first printed the English Chronicle, wherein is neyther similitude of truth, reason, nor honestie: I meane the fable of the fiftie daughters of one Dioclesian king of Siria, where never any other story maketh mention of a King of Syria so named. Also that name is Greke, and no part of the language of Syria. Moreover the comming of them in a Boate or Ship from Syria without any Mariners, through the Sea called Mediteraneum into the Occean: and so finally to finde this Isle, and to inhabite it, and have generation by Deuilles, is both impossible, and much reproche vnto this noble Realme, to ascribe her first name and habitation to such inventers.

Another opinion is (which hath a more honest similitude) that it was named Albion, ab Albis rupibus, that is, of white rockes, because that vnto them that come by Sea from the East or South, the Bankes and Rockes of this Isle do apere white. Of this opinion haue I most meruaile, because it is written of great learned men. First Albion is no latin word, nor hath the analogie, that is to say, the proportion or similitude of latine, for who hath found this sillable, on, at the ende of a latin word. And if it should have bene so called for the white colour of the Rockes, men would have called it Alba, or Albus, or Album. In Italy were townes called Alba, and in Asia a Country called Albania, and neyther of them tooke their beginning of white Rockes or Walles, as ye may reade in bookes of Geography: nor the water of the Ryuer called Albis, seemeth any whyter than other water. But if where auncient remembrance of v beginning of thinges lacketh, it may be lefull for men to vse their conjectures, than may mine be aswell accepted as Plinies (although he incomparably excelled me in wisedome and doctrine) specially if it may apere that my coniecture shall approch more nere to the similitude of truth: whereore I will also set foorth mine opinion, onelye to the intent to exclude fables, lacking eyther honestie or else reasonable similitudes.

When the Grekes began first to prosper, and their Cities became populous, and waxed puyssant, they which traueylled on the Seas, and also the Isles in the Seas called Hellespontus, Aegeum, and Creticum, after that they knew perfectly the course of saylyng, and had founden thereby profite, they by little and little attempted to search and finde out the commodities of outwarde Countries: and lyke as Spanyardes, and Portyngales, and our Merchants of England haue of late done, they experienced to seke out countryes before vnknowen. And at last, passing the streytes of Marrocke, they entred into the great Occean Sea, where they found dyuerse & many Isles: among which they percevuing this Isle to be not onely the greatest in circuit, but also most plenteous of euerie thing necessarie to man, the ayre most wholsome and temperate, the earth most apt to bring foorth all things that maye susteyne; The flesh of Beefes and Mottons most sweete and delicate, the Wooll most fine, not lacking any kinde of Metall, having abundaunce of Wood and Timber to builde with, also great and fayre Ryuers, with great Lakes or Meeres of fresh water, & as well in them as in the Sea, wherewith the coutry is enuironed, there was great plenty of fishes of divers sorts most apt to be eaten: they wondering and rejoysing at their good and fortunate arrivall, named this Isle in Greke Olbion, which in English signifieth happy & in latine Falix. Like as a part of Arabia which is most fertile, is called Arabia fælix. But in processe of time by resort of sundrie people having diverse languages, no marvaile though one letter were chaunged, & the first letter O, turned into A, & so for Olbion, it was at the last called Albion, which worde hath no maner of signification. This chaunging of letters is not vnlikely since at this present tyme the Northren men of this Realme do vse A in wordes, where Southren men vse O. as a Bane, a Stane, a Bare, a Bande: for a Bone, a Stone, a Bore, a Bonde. And among the Grekes were lyke alteration of letters. And it may be the more easely borne. that one vowell may be chaunged in a word, & specially, A into O, which in some mannes mouth soundeth often tymes lyke, then that a sillible impertinent to the proportion of latine, should be vnaptly added to. Notwithstanding Pomponius Mela maketh mention of a Gyaunt called Albion, whom Hercules slue in Gallia, which was the sonne of Neptunus, who mought with more reason be demed the first gener of this name vato this Isle, then y the other surmises should be likely.

If any man can find matter more certeyne concerning the beginning of this Isle, I will not be offended, but congratulate with him his good fortune and diligence. Hetherto Cooper shewing howe this Realme was first called Othion, and after Albion. And the lyke trauayle he taketh in shewing of hys opinion why this Realme was called Briteyn, & therein wryteth as foloweth.

I Of the first naming of this Isle (sayth he) is yet no certeine determination, forasmuch as there remayneth no auncient Historie, making thereof remembrance, the olde Britons bookes (such as were) beyng all destroyed by § Saxons: who endeuored themselues vtterly to extinct the honorable renoune with the name of Britons, lyke as the Gothes dealt with the Romaynes. Also the part of Titus Liuius, where the conquest of Britevn is remembred, with the stories of Iulius Rusticus, and dyuerse other noble writers, that wrote speciallye of this Countrie, are vtterly perished. Such as remaine, as the Commentaries of Iulius Cæsar, Cornelius Tacitus, Diodorus Siculus, and they that wrote of Cosmographie, have omitted the originall beginning of the name. The Historie of Gildas the Briton cannot be found, who was after that the Saxons had inuaded the Realme, and therefore mought lacke such bookes as best should instruct him. As for Beda seemeth to have seene nothing written of that matter. For where he sayth that this Isle tooke the name Britannia of the inhabitantes of Briteyn in Fraunce, it is nothing like to be true. For that Country was (not long before the tyme of Beda) named Armorica, & Armoricus tractus, when this Isle was called of most auncient wryters Britannia, and (as Solinus writeth) seemed to be an other worlde, forasmuch as the West part of Gallia was thought to be the vttermost part of this World. Also Iulius Casar writeth that the places of this Isle were vnknowne to Frenchmen sauing to a fewe Marchantes, and yet they knewe no farther than the Sea coast towarde Fraunce. Moreouer the same Britons affirme that it was left among them in remembraunce that the innermost partes of the country was inhabited of them which had their first beginning in the same Isle. This well considered with the authoritie of the wryter, both an excellent Prince, and also a great learned man, and was himselfe in this Isle, it is not to be doubted but that he most diligently searched for the true knowledge of the auncientie thereof. And if he mought have founden that the inhabitants had come of the stock of Aeneas, of whose progeny he himselfe came, he would have rejoysed much for the prowesse and valiant courage which he commended in them. Moreover, that the name came of Brutus (whome our wryters imagined to descend of Aeneas the Troyan) is no more lykely then that this Isle was called Albion of Dioclesians daughter, or of white rocks. All the olde Latyn Histories agree that the sonne of Siluius, the second in succession from Aeneas, and of them named the sonne of Ascanius, was Aeneas, called also Siluius, wherevnto also the Grekes do accorde, but they name Siluius to be brother to Ascanius, and borne after the death of Aeneas, and was therefore called Posthumus. But neyther the Romaynes, nor the Grekes doe write of any man called Brutus before Iulius Brutus which expelled Tarquinus out of Rome. Which name was also geuen to him (by the sonnes of Tarquyne) in derision bicause they tooke him to be foolish and dull wytted. Moreover, there is so much diversitie between Britannia and Brutus, that it seemeth against reason that the one shoulde proceede of the other. For if Brutus had bene the first gener of the name to thys Isle, he woulde have called it Brucia rather then Britannia, which hath no maner of proporcion nor Analogie with Brutus. But here (as I have done before in the worde Albion) I will declare a reasonable cause of conjecture why this Isle was named Britannia. About. xxx, yeres hence it happened in Wilshire at Iuye Church about two Myles from Salisburie, as men digged to make a foundation, they found an holow stone couered with another stone, wherein they founde a Booke, having in it little aboue. xx. leaves (as they sayde) of verye thick Velume, wherein was some thing written: But when it was shewed to Priestes and Chanons which were there, they coulde not reade it. Wherfore after they had tossed it from one to another (by the meanes whereof it was torne) they did neglect and cast it aside. Long after a peece thereof happened to come to my hands: which notwithstanding it was all to rent and defaced, I shewed to Mayster Rycharde Pace, then chiefe Secretarie to King Henry the. viij. whereof he exceedingly rejoyced. But bicause it was partly rent, and partlye defaced and blurred with wet that had fallen out. he could not finde any one sentence perfite. Notwithstanding, after long beholding he shewed me, it seemed that the sayde booke conteyned some auncient Monuments of this Isle, and that he perceyued this worde Pritannia to be put for Britannia: but at that tyme he sayde no more vnto mee. Afterward I geuing much study and diligence to the reading of Histories, consydering whereof this worde Britannia first came, finding that all the Isles in this part of the Occean, were called Britannia, after my first conjecture of Albion, remembring the sayde wryting, and by chaunce finding in Suydas that Pritan- Pritannia. nia in Greke, with a circumflexed aspiracion, doth signific Metalles, also reuenues belonging to the common treasure, I than conceyued this opinion, that the Grekes florishing in wysedome, prowesse, and experience of sayling, as I sayd before in Albion, and finding the Isles of the great Occean full of ryche Metalles, as Tynne, Leade, Iron, Brasse, Copper, and in some places great store of Golde and Syluer, they called all those Isles by this generall name Pritannia, signifying the place, by that which came out of it, as one would saye he went to market when he went to Andwarpe or Barow, or to the fayre, when he goeth to Sturbridge, or to his revenues, when he goeth to any place from whence his his revenues do come. And yet because this Isle excelled all the other in any condition, it was of some privately called Olbion, that is to say, more happier or richer. Thus farre D. Cooper. And thus have you his opinion and judgement concerning the first name and habitation of this Realme. And nowe I will returne to the Historie of Brute where I

After that Brute had landed in this Isle as aforesayd, and that he had passed and searched throughout the land, & comming by the river of Thamis, for the great pleasure Thamys, that he had in that Ryuer and pleasaunt Medowes adioynyng to the same, began there to E 2

buylde a Citie in the remembraunce of the Citie of Troy lately ouerthrowne & raced, & named it Troynouant, which is as much to say as newe Troy: which name endured vntill the commyng of Lud, who was king of Briteyn about a thousand and fortie yere after. And the sayd king Lud commanded it to be called after his awne name Luddes Towne. which nowe by shortnesse of speche we call London, and the same was builded. iij. C. Lvi. vere before Rome was builded, in the time of Heli the high priest of Iewrie.

Rome.

Briteyn.

When Brute had thus builded his Citie, and saw that he was stablished in his Realme quietly: he then by the advice of his Lordes, commaunded the sayd Isle and Countrie to be called as dyuerse Authors write, after his awne name Briteyn, and his people Britons, and so continued his reigne prosperously. In the which time he established many good lawes and ordinaunces, for the good government of his people. But after this, as in this story shall apere, this Realme was conquered and brought in subjection to Straungers dyuerse and sundrie tymes, as first after Brute to the Romaynes, then to the Saxons which conquered this land, & called it Anglia (as saith Polichronicon) eyther of Angli, that is to say, people of Saxony, or of the name of a Queene of this lande that was called Angela. And some also thinke it was called Anglia of Angulus, which is in English a Corner, for that it is but a Corner in respect of the mayne and continent land of the whole worlde. Then was it in subjection to the Danes, and lastly to the Normanes.

Now, when Brute as is aforesayde, had set this Realme of Briteyn in order, he as the superior Lord decided it into three partes, and gave the same to his three sonnes, as aforesayd. And vnto Locryne his eldest sonne, he gaue this Isle of Briteyn, the which after was called middle England, wherein he had built his Citie called Troynouant, with all the Countries therevnto adioyning, both East, West, and South. And because this part shoulde sounde somewhat toward the name of Locryne, it was called Loegria, or Logiers: and therefore the Welchmen call it in their language vnto this day lloyger.

Loegia.

Carabria now called Wales.

To his second sonne Cambre, he gaue the Country of Wales, the which was first named after him Cambria. This in the East syde was sometyme departed from England by the River of Severne, as before is sayde. But now the River named Dee at Chester departeth Englande and Wales on the Northsyde: and in the South, the Ryuer that is called Wye, at the Castle of Stringlyng parteth the sayd Countryes.

Albion nowe called Scotland.

Achind.

Burgh,

To the thirde sonne Albanact he gaue the North part of this Isle of Briteyn, and called the same Albion, or more truely the sayd country tooke the name of the thirde sonne, and was called Albania. This Country was after named Scotlande, and so is it called to this day, and it is deuided as S. Bede sayth, from Loegria or Logires by two armes of the Sea, but they meete not. The East arme of these two beginneth about two myles from the Mynster of Eburcuring in the West syde of Penulton. The West arme of those twaine hath in the right syde (or sometyme had) a strong Citie named Acliud, which in the British tongue was named Clinstone, and standeth vpon the Ryuer named Clint, supposed of some to be that towne, which is called at this day Burgh on the Sandes, within. v. myle of Carlistle, where that famous Prince King Edward the first dyed, in his returne from Scotland. And of others it is judged to be the Towne called Aldburgh in Yorkeshire set on the Ryuer of Owse, which ronneth from thence to Yorke, the space of. xij. myles or thereaboute.

Thus when Brute had deuided this Isle of Briteyn, as before is shewed in three partes, and geuen the same vnto hys three sonnes, and had holden the principalitie thereof noblie by the terme of. xxiiij. yeres, he dyed and was buryed in London then called

LOcrinus, or Locryne the first and eldest sonne of Brute, was made King of Briteyn, next after the death of his father, in the yere of the worlde. MM. viij. C. lxxix. In the tyme of the reigne of this Locryne, there was a certeyne Duke (who as the writer of the Britons story sayth, was named Humber) who warred sore vpon Albanactus his brother, beyng the ruler of Albania, nowe called Scotland, and slue Albanact in plaine battaile. Howe be it, as some writers affirme, the sayde Duke was not at the tyme of his comming into Albania called Humber, but Hunys, or Hunnys, King of Hunes, or King of Humber.

Scithya without any other addicion.

This King as before is sayde, after he had thus subdued Albanactus, he helde the lande of Albania, vntill that Locrinus with his brother Cambre gathered a great power of men of Armes together, and went against him, and by strength of the Britons chased and subdued the sayd Hunes so sharply, that many of them with theyr King were drowned in a Riuer which departeth England and Scotland. And because vnto the wryter of the Story of Britons his name was declared to be Humber: therefore the sayde wryter sheweth that the Ryuer wherein the sayde Duke or Capitaine was drowned, tooke the first name of him, whiche name continueth yet to this day.

Gaufride.

Moreouer, after the death of Brute his father, Locryne Maryed with Gwendoloena Gwendol the daughter of Coryn, Nephew vnto the aforesayde Brute. And it so came to passe that after the aforesayde victory had against the king of the Hunes, or of Scithya, as aforesayd, that Locryne fell in great phancy and loue with a faire Damosell named Estrild, who was also the daughter of the aforesayde Humber, as the sayde Aucthor wryteth, and Locryne kept her vnlawfully a certeyne tyme. Wherewith his wife Gwendoloena beyng sore discontent, excited her father and her friendes to make warre vpon the sayde Locryne her husbande, in the which warre Locryne was slaine, when he had reigned after the agreement of most wryters. xx. yeres, and was buried by his father in Troynouant leaving after him a yong sonne named Madan. Fabian.

I But because myne Aucthor whom I here follow dissenteth in manye things from Gaufride, writer of the British Hystorie, I have thought good to recite also as briefely as Gaufride. I can, what the sayde Gaufride reporteth hereof, to the ende that the reader may vnderstande wherein they varie, and then vse his awne judgement touching the truth of the matter: his wordes in effect are these. When the three brethren, Locrinus, Albanactus, and Camber, had of long time peaceably reigned every one in his awne dominion, at the length a certaine king of the Hunes named Humber, arrived with an armie in Albania. and geuing battaile vnto Albanact slue him, and thereby compelled the inhabitours of that Countrie to flie vnto Locryne for ayde and succour, the which thing when Locryne vnderstoode, he joyning vnto him his brother Camber, and they both assembled together a power of all the warrelike yong men of their Countries, and met and encountered with the sayde king of the Hunes, about the water now called Humber, and in fine discomfited his host and put him to flight, and then pursued him so egerly that he was compelled to take the sayd water, wherein he was drowned, and therefore was it after the name of the king there drowned called Humber. This done he deuided the spoyle of the field Humber. among his Souldiours, reserving nothing to himselfe, but such treasure as he founde in the Ships, saue that he kept also for his awne store three goodly yong Damoselles of passing bewtie. Of the which three, the first of them named Eastrildis, was the daughter Eastrelds. of a certaine king of Almayn, whome with the other two, the sayde Humber had caried awaye with him from her father, after he had wasted and destroyed his lande. The which Eastrildis so farre excelled in bewtie, that none was then lightly found vnto her comparable, for her skin was so whyte that scarcely the fynest kinde of Iuorie that might be found, nor the Snowe lately fallen downe from the Elament, or the Lyllyes did passe the same: for this cause Locryne being rauished with the sight of her, determined to marry her. The which when Corineus vnderstood, he was in a wonderfull chafe, be- Corineus. cause Locryne had promised him before to marry his daughter: he therefore taking his. battaile Axe in his hande, went vnto the king and spake vnto him on this wise: Is this the rewarde that thou geuest me Sir King for so many woundes as I have received in thy fathers service and quarell, all the time that he warred against straunge and vnknowne Nations, that thou I saye, forsaking my daughter intendest this to couple thy selfe in mariage with a damosell of a barbarous Nation? Be thou sure I will be aduenged vpon thee, so long as there remayneth any strength in this right hand of mine.

which hath beene the death of so many Gyants in the Sea coastes of Tuscane. And when he had repeated these wordes twise or thrise together, he tooke vp his Axe as though he woulde haue striken the king, but both their friends perceyuing that, ranne betwene them, so that there was no harme done. And so Corineus being pacified, compelled the other to accomplish his promise. Thus therefore came it to passe that Locryne married Corineus daughter called Gwendoloena: Howbeit, the singuler great loue and affection that he bare vnto the saide Eastrilde could not vet out of his minde & be forgotten, wherfore he made a Caue vnder the ground in the Citie of Troynouant and enclosed her therein, committing her vnto the custody of his most neere and famylier friends: For standing in dread of Corineus he durst not vse her company openly, but as it is before sayde prinely and by stealth: in so much as he had the companie of her the space of. vij. yeres full, and none knewe it, but a fewe of his verie familyer and faythfull friendes, for so often as he had accesse vnto her, he feyned that he would make a secret sacrifice to the Goddes of his countrie, and so he brought all men into a false beliefe causing them to thinke that it was so in deede as he sayd. But at the length it came so to passe that Estrild was great with childe and delyuered of a verie faire daughter, whom he named Habren. At the same season also Gwedoloena was brought a bed of a man childe called Madan, which was committed to his Graundfather Corineus to be brought up in those Artes that he was skilfull in. Afterwards, when in processe of time Corineus was dead, Locryne put away his wife Gwendolyn, and caused Estrild to be Estrilde crowned crowned Quene. The which thing Gwendolyn being maruellous wroth withall, went into Cornewall, and assembling together the power of the youth of the country, began to disquiet Locryne and to warre voon him. At the length they ioyned battaile and met together nere a Ryuer called Stoore, where the sayde Locryne was slaine with an Arow. Then incontinent after his death, Gwendolyn following the raging passions of her father, tooke vpon her the gouernement of this realme, commaunding Estrild with her daughter Habren to be cast both hedlyng into the river Severne, called in English Severne. And further made a proclamation throughout all the whole realme of Briteyn, that the same water should be euermore called Habren, after y Maydens name, for so euen at this day is Seuerne called in the Welsh tongue. And this did she as one desirous to make

Galfrid.

IN this time Dauid, of the Tribe of Beniamin being the sonne of Isai, or Iesse, was both the Kinge and Prophete of Almightie God after the death of Saul: for by the com-David annointed maundement of almightie God he was annointed king of Israell by the prophet Samuell, whome Saule (after the spirite of God had forsaken him) partly for enuy that Dauid was so highly praysed of the Israelites, and partly fearing that he would defeate him of his kingdome, vexed with cotinual persecution: during which time, Dauid shewed many examples both of Godly pacience, & also of loyall obedience toward his Prince. Insomuch as when Saul (by the prouidence of God) fell in his hands: he onely cut a peece of the hemme of his garmet, in token that if he had listed at that present, he might have slaine him, & for y dede, afterward he greatly repented that he had bene so bold, as to cut off a pece of the garment of Saul, his souereigne Lord & King: notwithstanding v he was his most grieuous enimie, and euery houre sought his death. This noble king reigned ouer Israell. xl. yeres, that is to say, he reigned ouer Iuda, vii. yeres, & ouer all all Israell. xxxiij. yere. He did that was right in the sight of God, and put his trust and confidence in the Lord God of Israell, so that before, nor after him, was not the lyke among the Kinges of Iuda: He cleaned to the Lorde, and went not from his steppes, 2. Reg. 2 he observed the commandementes that the Lorde had geven to Moses: Wherefore God bare witnesse of him, that he was a man according to his awne heart and desire: and to him God renued his promises, of the health and saluation that was to be looked for in Christ our Saujour: and for a more certeyntic thereof, Christ of the Prophetes is called the sonne of Dauid. And furthermore, Dauid himselfe by the inspiration of God in his Hymnes and Psalmes most manifestly prophecieth of the Conception, Birth, Life, Death, Resurrection, Ascention, & heavenly Kingdome of our Saviour Christ. Wherefore among the Prophetes and other holy men, his writinges were had in great estimation, and of like aucthoritie as were the writinges of Moses. This noble king expulsed out of Israell the Iebusites, and made Ierusalem his Citie: He vanquished the Philistines, and brought the Arke from the house of Aminadab to Ierusalem. Languet.

¶ But after all this, he forgat God and committed both murder, and adultery, but he most greuously repented the same, and called vpon GOD for mercy; but yet God did greuously ponish him, neuerthelesse at the last he did behold his repentance, and forgaue him, and restored him to the peaceable gouernement, not onely of all the Israelites, but also of all their borders, and made them all tributaries vnto Israell, and finally sent him a sonne by Bethsabe his Wife called Salomon, whom Dauid in the. xl. yere of his reigne Salomon borne. assigned to take the charge and governaunce of the Kingdome of all Israell, and gave vnto his sayde sonne Salomon a charge, that he shoulde buylde the Temple of God in Ierusalem, and gaue him also a plot and description howe he should builde the same, and then he dyed. But such as are desirous to reade more of the story, may resort vnto the Bible, and read the seconde booke of the Kinges.

2. Regum:

GWendoloena, or Gwendolyne the wife of Locryne as before is expressed, which was the daughter of Corineus Duke of Cornewall, did after the death of her Husbande, because her sonne was to yong, take vpon her the gouernement of Briteyn, and was by the Gwedoline common assent of all the Britons, made Ruler thereof. And having full possession of governed Brithe same, she well and discretely ruled it to the quiet and contentation of her subjectes, and so she continued vntill such tyme as Madian her sonne came vnto his lawfull age. At which tyme she gaue ouer the rule and dominion vnto him, after she had ruled this Islande, xv. yeres.

MAdan, or Madian, the sonne of Locryne and Gwendolyne, tooke on him the Gouernance of Briteyn at this tyme, who (as some write of him) vsed great tyranny ouer his Britons. Notwithstanding, all or the most part agree, that he ruled the same. xl. yeres. At the ende of which terme, he being at disport on hunting, was of wylde Beastes or Wolues slaine or deuoured, and as Raynulph of Chester sayth, he left after him two sonnes, the one called Mempricius, the other Manlius.

¶ About this tyme Salomon the sonne of Dauid by his wyfe Bethsabe, after the death. of his father began to reigne as King ouer all Israell. And of him it is written in the. iij. Chapter and the. iij. booke of the Kinges, that he besought God to graunt him wisedome, which God gaue him in such aboundaunce, that he excelled all that euer were before him, namely, in wisedome, pollicie, and good gouernaunce. And in the. iiij. 3. Regum. 6. yere of his reigne and. iiij. Moneth called Zif, which some say is April, and some May, he began to buyld the Temple of God at Ierusalem, that is to say in the foure hundreth The building of eightie yere after the Children of Israell departed out of Egypt. But in the ende, he the Temple. forgat God and delighted in fleshly lustes and pleasures, he had seuen hundreth Wyues that were Queenes, and moreover he had three hundreth Concubines that were straungers and Idolaters, and they turned his heart from God to Images and Idolatry, so that his heart was not perfect with the lorde his God, as his fathers was. And because Salomon would not turne to the Lord his God, therefore God sayde vnto him, that he would rent his kingdome, but not in his tyme, but after his dayes. And Salomon reigned ouer Israell. xl. yere and then dyed, and was buryed with his father in the Citie of Dauid, and after his death Ieroboam the servant of Salomon reigned over. x. #### THE FIFT AGE.

MEmpricius, or Mempris the eldest sonne of Madan, and his brother Manlius, after the death of their father, made great strife for the souereigne dominion of this Realme of Briteyn; But at the last Mempricius by treason, procured the death and destruction of his brother Manlius, and shortly after he tooke vpon him the sole gouerne ment of this Realme of Briteyn, who in the tyme of his reigne vsed such crueltye, and tyranny towardes his subjectes, that he endeuoured to make away almost al the nobles of his Countrie, and now thinking himselfe in rest, he waxed slouthfull and tooke pleasure in filthie and fleshly affections, and at length gaue himselfe wholy to Harlots and Concubines, and finally forsooke his lawfull wyfe, and exercysed the act of filthie Sodomy, and so brought himselfe into the hatred of God and all his people. And on a tyme goyng on huntyng, when he had lost his people, he was destroyed of Wolues, after he had reigned. xx. yeres, leaving after him a goodlye yongling begotten of his lawfull wyfe, named

Mempricius wild Beasts.

In this tyme Roboham the sonne of Salomon, began to reigne onely ouer two Trybes of Israel, that is to say, the Tribe of Iuda, and Beniamin, and he was the first that reigned in Israell, the Tribes being deuided, as apereth in the. xj. Chapter of the third booke of the kings. And the cause why the other. x. Tribes of Israell did forsake to be vnder the gouernance of Roboham, was for that he refused and despised the coun-Auncient fathers sayle of the sage, graue and auncient fathers which were counsaylers to his father, and gaue credite to the phancies and opinions of yong men, among whom he had bene brought vp wantonly: and in the ende none followed the house of David but Iuda. iamin was geuen vnto Nathan, the brother of Salomon, but neuerthelesse they fayth-

Gaufride. Geoffrey of Monmouth.

EBrank the sonne of Mempricius, was made ruler ouer this land of Briteyn, in the vere of the world two. M. ix. C. lxxiiij. and had as testifieth Reynulph Monke of Chester, Gaufride and other writers. xx. Wyues, of the which he begat. xx. soncs and. xxx. daughters, whose names are rehersed of Geffrey of Monmouth, wherof the fayrest was named Gwales, or after some Gualea. This Ebrank was also a man of a comely stature, & of a great strength, and by his power and might be enlarged his dominion: in so much, that he wanne and occupied a great parte of Germania, by the ayde and helpe of the Latynes, and returned thence with great praye and ryches. After which returne he builded the Citie of Caerbrank, now called Yorke, which should be as sayth the Aucthor of the booke named the flowers of stories, Yorke. written in French in the. xxiii, yere of the reigne of the sayde Ebrank, which accompt to follow, it should seeme that London was builded before Yorke. C.xl. yeres, supposing Lodon builded the Citie of London to be builded in the second yere of the reigne of Brute. In his saide before Yorke, C. xl. yeres. Citie of Ebrank, hee made a Temple to Diana, and ordered an Architamyn to gouerne Architamyn or the same, according to the lawes of their Gods, or as we now call him an Archbyshop.

¶ Also he builded in Albania or Scotland, the Citie and Castle of Maydens, the which now is called Edenborough, in the time that Roboham the sonne of Salomon reigned king Edeborow. of Israell. After which buildings finished and done, he with a great armie sayled into that part of Gallia, which now is called France, and subdued the Frenchmen, and a great parte of Germany and returned with great triumph and ryches. And when he had guyded this land of Briteyn nobly by the space of. lx. yeres, as most writers agree, he died and was buried at Caerbrank, or Yorke, leaving after him for his heyre his eldest sonne (as Gaufride sayth) named Brute Greneshield.

¶ At this time Abia the sonne of Roboham, and the fourth king of the Iewes, was after his father king of Iuda, and reigned three yeres, he overcame Hieroboam in battaile.

He had. xiiij. Wyues, and of them he begat xxij. sonnes and. xvj. daughters.

¶ Asa the sonne of Abia was after the death of his father king of Iuda, he was just and righteous in the keeping and observing of the commandments of God, and in the overthrowing and destroiving of the Aultares that were erected for to sacrifice vnto Idols, and after he dyed when he had reigned. xlj. yeres, as apereth in the xv. Chapter of the iij. 3. Reg. 15. booke of the kings.

¶ And here I finde noted in Languet these wordes: about this time, according to the prophecie of Hely, halfe the yeres of the worlde were fulfilled, signifying that the worlde should continue but. vj. M. yeres.

AT this time also Iosaphat the, vij. King of the Iewes reigned next after Asa his father, and he reigned. xxv. yeres in Ierusalem, and followed the good steps of his forefathers: wherefore God blessed him with great aboundance and ryches. He ordeyned Judges in cuerie Citie of Iuda, and commaunded the Leuits to reade the lawe of God vnto the people, that they might thereby learne to feare God.

BRute Greneshield the sonne of Ebrank was made gouernor over this land of Briteyn, and reigned, xij, yeres, and is buried in Caerbranke, or Yorke, leaving after him a sonne named Leyll, as sayth Fabian, Lanquet, and Bergamo. But Rastall and Caxton saye that he reigned. xxx. yere.

LEyll, the sonne of Brute Greneshield, after the death of his father, tooke upon him the kingdome of Briteyn, and ruled. xxv. yeres. This was a just man and a louer of peace, and in his time he builded a Citie or Towne, which after his awne name, he named Caerleyll, now Carlile, in the which he builded a Temple, and therein placed a Flamyn, and Carlile. after dyed and was buried in his aforesayde Towne. This Leyll left after him a sonne named Lud, or as some call him, Lud Hurdibras.

Ochozias.

Affter Iehoram, Ochozias, or Ozias his sonne was the ix king of Iuda, he was but xxij, yere olde when he began to reigne, and he reigned but onely one yere. And in the cude, for yeelding to Idolatrie, hee was slaine by the people of Iehu king of Israell, the same murder being done at his commaundement.

LVd Hurdibras, or Rathudibras, or as some wryte Rudibras, sonne of Leyll, began to reigne in Briteyn: And after he was stablished in his Kingdone, he appeased the great variance and discordes that sprang in his fathers tyme, and that beyng done, he then builded the towne of Caerkyn, which now is called Cantorbury: He builded also the Towne of Caerguen, now called Wynton or Wynchester: And another towne called Mount Paladoure, now called Septon or Shaftesbury. In the time of the buylding of which towne of Septon, as affirmeth Gaufride, an Egle there spake certeyn wordes, the which he sayth he will not wryte nor declare for any certentye. And when he had ruled this land nobly by the space of, xxx, yeres, he dyed, and left behind him a sonne named Baldud or Bladud. But in very deede the sayde Gaufride was here deceyued, taking Aquila for the name of a birde called an Egle, which was the proper name of a man, that lived in the dayes of the aforenamed Lud Hurdibras, who by reason of the great knowledge and skill that hee had in the ludicialles of Astronomye, coulde tell before of thinges to come, and therfore was in those dayes taken for a great Prophet, insomuche that when the same 'King was determined to builde Septon, or Shaftesbury, and had already layed the foundation of the walles, he desyred the sayd Aquila, the Horoscope of the beginning of the said woorke first considered, to shew his opinion touching the continuaunce and fortune of the same Towne: And therfore it is that many report how an Egle should then speake. This Aquila is of writers called Aquila Septonius, that is to say, Aquila of Shaftisbury. And of his divination and prophecies, there is further mention made in the. ix. booke and last Chapter of the sayd Gaufride.

BLadud, or Baldud, the sonne of Lud Hurdibras, after the death of his father reigned ouer Briteyn. This man as sayth Gaufride, Polichronicon, and others, was very well sene in the Mathematicalles and in Negromancie, and by that Art he made the hoate Bathes in the Towne of Caerbadon, now called Bathe, the which Towne or Citie he also builded.

¶ Ihon Bale in his booke of the famous writers of Briteyn, writeth of him in this wise:

Bladud

Bladud, surnamed the Magician the. x. king of the Britones, was sent in his youth to the famous citie of Athens in Greece, there to be instructed in Philosophie and the liberall Sciences. And when he had there studied a certaine time, hearing of the death of Lud Hurdibras his father, he returned home againe, bringing thence with him foure expert Masters in many Sciences, not thinking it meete that his Country shoulde lack any lenger such singuler ornaments of learning as they were Those Philosophers as wryteth Marlin, Marlyn. placed he at Staunforde in a verie pleasaunt soyle, and made schooles for them, to the in- Staunford. tent they should there reade the lyberall scyences, where they had many tymes a great audience. He was a man very cunning and skilfull aswell in prophane sciences of the Gentiles, as in all wisdome and knowledge that the Grecians excelled in: But especially studious and singulerly well seene was he in the Mathematicall artes and sciences, for the which cause, one of the Sibelles that lived in his tyme, hearing of the wonderfull fame that went of his name and doctrine, wrote and dedicated vnto him a booke of Prophecies, and foretellings of thinges to come. Some affirme that the same Bladud builded the Citie of Bathe, and therein made by a wonderfull arte certevne hote Bathes, for the vse and commoditie of the people, which do remaine yet to this day, committing the consequation thereof vnto the Goddesse Minerua, in whose honour he caused a Temple there to be erected, to the entent that beyng preserved by so mightie a Goddesse should never faile, but continue for euer. They wryte also how that he read and taught Necromancie throughout all his Realme. But these things are verily as I suppose feined matters. Hetherto Bale. And it followeth after in the same Aucthour: And when he had at the length prepared himselfe by Artmagique and Sorcery such winges as Dedalus made himself, he attempted to flye in the ayre in the presence of the people, in which attempt he fell downe hedlong vpon the Aultare of Apollo, and so brused his body with the fall that he dyed thereof, when he had reigned. xxj. yeres, and was buried at Troynouant. Ihou Hon Hard. Harding in the first booke, and xxv. Chapter of his storye, sheweth that the schole or vniuersitie of Stamford aforesayd was forbidden by Austen the Monke, like as other Vni- Austen the versities of this Realme were, under this pretence, that they maintened the Arrian and Pelagian heresies, the which his prohibicion was the cause of the decay of the sameVniuersities and therefore long after his tyme, there was no common professing of learning, but in great Monasteryes or Abbeyes. But William of Malmesburye sayth, that the hoate Bathes were made by the procurement of Iulius Cesar Emperour, hee dyed and was buryed at Troynouant, when hee had ruled Briteyn by the space of. xx. yeres, leaving after him a sonne named Leyr.

AMasia the sonne of Ioas was after his father King of Luda, and reigned in the tyme that Ioas the soune of Ioacham was King of Israell. In the beginning he gouerned very well, but yet he did not ouerthrow the hill Aultars where they sacrificed to their Idols, and therefore when he had reigned. xxix. yeres, he was of his awne people slaine.

Amasia slaine.

LEvr the sonne of Bladud, or Baldud, after the death of his father, was made ruler ouer the Britons. This Leyr was of noble condicions, and guyded his land and subjectes in great wealth and quietnesse, he made the Towne of Caerleir now called Loycester. Leycester. And albeit that this man reigned long over Briteyn, yet is there no notable thing worthie of memorye written of him, except as Gaufride sayth, that he had by his wife three daughters and no sonne, and the daughters were named Gonorilla, Ragan, and Cordeilla, the which he loued much but most specially hee loued the yongest, Cordeilla by name.

When this Leyr, or Leyth, after some writers, was fallen into competent age, being Leyr. desirous to know the minde of his three daughters, he first demaunded of Gonorilla the Gonorilla eldest how well she loued him: the which calling her Goddes to record, sayde, she loued him more than her owne soule. With this answere, the father being well contented, demaunded of Ragan the second daughter, how well she loued him? To whome she aun-Ragan swered, and affirming with great othes, sayde, that she coulde not with her tongue expresse the great loue she bare to him: and added further, that she loued him about all creatures. After these pleasaunt aunsweres had of those two daughters, he called before him Cordeilla the yongest: who vnderstanding the dissimulation of her two sisters and entending to proue her father, sayde: Most reuerende father, where my two sisters have dissimuled with thee, and vttered their pleasaunt wordes fruitlesse, I knowing the great loue and fatherly zeale, that then ever hast borne toward me (for the which I may not speake vnto thee otherwise then my conscience leadeth me) therefore I saye to thee father, I have ever loued thee as my father, and shall continually while I live, love thee as my naturall father. And if thou wilt be further inquisitive of the love that I beare thee: As thy ryches and substaunce is, so much art thou woorth, and so much and no more doe I love thee.

The father with this aunswere being discontent, maried his two elder daughters, the one vnto the Duke of Cornewale, and the other vnto the Duke of Albania, or Scotlande, and deuided with them two in mariage his lande of Briteyn after his death, and the one halfe in hande during his naturall life. And for his thirde daughter Cordeilla he reserved

LEYR

Aganippus or Aganip Kinge of France.

¶ Itso fortuned after, that Aganippus, which the English Chronicle nameth Aganip king of France, heard of the bewtie and womanhood of Cordeilla, he sent vnto her father and asked her in mariage. To whome it was aunswered, that the king would gladlie geue vnto him his daughter, but for Dowar, hee would not depart with, for he had promised all vnto his other two daughters.

¶ Aganippus, by his Messengers beyng thus enformed, remembring the vertues of the aforenamed Cordeilla, did without promise of Dowar, take the sayde Cordeilla to his

wyfe.

¶ But here is to be noted, that where this Aganippus or Aganip is called in divers Chronicles the king of Fraunce, it can not agree with other histories, nor with the Chronicles of Frauce. For it is testified by Reynulph of Chester, and by Peter Pictauiens, by Robert Gagwyne, by Bishop Anthony, and many other Chronicles that long after this tyme there was no king of France, neyther was it long after called France: But at this day the inhabitaunts thereof were called Galli, and afterwards were tributaries to Rome without having any king, till the time of Valentinianus Emperour of Rome, as hereafter in this worke shall be plainely shewed.

The story of the Britons sayeth, that in the time that Leyr reigned in Briteyn, the land of Fraunce was vuder. xij. kings, of the which, Aganippus should be one, the which saiyng, is full vulike to be true, and the same maye be proued many wayes, but I passe ouer, for that it is not my purpose to vse any speciall discourse of the kings of Fraunce.

Leyr fleeth out of his land.

Then it followeth in the History, when Leyr was fallen into age, the aforesayd two Dukes, thinking long before the Lordship of Briteyn fell into their handes, arose against their father (as Gaufride sayth) and spoyled him of the gouernance therof vpon certaine condicions to be continued for terms of lyfe, the which in processe of tyme were minished, as well by Maglanus as by Henninus housbands of the aforenamed Gonorild and Ragan: But that most displeased Leyr, was the vnkindnesse of his two daughters considering their wordes to him before spoken and sworne, and now found and proued them all contrary.

¶ For the which he being by necessitie constrayned, fled his land, and sayled into Gallia for to be comforted of his yongest daughter Cordeilla. Whereof she having knowledge, of naturall kindnesse comforted him: And after shewing all the matter to her Husband, by his agreement, receyued him and his to her Lordes Court, where he was cherished after her best maner.

¶ Long it were to shew vnto you the circumstance of the vtterance of the vnkindnesse of his two daughters, and of the wordes of comfort genen to him by Aganippus and Cordeilla, or of the counsayle or purueyance made by the sayde Aganippus and his Lordes, for the restoring againe of Leyr to his dominion: But finally, he was by the helpe of the sayde Aganippus restored again to the government of the Realme of Briteyn, and possessed and Whereof Cunedag being tousness ware, in all haste gathered his people: And after a certeyne message sent by him for reconciliation, seeyng that there was no peace to bee made, but the same must be determined by dynt of sworde, and the judgement of battayle, he met with his Cosyn in plaine fielde: where the Goldes were to him so fauourable, that he slue many of the people of his sayde Cosyn, and at the length compelled him to flee. After which victory thus had, he pursued Morgan from Country : Country, vistill became within the Province of Country of Wales, in the which the sayd Morgan gaue vnto the sayd Cunedag another Battayle: But for that he was farre the weaver, we was there outsith owen, and slaine in the fielde. Inimacus the sonne of Sisillus, as some wryters haue, but more truely as sayth the olde Chronicle, the brother of Lago, was made ruler of Briteyn, as his brother before him was, and passed his tyme without any notable actes or deedes, so that of him there is no more memorye than is of his brother. In this tyme was that most noble Prophet Daniell, and he florished in Babilon. And in his youth by his wisedome, he delinered Susanna from death, & he expounded Daniel the Pro- the dreames of Nabuchodonosor: And finally, he was cast into a dence among hungry Lions, where by the power of God he was preserved from harme. Ferrex slaine.

FErrex and Porrex his brother, Sonnes of Gorbodag reigned ouer this Realme of Briteyn, and continued in amitic a certain time. After which time expired, as sayth Reynulph and Gaufride, Porrex being couetous of Lordship gathered his people together vnknowne to his brother Ferrex, entending to destroy him. Whereof he being warned, for lack of space to assemble his people for sauegarde of his lyfe, fled sodainely into Gallia or France, and prayed ayde of a Duke of Gallia named by Gaufrid, Gunhardus or Swardus, the which Duke ayded him, and sent him againe into Briteyn with his host of Gallis. After whose landing, his brother Porrex with his Britons met him, and gaue to him Battaile, in the which battaile Ferrex was slaine, with the more parte of his peo But here some Aucthours write that Porrex was slaine and Ferrex survyued. But whether of them both was lyuing, him did the mother of the same two brethren named, Widen, setting a parte all motherly pittie, with the helpe of her women, most cruelly murdered, in the night season in his sleepe, and cut him in pieces. And thus ended the aforesayde two brethren, after they had reigned in Briteyn in warre and peace. v. yeres. And here endeth the lyne or ofspring of Brute, after the opinion of most writers, for as Gaufrid sayth, after the death of these two brethren, great discorde arose among the Britons, the which continued long among them, by meane whereof the people were sore vexed and noyed vnder. v. Kings, whose names I finde in an olde Pedegre to be Rudancus that was king of Wales, Clotemis King of Cornewall, Pinnor king of Locgria, Staterius king of Scotlande, Yeuan king of Northumberlande. And as sayth Guydo de Columna the Britons abhorred the lynage of Gorbodug, for so much as first the one slue the other, and chiefely for the vnnatural disposition of the mother, that so cruelly slue her awne child. The English Chronicle sayth, that after the death of the two forenamed brethren, no rightfull inheritor was left on lyue, wherefore the people were brought into great discorde, insomuch somuch that the lande was deuided into foure partes. So that in Albania was one ruler, in Loegria another, in Cambria the third, and in Cornewall the fourth. But of these foure Rulers, the English Chronicle alloweth Cloton Duke of Cornewall, for most right- Cloto Duke of ful hevre.

Reynulph of Chester sayth, that after the death of the sayde brethren, great discorde was in this lande vnder the gouernement of. v. kinges, but he neyther reherseth their names nor the times of their reignes, sauing that he sayth that the discorde continued vnto the coming of Mulmucius Dunwallo. So that here appereth no time certaine, howe long this discorde and variance among the Britons continued, but who so lust to looke in Fabian, in a draught by him drawne, in the beginning of his Chronicle, shall there finde that it continued nere to the terme of. Lj. yeres.

ABout this time Esdras, by the lycence of Artaxerses came from Babilon to Ierusalem with xvij. C. lxxv. MUlmucius or Moluntius Dunwallo, the sonne of Cloten, vanquished the other Dukes or rulers, and reigned himselfe ouer Briteyn. This man ruled Nobly and builded a house in the Citie of Troynouaunt now called London, which house as some suppose is now called Blackwell Hall. Also he made many good lawes, the which long after Blackwell Hall. were called Mulmucius lawes. These lawes Gildas translated with great diligence out of the Britishe speche into Latyn. And long time after, Aluredus or Alured king of England turned the same out of Latyn into English, or the Saxen tongue. He also gaue privilege to Temples, to Ploughes and Cities, and to the wayes leading to the same. Whereby as Raynulph sayth, all such malefactours as fled vnto them for succour and Raynulph. sauegarde of themselues, might not be empeched nor molested any maner of wayes of their enimies, so that had a man done neuer so much harme (as Caxton reporteth in his Canton. story) if he might once come into the Temple, it was not lawfull for any to misintreate him, and lykewise he shoulde bee suffered therein to go safe and in peace, and afterward go into what Country he would without any harme. And if any man fortuned to set any violent hand vpon him, he then should leese his lyfe. And as some Aucthours affirme, he began the foure highe wayes of Briteyn, the which was finished and privileged also by The foure high Belinus his sonne, as after shall be declared. The olde Chronicle testifieth that this Mul-wayee. mucius, whom he nameth Molle and Caxton Douebant made the two townes of Malmesbury and Vyes. And many other wryters, affirme that after he had stablished himselfe in this land, and set his Britons in good order, he by the aduise of his Lordes ordeyned him a Crowne or Diademe of Golde, and caused him selfe to be crowned with great Mulmucius the solempnitic after the vsaunce of the Pagan law. And for this cause, after the opinion Briteyn that of some writers, he was called the first king of Briteyn. And all the other before re-ware a Crowne hersed were called Rulers, Dukes, or Gouernors. Of the same Mulmucius it is further of Golde. written by Ihon Bale. Doctour and others, that he was a great fauourer and supporter of Hon Bake. all learned men, and that by him was restored to the auncient trade and maner, the science of Chiualrie, wonderfully decayed before his tyme, and in maner cleane extin-

¶ Finally, when he had guided the lande well and nobly the space of. xl. yeres, he dyed, dyed, and was buried in Troynouaunt, now called London, leauing after him two sonnes, the one named Belinus, the other Brennus.

Brennus.

Belyn.

BElinus and Brennus the two sonnes of Mulmucius, began to reigne ioyntly as kinges of Britevn: and Belyn held Loegria or Logiers, which is that part that we now call England, Wales, and Cornewall. And Brennus had all the land beyond Humber, with the which particion eche of them held himselfe well contented, and so was the Realme of Briteyn peaceably gouerned betwixt them, the space of. v. yeres, as Polichronica sayth, and in this meane tyme Brennus builded the Citie of Bristow. After which terme, the sayde Brennus entending to have more lande or all, arose against his brother Belyne, and made vpon him sharpe and mortall warre. In the which warre Brennus was ouerset and compelled to flie the lande, and to sayle to Armorica, nowe named little Briteyn, but as Reynulph and Gaufride sayth, he went into Norway, and there maried the daughter of Elfunge or Elfung which then was Duke of Norway. When this was shewed vnto Belyn, he considering the sodaine departing of his brother: did in all the hast first seaze Albania, and al the other land that belonged to Brenne into his awne hand, and fortefied the Cities therof and other strong places, with his awne Garisons and Souldiours. Whereof when Brenne was aduertised, he in all possible hast assembled a great armie of people of the Norwayes, and tooke his shipping to sayle into Briteyn. And as he was keeping his course vpon the sea, he was encountred with Guilthdacus king of Denmarke the which had lyen in awayte for him, for love of a Damsell that he had maried which before tyme was promised vnto the saide Guilthdacus by the saide Elfunge her father. When these two Nauies were met, strong shot and fight was vpon both parties: But finally the Danes ouercame the Norwayes, and tooke the ship by strength, wherein the yong Damsell was, who was quickly brought vnto the Ship of Guilthdake. And so in fine Brenne with a fewe of his Shippes left, was faine to prouide for his awne safetie by flight.

¶ When Guylthdake had thus obteyned the victory, he entending to haue sayled toward Denmarke, the tempestes were so great, and wind so contrary, that he was enforced to land in Northumberland, where at that tyme was Belyn making of preparation of de-Cuilthdake king fence against his brothers comming. But when word was brought vnto Belyn, of the landing of the king of Denmarke with a smal company he rejoyced at it, and commaunded him with his Shippes and company to be put in sure holde and keeping.

¶ It was not long after, but Brenne had newly rygged and victualled his Shippes, and hearing of the arrivall of Guilthdacus in Northumberland with his wyfe, sent woordes of manace vnto his brother Belyne, willing him to send vnto him his wyfe, wrongfully rauished and deteyned by Guilthdacus king of Denmarke, and also to restore him to his brother Belyne, Patrimony, or else he would shortly inuade his lande, the same for to waste, and as his enemy to destroye. The which request was of Belyne plainly and shortly denied. Wherof when Brenne had knowledge, he shortly after landed in a part of Albania, & made towarde his brother, and his brother towardes him: so that their hostes met nere vnto a Wood, named the Calatere, where betwene them was a mortall and terrible battayle, insomuch, that muche people were slaine vpon both parties: But in the ende the Britons wan the fielde, and chased the Norwayes vnto their Shippes. And as Gaufride sayth, A cruell battaile the fight was so cruell & sharpe, that there were of both sydes slaine, to the number of.

¶ Belinus having obteyned this great victory over his enemies, after thankes and oblations made vnto his Goddes, after the maner of the Pagan lawe: he then assembled his Lordes at Yorke, and there tooke their aduice what he should do with the king of Denmarke. In the which counsayle it was concluded, that the aforesayde Guilthdacus should holde and do homage to the king of Briteyn for the land of Denmarke, and yerely pay Gwilthdakeking of Denmark bevnto him a thousand pound for a tribute: which being done with suretie and hostages, came tributary the sayd Guilthdacus with his woman, was set at libertie, and returned into his awne to England Country.

Now when Belyne had by this victoric possessed the quiet state of this Realme, he confirmed the lawes made before by his father, and did ordeine that justice was ministred throughout the lande. And where the foure wayes begon by his father were not per- The foure high fighted and ended: He therfore called workmen and set them to paue the same with wayes of England, paued by stone, that they might the better bee knowen to all trauaylers.

The first of these foure wayes was named Fosse, the which stretcheth out of the South, Fosse, into the North, & began at that tyme at Totnesse in Cornewall, and passed forth by Devonshire, Somersetshire, and so foorth by Tutbury vpon Cotteswolde besyde Couentry vnto Leycester, and from thence by wylde playnes toward Newarke, and endeth at the Citie of Lincolne.

The seconde way was named Watling streete, the which stretcheth overtwhart the Watling streete. waies of Fosse, out of the Southeast, into the Northeast. This began at Douer, and passeth by the middle of Kent ouer Thamis beside London, by west of Westminster, and so foorth by S. Albones, in the West syde of Dunstable, of Stratford, of Touceter, & of Wedon: by South Killingbourn, by Atherstone, and then passeth besides Bewdley over Seuerne vnto Gilbertes hill, that now is called the Wrekyn, and so foorth vnto Stratton to the middle of Wales vnto a place called Cardican at the Irish Sea.

The thirde way was named Erming streete the which stretcheth out of the West, Erming streete, Northwest, vnto the East Southeast, & beginneth at S. Dauids in west Wales, and so stretcheth foorth vnto Southampton.

The fourth and last way is called Kykeneldes streete, the which stretcheth foorth by Kykeneldes. Worceter, by Wycombe, by Birmyngham, by Lichfielde, by Darby, by Chesterfielde, by etrécte. Yorke, and so foorth vnto Tynmouth, the which were sufficiently made. And he graunted and confirmed vnto them, all such privileges as before were granted by Dunwallo his father. The which privileges with other lawes by him made, such as are desirous to knowe, let them reade the translation of Gildas, made of Mulmucius lawes, out of Britishe speech vnto latine, and there he shall see the whole.

While Belyne was thus occupied, his brother Brenne beyng as aforesayd in a promince of Gallia, taking his expulsion very grieuously, and beyng without comfort to attayne to his former dignitie, at the last resorted (being accompanied onely with xij. persons) vnto the Duke or ruler of that Prouynce or Country.

¶ For ye shall vuderstande, that in those dayes (as sayeth Eutropius and other wryters) the Gallis occupied divers Countries. And therefore Titus Livius wrote the his- graunce at ye tories of the Romaynes, made distinction of the Gallis, and nameth them that Brenne first was deuided into sudry counlead when he besieged Rome, and afterwards the Capitoll Senones Galli, of whome the tries, Citie of Sene in Tuscayne tooke name, because (as testifieth the Author of Chronica Chronicarum, and other) it was first builded of the aforesayd Galles in the time of Brenne being there Duke and leader before the comming of Christ. CCC. lxxx. yeres. And for this cause the Senenses are of the aforesayde wryters reckened also among the Galles.

¶ Now when Brenne was commen to the Duke, whome Gaufride calleth Signinus Duke of Alebrog, the which is to be vnderstande the Duke of Armorica, now called Amorica called little Briteyn, as Reynulph doth plainely declare, and that he had opened vnto him all his little Briteya griefe and trouble: the sayde Duke receyued him into his Courte with all curtesie and gentlenesse. And for that he was a personable & of gentle nature furnished with all that belonged to a Gentleman, he within a short time after was had in great estimatio before any other that apperteined to his Court. By reason wherof at the last he fell in loue with his daughter, and in the ende maried her vpon condicion that if he dyed without issue Male, that he then should be ruler of that Countrie, and if it happened him to have an heyre Male, that then yet notwithstanding, to ayde and helpe him to recover his land lost.

The which condicions well and surely vpon the Dukes partie, by the assent of the Nobles of his land were assured. And the sayde Duke within lesse then one yere following dyed. After whose death, when by a convenient tyme, it was knowne that the Duchesse his wife was not with childe, all the Lordes of the land did their homage to Brenne. To the which Lordes, the more to winne their loue, he departed much of his treasure, and shortly after with their assent gathered a great armie, and so in all haste sayled into Britevn to make new warre vpon his brother Belyne, and after a little tyme landed there. Of whose landing when Belyne was informed, he in all haste gathered his Britons together in great number & made towarde Brennus, as to his mortall enimie. But the mother of the two brethren, named Conwenna, or after the English booke Conwey, considering the mortall hatred betwene her two children, of a motherly pitie went betwene her two sonnes, and vsed her selfe so wisely and discretely, that at length she agreed After which agreement, both the brethren with their Lordes and friendes sped them vnto Troynouaunt, or London, and there after many things done and ordered for the weale of the lande, they agreed to leade both their hostes into Gallia for to subdue to them the sayde Countrie. And in as goodly haste as they might prepare for the iourney, they tooke shipping and so sayledinto a part of Gallia, brenning and wasting the Countrie without all pittie. And as sayth Gaufrid, they in short time subdued a great parte of Gallia, Italy, and Germany.

Belyne and Brenne were great conquerours.

Here Gaufrid doth vary from Eutropius, Titus Liuius, and other the writers of the Romaine Histories, for where Gaufrid sayeth that at suche time as Belyn and Brenne made warre in Italy, Gabius and Porsena were the Consules of Rome, that saiying differeth farre from other. For as they affirme, at the time when Brenne besieged Rome, Claudius Emilius, and Lucius Lucretius were Consules, & Furius Camillus was at that time Dictator of Rome, and none lyke vinto the other were Consules many yeres before nor after.

¶ But truth it is, that the sayde two brethren did many great actes in the aforenamed Countries, but not all agreeable with the saiyng of Gaufrid. For where he referreth all those deedes to both brethren, the aforenamed Titus Liuius speaketh but of Brenne, as hereafter shall appere. Now when Belyn had remained a certeyne of time with his brother Brenne in those partes, by agreement of them both, Belyn returned into Briteyn, & Brenne remayned behinde.

When Belyn was returned into Briteyn, he repayred certaine olde Cities and builded vpon the Riuer of Vske a Citie, and called it Caeruske nere vnto the Riuer of Seuerne. This Citie was after named the Citie of Legions because the Legions of the Romaines were lodged in the same Citie, and now it is called Caerleon, which in the time of king Arthur was an Vniuersitie and had in it two hundred Philosophers, as Gaufride wryteth, which being well learned in Astronomie and other Sciences, diligently observed the courses of the starres, and by true and infallible reasons, shewed before what straunge and wonderfull things should that time happen vnto king Arthur.

¶ Also he builded in Troynouant an Hauen, with a gate ouer the same, in the Pynacle or top whereof was a Vessel of brasse, in the which was inclosed the Ashes of his brent body, when he was dead. This gate was long after called Belyns or Belynus gate, and at this day it is called Belynsgate.

While Belinus was thus occupied in Briteyn, his brother Brenne desirous to winne fame and honour, builded in Italy and in certeyn partes of Gallia certeyn Cities and Townes as followeth.

Pauy. Brixia. Milleyn.
Bergomum. Verona. Tridentum.
Seua. Vincencia. Cremona.

Belingsgat.

The which Cities and Townes were builded of the Galles, or at the least were new repayred in the time that Brenne was their Duke and leader, although some writers suppose that Comum, and Cremona were builded after Brenne was dead. Reynulph sayth, Reynulph. that the Senons, which he meaneth by the Galles dwelling about the Citie of Senu, by the leading of Brennus ouercame the Romaines. xj. Myles from Rome, at the River Albia, and chaced them to Rome and tooke the Citie, and after layed siege to the Capitoll. And in a night while the warders of the Capitoll slept, the Frenchmen or Galles by a way vnder the earth came into the Capitoll and were lykely to have wonne it. But a noble Romaine The noyse of a named Mallius or Manlius Torquatus, awoke by the crying and noyse of a Gander or Manlius and Ganders. The which Manlius resisted the Galles, for which the Romaines long time after smed the Capiheld a feast of Ganders the first day of Iune: Howbeit, afterward, it was called Iunos toll. Ganders feast. Feast, because they thought that I uno the Goddesse had by her influence genen that grace vnto the Ganders, that they should by their noyse awake the Romaines. But yet the Galles or Frenchmen, helde the Romaines so shorte, that they were compelled to give vnto Brenne their Duke a thousande pound weight of Golde, as sayeth Titus Liuius, and A great gift not he sayeth further that the Galles slue of the Senators of Rome a great many in number, long enioyed. whome they supposed to have bone Goddes, because of the riche apparell that they sate in. But shortly after this, the aforenamed Furius Camillus, which was called againe Furius Camillus from the Citie of Ardea, where he was outlawed before, and by the Commonalty of Rome a Dictator of Rome, wan in this distresse made againe Dictator, pursued Brenne and his people, and gaue to them againe from battaile, and slue of them a great number, and wanne from them all the Golde and Iewels euer Rome had that before time the Galles had wonne of the Romaines. The which deede was done. lost. CCC. lxiiij. yere before the comming of Christ.

Now when Brenne was this discomfitted of the Romaines, he turned his people to-Brenne discomward the Macedones or Grekes, and deuided them into two hostes, whereof he reteyned fited. the one with him, and the other he sent into a Countrie called then Gallacia, and after Gallacia. Gallogrecia, and lastly Galates. Then Brenne overcame the Macedones, with their Duke Galates Sosteme, and after spoyled their Goddes and their Temples, and sayde in myrth, riche Brenne ouer-Goddes must geue to men some of their riches. Also he spoyled the Temple of the God dons. Appollo Delphicus, standing in the hill of Mount Pernasus. Wherefore as sayth Policarpus, the people of that Countrie praved to God for helpe, and sodainely the earth began to quake, and a great parte of the hill fell vpon the host of the Galles and slue them. Astraungething. And after that, there fell Hailestones of such greatnesse, that it slue another part of the host, and Duke Brennus was sore wounded, whereby he fell in such dispaire, that he slue Brenne killed

Now for as much as I have here showed you the ende of Brennus, I will now returne to Belinus his brother, who as before is declared, busyed himselfe in the guyding and ordering of his Realme and people of Briteyn, and in executing many notable deedes, like as he constituted and orderned three Archflamyns, whose Seas, were at London, Yorke, and Caerleon. And as Master Layland sayth, he buylded the Tower of London, and did many other notable things in his dayes, the which for length I ouerpasse: and finally he dyed and after the Pagan maner, was with great pompe burned and buried at Troy- Belyne dead. nouant in London, when he had reigned with his brother and alone, after some writers. xxvj. yeres, leaving after him a sonne named Gurguinthus, or Gurguint Brabtruc, or after some wryters Gurguint Barbarouge, which is to meane Gurguint with the red beard.

GVrguintus the sonne of Belyne, a Prince of great wisdome and sobernesse and whentime came succeded his father, & reigned king of Briteyn, xix, yeres, who following his fathers steppes, loued both peace and justice. This king forasmuch as the tribute that was graunted to his father by the king of Denmarke, was now denyed to bee payed, assembled a great army, and prepared a great Nauy, and sayled into Denmark, and there wasted wasted & spoyled the Country with sword and fyre, in such wise, that at length the king of Denmarke, with the assent of his Baronage, graunted to pay and continue the aforesayde Tribute of a thousande pound yerely. Howbeit Gaufrid wryteth, that he slue the sayde King in battaile. After which victory thus had of the Danes, he with great triumph returned into Briteyn. And in keeping of his course, he encountered with a nauie of. xxx. sayle besyde the Isles of Orcades full of Men and Women, of which flote, the chiefe Capiteyn was called as most writers affirme, Bartholomew, & which when he was brought vnto the kinges presence, shewed that he with his people were put or exiled out of Spaine, and were named Balenses, and had sayled long time vpon the Sea, to the ende to finde some Prince that would geue to them a dwelling place, and they to become his Subjectes, and to holde their lande of him, beseching the king to have compassion vpon them, and to graunt to them some place to inhabite in, that they should no lenger dwell in their Shippes, considering their victuall was spent by reason of their long living vpon the Sea. After which request thus made by their Capitaine, the king with the aduice of his Barons, graunted to them a voyd and waste Countrie, which was and is the farthest Isle of al the Isles toward y west, the which, Isle as saith the English Chronicle, was then named Irelande, after the name of their Capiteyn called as he wryteth Irlamall. But who so will know the first cause of the naming of this Isle Ireland, let him reade the xxxii and xxxiii of the first booke of Polichronica, and there he shall finde the more certainty of the naming thereof, with many other thinges touching the sayd Isle.

Spaniardes lycenced to inhabite Ireland.

> Then it followeth in the story, after Gurguintus was returned into his land of Briteyn. he established and ordeyned to be kept the lawes made by his forefathers, and exercised iustice to his Subjectes, and gouerned his lande well and nobly by the space of xix. yeres. and then dyed, and was buryed at Caerleon, or after some wryters at Troynouaunt, lea-

GVintelinus, or Guintellius the sonne of Gurguintus, was made king of Briteyn, and he guyded this lande with great meekenesse and sobernesse. He had also a noble Wife called Marcia, who was learned in many sciences, and among other noble deedes by her done, she set foorth vnto the Britons a wholesome and notable law, which long time Martians lawes, after was called Marcians lawe. This lawe, for that it was good and necessary, Aluredus which long after was king of England, traslated out of British into the Saxons speech, and then was it called euer after in the Saxons tongue, Marthehelag, that is to say, the lawe of To this Wooman for her wisedome, was committed all the governance of the land, and (as Gaufride sayth) shee reigned as Queene of Briteyn a certeyn tyme after her Husband was deade. But the yeres of her reigne are accompted with the veres of her Husband, or with the yeres of her Sonne Sisillus, so that the tyme of her reigne is not certeyne.

> ¶ In this time the said Guintelyn builded the towne of Warwike, which was about the tyme of the birth of great Alexander. But after that the Saxons destroyed it. reedefyed agayne by king Guyderius.

> ¶ Now when Guinthelinus had reigned well and worthely the space of xxvj. yeres, he dyed, and was buried at Troynouaunt, or London, leaving after him a sonne named Sisillus, or Cecilius.

330 Picates.

CEcilius, or Sisillus, the sonne of Guinthelyn, reigned king ouer Briteyn, but there is no notable thing written of him, but that (as the Scottes write) in the first yere of his reigne, a people of Almaine called Pichtes, aryued here in Briteyn, and possessed those partes which we now call the Marches of both the Realmes of England and Scotland, and when he had reigned. vij. yeres he dyed, and left after him a sonne named Kimarus.

KImarus

KImarus, y sonne of Cecilius, reigned king of Briteyn, but of him there is nothing written, but that he was a wilde and wanton Prince, geuen to all pleasure and pastime, & reigned but thre yeres, beyng slain of his aduersaries as he was a hunting, and left after him a sonne named Elanius.

ELanius the sonne of Kymarus, reigned king after his father, but some Authours wryte that Elanius was brother to Kymarus, and some wryte that Kymarus and Elanius was but one person, howbeit: it is most lyke they were two persons, now to be short, he reigned, but two veres, but other wryte (whom I credite) as Languet, that he reigned ix. yeres, and then dyed.

MOrindus the bastard sonne of Elanius (as sayeth Gaufride) was made king of Briteyn. This man was gotten vpon the Concubine of Elanius, named Tanguestela, and was a man of worthy fame in deedes of Chiualrye, but he was so ouercome with wrath and cruelnesse, that commonly he was the death of any that angred him. Besides this, he cruell man. was comely of personage, and liberall in rewardes, and was also of a merueilous strength, insomuch, as he had not his lyke of any man that was within the Realme, beyng of Noble birth.

¶ In his time there came a Prince into this realme out of a Country called Mauritania, the which Prince with his cruell and fierce people wasted the land of Briteyn with sworde and fire, without all pitie and mercy. Whereof when Morindus was certified, he in all haste gathered his people, and met with him in the field, and bad him battaile, and fought in such wise, that at the last he chased the Prince to the Sea againe, and tooke many of his Souldiers Prisoners, whome to be reuenged of the tyrannie vsed by the sayde Prince, he Cruell execution caused to be put to death in diverse cruell maners, as by hangyng, heading, fleayng, bren-ons. ning, and other cruell executions done in his sight.

Finally (as sayth Guido de columna) and other, this Morindus on a time walking, or funna, riding along by the Sea coast, espied a wonderful strange Monster, the which of his knighthood and courage he thought to slaye. And with a manly force assayled the Monster, Morindus was slaine & deuourfighting with it a certeyne space: But in conclusion he was denoured and swalowed of the ed of a Monsayde Monster, after he had reigned. viij. yeres, leaving behinde him. v. sonnes, Gorbo-ster in the Sea. mannus, Archigallo, Elidurus, Vigenius, and Peredurus.

ABout this time the Scottes beginne their Chronicles at Fergus or Fergucius the sonne of -Ferquard king of Ireland: who (as they write) came with a great power out of Ireland to their ayde in the tyme of dissension, betwene them and the Pichtes, where by wisedome and prowesse he so handled the matter that he agreed those people, and obteyined such fauour, that they elected him to be their king, and he reigned among them. xxv. yeres, and Scottes drowned. finally in passing the seas between Ireland & Scotland, he was drowned.

¶ But these histories of the Scottes, as they set them foorth are full of lyes, and agree with none other Historiens, for they saye that Fergus slue Coill king of Briteyn, when there was then no such of that name, nor many yeres after, as it maye hereafter appere. But I will take the yeres of the reignes of their kings as they write them, which were from this time vnto the comming of Cesar. And he renewed and repayred all the olde Temples through his Realme, and builded some new, and as the English Chronicle sayth, he builded the Towne of Cambridge and Grantham. And in the time of his reigne the land Cambridge was much more welthier than it was in the dayes of his predecessors. But finally to the builded 309, ELidurus the third sonne of Morindus and brother to Archigallo, was by the assent of the Britons made king. This man became so mylde and gentle to the Britons, that they gaue to him a surname, and called him Elidure the meeke. And among other deedes of meekenesse, this that followeth is not the least to be noted. It happened him on a day to be on hunting in a Wood nere vnto Yorke called Calater, and there he founde hys elder brother Archigallo late king, wandering in the thickest of the Wood, whom louingly & charitably he in secret maner conveyed home to his mansio house, into the Citie then named Aldud or Acliut. And (as Gaufride sayth) to the intent to bring his brother to his former dignitie, as after followeth: For when Elidurus returned home, he feyned him selfe sicke, and in all the haste sent his messengers about his realme to gather an assembly of the Barons of his land together. And when the day of assembly was come, and his Lordes according to his commaundement were present, he called them one by one, as they were of honour into his privile Chamber, and there by his wyse and discrete wordes he gat graunt of his sayde Lords to ayde and strength him to bring his brother Archigallo to his former dignity and Regality. After which graunt by the Lordes made, he assembled a counsayle at Yorke, and there so persuaded the commons that they were content to receive Blidurus 2 wor- Archigallo againe to be their king. He made a Librarij in Alexandria, which he furnished with innumerable sortes of bookes of all Sciences. Among which as chiefe was the volume of Moses law. And the king heering that the deuine lawe was in Ierusalem, he being verie desirous to haue it translated, first discharged out of bondage all the Iewes that were in his subjection, who were in number about one hundreth Demetrius Arise thousand persons. And then he sent Demetrius and Aristeus to Eleazar the high Priest of the Iewes with great giftes to the Temple of God, desiring that the law might be sent vnto him, with learned men to translate it into Greke. And forthwith Eleazar sent. lxxii. interpretors, who commonly are called Septuaginta interpretes. DIuellus reigned ouer Briteyne. iiij. yeres, he was a verye wyse and verteous Prince.

HEly the sonne of Diuellus reigned ouer Briteyn, not full one yere, and he had three Hely. sonnes, Lud, Cassibelan, and Stennius, or rather Nennius, they were wise men, and valiaunt in warres. And of this man the Isle of Elye tooke (as some writers affirme) the first name: notwithstanding, Laylande supposeth it to be so called, of Eelys, which are there ingendred in great store, and therefore calleth it in latine Insula Anguillaria.

LVd the eldest sonne of Hely, was after his father King of Briteyn. This Man was honorable in all his deedes, and he builded new temples and repayred the olde. He also repayred olde Cities and townes, and specially the Citie of Troynouant, where he caused many buildings to be made, and also made about the sayde Citie a strong wall. And in the west part of the sayde wall, he erected and made a strong and fayre Gate, and commaunded the same to be called by his awne name Luddes gate, which at this day is called Ludgate. Ludgate. And for that he loued this City, he vsed much and often to lye therin, by reason wherof it was called Caerlud, or Luds towne, & after by corruption of spech, it was after called, & is so named at this day London.

T Bale wryteth how there fell great dissension betwene Lud and his brother Nennius aforesayd, about the chaunging of the name of Troynouaunt into Luddes towne, or London, because it might be the occasion that the memorie of Troy and the worthic deedes there done, should thereby be buried in obliuion, and be forgotten.

This Lud also (as sayth Gaufrid) was strong and mightie in armes in subduing his enimies. He was also bounteous and liberall and kept a great houshold, by meane wherof he obteyned the great loue and fauour of all the Britons. And when he had reigned in honour. xi. yeres, he dyed, and was buried in his gate called Ludgate, and left after Lue buried in him two sonnes, as Guydo sayth, the one named Androgeus, and the other Temancius, or Ludgate. Tenancius.

CAssibelan or as some wryte Cossiuelan, after the death of his brother Lud, was made king of Briteyn, for so much as the two sonnes before named, were to yong and insufficient to take in hande so great a charge. But as sayth the Flowre of Histories, this Cassibelan was not made king of Briteyn, but rather ruler or protector of the lande, for tories. the time of the nonage of the aforesayde brethren: albeit Gaufrid sayth, that after Cassibelan was set in aucthoritie, he became so noble and liberall that his name sprang farre. and by his exercise of lustice, the Britons ought to him more fauour then to eyther of his Nephewes: Howbeit, he cherished them and brought them vp according to their birth. And when they came vnto yeres of discretion, he gaue to Androgeus, the Citie of London, with the Dukedome or Ereldome of Kent, and to Temancius the Dukedome of Cornewall.

Julius Casar.

In this tyme Caius Iulius Cæsar, who most commonly is called Iulius Cæsar, being sent by the Senate of Rome, as felow and Consull with Lucius Bubulus into the comptrie of Gallia, for to subdue the Galles to the Empire of Rome. The which Inlies being vpon the Sea side, as sayth Gaufrid, after he had ouercome the sayde Galles and beholding the white Clifes or Rockes of Briteyn: enquired of the Countrie, and wast people dwelled therein. And when he was sufficiently informed of all the commonities thereof, he had great will to bring the sayde Countrie under the obeysance of the Romaynes, as other Countreyes for the most parte then were. But as Bergamo writeth, the line that Iulius made warre upon the Galles, he knew that they received great ayde out of Briteyn, and therfore was he the willinger to conquer it, because they should not be any more ayded by the Britons. And so having diligently enquired of the state thereof, he wrote to Cassibelan, willing him as he tendered his awne safetie and the quietnesse of his realme and people, that he would become tributarie unto the Empire of Rome, like as many other Nations were.

and short aunsweres, shewing that he and euerie noble man was bounde specially to keepe his Countrie and people from scruitude and bondage, the which to observe he would doe his vttermost endeaour; with the which answere Iulius Casar being nothing contented, in all haste made readic his Nauie and people, and sayled towarde Briteyn. And when the Romaines were come nere the land of Briteyn, and should have landed: the Britons pight sharpe stakes and long upon the bancks, which caused them to winne the lande with great daunger. And not long after their landing, Cassibelan with a strong hoste of Britons encountered the Romaines, geuing to them a fierce battaile, in so much, that they were faine to flie to their Ships for suretie, and after with sodaine tempest his Nauie being almost destroyed, he returned againe into France there to Winter. Notwithstanding (as Gaufrid and other sayth) after he had renewed his armie, and also rygged and encreased his Nauie, he came againe the second time: But as before time, so he was now againe by the Manhood of the king and of his Britons manfully and knightly withstanded and chased away, and compelled to flee with great dishonour. In the which battaile, the valiaunt courage of the hardy and noble knight Nennius brother vnto king Cassibelan is worthy of perpetuall memorie, who manfully fighting for the defence of his Countrie and the libertie thereof, besides other noble deedes of armes then by him atchieued, ranne vnto Cæsar and plucked his sworde out of his hande, and therewith slue Labienus Tribune or chiefe Captaine of the Romaine Nobilitie: And receyuing againe as Gaufride wryteth his deathes wound by the same Casar, dyed thereof verie shortly after, and was buried at the Northgate of Troynouaunt, and the sayde sworde put in the

¶ For which victorie thus twise obteyned, Cassibelan entending to geue thanks vnto his Goddes, and to rewarde his Knights, in goodly haste caused an assembly to be made of all his Lordes and Knightes at the Citie of Caerlud, or London, where after due obseruaunces done to their Goddes, after the vse of their Pagan lawes, a great and solempne feast was holden by the king to all that would come with most liberalitie and plenty, in all that was necessarie to such a feast. And the more to encrease the kings honor, and to the comforte and delectation of his Lordes and other being there present, there was all maner kinde of games and pastimes, that at those dayes were exercised and vsed. ¶ Now when that knowledge of the death of Hirelda was brought vnto the King: he Euclinus somwas therewith greatly moved, and entending due justice to be had and ministred by the moned to appere for the aduise of his Barons caused the aforenamed Cosyn of Androgeus, who was named Eue-death of Hirellinus to be sommoned for to appere before him and his Counsayle, and there to acquite da. him of such crime as to him should be layed, for the death of Hirelda before slaine. But Euclinus by the counsayle of Androgeus his Cosyn, withstoode that commaundement, and shortly after, the sayd Androgeus and Euclyne departed the Court, without taking leave of the king.

The king disdevning this demeanour of Androgeus, after divers monicions to him giuen, gathered his Knightes together and made warre vpon Androgeus. Wherfore, after many wayes and meanes sought, at the last he sawe that he was not of power to withstande the kinges great indignation, sent his Letters vnto Caius Iulius Cæsar, then being Androgeus sent in the Countrie of Gallia, shewing him the circumstance of the matter, and excusing him- Caius Iulius Ceselfe of all gift, prayed him in most humble wise, that he would shortly returne with his sar to prouoke him to warre sarmie into Briteyn, and he with his whole power should be readie to ayde and helpe him gainst Cassibeagainst the Britons.

¶ Of this message Iulius was verie glad, and in all haste made toward Briteyn with a great power. To whome the winde was so fauourable, that in shorte time after this message. he drewe nere the lande: But (as Gaufrid sayth) before he would land, to auoyde all treason that might be wrought by Androgeus and the Britons against him, he received from him Iulius Cesar in Hostage his sonne named Scena, with. xxx. other of the most Noble of his Lordship, and drogeus. that done he landed with the helpe of Androgeus. Wherof when Cassibelan had warning, he forthwith made towarde the Romaines, and in a Valey nere vnto Dorobernia, now named Cauntorbury, there he founde the hoste of the sayde Iulius lodged, and with him A battell beside Androgeus with all his power. After which knowledge had, they fiercely with their habiliments of warre vexed and grieued eche other, till at length both hostes met hande to hande. and fought cruelly, in such wise, that many fell to the ground and were slaine on both parties. But when the Britons (as sayth Gaufrid) had long foughten and knightly defended Gaufride. the Romaines: Androgeus Erle of Kent, came with his people in a wing vpon them, and so sharply assayled them, that they were constreyned to forsake the fielde, and place, that they before had kept: The which flight so discomfited the other, that finally all fled and Julius Cesars gaue place to the Romaines, who pursued and slue them without all mercie. So that victory. Cassibelan with his Britons that were left, were faine to get them to a place of suretie, there to rest and encampe themselues that they might newly prouide to withstand their enimies.

THeomancius, or rather Tenantius, the sonne of Lud, and Nephew to Cassibelan, succeded in the realme of Briteyn. This Man in the Englishe Chronicle is not named King, but his brother Androgeus. But Gaufrid sayth, that for as much as Androgeus feared the hatred of the Britaynes, for his treason wrought against the king and the lande: he therefore coueted to abide with Iulius Cæsar at Rome, rather then to be king ouer such as he thought would neuer love, nor favour him.

EWyn, the third sonne of Edeir succeded hys Father in the Realme of Scotland and reigned. vij. yeres. A Prince genen all to vice and lochery, for being not content, as they write with an hundred Concubynes, with whome he might fulfill his lust, he made a law, that it should be lawfull for his Subjects to have as many wyues as they were hable to keepe, and that the wyues of his Commons should be common to the Nobles: and that the Lord should have the Maydenhead of all Virgins dwelling in his Lordship: the which lawe continued vntill the tyme of Malcolme Cammorre, & from thence vnto this tyme, they pay to the Lord of the soyle a redemption of their Maydenhead. And when he had thus continued. vij. yeres, in exercising of his tirannie and filthy lust, he fell into the hatred of his Lordes, and was by them deposed and slaine in prison.

MEtellane, Nephew to Edeir, was chosen king of Scottes, a verteous, and quiet Prince, who peaceably reigned. xxxix. yere.

¶ And here I thinke meete to note to the reader, that the order that I have kept in this my story hetherto, hath bene chiefly to expresse and set forth vnto you the pedigree and discent from Adam to Christ, in the line of the righteous, wherein is to be learned that all those that heard the voyce of the Lord, and observed his lawes, prospered and He that heareth were blessed of the Lord, and brought to high honour and advancement: And such and doth it, shallagaine as hearkened not to the worde of the Lord, were deliuered as prayes and spoyles be happy in his deede. to their enemies. And although sometyme, I have vpon sundrie occasions made some notes of the lyne of cursed Cain and others, yet I have chiefly observed the lyne of the iust, out of the which almightie GOD promised there shoulde issue of the Seede of the Woman, one that should breake the Serpentes head, which Seede was ment by our Sauiour Iesu Christ, who in this tyme was borne of the Virgin Mary. And here I will as it were drawe forwarde the lyne where I left before, at the kinges of Iuda, (in the tyme that they were made captive to Babilon, which kinges discended out of the loynes of Da-uid) and will now for the perfighting of my purpose recite the ende thereof. The last king of Iuda that I haue spoken of before, was Sedechias the sonne of Iosias, who was captine in Babilon, from whom issued Ioachim, and successively, Iechonias, Salathiell, Zorobabell, Abiud, Eliachim, Azor, Sadoch, Achim, Eliud, Eleazar, Iacob, and Io-The ende of the seph, who marved Mary the Virgine, of whom was borne our Saujour Iesu Christ.

And the Virgin Mary discended also out of the Loynes of Dauid, as first Nathan, the second sonne of David, begat Mathata, and he begat Menna, from whome successiuely came Melcha, Heliachim, Iona, Ioseph, Iuda, Symeon, Leui, Mathat, Ioram, Eliezer, Iesu, Her, Helmadam, Cosan, Abdi, Melchi, Neri, Salathiell, Zorobabel, Refa, Iohanna, Iuda, Ioseph, Semei, Mathathias, Ioseph, Iamna, Melchi, Leui, Mathat, Ioakim, and Marie the Virgine, who was borne. xv. yeres before Christ, and maried vnto Ioseph. Flores historiarum. Polichronicon, and sondrie others.

And here for order and keping of a just accompt, endeth the sixt Age of the worlde, or sixt part of my booke, and this sixt Age was from the Captiuitie of Babilon, vnto the Birth of our most blessed Redemer and Sauiour Iesu Christ, to whom be all honor, prayse, and glory, for euer and euer. Which age continued. 627. yeres.

- ¶ And here also I thought it convenient to make a recitall of the Ages of the Worlde.
- 1 The first Age is from Adam to the Flood of Noe.

- 2 The second, from Noe to the birth of Abraham.
- 363. yeres, and. x. dayes.
- 3 The third, fro Abraha to the departing of the Childre of Israel out of Egypt. 430. yeres.
- 4 The fourth, from their departure, to the building of the Temple.

480. yeres.

5 The fift, from the building of the Temple, to the Captiuitie.

419. yeres.

6 The sixt, from the Captiuitie, to the birth of Christ.

627. yeres.

And thus it may apere, that the number of yeres from the Creation of the Worlde, vnto the birth of Christ, were. 3969. yeres.

¶ And for the better satisfaction of those that knowe not the true summarie or accompt of the aforesayd Ages, I will shew by a perticuler accompt gathered out of the holy Scriptures, how the true knowledge of euery Age is collected, which may appere -as followeth.

The first Age conteyneth. M. vj. C. lvj. yeres and is proued thus.

THE FIRST AGE.

ADam being. C. xxx. yeres olde, begat Seth. Seth beyng. C. v. yeres, begat Enos.

Enos beyng. xc. yeres, begat Caynan. Caynan beyng, lxx. yeres, begat Malalehell. Malalehell beyng. lxvi. yeres, begat Iared. Iared at the age of. C.lx. yeres begat Enoch. Enoch being. lxv. yeres begat Mathusalah. Mathusalah at the age of. C.lxxxvii. yeres, begat Lamech. Lamech beyng. C.lxxxii. yeres, begat Noe. Noe at the beginning of the Flood, was vi.C yeres olde, as appereth in the fift of Genesis. So that the whole summe of yeres of this first Age, were as is aforesayde. M. vi. C. lvi. yeres.

The seconde Age conteyneth. iij. C. lxiij. yeres, and. x. dayes, and is Proued thus.

THE SECOND AGE.

THE Flood continued a yere and x. dayes. Sem (which was Noyes sonne) begat Arphaxat two yeres after the Flood. Arphaxat beyng. xxxv. yeres olde, begat Salah. Salah being. xxx. yeres old, begat Heber. Heber at his age of. xxxiiii. begat Phalech. Phalech beyng. xxx. yeres, begat Regu. Regu beyng. xxxii. yeres, begat Saruch. Saruch at. xxx. yeres begat Nahor. Nahor beyng at the age of xxix. yeres, begat Thare. Thare beyng. lxx. yeres, begat Abraham, and Abraham departed from Chaldee, when he was lxx. yeres olde. So that the whole summe of yeres of this second age, as is aforesayde, is. CCC. lxiij. yeres, and. x. dayes.

The third Age conteyneth. iiij. C.xxx. yeres, and is collected in this maner.

THE THIRDE AGE.

ABraham was in Charan. v. yeres, and departed in the. lxxv. yere of his age. And he begat Isaac, when he was an hundreth yere olde, and in the. xxv. yere of his departing. Isaac begat Iacob when he was. xl. yere olde. Iacob went into Egypt with all his family when he was. C.xxx. yere olde. And Israell remayned in Egipt CC.x. yeres, at which tyme Moses departed with the Children of Israell out of Egypt. So that the whole somme of yeres of this third Age is as aforesayd. iiij C.xxx. yeres.

THE FOURTH AGE.

MOses remayned in the Desart or Wildernesse. xl. yeres. Iosue, and Othoniell, reigned. xl. yeres. Aioth. lxx. yeres. Delbora. xl. yeres. Gedeon. xl. yeres. Abimelech iii. yeres. Thela. xxiii. yeres. Iair xxii. yeres. Then were they without a Capitaine xxiii. yere vnto the cōming of lephthe. Iephthe. vi. yeres. Abissam. vii. yeres. Elom x. yeres. Abaton. viii. yeres. Sampson. xx. yeres. Hely high priest. xl. yeres. Samuell, and Saul xl. yeres. Dauid. xl. yeres. Salomon in the. iiii. yere of his reigne, began the building of the Temple. So that the whole somme of yeres of this fourth Age as aforesayd, is. iiii.C.lxxx. yeres.

The fift Age conteyneth. iiij. C.ix. yeres, and. vj. Monethes, and is collected in this wise.

THE FIFT AGE.

SAlomon reigned after he began the building of the Temple, xxxvi. yeres. Roboam xvii. yeres. Abia. iii. yeres. Asa. xli. yeres. Iosaphat. xxv. yeres. Ioram. viii. yeres. Ochosias Ochosias one yere. Athalia the Quéene. vii. yeres. Ioas. xl. yeres. Amasias. xxix. yere. Ozias. lii. yeres. Ioathan. vi. yeres. Acas. xvi. yeres. Ezechias. xxix. yeres. Manasses lv. yeres. Amon. ii. yeres. Iosias. xxxi. yeres. Ioachas, iii. Monethes. Eliachim. xi. yeres. Ioachim. iii. monethes: And then began the Captiuitie of Babilon, and not after the. xi. yere of Zedechiah (when both the Temple and the Citie were destroyed and burned) as some suppose. So that the whole somme of yeres of this fift age, are as aforesayd, iiii.C.ix. yeres, and. vi. monethes.

The sixt age is from the captiuitie of Babilon, vnto the comming of Christ, and conteyneth sixe C.xxv. yeres. and is proued thus.

THE SIXT AGE.

THe captiuitie continued. lxx. yeres. The children of Israell were delivered and restored to their fréedome in the first yere of Kinge Cyrus. The Temple was begonne to be reedified in the. xj. yere of the sayde Cyrus, and finished in the vj. yere of the reigne of Darius. After that Darius had reigned. xx. yeres, Nehemias was restored to libertie, and went to builde the Citie, which was finished in the xxxij. yere of the sayde Darius. Also it is mencioned in the. ix. of Daniell that Ierusalem should be builded vp againe, Daniell ix. and from the tyme of that building vnto the comming of Christ, should be lxvii. weekes, and euerie weeke is by that text reckoned for. vii. yeres. So lxvii. weekes amount to CCCC.lxxxiii. yeres. For from the. xxxii. yere of Darius vnto the xlii. yere of Augustus, in the which yere our Sauieur Christ was borne, are just and complet so many veres. Whervoon we reckon that from Adam vnto Christ are 3953, yeres, vi. Months and x. dayes. And from the Birth of Christ, vnto this present time is 1567 yeres. And the whole somme and number of yeres from the beginning of the worlde vnto this present yere are 5530, yere, vi. Monthes and. x. dayes,

And here is to be noted that the Ages of the worlde are not called Ages in respect of the number of yeres that they conteyned (as some doe imagine that every age conteyned certaine thousands of yeres) but for certaine great and maruellous things that happened or were done in the beginning of euery of them.

1 In the beginning of the first Age, God made Heaven and Earth and all the Creatures that are therein, and also made Man vnto his awne Image and similitude.

2 In the beginning of the second, God sent the vniuersall Flood, and drowned all the creatures in the worlde, eyght persons onely except.

3 In the beginning of the thirde, God made his covenaunt with Abraham in Circumsition.

4 In the beginning of the fourth, God brought the children of Israell out of Egypt, thorow the red Sea, and delivered his holy law vnto Moses out of the Mount Sinai,

5 In the beginning of the fift, was the Temple of Ierusalem builded.

6 In the beginning of the sixt. The Temple was destroyed, and all the Iewes brought captine into Babilon.

7 In the beginning of the. vii. our Sauiour Iesu Christ was borne of a Virgin, and tooke vpon him our nature, who suffered moste cruell death and passion for the sinnes of the whole worlde.

Thus have I set foorth vnto you the Ages of the world, and why they are so called, and also the true computation of them as is expressed in the holy Scripture, which computation I observe throughout this my Chronicle, because the same agréeing with the Scriptures must of force be most true.

When Casar Augustus, or otherwise called Octavian the Emperour had stablished most sure peace throughout the world, our Redéemer and Sauiour Iesu Christ, very God and man, and the onely pacifier of Gods wrath, and the true peace maker was borne in the xl. yere of the reigne of Augustus, after the vniuersall Flood 2305 yeres, and from the birth of Abraham 2012 yeres. And after the departure of Israell out of Egypt 1509 yeres. And from the arrivall of Brute in Englande 1107, yeres. After the building of the Temple of Salomon 1029, yeres. From the building of Rome 752, yeres. After the captivitie of Babilon 614, yeres, and in the last yere of the 194. Olimpiade. And here is to be noted that the first yere of our Lord hath but vii. daies after some computation, for he was borne the xxv. day of December, and the first day of Ianuary folowing began the second yere. Languet.

And nowe followeth the seuenth Age of the Worlde, and the seuenth part of this booke, which Age beginneth at the birth of Christ, and shall continue to the ende of the Worlde.

THE SEUENTH AGE, AND SEUENTH PART OF THIS CHRONICLE.

THE SEUENTH AGE.

Esus of Nazareth King of Iewes and onely head of the Christians, with the Fatherand the holye Ghost, one Eternall God, and almightie Lorde of all things, begotten by his Father God in euerlastingnesse, and in the fulnesse of time, taking flesh of the pure Virgin Marie, by the worke of the holy Ghost, and being verie God and man, according to the holy Oracles of the Prophets, to redeeme with his most precious blood the streyed Sheepe, and loste grote, was borne in Bethlem a City of Inda: where incontinent by the glorification of the Angels, the agnition of the Shepeherds, the veneration of the wise men, the prophecy of holy Simeon, and the admiration of the Doctours, he was had in honour. And then from the xii. yere of his lyfe, in age, wisedome and fauour both with God and man he encreased: He was in the. xv. yere of the reigne of Tiberius baptised in Iordane by Iohn Baptist, to the example of his, & so executed all things, subduing his fleshe with fasting, the Deuill with prayer, and the world with humilitie. At which time the weekes of Danyell being fulfilled, he taught euery where most constantly, even to the Crosse, partly with his mightie worde, and partly with his effectuall workes, the kingdome of God, that is, the true knowledge of God the Father and his exceeding charitie towardes mankinde, with the sure confidence in him, the sonne of God: declaring also the way of helth, and the mutual loue, with the rewardes of the faithfull and punishments of the vnfaithfull. Then for the confirmation of his doctrine and faith, even with a little beck he commaunded calmenesse to the Elements, helth to all diseases, life vnto the dead, obedience vnto the quick, detection vnto thoughts, abolicion vnto sinnes, and flight vnto the Deuill. For all this, after all the passions and labours of mans miserie, which he suffered (sinne onely excepted) whereby he witnessed himselfe to be a very man, and after the innumerable documents and beneficiall deedes (passing mans power) openly shewed vnto his vnkinde people the Iewes, by which he declared himselfe to be true God, as it was before written in the Prophets: he was by the elders of the Iewes and people (his Disciple Iudas Iscarioth betraigng him) taken, accused, endited, scorned, scourged, crowned with thornes, crucified between theeues, and cuen then all things fulfilled, with the quaking of the earth, and darknesse of the Soune. he dyed. After which being buried, he losed Hell, and the thirde day following, lyke a conquerour of sinne, death and Hell, he rose againe, from which tyme being, xl. dayes conversaunt with his, in the xxxiii. yere of his lyfe, with glorious triumph he ascended to the heavens vnto his father, from whence he came. Where being the onely Mediator, Intercessor and advocate of his, sitting on the right hand of God his father, shall in the ende of the worlde be judge ouer all the lyuing and the dead, rendring to euerie man according to his deserving, to the faithfull certevntie of lyfe, but to the vnfaithfull everlasting death. Then good and euill segregated, with the whole worlde purged and pacified: our Lorde Iesu Christ the onely and verie almightie Emperour of the Worlde, as he hath from the beginning, so doth he now, and for euer shall reigne, to whom euerie knee of celestiall, terrestriall, and infernall creatures shall bowe, and euerie tongue shall confesse that Iesus Christ is the Lorde, to the glory of God the father. Languet.

And from this place foreward vnto the end of this worke, the numbers that are about the lyne in the Margent are the yeres of Christ, and the numbers under the lyne, are the yeres of the reigne of euery seuerall king.

GViderius the first sonne of Cimbalyne began his reigne ouer the Britons: This man was valiaunt, hardie, welthie, and trusted much in his awne strength, and for that he thought the Romaines had the aforenamed tribute with wrong, he therefore of a Knightly courage denyed to them the payment thereof: wherefore Claudius the fift Emperour of Rome, came into Briteyn with a great armie of Romaines (as sayth Polichronica) and wanne againe the sayde tribute without great fight, and therof came a Prouerbe among the Romaines, that the Britaines were neyther strong in battaile, nor faythfull in peace. And that done, he also subdued the Isles of the Orchades, which stand beyond Scotland within the great Occean, and after returned agains to Rome, in the sixt Moneth that he Hame. came from thence.

¶ But Gaufrid sayth, that in the hoste of the Romaines, there was a Capitaine named Hamo, who entending the hurte of the Britons chaunged his Shilde and Armour, and Guiderius slaine. put vpon him the Armour of a Briteyn, and by that meane being not suspect, he entered into the thickest of the Britons, and lastly came where king Guiderius fought, and shortly after slue the king. But Aruiragus seing this sodeyne mischiefe, fearing that the Britons would have geven back, quickly caused himselfe to be armed with the cognisaunce and Armour of the king: And as King continued the fight with such manhood and cou-

Hamo, when he had reigned ouer Briteyn. xxviij. yeres, leaving after him none heyre. CAratak, king of Scottes, reigned. xxi. yeres, a Prince more valiaunt then fortunate. he gaue his whole minde and courage to defende his Realme and subjects from the seruage of the Romaines, with whome he kept long warre, and ayded the North Britons.

rage, that the Romaines were at that time put to flight. And thus was Guiderius slaine of

And in this tyme Saint Paule the elect Vessell of God, being called by a Vision, was made of an open adversarie and cruell persecutor of the Church of Christ, the most faythful Apostle and true Doctor of the Gentiles: Among whome he taught the worde S. Paule. of God with so great fruit, and encreased so largely the christian faith, that he was after worthily and rightly named the chiefe of the Apostles.

- 45

Aruiragus.

ARuiragus the yongest sonne of Kymbelyn, and brother to Guiderius before slaine, was ordeyned king of Britons in the yere of our Lorde xlv. This Man did well and knightly behaue himselfe against the Romaines, and slue the afore named Hamo, nere vnto a Hauen or Port of the Sea. And when he was slaine, he threw him gobbet meale into the same sea. And for this cause, that Hauen was long tyme after called Hamons Hauen, which at this day is called Southhamtō. Fabian. But here in a very old Pamphlet, which beareth no name, I finde that in the tyme of Hengist afore mencioned, and in the reigne of Vortiger, there was a Saxon named Varius Ham and he builded three townes, one in the South, and named it after his awne name South Hams towne, another North fro thence, which he named North Hams towne. Another West, and by North from thence, which he named (bicause he had there made a staple of Wolles) Wolver Hams towne.

Southhātō. Northhātō. Woluerhamton,

Then sayth Reynulph, that Claudius after dyuers happes of Battaile, tooke Aruiragus to his grace, and brought his base daughter Genissa by name from Rome, and maryed her vnto Aruiragus. And because he woulde make the place of the mariage more solempne, he therefore called the Towne of mariage Claudiocestria after his awne name, and after Glouernia, of a base sonne (as some say) of the sayd Claudius Cesar called Glorus, begotten and borne in the same Citie, which afterwarde was Duke of Demecia or Southwales, and at this day it is called Glocester. Hector Boecius the writer of the Scottish Chronicle sayth, that Aruiragus before this mariage was made, was deuorced from his former wife, named Voada, sister vnto Careticus king of Scottes, of a desire that he had to be alved vnto the Romaines.

Glocestre. Hector Boccius.

Then it followeth, after the solemnitie of this mariage, which was with all honour finished, Claudius sent certeyne Legions of his Knightes into Ireland, to rule that Countrie, and returned himselfe to Rome.

It was not long after the departing of Claudius, but that Aruiragus roade about his Realme, and with great diligence repayred Cities & townes before decayed and broken with the strength of the Romaines, and as it is of some mencioned, builded the Castle of Douer, and finally intreated his subjects with such justice and good order, that they loued and drad him more then any of his progenitors. And this in continuance of tyme made him very welthy, and thereof ensued pryde, so that he thought great shame to be ynder the rule or guyding of the Romaynes, wherefore, at the last he denyed the Tribute before graunted to Rome, wherof, when knowledge came vnto the Senate of Rome, in all hast a Duke was sent from Rome called Vespasian, with certeyne Legions of knightes and Souldiours to subdue Aruiragus.

Douer Castle.

A legion of Knightes is vj. M. vj. C.lxvi.

¶ When Vespasianus was landed in Briteyn (as sayth Reynulph) he sped him so, that in short tyme he subdued Aruiragus to the Empire, and caused him to graunt payment of the aforesayde tribute.

¶ But Gaufride here wryteth howe Aruiragus heering that Vespasianus was about to lande at Sandwich, met him there with a puyssaunt armie of the Britons, and by mayne force kept him off, that he could not enter the Hauen and land: For so great was the multitude of the sayde Britons, that the sight of them made the Romaynes afeard, insomuch that they durst not lande for feare least the other would have sodeinly set vpon them, before they could bring themselves in aray and order of battaile, wherefore they hoysed vp their sayles, and departed from thence againe, and went to Totnes in Deuonshire and there aryued, and beyng landed, their Capitaine and Generall Vespasianus marched incontinent towardes the towne, which then was called in the British tongue, Cair Penchuet goit, as ye would say, the Towne vnder the Wood, and at this daye is called Excestre, to the entent to besiege it. And when he had continued his siege by the space of seven dayes, Aruiragus entending to rayse the same, sodeinly came with his armie and set vpon them, and manye went to wracke on both parties, but neither partie had the victorie of the other. On the morow both the Capitaynes were made agreed by the mediation and meanes of the Queene Genissa. Thus it apereth that the tribute was payed againe by her intreatie, and not by any violent constreynt or coaction.

After Vespasian had thus recouered the tribute, he then also made subject to the Empire an Isle liyng in the Sea, which we now call the Isle of Wight, and after return-

¶ When Aruiragus was thus the second tyme subdued, and brought vnder the yoke of the Romaines, he became more mylde towardes them, so that during his lyfe, from thencefoorth, he payde the tribute with lesse grudge, and kept himselfe in their fauours, in such wise that he was of them very wel beloued. And lastly he dyed, when he had reigned. xxx. yeres, and was buryed at Glocester, leaving after him a sonne named Marius.

After the decease of Caratake king of Scottes his yonger brother Corbreid obteyned the crowne, and reigned. xviii. yeres. He was fierce and of a valiaunt courage, and Corbreid king of beyng confederate with the Pictes, made often times warre against the Britons.

And for as much as at this time, Nero that notable Tyraunt Emperour reigned at Rome, vnder whome a great number of the true Preachers and Apostles of Christ, suffered most cruell persecution, Martirdome, and death, I thought it not much impertinent to the story to make some speciall mencion of him, and namely bicause this lande as is aforesayde, was in his tyme againe made tributarie to the Empire of Rome, the saide Nero reigning now as Emperour. But chiefely for that he was a wicked Tyraunt and a cruell persecutor of the vniuersall Church of Christ.

AT this time as is aforesayde, Nero the sonne of Domicius, being adopted to be Emperour by Claudius, which maried his mother, reigned xiiij. yeres. This man, although he was brought vp by the reuerent, wise, and learned Seneca, yet by the ineuitable corrup- Nero the Tytion of his nature, he became horrible in all kinde of mislyuing, and so detestable in dissolute wantonnesse, prodigalitie, monstruous lecheryes, beastly crueltic, and couetousnesse, that he seemed to be borne to the destruction of the whole worlde. He was so greatly delighted in singing and plaiyng with the Harpe, in sworde plaiyng, and driuyng of Cartes or Wagons, that he did not onely these exercises privately, without all measure, but also wearing the garments of Minstrels, Sworde players, and other vile personages, wandered ouer all Italy and Grece, to seeke and haunt common games, where he might trie masteries, and shewe his cunning in those feates: and at his returne, triumphed in the Citie of Rome, and sent into all Countries letters of commaundement to make supplications and rejoysing for his victories.

In vncleane lust of his body, he so furiously raged, that he absteyned not from his A description of naturall Mother, Sister, ne any degree of affinitie or kindred. He tooke in open mariage abhominable a Boyc of excellent favour, named Sporus, and vsed him as his Wife, he viciously bent life. and gaue himselfe to filthy imbracings of his awne seruaunts, & in riotous spending of his treasure he exceeded, for he vsed to fishe with Nettes made of Golde, which shoulde be drawne with Cordes of Purple silke: He neuer ware one garment twise: he caused to be put to death his mother, his brother in lawe, his two Wyues, and his instructor and Schoolemaster, the reuerend Seneca, having therevnto no just cause, nor honest pretence: Seneca put to death by Nero. He commaunded the City of Rome to be set on fyre, and himself in the meane season with all semblant of ioy, sitting in an high Tower to beholde the same, played vpon the Harpe, and sang the destruction of Troy. This Nero was so wicked, that at the last he gaue himselfe openly to such naughtie and wanton lyuing, that in the night season he woulde haunte Brothell houses, and other suspitious places, and oftentimes breake vp mens houses, and eyther robbe and beate them, or else rauishe their Wyues. And after that he had committed most abhominable incest with his naturall mother, he commaunded her to be put to death. And then maried Poppea, a woman of notable incontinencie. Poppea, the And after all this he caused himselfe to be gelded and cut in the forme & shape of a wo-wife of Nero a shamelesse Harman, and so to be abused. And when the Senate had considered of the outragious life ed.

& wicked doinges of Nero, they charged him with the setting of Rome on fyre, and he to excuse himselfe charged the christians therewith, whereof folowed a most cruell persecution of the christians, and in this persecution Peter and Paule, the Apostles of Christ. with many other Martirs were put to cruell death. And by his beastly cruelnesse, there were also many noble and verteous men put to most shamefull death, among the which were the aforenamed Seneca and Lucan, men of excellent learning. Finally, this wicked Tyraunt Nero was proclaymed by the Senate to be an enimie of the weale publique, and judged to be drawne through the Citie, and to be whipped to death: wherfore he fearing to come into the handes of his enimies, fled into a Farme house of his servants in the Countrie, where at last he was inforced to slea himselfe. put to death by Nero.

AT this tyme the Scottes, because Corbreid Galdus the eldest sonne of king Corbreid was not of sufficient age, made Dardannus the nephew of Metellane their king, who for his seemely personage was greatly beloued of his people. In the beginning of his reigne, he vsed the counsayle of his Nobles, but after three yeres he left all justice and honesty, and slipt into most vucleane vices and cruell tyranny, and lastly endeuoured himselfe to haue murdered Galdas with his brethren, and therefore the Scottes deposed him, and put him to death, when he had reigned, iiii, veres.

Marius.

MArius the sonne of Aruiragus, after his father was king of the Britons: Which Marius as Gaufrid sayth, was an excellent wise man, and gouerned this lande very honourably, and greatly prospered and encreased in welth and ryches.

In the time of the reigne of this Marius, a Duke or King of a Nation called Pictes, which descended of the Scithians, named also of some Gothes, or Hunes, came into this Isle. The aforesayde Duke or leader of the Pictes, as Gaufride sayth, was named Londricus, and he landed with a great Nauy in the Prouince of Albania, now called Scotland, and there vnmercifully he began to spoyle the Country, with sworde and fire: Whereof when Marius was warned, he in all haste assembled his knightes and people, and made towardes them, and gaue them a strong battaile, in the which Londricus was slaine, and a great part of his people ouerthrowne. In the remembraunce of which victorie, King Marius caused a great stone to be erected, and commaunded therein to be grauen these woordes, Marii-victoria, that is, the victory of Marius.

Pictes.

This battaile as the English Chronicle sayth, was foughten at a place which now is called Stanes Moore. But wheresoeuer this stone is set, the Countrie thereabout was long after called Westmaria, and is now called Westmerland.

Stanes Moore.

¶ Now when the residue of the people of Londricus which were fled from the fielde, vnderstood that their hed & Capitaine was slaine: they made their humble request to the king, that he would accept them into his grace, and that he would geue them some land or country to dwell in. And at the last the king graunted them a place in the farre ende of Scotland, which Gaufride nameth Cathenesia, where the sayd Scottes, or Pictes first inhabited. And forsomuch as the Britons disdeined to gene vnto their daughters in mariage, therfore they acquainted them with the Irish men, and maryed their daughters, and grew in processe of tyme vnto a great people. And for this allyaunce betweene the Irishmen and them, their Country (as sayth Reynulph, in the xxxvij. Chapter of his first booke) was called Irelande, and after Pictauia, and lastly Scotland. But I find in an olde written Chronicle, that when they tooke the Irish women to their Wyues, and vnderstoode not their language they were therefore called Sottes, and afterward Scottes, and their countrye which before was called Albania named Scotland, and this was the beginning of the Scottes, as it is there alleaged. Howbeit, Mathew of Westminster, Aucthor of the booke, entituled the Flowres of Histories, sayth they were called Scottes, because they were a Nation that tooke their beginning of dynerse Nations:

For Scot, sayth he, is a worde signifying an heape of diverse thinges gathered or mingled together, according to our common speeche, thou shalt pay scot and lot, that is to say, all such duties as shall bee charged vpon thee.

And when Marius had thus subdued his enimies, he attended and set his minde to the common weale of his lande and subjects, and continued the residue of his lyfe in great rest and quietnesse, and in the ende payde his naturall debt or tribute, and was buried at Caerleyle, leaving after him a sonne named Coylus or Coyll, when he had reigned, lii,

In this time the Citie and Temple of Ierusalem was taken, conquered, spoyled, and The destruction destroyed by Titus, in such wise that scarcely any man coulde judge where the place was the Temple. that it once stood in: which chaunced in the. xi. C. and one yere, after the Temple was first builded by Salomon, and the same day of the Moneth that it was first destroyed by Nabuchodonosor king of Babilon. And in the time of the siege of the same, were slaine of the Iewes xi. C. thousand, over and beside them which Vespasian slue in the subduing of the Countrie of Galile. And. xvij. thousand Titus sent into Alexandria there to be kept in most vile and peynfull bondage. And two thousand he brought in his triumph to Rome, of the which, parte he gaue to be deuoured of wilde beastes, and parte were otherwise most cruelly slaine: at which time apered the most terrible example of the wrath & vengeance of God, for the contempt of his worde & veritie. For what hart is so stony or hard that will not tremble for feare, when it considereth that God tooke so sharpe punishment vpon his awne people, whom before he loued most entirely, & among all other nations of the worlde, chose them for his peculier flock and Vineyarde. And shortly after Vespasian the Emperour, and Titus his sonne, triumphed at Rome for their victorie and conquest in Iudea. Cooper. But hereof ye may reade more in Iosephus, and there shall ye finde a most horrible and terrible Historie.

GAldus, after the death of Dardannus, was ordeyned king of Scottes. This was the most valiaunt Prince that euer reigned among them, and was endued with many excellent and Princely qualities. At the first entry he punished the wicked counsaylours of Dardannus, and after called a parliament of his Lordes, wherein many noble acts were devised, and the naughtic lawe of king Ewyn (by the which the Wynes of the commons were A wicked law, free to the nobles) was repealed and fordone. Of him the Scottes made manye goodly remembraunces in the honour of his noblenesse and great victories that he atchieued.

¶ About this time Petulius Cerealis was sente of the Romaines, as Lieutenaunt to Petulius Cerea-Briteyn, where he disconnited Galdus King of Scottes, vanquished the Pictes and the lis a Romaine sent from Rome Silurians, subdued to the Romaynes the Countrie of Brigantes or Yorkeshire men, ouer- to governe Brithrewe and chased Vodicia the daughter of the valyaunt woman Voada, and quieted the teyn. Kentishe men, and certaine other Britons which rebelled. After this Petulius, a Romaine named Iulius Frontinus was Licutenaunt in Briteyn, who also warred against the Scottes and Pictes.

ANd after the death of Galdus king of Scotland, succeded Lugtack, an hatefull and wicked tyraunt, & was as much hated of the Scottes for his vice, as his father was be-Lugtack, king loued for his vertue. He slue many of the rich men onely to confiscate their goods, and of Scottes. committed the gouernance of the Realme to most vniust and coneteous persons, and with their company he was most delighted. He defloured his awne Auntes, Sisters, and Daughters, and scorned his wise and graue Counsaylours, calling them olde doting fooles. wherefore in the thirde yere of his reigne he was slaine of his Nobles.

MOgailus, being ordeyned king of the Scottes after Lugtack, at the beginning gauehimselfe to follow the wisedome and maners of his Vucle Galdus, and obteyned divers Mogallus King. great victories against Lucius Antonius the Romaine Capitaine: but in his age he became of Scottes: hatefull in all kinde of Vices, and chiefely in couetousnesse, lecherie & crueltie. He gaue lycence to theeues and robbers to take the goods of their neighbours without punishment. He first ordeyned the goodes of condempned persons to be confiscate to the kings

COilus the sonne of Marius reigned King of Briteyn after the death of his father This man was from his infancy nourished and brought vp among the Romaynes, by reason whereof they were louing and kinde to him, and he to them. And for as much as he knewe the power of the Romaynes to be inuincible, he yelded and payde to them the tribute during his life. This Coilus also (as Gaufride sayth) was a liberall man, by reason whereof he obteyned great lone of his Nobles, and also of his commons. And as some write, he made the towne of Colchester, but other ascribe it to be one Coill that was king next after Asclepiodatus. And after that this Coilus had reigned in soueraigne peace the terme of. liii. veres, he dyed, and was buryed at Yorke, and left behinde him a sonne named Lucius.

COnarus, which was the chiefe causer of his fathers death, was made king of Scottes, who dissimuled the vices whervnto he was naturally enclined: But assoone as he was established in his kingdome, he wasted all the rentes perteining to the Crowne, in his leude lustes, and gaue landes and riches to most vile and naughtic persons, because they fauoured his corrupt liuyng, he inuented new exactions vpon his people, and therefore was of his nobles cast in Prison, and his wicked counsaylours hanged. In his place Argadus guided the Realme about, xiiij. yeres.

Ethodius Kinge of Scottes.

EThodius the first, nephew to Mogallus, was ordeyned king of Scottes, and reigned, xxxiii. yeres. This man was greatly delyted with hunting, and made many lawes thereof: He rewarded Argadus for his administration of iustice: He quieted the Isles, and being ayded by the Pictes, he vanquished Victorine the Romaine Capitaine, and brake downe the Wall of Adrian.

Lucy the irst christian King.

LVcius, or Lucy, the sonne of Coilus, was made king of Brytons, by the ayde and aucthoritic of Marcus Aurelius Antonius then Emperour of Rome, who fauoured him singulerly: He was a very good Man, and followed his forefathers steps, in all that was good, and his gouernement was so graue and discrete that he obteyed the loue of all his people. This Lucius as sundric Authors doe write, did sende to Eleutherius then Bishop of Rome, two godly learned men named Eluanus and Meduinus with certaine Epistles and Letters, praising him, that he and his Britons might be received to the fayth of Christes Church. Whereof Eleutherius being very glad, sent into Briteyn two noble Clerkes, Faganus and Dunianus, or after some Fugacius and Damianus.

¶ And as the reuerend Maister Iewell, Bishop of Sarisbury, writeth in his Replye vnto Maister Hardings aunswere. Fol. 191. The sayd Eleutherius for generall order to be taken in the Realme and Churches here, wrote his aduice vnto Lucius the King in this maner following.

Elutherius Bishop of Romes Letters

Ye have received in the Kingdome of Briteyn by Goddes mercy, both the lawe and fayth of Christ. Ye have both the new Testament and the olde: Out of the same through Goddes grace by the aduice of your Realme take a law, and by the same through Goddes sufferaunce, rule you your Kingdome of Briteyn: For in that Kingdome you are ¶ Now when these learned men were come, they were honourably receyued of Lucius, the which by their good doctrine & verteous example geuing, conucrted the king and a great part of the Britons. Now after that Lucy had thus received the fayth, he by the aduice of the aforesayd learned men, & with the instructions sent to him by the aforesayde Eleuthery, did institute and ordeyne, that all or the more part of the Archflaour Lorde. 188. myns, which is to meane Archbishoppes, and Bishoppes of the Pagan law, which at that yeres, next after day were in number (as sayth Gaufride and other) three Archflamins, and xxviij. Flamyns,

The first Sea of the first Archflamyn, was at London. The seconde at Yorke, and the thirde at Gloucester. To these three Archbishoppes were subject the aforesayd. xxviij. Flamyns or Bishoppes. To the Archbishops Sea of London, was subject Cornewall, & all London. middle England vnto Humber. To the Archbishoppes Sea of Yorke, was subject all Yorke. Northumberlande, from the Bowe of Humber, with all Scotland. And to the third Archbishoppes Sea, which was Gloucester, there was subject all Wales: In which Pro-Gloucester. uince of Wales were. vij. Bishoppes where as nowe is but foure. And at that day Se-Seuen Bishoppes uerne departed Briteyn and Wales. But after the Saxons had the rule of the land, they altered much of these orders, and to be short, there are nowe but two Archbishoppes in Englande, that is Cantorbury and Yorke, wherof Cantorbury hath the premacie, and hath under him. xv. Bishoppes in Englande, that is to say, Rochester, London, Chichester, Winchester, Salesbury, Exceter, Bathe, Worcester, Hereford, Couentry and Lichefield, Chester, Lincolne, Oxford, Ely, and Norwich. And in Wales he hath. iiij. Bishoppes. Landaffe, S. Dauids, Bangor, and S. Asaph, commonly called S. Asse. And Yorke hath but two Bishoppes in Englande vnder him, which is Caerleyll, and Durhame.

I Besydes these good orders taken the sayd Lucius destroyed the temple of the false God Apollo, which then stood in a place called the Isle of Thorney nere London, and was so called for that it was a place all ouergrowne with Thornes, and he erected and made the sayde Temple a place dedicated to the honour of God, and named it Westminster, as it is called at this day, and endowed the same with such and so great privileges, that what person soeuer could escape to the sayd Church, for what trespasse so euer it were, the same should be safe body and goodes.

Now after that Lucius had thus set this realme in good order, he died, when he had reigned, xij. yeres, leauing behinde him none heyre, which was the occasion of great trouble to the Realme: For the Britons among themselves coulde not agree vpon a Gouernour, by reason whereof there was among them great discord, which continued the space of xv. yeres, in the which time, the Empire and Senate of Rome apointed their Lieutenauntes to gouerne and reigne ouer this Realme.

SAtrahell the brother of Ethodius (because his sonnes were not of sufficient age to gouerne the Realme) was ordeyned king of Scottes, he was of false and subtile wit, and Sawahell King geuen to such cruelty, that for feyned causes he slue all the frendes of Ethodius to the in- of Scottes. tent to defraude his heires of the crowne, wherfore he was murdered of his familiers

Donald, an humble and gentle Prince was chosen King of Scottes, and reigned. xxj. yeres. He was the first King that coyned any money of Gold or Siluer in Scotland, for Money first the Scots vsed before enterchaunging of wares for chaffer, and one thing for another, coyned in Scotand had no money of their awne, but of the Britons and Romaines, and other externall Nations.

¶ About the yere of our Lorde. CC. iij. this Donalde procured certeyne wise and The Britos received the fayth learned men to instruct him, his Wyfe, Children, and Subjectes in the fayth of Christ, of Christ xx. which happened, $33. yeres after the beginning of the Realme of Scotland.

SEuerus Emperour of Rome hering of the great discorde in Briteyn, made hast from Rome, and came into this land to apease the vprores of the same. And at this time the Scottes and Pictes inuaded Briteyn, and vexed the Britons very sore, wherefore Seuerus Seuerus caused a Wall of Turues to be made, wherein were driven great stakes, which Wall as A wall of Turues. sayeth Polichronica was in length. Cxxij. Miles, and it began at the River of Tyne and stretched to the Scottishe See, or from the ende of the Lordship of Deira vnto the sayde Scottishe See, or after some Writers, from Durham to the See aforesayde.

bania or Scotland into the land of Briteyn, & destroyed much of the Countrie beyonde Durham. Wherefore Seuerus with an hoste of Britons and of Romaines met with the sayde Fulgenius in a place nere vnto Yorke, where after sore fight, the sayde Seuerus was slaine, when he had ruled this land five yeres, and was buried at Yorke, leaving behinde him two sonnes the one named Geta and the other Bassianus, betweene whome there was and euer had bene from the beginning mortall hatred and enmity.

BAssianus Caracalla, after the death of his father, began to rule thys land of Briteyn, he was a Man of nature cruel and fierce and hable to endure all paines and labours. specially in warfare. But as Gaufrid sayth, after the death of Seuerus, great strife arose betweene the Romaines and the Britons then being within the land of Briteyn. For the commons helde for their king Bassianus because he was borne of a Britishe Woman: And on the other side, the Romaines allowed Geta for their king, because he descended of a Romaine. And for this dissension a battaile was foughten betwene the sayde two brethren, in the which Geta was slaine, and Bassianus remayned for king ouer all the

In the time that Bassianus was now both Emperour and king of Briteyn, one named Carassus a Briton of lowe birth, but valiaunt and hardie in martiall affaires: purchased of the Emperour the keeping of Briteyn, or as some write onely of the coastes of Briteyn, and promised to withstand the malice of straungers, as the Pictes and others. meane whereof Carassus drewe vnto him many Knightes, and specially of the Britons, promising to them that if they woulde make him king, he would cleerely delyuer them, from the seruitude of the Romaines. By reason wherof the Britons (as saith Gaufride) rebelled against Bassianus, and with their Duke and leader Carassus arrered against him deadly warre, conceyuing the better hope of victory because he was privily certified of the Emperours death, who was then slaine by a seruant of his awne in Mesopotamia, when he had ruled this land sixe yeres.

¶ But Polidore affirmeth that this Carassus tooke on him the gouernance of Briteyn in the time of Dioclesian, and sayeth that this lande was in good quietnesse the space of lxxvi, yeres, with whome the Latyn Stories seeme to agree.

CArassus reigned after Bassianus ouer Briteyn, who as before is expressed, was by the Emperour of Rome deputed for a substitute or a ruler vnder him. Of the nature and kinde of shewed hereafter in place convenient, both of their ofspring and maners.

¶ Nowe it followeth when the Romaines had knowledge of the death of Bassianus. they forthwith sent a Duke from Rome named Alectus, with three Legions of Knightes Carassus slaine. to subdue and vanquishe Carassus, who in the ende slue him, when he had ruled ouer the Britons. viij. yeres, and such as are disposed may read more of this man in Fabian and others.

EThodius the seconde was ordeyned king of Scotlande and reigned. xvi. yeres, he was of dull wyt, geuen to auarice and gathering of riches, and nothing meete to gouerne the Realme: wherefore his Nobles tooke vpon them the charge, and so continued all the time of his reigne.

ALectus a Duke or Consull of Rome, sent as before is sayde from the Senate of Rome, 226 began to rule the Britons: and first he restored the land to the subjection of Rome, and then pursued certaine of the Britons that had fauoured Carassus against the Romaines. And in that doing, he vsed and exercised many tyrannies and exactions, by reason whereof he fell in grudge and hatered of the Britons. Wherefore, they entending to oppresse and subdue the power of the Romaynes, procured and excited a Noble man of the Britons called Asclepiodatus Duke of Cornewall to take vpon him to be their Captaine, who gathered a great hoste of the Britons, and made warre vpon the Romaines, and chased them from Countrie to Countrie, and from Towne to Towne: and lastly Alectus with his Romaines drewe him to London and there abode for his more suretie. Whereof Asclepiodatus being warned, he with his Britons came nere vnto the sayde City, where by meanes of prouocation of eyther partie vsed, at the last, the Romaines issued out of the Citie and gaue battaile to the Britons. In the which fight many fell on eyther partie, but the more on the partie of the Romaines, among the which was slaine Alectus, wherfore Alectus slains. a Capitain of the Romaines called Liuius Gallus, perceiugng this mischiefe, and the great daunger that the Romaines were in, drewe back into the Citie with the Romaynes that were left aliue, and defended it with their powers. This was Alectus slaine of the Britons when he had reigned and ruled this land vnder the Romaines the space of, vi. veres.

ASclepiodatus or Asclepiodotus Duke of Cornewall (as sayeth Gaufride) tooke vpon him the government of the Britons, and with a great armie besieged London, and kept the aforesayde Liuius Gallus and hys Romaines in streight holde, and with knightly force and violence entered the sayde Citie, and slue the aforenamed Liuius Gallus, nere vnto came from y a Brooke which then was within the sayde Citie, and threwe him into the sayde Brooke: place which we By reason whereof, the same was from thence foorth called Gallus Brooke, or Wallus field, and that Brooke, and at this time the place where that Brooke was, is called Walbrooke. And place being then after Asclepiodatus had thus vanquished the Romaines, he held this lande a certaine of ter ran from time peaceably and quietly, and ruled the Britons with good instice.

And in this time by the mocion of some lewde and vaquiet persons, there grewe Thames. displeasure betweene the Kinge and a Duke of this lande, named Coill, the which as some say builded Colchester and named it after his awne name in the Britishe tongue Colchester. Caercolyn, but what the matter of displeasure was, is not apparaunt. But howsoeuer it was, a great number of people were arreysed and assembled on both partes, and in the ende met in the field, where was foughten a great and fierce battaile, wherin Ascle-Asclepiodotus-slaine. piodotus was slaine, when he had reigned ouer this realme. xxx. yeres.

ATherco after the slaughter of Ethodius his father, was chosen king of Scottes, and reigned, xii. yeres. At the beginning, he shewed some tokens of honest towardnesse: but after he was so wrapped in all vncleane vice and effeminate lustes, that he was not ashamed to go openly in the sight of the people plaiving vpon a Flute, and rejoysed more to be a Fidelar than a Prince: Finally, being pursued for rauishing of the daughters of Nathalas, by a noble man of Argile, he slue himselfe.

NAthalake tooke on him the kingdome of Scotland, by force, murther, and tyrannie, and trusting to the counsayll of Wytches and Inchauntours, was slaine of his awne seruaunt Nurrey, whome of all men he vsed most famylierly, when he had reigned, xi.

COill, Erle of Colchester tooke vpon hym the gouernaunce of Briteyn, and ruled the same very well for a certeine tyme. But as Gaufride saith: When the Senates of Rome. had vinderstanding of the death of Asclepiodatus, they were loyous of his death, for that he had euer bene an enemie to the Empire: But forasmuch as at those dayes v Romaines themselues were at great dissention, they could not conveniently send any army to warre vpon this Coilus, by reason whereof he continued the lenger in rest and peace.

¶ Howbeit at length, the Senate sent a noble and wyse man called Constantius, who from Rome to when he was arrived in Briteyn with his army, anone Coilus assembled his Britons: But before he proceded further, he sent an Ambassade to the said Constantius, for that he feared the strength and fame of him, which Ambassade declared vnto him condicions of peace, & graunt of the paiment of the Tribute: But finally, while this matter was in talke, Coilus dyed, & then the Britons for peace sake, entreated this noble man to take to wife Heleyn the daughter of Coilus, with the possession of the land of Briteyn, which by him was graunted. And thus Coilus when he had reigned. xxvij. yeres dyed.

AT this tyme Findock the cldest sonne of Athirco was made kinge of the Scottes, he kept peace with the Romaines, and Britons, and quieted the rebellion of Donald (a noble man of the Isles) by whose counsayle, through the consent of his awne brother Carance, he was afterwarde slaine, when he had reigned. x. yeres.

DOnald was king of Scottes one yere, he was taken in battail by Donald of the Isles, and shortly after he dyed.

Scotes.

AFter the death of King Donald, great trouble was in Scotland: For Donald of the Isles tooke on him the Crowne, which was Donald the third, and vsed much Tyranny the space of. xii. yeres: He neuer laughed, but when he heard of the discorde and slaughter of his Nobles, and therefore in the end for his crueltie he was slaine of Craithlint the sonne of Findock, with. CC. of his naughtie Counsaylours.

286 Craithlint King

CRaithlint the sonne of Findock, after the death of Donald the Tyraunt, was made King of Scottes, and reigned. xxiiij. yeres, with great wisedom and iustice. In his tyme happened great variance betweene the Pictes and the Scottes (which continued friendes from the tyme of Fergus the first King of Scottes, to these dayes) for stealing of a Greyhounde, whereof ensued great murder and slaughter on both parties.

COnstancius aforesayde, tooke vpon him the gouernement of the Britons, and as is abouesayde, first maryed Heleyn the Daughter of Coilus, last King of Briteyn, which Heleyn was very beutifull and fayre, and therewith had learning and many other vertues, and after governed Briteyn very wisely and honorablye: But within short tyme after, Dioclesian and Maximinian had geuen vp the Imperiall aucthoritie, he was chosen Emperour, and reigned Emperour and King of Briteyn. xxx. yeres, and then dyed, and is buried in Yorke, leaving after him a sonne named Constantine.

This Constantius was a Man of great affabilitie, clemency, and gentlenesse, and therewithall very liberall, endeuouring alwaies to enriche his subjectes, little regarding his awne treasure, thinking that to be his that the Commons had. Wherefore he sayde, that it was better that private persons had the common treasure to the vse of the weale publique, then the same to be locked up in Princes Cofers. In feastiuall dayes when he bade his Nobles to any banket, he borowed Plate of his friendes to furnishe his Cubbardes withall. Cooper.

COnstantine the sonne of Constancius and of Helyn, daughter of king Coilus, reigned ouer Briteyn after his father, and ruled the lande with much equitie. And albeit, that at this time he was a heathen and Pagan, yet he vsed no tirannie, neither did he compell the Britons to refuse their law, and to worship Idols, as other Tyraunts before had done.

¶ In this time, while Constantine ruled the Britons, one Maxencius which was the sonne of Herculeus Maximianus sometime felow in the Empire with Dioclesian, was of the pretorian Souldiours declared Emperour. Thys Maxencius did there behave himselfe the worst of all men, and enterprised all maner of tirannie, and persecuted the christians with all kindes of torments. And when Constantine heard of the tiranny of this man. He assembled a great hoste of Britons and Galles for to oppresse his outrage and malice.

¶ And

¶ And for to rule and guyde this land of Briteyn in his absence, he ordeyned a man of might called Octavius, which then was king of Wales & Duke of Gwiscop, which some expound to be Westsex, some Cornewall, and some Wynsore, to have the go-uernement of this dominion. Now when he had prouided all things necessarie for his voyage, he betooke the lande of Briteyn to Octavius, and sped him forward in his

After whose departure, and during the time that he was occupied in the affaires of the Empire, Octavius being Lieutenaunt in Briteyn vnder the sayde Constantine, ruled the lande to the contentation of the Britons for a certaine time. But when he perceyued that he was in fauour with them, and also that Constantine was nowe farre from him, and considering with hymselfe also, that the sayde Constantine being then Emperour, would not, nor could not so lightly returne into Briteyn: he therefore with the helpe of hys Octavius vsurp-friendes and such as he was alved with, withstood the Romaines that were left in Briteyn ment of Briby Constantine, and vsurped the rule & dominion of the land: whereof when Constan-teyn. tine was truely certified, in all haste he sent a Duke into Briteyn, named Trayherne, the which was Vncle vnto Helyn the mother of Constantine.

¶ When this Trayherne was arrived in Briteyn with three Legions of souldiours or Trayherne. men of warre: anon Octavius made toward him with his Britons, and met him nere vnto the Citie then called Caerperis, and nowe named Portechester, but more truely in Portchester. a Fielde nere vnto the Citie of Caerguent, which at this day is called Winchester.

I Now when the two hostes were met, they ioyned a most eger and cruell battavle. wherein was a long and terrible fight. But in the ende, Trayherne was inforced to forsake the Fielde, and withdrew himselfe and his Romaynes into Albania or Scotlande. Whereof Octavius being warned, followed him, and in the Countrie of Westmerland gaue him the second battaile, where then Octavius was chased and Trayherne had the victorie, the which pursued Octavius so egerly, that he compelled him to forsake the lande of Briteyn and to sayle into the Countrie of Norway for his safegarde.

¶ But it was not long after, but the sayd Octavius gathered a newe power of people, aswell of Britons as also of Norwayes, and was redye to returne againe into Briteyn. In which tyme an Erle of Briteyn that entirely loued Octavius by treason slue the sayd Tra-Trayherne herne a little before the landing of Octavius aforesayde, who afterwardes reigned in this lande at the least. liiij. yeres, but not without great and often warres made by the Romaines. And this shoulde be as most wryters doe affirme, when Constantyne with the ayde of Traherne had ruled this lande. x. yeres. But Polidore affirmeth that this Realme Polidore, was in good quiet all the tyme of Constantyne and his successors vnto the. iiii, yere of Gracian, and maketh no mencion of this Octavius, whereby it may apere what great varietie there is euen among the best and most approued story wryters.

This Constantine was a right noble and valiaunt Prince, and the sonne of Helena, a woman of great sanctimony and borne in Briteyn, the which Elyn as it is reported of her, founde the Crosse at Ierusalem, on the which our Sauiour Christ suffered his passion, and three of the Nayles wherewith his handes and feete were pierced.

The sayd Constantine was so mightie in Martiall prowesse, that he was surnamed Constatine the Constantine the great. Of whome it is further written, that when he was in his voyage or journey, which he made against Maxencius the Tyraunt, who was an extreme persecutor of the Christians, he saw in the night season, the signe of the Crosse shining in the Element lyke a fyre, and an Angell by it saiying on this wise: In this signe thou shalt ouercome. Wherefore receyuing great comfort thereby, he gathered such a courage, that shortly after he vanquished the armie of Maxencius and put him to flight, who in the chase was drowned in Tyber.

And of him is no notable thing written, except that when he was fallen into age, by the counsaile of the Britons, he sent vnto Rome for a yong Man of the kindred of Heleyn mother vnto Constantyne called Maximianus, to whom Octavius offered his daughter in mariage, and to yelde vnto him the Kingdome of Briteyn, the which when Maximianus vnderstood, he consented therevnto, and prepared in all haste for his voyage, and shortly after he with a conuenient companie landed at Southhamton, whereof Conan Meriadock beyng warned did purpose to have fought with the sayd Maximianus, & thought to have distressed him, for so much as he knew right wel, that by him he should be put from the rule of the land. Eugenius king of Scottes.

ABout this time one Eugenius the first, was made king of Scottes. Here the Scottishe Historie maketh a long processe of the fierce & cruell warre that this king kept against Maximus the Romaine Capiteyn, and the Pictes and Briteyns, which I thinke to be of no more credit than the residue of their Historie, that they have feyned from the beginning. For vindoubtedly, if they had put the Romaines to so much trouble as their Chronicles shewe, both in the tyme of the Conquest and after: Casar, Tacitus, Plinie. and other woulde have made some mencion of the Scottes, as they did of the Trinobantes, Cenimagnes, Segontiaces, Bibraces, Brigantes, Silures, Icenes, and diverse other.

The Scottes say, that in this time, after long and cruell warre made by the aforesayde Maximianus, they were vtterly extermined and driven out of their Realme into Ireland and other Countries, and that the then said Maximus the Romain, placed in their their land the Pictes and Britons. And Hector Boecius sayth, it was for rebellion: But rebellion could it not be properly named, except they had beene subjectes.

MAximianus or Maximus, the sonne of Leonyn and Cosyn Germain to Constantine the great, tooke vpon him the gouernement of this lande of Briteyn. This man was strong and mightie, but for that he was cruell against the Christians, he was called Maximianus the Tyraunt. Betwene this man and Conan before named, was great enuy and strife, and divers conflictes and battayles were foughten, in the which eyther parte of them sped diversly: howbeit, at the last, they were made Friends. So that Maximianus reigned a while in quiet, and gathered ryches and treasure, but not altogither without murmure and grudge. Finally, he was prouoked and excited to make warre vpon the Galles, through which counsayle, he with a great hoste of Britons sayled into Armorica that now is called little Briteyn, where he bare him selfe so valiauntly that he subdued Amorlea is that Countrie vnto his Lordship, and after gaue the same vnto Conan Meriadok, to holde called little Briof him and his successours the kings of great Briteyn for euer. And then commaunded the sayde land to be called little Briteyn.

Now for this victorie, the Souldiours of Maximianus proclaymed him Emperour, Maximianus by reason whereof, he being the more exalted in pride, passed further into the landes of preclamed Emthe Empire, and victoriously subdued a great parte of Gallia and all Germania. this deede, dyners Authours doe accompt him false and periured, wherefore it should seeme that before his comming from Rome, he was sworne to Gracian and Valentinian the Emperours, that he should neuer clayme any part of the Empire.

Now after that worde was brought vnto the Emperours that Maximianus had by force of armes thus subdued Gallia and Germania: Gracianus with a great hoste came downe to resist him. But when he heard of the Marciall deedes of Maximianus, he feared and fled back to the Citie of Lyons in Fraunce: where afterwardes the sayde Gracianus was slaine, and his brother Valentinian compelled to flee to Constantinoble, for safegarde of hys lyfe.

Then Maximianus to have the more strength to withstand his enimies, made his sonne named Victour, felow of the Emperour. And in this time that Maximianus warred thus in Italy, Conan Meriadoke, to whome as aforesayde Maximianus had genen little Briteyn, for so muche as he and his Souldiours had no will to marrie the daughters of the Frenchmen, but rather to have Wyues of their owne blood: sent Messengers vnto Dionotus then Duke of Cornewall and chiefe ruler of Briteyn, wylling him to send his daughter Vrsula with a certaine number of Virgins to be coupled to him and his Knightes vrsula comin marriage, the which soone after was prepared according to the request of Conan, the monly called saint Vrsula. aforesayde Vrsula accompanied with xj. thousand Virgins, were sent by her sayde father toward little Briteyn, as sayeth Gaufrid and other. Maximianus, being thus occupied in warres in Italy, two Dukes named Gwanus or Gwanus Melga: Guanius Capitaine of the Hunes & Melga, king of Pictes, the which as Gaufrid saith, were set on by Gracian and Valentinian the Emperours, to punishe and subdue the Britaine, and occupied a great parte of Albania. Whereof when Maximianus had knowledge he sente into great Briteyn a Knight and Captaine called Gracianus, the which with two Legions of Souldiours bare himselfe so valiauntlye, that in a short time he chased the sayde two Dukes into Ireland, and helde the land of Briteyn in good peace to the behoofe of Maximianus.

WHen knowledge of the death of Maximianus was come to Gracian, who then had the rule of great Briteyn, he seased the land and made himselfe king of Briteyn by strength, when or after that Maximianus had gouerned the same, as most Writers doe beare wytnesse, the space of viii, yeres.

This Gracian having nowe obteyned the souereigne aucthoritie, became a verie cruell Prince and exercised all tyranny and exaccion vpon the people, for which cause he was abhorred of all the Britons, and by them was slaine when he had reigned foure yeres. Then was the Realme a good space without a head or gouernor, in the which time the Britons were oftentimes sore vexed with the aforesayde Barbarous people and their forrein enimies.

Augustine whome we call

IN this time was Augustine the most famous & learned Doctor of Christes Church: he was Bishop of Hippone a Citie in Affrique. This man was of such excellent wyt, that in his childhood he learned all the liberal Sciences without any instructor, and in all partes of Philosophy was wonderfully well learned. At the beginning he fauored the Saint Augustyn. opinions of them which be called Manichees, but by the continual prayer of his good. mother Monica: and the persuasion of holy Sainct Ambrose, he was converted to the true faith. They both of them being replenished with the holy Ghost, sang the Psalme, Te deum, aunswering mutually one to another. And afterwardes, in prayer writing and preaching he so much profited the Church, that to this daye hys name is worthily had in honour and reuerence of all men.

ANd in this time also was Chrisostomus Bishop of Constantinople, and named the Noble Clerk, and for his eloquence he was called the Golden Mouthed Doctor, and yet escaped he not some persecution by meanes of Theophilus in Alexandria, for he dyed in exile.

THe Scottes (according to their Histories) vnder their king Fergus the second, returned out of Ireland into Albion, and continuing the reigne of three kings, that is Fergus, Eugenius and Dongarde, pursued the Britons with most cruell warres. But here they discent from the English Chronicles, as well in the computation of tymes, as in the relacion of the whole Historie, For after Beda, Gildas and other auncient and credible Writers, the Scottes came first about this time out of Ireland into that Countrie, which they afterwards named Scotland. But howsoeuer these Histories agree, truth it is that the Scottes being confederate with the Pictes, not long from this time, by consent of all Writers, inuaded and spoyled the lande of Briteyn so cruelly, that the Briteyns were constreyned to sende for ayde to the Romaines, promising that they would perpetually be subject to the Empire: which request was heard, & a Capitaine sent with a Legion of Souldiours, who within a fewe dayes chased their enimies out of the land, teachyng them to make a Wall of Torues and stakes, ouertwhart the lande, from Sea to Sea, that is to meane from the water of Homber to the Scottishe Sea, and ordeyned them Wardeyns and keepers of the Wall (wherewith their enimies might be kept back out of the land) and then they tooke leave of the Britons and departed to Rome. But Polichronicon sayeth, that the sayde Wall stretched from Penulton to the Citie of Acliud.

¶ But notwithstanding the sayd Wall, the Britons were againe inuaded by the Pictes and Scottes, who spoyled the Country verye sore: So that they were driven to seeke for newe helpe of the Romaines, who sent to them againe a company of Souldiers, which A wall of stone eftsones chased the Pictes, and made a wall of stone of viiij. foote thicke, and in heighth. xij. foote: which thing when they had done, comforting the Briteynes, and admonishing them hereafter to trust to their awne manhood and strength, they returned again to

Rome.

The Scottes and Pictes yet once againe after the departure of the Romaines, entred tred the lande of Briteyn, and spoyled the countrie, and chased the commons so cruelly, that they were altogether comfortlesse, and brought to such misery, that eche robbed and spoyled other, and ouer this the ground was vntilled, whereof ensued great scarcetie and hunger, and after hunger death. In this necessitie they sent for ayde to Aecius the Aecius. Romaine Capitaine beyng then occupied in warres in a part of Gallia. But they had no comfort at his hand. And therefore were forced to send Ambassade to Aldroenus king Aldroenus. of little Briteyne to desyre of him ayde and comfort, which they obtained vpon condicion, that if they atchiued the victory, Constantyne his brother should be ordeyned king constatyne. of great Briteyn, for to that day they had no king. Which thing beyng graunted of the Ambassadours, the said Constantine gathered a company of Souldiours, and went forth with them. And when he had manfully vanquished the enimies, and obteyned the victory, according to promes made, he was ordeyned king, & guyded this land. x. yeres with such manhood and pollecy, that he kept it in quietnesse & from daunger of straunge enemes.

Constantine the second, who was the brother of Aldroenus king of little Briteyn, was crowned king of great Briteyn and guyded wel the land the space of. x. yeres, and in great quietnesse. Of this Constantyne is little written, except y he had by his wife thre sonnes, & which were named Constancius, Aurely Ambrose, & Vter surnamed Pendragon. But for that he sawe his eldest sonne named Constancius to be dull and insolent of wit, he therefore made him a Monke in the Abbey of S. Swithines at Win-And the other two brethren, he betoke vnto Gwethelinus Archbishop of London to nourish and instruct. Some wryte that Constancius entred into religion of pure deuocion, without the consent or knowledge of the king his father.

In the Court of this Constantyne (as sayth Gaufride) there was a Pict, that was much loued & greatly favoured of him, so that he might at all times come to the kinges presence, when he would himselfe. The which beyng an arrant Traytour, and serching convenient time to execute his detestable treason, by a secret meane slue the king in his Constantine Chamber, when he had reigned as king. x. yeres. The Author of the story named the slaine. flowers of stories, writeth that he slue him with a knife in a very thicke Coppes, as he was ¶ In the tyme of this Constantyne of Briteyn, their reigned also among the Scottes one of the same name, who was named Constantyne the first, he was a wicked Prince, Constantine and genen wholy to filthy lust and pleasure of the body, and without all vertue of pol- King of Scottes. lecye or noblenesse, wherefore in the ende he was slaine for ranishing of a noble mannes daughter.

COnstantius, the sonne of Constantyne, by the meane of Vortigerus Duke of Cornewall, or as some write of the Iewesses, after called West Saxons, was made king of Briteyn. This man as before is mencioned, was thought by his father, for that he was dull of wit and hawtye of minde to be therefore vnmete to take the charge of the Gouernement vpon him, and therefore his father made him a Monke as aforesayde. But now it came Constantius so to passe that by the practise and procurement of Vortiger he was taken out of the first a Monit Abbey and made king: By meane whereof the sayd Vortiger had all the rule of the lande, king. so that Constance had but onely the name.

This Vortiger then considering the innocencye and mildenesse of the king, cast in his minde how he might be king himselfe. And among other meanes, he practised to A Gard aphaue about the king an hundreth Pictes, to waite and attend vpon his person as a garde, pointed to at-thereat, and ever in right or wrong he favoured the aforesayd Pictes.

I Now when he sawe that he had wonne all their fauours, he made them all dronke on a tyme, and then declared vnto them in that case his pouertie and miserie, and that with teares, saiyng howe he was not able of his awne proper reuenew to wage somuch as fiftie Souldiours, and with that he departed from them vnto his lodging, as a man altogether dismayde, leauing them still drinking and quaffing in the Court. The Pictes hearing him say so, beyng nowe distempered and set in a rage by reason of Wyne, murmured one of them to another, saiying, why do we not kill this blockish Monke, that this noble Man Vortiger, who is so good and beneficial a Lord vnto vs may enjoy the Crowne. And with that they rose up in their dronken moode, and fell upon the king and slue him.

VOrtiger after the death of Constance, by force made himselfe king of Briteyn, and ruled, but not all without trouble. For it was not long or that the Pictes having knowledge of the death and destruction of their knightes and kinsmen, inuaded the Northpartes of the land, & did therin great domage and hurt. And besides this, many of the nobles of the Britons perceyuing that king Constance was not murdered altogether without the consent of the sayde Vortiger, rebelled against him, and dailye sent and sayled ouer into little Briteyn to the ayde and assistaunce of the aforesayde children of Constantine, which put the sayde Vortiger to great vaquietnesse, the more for that that he wist not, nor knewe not in whome he might put his trust and confidence.

Plentic of Corne and Fruise. Lechery. Pestilence.

Now yet in all this broyle and vnquiet time, there was in this Realme so great plentic of Corne and fruite, that the lyke thereof had not bene seene in many yeres passed, wherewith was ioyned lecherie and pestilence, with many other inconveniences, so that vice was accompted for small or none offence. The which reigned not onely in the Temporaltie, but also in the Spiritualtie and heads of the same. So that every man turned the poynt of his Speare against the true and innocent man, and the commons gaue themselues altogether to dronkennesse and Idlenesse, by reason whereof ensued fighting, strife, and much enuie. Of which aforesayd mischiefes ensued much mortalitie and death of men, that the lyuing scantly suffised in some Countries to burie the dead. And besides this, the king was so heard beset with the aforenamed enemies, that he was constreyned, as sayth Polichronica, to sende for Paynems, as the Saxons, to helpe to withstande his enemies and to defend his land, and also he dailye feared the landing of Aurely and Vter.

¶ Vortiger

Wortiger being thus beset with many enimies, and then being for the exployte of sundrie his affaires at Cauntorbury, tydinges was brought him of the arryuing of three talle Ships full of armed men at the Isle of Tenet. Wherefore, first he made countenance, as though he had bene in doubt whether it had bene the two brethren of Constance or no: But when the fame was blowen about, that they were none enimies: anone he caused the leaders and Capitaines of them to be brought vnto his presence, demaunding of them the cause of their landing, and of their Nation and Countrie: who answered vnto the king and sayde, they were of the Countrie of Germany, and put out of their Countrie by a maner & sort of a Lot, which is sundrie times vsed in the sayde lande, and the vse thereof grewe for that the people of that Countrie encreased so greatly, that without such prouision had, the Countrie might not suffise to finde the people that were therein: And that therefore sence fortune had brought them into this land, they besought the king that he would take them to his seruice, and they woulde be ready to fight for the defence of him and his Countrie. And when the king had enquired further, he founde that they had two leaders, named Hengist and Horsus, and Hengist. they and their people were called Saxons.

The king being thus assertayned of the maner of these strangers, & that they were of the heathen and Pagan law, said, he was verie sorie y they were miscreaunts, but he was glad of their coming, forsomuch as he had neede of such Souldiours to defend him and his lande against his enemies: and so received them into his wages and service, as sayth

Gaufride and other writers.

¶ Beda the holye man and faythfull Historian sayeth, that Vortiger sent for the Saxons for that they were strong men of armes, and had no lande to dwell in, the which came in three long Shippes or Hulkes, and receyued a place of him to dwell in, in the East side of Britevn called the Isle of Tenet beside Kent: but Guilielmus Malmisburiensis in Wylliam of his worke De Regibus, sayth, that the Saxons came out of Germany of their awne will Malmesbury. and courage to winne worship and laude, and not by any lot or compulsion. ¶ And these foresayde people were of three maner of Nations, that is to saye, Saxons, Saxons, Of the Saxons came the East Saxons, West Saxons, and the Angles. Lewets. Anglys and Iewets. South Saxons. Of the Anglys, came the East Anglys, the middle Anglys or Merceys, called Mercij, whiche helde middle Englande, that stretcheth Westward towarde the Ryuer of Dee beside Chester, and to Seuerne beside Shrewesbury, and so forth to Bristow, and Estwarde towarde the See, and Southwarde towarde the Thamys, and so foorth to London, and turning downeward and Westwarde to the River Mercea, and so foorth to the West See.

¶ And of the Iewets came the Kentishmen, and the men of the Isle of Wight. Of the first comming of these Saxons into Briteyn, the writers doe varie. But to returne to

These Saxons with the kings power did beate downe the enimies aforesavde, and defended the land in most knightly wise, so that the king had the Saxons in great loue and fauour: which fauour Hengistus well perceyuing, vpon a season, when he saw convenient time, he asked of the king so much ground as the hyde of a Bull or Oxe Bull hyde. would compasse, which the king graunted him. After the which graunt, the sayde Hengist to the entent to winne a large plot of ground, caused the sayde beastes skinne to be cut into small and slender Thonges. And with the same he met out a large and great circuit of ground, vpon the which he shortly after builded a large and strong Castell. By

was builded in Lyndsey.

After this, tydings went into Germany of the plentie and fatnesse of the lande of Briteyn, with other commodities belonging to the same: By meane whereof, the Saxons dailye drewe to the sayde lande, and couenaunted with the Britons, that the Britons should exercise and attende vpon their husbandry and other necessarie traffique, and the Saxons as their Souldiours would defende the lande from incursions of all enimies. for the which the Britons should geue to them competent meate and wages.

Then by the assignement and appyntment of Hengist, there came out of Germany xvi. Sayles well furnished with men of warre, and in them came Ronowen the daughter of the sayd Hengist, which was a Mayden of excellent beutie. After whose comming, Hengist vpon a day besought the king that he would see his Castle, which he had newly edefied. To whose request the king was agreeable, & at the day assigned he came to the Castle, where he was ioyously received. And there among other pastimes, the sayd Ronowen with a Cup of Golde full of Wyne presented the King, saluting and saiying wassayle. The King which before that tyme had heard no like salutation, neither vnderstood what she ment, asked of her father what she ment by that worde wassayle. whome it was aunswered by Hengist, that it was a salutation of good lucke and gladnesse, and that the king should drinke after her, and adding also this aunswere, that it was as much to say, as drinke hayle. Wherfore the king as he was informed tooke the Cup of the Maydens hand and dranke: And after he behelde the Damsell in such maner, that he was wounded with the dart of the blinde God Cupide, in such wise that neuer after he coulde withdrawe his lust from her: but lastly by the instigation of the Deuiil, asked her in mariage of her father. And by force thereof as witnesseth Polichronica, he put from him his lawfull wyfe, of the which he had before tyme receyued three noble sonnes, Vortimerius, Catagrinus, and Pascentius. Then the King gave to Hengist the Lordship of Kent, though Garangonus then Erle thereof thereat grudged with many of his Nobles and Commons.

> Tor this, and because the king had maried a Pagan woman, all the Britons in a maner forsooke him and his woorkes. Notwithstanding, yet some there were, as well of the Nobles as other, that comforted the King in hys euill doyng. By which meane and other vnlawfull decdes, then dayly vsed, the fayth of Christ began sore to decay. And besides that, an heresic called the Arians heresic began to spring in Briteyn, for the which two Bishops named Germanus, and Lupus (as Gaufride saith) were sent into Briteyn to reforme the people that were infected with the same, and erred from the way of truth.

> Then to finish the story of Vortiger, for a smuch as the Britons withdrewe themselves from hym, he was therefore constrayned to retayne with him the Saxons. By whose counsayle he afterwarde sent for Octa the sonne of Hengist, the which brought with them another companie out of Saxonie. And from this tyme the Saxons sought alway occasion to extinguish vtterly the power of the Britons, and to subdue the land to themselues.

Octa the son of Hengist.

> ¶ When the Lordes of Briteyn saw and considered the great multitude of Saxons, & their dayly repayre into this land, they assembled them together, and shewed to the king the inconvenience & ieopardy that might ensue to him and his land, by reaso of the great power of these strangers, & they advertised him in advoyding of greater daunger to expel & put them out of this realme, or the more part of them: But all was in vaine, for Vortiger had such a mind to the Saxons by reason of his wyfe, y he preferred the loue of them, before the loue of his awne natural kinsmen & frends. Wherfore the Britons of one will & mind crowned Vortimerus the eldest sonne of Vortiger king of Briteyn, and deprived the father of all kingly dignity, when he had reigned xvj. yeres.

When that Rowen the daughter of Hengist perceyued the great mischiefe that her Rowen practised father and the Saxons were in, by the martiall Knighthood of Vortimer: she sought such Vortimer. meanes (as sayeth Gaufride and other) that Vortymer was poysoned, when he had ruled the Britons. vij. yeres.

¶ Because the storie touching the end and death of the sayde Vortimer is verie notable. it shall not be amisse to recite it here in effect, as it is written by the sayd Gaufride. When Vortimer had now gotten the victorie of the Saxons, he beganne lyke a good Prince to restore againe vnto the Britons such possessions as were taken from them by the sayde Saxons, and to love and honour them: And at the request of the holy man Germaine to reedefie such Churches as were by them destroyed and ouerthrowne. But the Deuill by and by enuied at his vertue and godlynesse, who entering into the heart of his stepmother Rowen, moued her to imagine his death: wherevoon she sending for all the Wytches and Poysoners that she coulde hereof, caused verie strong Poyson to be ministred vnto him, by a verie familier and nere friend of his, whome she had corrupted before with many great giftes. Now when this noble warryour had receyued this deadly poyson, he vpon a sodaine became desperately sick, in such wise as their was no hope of lyfe in him. Then commaunding all his Souldiours to come before him to shewe to them what daunger he stood in, and how the houre of death was at hande, he deuyded among them his treasure and such goodes as his auncetours had left him. And perceyuing them greatly to lament and bewayle the miserable case and daunger that he was in, he comforted them, saiying, that the waye which he should goe was commen to all fleshe, and so exhorted them that as they had before sticked vnto him like men, and had shewed themselues valyaunt and couragious in fighting against the Saxons, euen so hereafter they woulde lykewise perseuer in the defence of their natiue Countrie, against all the inuasions of forrein enimies. That done, of a great heardy courage he commaunded a Sepulcher of Brasse to be made spire wise, and the same to be set in that porte or Hauen where the Saxons were commonly wont to arryue, and his dead corps to be layde in it, that assoone as those barbarous people should see once the Sepulchre, they for feare might returne backe againe into Germany. For he sayde that not one of them all durst be so hardie as to approche the lande if they once saw the sayde Sepulchre, O most hardie and dowtie king, who desyred to be feared of them even after his death, vnto whome he was a terrour in his lyfe time: But when he was dead, the Britons performed not his commaundement, but buryed his body at London.

Vortiger restored to his kingdome.

Sarisbury.

Treason wrought by Hengist.

Dissimulation.

VOrtiger was now againe restored to the kingdome of Briteyn, and shortly after Hengist eyther of his awne accorde, or as Gaufiide wryteth sent for by the procurement of his daughter Rowen, entred thys land againe with a great multitude of serons, whereof Vortiger, being informed in all haste, assembled his Britons and made towardes them. But when Hengist heard of the Britons, and of the preparation that was made against him, he then made meanes for the intreaty of peace, where in the end, it was concluded that a certaine number of Britons, and as manye of the Saxons, should vpon the next May day assemble vpon the playne of Ambrij, now called Sarisbury, or as Gaufride saith, nere vnto the Abbey of Amesburie, founded by one Ambrius: which day being certeynly prefixed, Hengistus vsing a new practise of treason, charged all his Saxons by him appointed, that eche of them should put secretly a long knyte in their hosen, and at such time as he gaue to them this watch or bye worde, Nempnith your Seves, that is, drawe your Knyfes, that eueric one of them should drawe out his Knyfe and slea a Briton, sparing none, but Vortiger the king onely. And at the day before appointed, the king with a certaine number of Britons, not ware of this purposed treason, came in peaceable wise to v place before assigned, where he found ready liengest with his Saxons. The which after due obedience made vnto the king, he receyued him with a countenance of loue and amitie, where after a time of comunication had, Engist being minded to execute his purposed treason, gaue forth his watchword. By reason whereof anon the Britons were slaine lyke shepe among Wolues, to the number (as Gaufride writeth) of. iiij. C. and. lx. barons & noble men, having no maner of weapon to defend themselnes withall, except that any of them might by his manhood & strength either get y knife out of his enimies hand, or else by stones or such like weapo as they might come by, anoy them, by which meanes divers of the Saxos also were slaine, so y this there trechery was performed. And among the number of these Britons y were thus distressed, there was then an Erle called Edolfe Erle of Chester, or rather after Gaufride Edole, Baron of Glowcester, who seing his felowes & friends thus murthered (as the said Gaufrid saith) by his manhood recourred a stake out of a hedge, with the which he knightly defended himselfe and slue of the Saxons three score and ten persons, and being over set by his enimies and not able to make any longer resistance was compelled to flic to his awne Citie. After which treason thus executed, the king remayned with Hengistus as Prisoner. Fa-¶ But the sayde Gaufride writeth more fuller hereof in this wise. After the Saxons

But the sayde Gaufride writeth more fuller hereof in this wise. After the Saxons had accomplished their mischeuous purpose, they woulde in no wise sley Vortiger: But threatning to kill him, they kept him in a holde, and demaunded him to geue vp & de-yuer vnto them his good townes and strong holdes as a raunsome for his lyfe: vnto whome he king graunted whatsoeuer they requyred of him, so that he might depart with lyfe. And when he had confirmed his graunt made vnto them by an othe, then was he set at lybertic and delyuered out of Prison. This done, the Saxons tooke Yorke, Lyncolne, and Winchester, and wasting al the Countreys as they went, they set vpon the common people and slue them, as Wolues are wont to denoure the siely pore Sheepe that are left alone and forsaken of their Shepheards. Now when Vortiger sawe the great murther and slaughter of his people, he gat him into Wales as a man that wist not what to doe, and howe to be reuenged vpon this wicked Nation.

¶ Of the taking of Vortiger, and slaiping of the Lordes of Briteyn (Gulielmus de regibus sayth) that Hengist agreed with Vortiger and his Britons that he should enjoy the Castell by him before made, with a certeyne lande therevnto adioinyng for him and his Saxons to dwell vpon. And when the said agreement was surely stablished, this Hengist entending treason, desired the king with a number of his Lordes to come and feast with Treason. him within his sayd Castle, the which of the King was graunted. And at the day assigned the king and his Lords came vnto the sayd Thongcastle to dynner, where he with Thong Castle. his, was well and honourably receyued, and also deyntily serued.

But when the King and his Lordes were in their most mirth, this Hengist had com- A trayterous maunded before, that his awne Knightes shoulde fall out among themselves: which beyng together vareso done, the remnaunt of his Saxons, as it were in parting of frayes, should fall vpon uenged. the Britons, and sley them all, sauing only the king. The which thing was done, as ye heard before deuised, and the king was kept and holden as prisoner.

¶ Hengist then having the King as prisoner, and a great part of the rulers of Briteyn, thus as aforesayde subdued, was somedeale exalted in pride, and compelled the king to geue vnto him, as Polichronica sayth, three prouinces in the East part of Briteyn, that Polichron. is to say, Kent, Sussex, Norffolke and Suffolke (as sayth the Floure of Histories) But Guido de Columna sayth, that the aforesayde three Prouinces were Kent, Essex, Norf-Hengistes lande. folke and Suffolke. Of the which sayde Prouynces when Hengist was possessed, he suf fered the king to go at his libertic. And then Hengist began his Lordship oue: Kent, and sent other of his Saxons to guyde and gouerne the other Prouynces, vntill he had sent for other of his kinsmen to whome he purposed to geue the same Prouynces vnto.

Thus Hengist beyng in the possession of this Prougnee of Kent, commanded his Mathew of Saxons to call it Hengistes land, whereof as some Aucthors wryte, the whole land of Briteyn tooke his first name of England: But that is not so, as after shall be shewed in the story of King Egbert.

The Lordship or kingdome of Kent had his beginning under Hengist, in the fift yere of Vortigers second reigne, and in the yere of our Lorde after most writers. iiij.C. lxxvj. But Denys and other which say, it begonne, xxj. verez sooner, aloweth the beginning hereof to be when Hengist had first the gift of the same, by reason that Vortiger maryed his daughter. This Lordship conteyneth the Countrie that stretcheth from the East Occean vnto the Rvuer of Thamvs, and had vpon the Southeast, Southery, and vpon the West, London: vpon the Northeast the Thamps aforesayde, and also Essex, and in this Lordship was also conteyned the Isle of Thanet, which Lordship or Kingdome endured after most wryters, from the tyme of the first yere of the reigne of Hengist, vntill the. xxv. yere of Egbert before named, which by that accompt should be. iij. C. xlij. yeres. At which season the sayd Egbert then king of West Saxons, subdued Bal- The kingdome dredus then king of Kent, and joyned it to his awno Kingdome. Howbeit Polichronica of Kent contiaffirmeth it to endure by the space of. iii.C.lxviij. yeres, vnder xv. Kinges, whereof Bal-yeres. dredus was the last. The first Christen King of this Lordship was Ethelbertus or Ethel-Ethelbertus the bert, the which recevued the fayth of Christ by Austine or Augustine the Monke, in the king of Kent. yere of our Lorde, iiij C.ncvj. The which Ethelbert caused the Monasterie of Saint Peter and Paule at Cantorbury to be buylded, and as some say, he first began the building of Poules Church in London. He gaue vnto Austyn and his Successors Bishoppes of Cantorbury, a place for the Bishoppes See, at Christes Church within the sayd Citie, and endowed it with many riche possessions, as more at large shall be shewed in the lyfe of Careticus.

This Hengist and all the other Saxons which ruled the. vij. principates of Britcyn, as after shall be shewed, are called of most writers Reguli, which is as much to say in Reguli. our vulgare speche, as small or petie kings: So that this Hengist was accompted as a Small kings. little king. The which when he had thus gotten the rule of the thre Prouinces before mencioned, he sent for mo Saxons, and gathered them together that were sparckled abroade, so that in these Prouinces the fayth of Christ was vtterly quenched and layde a sleepe.

¶ Then

AURELIUS

Then Hengist with Octa his sonne gathered a great strength of Saxons, and fought with the Britons and ouercame them, and chased them in suche wise that Hengist kept his Lordship in peace and warre the space of. xxiiij, yeres as most wryters agree.

Nowe let vs returne againe to Vortiger, the which when he sawe the Saxons in such wise encrease their strength, & the Britons dayly to decrease, for as Gaufride sayth, the Saxons had the rule of London, Yorke, Lincolne, and Winchester, with other good townes. Wherefore the king for feare of the Saxons, and also for that he was somewhat warned of the comming of the two brethren, Aurely, and Vter, sonnes of Constantyne: He therefore considering these manye and great daungers, fled into Cambria, or Wales. and there held him for the more suretie, where before he had builded a strong Castle. Of the which buylding, and impediment of the same, and of the Prophet Marlyn many thinges are written by Gaufride, and reported by the common voyce of the people yet at this day.

Aurely. Vter.

¶ Now while Vortiger was thus in his Castle in Wales, the aforenamed two brethren Aurely and Vter-prepared their nauie and men of armes, and passed the Sea, and landed at Totnesse, whereof when the Britons had knowledge, they drew vnto them in all hastie wise. The which sayd brethren, when they saw that they had a competent number of Knightes and men of warre, first of all made towarde Wales to distresse Vortiger.

Whereof he being well warned, and knowing also that he coulde not make sufficient defence against them, he therefore furnished his Castle with strength of men and victuall, entending there to sauegarde himselfe, but all was in vaine: For the said two brethren with their army, besieged the Castle and after many assaultes, with wyldefyre consumed the same, and Vortiger also, and all that were with him.

¶ Of this Vortiger it is redde, that he lay with his awne daughter, in trust that Kinges should come of his blood. And lastly, he ended his life as before is expressed, when he had reigned now the second tyme. ix. yeres.

COnrannus, for so much as the Children of his brother Congallus were but yong, was ordeyned king of Scottes, and guyded them in good peace and quietnesse a long space: but at the last he was slaine for extorcion, that Tomset his Chauncelour vsed in his name.

481 Aurelius Ambrose.

Extercion.

AVrelius Ambrose, the seconde sonne of Constantine was by the Brytons made king of Briteyn. Of him it is written that when he vnderstood of the decision that was in the land of Briteyn betwene Vortiger and the Saxons, and in what maner the Saxons had subdued the Britons, he in all goodly haste, with the ayde of the King of little Briteyn, sped him into his land, and first came to Yorke, and there chased the Saxons that helde the Citie with Octa the sonne of Hengist, and tooke the sayde Octa, and kept him as prisoner a certeyn season.

Octa taken & after escaped.

¶ But howe it was, by treason of his keeper or otherwise, he brake Prison and escaped. And after, he with his father gathered a great hoste, and met Aurelius and his Crekinfoordbat-Britons, at a place called Crekynforde, where was foughten a strong and mightie battaile, to the losse of both parties, but the greater losse fell vpon the Saxons: For of them was slaine foure Dukes, and iiij.M. of other men, and the residue chased to their great daunger. Yet this notwithstanding Hengist continued his Lordship in Kent: and Aurelius Ambrose kept the Countrie called Logiers or middle England with Wales, and chased the Saxons that dwelled in the two Prouinces of East Saxon, and East Anglis out of those Countries.

Ella. Symon. Pletynger. Cissa.

¶ And in this tyme a Saxon named Ella, with his three sonnes, Symon, Pletynger. and Cissa, came with three Shippes or Hulkes, and landed in the South part of Britevn, & slue many Britons, at a place then named Cuneueshore, or Coningsborough & chased many into a Wood then called Andresleger, and after occupied that Countrie, and inhabited himselfe & his Saxons within the sayde Prouince, making himselfe king and Lorde thereof: By reason wherof and by his might and power, the said Prouince or Country

was after named the Kingdome or Lordeship of the South Saxons. The which after most South Saxons. writers had his beginning the. xxxii. yere after the first comming of Hengist, which was the vere of our Lorde 482. and the second vere of the reigne of Aurely Ambrose then King of Briteyn.

The kingdom of the South last about named had on the East side, Kent, on the South, the See and the Isle of Wight, and on the West, Hampshire, and in the North Southerey, and conteyned Southhampton. Somersetshire, Deuonshire and Cornewall. Of which sayde kingdome Ethelbald or Ethelwald was the the fourth king, and the first Ethelwald the christen king. This kingdome endured shortest season of all the other kingdomes: For king of the it endured not aboue an hundred and. xij. yeres, vnder. v. or. vij. kings at the most.

But now to returne where we left: Aurely which as before you have heard, held and Aurely inhabitoccupied the middle part of Briteyn with Cambria or Wales, did his diligence to repayre ed Wales. ruynous places, as well Temples as other, and caused the service of God to bee sayde and done, which by the meane of the Saxons was greatly decayed thorough all Briteyn.

And after this, Aurely besieged the Saxons in the hill of Badon or Baathe, where he slue many of them. But dailye the Saxons encreased and landed in great Briteyn, as shall appere. For shortly after a Saxon named Porth, landed with his two sonnes at a Portesmouth. Hauen in Sussex, after whose name as some wryte, the Hauen was afterwards called Portesmouth, which Haun is so called to this day. And lykewise they came to lande in divers places of Briteyn, so that Aurelius had with them manye conflictes and battailes, wherein he sped diversly, for he was sometime victour and sometime overcome.

It is written in the English Chronicle and other, that Aurely by the helpe of Marlyn Marlyn. did fetch the great stones nowe standing vpon the playne of Salsburie, (called the Stone Stonehege. Salsbury playne. Henge) out of Ireland, and caused them to be set there as they now stand, in the remembraunce of the Britons that were there slaine and buried in the time of the treyterous communication that was had with Hengist and his Saxons as before in the storie of Vortiger is touched: But Polichronica allegeth the same act to Vter his brother.

In the tyme of this Aurely, as sayeth Polichronica, dyed Hengist in his bed, when Hengist dead. he had reigned ouer the Kentishe Saxons. xxiiij. yeres. After whose death Octa his sonne octa. ruled the sayde kingdome other, xxiiii, yeres. Albeit that the Britishe bookes and also the Englishe Chronicle, saye that Aurelius slue in battaile Hengist, & then tooke to his grace Octa his sonne, and gaue to him and his Saxons a dwelling place in the Countrie of Galewaye, which semeth not lykely, for matter that shall after ensue, and also that which before is touched of the Pictes and Scottes in the time of the miserie of the Britons.

Now it followeth, that this Octa, neyther augmented nor minished his Lordship, but

helde him therewith contented as his father had lefte it vnto hym.

And finally in the ende of the reigne of Aurely, Pascentius, the yongest sonne of Pascentius, Vortiger, which after the death of his father was fled into Ireland for feare of Aurely. purchaced ayde of Guiliamor king of Ireland. And with a great armie inuaded this Guiliamoreking lande of Briteyn, by the Countrie of Wales, in taking the Citie of Meneuia, now call-of-trelande... ed S. Dauids, and in wasting the sayd Countrie with sworde and fyre. In the which season and time Aurelius laye sicke in the Citie of Winchester.

¶ For which cause he desyred his brother Vter to gather an hoste of Britons together, and to appease the malice of Pascencius and his Adherents. The which accordingly prepared his hoste, and at length overcame the hoste of Pascentius and size him and the aforenamed Guyliamour in the Fielde.

¶ Howbeit, Gaufride reporteth this storie otherwise, affirming that Pascentius the sonne of Vortiger, who for sauegarde of his lyfe, fled into Germany, came with a great armie of Germaynes out of the same Countrie against Aurelius to be reuenged vpon him for his fathers death, and gaue battaile vnto Aurelius himselfe, in the which the sayde Pascentius and hys Germaines were discomfitted and put to flight. Then l'ascentius who durst not after the sayde discomfiture returne into Germany, gate him into Ireland desiring avde of Guillomannius then king of that Countrie, who taking compassion of him. ayded him with all he might. And so by the helpe of the sayde king arrived at Meneuia, now called S. Dauids in Wales: At the which season Aurelius being sick at Winchester commaunded his brother Vter to gather an armie to appease his malice, the which he did, and then went into Wales to meete hym, where was foughten a cruell battaile betwene them, in the which Vter had the victorie, and Pascentius and Guillomannius were slaine.

Now while Vter was thus gone against Pascentius, a Saxon, feyning himselfe a Briteyn, and a cunning man in Phisick, by the entisement of Pascentius & vpon great rewards by him promised, came vnto Aurely where he lay sicke, and by his subtill and false meanes, purchased fauour with those that were nere vnto the Prince, that he was put in trust to minister potions and Medicines vnto the king. This man of some writers is called Copa, and of some Coppa, but of Gaufride Copa. The which when he had espied his convenient time, gaue to Aurelius a potion enpoysoned: by violence whereof he shortly after dyed, when he had reigned xix yeres, and was buried at Stonhenge besides Amesburie.

¶ In the time of the reigne of the aforesayde Aurely (Polichronica sayeth) that the kingdome of East Anglys began vnder a Saxon named Vffa, in the vere of our Lorde. CCCC. xcij. The which conteyned that Prouince which we call now Norffolk and Suf-They had in the East and Northsides, the Sea, on the Northwest, Cambrideshire: notwithstanding dyuers arryters affirme Cambridgshire to be parte of the sayde kingdome, and in the West S. Emondes Diche, and Hertfortshire, and in the South Essex. Lordship was called first Vffins Lordship, and the kings thereof were named Vffins, or as some write, they were called Vffines people, but at the last they were named East Anglis.

Redwallus the first christian king of the East Anglis. Sebertus was the first builder of Paules Church.

The first christen king of this principate, was Redwallus, but he was not so constant as was meete for his Religion. His sonne named Corpwaldus was more stedfast, which after was slaine of a misbeleuing man, and for Christes faith as some write. But Guido sayth that Sebertus was the first Christian king of this Lordship, and that he made Paules Church of London. This Lordship vnder. xij. kings, endured vntill the Martirdome of S. Edmond the last king thereof, the which was martired in the yere of our Lorde. viij. hundreth. lxix. And of this Lordeship at those dayes was Elman or Thetford the chiefe Towne.

Thetford.

THe Historie of Scotland sayth, that the Pictes and Scottes were alved with this Ambrose, and made partakers and chiefe doers in all the victories that the Britons atchieued against the Saxons.

VTer the last and yongest sonne of Constantine, and brother of Aurely, tooke vpon him the Kingdome of Briteyn, and gouerned the same verye honourably. Vter Pendragon. surnamed Pendragon. The cause thereof, as sayth the English Chronicle, was for that Merlyn lykened him vnto a Dragon vnder a starre apering in the firmament: Whereof there is made long processe in the story of Gaufride, but Layland a man in his tyme very skilfull in the antiquities of this Realme, thinketh this name was genen him for his great prudence and wisedome wherein Serpentes do excell. But how so euer were, truth it is, that after Vter (as is aforesayde) was made king, he atchiued many victories against the Saxons, and lastlye slue theyr chiefe Capitaines, Octa, & Cosa, as Gaufride writeth of him: It is also written that he was enamored vpo the Dukes wife of Cornewal named Igerne, and for to obtaine his valefull lust, he sought many and dyuerse meanes: So that lastly he made warre vpon her Husbande named Garolus, or Gorleys, and at length slue the sayde Duke at his Castle called Tyntagell, standing in Cornewall, and after maryed his wyfe, and receyued of her the noble knight Arthur, and a daughter named Anne. And in the ende he dyed at Verolame by force of poyson, when he had reigned. xvj.

yeres, and was likewise buryed at Stonage or Stonehenge, vpon the plaine of Sarisbury, leauing after him the most puysaunt and noble King Arthur.

ARthur, the sonne of Vter Pendragon, of the age of. xv. yeres, or as some wryte. xviii. tooke vpon him the gouernement of Briteyn, and having continuall battayle and mortall warre with the Saxons, did merueylously prosper and preuayle.

THere sayth Fabian I would fayne declare the fame of this noble Prince to the comfort of other to follow his martiall dedes, so that I might somwhat iustifie my report by some autentique Authour, but hereof I doubt the more because of the saiying of Reynulph Monke of Chester which voucheth vpon William of Malmesbury, wryter of the Historyes of Kinges, as is rehersed at length in the. vj. Chapter of the fift booke of the sayd Reynulph, vnto the which place because I would be briefe I referre the reader. But somewhat yet to say to the honour of so great and victorious a Champion as was thys Arthure, I will do my endeuour, so farre foorth as I may be able to auouche my saiving by sufficient warrandise, and therewith glad the Welshmen, that he should discende of so noble a victour, that so many dedes of honour in his dayes executed. For though of him be written many thinges in the Englishe Chronicle of small credence; and farre discordant from other writers, yet all agree in this, that he was a noble and victorious Prince in all his deedes, and testifie that he fought. xij. notable battayles against the Saxons, and had alwayes the vpper hande: But that notwithstanding he could not anoyde them out of his lande, but that they helde theyr Countries, which they were possessed of, as Kent, Southerey, Northfolke, Southfolke. Notwithstanding some wryte that they helde those Countries of him as tributaryes. And the foresayd, xij. battayles as I finde written in the auncient wryter Nennius, who lived about the yere of Christes incarnacion. 620. whose Nensius. authoritie I preferre, wryteth thereof as foloweth.

The first battayle (sayth he) was foughten in the mouth of the water of Gleyn, other-

Ihon Frosard affirmeth, that king Rone. Arthure first builded the Castle of Windsour, and there founded the order of the round Table: but some thinke it was rather Winchester, for there is the Table.

In this tyme also I finde mencion made of a noble and valiant man called Arthgall, Arthgall the and he was the first Erle of Warwike, and he was one of the knightes of the round Ta- warwike. ble of King Arthure, after whome followed by succession Moruyde, and Merthrude. This Kingdome endured longest of all the other, which were seven in number, or sixe beside this. Some writers accompt the continuance of thys kingdome from Cerdicus to Egbert, and some to the last yere of Aluredus. But Guydo accompteth the continuance of this kingdome from the first yere of Cerdicus vnto the last yere of Edward the The kingdome Confessor, and by that accompt it should endure five hundred and. liii, yeres: But most of the west sarons cotinued agree that it should be reconed from the first yere of Cerdicus to the last yere of Aluredus. ¶ Finally, when he had by a long time maintained his warres against the Saxons, and specially against Cerdicus king of West Saxons: he for a fynall concorde gaue vnto the sayde Cerdicus (as sayth Polichronica) in his sixe Chapter of his fift Booke, the Prouinces of Hampshire and Somersetshire. And when he had set his lande in some quietnesse, he betooke the rule thereof vnto his Nephew Mordred, and with a chosen armie sayled (as sayth Gaufride and other) into Fraunce where as sundrie Authors write, he wrought wonders.

AFter the departure of Arthur (as Polichronica sayeth) the aforesayde Mordred being desirous to be king, feared somewhat the might of Cerdicus king of the West Saxons: he therfore sought for his fauour and to obteyne his good will, gaue vnto him certaine Townes, Fortes, and Castels, and other great giftes, so that at the last he wanne him, in such sort that he consented to Mordreds request: in so much that Mordred was shortly after at London crowned king of Briteyn, and Cerdicus was after the maner of the Pagans crowned king of West Saxons at Wynchester.

Treason.

Mordred.

Now when knowledge came to Arthur of all this treason wrought by his Nephew Mordred: he in all the haste made towarde Briteyn and landed at Sandwiche, where he was met of Mordred and his people, whiche gaue vnto him a strong battaile at the time of his landing, and there Arthur lost many of his Knightes, as the famous knight Gawen and other. But yet this notwithstanding, Arthur at the length recoursed the land and chased chased his enimies, and after the buriall of his Cosyn Gawen and other of his, that were there slaine, he set forward his hoste to pursue his enimies.

¶ Mordred being thus ouerset of his Vncle at the Sea side withdrewe him to Winchester: where he being furnished of newe Souldiours, gaue vnto Arthur the second battaile, wherein also Mordred was put to the worste and constrained to flee. Thirdly and lastly, the sayde Mordred fought with his Vncle Arthur at Baath, where after a long and daungerous fight, Mordred was slaine, and the victorious Arthur wounded vnto death, when Mordred slaine. he had reigned. xxvi, yeres, and after buried in the vale or Isle of Aualon, nowe called Glascenburie, whether he was conveyed to bee cured of hys woundes. Who so lust to know more touching the certeyntie and truth of these matters maye reade the booke of the excellent antiquary Iohn Leyland, intituled the Assertion of Arthur, where euerie thing is more at large discoursed.

EUgenius the thirde, the sonne of Congallus, was made king of Scotland after Conrannus, and reigned. xxxiiij. yeres. The Scottishe Historie affirmeth, that he with his Scottes were present in the battailes that Mordred fought against Arthur.

¶ The Scottes say that this Mordred was king of Pictes, and that Arthur was slaine in battaile, and the Britons discomfited, and Guanora the Queene taken prisoner by the Scottes with great spoyle.

COnstantine the thirde, the sonne of Cador Duke of Cornewal, and cosyn to king Arthur by assent of the Britons was crowned king, and he was by the two sonnes of Mordred grieuously vexed, for that they claymed the lande by the right or title of their father. So that betwene him and them were foughten many and sundry battayles, but where or when, it is not shewed, neyther are the names of the two sonnes of Mordred expressed.

¶ But sundrie Authors agree that after the aforesayde two battailes thus foughten finally the two sonnes of Mordred were constreyned of pure force to flie for their safetie. And so the one fled to London, and the other tooke Sanctuarie in the olde Abbey Church.

of Winchester, dedicated to Saint Amphibalus.

Whereof Constantine being warned, left not vntill he had slaine the one within the Monastery of Wynchester, and the other within a Church or Temple of London, of the which crueltie of his, Gildas sore complayneth.

¶ When Constantyne had thus subdued his enimies and thought himselfe now in a sure and quiet state: then arose vp his awne kynsman named Aurelius Conanus and arrered Aurelius Cona mortall battaile against him, and at the last slue him in the Fielde, when he had reigned nus. three yeres, who was buried at Stonehenge. But some wryters say, he dyed by the hande of God of a great sicknesse.

AUrelius Conanus after the death of Constantine was crowned king of Briton. This man was noble and liberall, but he vsed to cherishe and make much of such as loued strife and dissention within his lande, and gaue light credence to them that accused other, were it right or wrong. And as sayeth Gaufride and other, he tooke by strength his Vncle, which of right should have bene king and cast him into a strong prison, and after slue tirannously the two sonnes of his sayde Vncle: But his reigne continued not long, for as sayth Gaufride, he dyed in the second yere of his reigne leaving after him a sonne named Vortiporius.

¶ And here is to be noted, that after this time, the Britons decreased of Lordship and rule within Briteyn, and drewe them toward Wales, so that the Countrie about Chester Britons decayed, was the chiefest of their Lordship within Briteyn. For dailye the Saxons landed with their companies, and occupied the principall partes of the same, as shall after appere.

Now in the time of the reigne of the aforesayde Aurely (as sayeth Polichronica, Guydo and other) beganne the kingdome or Lordship of Bernicia, vnder a Saxon named 14a the first Ida in the. D. xlvij. yere of our Lord, and in the last yere of the sayde Conanus. This king of Bernicia, or Northumbers-

Lordship was in the North parte of Briteyn, and grewe in short while more and more, so that finally, it was named the kingdome of Northumberlande, and was first deuyded into two kingdomes, whereof the first as abouesayde was called Bernicia, and the other Deyra. The meres or markes of this kingdome of Northumberlande, were by East and by West the Occean Sea, by South the Ryuer of Humber, and so downeward toward the West by the endes of the Shires of Notyngham and Derby, vnto the Ryuer of Merse, or Martia, and by North the Scottishe Sea, which is called Foorth or Frith in Scottishe, and in Britishe, the Werde.

Bishoprick of Durham. The Southside of this Lordship is called Deyra, which is now called the Bishoprick of Durham, and the Northside was called Bernicia, which were then departed or seuered with the Ryuer of Tyne, Deyra conteyned the lande from Humber to the Ryuer of Tyne, and Bernicia included the Countrie from Tyne to the Scottishe Sea.

Ella first king of Deyra. In Bernicia reigned first as is abouesayde, Ida or Idas, and in Deyra reigned first Ella, which Lordships beganne both within three yeres. But in processe of time both in one were named the kingdome of Northumberlande, which so continued, somewhile vnder one King, and somewhile vnder two, the space of CCC. xxj. yeres, as sayth Reynulph Monke of Chester. And the name continued afterward vnto the Saxons and Danes, vntill the comming of Edredus brother of Ethelstane, and sonne of Edward the elder. The which Edredus in the ix. or last yere of his reigne ioyned this to his awne kingdome. By which reason it should seeme that this kingdome endured vnder that name foure hundreth. ix. yeres.

The first christian Prince of this kingdome was named Edwynus, that received the fayth of S. Paulyne (as Guydo sayth.) In this Lordship also were included these Shires and Countries now called, Yorke, Notyngham Shire, Derby Shire, the Bishoprick of Durham, Copelande and other.

Ethelfridus.

¶ Among the many kinges of Saxones that reigned in thys Lordship, which after some wryters were to the number of. xxiij. there was one which was accompted the. viij. king, named Ethelfridus, who destroyed moe Britons than all the other Saxon kings, and he was father to Oswy, called Saint Oswald.

A slaughter of Monkes. ¶ But most cruelly raged he against them in a battayle that he had besyde Chester, where by the instigation of Ethelbert king of Kent, he slue also two thousands Monkes of the house of Bangor, as sayeth Polichronicon in the x. Chapter of his fift Booke, the which Monkes were come together to praye for the good speede of the Britons. And besyde this number of Monkes, there were fiftie that fled, whereby they with their leader Bruciuall were saued. Of such a number of Monkes in one house, might be demed a wonder: But Reynulph and Guydo also do affirme that in the house of Bangor at those dayes, were three tymes seuen hundreth Monkes which lived by the travelle of their handes.

Gaufride.

The cause of the great slaughter of the aforesayd Monkes is declared by Gaufride in the. viij. booke and. iiij. Chapter, who wryteth thereof as foloweth. Their Abbot sayth he named Dionotus, was a man singulerly well learned in the liberall sciences, who when Austyn required the Britishe Bishoppes to submit themselues vnto him, and perswaded him to take paynes with him to preach the Gospell vnto the Englishe Nation, proued by diuerse reasons that they ought not to yelde any such subjection vnto him, forasmuch as they had an Archbishop of their awne, nor yet to preach to their enemies the Saxons, which seased not dayly to take from them theyr awne naturall Countrie, for the which cause they hated them deadly, and weighed not what fayth or Religion they were off, neyther did they communicate with them in any thing more than with Dogges. Therfore when Ethelbert king of Kent saw how the Britons disdeyned to submit themselues vnto Austyn, and contemned his doctrine, and preaching, beyng highly displeased therewith he incensed Ethelfride king of Northumberland, and other of the Saxon kinges also, to assemble a great power of men of armes, and then to go to Bangor and destroy Dionotus, with the Clergie there, & all the sayd religious persons that had so dispised the sayd Austyn. The which Princes following his aduice and counsayle, gathered together a wonderfull great army, and so marching forwardes towardes Wales, came into the towne of Chester, where Bruciuall head ruler of that towne wayted for theyr comming: Whether also came atthat same season an innumerable sort of Monkes and Heremites out of diverse Prouinces of the Britons, but especially out of the Citie of Bangor, to pray to God to saue and defende their people.

Nowe when Ethelfridus king of Northumberlande had arrered a great power out of all quarters, he set vpon the sayde Bruciuall, who by reason he had the lesse number of Souldiers, was constreyned to forsake the Citie and flie away, but not before he had slaine a great number of his enemies. Now when Ethelfridus had taken the City, and vnderstood the cause of the comming of the sayd Monkes, he commaunded them first of all to be set vpon, and so were there of them the same day a thousand and two hundered martyred.

Hetherto Gaufride.

VOrtiporius the sonne of Conanus, reigned after his father ouer the Britons: Of this man is no notable thing written, but that Guydo sayth he was a victorious knight, and that in sundry battayles he discomfitted the Saxons:

¶ In the tyme of the reigne of this king, a Saxon named Ella the sonne of Iffus, began to reigne on the Southsyde of the Kingdome of Northumberland called Deyra, as before is expressed.

When Vortiporius had ruled the Britons foure yeres, he dyed, leaving none heire of

¶ And forasmuch as all writers agree that the kinges of West Saxons, at length subdued all the other kingdomes in Briteyn, and made the whole lande of Briteyn but one kingdome or Monarchy, and all other aswell of Britons as Saxons left off: Therefore I entende to bring in the name of euery king of the West Saxons from the first Cerdicus or Childricus, and loyne them with the kinges of the Britons, for so long as hereafter the sayde Britons continued their reigne within any part of Briteyn.

MAlgo a Duke of Briteyn, and nephew to Aurely, reigned ouer the Britons. This Malgo by the testimonie of many wryters was the comlyest and most personable man of all the Britons that then lyued, and therewithall was a hardie knight. And he so withstood Malgo. the Saxons, and kept them vnder, that they dammaged not the lande, the which he then had possession of, and as Gaufride sayth, he subdued six Prouynces, that is to say, Ireland, the Isles of the Orcades, Gothland, Iseland, Norway, and Denmarke, and held Orchades. them in quiet possession.

¶ In the time of the reigne of this Malgo, reigned in the Lordeship or Kingdome of Kent Ethelbert, who (as sayth Reynulph) assembled a great armie, and gaue battayle vnto Ceaulmus sonne of Kenricus, and then king of West Saxons, the cause whereof is not expressed. But this battayle was the first battaile that was foughten betwene the Saxons, after that they obteyned land and dwelling within Briteyn, which was foughten in a place called Wilbaldowne. And in that fight were slaine two Dukes of Ethelbertes, and himselfe with his people put to flight and chaced.

¶ Also the sayd Reynulph witnesseth that the yere following Cutwolphus the brother of Ceaulmus before named, fought strongly against the Britons at Bedford, and recouered from them foure Cityes or townes, named Liganbrough, Egelsbrough, Besington, and Euysham.

But now to returne to Malgo king of the Britons, the Authour of the Flowre of

Histories sayth, that notwithstanding the many vertues, the which God had endued him with, yet in the ende he forgat God, forsaking all vertue and gaue himselfe to sundrie vices and sinnes, namely to the abhominable sinne of Sodomy: whereof ensued to him the wrath of God, whereby he was afterward sore persecuted of his enimies the Saxons.

¶ It was not long after the aforenamed battaile done at Bedforde but that the aforesayde Cutwolphus dyed: But yet his sayde brother Ceaulinus desirous of honour, mainteyned his warre against the Britons, so that after he made a newe voyage against them, and gave them another discomfiture, and tooke from them the Cities of Bathe, Gloucester, and Worcestre, which should be as Reynulph accompteth in the. xxix, yere of the reigne of Malgo.

About the xxxiii, yere of his reigne Ceaulmus before named, gathered his Saxons, and fought with the Britons at a place called Fechanlege: where after long fight the sayde Ceaulmus chased the Britons, and wan of them victory: but his brother called Cutha, was slaine in the fight, for whom he made great sorow. Thus in his latter dayes Malgo beying oppressed and pursued of his enemies, lastly dyed, when he had reigned. xxxv. yeres.

COnwall was made king of Scottes, and reigned. x. yeres. He was a Man of great deuocion, and gaue much to Churches. He made many lawes concerning the libertie of Priestes. In his tyme Saint Colme of Ireland, and Mungo the holy bishop of Blasquew were in Scotland.

Kimcatill brother of Conwallus reigned in Scotlande foure Monethes, and after him Aidane. xxvij. yeres. In his tyme variaunce happened betweene the Pictes and Scottes, because that Lerudeus Kinge of Pictes would not restore to Aidane certaine Traytors which fled out of his land.

CAreticus, or Carencius, as some call him, after the death of Malgo, reigned ouer the Britons. This Man was a louer of civile battayle, and was in maners and condicions the worst of all men, and therefore was hated of God and his subjectes, in such wyse as they excited and prouoked the Saxons to warre against him (as sayth Guydo) and chased him from Citie to Citie, and from Towne to Towne, vntill they had recoursed from him all such land as his predecessor Malgo, had holden before him.

¶ But Polichronicon addeth more therevnto, and sayth, forasmuch as the Saxons knewe of the dissension between Careticus and his Britons, they in all haste sent into Ireland for the king called Gurmundus, King of the Affricans, and he warred so sore vpon the Britons, that lastly the sayd Careticus was faine to take the Towne nowe called Sicester, and therein besieged him with his Britons a certaine time, where, by dailye skirmishes and assaultes he lost many of his people.

¶ When Careticus had a season assayed and prooued the strength of hys enimies, and sawe that they still encreased and his people lessened and minished: he sodainely left that Towne, and with a certaine number of Britons tooke ouer Seuerne water and so into Wales, then called Cambria, which should be in the thirde yere of his reigne.

Truth it is, that after Carcticus and his Britons were thus driven into Wales, yet he lefte not continually to make assaultes upon the Saxons that were nere unto him.

IN this time, or sone after, Ethelfridus ruled the North Saxons, for as sayeth Guydo, he began the reigne ouer Deyra and Bernicia, in the yere of our Lorde fine hundred, xciij. This is Ethelfridus the sonne of Ethelricus that pursued so sore the Britons, & slue so great a number of the Monkes of the Towne of Bangor as is before rehersed, the which daylie warred vpon the Britons, and the Britons vpon him, so that he destroied & subuerted much of Christes fayth, with the helpe of the aforesayd Gormond: insomuch as the Bishops of London and Yorke, with other ministers of the Church, fled into divers Counof this Realme. tries, so that their Church dores were shut vp after them, or else occupied in the worshipping of their Idolles and false Goddes.

king in Briteyn till this day, necre vpon the space of foure hundreth yeres and odde, was almost extinct throughout all the lande.

¶ And when the aforenamed Gurmond had finished his tirannie within the lande of Briteyn, then he sayled into France, where he was after slaine (as sayeth Polichronica) albeit the French Chronicle speaketh nothing of any such man during this persecution, as Persecutio. witnesseth Guydo.

¶ During also this trouble betweene the Saxons and the Britons, the Lordship or kingdome of the East Saxons beganne to take place, as after shall be shewed.

In this time also Ethelbert reigned in Kent, and bare himselfe verie valiantly, in such wise that he enlarged his kingdome to the bounds of Humber. In which time Gregory, Gregory Bishop who for his notable deedes was surnamed the great, was made Bishop of Rome: This Gre- of Rome. gory, as before is touched in the storie of Ethelbert, having compassion on the Countrie from whence so fayre children came, as he before had seene, and thinking it not meete that it should be inhabited with Pagans or people of misbeliefe, sent into Britcyn a learned man named Austyne, with other of his brethren, to preache to the Anglis the fayth of Christ. But as sayeth Antoninus in the thirde Chapter, and xij. title of his aforesayde Antoninus. worke: when Austyne was three dayes iourney gone and passed, such a sodaine feare entered into him and his felowes that they turned againe. Then Gregory comforted the sayde companye, and sent them with Letters to the Bishop Arelatensis, wylling him to helpe and ayde him in all that to him needed. The tenour of which Letters and other sent to Ethel- Austyn sent into bert king of Kent, with their aunsweres, are written with other questions in the Register of Binglad to preache. Gregory, and in the bookes of Beda and other.

¶ Austyne being thus comforted, sped him on his journey and landed on the East side of Kent in the Isle of Thanet with. xl. of his felowes, whereof some were Interpretours, or such as could speake all languages. Nere vnto the place before named, where Austyne landed, stood at those dayes, the manour or Palace of the sayde king Ethelbert, where at this daye appere some of the ruynous walles, and is called of the inhabitaints of that Isle, Richbourgh. It is apparaunt betweene the Isle and the Towne Richbourgh. of Sandwiche, vpon a Myle and a halfe from the sayde Towne, Eastwarde from Cauntorbury.

Then when Austyne was landed, he sent the sayde interpretours vnto Ethelbert, saiying that they were sent from Rome for the saluation of the king and his Realme. The king before time had heard of the fayth of Christ, for he had to wyfe a French woman that was christened, named Berta, and had receyued her vpon condicion that he should suffer her to lyue after her lawe.

Then after a certaine time, the king spake with Austyne, but that was without the house, after the maner of his lawe, who against the comming of the king arrered and displayed a Banner of the Crucifixe, and preached to him the worde of God. Then the king sayde, it is fayre that ye promise, but for that it is to mee straunge and newe, I maye not so soone assent vnto you. But for that ye become so farre for my sake, ye shall be well entreated, and haue all things that shall be vinto you necessarie, and we graunt you leave to convert of oure people as many as ye can. And when they had receyved this comfort of the king, they went with procession to the Citie of Cauntorbury, singing Alle- Procession. luya, where they led their lives, like as holy fathers did first begin in the Primative Church, in fasting, praising, watching, and such lyke godly exercises. Fabian.

At length, when the king had well considered the conversion and godly lyfe of Austyn Embert conand his felowes, he heard them the more gladly, and lastly, by their good exhortacions & uerted to the fayth of Christ. ghostly loue, he was converted, and christened in the yere of our Lord five hundreth. xcvi, and the sixt yere of his reigne, as sayth Polichronicon.

Then the king gaue to Austyn a place for his Bishops See, at Christes Church in Christes Church Cauntorburie, and builded the Abbey of S. Peter and S. Paule, on the East syde of the in Cauntorbury. sayde

¶ Now when Gregory was certefyed of the good expedicion of Austyn, he sent to him. mo helpers, as Melitus, Iustus, and Paulinus, with bookes and answeres to Austynes questions: that was, that all such goodes as fell to the Church, should be deuided into foure partes: The first part should go to the house and maintenance of the Bishoppes housholde: The seconde to the Clergie, the thirde to the amendment of the Churches, and the fourth to the reliefe of poore people and deedes of mercie.

When Austyn had baptised a great part of the kingdome of Kent, he after made two Archbishops by the commaundement of Gregory, the one at Cauntorburie, the which before was at London, and the other at Yorke, as sayth the wryter of the flowers of stories: and by the helpe of Ethelbert, he assembled and gathered together the Bishoppes and Doctours of Briteyn, that were before disparkeled. The place of the assembly was long tyme after called Austynes Oke, which is expounded to be Austines strength, & is in the Marches or confines of the people then called Wictij, now Wigorniensis, that is to say For this synode, as Bale writeth was holden in Worcestershire.

¶ In this place, he charged the sayd Bishoppes, that they should ayde him to preach the worde of God to the Anglis, and also that they should among themselues amend certaine errors then vsed in the Churche, and specially for the tyme of keping their Easter. the contrary whereof, the Bishoppes of Briteyn held an opinion vntill (sayth Fabian) that Austyn by his prayers shewed, there a Myracle by a blinde Angle or Saxon.

After the which Myracle shewed, the sayd Bishoppes applyed them to the will and minde of Austyn in that matter: But for all this, there were of them that sayd, that they might not leave the custome which they so long had continued, without the assent of all such as had vsed the same. Then he gathered a Sinode, to the which came. vij. Bishoppes,

The Authour of the flower of stories, sheweth howe Austyn having conference with the Britishe Bishoppes and Clergie, coulde in no wise perswade them at the first, to receive his doctrine: And beeing by him required to come to a second Synode or counsayle, as they were goyng to the same, they came first vnto a discrete godly man, which had of a long time led an Anchores lyfe amongest them, to aske him counsayle, whether at the preaching of Austen they should forgo their olde tradicions or no? who answered on this wyse: if he be a man of God, folowe him. To whom they sayd againe, & howe may we knowe that? you knowe (sayth he) that the Lorde gaue this commaundement, saiying: Take my yoke vpon you, learne of me because I am lowely and meeke in heart, then is it likely that he beareth the yoke of Christ him selfe, and also offereth the same vnto you to beare. But if he be proude and hye minded, you may be sure that he is not of God, neyther ought you to take any regarde vnto his wordes. Then sayde they againe and how may we discerne this? Prouide (sayth he) that he and his may come first into the Sinode, and if when you come, he arise vp and reuerence you, then you may be sure that he is Christes minister, and is to be heard obediently of you: But if he dispise you, and thinke himselfe to good to geue any such reuerence vnto you beyng the greater part, dispise you him againe. And it so fortuned afterwardes, that Austyn beyng set downe before they came in, sate still in his Chayre, and made them no countenaunce at all, neither yelded any reuerence vnto them. The which thing they beholding, were by and by in a chafe, and notyng him to be hautye and proude, endeuored them selues, to contrary and speake against al that euer he spake: But who so desyreth to read more hereof, shall finde the same set out at large in Fabian in his fift part and. ¶ Ethelbert as divers writers doe write being now confirmed in the faith, among other Paules church chargeable and costlye deedes began the foundation of Paules Church within the Citie of in London, but London, and ordeyned it for the Bishops See of London. For the Archbishops See that best founded it. before tyme had beene there, was by Austyne and Ethelbert at the sute and request of the Citizens of Cauntorburie, translated to Cauntorbury. But of the building of the Archebishoprike Church of S. Paule, dyuers opinions be. For some write that it was builded or begonne of Lodo translato be builded by Sigebert king of East Anglis, but more truely king of Essex. This bury. Ethelbert also fouded the Church of S. Androw in Rochester in Kent.

Also (as Fabian sayth) he excited an inhabitaunt or Citizen of London to builde a Church or Chappell in the worship of Saint Peter in the West ende of London then called S. Peters at Thorney (and now the Towne of Westmynster, the which at that time was exceedingly forgrowen with Thornes, Bushes and Bryers,) where the sayde Citizen began to builde the The building of Church of Westmynster, which afterwarde was by Edwarde the Confessour enlarged or Westminster. new buylded. But by king Henry the thirde it was newly edified and made as it is now a bewtifull Monastery, and he endued it with goodly possessions and riche Iewels.

He commaunded all Iuggelers, Mynstrels, Scoffers and such idle persons eyther to auoyde his Minstrels, Iuglande, or else to finde some honest craft or occupation to lyue by.

¶ During also the aforesayde persecution of the Britons, before anye ruler of them ragabonds. were specially named, began the reigne of the East Saxons (as sayeth Reynulph) under Se-Sebertus first bertus their first king. Albeit that Guydo de Columna sayth, that it began when the king-king of the East dome of the East Anglis began. This kingdome, that is to say, Essex, hath on the East side the Sea, on the Weast Middlesex and London, on the South the Thamys, and on the North Suffolke, and endured two hundreth yeres, as most writers affirme.

The first christian king of this Lordship was the aforenamed Sebertus, converted by Sebertus conthe meanes of Molitus Bishop of London, as sayth Guydo: But after his saiying this Se christian fayth. bertus should be the thirde king of Essex. All writers agree that the kings of this Lordship were most commonly named vnder kings, or Pety kings, & were subjects vnto the kings of Mertia.

¶ But now to returne to the Britons, which in all this time occupied a part of Cornewall and the Countries of Cambria, as Northwales & Southwales, and there held them in making of assaultes vpon the Saxons as before is sayde, the which so continued by the space of. xxiiij. yeres. At which tyme the Britons of one assent chose for their souereigne and ruler the Duke of Northwales named Cadwane.

The was put in aucthoritie, assembled his Briteynes and came againe into Briteyn, and gaue battaile vnto the sayde Ethelfride, in the which they sped diuersly, so that some season the Saxons wanne, which they recouered at their last comming.

¶ It should seme by the meaning of Reynulph, that this Cadwan should at the length slea the sayde Ethelfride and Osricus, both kings of Bernicia and Deyra. But Guydo and Gaufride saye, that after this Cadwan had the better of Ethelfride, it was agreed by Mediatours that Ethelfride shoulde enioy all the lande ouer and beyonde Humber into Scotland: and Cadwan also should have the lande from Humber toward the South. To the which saiying agreeth the Englishe Chronicle, affirming also that he should be the sonne of Bruciuall King of Leycester, the which of other Writers is not testified.

Bruciuall king of Leycester.

¶ It is also there shewed, that after the sayd accorde betwene Ethelfride and Cadwan, that then they continued during their lyues as two most special friendes and louers, during the reigne of this Cadwan, the two sonnes of Colricus, Kingilsus and Quichilinus after the death of their fathers brother, Colwolphus ruled ioyntly the principalitie of the West Saxons. The which in their beginning fought against the Britons at Abyndon beside Oxford, and wanne of them the Towne and other holdes, which the Britons in that Countrie occupied. But by agreement of writers, this Cadwane was not at this conflict, neyther medled he so farre within the lande. But as it should seeme by Guydo, these Britons shoulde be some company that shoulde lyue vnder the tribute of the Saxons, the which for the manhood that they had heard reported of Cadwan, rebelled against the Saxons.

Then it foloweth, when this Cadwan had thus continued his amitie with Ethelfride, it fortuned that this Ethelfride for hatred or otherwise, put from him his wyfe being great with childe, and tooke to him another. Wherfore this woman being remedilesse, calling to minde the great loue that was between her husbande and Cadwan, she went vnto him and most instantly besought him to reconcile hir Lorde and husbande, that she might be restored to his companie. But for that Cadwan, after many meanes and requests made, coulde not bring it about, he therefore tendring her necessitie kept her in his Court vntill she was delyuered of a man childe, whome she caused to be called Edwyn. And soone after was the wyfe of Cadwan delyuered of a sonne, whome the father named Cadwalyn. But the Authour of the flowre of histories sayeth, that these two children were borne long before this time. The which should seme to be true, for so much as this Cadwalyn was of laufull age to gouerne this lande when his father dyed, the which he coulde not do if he had bene borne but now, and of this ye may reade more in Fabian, in his fift booke and. C. xxviij. Chapter.

But to returne to the storye of Cadwan: About the xiiij. yere of his reigne Quinchelinus that was brother vnto Kyngilsus, and ioyntly ruled the West Saxons, sent vpon an Easter day a Ruffian called Eumerus, to slea Edwyn king of Northumberland. This Cutthrote ruffian came to a Citie beside the water of Darewent in Darbishire, & wayted his tyme, and at the last finding the king smally accompanied, entending to haue runne through him with a sworde enuenomed: But one Lylla the kinges trustie seruaunt, beyng without eyther shilde or other weapon to defende his Maister, start betwene the king and with the same stroke: and after also he wouded another which was a Knight, and then was he taken, and confessed by whom he was apointed to woorke that treason. The knight and the Kinge that were wounded, lay long sicke before they were healed. And the night fo-lowing the Queene was deliuered of a Daughter, the which King Edwyn caused to be Christened of Paulinus Archebishop of Yorke, in token that he woulde fulfill such promise touching the receyuing of baptisme as he before had made. And she was named Enfleda.

Enfleda.

¶ And after Whitsontide then next following, Edwyn beyng scantly whole of the wounde, assembled his hoste, and made toward the kinges of the West Saxon, and after a great and sore fight, he vanquished and overthrew them. But for all this victory he forgat to be thankfull vnto God, the gener not onlye of his health, but also of the same victory. And afterwarde he receyued letters of exhortacion from Boniface then Bishop of Rome, to take vpon him baptisme: And the sayd Bishop likewise exhorted the Queene, and sent Tokens sent vnto her a Glasse to looke in, with a combe of Iuory richely garnished, and a shirt for from the Byshop the King wrought in sundrie places with letters of Golde: But all this preuayled nothing

How be it, it was not long after, that the King assembled his counsaile, and by theyr agreement he was of the sayde Paulinus baptised within the sayde Citie, the. xj. yere of his reigne, and the yere of our Lorde. 627. He was the first Christian king that reigned Ewya the first in that Countrie. And after him, many of his Lordes and subjectes were also Christened christian king of Northumberof the sayde Paulinus, and the Flamyns or Bishops which were worshippers of false land. Goddes, were converted and made the Ministers of Christes Fayth. In token whereof, they armed themselues as knightes, and bestrydde good horsses, where before by their law, they might vse no armour, nor ride but only on a Mare. Fabian.

Trom this tyme forwarde by the terme of. vj. yeres, during the lyfe of king Edwyn, Paulinus christened continually in both the Prouynces of Bernicia and Deyra, in the Christening first Ryuers of Gueny, and Swala which he vsed for his Fontes, and Preached in the Shire of vsed in Ryuers. Lindesey, and builded a Churche of Stone at Lincoln, the which of some is supposed to be the Minster Churche. And in this tyme was so great peace in the Kingdome of Edwyn, that a woman might have gone from one towne to another without griefe or anoyaunce. And for the reliefe and refreshing of wayfaring men, this Edwyn ordeined at cleere Welles and Springes, certeyne Cuppes or Dishes of Iron and brasse, and caused Cuppes of Iron. the same to be fastened vnto them with small cheynes, and no man was so hardy to take away any of those Cuppes, he kept so good justice, and therewith was knightly of his

¶ And for that this Edwyn excelled the other kinges, they enuied at him, and specially Penda king of Mertia, the which prouoked Cadwan king of Britons against him. So that they two assembled a great hoast against Edwyn, and lastly met in a place called Hatfield, and after sharpe and sore fight on both sides, there Edwyn was slaine, when he had reigned ouer the Northumbers. xvij. yeres. When these two kinges Cadwan, & Penda, had thus ouercome the king, and slaine both him & many of his people, they became so cruell to men of that countrie, y they destroyed therin great numbers of people, not sparing, men, women, children, religious persons, persons, nor other. Wherfore Paulinus the Archebishop, beholding their cruelnesse, tooke with him the Queene, and Enfleda her daughter, & fled by water into Kent. And because the Bishoprich of Rochester was then voyde, by reason that Romanus the last Bishop was deade: Paulinus was there ordeyned and made Bishop of that See, and there dyed, and also as Reynulph sayth, he left there his Pall, and the Archbishoprick of Yorke was void, xxx. yeres after. But the Queene which was named Etherberga, sayled into Fraunce, and became there a Nonne, and lykewise her daughter Enfleda kept her possession, and was after Abbesse of Stemshalt in the Vale of Whytbie.

Osricus.

After the death of Edwyn, Osricus that was the sonne of Elfricus, which was brother to Ethelfridus, tooke vpon him to be king of Deyra, and Eaufricus the eldest sonne of Ethelfrida, was made king of Bernicia, both the which revolted from Christes fayth, and became Mysercantes. For the which the wrath of God shortly after fell vpon them, for they were both slaine in the yere following, of the aforenamed Cadwan and Oswalde.

¶ And when the sayd two kinges were thus slaine, Oswalde the second sonne of Ethelfride began his reigne ouer the prouince of Bernicia, as chiefe of that Kingdome of Northumberland, and had the rule of Deyra likewise, whereof when Cadwan was ware, he gathered his Britons, and thought to have slaine him as he had before slaine his brother Eaufricus. But when Oswalde was warned of the great strength that Cadwan had, he made his prayers to God, and besought him meckely of helpe to withstand his enemye for the saluation of his people. Then after he had thus prayed, the two armyes met in a fielde named at that tyme Denysborne or Denyslake, where was foughten a strong battaile, and in the ende Cadwan was slaine, and his people chased, the number whereof did farre exceede Oswaldes hoste. And thus ended the sayde Cadwan when he had reigned ouer the Britons. xxij. yeres, leauing after him a sonne named Cadwallyne.

FErquhard the eldest sonne of Eugenius was king of Scottes, xij. yeres. In the tyme of this mannes reigne, by his negligence was great division, and debate among the Nobles of the Realme, and for his cruelty and negligence in the affayres of the common weale, he was of the Lordes disgraded, and cast in Prison, and for sorrow thereof slue himselfe.

Alcaron.

MAhomet, of Arabia, at this time when there was great confusion of things both in the East and West, then began his errour, he came out of a base stock, and being father-Abdemonaples, lesse, one Abdemonaples, a man of the house of Ismaell bought him for his slaue, and loued him greatly for his fauour and wyt: For which cause, he made him ruler of his Sergiusa Monke, merchandise and other businesse. Then one Sergius a Monke, which for Heresie fled into Arabia, who instructed him in the heresic of Nestorius. In the meane season, his master dyed without children, leauing behinde him much ryches, and his wyfe a riche Wydowe of fiftie yeres of age, whome Mahomet maried, and when she dyed, he was made heire, and greatly encreased in ryches: And for his magicall artes, was had also in great admiration and honour of the foolish people. Wherfore by the counsayle of Sergius, he called himselfe the Prophete of God, and shortly after, when his name was published, and then taken to be of great authoritie, he decised a lawe or kinde of Religion, called ALCARON. in the which he tooke some parte well nere of all the heresies that had bene before his time. With the Sabellians he deuyded the Trinitie: with the Manichees, he affirmed to be but two persons in the deitie: he denied the equalitie of the father and the sonne with Eunomius: and sayd with Macedone, the holy Ghost was a creature: and approved the multitude of wyues with the Nicolaites: he borowed of the Iewes, circumcision, and of the Gentiles much superstition, and somewhat he tooke of the christian veritie, beside manye Deuelishe phantasies invented of his awne braine: Those that obeyed his lawe, he called Saracens. When he had lyued fourtie yeres, he died of the falling sicknesse, the which he had of long time dissembled, feynyng that when he was taken therewith, the Aungell Gabriell appered vnto him, whose brightnesse he coulde not beholde.

CAdwallyn, the sonne of Cadwan, after the death of his father tooke vpon him the gouernement of the Britons, and he was valiaunt and mightie, and warred strongly vpon the Saxons, which were neere about him, and he wanne from them both Castelles and Townes, and droug them back into the lande toward London: whereof hering Penda king of Mertia, assembled his Saxons and made towarde the sayde Cadwallyn: But he was in the ende distressed, and glad and fayne to seeke and purchase his fauour and friendship, and to lyue vnder his tribute.

¶ And after this Penda was in great fauour with Cadwallyn, insomuch as he tooke Penda. parte with him against the other Saxon Kings. And about this time Kyngilsus one of the kings of the West Saxons, was by the preaching of Berinus converted to the right beliefe. and christened of him at the Citie of Dorchester, within, vij. Myles of Oxforde. And Oswald king of Northumberland, or rather king of Bernicia, was his Godfather, & wedded his daughter afterwarde. And then that Citic was geuen to the Bishop, to the ende that he shoulde there ordevne his See, where the sayde Berinus sate. xiiij. yeres after, and there was buried, vntill Beda Bishop of Winchester traslated his body to the City of Winchester, albeit, the Chanons of Dorchester said, that & body of Beryne was not taken thence but another in the stead thereof, & yet in token that it was not removed thence a Beare of a wonderfull worke stood of late daies ouer that graue where this holy man was first buried. It should seeme that this Citie of Dorchester, is now called Dorset. This See was in the Dorcester. time of William Conquerour translated to Lyncolne.

¶ About this time Sigebortus or Sigisbertus king of the East Anglis set vp certaine scooles in divers places, and ordeyned over them Scoolemasters and Vshers, as he sometime had seene in Fraunce. And after the opinion of many writers one of them was by him erected in Gtrantbridge, being then the head Citic of his dominion, now called Cam- Cambridge. bridge, the which in processe of time grew to be a famous Vniuersitie, as it is now at this day. And the sayde Sigebert was converted to the faith of Christ, by that holye man named Felix a Burgonnion: and finally the sayd king betooke his kingdome vnto his Nephew

¶ But when Penda king of Mertia warred after in that Countrie, the sayde Sigebert was against his wyll pulled out of the foresayde Monastery, and went in armes, or as some write vnarmed with a whyte rod in his hande nycely, and so was slaine, and well Sigesbert slaine. neere all his hoste that came with him to that Fielde.

¶ About the, vij. yere of the reigne of Cadwallyne, a Saxon reigned in Kent named Ercombertus, who helde that principate xx. yeres nobly. And among other of his Ercobertus. famous deedes, he reviued and quickned againe the faith of Christ, that in some places of his kingdome was sore apalled. For he destroyed the Temples of false Gods thorough all that Countrie and ordeyned by the aduice of his Clergie the time of Lent to be fasted. The institution He wedded the daughter of Anna king of East Anglys, named Sexburga, of whome he of the time of Lent. received a daughter & named her Eukendoga, the which after was a Nonne in a Monastery in France.

About this time, as it were about the. viij. yere of Cadwallyne, dyed Kyngilsus king of the West Saxons, when he had reigned with his brother and alone. xxxj. yeres. And Kenwalcus his sonne was king after him, the which at the beginning of his reigne would Kenwalcus. not be christened, and forsooke his wyfe the daughter of Penda, and tooke to him another. Wherfore Penda to be aduenged for his daughters cause, gathered his host and chased Kenwalcus out of his kingdome, and kept him thence three yeres. In the which time, he was with Anna king of the East Anglis and was christened of Felix, and after by the helpe of the sayde Anna recouered his kingdome.

When Kenwalcus was thus restored to his lande, he made a Bishops See at Wynchester, and ordeyned there a Bishop named Agilbert, a Frenchman borne, but he came out of Ireland. The which when he had sitten there a certaine of time, he was deposed and put from thence, but the cause why, I know not, and in his place was set one named Wyn, of whome sayeth Polichronichon the Citie tooke the name of Wynchester, as it were Wynnes Citie. But he was also deposed: And then was Leutherius Bishop, and after Lutherius succeeded Cedda: And after him Theodorus Archebishop of Cauntorbury ordeyned two Bishops to the Prouynce of West Saxon. The one at Winchester, and to that was subject two Countyes, Southrey and Southhampshire. And the other See he ordevned at Sherborne, to the which were subject sixe Counties, that is to saye Barkeshire, Wyltshire, Somersetshire, Dorsetshire, Deuonshire, and Cornewall, but in Wylliam the Conquerours time, the See of Sherborne was turned to the See of Sarisbury, as was also the See of Rammesbury.

Oswalde.

Meserfielde.

¶ It was not long after but that Kenwalcus warred with the king of Britons, the which white Gosneborough, and was of him there ouercome. Then Cadwallyne assembled a newe hoste of Britons, and met with Kenwalcus at a place called the hill of Pent, where after a long and sore battaile, the Britons were put to flight.

¶ Ye haue heard before how Oswald was made king of Northumberland, the which continued his lyfe in justice and vertue as a king should do, by the space of ix. yeres: But Penda king of Mertia, who to him and to all christian men had great disdevne and enuie, about the ix. yere of Cadwallyne made warre vpon Oswald, and slue him in a field called Meserfelde, where after his death (as Fabian sayth) God shewed for him many miracles. But after one yere of his death Oswy his yonger brother recoursed the kingdome, and buried his head in the Churchyarde of Lyndesar, for the bodye was conneyed by the Pagans, and deuyded in sundrie peeces.

I When Oswy had a season ruled his kingdome, he by vnlawfull meanes procured the death of Oswyn king of Deyra. This Oswyn was the sonne of Eaufricus eldest brother of Oswald, which Oswyn was good of condition and therewith both meeke and mylde, and being thus slaine, as is aforesayde, the sayde Oswy tooke to him as felow of that kingdome his brothers sonne Odylwald, the sonne of Oswald. This Oswald gaue vnto Cedda Bishop of Wynchester before named, a grounde in a place of the North Countrie in the high hilles called Lastyngery, for to buylde an Abbay vpon, which he there buylded, and after taught his brother Chymbillus how he should rule and gouerne that place.

Penda.

I Nowe Penda Kinge of Mertia; which forgat not the strengthening and fauouring that Anna Kinge of East Anglys had shewed to Kenwalcus his daughters husbande, and his enemye, and therefore desirous to be reuenged on him, gathered a power of men of warre and went against the sayde Anna, and slue him in plaine battaile.

Oswy.

I After the which victory, the sayd Penda, beyng puffed vp with pryde, and glory, went forward with his host into Northumberlande, entending to slea Oswy, as before he had slaine his brother Oswald. Whereof when Oswy had knowledge, he assembled his power and made towardes him. And for affinite of mariage that was between their children, and other causes as after shall apere Oswy offered vnto him many great offers, to the intent to have had him to have stayed from battaile, and to have had peace with him.

I When Oswy perceyued the obstinacie and pryde of Penda, and sawe that by no reasonable meanes he coulde moue him to peace, he sayde, seeying this Paynym will not receyue our giftes and proffers that we have offered vnto him, we will now offer it to him that can receyue them. And foorthwith he made his vowe vnto God, that if he had the victorye ouer his enemies, he woulde offer his daughter Elfleda vnto him, with sufficient possessions for to buylde, xij. Abbeys. And shortly after, he ioyned in battaile with Penda, in the countrey of Leedys, not far from Yorke, which battaile was so sore foughte that the lyke was not seene many yeres before: But in the ende Penda was slaine, and.

xxx. of his chiefe Capitaynes, and yet he had three tymes the number of people that Oswy had. And those that escaped the shot and sword, were for the greatest part drowned in the Ryuer Wynwed, which was nere vnto the place of that battaile. And among the Prisoners that were taken at this fielde, the wife of Penda was one, and her sonnes Vncle named Egfridus was another. Fabian.

Then Oswy yelded his thankes vnto almighty God, and according to his former promes, he offered his daughter Elfleda beyng of the age of three yeres vnto God, and tooke her to the Lady of Hilda, Abbesse of Hertsey, of Hertes Islande. And after that the savde Hilda remoued to the Abbey of Stremshalt in the vale of Whitby. xxx. Myle from Yorke, where she was after Abbesse, and so was Elfleda also. And Oswy as he had promised gaue landes and rentes to builde. xij. Abbeyes, whereof sixe were in Bernicia, and

This aforenamed Penda had dyuerse sonnes, as wryters report, that is to say, Wolferus, Weda, Egfridus, besyde other not mencioned. To this seconde sonne Weda, Oswy had before time maryed a daughter of his by consent of Penda his father: Wherefore, by the helpe of Oswy his father in law he was made King of South Mertia, the which Lordship is severed from the North Mertia by the ryuer of Trent, & it contained by the recorde of Beda five thousand housholdes. This Weda also promised when he maryed the sayd daughter of Oswy, that he would become a Christian man, the which he perfourmed after the death of his father. But when he had scantly reigned three yeres ouer the sayde South Mertia, he was by treason of his wyfe slaine (as sayth Fabian) but he sheweth no cause. And after that Kingdome fell to Wolferus the other brother, the which had wedded the wolferus. daughter of Ercombert king of Kent, named Ermenilda. This Wolferus was shortlye Ercombert king after christened, so that he is accompted for the first Christined king that reigned in Mer- of Kent. tia. and was father to Keneredus, and to Wereburga.

And for that it is long sithen I spake of Kenwalcus king of West Saxons, it is to be Kenwalcus. noted thatafter he had ouercome the Britons (as before is shewed) and at that tyme had not perfited the Bishops See of Winchester, he then busied himselfe thereabout. And according to the will of Kingilsus his father, he gaue to the sustentation of the sayd See, Kingilsus. all the land which lay within. vij. miles of the sayde Citie (as sayth the floure of Histories) and finished it somedeale to his purpose, but farre from that it is nowe.

I Soone after that Kenwalcus had ended this worke, he made warre vpon Wolferus of Mertia. But in that iourney fortune was not frendlye vnto him, for he lost thereby and wanne nothing of his entent and purpose.

I It was not long after, but Ercombert king of Kent dyed, and his sonne Egbert was king after him. ix. yere. And shortly after chaunced great mortalitie and death through- Mortalitie. out this land of Briteyn, the which continued and encreased more and more during the life of this Cadwallyn, and the lyfe of Cadwallader which folowed him. In the which season or beginning of this mortalitie and sicknesse, dyed many Bishops in this lande, insomuch that Vitalcanus then beyng Bishop of Rome ordeyned Theodorus Archebishop of Cantorbury to have the rule of the Churches of Briteyn. Somewhat before this tyme, Benet that was in good favour with king Oswy, and descended of riche kindred, forsooke seruice and house and all his kindred, and became a Monke. This Benet was he that first brought the craft of Glasing into this land, and tooke to his scholer Beda, when he Glasing first brought into was but. vij. yeres of age, and taught him during his lyfe.

I And here for that speciall mencion is made a little before that Benet was the first that brought into Briteyn the Arte and craft of making of Glasse, I thought it well to adde this note thervnto, which I find written in Reynulph in his fourth booke and fourth Chapter. Reynulph. That in the tyme of the reigne of Tiberius Emperour of Rome, which was not long after Tiberius Empe-Christes incarnation, a certeyn craftes man had found out the Art of myxture and melt-rour of Rome ing of Glasse in such sort, as he made the same malliable, that is to say, to abide the yt inucted glasse to abyde the You. I. VOL. I.

recevued some rewarde, and shewed it vnto him. The Emperour when he saw it. caused some of his awne Glasses to be fet and broken, and the Artificer forthwith amended them. And when the Emperour had well considered of the man and of his cunning. he demaunded of him if there were any man liuing beside himselfe that could do the like and he simply answered, none that he knewe or euer heard of, and the emperour aunswered, neither shalt thou euer do it againe, for this Art would make golde and other precious metall to be of no valure: wherefore he commaunded him to be behedded, and it was done, which certainly was a tyrannous deede, namely for that he would attempt to suppresse the giftes of God.

I Nowe I will return again to Oswy: the which when he had long reigned ouer the Norththumbers, he made Cedda that was Abbot of Lastingay, Archebishop of Yorke, more of wyll then of good skill, and put out Wilfride the Archebishop of that See: But it was not long after but that Cedda was depriued of that dignitie, by the authoritie of the Archebishop Theodorus, as he deprived other at that tyme, which came to their benefices against the lawes of the Church, and made him by great instaunce after this, Bishop of the West Saxons. And about the. xxx. yere of the reigne of Cadwallyn, Cissa that was fa-

Decay of Religion.

I In these dayes the Monkes and Clergie of Briteyn set all their minds to serue God. and not the worlde, and were wholy given to devocion, and not to filling of the Paunch Monkes had in and pampering of the bodye: wherefore they were then had in great reverence and honour, great reverence, so that they were then receyued withall worship. And as they went by the streetes and wayes, men that sawe them, woulde runne to them and desire their blessings: and well was him then that might goue vnto them possessions, and to builde them houses and Churches. But as they encreased in ryches of worldly treasure, so they decreased in heavenly treasure, as in the dayes of Aluredus somedeale began, and sithen that time hath sprong not all to the pleasure of God. Then they applyed nothing that was worldlye, but gaue themselves to preaching and teaching of the worde of our Sauiour Iesu Christ, and followed in lyfe the doctrine that they preached, geuing good example to all men. And besides that, they were vtterly voyde of couetousnesse, and receyued no possessions gladly, but were inforced therevnto. Fabian.

¶ At this time Oswy king of Northumberlande dyed and Edfridus hys sonne was Kinge after hym and reggned fiftene yeares, after hys father had reggned with hys felowes Oswyne and Oswalde, twentye and eyght yeares.

Then dyed also Kenwalcus king of West Saxons, about the xxxix, yere of Cadwallyne, when he had reigned ouer them xxx. yeres, and his sonne Kenewynus succeded him, but entred not into possession before Sexburga his mother had ruled that Prouynce one vere.

Te haue heard before howe Wilfride was deposed & put out out of the See of Yorke, wherefore he went to Rome and complayned vpon him to Agathon then bishop of that Sec, and was well allowed in some things. But the king and Theodorus had there such Procters and friends, that he fayled of his purpose, wherefore he returned to the South Saxons, and after he had preached among them. xv. yeres, he then taught them the arts

¶ Egfridus or Edfridus king of Northumberlande, claymed the lande that Etheldred king of Mertia helde, for the which divers assemblies of intreatie were had, but they tooke none effect, wherefore eyther partie gathered his strength, and met vpon a playne, neere vnto the Ryuer of Trent, where was foughten betwene them a long and sharpe fight: In the which among a great number on both parties, was slaine the brother of Egfride named Elswinus, but yet the saide Egfride had the better. Then after this battail, meanes of peace was againe made, so that finally Egfride had great sommes of money in recompence of his brothers death, and so the sayde two kings agreed and rested afterwards in quiet.

The arte of Pishing.

¶ Sone after this time, Theodorus for divers causes kept a Synode or Counsaile of Bi-Theodorus shops and other men of the Church, at Hatfielde: By aucthoritie of which counsaile (sayth node. Fabian) he deuyded the Prouynce of Mertia that Sexwolphus then ruled alone, into five Hatfielde. Bishopricks, that is one to Chester, the second to Worcester, the thirde to Lichefielde, the fourth to Cedema in Lyndesey, and the fifth to Dorchester.

¶ About the. xlvj. yere of Cadwalyne, Kenewinus king of West Saxons had occasion of warre against the Britons, so that they met neere vnto the West See, where after a sharpe skirmishe, the Britons were chased. And sone after Edfridus king of Northumberlande made warre vpon the Pictes or Scottes, because they fauoured & ayded the East Anglys against him. But in the ende by colour of fliyng back, they brought Edfride into a streyte among hilles and mountaines, and slue him there with a great parte of his people. Egfride slaine. And after his death a bastarde brother of his, named Alfridus, the bastarde was king of Northumberlande and reigned among them xviij. yeres.

¶ And shortly after, dyed Cadwalyne king of Britons, when he had reigned xlviij. Cadwalyn detd. veres, and many other things are written of him by Gaufride, but neyther by Reynulph nor by any other authour of good authoritie, and therefore I passe them ouer.

FErquhard called Ferquhard the second, the sonne of the late king Ferquharde was made king of Scottes, and reigned. xviij. yeres. This man in his private lyfe was verie liberall about his power, but when he was aucthorised king, he became a cruell coueteous and glottenous Tiran, wherefore he was striken of God with a vile and peinfull sickenesse, whereof he dyed.

¶ MAldwyn the sonne of Dowald was aucthorised king of Scottes, and reigned. xx. yeres: he made peace with the Pictes and Saxons, and at the last was murdred of his wyfe for suspicion of Adultrie.

CAdwalader, began to rule the Britons and also the West Saxons. He made warre vpon Lotharius king of Kent, and destroyed much of that Prouince, and wanne the Isle of Wight, and gaue the fourth part to S. Wilfride, in the which fourth part were accompted
The Isle of Wight.

¶ The whilest that Cadwalader was busied in one part of Kent, his brother named Mulkyn with a certaine of Knights were besieged, and lastly brent in another parte thereof. In reuengement whereof, Cadwalader of newe destroyed the more parte of the sayde Prouynce. And the sayde warre continuing Lotharius aforenamed was wounded and dyed, after whome Edricus was king, and reigned but a short tyme.

Then Cadwalader made warre vpon the king of Southsex named Athelwalde, and slue him in plaine battaile, and after made his Prouynce subject to him.

¶ When Cadwalader had ruled the Britons, and also the west Saxons by the terme of three yeres, he then (as sayth Reynulph Monke of Chester) of pure devotion renounced the pompe and pride of the world, and went on pilgrimage to Rome, where of Sergius then Bishop of Rome, he was confirmed, and after made a whyte Monke, and so continued all his lyfe tyme.

¶ But other write as namely Nicholas Brodrugan in his Epitome, that king Cadwalader Nicholas Broduceigned ouer Briteyn in great peace and tranquilitie. xij. yeres. And then there happened so great a death among his people, that in maner the lyuing did scarsely suffice to burie the dead, and therefore he fled into little Briteyn, whose Cosyn Iuor and Iue, being repulsed out of Englande by the Saxons, went into Wales, where among the Britons, they and their posteritie remayned Princes. And now vpon this great death and cruell warres among the Saxons, the Scottes thought to slip the Coller of obedience, and entered into league with Charles then king of Fraunce, the articles whereof follow in the historie of Achaius king of Scottes.

¶ And here endeth the lyne and gouernement of the Britons, nowe called Welshmen, which tooke that name of their Duke or leader called Wallo, or Gallo, or else of a wallo or Gallo.

Queene of Wales, named Galaes, or Wales. But how soeuer that name came first to them, nowe they are called Welshmen, which sometime were named Britons, or brutons, and descended first of the Troyans (sayth Fabian) and after of Brute, and lastly of Mulmucius Dunwallo: Albeit they were mingled or medled with sundrie other Nations, as Romavnes, Pictes, and others. And now they be English, that in their beginning were named Saxons or Anglis.

¶ And after the departure of Cadwalader, this Realme was called England, and the Inhabitantes therof were called Anglis, or English men. And this happened 1972. yeres, or as sayth Fabian 1822. yeres after that Brute first arrived in this Islande: And after the conquest of Cesar 735, yeres: And from the entring of the Saxons under their leaders Hengist and Horsus in the tyme of Vortiger 235. yeres.

Thus then apereth by the former processe of this worke, that the last yere of Cadwalader, was the yere of our Lord sixe hundreth. lxxxvi. which maketh the yere of the worlde foure thousand, sixe hundreth. xlvij. So that as Fabian sayth, the Britons had the rule of the more part of this land, reconing from Brute vnto this tyme, a thousand. viij. C.xxij. yeres. And now the Saxons or Anglis began fully to reigne, and to have the whole dominion of this Realme.

AFter the departure of Cadwalader (as Fabian sayth) this land of Briteyn was in great dissention, by meane of variaunce betwene the Britons and Saxons, and the sayde contencion continued. xj. yeres. And beside this, the great death and mortalitie before mencioned, vehemently and greatly encreased, and by reason thereof followed great scarcitie, whereof ensued hunger, and vniuersall famine through the Realme: So that by the occasion of one thing and other, the people of this Realme were wonderfully minished and decayed, and that so many and so much (as sayth Gaufride, and also the English Chronicle) the quicke bodies suffised not to burye the dead.

EVgenius the fift of that name was king of Scottes, and reigned foure yeres. In his tyme, as sayth the Historie of Scotland, he warred vpon Edfride king of Northumber-lande, and slue him in battayle.

IEwe, or Iuas, discending of the blood of the Saxons, was ruler or king of west Saxons, next after that Cadwalader had renounced the pompe of the worlde. He ruled the west Saxons verye honourably, and mainteyned such warre against the kentish Saxons that they of Dorobernia or Cantorbury, graunted him to haue peace, and also gaue vnto him for a recompence of the death of Mulking brother to Cadwalader before slaine. three thousand pounde.

¶ In the. xj. yere of the reigne of this Iewe, chaunced the wonder & meruaile that is written in Polichronica, in his fift booke, and. xxj. Chapter, and he allegeth Bede for his Authour, of one Brigthwaldus, the which after that he had beene a long while dead, was restored againe to lyfe, and tolde manye thinges of great wonder to many men. Whereby he caused great almose, and many deedes of charitie to be done.

¶ In the xxiii, yere of this Iew, Colredus then king of Mertia assembled his people and warred vpon Iew. Wherof when Iew had knowledge he likewyse gathered his people together, and they met to both their harmes at a place called Wodensburgh: where after long fight, eyther of them sped so vnhappely, that it was not knowen whether part had greatest dammage.

¶ Nowe when Iew had ruled the west Saxons nobly by the space of. xxxvii, yeres, by the importunate labour of his wife Ethelburga, he renounced his honourable estate and

¶ And as Fabian sayth, when he should renounce his estate and gouernment, he resigned the same vnto Ethellardus his Nephewe. This man also as sayth Cooper, builded the Colledge or Cathedrall Church of Welles, and the Abbey of Glascenbury.

EVgenius the sixt of that name, reigned. x. yeres in Scotland. He made peace with the Northumbers, and hated extremely the Pictes.

AMberkeleth, a cruell Tyrant, reigned in Scotland two yeres, and was slaine by one of his servaunts, as he was going with an army against the Pictes.

716 MOrdack was King of Scotland, and reigned. xvj. yeres. In his tyme the foure diuerse Nations reigning in Albion, had peace betwene themselues, that is, the Britons, 31 the Anglis, the Scottes, and the Pictes.

EThelard the Nephewe of Iewe, reigned ouer the west Saxons: Of this Man is little written, sauing that he reigned fiue yeres, and then dyed, leauing behinde him none issue of his body. And in his tyme, the reverend and holy Priest Beda, was famous, who Beda that reuerend father. wrote his booke called Anglica Hystoria to Offrike king of Northumberland.

CUtbert the Nephewe of Ethelarde, reigned ouer the West Saxons next after his sayd Vncle, of whome also is little mention made, saving that in the sixt yere of his reigne, holy Beda dyed, who in his tyme wrote lxxviij. bookes. And this Cutbert when he had Beda dyed. reigned, xvj. yeres, departed out of this worlde also. This man made often warre vpon Ethelwalde of Mercia, and sped therein dyuersly.

EDfine the sonne of Eugenius the seuenth, reigned in Scotland. xxx. yeres: This man was geuen to justice and peace, and kept the league that was made with the Britons, Englishmen, and Pictes.

Sigebert the Cosyn of Cutbert, reigned ouer the west Saxons. He was cruell and 745 tirannous to his subjects, and turned the lawes and customes of his forefathers, after his awne will and pleasure. And because a noble man of his Realme named the Erle Combranus, did somedeale sharpely aduertise him to chaunge his maners and to be more prudent and temperate towarde his people, he therefore maliciously caused him to be put Tirannie. to most cruell death.

¶ Now for asmuch as this king Sigebert continued in his malice and cruell condicions, and would not amend, his subjectes conspired against him, and deprived him of all kingly dignitie: so that he fell after into great desolation & miserie, for being on a season found in a wood or desolate place, wandering alone without all comfort: he was by a Swynheard or villaine, murdred & slaine, in the reuengement of Earle Combranus A plague due to death, whom Sigebert being king had before most cruelly caused to be put to death in the same place: vnto the which Earle the sayde vyllaine had beene sometimes belonging. And thus was Sigebert deposed and murdered, when he had reigned two yeres.

KEnulph of the lyne or blood of Cerdicus the which Cerdicus was the first king of 748 the west Saxons, tooke vpon him the rule and gouernment of the sayde West Saxons. The vertue of this man passed hys fame: For after that he with the agreement and consent of his people had deprived Sigebert their king from his regall authoritie, he then first of all appeased dyners murmures and grudges that kindeled among his subjects, for the sayde deprivation, and so set his Lordeship in great quietnesse, and rest touching their ciuile discorde.

¶ Of this Offa is tolde many things, whereof something I entende to shewe. He had warre with the Northumbers, and them for a tyme subdued. He also had warre with Etheldrede king of East Anglis, and with Egbert otherwise called Pren king of Kent,

Then after these victories, Offa buylded the Church of Winchecomb. In the time

¶ And the foresayde Kenulphus king of the west Saxons kept strongly his Lordship against the power of all his enemies, and had his subjectes in due order of obedience. Lastly, he was surprised with the loue of a woman that he kept at Merton, whose companie he haunted more secretly, then stoode with his honour. Whereof having knowledge, a kinsman of Sigesbert late king, entending to reuenge the deposing and murthering of his kynsman, awayted the tyme, and beset the house where Kenulph and his Paramour were smally accompanied. But so soone as the sayde Kenulph had espied his enemies, he set vpon them, and as Reynulph sayeth, though they were in number. lxxx. yet fought he with them a long while, but in the ende he was slaine of Clito his enemie.

This king had such displeasure to the Citizens of Cauntorburie, that he removed the Archebishops See, by the agreement of the first Adrian then Bishop of Rome, vnto Lichefielde. He furthermore chased the Britons or Welshmen into Wales, and made a strong Dyke betwene Wales, and the vtter boundes of Mertia, or middle Englande, the which to this daye is named Offdiche. And after he builded there a Church, which long time after was called Offkirck: he also buylded the Abbey of Saint Albons. Besides this it is written of him that he maried one of his daughters to Brigthricus that was king of West Saxons. And for that in his time there was variance between him and the Passage of Mer- Frenchmen, and that passage and traffique of Marchaunts was forboden: therefore he sent the famous Doctor Auselmus vnto Charles the great, then king of France to intreat of peace. SOluathius reigned in Scotland. xx. yeres, and then dyed of the Goute. In his tyme rebelled Banus of the Isle of Tyre, and Gillowham of Galloway, which were brought to due obeysaunce.

BRithricus of the blood of Cerdicus, began his reigne ouer the west Saxons, in the yere of our Lorde. vij. C.lxxviij. This Man before tyme had maryed one of the daughters of Offa king of Mertia, as before is touched, by whose ayde and power, he put out of his rule Egbert the sonne of Alcumundus, the which Egbert at that day was an vnder king or ruler in the Lordeship of west Saxons, which Egbert was discended of the blood of Genulphus, of whome some part of the story is declared in the. xxv. Chapter of the fift booke of Polichronicon. And after he was thus of Brithricus expulsed, he sayled Polichronicon. into Fraunce, and there exercised himselfe in the feates of warre with the knightes of Charles court the French king during the life of the sayde Brithricus.

About the second yere of this Brithricus, was seene in great Briteyn a wonderfull sight: For sodeynly as men walked in the streete, Crosses lyke vnto blood fell vpon their clothes, and blood fell from heauen lyke droppes of raine.

A straunge & terrible sight.

¶ This after some expositors, betokened the comming of the Danes into this lande, the which entered shortly after. For as sayth Reynulph, about the. ix. yere of Brithricus the Danes first entered this land. In defence whereof, this said king sent forth his The first enter-Steward of his houshold, with a small companye, which shortly was slaine. But by the ing of the Danes. strength of Brithricus and the other kinges of the Saxons, they were compelled to auoyde the land for that tyme.

The Brithricus thus well and knightly ruling his lande, his wife named Ethelburga, not Ethelburga, contented with him as she ought to be, sought diverse waves and meanes howe she might bring her Lorde out of lyfe, so that finally shee poysoned him with many other of his Poysoning. famely: wherefore she fearing ponishment, fled into Fraunce, and by such frendship as she there had, was well cherished in Charles Court the French king surnamed the

¶ Of her it is tolde, that when he had information of the vnstablenesse of this womans condicions, he at that season beyng a Widower, and at a time talking pleasantly with her, sayde: Nowe I put to your choyse, whether ye will have me vnto your wedded Lord, or else my sonne standing here in your presence: and him that you choose, him shall ye have and enjoy for your husband: But she chose the sonne, and left the father. Then sayd the king, if thou haddest chosen me, thou shouldest haue had my sonne: but for that thou hast forsaken me, thou shalt have neyther of vs. And after he closed her in an Abbey, where in processe a lewde man kept with her such companie, that shee was voyded that place, and after demeaned her selfe so viciously, that in processe of tyme she fell in such pouertie, that she dyed in great penury & misery.

EGbert, or after the Englishe Chronicle Edbright, the sonne of Alcumundus, reigned ouer the west Saxons. This man as is beforesayd, was driven out of the lande of Briteyn by the force of Brithricus. But he having knowledge of his death, sped him out of Fraunce, and in so knightly wyse behaued himselfe, that he obteyned the government aboutsayd, and was made king of west Saxons.

Bernulphus.

Elindone.

¶ Bernulphus king of Mertia had this Egbert in great derision, and vsed against him sundrie scoffes, and made of him trifling and rayling rymes, the which for a tyme he paciently suffered. But when he was somwhat stayed in his kingdome, and had proued the heartes of his subjectes, he at the last assembled his Knightes and Souldiours, and gaue vnto Bernulphus a battayle in a place called Elindone, in the Prouince of Hampshire. And albeit that in that fight was great diversitie of number, as. vj. or. viij. againe one, yet Egbert had the victory: For his knightes were leane, pale, and long breathed, so that they might endure to fight long: But Bernulphus Souldiours were fat, corpulent, grosse and short breathed, and therfore could not endure.

¶ Here is to be noted, that after the death of Offa king of Mertia, or middle England (of whom somewhat is spoken in the story of Kenulphus) reigned his sonne Egfertus, and after Egfertus reigned Kenulphus, the which was father vnto Kenelme, and vnto the two fayre Virgines Quindreda, and Burgemilda. And after Kenulphus reigned the sayd Kenelme: And after Kenelme, Colwolphus, and after him Bernulphus before named.

¶ And nowe to returne to Egbert, who when he had as before is sayde ouercome Bernulphus, he seased that Lordship into his awne hand: and that done, he made warre vpour the kentish Saxons, and at length obteyned also of them the victorie. And lykewyse, he subdued the Northumbers, and caused the kinges of these three Kingdomes to liue vnder him as tributaries, and ioyned them to his Kingdome.

This Egbert also wanne from the Britons or Welshmen, the towns of Chester, which they had kept in their possession vntill that daye. For the which victoryes thus by him obteyned, he shortlye after called a counsayle of his Lordes at Winchester, and there by their aduises, he was crowned king and chiefe Lord of this land, which before this day was called Briteyn: But nowe he sent into all the Costes of this lande his commaundementes and commissions, that from that day forwarde the Saxons should be called Anglis, and the land Anglia, in Englishe, England.

Whereof, when king Egbert had knowledge, he assembled his people and met with them the Danes. at a place called Carrum: But he wan in that fight little worship, for the Danes compelled him and his knightes to forsake the fielde. And beyng encouraged by that victory, they drewe westwarde, and made a confederacie with the west Britons, that lived in seruitude: By whose power they assayled Egberts landes, and did much harme in manye places of his dominion and else where, so that after this day they were continually abiding in one place of the Realme or other, vntill the tyme of Herdikenitus or Canutus fortis the last king of the Danes blood, so that many were maryed to Englishe women, and many that nowe are, or in tyme passed were, are discended of them. And albeit they were many and sundrye tymes chased and driven out of this land, and chased from one country to another, yet that notwithstanding, they euer gathered new strengthes & power, so that they abode still within the land. ¶ Of the king of these Danes, and of what people they be discended, dyuerse opinions of writers there be, which here I passe ouer, because afterward I purpose somewhat at large to say more therein. ¶ Nowe it followeth, in the tyme of the persecution of these Paganes, and Danes, Egbert dyed, when he had well and nobly ruled the west Saxons, and the more part of 833 Englande the terme of. xxxvij. yeres, and was buried at Winchester, and left behinde him' 37 a sonne named Ethelwolph, otherwise called Edelphus. ¶ When Ethelwelph had thus sped his businesse at Rome, he retorned by Fraunce, where at that tyme was king of that land Charles the Balde, of whome he was joyously received. And after he had disported him there a season, he maried the daughter of the

Then Ethelwolph taking leave of the Frenche King, tooke shipping and landed in England with his wife Iudith by name. And for that he contrary to the lawe (made in Brithricus time) set his wife in the kinges throne, and magnified her like a Queene, the Lordes of his land arose against him, and tooke from him a great part of his dominion, and made his eldest some ruler thereof, the which was done altogether in the reproch of Ethelburga, that slue her Lorde Brithricus as before is shewed. But in the end, the matter was appeased, and he to his kingly honour was restored. And in the yere folowing died the said Bertulphus king of Mertia. After whose death, Burdredus was made king of Mertia, or middle England, who before had spoused the daughter of this king Ethelwolph.

In the latter dayes of this Ethelwolph, the Danes did much harme in Lyndsey, and also in Kent, and from thence came to London, and robbed and spoyled the Citie. Wherefore Ethelwolph gathered his people, and at the last met with them in Southrey, vpon a downe called Oclea, and there discomfited them, not without shedding of great plentie of the Anglis blood, and forced them to take the Sea, so that afterward they landed in East Anglia, as shall appere. And nowe this good king ended his life when he had KEnneth reigned in Scotland, xx. yeres, he maintegned hys warre against the Pictes so fiercely, that he vanquished them in divers great battayles and slue their king, and lastly chased them vtterly out of the bounds of Scotland. 1151, yeres (as sayth the Scottishe Chronicle) after they began to have dominion in that Countrie, and from the comming of the Scottes into Albion (after their opinion) a thousande three hundred. xxj. yeres.

EThelwald the sonne of Ethelwolph after his father reigned ouer the west Saxons or Anglis. This man was very wicked, and maried the woman which his father sometime kept for his Concubine, or as some write his stepmother: But to be short, there remayneth in story no worthy thing written of him, but that he reigned not aboue one yere, & then dyed, but howe he came to his death as testifieth Reynulph it is vncertaine, except it be as one writer sayeth that he was slaine of the Danish princes, Hunger and Hubba.

DOnalde the fift of that name (a vicious and wicked Prince) reigned in Scotlande. vj. In his tyme Osbret or Osbright and Ella which were kings of the Anglis and Britaines made warre vpon the Scottes, tooke their king and subdued all the Countrie from Striueling to the Irish Seas, and from the water of Fryth and Clyde to Cumber, with all the strengthes thereof. The Englishmen had the landes between Sterling and Northumberlande. This was Clyde March betweene the Scottes and Britons one the one side, and the water of Frith named the Scottish Sea March betwene them and the Englishmen on the other side: and Sterling common March to three people. Scottes. And in the Castle of Sterlyng the sayde king Osbright caused his first money to be couned, which yet we call Sterling Money. And the Englishmen did there build a Starling money. bridge of stone for passage over the water of Frith, in the midst whereof they made a Crosse, and vnder the same writ these two Verses.

I am free Marche, as passengers may ken To Scottes, to Britons, and to Englishmen.

I Nicholas Bradyngham in his Epitome sayeth, that after Ethelwald their reigned one Osbright king of Briteyn, who conquered Scotland, and at the last an agreement was taken that from thenceforth the water of Frith should be the March betwene the Scottes & Englishmen in the East parts, and should be named the Scottish Sea. The water of Clyde to Dunbriton, to be Marche in the west part betwene Scottes and Britons. And at Dunbriton was a Castle called Aclude, and now Dunbriton. So that the Britons had all the landes from Sterling to the Irish Seas, and from the water of Frith.

EThelbert the seconde sonne of Ethelwald reigned over the greater parte of England. And in his time the Danes with more strength entered the west part of this land, and robbed and spoyled the Countrie before them, vntill they came to Winchester, and tooke the Citie by strength, and did therein what they would: but the king made such prouision, that by him and his Dukes they were forced to forsake the Citic. And as they went toward their Shippes, they were fought withall, and a great parte of them slaine and taken.

T Of this king, nothing else is left in memorie, but that he dyed when he had reigned sixe yeres, and was buried at Sherborne, leaving after him none issue.

ETheldred the thirde sonne of Ethelwald tooke vpon him the government of the west Anglis. And in the beginning of his reigne the Danes landed in East England, called Norffolke and Suffolke: but they were compelled to forsake that Countrie, and so to Danes laded in make againe into their Shippes, in the which retire they were foughten withall and many horffolke & Suffolke. of them taken and slaine, and then they sayled Northward, and landed in Northumberlande, where the two kinges that reigned there, met with them, and gaue them battaile, their names were Oshright and Ella, and there was a strong fight: But the Danes with the help of such as inhabited in the Countrie, wanne the Citie of Yorke and held it a certaine time.

Then the people of Northumberlande, varied within themselves, and were more readier to ayde and helpe the Danes, then to lyue under the government of the king of west Saxons. For here is to be noted, that all such kings as reigned there after Egbert. were tributaries, and therefore oppressed the people that lyued vnder them.

I Wherfore Etheldredus hering of the ayde and comfort that the Danes had there, assembled his people and sped him thetherward, and sent vnto the aforesayd two kings that had the rule of that Countrie, commaunding them also to prepare their people against his comming. But howe it was, or the king came with his hoste, the Danes so prouoked the Northumbers to battaile, that they met in playne fielde, and fought a long fight: But A-liud or in the ende the Danes wanne the price, and slue both the aforesayde kings with a great Aciut, a Towne multitude of their people. After which victorie, they subdued much of the sayde Coun- or City by west trie and destroyed the towne of Acliut, the which as sayth Beda, was one of the strongest Sea that departtownes of the North.

When Etheldred had prepared all thing for the warre, and was set forward towarde and it stendeth the North, worde was brought vnto him of the great discomfiture of the Northumbers, at the wall that was and also of dyners of the sayde Danes, with other that were come to Mertia, and howe made to decide that they had wonne the Towne of Notyngham, which tydings letted him of that iour-Sollande, and ney, and so the Danes kept possession of that Countrie, in suche wise that no Angle had it is thought rot eth Englande and Scotlande, rule to be farre from rule therof vntill the time of Adelstone, or as some write, vntill the time of Edredus, so that they helde it in possession the terme of. xl. yeres.

Then the Danes being thus possessed of the North Countrie, manned the same, and fortefied the strong holds thereof. And the other companie of them came downe into Mertia or middle England and wanne a part therof with the aforesayde Towne of Notyngham, and dwelled there the more part of the yere following.

I Wherefore king Etheldred with the ayde of Burdredus, then king of Mertia, layde siege vnto the Towne: the which when the Danes perceyued should be wonne, they refused the towne & tooke the Tower or Castell, and defended it in strong maner, in so much that they helde it vntill a peace or appointment was concluded betweene the two kings and them: which was, that they should go free where they woulde, and carie with them their horse & harneys without any pillage. And when this peace was thus made, eyther of the kings departed to their awne, and the Danes returned into Yorke and dwelled there the yere following.

¶ And in the vere following, a certaine number of the sayde Danes, taking shipping in the North, purposed to savle into East Englande, and vpon the Sea, they chaunced to meete with a great Flote of Danes, whereof the Capitaines or chiefe leaders, were named Hungar and Hubba: The which by exhortation of the other comming out of the North, made all one course, and lastly landed in East England or Norffolke, and in processe of

¶ When Edmond king of the Prouynce heard hereof, he assembled an hoste, and gaue vnto them battaile. But Edmond and his hoste was forced to forsake the fielde, and Edmond with a fewe persons fled into the Castle of Fremingham, whome the Danes pursued: But he in short tyme after yelded himselfe vnto the persecution of the Danes. And for that this vertuous Man Edmond woulde not denie, or renie Christ, and his lawes, The martirdome they therefore most cruelly bound him vnto a Tree, and caused him to be shot to death, and in the ende caused his head to be smitten from his bodye, and cast amongest the thickest of the Bushes, as sayth Fabian.

¶ Then his friendes with great solemnitie caried the body vnto the Abbey, then called Eglidon, or Eglysdon, and nowe called Saint Edmondes bury, and there buried him in the yere of our Lord. viij. C.lxix.

¶ But now to return again to the Danes. When they had as before is sayd martired this godly Man Edmond, and robbed and spoyled that Countrye, they tooke againe their Shippes, and landed in Southerey, and continued their journey untill they came to the towne of Reding, and wanne the Towne and Castle.

¶ And as Polichronicon sayth, the thirde day after they came thither, Hungar and Hubba, as they went in purchasing of prayes, were slaine at a place called Englefield, which Captaines of the Danes beyng thus slain the rest of them kept close together, in such wise that v west Saxons could take of them none advantage. But within fewe dayes after, the Danes were holden so short, that they were forced to issue out of the Castle, and to defende themselves in plaine fielde. In the which by the comfort of king Etheldred, and of Alured his brother, the Danes were discomfited, and many of them slaine: whereof the other beyng ware, fled againe to the Castle, and kept them within the same a certevne tyme.

¶ Then the king commaunded Ethelwold who at that tyme was Duke of Barcoke, or Barkshire, to attend with his people vpon that Castle, and to see that the Danes brake not out at large, while he went into other partes of that Countrie to subdue other of the sayde Danes. But when the Danes knewe of the kinges departure, they brake out, and tooke the Duke vnprouided, and slue him and most of his people, and caused the rest to withdrawe themselves from that towne and Castle.

It was not long after, but that the king was certified of the death of Ethelwolde Duke of Barkeshire, and of the discomfiture of his people, and of the great victorie of the Danes: which vnto him were heavie newes. And foorthwith also, he heard that a Dane was landed named Osricke, whome Polichronicon nameth to be the king of Den-Osrike. marke, the which Osricke in a short tyme had gathered together by the helpe and assistance of the other Danes a great hoste, and were embattayled vpon Ashedowne.

I Vnto this battayle Alured was sent for, to his brother the king with great spede, that he should set forward vpon the Danes. But before he could be ready, the hostes of the Anglis, and the Danes were ioyned together with great violence. And although the Danes had wonne the hill, and the christian men were left in the valley: yet by the grace of God, and manhood of themselves, the christian men recovered the hil of the Danes, Osrike slaine. and slue their Duke or king called Osricke, and fine of their Dukes, with many of their people, and chased the rest vnto the towne of Redyng.

Wherefore the Danes reassembled theyr people, and gathered a newe hoste, so that within, xv. daves, they met at a towne called Basingstoke, and there gaue battaile vnto Basing Stoke. king Etheldred, and had the better. Then the king gathered his people, the which at that fielde were sore scattered, and seperated, and with fresh Souldiours to them accompanied, met the Danes within two Monethes after, at a Towne called Merton, and gaue Merton. vnto them a sharpe battayle, so that many people were slaine on both parties, that is to say, aswell of the Christians, as of the Danes. But in conclusion, the Danes had the honour of the fielde, and the king of Anglis was wounded and faine to sauegarde himselfe by pollecy, because might and strength fayled him.

After these two fieldes thus wonne by the Danes, they obteyned and enjoyed a great circuite of grounde, and destroyed man, woman, and childe, that to them were disobedient. And Churches and Temples they turned to the vse of Stables and other vile occupations. And to this great sorow was yet added another.

Tor where the King hoped well to have recovered his losses by the ayde and helpe of his subjectes, aswell of other partes of the lande, as of hys awne which was the west Saxons, he sent his commissions into Northumberland, into Mercia, and East Anglia: But he had of them small or little comfort, & in effect it was no comfort at all, so that the Countrie of west Saxons was brought into great desolation. For the king was beset with enemies on euery syde, and besydes that, his knightes and Souldiours were tyred, and weried with ouer watching and labour. The number of which aduersities and troubles entring, and deepelye sinking into the kinges minde, with his sore broose and hurt ensuying of the wound taken at the battaile besyde Merton, shortened his dayes, so that he dyed when he had reigned in great vexation and trouble of the Danes. viij. yeres, without issue of his bodie, and was buryed at Winbourne: By reason whereof, the rule of the laude fell vnto his brother Alurede. Some write that he first founded the Cathedrall Churche at Exceter.

ALurede the fourth sonne of Ethelwolphe, and brother to Etheldred reigned ouer the west Saxons. This Alured was borne at wantage, x. Miles from Oxforde then a Towne of the king of the west Saxons, who as some write was, xii. yeres of age before he was set to schole: but for all that, he spent so well his tyme, that he exceeded all his brethren that were long set foorth to schole before him. And by the counsayle of a verteous and well learned Monke named Neotus, and other learned men of that tyme, he founded the Vniuer-The founder of the Vniuersitie sitie of Oxford, and fraunchised the same with many great liberties and privileges. But of Oxford. the historie of that Vniuersitie of Oxforde seemeth to make it to be of a much greater. antiquity, and to referre the beginning thereof vnto certaine Greeke Philosophers that came into this Iland with Brute and the Troyans, and afterwards placed themselves in a place not farre distaunt from Oxforde, called corruptly Crekelad for Grekelade. The which Philosophers being afterwarde allured with the pleasaunt situation of the place ,remoued from thence to the soyle where Oxforde nowe standeth, and there taught the liberall Sciences. treme ruyne by civill warre and alteration of time: Alfred (say some) otherwise called Alurede as a seconde founder restored againe vnto the auncient state, who besides many other godly actes done for the encrease and maintenance of good learning, founded there a College, named the Myckle Vniuersitie Hall, nowe called the Vniuersitie Colledge: and in the same ordeyned a Gouernour by the name of a Master and a societie of. lxxviij. felowes, wherof there were. xxvj. Diuines. xxvj. Philosophers. xxvj. Grammarians, to the mainteyning and sustenance of the which number, he appointed a competent verely reuenew to be payde out of the Kings Cofers, by his heires and successours for euer, the which payment did still continue, as the monuments and auncient wrytings of the sayde College doe testifie, vntill the comming of Wylliam the Conquerour, who was the first that vpon displeasure concevued against the students and scholers there, with-

Also he translated manye lawes, and namely the lawe of Mertia, and other out of the Britishe speeche into the Saxon tongue. He was also verye coming and skiifull in building and making of Plottes, and excellent in hunting. He was of goodly stature and the best beloued of his father of all his other children. In his youth he was somewhat given to the pleasure of the fleshe, which hindered him from many a verteous purpose, for the repressing whereof, he evening and morning and oftentimes in the night season woulde resort vnto Churches and there devoutly praye a long season, and at the last he fell into an extreme sicknesse called Ficus. For it is sayde that he desired of God that his fleshe might be chastised with suche a sicknesse, whereby he might serve God the better, and yet not to be vnapt to worldly businesse. And when he was cured of the aforesayde sicknesse, then he fell into another more grieuous than that, the which continued with him from the xx. yere of his age, till he was, xlv. But yet notwithstanding he wedded a noble woman named Ethelwyda, by whome he had two sonnes, Edward surnamed the Elder, and Egelward, and three-daughters: Elfleda that after was Lady of Mertia, Ethelgotha which was made a Nonne, and the third was called Elfrida. And he caused all his children as well daughters as other to be brought vp in science and learning, and for that purpose reteyned the learned man Asserius and Meneuia and other.

Nowe after this Alured was admitted king, he considering the great daunger that his lande was in, gathered vnto hym his Lordes, and those whom he coulde not winne without strife, he wanne by strength and power: So that shortly, he assembled a great hoste, and in the seconde Moneth that he was made king, he met with the Danes on Wylton hil on the South part of Wilve Bourne, and there gave vuto them a great battaile, but not without great daunger and losse of men on both partyes. Fabian.

Mathew of Westmynster, Author of the flowres of stories, sayth that the victory fell vnto the Danes, because Alureds army was much fewer in number than the other were: For the force of the nobles and people of the west Saxons was then sore minished and abated, by reason of, ix, battailes that had bene foughten against the sayde Danes the yere past on the Southside of Thames, beside divers roades and skirmishes made by their horsemen. After the which victorie, the Danes returned to London and wintered there, and thether came also vnto them, Buthredus king of Middle England, and friendly compounded with them for mony and tooke a truce.

Then he renued his people, and in sundric places fought with the Danes in the first yere sixe tymes: By meane whereof his people were so sore minished and weakened, that he was forced to take peace with his enimies, vpon condicion that they should avoyde the Countries and Prouinces that he had dominion of.

¶ Vpan which agreement firmelye concluded, the Danes for a tyme voyded these Countries, and drewe towards London, and rested them about that coast the greatest parte of the vere following: and from thence to Lyndsey in robbing and spoyling the Townes and Villages as they went, and holding the common people in seruitude and bondage, and so continued the space of two yeres and more. But before the thirde yere was ended, they went vnto Repindon, and there put downe or slue Burdredus then king of Mertia, and they delywered the kingdome vnto a servant of his named Colwolphus, vpon condition Colwolph. that he should kepe it to their vse. And then they besieged a towne thereby called Hambourgh, and assaulted it right sharply. After the which assault the inhabitaunts of that Towne of Hambourgh fled vnto Winchester. Fabian. But this storie in all pointes agreeth nevther with Huntyngdon, nor the Aucthor of the Flowres of stories and other auncient Wryters.

Then the king made againe peace with the Danes, as he had done oftentymes before, and in trust thereof he roade with the fewer people, whereof the Danes having knowledge, layde bushementes for him, and set so nere him, that they slue a great part of his companie, in an euening as he rode towarde Winchester. But Polodore wryteth, that this was done in a Manour of the kinges not farre from London, whether the kinge came at that tyme to recreate himselfe with hunting.

¶ And for this treason, Alured was sore amoued against them, and in as secrete maner as he might, he assembled a chosen companie of knightes, and Souldiours, and as Guydo sayth, fell vpon them sodeynlye and distressed a great number of them, and left them not The Danes distil he had chased them vnto Chester, or as some say to Exceter, and there kept the Danes so short, that he constreyned them to gene to him pledges to kepe the peace, and to dwell no lenger, there then they could prouide shipping to sayle into Denmarke.

After the which agreement, the king returned to Mertia, or middle England. And for that he heard that Colwolphus was dead, to whome the Danes had taken that Lordship to keepe, he therefore seased that Kingdome and joyned it to his awne. By reason whereof the kingdome of Mertia surceased, which had continued from their first king named Penda vntill y time.

¶ And in the fift yere of the reigne of Alured, the Danes (as affirmeth Polichronicon) sayled from Werham toward Excetor, in the which journey they lost. C. x. of theyr small shippes by a tempest on the Sea: But some of them remayned and occupyed the kinges towne of Chipnam, and the countrey thereabout, and chased the Anglis and put them to flight, or made them as subjectes vnto them. And so sore their power encreased, that the Anglis lost and decayed dayly and they preuayled the more a great deale, by reason of the landing of a Prince of the Danes, called Gytrus, which was named king of Den-Gytrus. marke.

¶ King Alured beyng thus ouercome with a multitude of enemies, did lead an uncerteyne, troublesome and vnquiet lyfe, and having very fewe folkes about him would walke about in the Wood Countrye of Sommersetshire, and had skant to line withall, but lyned A poore lyfe of of suche as he and his people could get by hunting and fishing.

How he it, at the length he was well comforted, and shewed him selfe more at large. so that dayly resorted to him men of Wikshire, Somersetshire, and Hampshire, vntill that he was well and strongly furnished. Then as sayth a wryter called William of Malmesburye de Regibus, the king put himselfe in a great ieoperdie: for he put on him the garment A straunge enof a Minstrell, and with his Instrument of Musicke he entered the tentes and Paula terprice of a lions of the Danes, and in shewing to them his pastime, with leastes and songes, he espied all their slouth and idlenesse, and also heard much of their counsayle, and after returned againe vnto his company, and tolde to them all the maner of the Danes.

Then the king with a chosen companie fell vpon them by night, and distressed, and slue of them a great multitude, & chased them from that coast. And when he had thus chased the Danes, by counsayle of his Knightes, he buylded there a Tower, and named Edelyngit Edeling, that is to say, a Tower of noble men: Out of the which Tower he and his souldiours made many assaultes vpon their enemies and did to them much griefe and domage, and at the last clerely advoyded the Countrie of them betwene that and Selwoodes. This Edeling standeth in a greene Maresse or Moore, so that men can not come at other wilde beastes, and foule, & fish great plenty.

Thus king Alured dayly pursued his enemies, by the helpe of God and his Subjectes. who heering of his victories and manfull deedes, drewe to him continually out of all Coastes: By whose power & strength he helde the Danes so short, that he wanne from them Winchester, and many other good Townes, and compelled them at the last to sue for peace, the which was concluded vpon certeyne conditions, whereof one and the Princiwith the Danes. pall was, that theyr king named as before is sayde, Gytrus, shoulde be Christened, and a certeyne of his Dukes with him. And for that the king would have the Danes banished out of the West partes of Englande, he graunted to him East Anglia, to abide and dwell in.

The Danes christened.

Athelstane.

¶ Then this Prince of Danes, according to the couenauntes, was christened at Winchester, (or as Mathew of Westminster sayth, at a place called Alre, not farre from Edeling aforesayde) and xxx. of the greatest of his Dukes with him. And to the Danish Prince, king Alurede was Godfather at the Font stone, & named him Athelstane. And after he had a season feasted the sayd Danes, he according to his promes gaue vnto their king the Countrie of East Anglia, which then conteyned, Norffolke and Suffolke, and a part of Cambridgeshire. And also, as sayth Polichronicon, he graunted to the Danes that where christened, the Countrey of Northumberlande. And the other that would not be christened departed the land, and sayled into France, where they rested them with their cosyns and kinsmen, and at those dayes they wasted and spoyled the Country of Fraunce in most despitefull maner.

When this Danishe king Athelstane, had the possession of the Countries aboue mencioned, then were all such Anglis, as inhabited there under his obedience. And albeit that he helde the sayde Prouynce as in fee of the king, and promised to dwell there as his liege man, yet that promise notwithstanding, he continued lyke a Tyraunt, by the terme of. xj. yeres full, and in the. xij. yere he dyed.

About the. xv. yere of the reigne of Alured, the Danes which before as ye haue heard, sayled into Fraunce, returned nowe againe into England, and landed in Kent, and at the last came to Rochester, and besieged that Citie, and lay there so long, that they builded a Tower of Tymber, and not of Stone, against the gates of the Citie. But by the strength of the Citezens that tower was destroyed, and the Citie defended vntill king Alured reskewed them. The which had made such purueyaunce for the distressing of them by water, and land, that they were so nere trapped, that for feare they left their Horses behinde them, and fled to their Shippes by night. But when the king was thereof ware, he sent after them, and tooke. xvj. of their Shippes, and slue many of the sayde Danes. After this journey the king returned to London and repayred certeyn places of the same, which the Danes had nurt & febled.

¶ And in the, xxj. yere of the reigne of this king, the Danes landed in foure places of Athelstanedead, this Realme, that is to say, in the East England, & the North, and in the West in two places. But by reason the king before their landing had warning of the death of Athelstone the Danishe king of East England, and of other complaintes of the Danes, he therefore went thether himselfe, and in the tyme of his there beyng, the aforesayd newes came to him.

¶ And so soone as heard thereof, and that some of the Danes were landed in that coast, and knewe well that the further that they drewe into those partes, the more they shoulde be ayded and strengthened: he therfore sent messengers in all hast vnto Etheldred Erle or Duke of Mertia and the borderers thereabout, to make resistaunce against the Danes which landed in the west. And that done, the king sped him towarde his enemies and set on them so egerly and sharpely, that in the ende he droue them out of East Anglia. And then they landed in Kent, whether also the king and his people followed, and likewise draue them from thence. Howbeit, of anye speciall fight or battaile, authours make no mention.

mention. After this againe the Danes tooke shipping and sayled into Northwales, and there robbed and spoyled the Britons, and from thence returned by Sea into Est England, and there rested them, for so much as the king was then gone westwarde. In this meane tyme, the aforesayd Danes had wonne the Towne of Chester, but the Countries adjoining therevuto, came so sore and so thicke upon them, that the Danes were compelled to keepe them within the sayde Towne or Citie, and to defende themselves therein as well as they coulde. But their holding and keeping of that Towne continued so long, that they were compelled to eate their Horsses for hunger. And at the last by apointment they gaue ouer the Towne, and went thence to Northumberland.

And in the while that the king with his hoste sped him thetherward, they leaving their strong holdes & Castels garnished with men and victuall, tooke againe shipping, and fet their course in such wise that they landed in Sussex, and so came to the Towne of Lewes, and from thence toward London and they builded a Tower or Castell nere vnto the Ryuer of Lewes. But the Londoners hearing of their doings, made out a certaine Londiners. number of men of armes, who having the ayde of the Countrie, put the Danes from that Tower, and afterward did beate it downe to the grounde.

¶ And shortly after, the king came downe thether, and for that he thought that the sayde Ryuer would be a meane to bring enemies eftsones into that Countrie, therefore he commaunded the streame to be deuyded into dyners streames, so that by reason thereof, where a Ship might have sayled in tyme passed, then a little Boate might scantly rowe. And now by reason of the presence of the king, the Danes were enforced to flie and to auoyde that Countrie, and from thence tooke againe their way toward Wales, and kept along the Ryuer of Seuerne, and vpon the border thereof they builded them a Castell nere vnto Wales, and so rested them there for a time. And three yeres after this land was vexed with three maner of plagues, the one was warre with the Danes, the other was Three great death and pestilence of men, and the thirde Moreyn of Cattell. The which troubles pestilence mo-& aduersities notwithstanding, the king honourably and valiauntly resisted his enimies, reyn of Cattolic and gaue God hartye thankes whatseouer came, and susteyned it with great humilitie &

This man was not so well learned as was his father, but in honour, fame, and martiall prowes, he was nothing inferiour. Howbeit, Wylliam of Mal-This was Edmesbury in the. xiij. Chapter and second booke of the story of Kinges, affirmeth that he was ward the Marexcelently learned, and following the diligence of his father king Alphrede, caused his base tire sonne called Ethelstane, who afterwards succeded him, to be well instructed in the Latyn tongue. He was also very profitable to the common weale in building and repayring many VOL. I.

Edredus. Edwynus.

Alunda. Algina.

Charles the simple king of west France.

Castels, Townes, and Cities, which were rased and broken by the Danes, he adjoyned to his Lordship all this lande, sauing only Northumberland, which was possessed of the Ethelstanesonne Danes. By his first wyfe he had a sonne named Ethelstane the which was king after him. of king Edward. But the Authour of the flowers of Histories sayth, that he begat Ethelstane of a Concubine named Egwine. By his second wyfe he had two sonnes, Edredus, and Edwynus, and. vij. daughters. And of the thirde wife, he receyued two sonnes, Edmond, and Edred, and two daughters, Edburga, and Edgina.

The first of these three wyues was called Edwyna, the second Edgina, and the thirde Ethleswida. Of the aforenamed seuen daughters, which he had by his second wife, one named Alunda, was marved to the first Otto the Emperor, and another named Algina, was maried to Charles the Simple, king of west France, & the yongest of his daughters as sayth Reynulph, he wedded vnto Lewes king of Guyan, but hereof speaketh nothing the Frenche Chronicle. He set his sonnes to schoole, and his daughters to wooll worke.

¶ But because there is diversitie among writers touching the names of his wives and children, and also of the number of them, he that findeth fault with the Author whom I folow, may read Mathew of Westminster in the lyfe of Edward the sonne of Alphred, and Reynulph in his sixt booke, and fourth Chapter, and there he shall see howe, and wherein they disagree, and so try out what is most probable and lykely to be true: But, yet that the reader may have some present tryall hereof, I will shewe what the Aucthour called Mathew of Westminster, which compiled his story at the commaundement of Richard the seconde, wryteth hereof, whose wordes are these.

I King Edward sayth he, of his first wife named Egwina, begat his eldest or first borne sonne Ethelstane: of his wife Edgina he begat Edredus, Edwinus, and sixe daughters, of the which he maried one vnto the Emperor Otho, another to Charles, king of the west French men, & the third vnto Schitericus, Duke of Northumberland. Of his thirde wife named Ethelwitha, he begat Edmond and Eldred, which reigned both after Ethelstane, He begat also by the sayd thirde wife, two daughters, that is to say Edburga, which was professed a Nonne, and lyeth buried at Winchester, and Edgina the fayre, which marved with Lewes king of Aquitane. But Polidore agreeth not herewith, but sayth much other-

Clito Ethelwoldus.

Winhorne beside Bathe.

In the fift yere of his reigne, Clito Ethelwoldus a neere kinsman of his (for he was Cosyn germaine vnto him on the fathers syde, but as Polidore sayth his brother) rebelled against him, and occupied the towne of Winborne besydes Bathe, and tooke thence by force a Nonne thinking to marry her, and went thence vnto the Danes dwelling in Northumberland, and prouoked them to ryse against king Edwarde. But the king pursued him so sharpely, that he constrayned him to leave that Countrie, and so he sayled into Fraunce, and left the Nonne behynde him, the which the king caused to be restored againe to the house that she was taken from.

The next yere following, the sayd Clito with his companie landed in East England, and gathered to him the Danes of that Countrye, and with theyr ayd destroyed and pilled the Countrie about Crekinford, and Crickland. And then he passed the ryuer of Thames. and spoyled the land vnto Bradenestoke or rather Basingstoke, and so from thence returned againe into East Anglia aforesayde. But where myne Authour hath here Crekynfoord, and Cricklande, Reynulph hath Crecanefoorde otherwise called Kreklade, whome I do rather alowe.

¶ Now the king followed still his enemies, and spoyled their landes which they helde by composition of him from the Ryuer of Owse, to the border of Saint Edmondes lande. commaunding the knightes of his hoste, that none should drag or tary after his armve, for feare least the enemies should snatch them vp. But the Kentish men trusting to much in their awne strength, came not away as the king commaunded: Wherefore the Danes wayt-

ing theyr praye, fell vpon them by bushments, and slue a great number of them, wherewith the king was sore discontented.

I Sone after, both the Armies met, where after long and cruell fight, Clyto with a clito slaine. great number of the Danes were slaine, and the residue constreyned to flie, and to crie and seeke for peace, the which was graunted vnto them vpon certeyne condicions, namely, Peace vpou conthat they shoulde keepe them within the boundes to them limitted, and besydes that to pay dicions. verely a certeine summe of money in way of Tribute. After which peace so stablished with them, the king repayred Cities, Townes, and Castels, that by the sayde Danes were battered and broken.

And in the. viij. yere of his reigne, king Edward repayred the walles and also the Citie Chester reof Chester. To the which were great helpers, Etheldredus Duke of Mertia, and Elsteda payred. his wife, daughter of Alured, as before is shewed, and sister of this king Edwarde. And after the king builded a strong Castle at Hereforde in the edge of Wales. And he en-Hereford Castle. larged so greatly the Walles of Chester, that the Castell which before time was without the wall, is now within, and the sayde Citie of Chester is at thys day much more bewtified and enlarged.

In the. xij. yere of his reigne the Danes repentyng them of theyr couenantes before made, and mynding the breach of the same, assembled an hoste and met with the king in Staffordshire at a place called Toten hall, and soone after at Wodnes field: At which two Totten Hall. places the king slue two kinges, two Earles, and many thousandes of the Danes that then Wodnes field. occupyed the coutrye of Northumberland. And soone after, dyed the noble man Ethel- Etheldredus. dredus, Duke or Earle of Martia or middle England, after whose death, the king forso-duke of Mertia much as he had often proued her wisedome, tooke the rule of that countrie to his wife Elfled ruled

In the xiij. yere of this king, a great nauie of Danes which in the time of Alured were Danes so e vexdriven into fraunce nowe returned againe, and sayled about the west countrye, and landed ed Briteyne. in dyuerse places, and tooke prayes, and went to their Shippes againe. And at one tyme among other, they robbed and spoyled at a place called Irchinfielde, and tooke a Britishe Irchinfield. Bishop, and carved him to their shippes, and finally raunsomed him at. xl. pound. But assoone as king Edward had knowledge of their beyng in that place, he assembled his people and made towardes them by lande, and sent another armie by water to encounter with the Danes Shippes vpon the Sea: whereof the sayd Danes having knowledge, fled to Irelande, and by that meanes both escaped the king by land, and his nauie by Sea.

Then the king for the strengthening of that country made a Castell at the mouth of the water of Auene, and another Castle at Bokingham, and the thirde nere therevuto, that is to Auene water. say, on eyther side of the Ryuer of Owse one. And after this he returned into Northam-Castle, ton shire, and Bedfordshire, and fought there with the Danes of those Countries, and at the length subdued them and their leader or Duke called Turketillus.

¶ In the. xvij. yere of this king, Elfleda Lady of Mertia, gathered together her knightes: And where the Britons or Welshmen brake into the land about Brekenocke, she with her people withstoode them, and among other prisoners and prayes, tooke there the Queene of Welshmen.

¶ And the yere following, King Edward builded or newely reedefyed the Townes of Toccester, and Wigmore, and destroyed the Castell that the Danes had made at Temes Toccester. foord. And the sayde yere the noble Ladye Elfleda wanne the Towne of Darby from the Wigmore, Temesfoord. Danes, where they put her in suche adventure, that foure knightes which were called the Gardians of her body were slaine fast by her.

¶ And in the. xviij. yere of his reigne dyed that noble Princes Elfleda, in the Moneth of Iune, and was buryed in the Monasterve of Saint Peter, which her Lorde and shee before tyme had buylded within the Towne of Gloucester, which Monasterie was after throwne downe by the Danes.

When Elfleda was dead, her daughter named Elswyna helde the Lordship of Mertia

for a season: But for that the king considered it to be a thing ouer chargeable for her gouernement, he therefore discharged her thereof, and ioyned it to his kingdome, but not all without some strife. For dyuerse Townes she kept of the king for a tyme, as Notyngham, Tomworth, Derby, and other, he supposing that the daughter would have defended them, as the mother by her lyfe had done, but at the last they came all to the kinges subiection.

When king Edward had reconciled the aforesayde Townes, he then builded a new Towne, right against the olde Towne of Nottingham, on the South syde of the Ryuer of Trent, and made a Bridge ouer the sayd Riuer betwene the sayde Townes. And as sayth Reynulph, the yere folowing in the sayd Citie or Towne of Nottingham, there were two kinges, that is to say of Scotland and Wales, that yelded themselves vnto king Edward. And sundry Aucthours, as Marian the Scot, William of Malmesbury, Henry of Huntington, and other, doth shew that this king Edward subdued the kings of Scotland, and of Combris, about the. ix. yere of his reigne. And of the sayde Authours it is also witnessed, that about the. xx. yere of the sayde Edwardes reigne, the sayd kinges of Scotlande and Combrys, chose king Edward for their chiefe Lorde and Patrone, which should be aboute the season before expressed.

Then this noble Prince, after all thinges were set in order as aforesayde, he builded on the North parte and in the ende of Mertia, a Citie or Towne, and named it Thilwall, and strengthened it with knightes. And after he repayred the Citie of Manchester, which was sore defaced with the warres of the Danes. After which notable deedes by this puyssant prince finished, with the mariage of his children, and many other thinges which I passe ouer for length, this noble Prince sickened, and dyed when he had victoriously reigned ouer the greatest part of this lande. xxiiij. yeres, and was buried at Faringdon, leauyng after him dyuers sonnes, as is before rehersed, of the which Ethelstane was the eldest.

COnstantine the thirde of that name was ordeyned king of Scottes, and reigned. xl. yeres.

AThelstane, or Adelstane, the sonne of Edward the elder, after the death of his father tooke vpon him the gouernement of this Realme. He was a worthy Prince, valiant, and politique in all his actes and doinges.

¶ In the seconde yere of his reigne, for an vnitie and peace to be had betwene the king and the Danes of Northumberland, he maryed his sister to Sithricus their king, vpon promes that he would be Christened, the which he performed, but shortly after he put away his wyfe, and returned to Paganisme, and finally dyed miserably.

And when he had thus accorded with the Danes of Northumberland, soone after he made subject to him Constantine king of Scottes, and the whole Realme of Scotland at Broningfielde, where also he discomfitted the Danes, & slue Malcolme Deputie in that behalfe to the king of Scots, with. xx. thousand Scottes, in the which battayle the Scottes confesse to have lost more people than were remembred in any age before. And this Athelstane followed this his good lucke throughout all Scotland, and wholly subdued it, and beyng in possession of it, gave land there liyng in Annandale by his dede, the Copie wherof followeth. I King Athelstane, geves vnto Paulan, Oddam and Roddam, as good and as fayre, as ever they mine were, and thereto witnesse Mawde my wife. By which course wordes, not onely appereth the plaine simplicitie of mennes doyngs in those dayes, but also prove fullye that he was then seazed of the whole Realme of Scotland.

¶ And after this conquest, the sayde Constantine so humbled himselfe vnto the King, that he restored him to his former dignitie. Wherefore, the savde Constantine sayde in The right hothe prayse of a king, that it was more honour to make a king than to be a king.

It is also witnessed by Reynulph, and other, that this Athelstane, or Adelstane, Otho Emperous should marry one of his sisters named Edith vnto Otho the first of that name Emperour of Almaine, and (as some wryte) received from him many precious Iewelles: But of this speaketh nothing the Chronicles of the Romaynes. Howbeit, it is shewed there, that the aforesayde Otho had a wyfe named Alunda, which as before is sayde in the story of King Edward the elder, might be the daughter of the sayd Edward, & of Edgina his second wife, and sister vnto this king Athelstane. But Vincencius sayth, that Henry Duke of Saxony, which was father vnto the first Otho, sent vnto Athelstane, requiring of him his sister to marry vnto his sonne Otto: By which reason it maye be truely sayde that

Of the aforesayd Iewels sent by Otto, one was a precious vessell of stone called Ony- Onychytes a chites, which was of such cleerenesse and also so finely and artificially wrought, that it of great value. appered to mans sight that grene corne had growne within it, and moued and waved as corne doth standing in the field: Moreover in it appered Vynes burging and bearing of fruite, and men also to fight, mouing and stirring. He also received the great Constantines swoord, wherein was grauen in great letters of Golde the name of the owner: and the hiltes thereof were couered with great plates of Golde, and one of the Nayles was fastened to the Crosse of the sayde sword, that crucified and nayled Christ to the Crosse. Fatian. But Reynulph sayth otherwise. He also received the Speare of Charles the great, which after the opinion of some Wryters, was the Speare wherewith Longeus opened Christes side. And the Baner of Saint Morice, with a part of the holye Crosse, and a parte of the Crowne of Thorne that our Saujour Christ was crowned with. Of the which Iewels, king Ethelstane gaue part vnto S. Swithines of Winchester, and some Athelstane ye he gaue vnto the Abbey of Malmesbury. And some write that this Athelstane was the king of Briteya. first annointed king at his coronation. Fabian.

¶ Now it followeth in the Historie, how Constantyne king of Scottes, for all his humilitie, and for all the princely fauour that he had shewed vnto him by king Athelstane, forgetting altogither both fayth and loyaltie, as the maner and custome of the Scottes is, revolted and brake covenaunt with the king. Wherefore king Athelstane assembled his knights and power, and made towarde Scotlande, and in his wave he turned to the Towne named Saint Iohns of Beuerley and offered there his knyfe vpon the Altare saiyng, that if he returned with victorie, he woulde redeeme his knyfe with a noble price, and that being done, he marched forward on his journey, and in conclusion, discomfited the Scottes, and brought them againe into due subjectio. And after according to the promise before made, he returned to Yorke, and so to Beuerley, where he redeemed his knife worthily as before he had promised by endowment and great priuileges graunted vnto that towne.

¶ And Reynulph in the vj. Booke, and vj. Chapter, sayeth that king Athelstane after he had subdued the Scottes being then with his Lordes and familiers, neere vnto the Castle of Dunbarre, prayed to God that in that Countrie he might leave some remembrance or token, that those that were then livyng, and also such as should come after, might know that the Scots by right should be subjects to Englishmen. And forthwith he toke Ye may beleue his sword in hande and smote vpon a great stone standing necre vnto the sayde Castel, this if ye will. with which stroke the stone did cleaue an Elle in length, which in the tyme of Edward the third was there to be seene, as Fabian sayeth.

Te have heard before, that King Athelstane, after the death of Sithericus king of Northumberland, seased that lande or Prouynce into his awne hande, and put out his sonne: which after allyed himselfe with Constantine king of the Scottes and maryed his daughter. By whose prouocation and stirring, he gathered a company of Danes, Scottes, and other, and entered the mouth of Humber with a strong Nauve. Whereof king Athelstane when he had knowledge, did in all goodly haste prepare his armie, and at length met with him and his people, at a place called Brimford, where Athelstane obteyned a great and notable victorie. For after the king by the helpe of God had defended the subiile assault made upon him by night by his enemies, he in the morning by the helpe of his brother Edmond, and Oddo the Archbishop chased his sayd enemies, and slue there Constantine king of Scottes, and five petye, or vnder kinges, and. xij. Dukes. with the greatest part of all the straungers that were there gathered at that time: The which battaile should be done by the meaning of the sayd Reynulph, about § last yere of his reigne.

It is also written of dynerse Aucthours, that the king after this victorye, subdued also the North Briteynes that dwelled at Hereford, and there about, and compelled them to pay him yerely three hundred pound of Siluer. xxv.C. head of Neate, and. xx. pound in Golde. But Guido sayth, that the king caused at Hereford Citie, to come before him all the rulers of the North Briteyn, and there had with them such communication, that he forced them to graunt vnto him as a yerely tribute. xx. pound of Golde, three hundred pound of Siluer, and. xxv.C. heade of Neate, with Dogges, and Hawkes to a certeyne number. After which victories, he went vnto Exeter, and repayred it and the walles thereof sufficiently.

John Lydgate.

Tribute.

¶ Inon Lidgate a Monke sometyme of Saint Edmondes bury, made a goodly treatise of this King Athelstane: shewing that he was in so great persecution of the Danes, that he was constrayned to call at Winchester a great counsayle of his Lordes. Where, after long debating of the matter, and dyuerse Ambassades and messages sent about by the king, and the Danes: It was firmely concluded, that the king should prouide him a Champion to fight with Colybrond or Colbrond, a Gyaunt and Dane, which the Danes had appoynted for theyr Chiefteyne. Wherefore the king in searching through his landes for such a knight, and none could finde, was in great daunger and distresse of heavinesse. And forsomuch as he well perceyued, that mannes power fayled, he by the aduice of his Lordes Spirituall, and Temporall, fell to fasting and prayer, and continued therein by a certeyne of tyme wyth perfect and charitable deuotion.

In the tyme of which sayd abstinence, a vision was shewed vnto Athelstane, comforting him, and also commaunding him, that earely upon the next morning, he should stande at the North gate of the Citie of Winchester, and there he should finde amongest the number of the poore people, a man clothed in Palmers wede whome he should choose for his Champion.

After which vision thus to him shewed, he did according, and founde a man of goodly stature, & somedeale striken in age, and apparelled as he was tolde in the vision. Wherof the king first gaue vnto God his heartie thankes, and after made request to this man, that he would take vpon him this Combate for the defence of the lande: And the man layd for himselfe many causes and considerations, as well for his age as otherwise, that he ought to be hold excused to take vpon him such an enterprice. Howbeit, after much discoursing at the last he graunted the king to fulfill his request and commaunde-

And at the day assigned and appoynted, he met in the fielde with the aforenamed Gyant, named Colbrond without the Gate of the Citie in a Medowe, called Hide Mede, where betweene them two was foughten a long and cruell fight, so that the king was in great feare of his Champion. But finally by the helpe of God, the man wonne the honour of that fight, and slue that Gyant that was of exceding stature, & also of great and passing strength.

Which victorie by the man thus obteyned, with the helpe and fauour of God: the king then with his Baronny fet the Man into the Citie of Winchester with solemone Procession, & conveyed him vnto the Cathedrall Church of the same, where he thanked Culbrond a Giant which was a Dane.

This man was Guy of Warwike.

Hide Mede beside Winchester. Colbrand the Giaunt slain by Guy of Warwike

God with great deuotion, and offered there the Axe with the which he had slaine the Guy of Wat-Danes Champion. After which oblation with due reuerence, and other observaunces by him and other finished: The king caused him to be conveyed vnto his Court, where he taryed that night with much entreatye. And in the morning earely he made such meanes that he would needes depart, and that in the same apparell that he came thether. When the king was advertised that this man would so hastely depart, whome he entended to haue holden with him in his Court, and to haue endowed him with riche possessions: He commaunded him to be brought vnto his presence.

And when he sawe that he could not cause him to tary, he requyred him to shew vnto him his name: wherof also he besought the king to pardon him. Wherfore the king considering his hasty departing, with many other thinges in him to be considered. was then the more desyrous to have of him some knowledge. And therfore the king was earnest in his desyre and request, and would have no nay, but that he should declare his name: Then the man perceiving that without the kinges displeasure he could not depart without disclosing of his name, sayde, he might not discouer his name within the walles

¶ Wherfore, the king graunted to go with him vntill he were in the brode fieldes: Vpon which graunt thus made, the king commaunded dyuerse great giftes to be to him presented, which all he vtterly refused. Shortly to conclude, the king with a certeyne of his Lordes conveyed this sayde man vnto the Townes ende: And when he was thether come. he there required him of the performance of his promes. And then the man kneling on his knee, besought the king of his especiall grace, that he woulde put apart his Lordes and other, so that he might shewe his name vnto him onely.

Which beyng done, he besought him that he would kepe his name secret for the space of. xxiiij. houres: the which the king graunted vnto him, and then he sayd, that he was his naturall liege man, and subject, and that his name was Guy of Warwike. Of Guy of Warwhich tidynges the king was very ioyous, and offered him then of newe, many riche rewardes and giftes: But all was in vaine, for he would receyue nothing, so that the king and he lastly departed with weping even. And after the sayd Guy of Warwicke purchased in a Wildernesse a lodging in an Hermitage, where, by the terme of two yeres and more, he dwelled and kept an hard life. And he heering that Dame Felice his awne wife fed dayly, xiij, poore men for Christes sake, he went thether sondry tymes, and fet there his Almose, his sayde wife then living at the Castell of Warwike, not knowing of any man what he was, vntill at the last, he was visited with sore sicknesse, and that he knewe well he should dye: Wherefore he sent his wedding ring vnto his wife, requyring her in all the haste to come and speake with him, which shee obeyed in humble wise, and sped her vnto the sayde Hermitage with all womanly diligence, and founde him dead at her Guy of Warcomming, whome shee besprent with many a salt teare. And as shee was enformed of wike dead. the Messenger, at the tyme when he dyed, he determined to be buryed in the same place. and even there she did bury him. And moreover, as sayth the aforesayde Aucthour, he admonished his sayd wyfe, by the sayd messenger, that she should prouide, for she should die within. xv. dayes next after: which shee also obeyed, and made such provision that shee was buried in the same place. All which matter the sayd Ihon Lydgate affirmeth, that he tooke out of a certeine booke of Giraldus Cambrensis, otherwise called Silvester Giraldus, which rote many thinges of the Princes of Englande, as Reynulph also and others doe witnesse.

All which sayd treatise is shewed at length in meter of. viij. staues, by the diligent labour of the sayde Ihon Lidgate, the which I have here omitted for breuitie sake. This Athelstane by the recorde of sundrie wryters, brought againe this land into one Monarchy, and reigned as king thereof. xvj. yeres, and was buried at the Monastery of Malmesbury, leauying after him no childe, & therefore the rule of this land fell vnto Edmond his brother.

EDmond the brother of Athelstane and sonne of Edwarde the Elder, reigned next af ter his brother.

Danes rebelled.

Reignald a Captaine of the Danes.

In the first yere of his reigne, the Danes of Northumberlande rebelled against him: And for to make their partie the stronger, they sent for a Prince of the Danes named Aulasse, then being in Irelande, the which brought with him another prince or ruler of § Danes named Reignald, with a great hoste of Danes and other straung Nations, and entered the foresayd Countrie, and warred vpon the next borders, in wasting and spoiling the inhabitaunts of the same.

¶ When king Edmond had knowledge hereof, anone he assembled hys people, and sped him towarde the Countrie, and at the last fought with the sayde two Princes of the Danes, and chased them from Towne to Towne, vntill he forced them with all their company of straunge Nations to forsake vtterly that Province, and further he did beate downe the Countrie of Comberlande, that had much fauoured and ayded the sayde enimies against him, and tooke therein great prayes, and deuyded the spoyle amongst his knights. And that done, eyther for the good service that Malcolyne king of Scotlande had in his voyage done vnto the king, or for the truth & allegeance that he in tyme following should beare Malcolyne king vnto him, or for both, the king gaue there to the sayde Malcolyn the Countrie of Comberland, and seased the residue of the Lordship of Northumberlande, and joyned it vnto his awne kingdome. But yet the Danes returned againe in the time of Edred the next king, as after shall be shewed, so that as yet the ende of his kingdome, is not to be accompted. But Polidore alloweth not them that ascribe the vanquishing of the Northumbers vnto this Edmond, affirming that to have beene Athelstanes deede, who also subdued the Scottes: and so as it seemeth is of opinion that the kingdome of the Northumbers, ended in the sayde Athelstanes tyme.

Elgina the wife of king Ed-geuen vuto him the Countrie of

uice done to King Edmond, Comberland.

¶ This king Edmond had a noble woman to his wyfe named Elgina, of whome he re-ceyued two sonnes, named Edwyn and Edgar.

This king Edmond, as sayeth Henry Archdeacon of Huntingdon, had warre oftentymes with the Danes, who held many good Townes in middle England, as Lyncoln, Nottyngham, Darby, Stafford, and Leyceter, the which by his knightly manhood, he wanne from them, and he also amended many things within the Realme that had beene long time out of frame, by meane of the Danes: and as Polydore sayth, established many good lawes very profitable for the common wealth. Of the ende and death of this Edmond, there are divers opinions, for Marianus the Scot sayeth, that while this king Edmond endequoured himselfe to saue his Sewer from his enemy, that would have slain him in a towne or place called Pulkre Church, the king in parting of the Fray, was wounded to death, and dyed shortly after.

A straunge tale of the death of

¶ But Wylliam of Malmesbury de Regibus sayth, that the king being at a Feast at the foresayde Towne or place, vpon the day of Saint Augustine, espyed a Felon, sitting in the Hall named Leof, which he before tyme for his Felony had exiled, and therefore he lept ouer the table and plucked that theefe by the heare of the head to the ground. In which doing the sayde Felon, with a knife wounded the king to death, and also with the same knife wounded many other of the kings seruaunts, and at length was himselfe all to hewen in peeces. Fabian. If this be true, it should seeme that kings at those dayes were neyther so honourably garded nor accompanyed, not yet kept so princely estate, as they-now vse.

ly, but all wryters agree that he dyed when he had reigned. vj. yeres and more, and was buried at Glascenbury, the which before he had sumpteously repayred, and left after him two yong sonnes, as before is remembred Edwyn, and Edgar, but for that they were to yong to rule the land, therefore the rule thereof was committed to Edredus their Vncle, and brother to their father.

Edwyn. Edgar.

MAlcolme

DANES

MAcolme the first and the sonne of Constantine reigned King of Scottes xv. yeres, and at the last was slaine by conspiracy of certaine Traytors.

ELdred or Edred the brother of Edmond and sonne of Edward the elder, was made 946 king, for y the children of king Edmond were thought to yong to gouerne.

This Eldred was annointed king of Oddo or Otho Archbishop of Cautorburie, in the Towne of Kingstone vpon Tamys, and soone after, he warred vpon the Danes that then Rebelio of the were entered into Northumberland (or after some writers, that then were there dwelling Danes. vnder tribute of the king) subdued before of Edmond his brother, and bet them downe, and caused them to holde and obey vnto their former couenaunts. And the Scottes then also began to varie, but he brought them vnto due obedience.

After a certaine terme, the Danes of Northumberlande, which euer continued full of guyle and doublenesse, not being content to holde and keepe the couenaunts before made and promised vnto Edred the king, called vnto them their olde accessaryes and Yorke taken by helpers, and bereued from the kings subjects the Citie of Yorke and other strong Townes ye Danes. and Castels, to the great hurte and anoyance of the Countrie, and vtter displeasure of the king.

Wherefore, he being therof advertised, in goodly and convenient haste, assembled his people, and sped him thether, and destroyed much of the land. And in that furie brent the Abbay of Rypon, which the Danes kept for a Fortresse and strength, and wanne from Rypon Abbey . them muche of their strengthes which they before had wonne, and brought them again vnder his subjection.

When this king Edred had thus sped his journey and was returning into England, Danes having nothing suspecting the sayde Danes, a company of them by the exciting of Hircus a king to their Capior prince of the Danes, then followed the kings hoste, and before he came at Yorke set taine one named Hircus did vpon the kings rereward, and destroyed and slue many a man. For the which doing the again rebell. king was sore amooued, and turned his people againe, entending to have destroyed the Countrie vtterly, Wherof the Danes beyng ware, so lowly meked themselues vnto him, and presented vnto him such giftes, that the king refrayned of that great yre that he purposed to them. But amongest other Articles that he bound them vnto, one was, that they should banish and vtterly refuse their foresaid Duke or king called Hercus: which thing with dyuers and Dames that inhamany other they graunted and firmely bound themselves to keepe, as well by hostages ta-bird work ken, as by other surety, and the king returned into England, and ioyned this kingdome to against our come his other. So that here is reconed the ende of this kingdome, which endured iiij. C. ix. yeres. government for

T Polidore sayth, that when he had quieted the Realme, and vanquished his enemies, he became a great benefactor vnto religious houses, but specially vnto the Abbev of Abindon, who thinking to please God therby, & to gratefy Ethelnoldus then Abbot there accompted for a very holy man, and at the request of his mother Edgina, repayred the same Abbey, first fouded by king Iua, as before is said, and at that season sore decaied, and in maner destroyed.

EDwyn the eldest sonne of Edmond, brother of Athelstane, tooke on him the gouernement of this Realme.

This Edwyn was crowned at Kingstone beside London of the Archebishop of Can-Kingstone or torbury: The which selfe daye of his Coronacion, brake sodeynly from his Lordes, and kings towner. entered into a secrete Chamber, and there occupyed himselfe sinfully, and rauished another mannes wife, beyng his nere kinswoman, whose husband as one Aucthour doth testifie, the king had caused to be slaine before, for that he would have the vnlawfull vse of her bewtie, and not considering the allyaunce of affinite & kyndred betwene them. Some VOL. I. write write that he committed the sayd Act in maner openly lyke a brute Beast, and Guydo sayth that Edwyn contrary to the lawes of the Churche, helde a woman as his Concubine. Wherefore Dunstone who a little before was was made Abbot of Clastonbury, first monished him of his fault, and afterwardes accused him vnto Oddo Archebishop of Canterbury. by whose power the kinge was caused to refuse and forsake the company of the woman. For the which Edwyn bare great malice vnto Dunstone, and at length by his extort power, he banyshed him the lande, and forced him for a season to kepe himselfe in Flaunders. And for the malice that he bare towarde him, he did much displeasure to all the Monkes of England, by banishment, and otherwise. Insomuch, that at Malmesbury he put out the Monkes, and set in secular priestes in their steede. Fabian.

¶ But Mathew of Westminster wryteth, that Edwyn had to his Paramoure, the daughter of a noble woman of the Realme, and the mother also at his commaundement. And that on the day of his Coronation, he arose sodeynly from the Table, as he was feasting with his Lordes and Nobles, and departed vnto his preuy Chamber, where those two gentlewomen were, to the entent he might dally with them, and satisfie the sensuall appetite and beastlye pleasure of the body. The which fact of his, sore displeased all his sayde Nobles: and therefore they sent incontinent Dunstone vnto him, to perswade with him to returne againe, and to be mery with them at the table, who as he was by them commaunded, taking his kynsman Bishop Cynesius with him, entered into the kings Chamber where they found the Crowne of the Realme, all of glystering Golde very riche and bewtifull, plucked off his head and hurled after a retchelesse sorte on the ground a prety way from him: And the king himselfe tumbling in the dust betwixt the mother and the daughter, vnto whom the sayd Dunstone sayd on this wyse. liege Lord, your Princes and Nobles have sent vs vnto you, to besech you to returne againe vnto your Hall, where is a meete seate for your Royall person and estate, and there to solace your selfe, and to make mery with them, and then blamed the lewdenesse and folly of the Women: and perceyaing the King so vnwilling to aryse, he caught him by the hande, and so brought him backe againe with him vnto the feast Royall, storming and chafing like a mad man. After this one of the Harlotets called Algina rose vp in a great chafe and fume saiying, how he was a rashe and a sawcie Messenger, that thus would presume to enter into the kinges preuie Chamber, not beyng called. And so from thence foorth, the same woman neuer ceased to persecute Dunstone, till she had brought him into the kinges deadly hatered, and highe displeasure: And it followeth in the same Writer, howe by the consent of King Edwyn after she had spoyled his Abbey of all his mouaables, shee caused him at length to be banished out of the Realme by the kinges commaundement. After the which banishment, he was faine to flie into Fraunce for his saufegard, during the tyme of his sayde exile. And howe there were certeyn tormentors sent beyond the Seas to have put out his eyes, if they could have met with hym.

¶ It is read of him, that he tooke such precious Jewels as Athelstane had receyued before from Otho the Emperour, geuen vnto Winchester and Malmesbury, and gaue them vnto alyauntes and straungers. And thus was he not onely vnkinde to Monkes, but also vsed such tyrannie, and other vnlawfull meanes to his subjectes, that lastly they abhorring his wicked lyfe, and detestable maners, rebelled against him, and specially the inhabitantes of the Countrye of Mertia, or middle Englande, and also the Northumbers and put him clerely from all kingly honour and dignitie, the which deposition greued him so much that he died for sorow, when he had reigned foure yeres, and was buried at winchester, leaving none heyre of his body, and therefore the rule of the land fell vnto Edgar his yonger

EDgar, the seconde sonne of Edmond, and brother of Edwyn the last king, beyng of the Age of. xv. yeres, tooke vpon him the rule of this Realme. In the beginning of his reigne, he called home Dunstone that before was exiled of king Edwyn. Then he made

Dunstone that was Abbot of Glascenbury, Bishop of Worceter, and he ioyned and King Edgar vnited together all the Prouinces and Lordships of England, and made them one Mo-vnited all the prouinces of this narchie, and one Kingdome.

¶ In many places he put away Clerkes and Priestes that lived viciously, or as some kingdome, where before wryte that had wyues, and set there for them Monkes. And as sayth Guydo, Reynulph they were deand other, he buylded and repayred to the number of. xl. houses of Religion, whereof kingdomes: Abyndon, Peterborough, Thorney, Ramsey, & Wilton were percell of them. And at Winchester, he put in Monkes, where before were maryed Priestes.

The cause wherfore (as sayth Fabian) was, for so much as the Priestes were negligent in the deuyne seruice, and set Vicars in their places, while they lived at theyr pleasure in other places, and spent the Patrimonie of the Church after their sensuall will.

¶ Then king Edgar gaue to the Vicars the lande that before longed to the Prebendaryes, trusting thereby that they would do their duetyes: But it was not long after, but that the sayd Vicars were as negligent as the other, wherfore the king advoyded the Priestes and placed there Monkes, though some of his Prelates were not contented therewith.

This Edgar kept such justice and did so sharpe execution vpon Malefactors, that Execution of justice hath neuer before his dayes were vsed lesse felonyes or robberyes then was in his tyme. And worthy comto the entent that he would have the ravenous beastes destroyed throughout his lande, he mendation. caused Ludallus Prince of Wales, to yelde to him yerely by way of Tribute three hundred Wolues. By meane whereof, within foure yeres after, in Englande and Wales myght The destruction skantly be found one Wolfe alyue.

Tolidore here noteth that the Welshmen, which could neuer willingly abyde to be governed of the Englishe Nation, founde the meanes at the length to make themselves a Prince of their awne Nation, as in this kinges tyme they had to theyr Prince and gouernour Ludallus, and long tyme after dyuerse other in dyuerse kinges daves, which were tributaries vnto the kinges of England: But when they first obteyned this benefite of the sayde kinges, the sayde Polidore confesseth that he hath not found in any auncient Chronicle or autentike Wryter.

It is written of sundrie Authours, that Kynadus king of Scottes despised Edgar, for Kynadus king that he was little of stature, whereof king Edgar beyng warned desyred the sayde Kyna- of Scottes. dus to dynner, and made to him good countenance. After which dyner ended, he tooke the sayde Kynadus by the arme, and so with him helde company vntill they came to the Fields: where being dissevered from their servauntes: Edgar drewe from vnder his garment two swordes, and desyred Kynadus to take the choyce of them, and sayde vnto A chalenge him, nowe thou hast good leasure to save thy strength with mine, which before tyme thou made by Edgar hast so much despised: Nowe let vs proue which is more worthy to be subject to other: the Scottishe It is not fitting for a Knight to make great boast at the boorde, and to doe little in the King-

When the Scottish king heard the king thus chalenge him, he remembred well his wordes before spoken, and perceyued that they were disclosed vnto Edgar, whereof being somewhat abashed, he answered so humbly and behaued him selfe so lowly and gently, and gaue ynto the king such pleasaunt wordes, that he forgaue the trespasse.

This Edgar among other of his Politique deedes, vsed in the Somer tyme, to scoure Edgar in Somthe Sea with certaine Shippes of warre, and had a great number alwayes in a readynesse. And his Shipmasters were in wages with him throughout the yere, who euer attended uppon the Shippes, to see that nothing lacked that was necessarie. ¶ And for so much as in his dayes, great multitude of Danes dwelled in dyuers places of England, which used many vices, and specially great drinking, whereof ensued dronkennesse and many other vices, to the euill examples and hurtes of his commons and subiects: He therefore ordeyned certaine Cuppes with pinnes or nayles set in them, and ordeyned and made a law, that whatsoeuer person dranke past the marke at one draught, shoulde forfeyt a certaine payne: wherof the one halfe should fall to the accuser, and dent for the making of penall that other halfe to the ruler of the Borough or Towne that the offence was done in, where the same should be examyned and tryed.

¶ It is tolde of this Edgar by dyuers Authours, that he vpon a season being at Chester. entred the ryuer of Dee, and there sitting in a Boate, tooke the rule of the sterne, and King Edgar had caused. vij. Kinges, which Guydo calleth Reguli, that is small or vnder kings, and commaunded them to rowe him vp and downe the Ryuer, vnto Saint Ihons Church, which lately was an Abbey of black Monkes, and from thence to his awne Palace, in token, that he was Lorde and king of so many Prouynces.

This Noble Edgar had two Wyues: By the first that was called Egelfleda the whyte. he had a sonne that was named Edward, who was after king, and slaine by treason as afterwards shall be shewed. And vpon his second Wyfe Elfrida or as the English Chronicle calleth her Estrild, he begat a sonne named Egelredus or Ethelredus, and after the Englishe Chronicle Eldred, which was king next after Edward the Martir, and of Wilfride, which of some is called a Nonne, he had a daughter named Edith, but shee was base and not in Wedlock. For as Guydo sayeth, this Wilfride, knowing that the king cast to her vulawfull loue, put vpon her the habite of a Nonne, thinking thereby to withdrawe the kinges loue: But that notwithstanding, she was brought to the kings bed. For which deede he was greatly blamed of the Bishop Dunstane, and by him enioyned to doe therefore scuen yeres penance. And the aforenamed Wilfride, after the childe borne, lyued verteously, as sayeth Fabian. Of her daughter Edith, it is read that at lawfull age she was at Wilton shorne a Nonne.

¶ Edgar, thus ruling the lande after the death of his first wyfe Egelfleda, worde was brought to him of the bewtie of a yong Damsell named Elfrida, or Estrild, daughter of Organus Erle of Deuonshire: wherefore he sent a Knight of his Courte named Ethelwold, to espie whether the Mayde were of such bewtie, as shee was reported of, or not, charging him, if shee were so bewtifull, that then he should aske her to wyfe for him.

¶ But this Knight having sight of this Mayden, was so wounded with the darte of blinde Cupide, that he forgate his truth and allegeance, which he did owe to his Master Ethelwold vsed and souereigne, and returned, shewing to the King, that shee was nothing of the bewtie as she was reported to be, but of meane fayrenesse as other women are. Wherfore he besought the king, considering she was her fathers Heyre and a good mariage, that he woulde be so good Lorde vnto him, as to write vnto her father, that he might have her The which the King graunted, and at the last he obteyned her and maryed her.

¶ In processe of tyme the fame of this woman sprang so wyde, that at the last it came to the vnderstanding of king Edgar,: wherewith the king notwithstanding, he were in Deepe dissimu- his minde discontented with Ethelwold, which had so deceyued him, yet kept he good countenance and made semblance as though he had nothing forced of that matter at all.

¶ And upon a tyme, as it were in game, warned this Ethelwold that then was an Erle by reason of his wyfe, or otherwise, that he woulde one night come and lodge in his house, and appointed the tyme when it should be. The Erle being nothing contented with this monition, ranne home almost dead for feare, and prayed his wyfe of helpe in that tyme of neede, and that shee would in all that she might make her selfe as foule and as vnseemely as shee could, and shewed to her all the residue of the matter. Wherefore, in consideration of the premisses, shee trimined Ethelwold was and decked her selfe in most costly and shewing apparell. By which meanes, this yong amorous king was soone caught in the Devils snare, so that he set reason aparte and followed his awne sensualitie. And for to bring his purpose the better about, he kept forth a coutenaunce as he had bene well contented with all thing, and desyred the Erle, that he would ryde with him on hunting, into the wood of Weluerley, that now is called Horsewood, where he awayting his tyme, strake the Erle thorow the body with his shaft, so that he dyed soone after. And Ethelwold slains then he maried this Elfrida or Estrild shortly, and had by her Egelredus. For the which and murdered. deede sayth Reynulph, this Elfrida buylded a house of Nonnes at Warwell. It is also reported of this king Edgar, that he beyng vpon a season at the Towne of Andouer besyde Sarisbury, and was enamoured of a Noble mannes daughter, which was of passing bewtye, made such meanes by force or otherwise, that the parentes were agreed that the king should have his pleasure. EDWARD

EDward the sonne of Edgar, reigned after his father: And here ye shal vnderstand, that after the death of Edgar, great strife arose among the Lordes, for the admission of their king. For Elfrida or Estreld, with Alphride Duke of Mertia, made diverse friendes to have her sonne Egelredus promoted vnto that dignitie, a childe of seven yeres of age, that she and he might rule the land together. But Dunstone with the ayde of other Bishoppes, and of the Erle of East England, or Essex, so withstood that doyng, that he crowned this Edward king at the Towne of Kingstone, to the greeuous displeasure of the sayd mother Elfrida, and other of her affinitie.

These I thinke were priestes

¶ In the tyme of this Edward apered a blasing starre, after the which ensued many inconveniences, as well to men as to beastes, as sicknesse, hunger, moreyne, and other lyke calamities: But none of these thinges fell in the dayes of this Edward, but after his The aforenamed Alphride, Duke of Mertia, which in all thinges fauoured much the dedes of the Queene, put out the Monkes at Winchester, that king Edgar had there set in, and brought in for them wanton Clearkes, or as Reynulph sayth, Clerkes with Concubines (or rather that had lawfull wyues.) But Dunstone, and the Erle of Essex withwith their wyues. stood that doyng, and helde against the Duke and such as fauoured his partie: For the which arose great strife between the Priestes, and the Monkes of England. For the Clerkes that were before tyme put out by Edgar, sayd that it were a wretched and curssed deede, that a newe common company vnknowen, shoulde put out olde landishe men from their places: and it shoulde not be pleasing to God that had graunted the place to the olde dwellers, neyther ought any good man to alowe such doyng, for the yll ensample that thereof might ensue. The Monkes sayde, that Christ allowed neyther the olde dweller, nor yet the person: But who so woulde take the crosse of penaunce vpon him. and followe Christ in verteous liuyng he should be his disciple.

¶ For this matter was there holden a generall counsayle of Bishoppes, and all the Clergie of England, winchester, but for all this the strife ceased not. In so much that a newe assembly of the Clergie and other was apoynted after at a place called the strete of Calue, where the counsayle was kept in an upper loft. In thys counsayle Dunstone was grieuously despised and rebuked of some vnskilfull men (as sayth Fabian.) And while they were there in this great decision and argument, which way should be admitted and alowed, sodeynly the Ioystes of the loft fayled, and the people fell downe, so that many Some write that were slaine, and the people greatly hurt: But Dunstone with few other that tooke his part escaped vnhurt. ¶ But to returne to the tyme of the reigne of king Edward, he came vppon a tyme from hunting in the Forest, nere vnto the Castell of Corfe, in the West Countrie: where he losyng his companic and servauntes, resorted vnto the Castle aforesayde, where at that tyme his Stepmother with her sonne Egelredus kept her houshold.

¶ When the Queene was warned of his comming, anone she called vnto a seruaunt of uice of a mother hers, whome she much trusted, and tolde to him all her counsayle, shewing to him further, how he should behave himselfe in the accomplishing of her will and minde. And that done, she went towarde the King, and received him with all gladnesse, and desyred him to tarie with her that night: But he in curteous maner excused himselfe, and for speede, desyred to drinke vpon his horse sytting, the which was shortly brought.

¶ And while the Cup was at his mouth, the seruaunt strake him to the heart with a sword, or long dagger sharpe on both sydes: After which stroke by the king receyued, he set spurres to the horse, and thought to ryde to the place from whence he came, or else such a way as he thought to mete with his companie. And for that the maner of his death was vnknowne, and also he for king not knowen, he was buryed vnworthely at the Towne of Warram, and there rested by the space of three yeres after. In which tyme and season, God shewed for him dynerse myracles, as sight to the blinde, health to the sicke, and heering to the deafe, with diverse other, as sayth Fabian. But Polydore wryteth, that his Stepmother Elfrida caused the dead corps to be caryed in, and buryed in a secret place, where it was after found by miracle.

¶ At the last the same Elfrida sore repenting her fact, entended to visite him by way of pilgrimage. But how or for what cause she entended inwardly I can not say, but the horse or beast that she rode vpo, might not come night he place by a certeyne space, for beating, nor for any other thing that might be done for him by man.

¶ And as it is sayd for a testimony of her great repentance, she founded two Monasteries of women, the one at Ambrisbury, and the other at Warwell. In the which place of War-Ambrisbury. well in her latter dayes, she refusing the pompe of the worlde, helde there a solitary and Warwell. streyt life, and ended her life with great penance and repentance, and was there buryed when she was dead.

¶ Thus as ye have heard, was this yong king Edward murdered, when he had reigned foure, or as some wryte three yeres, leaving behind him none issue, wherefore the rule of the lande fell to Egelredus his brother.

KEnneth reigned in Scotland. xxv. yeres. In his tyme, the Danes arrived in Angus with a great company, and wasted the Countrie very sore, with whom the Scottes met, and after sore fight and great slaughter, by the manhood of one Hay (an vplandishman, and Scottes his two sonnes) obteyined the victory. This Kenneth was slaine by meane of a lady called Fenella, because he had poysoned Malcolme Prince of Comber.

EGeldred or Etheldred the sonne of Edgar, and Elfride his last Wyfe, after the death of Edward his brother reigned over this Realme. And in the beginning of this mans tyme, the grounde waxed barrein and all the miseries before signified by the appering of the blasing starre in the dayes of Edwarde, now began to take place and encrease vpon the earth. This king as his other progenitors before him were, was crowned at Kingstone, of Dunstane, and Oswald, Archebishops. To whome as it is written in the lyfe of Dunstane Dunstones proamong his prophecies, Dunstane shoulde saye at the day of his coronation. Thou com- phecies. mest to this kingdom by the death of thy brother, in whose death Englishmen conspired with thy wicked mother, they shall not be without bloudshedding and sworde, vntill there come people of an vnknowne tongue, and bring them into thraldome. And this trespasse shal not be clensed without long vengeance.

¶ This Egeldred was a man of goodly visage and tall of personage, but his nature was mixed with Lechery, crueltie, and dyners other vices. It is also read that when Dunstane should christen him, as he helde him ouer the Fonte, he fyled the same with his ordure, and that then Dunstane sware by God and by his mother, this Childe shall be vinkinde An angric both to God and hys Churche. But after the conquest it increased, and shortly after it passed and excelled all the other. Fabian.

About the. viij. yere of his reigne, the king maried Erle Egbertus daughter, named Ethelgina or Elgina. Of the which he begat a sonne, and named him Edmond, which after was surnamed Ironside, and two other sonnes named Edwyn and Ethelstane, and a daughter named Edgina.

In the. ix. yere of this king, for strife and displeasure that was between the Bishop of Rochester and him, he with his knightes besieged the sayde Citie: whereof Dunstane sent to the king, admonishing him, that he should refraine from that crueltie, and to suffer the Bishop and his Citie to be in peace. But this message abated nothing at all the kings courage. Then the sayd Dunstane sent vnto him an hundreth pounde in Golde, wylling him to refrayne of that enterprise, the which he receiued and brake vp his siege.

Golde was of more force than Donstane.

Dunstane dead.

¶ About the. xj. yere of his reigne, Dunstane died, but it was not long after his death, before the Danes entred into many and sundrie places of the land, in such wise as the king was to seke to which coast he should go first to withstande his enimies. And in conclusion, for the advoyding of more harme, he was compelled to quiet them with great summes of The Danes sore money: But when that money was spent, they fell to new robbing of the people. the king graunted more money: But for all that the Danes robbed and spoyled the Countrie of Northumberland and at the last besieged London. The which their outrage troubled the king very sore bicause he thought they would now have been quiet.

Elfricus a Tray-

poyled this ealme.

> ¶ And for the encrease of the kinges sorrow, Elfricus that then was maister or admirall of the kings Nauie, fled as a false traytour vnto the Danes. And after that was reconciled: and fled yet againe the second time vnto them.

King Egeldred punished the his eyen for the

¶ Wherfore the king to be aduenged on the father, commaunded the eyen of hys sonne sone of Elfricus in pulling out of Algarus to be plucked or done out of his head.

¶ But while this persecution thus contynued, by meanes of Elphegus Bishop of Winchester, a peace was concluded for a tyme betweene the king and the Danes. And the Prince or chiefe Capitaine of them named Aulass, was so exhorted by the sayd Bishop, that he became a christen man, to whom the king was Godfather, so that shortly after, the sayde Aulast returned to his awne Countrie, without doing of any more hurte, so that for a whyle the warres of the Danes seased. But while they rested, the bloudy Fluxe with brenning Feuers so vexed the people thorow the land, that many dyed therof.

¶ And now againe the Danes assayled this land, and did in diuers places great harme, so that for lacke of a good head or gouernour many things in the lande perished. For the Lordes were at such dissension one with another, that when they were assembled to speake or treate of peace betwene that one Lorde and that other, and if any good thing were deuysed for the hurt of their enemies, anone the Danes were warned thereof by some of the same counsaile: whereof were suspected Elfricus and Edricus.

Dinision and dissension among the Lordes.

> ¶ And to this sorrow was loyned hunger and penury, amongst the commons, that every one of them was constreyed to plucke & steale from other, so that what by the pillage of the Danes, and inward theeues and bribours, this land was brought into great misery and mischiefe.

A miserable realme.

> The king being thus wrapped in miserie, left not to gather of his subjectes what he 6 might might, as well by vnlawfull meanes as otherwise. For sayth Reynulph, he would for feyned or small causes disherite men of their possessions, & after cause them to redeeme their awne with great sumes of money.

And besides this, he gaue himselfe altogether to lechery, and to the filthy lust of the body: By which vngracious meanes, he brought this lande into such ruyne, that what he Sinne and mismight not helpe by strength, he redemed with great summes of money. So that from the gether. first entrie of the Danes, as witnesseth Reynulph in his. vj. booke and. xviij. Chapter, and Guydo and other Authors, and from the first tribute of ten thousand pound, he brought it at the last in processe of five or sixe yeres, to. xl. thousand pound. The which yeerely during his lyfe and after, to the comming of king Edward was leuied of his subjects, and named for the continuance therof Dane Gelt, which is to meane, money payde to the Danes, A tribute called Dane Gelt. or Dane money.

In the. xv. yere of his reigne dyed Oswald Archbishop of Cantorbury, and sone after dyed Ethelgina the Queene. And thus the land continued vnder the greuous Tribute of A miserable the Danes, and also the Englishe men susteyned of them great numbers of vilanies and iniuries, as partly hereafter shall appere. The king at this tyme by counsayle of his familiers, about the. xxj. yere of his reigne maryed Emma the daughter of Richard Duke of Emma the Normandy: The which Richard was the thirde duke of Normandy, and the first of that daughter of Duke name, and also was surnamed Richard without feare, or Richard the hardy, by whome of Normandy.

he had issue Edward the Confessor, which after was king of Englande.

¶ By this mariage, Egeldred began to looke a loft, and thought much of himselfe, and toke vpon him with much more courage then before he had done. Wherefore he sent into all the good Boroughes, Townes, and Cities of his land, secret and streight commissions, charging all the rulers, that vpon a certeyne day, which was the day of S. Brice, The Danes at an houre assigned in every place of this land, the Danes should be slaine, and so it was done. And as the common fame telleth, this murder began at a little Towne in Hertfordshire, within. xxiiij. Myles of London called Welwen: For the which deede it tooke the first name, because that the weale of that countrie (as it was then thought) was there first wonne. But who that doth well consider the sequele of the Storye, shall finde little wynnyng or weale that ensued of thys deede.

But before I proceede further, I will here touche somewhat of the pryde and abusion of the Danes, which they exercised in Englande, as I have sene in an olde Chronicle. The Danes by strength caused husbandmen to eare and sowe their land, and to do all other The crueltic of vile labour that belonged vatto husbandry, and the Dane helde his wyfe at pleasure, with daughter and servaunt. And when the husband man came home, he should scantly have Miserable bonof his awne as his servauntes had, so that the Dane had all at his commaundement, and dage and villanie, did eate and drinke his fill of the best, when the owner had scant his fill of the worst. And besydes this, the common people were so of them oppressed, that for feare and dreade, they called them in every such house as they had rule of, Lord Dane: But in processe of tyme, after the Danes were voyded the lande, this worde Lord Dane, was Lord Dane of in derision and dispite of the Danes turned by Englishe men into a name of opprobry the which sprang called Lurdane, which yet is not forgotten, for if one Englishe man will rebuke another, dane. he will for the most part say, thou art but a Lurdane.

But nowe to returne to our first matter: Truth it is when the Danes were thus murdered throughout Englande, tydinges thereof sprang into Denmarke: which kindled in them such a fury, that the king thereof named Swanus, assembled shortly a great hoste and Swanus king of nauie of Shippes. And within short tyme after, he with his Danes landed in Cornewall. ed into England. And by treason of a Norman named Hughe, which by fauour of Queene Emma was made

Earle of Deuonshire, the sayde Swanus tooke Exceter, and after bet downe the walles. Then he entered further into the land: In which season the king sent vnto Edrycus, charging him to assemble the west Saxons, and to withstand the further entry of the Danes: The which according to his commission assembled the west Saxons, and made VOL. good countenance to withstand the sayd enemyes: But when the hostes should iowne, were it for feare or for treason, he fayned himselfe sicke, and fled from his people. The which for lacke of an head were faine to geue backe to their great hurt, and to their enemies-

Wherefore the Danes, then resorted to Sherborne and Wylton, and anone spoyled both those townes, and there refreshed them: But Swanus had vnderstanding, that the king was comming towardes him with the power of his lande, he therefore departed thence, and returned with great pillage vnto his Shippes, and sayled about the land, and at the last landed in Norffolke: Where he wasting and spoilyng the Countrie, came tothe Citie of Norwich, the which he robbed and destroyed, and after went to Thetford, and did lykewise to that Towne, and fyred it, and spoyled all the Countrye nere there folke, & named nus fled into Dēmark. Swanus returned againe into England with a great power.

I But soone after, a noble man of that Countrie called Duke Vskatell, met with the host of Danes, and gaue vnto them a hard and sharpe battayle, and slue many of the a duke saue the enemies and put them backe. For this and for hunger that then assayled this land, Swarepulse, and Swa- nus returned to his Shippes, and departed againe into Denmarke, and taryed all the Winter following. In which season he made great provision to reenter the land of England.

In the, xxv. yere of the reigne of the king, the aforesayde Swanus with a strong army landed at Sandwich, and spoiled all the country nere vnto the Sea syde, and rested him there, vntill he heard of an armie comming against him. And when he was ware thereof, he returned to his Shippes againe: and heering that the king was farre Westwarde, he landed in Sussex, and spoyled it wonderfull sore, and there also he was warned of the comming of the English men, and then anone he tooke shipping againe. So that when the Englishe men had thought to have met with him in one coast, then would he flie and land in another. And when the king prouided to meete with them on the Sea, eyther the Sea were as it apereth blind- they would fayne themselves to flie, or else they woulde with giftes blynde the admirall of ed in this tyme. the kinges Nauie.

¶ By which subtiltie and crafty meanes, they weryed and tyred the host of Englishe men. And where euer they went they slue, brent, and robbed, without all compassion and pitie.

The king then beyng at Shrewesburie, & heering of the great sleight and crueltie of the Danes, called his counsayle to take aduice what were best to be done for the defence of his enemies. A great tribute

¶ But when this peace was thus made, Swanus with his company returned into Denagaine into Den. marke. And the yere following, the king made Edrycus aforenamed, Duke of Mertia. Thus Edricus beyng but of base birth was made riche, he was of tongue false, and subtile of wit, soft and eloquent of speeche, vntrustie, and inconstant of thought and promes, as of him somthing before is shewed, and after more shall apere.

Turkillus a Prince of the Danes läded in Kent.

¶ In the. xxvij. yere of the King, a Prince of the Danes named Turkillus landed in Kent. The which so grieuously warred in that countrie, that the Kentishmen were faine to make their peace, and so he departed. But yet the persecution of the Danes seaced not: For in one countrie of England or other, they ever were robbing and pilling the English men. So that all the Countrye along the coast, from the North part of England, vnto the Isle of wight, was by them eyther vtterly destroyed, or greatly empayred. And when the king entended to make provision for to withstande them, ever Edrycus would counsayle him to the contrary, shewyng him that he should spend his treasure, and trauayle his people in vaine. By meane whereof the Danes entered fiftie mile into England, and brent and destroyed diverse Villages, and Townes. So that they encreased and waxed passing riche, and the English men, nedy, bare, and poore. Thus continuyng this misery, Swanus then being in Denmarke, and heeryng of the encrease of his people within England repented him of his former couenantes, and thought that the whole dominion of England should of right belong to him. For the which he prepared his armie Swanus againe and nauie in most defensable wise, and sped him into England, and to the ryuer of Humber, and landed in Northumberland, where the Earle and ruler of that Countrye with all the other rulers of the same, sware fealty vnto the sayde Swanus, and promised to kepe that Countrie vnto his vse. And when he had done his will in that Coast, he entred againe the water, and by the Ryuer of Trent, he passed to Gaynsburgh, and so by North Watling streete, and subdued the inhabitauntes of that Countrie, and forced them to geue him pledges. Which pledges, with also his nauie, he betooke vnto Canutus his sonne, Canutus the while he went further into the land. And he and his people kept on theyr Iourney vntill sonne of Swamus. they came vnto Mertia, killing and sleiving the men of that province, and reserved the women to vncleane liuyng, aswell the religious as the other, and tooke by strength Winchester, and Oxford, or rather Exceter, and did in them what him liked.

¶ And after he had thus passed the lande, he drewe the next way toward London: But in passing the Ryuer of Thames he lost some parte of his people, eyther for lack of a Bridge or for ieoparding their passage vnaduisedly. And so in fine he came to London and besieged it, where at that tyme the king was. Wherefore Swanus left the Citie, and drewe into Essex, and againe by water passed into Kent, and so towarde the Citie of Cauntorbury without any let, welding the Countrie at his will, and lastly besieged that Cauntorbury The which manfully defended themselues against their enimies by the space of. swanus king of xx. dayes, and then was the sayde Citie taken by the treason of a Deacon named Alma- the Danes. ricus, the which before tyme Elphegus then Archbishop of that See had preserued from Deacon, a Traye ¶ Polidore affirmeth that the Danes besieged the Citie of London, and the Londoners though they were somewhat dismayed at the first, by reason of the sodaine feare, yet they so manfully defended themselves, that at the length they were not afeard to set open the gates of the Citie, and to go out themselves in great multitudes and fight with their enemies: And so valiantly behaued they themselves against them, that they slue many of them, and in fyne compelled Swanus or Sweno their king to get him awaye with the residue of his armie with such hastie expedition, that he ceased not trauailyng day and night vntill he was two dayes journey from London, and then went he to Bath and there taried, where he was so sore distressed for lack of victualles, that he was fayne to let Egeldred redeeme the tribute, the which he had a little before graunted and bounde him- Tribute redemselfe to paye. And having received of him a great summe of money for the redemption et. thereof, he returned into Denmarke, minding ere it were long to repayre to this lande againe with a greater armie than euer he had before.

Mathew of Westmynster wryteth also that after the saide Swanus or Sweno was in dispaire to winne the Citie of London, both because of the losse of his Souldyours that through rashnesse & misaduenture were drowned in the Thamys, and also the manly resistance made by the Londoners in defending themselves, he gate him awaye with speede, and went first to Wallyngfoord and then to Bathe, exercising much crueltie all the wave as they went, and lefte nothing vndestroyed, and at Bathe rested him a space to refreshe his armie, whether Almarus then Erle of Deuonshire, with all the Nobilitie of the west Saxous together with their servantes and retynue, fearing his tirannie, came vnto hym and delyuered bym hostages, praiying withall that they might, be at peace with him. And afterwardes, when he saw that he might nowe do what he woulde, and that no man durst chalenge the Crowne and fight with him for the same, he caused himselfe to be proclaymed king of England. But the sayde wryter maketh mention neyther of the scarcitie of victualles that shoulde then be amongest the Souldiours, neyther of the redemption of the sayde tribute, nor yet of his sodeyn returne into Denmarke: But here to returne to mine Authour.

Then the Danes first spoyled the Citie of Cauntorbury, and tooke the Archebishop

Monkes tithed. and put him in a strong prison, and then set the Citie on fyre. And the Monkes of Saint Austynes Abbey they tythed, that is to saye, they kylled nyne, and the tenth they kept alvae, the which after were solde and set to all seruile labour. And as witnesseth Antonynus and Vyncent Historiographers, they slue and brought in seruage about the number of nyne hundred persons of religion. They slue of men, women, and children, in the Citie of Cauntorbury aboue eight thousande, and that with much crueltie as is shewed in the. vij. Chapter, & xvj. Title, of the worke of the sayde Antoninus.

¶ And finally, for that this Bishop Elphegus, would not condescende to geue vnto them, as sayth Reynulph, three thousand pounde, or else as Polydore sayth, bicause by his preaching and godly lyfe, he went about to convert these barbarous people vnto the fayth of Christ, after they had kept him in harde prison by the space af, vij. Monethes, vpon an Ester euen, they after many vilanves vnto him done at Greenewich within three Mylcs of London, stoned him to death, where he laye in the fielde vnburied a certaine of tyme, and after was carved to London, and buried reverently in the Church of Saint Paule. But afterward in the tyme of Canutus, he was taken vp againe, and caried to his awne Church.

King Egeldred sent Emma ye two sonnes Alphred & Edward ward vnto Richard the fourth Duke of Normady, which the sayde Emma.

The king fearing the ende of this persecution, sent Emma the Quene, with her two Oueene and her sonnes Alphred and Edward vnto Richard the second of that name, then fourth Duke of Normandy, which was brother vnto the sayde Emma, with whome also he sent the Bishop of London.

> ¶ In the, xxxiiij, yere of the king, when the Danes had wonne a great parte of the Countrie of west Saxon, they returned againe to London warde: whereof hering the was brother vnto Londoners sent vnto them giftes and pledges.

In all this season I finde no mention that euer the king gaue vnto the Danes any notable battayle, but kept him in holdes and places for his awne sauegarde, and to the small benefite or advauntage of his Realme. And at the last he was chased vnto the Isle of Wight, where with a small company he kept himselfe secret a great part of the Winter. and finally without battaile or comfort, sayled ouer to his wyfe into Normandy, and there helde him a certevne of tyme.

Swanus being certified that the King was fled, of England.

When Swanus was asserteyned of the departure of the king out of the land, he was enflamed with exceeding pryde, so that he arrered exceding impositions of the people & began to vse grieued them wonderfully. And among other of his Tirannyes he demaunded a great vpon the people summe of money out of S. Edmondes landes, which the rulers denayed, for so much as they claymed to be free of all kinges Tribute. Wherefore he entered into that territory, and wasted and spoyled the Countrie, and besydes that, despised that holy martyr, and threatned the place of his Sepulchre: But the men of that countrie fearyng this Tyrant, gaue them to fasting and prayer, so that shortly after he was slaine or sticked in an Euening amongest his knightes, with the sworde or dagger of Saint Edmond in the Towne of Thetford, as sayth Guydo, but Reynulph and other, in the Towne of Gaynesborough, where he dyed yellyng and criyng the thirde day after: But Saxo Grammaticus sayth, that the sayd Swanus or Sweno, beyng converted vnto the Christen fayth dyed at the length very repentauntly and lyke a good christian man: And that he suffered Etheldred after that peaceably to reigne all his lyfe time as king of this lande by a composition betwene them.

The which Polydore thinketh not to be true. Nowe when king Egeldred was certified of the death of Swanus, he by the procurement of his friendes returned home againe to his awne: But the Nobles of the Realme condicioned with him, that he should reforme his olde maners. And for performance thereof, he sent his sonne Edward into Englande before him, and in the Lent following the king came himselfe, and with his people sped him toward Lyndsey, where Canutus was at that tyme resiant, not prouided for the kinges so hastie comming.

Wherefore Canutus, beyng not purneyed to withstande the king, fled to Sandwich in Kent. And for that he there proued such persons, as before tyme his father and he had taken pledges off, and finding them not firme in their promyses, he caused all theyr noses and handes to be cut off, and then sayled into Denmarke, and returned the Canutus the next yere with a great Nauye, and sayled about the land, and tooke prayes in the South nus fled into countrye, whereof the Kinges eldest sonne named Edmond, made prouysion with the Denmarke. ayde of Edrycus to go against him.

But when he should have met with Edrycus at a place assigned, and his hoste, he Edrycus afalse was of him deceyued, and therfore was compelled to geue place vnto his enemies. And traytor. as it was after knowne, the savde Edrycus had promised his fauour and ayde vnto the sayde Canutus. By reason whereof Canutus entered the Countrie of West Saxons, and forced them to sweare to him fealtie, and to geue to him pledges.

In this season, the king beyng at London, was taken with a greuous sicknesse and The death of dyed, and was buryed in the Church of Saint Paule, where at this day in the North Isle King Egeldred. behynde the Quyer, apereth a token in the wall of his Sepulture, he reigned, xxxvi, yeres, leaving after him two sonnes, Edmond, and Edward.

GRime reigned in Scotlande. ix. yeres, and against him Malcolme made fierce warre for the Crowne, which was appeased by the counsayle of a Bishop called Fothadus. But the Scottes not contented to sustaine the Tirannie of their king Grime, rose vp against Grime king of him, whereof ensued much trouble in Scotland. Malcolme vanquished and slue Grime, and tooke on him the Kingdome, and reigned. xxxj. yeres. To him the Lordes of Scotlande graunted first the wardes and mariages of their heyres, And not long after Olanus, Wardes and mariages of the and Onetus, two Capitaines of the Danes inuaded Scotland, and vanquished king Mal-heyres first colme, and subdued Murrey: But not long after, Malcolme repayred his army, and dis-grauted to the king in Scotland. comfited the Danes, and slue Onetus.

¶ And shortly after, Camus another Capitaine of the Danes, invaded Scotlande, and nere to Ferrey was discomfited and slaine, and the place to this day is called Camus Camus stand.

Then Canutus by the commaundement of Swanus, brake into Scotland, with whom the Scottes fought a terrible battail, to the great damage, losse, & hurt of both partes: But after this battaile a peace was concluded.

EDmond Ironsyde, the sonne of Egeldred, or Etheldred, and also Canutus, the sonne of Swanus king of Denmarke, did by the consent of certeyne of their friendes on eyther syde, take vpon them the gouernement of this lande. The Londoners with the assistance of some Lordes of Englande fauoured Edmond: But the more part of the Lordes fauoured Canutus, and specially the spiritualtie that before tyme had sworne fealtie to his father. And he then beyng at Southampton swore vnto them, to be a true and good Iustice, and to entreate the people soberly and righteously.

Then Edmond beyng of the Archebishop of Yorke crowned at London and the solemnitie finished and ended, he sped him to West Saxon, and subdued that Country. In which time Canutus drewe with his people to London, and would there have entered: Canutus assaults But that was forbodden him of the Londoners. For the which he layde his ordinance about ed y city of London, the Citie, entendyng to have entered perforce: But it was not long or he was faine to breake his siege and to depart thence.

When Canutus was put off from London, he drewe Westwarde, and in short tyme after met with king Edmond in Dorsetshire, besyde Gyllingham, where betwene them was foughten a strong and cruell battaile: But in the ende Canutus was ouercome, and compelled to forsake the fielde.

¶ After this, they met againe in Worcester shire, or as Polydore sayth, at Andouer in Wiltshire where they fought a more strong and fierce battaile: For this was so strongly foughten on both partes, that men could not judge which part had the better, nor which the worse: But as Reynulph sayth, eyther of them departed from other, eyther for werynesse of fight, or for lacke of the day.

A cruell fight.

I But on the Morowe following, both hostes met againe and fought egerly. The which fight continuyng, Edricus espiyng king Edmond to be at a vauntage of wynning of the fielde, sodeinly pight a dead mannes heade vpon the head of a Speare, and cryed to the hoste of English men, flye, flye, you English men and saue your selues, lo, here is the head of Edmond your king. But Edmond beyng thereof warned, sped him to that part of the field, and behaved himselfe so comfortably amongest his men, that by his knightly courage, his people recovered that which before they had lost, and continued the battaile vntill night, and caused Canutus to flye that Countrie, and to returne againe towarde London.

¶ Then king Edmond beyng aducrtised that Canutus was returned toward London, he followed him and passed the Ryuer of Thamys, and delivered the Citie from the daunger of the Danes, and after encountered the Danes at a place called Brentford within seuen myles of London, where he had with them a cruell fight, and at length discomfited them. Fabian.

Brentford which we nowe call Brainford.

¶ But because the Aucthor whom I here follow leaueth many thinges vntouched worthy of remembrance, which were done after the sayde battaile foughten by Andouer, I have here thought good to supplye his defect by Polydore, who wryteth hereof, as followeth: When Canutus was this discomfited, he traueyled all night long to Winchester warde, and gate him to a place of safetie: But Edmond as some do write pursued him not, but turned to Sarisburie to rescue the Citizens there besieged of another company of Danes. Thether also shortly after came Canutus, where not farre from the same Towne they pitched a newe fielde, and as men having nowe gathered a new courage & refreshed themselves, fought very fiercely and egerly together, but with equal fortune tyll night came that parted them beyng weryed with long fighting. The next morning the Englishe men anone after the Sonne risyng, stoode ready aranged in battaile ray, awaytyng the comming of their enemies, vntill Canutus came and set vpon them. Then fought they together verie fiercely, but doubtfully withall, and in such wise that many went to wrecke and were slaine on both sydes. And when it drewe towardes the enening they gaue over on even hande, neyther partie hauyng victory of other. On the next morowe both the hostes rested themselues, and tooke their repast, & gathered together the dead corpses of them that were slaine the day before, and burned them as the maner was then to do. And all this while they never vnarmed themselves. There were slaine at that time aboue, xx.M. The night following Canutus dislodged as prinely as he could, & march-London besieg- ed towards London: The which city his Fleete had now in a maner besieged by water. But assoone as this theyr fliyng was once discried by the day light, Edmond followed him at the heeles, and with a little ado raysed the siege: Wherefore, he entered the Citie triumpiauntly, with great joy and solempne pompe. Canutus beyng thus disapoynted of his hope, having gotten great prayes and bootyes out of the Countries there about, departed thence to see his shippes which were newely entered into the Riuer of Rochester called in olde tyme Medeganara, and nowe Medway, where the sayde Canutus taryed a season, partly to encrease his armie, and partly to learne by espyals the secret purposes of his enemies, the which he soone vnderstoode. For Edmond whose nature was not to sleepe hys matters, having assembled his power with incredible celeritie, lay in campe not farre from Canutus, & there made a long exhortation vnto his Souldiours, the effect whereof was, that they should call to minde the number of battayles that they had foughten with the Danes already, and remember withall that the time nowe serued if they would play the men, to represse their cruelty and violence: and therefore he moued them in most earnest maner, that they would not cease to pursue and vrge them, till they had with with one battaile cleane vanquished and conquered them, that an ende might once be made of their long and great trauayles. The Souldiours beyng incensed with this exhortation, and also wery of the intollarable pride and hautinesse of their enemyes which dayly molested and prouoked them, went with a fierce courage to set vpon them. In like maner Canutus, who had commaunded his Souldiours before, to be dayly and hourely in a redinesse against the comming of the English men, came into the field, and ioyned battail with them, where they fought more then foure houres together, but at the length the Danes began to geue backe. The which when Canutus perceyued, he commaunded his horsemen to rescue them in the foreward. But whiles it so chaunced that some of them gaue backe for feare, and some made no hast thether, the whole army brake aray, and then feare having the vpper hand of shame, they fled away. There were of the Danes slaine at that tyme three thousand and fine hundred, of the which number many were Dukes, and Capitaynes of great birth: But of Englishe men. vj. C. at the most, and they all footemen. King Edmondes intent and purpose was to have had the vse and fruition of that victory, that is to say, so narrowlye to have pursued his enemies, that he woulde then haue cleane destroyed them, the which vidoubtedly had beene done, if fortune had not bene against him. For whiles after this great-battayle he was in great consultation about the pursuyng of his sayde enemyes, he thought it would be greatly for his advantage, if he both rested himselfe the residue of the same day, and the night following, and permitted his Souldiours to do the lyke. And so this little time seemed sufficient vnto Canutus to saue himselfe, but not to Edmond. In like maner on the next morow, king Edmond assone as it was once day, mindyng to have the spoyle of the fielde, brought his Souldiours out of the Campe, to the entent that they should afterwardes pursue their enemyes, and the rather because he had intelligence howe they that were the day before dispersed, were nowe gathered together againe, and had passed the ryuer of Thamys, marchyng as fast as they could towardes Norffolke, and Suffolke. Wherefore king Edmond hasted thether with all he might, to aide his people there against his sayde enemies. And so vpon a watchworde geuen he set vpon them. And albeit some layde vpon the hindmost, and some stroke in the middest, aswell on the right hand as on the left, yet the Danes for all that gaue not backe. Euery Captayne encouraged his awne Souldiours to sticke vnto it manfully: But specially king Edmond admonished his Captaines that they should cause their Souldiours to kepe array, ceassyng not to say vnto them with a loude vovce that the same day if they woulde play the men a little while, they should confirme vuto them all their former trauayles & victories, or else should be the beginning of most greuous sorowes and miseries, if they gaue neuer so little backe. By the which words the Souldiours were sodeynly so animated to fight, that the Danes began a little to shrinke and geue backe. The which when Canutus perceyued, by and by he set vpon the left wing of Edmondes hoste, the which were likeliest to do most harme, and so releved his distressed Souldrours, and that did he with such violence and manly courage, that he felled and layde on the ground as many as were in his way: By reason whereof it came to passe, that a great number of the English men nowe weried with long fightyng, and heering the rumor of the great slaughter of their company on euery syde, sodevnly fied away for feare. The which when King Edmond perceyued, he gate before them, and stayed them for a whyle: But when at the length his whole armye was quite disordered and out of aray, it was not then possible for him to set them in araye, and bring them into the fielde againe which they had once forsaken. Here the English men, when the streytes and passages. were all stopped by theyr enemyes, so that none of them had any minde to make resisttance, or hope to flye away and escape, were almost all slaine, specially such of them as were the best and worthyest Souldiours.

Now king Edmond with a verie few with him, neuer ceassed iourneying Westward till he came to Gloucester, whome Canutus chased the space of two houres, but could

This losse and discomfiture, though it greatly weakened and dismayed the Englishmen, specially because London and manye other good townes and places were then for feare, rebelled vnto the Danes: yet king Edmond vsed neuerthelesse diligence in preparing a newe armie, and so did likewyse Canutus, which at length came vnto his enimie by long and great iourneys. For they knewe well that if they did fight againe, they should with one battaile trie who should have all. And king Edmond was nowe vtterly determined at the next conflict to put himselfe in exstreme hasard, and eyther to wynne all or lose all. And therefore both the armies being nowe readie to fight, stood so nere together that the one might see the other, not farre from Seuerne side. At what tyme Edricus (as some reporte) began to perswade with the two kings, that they should common together before the beginning of the battaile, to see whether they coulde fall to any agreement betweene themselves, because he knewe right well that this thing should be as much for the commoditie of the Danes as of the Englishmen. For now he that before time was wont to be the chiefe worker of all trechery and mischiefe, beganne to countersevt honestie, in going about to set an vnitie and peace, betwixt the two sayde most redoubted and valiant princes. The which princes not mislyking with his counsayle, for that present season, refused not to follow it, albeit they thought it would be to small effect and purpose. And so they communed together a little while, not without the great expectation of the beholders what would be the ende and come of it. But where vpon they concluded among themselves it is altogether vncertaine. Some saye that peace was agreed vpo condition that Canutus should have Mertia or middle England, and Edmond all the west part of the realme.

And in this time Emma the wyfe of Egeldred, fearing the fortune of warre, sent her two sonnes Alphred and Edward vnto her brother Richarde the second of that name and fourth Duke of Normandy.

¶ But Edricus, which as before is sayde was euer subtile of wyt, considering the good fortune of king Edmond and his knightly courage, thought that at length he should ouercome Wherefore to saue his lande, and to bring about his malicious treason, he Edricus by sub- the Danes. sought the wayes and meanes how he might stand in his grace and fauour, and at length obteyned his entent, and swore to him to be his true subject.

When king Edmond had a whyle stayed at London, he then made towarde the Danes that then were in Kent, and met with them at a place called Otford, and there discomfited them, and chased Canutus to the Isle of Shepey, and there he tooke shipping and sayled about the lande, and at the last entred into the Countrie of Mertia, and spoyled a parte thereof.

¶ Then the two hostes met soone after at a place called Ashedowne, where after a long fight Edricus with his retinue fled to the comfort of the Danes: By meane whereof king Edmond was put to the worsse, for many noble men were slaine vpon his party: among the which the Bishop of Lyncoln, and the Abbot of Ramsey were two, and were come thether to have intreated a peace betweene the two princes. But when this was layde to the charge of Edricus, he by his vntrue meanes, so excused himselfe, that no man myght charge him with any default.

Thus this mortall warre continuing betwixt these two martiall princes, to the great desolation and mortalitie of the people, one of the Knightes of the partie of king Edmond, gate him to an high place, where he might be somewhat heard of the hoste, and spake in this wise: daylie we dye, and no man hath the victorie: For Edmond maye not A good oration. be ouercome for his great strength, and Canutus maye not be ouercome for fauour of fortune. What shall then be the fruite of thys continual strife? none other but when the Knightes bene all slaine on eyther partie, then the Dukes compelled by nede will accord, or else they must fight alone without Knights. Then seing thys must be the ende, why do they not one of these two? If they accord? why is not this kingdome sufficient for twaine, that sometyme suffised for. vij. If their coueteousnesse and greedie desire of Lordships be so great, that eyther hath indignation to take and part with other, or else the one to be under that other, then let them fight alone, that will be the Lordes alone, least if all men fight, all men be slaine, by meane whereof no men shall be left to be vnder the Lordship or leading of Dukes, nor yet to defend kings against their strong enimies or nations. Fabian.

¶ Some sayth Polidore, whome it repenteth not me to follow, doe write that the matter was done after this maner. One of the Capitaines, whether it were Englishman or Dane, it is not knowne, having first lycence graunted him to saye his minde, spake in the presence of both the kings on thys wise.

¶ O most doubtie and valiant Emperours, you have nowe fought long ynough one against another: There hath beene bloud ynough shed betwixt you both. Your valiantnesse and the manly courage also of your Souldiours is sufficiently tryed. And yet can neither of you awaye with good or euill fortune. For if it so chaunce that one of you haue the vpper hande of the other, he more fiercely pursueth his vanquished enimie: Agayne, if his fortune be to be ouercome, yet prepareth he a freshe battaile against his vanquisher. O what wilfulnesse is this of yours (noble Princes) that can not be ouercome and perswaded by reason? doe you more regard warre then peace? Whether rageth this your greedie desyre of Empire? If you fight for a kingdome, and that be your quarrell and the cause why ve thus warre one against another, deuide you then this most flourishing and wealthie Realme betwixt you, the which in times past was counted sufficient to maintaine. vij. kings: But if glorie doe pricke you to hasard the vncertaine chaunce of Empire or seruitude, deuise you some wayes by your selucs whereby the matter maye be determined without any great slaughter or bloudshed which of you both shall haue the souereintie. Thus spake this Capitaine vnto them. But the latter sentence pleased king Edmond, and so did it Canutus also whome fortune fauoured. And so by his perswasions they accorded at length to trie the matter in their awne persons by dynt of sworde, hetherto Polydore.

These wordes thus spoken, were right well allowed of both hostes, for at this time, a truce was made betweene both the princes for a certaine tyme, after which tyme ended, A truce taken, were it by the occasion of these wordes, or otherwise, the sayde two princes Edmond and

¶ And for this was assigned by both their agreements, a little Isle then called Olney nere vnto Gloucester. In which place, at the daye and tyme appointed, the two Cham- A Combate bepions met without company or assistance within the sayde Isle, the hostes of both parties twent two standing without the Isle, and there abyding the fortune of this combate. There eyther proued other, first with sharpe Speares, and after with kyne and cutting swordes. What shall I of this make any longer processe, when eyther had other well proued and assayed by receiving of harde and sore strokes, by the first motion of Canutus, as most Writers testefie, they at the last agreed and kissed together as louers, to the great comfort of both the hostes.

so that what he might not accoplish by his awne person, he fulfilled by his awne sonne, as testifie diverse Authors. For as affirmeth Guydo, this sonne of Edrycus awaityng his time, espyed when the king was at a house of easement to purge nature, and with a Speare strake him into the fundament, and so into the body, whereof king Edmond shortly after dyed at Oxenford. Notwithstanding there is great diversitie amongest wryters touching his death which for breuities sake I omit. For Marian sayth, that he dyed at London by naturall sicknesse.

The king thus being slaine, anone Edrycus thinkyng thereby to be greatly exalted, sped him in all hast to Canutus, and saluted him as king, and shewed him of this treason, onely done for his love.

When Canutus had well considered the confession of this Edricus, he lyke a discrete and righteous Prince, sayde vnto him in this wise. Edrycus, for that thou hast for the loue thou bearest to me, slaine thy naturall Lorde, which I most loued, I will exalt thine head about all the Lordes of England. And forthwith commaunded him to be taken, and his head to be striken off, and pight vpon a Speares head, and after set vpon the highest gate in London. But the Aucthour of Polichronicon sheweth in the. xviij. Chapter of his sixt booke that Canutus after the death of Edmond gaue vnto Edrycus the Lordship of Martia or myddle Englande, and by his counsayle exiled Edwyn the brother of Edmond called the king of Chorles, and through his counsayle also executed many cruell deedes.

¶ Finally, howsoeuer this noble Prince came to his death, it is agreed that he dyed. when he had reigned one yere, and somewhat more, and is buryed at Glascenbury, by his Grandfather Edgar, and left behynde him two sonnes, that is to say, Edmond, and Ed-

CAnutus or Knot, by the death of king Edmond had the whole gouernance of the Realme, and forthwith he assembled a counsayle at London, and then was consecrated and announted king, of Alurede Archebishop of Cauntorbury, where among other thinges that were debated in that counsayle, a question was moued, whether in the composition made betwene Edmond, and Canutus, any speciall remembraunce was made for the children or brethren of Edmond for any porcion of any part of the land.

Wherevnto, it was aunswered of the Lordes, nave, affirming furthermore with an othe (for the kinges pleasure) that they to the vttermost of powers would put off the blood of Edmond in all that they might. By reason of which aunswere and promes, they thought many of them to have stand in the great grace and favour of the King, but it turned all otherwise.

¶ For many, or the more part of them, specially such as Canutus perceyued and knew, were sworne before to Edmond and his heyres, and also were native Englishmen, he mis-Dissemblers well trusted and disdeyned euer after. In so much, that some he exiled, and some were slaine, and some by Goddes punishment dyed sodeynly, and came to a miserable ende.

¶ But shortly after by the counsayle of dynerse of his Lordes, he outlawed Edwyne the brother of Edmond surnamed king of Chorles. But yet he was afterwarde reconciled to the kinges fauour, and lastlye was slaine by one of his awne seruauntes.

T Canutus also by the sayde counsayle, sent the two sonnes of Edmond, named as before is sayde Edmond and Edward, vnto his brother Swanus then king of Denmarke, to be slaine after the opinion of some wryters: But he abhoving that deede, sent them to Salamon then king of Hungary, as sayth Guydo and other. Where in processe of tyme Edmond dyed, and hys brother Edward maryed Agatha the daughter of Henry the fourth, then Emperour of Almaine.

¶ Canutus

T Canutus, after he had set certaine things in some order within y realme, he then de-Canutus devided uyded the same into foure partes. That is to say, the first and principall parte, which at the gouernethose dayes was west Saxon, he held vnder his owne guyding. East England the which realme into conteyned Norffolke and Suffolke, he betooke to the rule of the Erle Turkillus a Dane, foure partess or as Polvdore calleth him Thrugillus. Mertia he betooke (as some write) to the subtile Erle Edricus. And the fourth part which was Northumberland, he betooke to a Dane named Hircius. But lyke as the man of Indee, can at no time chaunge his colour, so this Edricus neuer chaunged his false maners. And notwithstanding the great benefits that he daylie receyued of his princes, euen lyke as he had bene false and deceyueable to other princes before, euen so now he vsed himselfe toward Canutus.

¶ Wherefore he being accused and prooued faultie, was commaunded of the king to haue judgement: The which was done immediatly, and his head for dyuers causes smitten Edicus the false off, and the same head with the body, for spite, cast into a foule and filthie place. But death, Reynulph Monke of Chester sayeth, that he was slaine by the kings agreement, within his palace at London, and his body with the head throwne after into the Towne Diche: Thus with shame he ended, that in falshood and dissimulation continued most of his life.

In the. xv. yere of his reigne, he called a Parliament at Oxenforde, where among A Parliament. other things, it was enacted, that Englishmen and Danes shoulde holde and firmely keepe the lawes of Edgar late king.

And in this tyme dyed Swanus, that was brother to Canutus king of Denmarke with- swanus king of out issue, wherefore that land fell vnto Canutus. For the which cause, he with a strong Denmarke dead armie sayled thether to take the possession, and to set the Countrie in an order, or after succeeded him is some writers, to appease and withstand the Vandales that then had pierced that lande, the sayde kingand done therein much harme. Wherein Goodwyn the Erle, whose daughter Edward Irle Goodwin. the confessor after maryed with a certaine number of Englishmen, fell vpon the Vandales by night, and distressed them in suche wise that Canutus had of them his pleasure. For this deede the king had Erle Goodwyn euer after in good fauour and loued Englishe men more specially.

¶ But Polydore reporteth this storye touchyng the kinges goyng into Denmarke farre otherwise, after this maner. When the Parliament (sayth he) was ended, he determined with himselfe to reforme many misorders in the common welth, and to be wifie and furnishe the Realme with Nobilitie, and to do things that generally should redound to the great wealth and commoditie of all English men. But it so fell that he was sodeinly certified of the inuasion made by them of Norway into Denmarke, and desyred withall of his people there to come and ayde them with all speede. The which thing seemed vnto Canutus to be a matter of no small importance. For when Olanus king of Norway heard how the power of Canutus dayly encreased in such wise as he thought was daungerous for his estate, beyng afearde that he would make clayme vnto the sayd kingdome of Norway, which somtymes belonged vnto his auncestours, and therefore desyrous to cut off, and empeach his victoryes, he together with his brother Harolde, a right doughty knight, inuaded the Realme of Denmarke, destroiyng and wastyng the Countrie euery where as he went, dayly fighting and skirmishing with the Garrisons that lay in sundry places of that Countrie, in such wise that it was thought he would in short space winne all, if speedy resistance were not made to deliuer the Realme from such an iminent daunger. Wherefore Canutus mustered both Englishmen and Danes with a tryce, and having nowe all thinges redyly prepared for warre, tooke shipping and the winde seruyng him well, was soner arrived in Denmarke then a man would have thought, where he found his enemies in armes, and the Country wasted and destroyed on euery syde. Then commaunded he his Banners and Pennons to be displayed, and his Standard to be aduaunced and the army to follow, where every thing was done as soone as it could be spoken.

purchase themselves the greater grace and fauour with their prince. Then met the two armies and fought so fiercelye together, that they filled the Elament with great cry and noyse that they made. Long it was or it apered to whether partie the victory should: encline. At the length the English men so fiercely assayled the enemies that they ouercame them. On the Morow Canutus pursuyng his enemies, tooke his journey towardes Norway. And when he was entred into the Countrye, there met him incontinent Ambassadors, which were sent vnto him to intreat of peace and submission, and to desyre him of a generall pardon, whome he heard very curteously, and after he had receyued Hostages of them, he pardoned them of all trespasses and offences whatsoeuer they had done against him: And so was the kingdome of Norway recoursed againe. Olanus despeyring nowe of victory fled for succour vnto his father in lawe the Duke of the Easterlynges that he might lyue with him more safely in exile: The which Olanus whiles he went about to disturbe the quiet state of another mannes kingdome, lost his awne: yet to say the truth, the same Godly and innocent man lost nothing at all, in asmuch as in all these his adversities and troubles, he behaved himselfe alwayes in most honest and verteous wise, and therefore was counted of all men a very holy man. And it followeth a little after in the same wryter: In this battaile Canutus proued the Loyaltie and manly prowesse of the Englishe men, whome for that cause, he euer afterwardes loued out of measure, and rewarded them with great giftes accordingly. And when the king had thus taken order with his affayres in Denmarke, he returned shortly into England. And soone after he maried her a sonne na- Emma the wife lately of Egelredus, of the which he had a sonne, & named him Hardycanutus, and after the English Chronicle, Hardyknought.

¶ But Polidore wryteth that this mariage was concluded on in the former Parliament. For Canutus having none issue, but onely two sonnes base borne, and begotten of a Concubine of his named Aluina, of the which two sonnes the one was called Harold, and the other Sweno: And desirous to have such issue as might lawfully succede him, maryed Emma the wyfe of Etheldred, which with her sonnes Alfred and Edward were banished the realme & lyued in Normandy with Richard her brother Duke of that countrie, vnto the which Duke the sayde king maried also his sister Hestritha, at the same tyme.

In the. xvj. yere of his reigne, the Scots rebelled against him: wherfore he with a great armie entred Scotlande, and at length ouercame the king of that lande, named then Malcolme and brought them againe to hys subjection, as sayth Marian the Scot. Then as sayth sundry Authours, after that he had betaken this land of England to the guyding of Leofricus, Egelnothus and other, he then returned into Denmarke. And from thence he went in pilgrimage to Rome in the, xvij, yere of his reigne, and redeemed the Schoole of Saxons free of all former Tribute graunted as before in the stories of Iew and Offa is somedeale touched: with redemption of Tribute (as sayeth Guydo) was called Rome Scot, as ye maye reade more in Fabian.

Fabian.

> But Polydore sayeth that Canutus dyed in Normandy, and was buried at Roane, whose wordes are these: It was not long after, but Canutus was enforced to make great warre vpon Richard Duke of Normandy, bicause he having no feare nor regarde vnto the Lawes, had caused himselfe to be denorced for a verie light and trifling matter from his wyfe Estritha sister (as is aforesayde) of Canutus, who beyng desyrous to be reuenged vpon the sayde Duke for the same injurie, prepared a great Nauie and sayled vnto Normandy. Nowe his armie was scarcely set a lande and encamped in the enemies Countrie when worde was brought him of the death of his sonne Sweno Lieutenaunt or Lorde Deputie of Norway, whome he specially loued, the which thing so wounded his hart with anguishe and sorrow, that he fell into an Ague, whereof he dyed shortly after. Then (as it followeth in the same Authour) his funerall obsequy being finished at Roane: the Souldiours vpon safe conduyt and lycence graunted them to depart in safetie, returned home againe into England.

HArolde the base sonne of Canutus and of Elgina, or Algina after the death of his father reigned ouer England. This man for his nymblenesse and swiftnesse of foote, was surnamed Harefoote. In his beginning there was great strife among the Lordes, in a Harold hare-Parliament holden at Oxford, for that some were in doubt of his birth, and whether he foote. were the kings sonne or not, and specially Erle Goodwyn which did the vttermost of his power to have set him by, and to have preferred his brother Hardikinitus the sonne of Etheldred and Emma, or anye of the sonnes of Etheldred and Emma that were in Normandy vnto that honor. But Leofricus whom Canutus so much loued and trusted, with the ayde of the Danes and Londoners, so stoutly withstoode Goodwyne and hys sonnes, that they fayled of their purpose.

Assoone as this Harolde was crowned, he gate him in all haste to Winchester, and Emma the Stepthere tirannically seased vpon all the goodes and treasure which Canutus had left vnto the mother of Harold is banished. sayd Emma, and then banished her the lande. The which Emma sayled then into Flaunders, and there of Baldwyn the Erle was reverently and curteously receyved, and obteyned of him the Castell of Bruges, where she made her aboade during the lyfe of this Harolde. The cause why she went not into Normandy, was because William then Duke there was by reason of his tender yeres and minoritie, not able to gouerne of himselfe, but was vnder the tuition and gouernance of others.

This Harold continued his life and reigne with little fruite, and lesse profite to the land, nor yet of the Subjectes, so that of him, either for vice that was in him, which learned men thought not meete to put in memory, or else for the rudenesse of his lyfe, and spending vainely of his tyme, which was not worthy of memory, nothing at all is put in remembraunce, but that he dyed at London, or as some write, at Oxenford, and was buried at Harold dead. DVlcane king of Scottes reigned at this time, seven yeres, and was slaine by his brother Germayne Makebreth.

Hardikinitus, or Hardiknot, the sonne of Canutus, and of Emma, was made king of Englande: This man after the death of his brother Harolde was sent for into Denmarke, or as some write into Flaunders, where he was with his mother Emma, and was most ioyously receyued and crowned at London of Ethelnotus, then Archebishop of Cauntorbury: But he was of such a cruelty, that he sent Alfricus then Archebishop of York, and Erle Goodwyn vnto Westminster, commaundyng them for the iniury by his brother Harolde done vnto his mother Emma, that they should drawe the Corps and dead body A cruell reof the sayd Harolde out of the ground, or place where it was buried, and cause it to be uengement. throwne into the ryuer of Thamys, which was done according to his commaundement. The which Corps after, as sayth Guydo and other, was found by a Fisherman, and buried vnreuerently within the Churche yarde of Saint Clement standyng without the Temble barre of London.

After which wife so dead, he maryed the seconde, of whome he received sixe sonnes, that is to say, Swanus, Harold, Tostitus, Wilnotus, Sirthe, & Leofricus, & a daughter named Goditha, which after was maryed vnto Edward the Confessor.

¶ The two sonnes of Egelredus, that is to say, Alphredus, and Edward, which as ye before have heard were sent into Normandie by Emma theyr mother came in the time of the reigne of this king into England to visite and see theyr mother, and brought with them a great number of Normans. Then this Goodwyn imagined in his minde, howe he might preferre his daughter Godith to one of these brethren, and thought with himselfe that the eldest woulde disdaine that mariage, and therefore he thought to joyne her to the yonger, and to make him king, and her Queene, and to that purpose he compassed the death of the elder.

¶ And first Goodwyn practised with the Lordes of England, and sayd, it was a great ieopardie for the lande, to suffer so many straungers to enter the land without licence, wherefore it were necessary that they were restrayned in tyme. By which meanes he gate aucthoritie to order the matter in such sort as to him should seeme best, and that of his awne power, because he was of most might next vnto the king: Wherefore he went and met with the sayd Normans, and slue of them the greatest number. For vpon Guyld downe, he slue alway. ix. and saued the tenth. And yet because he thought there was to many of them liuyng, he eftsoones tithed them againe, and slue everye tenth knight of them, and that by most cruell death, as windyng theyr guttes out of their bodies (as sayth Alphred had his Reynulph) and among other, put out the eyen of the elder brother Alphred, and sent eyen put out and was sent to Ely, him to Ely, where he dyed in short tyme after: But Edward was conucied some other and there dyed, way, and was brought to his mother. EDWARD

I Here endeth the line or ofspring of Swanus, and all the other Danes that ruled in England, so that after this king, the blood of the Danes was cleerely extinct and put out from all kingly dignitie within this Realme of England. And also the persecution of them seased cleerely after this kinges death, the which had continued to reken from their first landing in the tyme of Brithricus king of west Saxon, and the. ix. yere of his reigne, by the terme of. CC.Lv. veres.

EDwarde the sonne of Egeldred or Etheldred and of Emma his last wife, reigned ouer the realme of England next after the death of Hardikinitus: The which Edwarde, immediately after the death of his brother in lawe aforesaide, was sent for into Norman. This was Eddy, and pledges layde for him, that he without fraude should be made king. And then sor. he came with a fewe straungers. But Marian the Scot sayth that some of the Lordes had sent for Edward the outlawe, sonne of Edmond Ironside for to be theyr king, but after the affirmance of the same Aucthour, when he knewe that Edward his nephew was in possession of the land, he would meddle no further.

Then this Edward by the great aduice of Goodwyn Erle of west Saxon, and Leofricus Erle of Chester, was chosen king at London, and of Edsius, or Cadsius Archebishop of Cantorbury, and Alfricus Archebishop of Yorke on Easter Monday following consecrated at Winchester, and in processe of tyme after, he wedded Goditha the daugh- King Edward maried Goditha ter of the Erle Goodwyn, which he had by his wyfe Thira, sister vnto Canutus the sethe daughter of cond, that of Guydo is called Editha, the which he entreated in such wise, that he put Erle Goodwyn. her not from his bed, nor yet had carnally with her to do. Whether it were for hate of her kinne, or for loue of Chastitie, the truth is not shewed: But all Wryters agree that he continued his life without the vse of Women.

This king discharged Englishe men of the great Tribute called Dane gelt, the which Dane Gelt disbefore is often mencioned, so that after his time it was no more gathered. And also he sub-charged. dued the Britons or Welshmen that made warres within the boundes of the lande or fronters: But soone after theyr Duke or leader called Griffin, or Griffith, with the ayde of Griffyn a rebelthe Irishe men entered the Ryuer of Seuerne, and tooke manye prayes, and departed lion in Wales.

In the tyme of the reigne of this Edward, Emma his mother was accused to be fa- Emma the momilier with Alwyn or Adwyne, Bishop of Winchester. But his mother more sorowyng the defamation of Alwyne the Bishop, than her awne estate, wrote vnto diuerse Bishoppes, & besought them of iustice, affirming that she was ready to abyde all lawfull and most sharpest tryall.

Then dyuerse of the Byshoppes made labour to the king for her, and for the Bishop. But Robert then Archebishop of Cantorbury, beyng with their labour discontented, sayde vnto them in this maner., My brethren Byshoppes, sayde he, howe dare ye defende her, that is a wilde beast and not a woman? she hath defamed her awne sonne the king. Then shee was blindfolde, and led vnto the place betweene two men, where the Irons lay glowyng hote, and passed the. ix. shares vnhurt. The Archebiwas gone.

Then the king repented him, and restored vnto her, and the Byshop also, that which shop was glad he he before had taken from them, and asked them forgeuenesse: But the Archebishop of Cantorbury fled into Normandy.

> ¶ Polydore wryteth that king Edward was offended with his mother, for other causes aswell as for that she was suspected of the incontinent liuyng with the sayd Bishop: For it was layde vnto her charge that she was maried vnto Canutus beyng both a straunger and an enemy vnto the Realme: And that she succoured not her children in the tyme of theyr exile and banishment, and lastly because there went a brute that she should imagine their deathes.

> ¶ It was not long after, that king Edward gathered a strong nauie at Southampton, or to saye more truely at Sandwich, forsomuch as he was warned that Swanus king of Denmarke entended to make warre vpon hym. But Reynulph sayth that he gathered this Nauie to withstande Harold Harfagar, then king of Norway which entended to have entered England. But he was letted by the aforesayde Swanus, that shortly after made warre vpon the sayde Harold and other.

¶ It is also reported of this king that being on a tyme in a certaine extasie of minde or high contemplation in the time of seruice, he fell sodeynly into a great laughter, contrarie to his wonted and accustomed maner. And when the standers by meruayled thereat, and asked of him what was the matter that he so did: he answered how the Danes and Norwayes were about by common consent to have invaded England with a great Nauie, and as they were in a readynesse to hoyse vp their sayles and to set forward, one brought foorth a Bolle full of Mede or Methe to drinke vpon a bone voyage; and after that came Bolle after Bolle, so that after drinke came dronkennesse, and after that jangeling, and then strife, and at the last fighting: in the which many were slaine, and the rest returned to their awne home, so that they are now dispersed and gone from their purpose, and I trust (sayth he) that in my tyme forrein Nations and straungers will neuer inuade and disquiet thys Realme againe.

¶ In the. x. yere of his reigne (as sayeth Reynulph) and in the Moneth of September, Eustace Erle of Boloygne came a lande at Douer, which Erle had wedded king Edwards sister. And it so came to passe, that when this Erle was landed he conveyed himselfe in so secret maner from his company that none of them could tell what was become of him, and they thought he had bene slaine in the towne: And in this search made for How a folish act him, the hurly burly was such that a Citizen of the towne of Douer was slaine. By meane whereof the people arose, and in the questioning of this mans death, they ranne at length vpon the Erles company, and slue. xx. of his men, and wounded many mo: then the Erle appered and tooke his mens parte: But in the ende he was fayne to withdrawe himselfe with a fewe persons, and roade vnto the king then being at Gloucester, or as Polydore sayth, at Cauntorbury, and made vnto him a greeuous complaynt of the men of Douer.

in their rage slue much people both men and women, besides children and olde folkes that were troden to death with men and horses. But when the straungers saw that the Burgesses came still mo and mo, flockyng on euery syde to rescue their neighbours, they toke their heeles like cowards and, xviii, of them beyng slaine in the flight, the rest fled to Gloucester where the king lay. Howbeit, Polydore sayth that this conflict was at Cauntorbury and not at Douer: But nowe to returne to the matter. After this ryot, Erle Goodwyn, forasmuch as to him was committed the rule of Kent, was charged to Erle Goodwyn ryde thether, and to take wreche vpon the inhabitantes of that towne. But he withsayde to take order that commaundement, and counsayled the king to send for the Wardeynes of the Castle Douer for the of Douer, and the Rulers of the Towne, for to aunswere vnto such matters as should be death of y layd against them, and if they were guiltye, to punish them, or else not.

This Counsaile of Goodwyn pleased nothing the king, nor such as were about him, wherefore many mo Lordes were sent for. Among the which Leofricus Erle of Chester.

& Seward Erle of Northumberland were two.

After which assembly of the Lordes Erle Goodwyn had such monition of some of the counsayle, that he withdrewe himselfe from the Court, and gathered to him strength of knightes out of dyuerse shires, as west Saxon, and Kent, and houed at Beuerston vntill his sonnes came vnto him with mo people. Sone after, came vnto him his eldest sonne Swanus, and brought with him a faire companie, that he had arrered in Oxenfordshire, and Gloucestershire: And Harolde his other sonne with a felowship that he had assembled in East Englande and Huntingdonshire, so that of these people were made a certeyne number vnto the Court: but that he refused.

Then the king and his Counsayle beyng at London, Goodwyn and Harolde, was againe sent for, and charged to come to the Court with xij. personnes to attend on them, and no mo, and to render into the kings handes all knightes fees that he and Harold his sonne had within England. To this by them was aunswered, that they might not come Aleyde aunsto the counsayle of Treachors & guilefull men, and that also with so fewe men in num- swere of a subber they might not without perill or shame passe by the Country.

Then Proclamations were made that Goodwyn should come to the Court, as before is sayde, or else to anoyde the lande within fine dayes. Wherefore, Goodwyn considering the ieopardie that he was in, tooke with him three of his sonnes, that is to say, Swanus, Swanus, Tosty, Tosty, and Gurth, or Biorno, and sayled into Flaunders, where he was received of the and Gurth, y Erle Bladwyn, whose daughter Swanus his sonne had before maryed, named Iudith. This foresayde variance between the king, Erle Goodwyn, and his sonnes, I finde much diversitye among wryters: For Mathewe of Westminster somewhat dissenting from my Authour, wryteth heroof as followeth. Erle Goodwyn beyng greatly moued for the sleiping of his men at Douer, assembled a great power out of Kent, Sussex, and the West Saxons. And so did likewise his eldest sonne Swanus out of his Seignory or honour, that is to wete, out of Oxfordshire, Gloucestershire, Herefordshire, Sommersetshire, and Barkeshire, as did his sonne Harold also out of his honour of East England, Grantbridge, and Huntyngdon. When king Edward was informed hereof, he also assembled a great army, because he would be in a redinesse to fight with his enemies if neede were. Then came Goodwyn with hys army into Gloucestershire, and sent his messengers vnto the king to require him to deliuer Eustachius and his company vnto him, Wherefore, the sayd king by the decree and sentence of his Counsayle, banished him the Realme, with his five sonnes: who shortly upon his banishement, with his wife Gina, and Tostius or Tostio his sonne, and his wife Iudith, the daughter of Baldwyn Erle of Flaunders, and two other of his sonnes, that is to say, Swanus, and Gurth, taking wyth them great store of treasure, tooke shipping, and sayled streight into Flaunders vnto the sayde His other two sonnes Harolde, and Leofwinus, went vnto Bristowe, and from thence gate them into Irelande. After that the king put away Edith the Queene, onely of displeasure conceyued agaynst her father, and appoynted that she should be kept in safe custody in the Abbey of Redwell by the Abbesse there, without any honourable entertaynement, hauving one gentlewoman only to wayt voon her. this maner departed out of his land, he shortly after called a Parliament, and by the aucthoritie of the same banished Goodwyn and his three sonnes that were gone with him. And that done the king put his awne wife which was the daughter of Goodwyn called Edithe, a Lady of singular vertue and learning, into the Abbey of Warwell with one his three sonnes. mayden to be safely kept, and tooke from her such Iewels as she had, as sayth Marian. And so Goodwyn and his said sonnes continued two yeres banished. In the which season Goodwyn & his he or his retinue tooke dyuerse tymes prayes in the marches of England and in the ende drew to him such strength, that he was purposed to have entred the land with force, and to have warred upon the king. But by mediatours that favoured Erle Goodwyn, a peace Goodwyn againe was made betwene the king and him, so that in the ende he was receyued to grace with his sonnes, and his daughter the kinges wife restored to hir first and former honour. And for this peace to continued for Goodwynes part was deliuered for pledges, a sonne of his called Wilnotus, and a sonne of Swanus, named Hacum, or as Polydore writeth, two sonnes of Goodwyn, named Tosto, and Biorna. The which two pledges, king Edward sent to William Duke of Normandy to be kept. And Algarus the sonne of Leofricus Erle of Chester, to whome the king had geuen the Erledome of Harolde, & he ruled it discretly in the tyme of his absence, and at his returne, delyuered it to him againe, gladly and without grudge.

¶ And after he had taryed here a certeyne of time to his contentation, and pleasure, he returned to his awne with great giftes and rewardes. And Emma the kinges mother Emma the kings dyed shortly after, and was buried at Winchester. And Swanus the eldest sonne of Goodwyn went to Ierusalem, and from thence toward Licia, and dyed by the way of colde that he had taken in goving barefoote. Then the Normanes that had geven to the king euill counsaile against Englishe men, were by Goodwyn and his friendes exiled. Among which, Robert Archebishop of Cantorbury that had spoken sore against them was one, of whome Fabian speaketh.

¶ In the. xiij. yere of this king, the Scottes rebelled against him. Wherfore Seward Erle of Northumberland by the kinges commaundement gathered a great host, and entered that land, and behaued him so manfully, that in the ende he subdued the Scottes, and chased the king out of his Country, so that after king Edward gaue that kingdome vnto Malcoline,

But he had no soner spoken the word, and put A notable the bread in his mouth, but he was choked. Then the king commaunded him to be plague and just independ of the board by the learner of drawen from the boord by the legges, & so was he conneied to Winchester, & there God.

Then his sonnes that stoode by drewe him from the Table, and vnwares vnto the king, buried him in the olde Abbey of the same Citie.

¶ But Marian the Scot sayth, that as Erle Goodwyn sate at the kinges Table on Easter Monday, he was sodeynly taken with a Palsey, or some other sicknesse, and dyed the thirde day after: and his Lordshippes were geuen vnto Harolde his eldest sonne then liuyng, and Haroldes Erledome was genen to Algarus the sonne of Leofricus, which was the Erledome of Oxforde after some wryters.

It was not long after that king Edward sent vnto the fourth Henry then Emperour of Almaine, Aldredus Bishop of Worcester with other noble men, praiying him that he would sende into England his Cosyn Edward the sonne of Edmond Ironside, for so Edward the much as he entended to make hym as Heyre. The which request was fulfilled, so that sonne of Ed-mond Ironside, he came into England sone after, the which as ye have heard before was named Edward returned into the outlaw. But as sayth Guydo and other, the yere after he came into England, he dyed shortly after at London and was buried at Westmynster.

The yere following king Edward through euill counsaile exiled without gilt Algarus the sonne of Leofricus, the which did associate himselfe with Griffyn king or Duke of Griffyn prince Wales, and destroyed the Countrie of Herforde, and did much harme to the Towne, and belled. set the Mynster on fyre, and slue. vij. Then the king sent Harold against him, the which chased the Welshmen into their awne boundes, and recoursed the sayde Towne by appointment, holden by the sayde Algarus, and trenched it about and amended Algarus was all hurtes before done by the Welshmen, and lastly reconciled the sayde Algarus and his cled to the company vnto the kings grace.

About the xv. yere of king Edward dyed the Noble Duke Seward, ruler of Northumberlande of a Fluxe, of whome Guydo reherseth dyuers notable actes whiche I passe ouer. Of him it is read that when he sawe well he should dye, he caused his armour to be put vpon him, and so armed and sitting in a Chayre, sayde, thus it becom- Seword ruler of meth a knight or man of honour to dye, and not living in his bed as another meane man, Northumberand so he dyed and was buried at Yorke, or as Reynulph writeth died at Yorke and was a valiant couburied in the Abbey of Galmahan which he himselfe had founded. And his Erledom was rage. after genen to Tosty sonne of Goodwyn.

In the. xvj. yere of this king dyed also the good Erle Leofricus Erle of Mertia and of Chester, & was buryed in the Abbay of Couentrie the which before he and his wyfe Godina had buylded. This man purchased manye great privileges for the towne of Couentrye & made it free from any maner of Tolle, Except onely of Horsse. For the which also to have free, the common fame telleth, and after long request made to the king by his wyfe Coventrie made named Godina, he graunted her to have it thereof freed, if that she woulde ride naked thorow the Towne, which she did, by meane whereof, it was freed,

¶ But Gaufride sayth that this gentle and good Lady did not onely for the freeing of the said Citie and satisfying of her husbands pleasure, graunt vnto her sayde Husband to ryde as aforesayde: But also called in secret maner (by such as she put speciall trust in) all those that then were Magistrates and rulers of the sayde Citie of Couentrie, and vttered vnto them what good will she bare vnto the sayde Citie, and how shee had moued the Erleher husband to make the same free, the which ypon such condition as is afore mencioned, the sayde Erle graunted vnto her, which the sayde Lady was well contented to doe, requiring of them for the reverence of womanhed, that at that day and tyme that she should ride (which was made certaine vnto them) that streight commaundement should be geuen throughout all the City, that euerie person should shut in their houses and Wyndowes, and none so hardy to looke out into the streetes, nor remayne in the stretes, vpon a great paine, so that when the tyme came of her out ryding none sawe her, but her husbande and such as were present with him, and she and her Gentlewoman to wayte upon her galoped thorough the Towne, where the people might here the treading of their Horsse, but they saw her not, and so she returned to her Husbande to the place from whence she came, her honestie saued, her purpose obteyned, her wisedome much commended, and her husbands imagination vtterly disapointed. And shortly after her returne, when shee had arayed and apparelled her selfe in most comely and seemely maner, then shee shewed her selfe openly to the people of the Citic of Couentrie, to the great ioy and maruellous reiovsing of all the Citizens and inhabitants of the same, who by her had receyued so great a benefite.

Then Algarus his sonne was Erle after him. But Mathew of Westmynster wryteth that his wyfe Godina obteyned the sayde liberties of the Erle her husbande then Lorde of the sayde Towne.

Algarus againe accused and banished the realme.

I Harold the eldest sonne of Goodwyn was now in great authoritie, and ruled much of the kings armie. The yere following Algarus was accused by malice, and was banished the lande. Wherefore he fled against a Griffyn Duke of Wales as he before had done, of whome he was ioyously receyued and mainteyned. The king being thereof informed, sent Harold into Wales to make warre vpon Griffyn, the which quit him in so knightly wise, that he chased the Welshmen, brent the sayde Griffyns palace at a place called Rutlane, and destroyed his nauie, and then returned into England about mydlent. about the Rogation dayes the sayde Harold and his brother Tosty were sent thether againe with a strong armie: at which season they destroyed a great part of Wales, and in conclusion brought the Welshmen vnto due subjection, and forced them to geue pledges for the continuance of the same. And that done pursued so sore upon Griffyn by the commaundement of the king, that in the ende, his awne people for to purchase their owne Griffyn prince of lyues slue him, and sent his head vnto Harold in the Moneth of August: so that after the death of this Griffyn, by the commaundement of the king, the Countrie of Wales was committed to the guyding of the two brethren of Griffyn, the which fauoured more the kings partie in the time of warre, than they did their brothers. And this warre in Wales thus brought to an ende, Harold by his pollecie reconciled againe Algarus Erle of Mertia to § kings grace, so that he continued in his fauour during his lyfe after.

Algarus once againe reconciled to the kinges fauour.

> ¶ In the. xx. yere of the reigne of the king: Harold sayled toward Normandy to visite his brother Wilnotus and Hacun his Nephew, the which as ye before haue heard, were layd there for pledges for the peace to be holden upon Erle Goodwynes side against the king. But he in his course of sayling was wether driven by tempest into the Countrie or Prouynce of Pountith, where he was taken as a prisoner of the Duke there, and sent vnto Duke Wylliam of Normandy: The which forced hym to sweare that he in tyme following should mary his daughter, and that after the death of king Edward, he should keepe the lande of England to his behoofe, according to the will and minde of king Edward as some writers affirme. And it is further written that Harold to be in the more fauour of Duke Wylliam, shewed him that king Edward had in the presence of his Barony of England, admitted the sayde Wylliam for his heyre, and couenaunted with him, that if he ouer lyued the king, he would in safe wise keepe the lande to his vse. For the which tydings and promise, the sayde Wylliam graunted him his daughter to wife, which then was vnder lawful yeres of mariage with a great dower.

¶ And for to cause Harold to be the more constant in his promes, he deliuered to him Hacum his Nephewe and sonne of his brother Swanus, the which he much desyred, and kept still Wilnotus the brother of the sayde Harolde. After which couenaunts, sufficiently stablished and enacted: Harold departed from Duke William with great and riche giftes, and shortly after landed in England. And at his comming to the kinges presence, he shewed to him all that he had done in the aforesayd matters, wherewith the King was well contented, as affirmeth Fabian mine aucthour,

Mathew of Westminster reporteth the matter thus. Tostius Erle of Northumberland, tooke his brother Harold by the heare as he was bringing a Cup of wine vnto the king, and pulled him downe vnto the ground, all that stood by and behelde it merueylyng Then Harold againe desirous to be reuenged vpon him for that vilanye, tooke him in his armes, and floong him on the pauement: But by and by the kinges Garde ranne betwixt them, and parted them. After the which altercation, Tostius departed the Court in a great rage, and comming to the Citic of Herford, where Harolde had prepared a great feast agaynst the kinges commyng, slue all his brothers seruauntes that he found there, and mangled and cut them in peeces, and into euery vessell of Wine, Meethe; Ale, or any other kinde of drinke else, hee cast eyther a legge, an arme, or some other peece of the bodyes so mangled, sendyng the king woorde withall, that whensoeuer he came to his brothers house, he should be sure to finde powdred fleshe ynoughe to serue him, but if he would have delicates, he must then be faine to provide them himselfe. The which mocke of his when the king heard thereof, he commanded him for his sayde detestable fact and lewdenesse to be banished the Realme. But as Polidore wryteth, he was offended with him, and sayd vnto him as folciveth: Tolde I not thee before that this mischiefe and inconvenience would ensue hereof vnto this Realme by thy meanes, if thom wentest to William of Normandy: But God eyther turne this harde desteny from vs. or else if it must needes come to passe, graunt that it chaunce not in our dayes.

¶ This cruell deede sprang wide, so that for it he was hated of all men, in somuch that his awne Tenantes, the men of Northumberland, of which province he then was Lorde of, arose against him, and in the ende chased him into Flaunders, with a fewe personnes then awayting vpon him.

¶ But the verteous king Edward not beyng contented with the commons doyng, cousideryng it to be done without his aduice or commaundement, sent thether Herolde to do correction vpon the heades or Captaynes of the Northumbers: Wherof they beyng asserteyned, continued their strength and met with Harolde, and his people, and made A stout specho them to vnderstand that they were freely borne, and freely norished, and that they might subjectes.

not suffer the cruelnesse of any Dukes.

When Harolde had received this message, and had well regarded the strength of the Northumbers, he perceived that without great effusion of blood, he could not correct the misdoers: Wherefore it seemed to him better to fauour the Country, then to take heede of the singular profite of his brother, so that he returned to the king with this aunswere, and purchased their pardon of him, and also so laboured the king, that he assigned them another Duke or Erle that was named Malcharus. And Tostius his brother with his wife and children remayned in Flaunders during the kinges life.

This king also purged the olde and corrupt lawes, and picked out of them a certain, The common which Residue.

which were most profitable for the commons and those were called the common lawes of this Realme, for the institution whereof, there happened many commocions and much trouble.

¶ And nowe for an ende of this story, this king dyed the fourth day of Ianuary, when he had reigned. xxiij. yeres. vij. Monethes, and odde dayes, and was buried at Westminster, and left after him no childe, for he was accompted for a virgine when he dyed.

¶ It is written of him also that he was wont by touch of hand, to heale such as were diseased of the kinges evill, & that of him other kinges and princes of this Realme have as it were by inheritance received the gift of healing that disease, by touch of hand and certeyne prayers, and ceremonies vsed withall, like as they received also the custome to halowe and consecrate Rynges on Good Friday, which were reputed good and analylable against the Crampe.

.MAckbeth reigned among the Scottes. xvj. yeres, which at the beginning did many thinges to the profite of the Realme: but afterward he became a cruell Tyrant, and was vanquished and slaine by Malcolme, by the ayde of the Englishe men.

IN this yere of our Lorde, Malcolme recovered the crowne of Scotland, and reigned. xxxv. yeres.

HArolde the second sonne of Erle Goodwyn, and last king of Saxons. This man forgettyng his promes before made to William Duke of Normandy, tooke vpon him as king, and was crowned of Aldredus then Bishop of Yorke, or as some wryte, set the crowne on his awne heade without any consecration or ceremonies. Albeit, as Guydo affirmeth, some of the Lordes entended to have made Edgar Adeling king, which Edgar as affirmeth the sayde aucthours, was sonne to Edwarde that was the sonne of Edmond Ironsyde, and named of some Edward the outlawe. But because this Edward was yong, and chiefly considering the strength and riches of Harolde, therefore Harolde obteyned the Crown. Howebeit Marian sayth, that king Edward before his death, ordeyned that Harolde shoulde be king after him.

and established good lawes.

In short tyme after that Harolde was made king, Tostie his brother which as afore-sayde was chased into Flaunders, made him a Nauye of. lx. small sayles of Shippes, or as Mathew of Westminster saith, of. xl. and sayled about the Isle of Wight, and tooke prayes within the sayde Isle, and in diverse places of Kent. And from thence he sayled into Lynsey, and did there much harme both with fire and sworde. But sone after he was chased thence by Edwyn, and Malcarus, Erles of Martia and Northumberlande: And then he sayled into Scotland, and finding little comfort there, he went from thence into Norway to desyre ayde of King Harolde, who there reigned at that tyme.

tered the mouth of the river of Tyne.

¶ When Harolde of England had knowledge of this great Nauie of the Norwayes, he sent vnto the aforenamed Erles of Mertia, and Northumberland, commaunding them to withstand their landing, while he gathered his strength. Then the aforesayde Erles sped them toward the Norwayes, and gaue vnto them a sharpe and a strong fight, but in the ende the Englishe men were put to the worse, and were faine to geue backe, so that the enemies entered further into the land. The king heering of the discomfiture of hys people, made the more hast towarde his enemies, so that within sixe dayes after he came to Semysford Bridge.

In this foresayde place both hostes ioyned and fought a most sharpe and cruell battaile, wherein was ouerthrowne manye a lustic knight vpon the Englishe partie, but many mo vpon the Norwayes, so that in the ende Harold their king was slaine, and that of the Olanus brother to the sayde Harold Harfager, with Paulus Duke of the Olanus the bro-Isles or Orkeies were there taken prisoners. The which v king caused to be sworne vnto Harfager & Pauhim that they should keepe all such promises as they there to him made, and tooke good hous y' duke of pledges for the same, and after suffred them to returne from whence they came. Fabian. prisoner.

*AXONS

It is also specially remembred of the sayde Authour that one Knight stood vpon the A valiaunt aforesayde Bridge, and with his Axe defended the passage, Maugre the whole host of the Knight. Englishmen, and slue. xl. Englishmen or mo with his Axe, and might not be ouercome vntill an Englishman went vnder the Bridge with a Boate or Whyrry and sticked him vpward with his speare through an hole of the Bridge.

Tor this victory, Harold was highly enflamed with pride and also with couetousnesse, Harold inflamed with pride and so that he deuyded not the prayes of his enimies among hys Knightes, but he kept them courtousnesses. to himselfe, or gaue parte vnto such Knightes as he fauoured, and spared it from them that had well deserved, by reason whereof he lost the favour of many of his Souldiours.

In this time the daughter of Duke Wylliam, the which Harold should have maried, died within age, but not before Harold (sayth Polydore) was king, wherefore Harold Haroldes exthought himselfe the more discharged of his promes before made to her father. But cuses to William duke of William warned Harold of couenants broken, and mixed threates with prayers and peti-Normandy. cions. Wherevnto Harold aunswered, that a nice foolishe couenant ought not to be holden, namelye the behest of other mennes right and kingdome, without the whole assent of the Schatours of the same lande. And furthermore, a lewde othe might and ought to be broken, and specially when it is compelled to be sworne for neede or for dreede.

Vpon these aunsweres receyued by Duke William from king Harold, in the meane William duke of Normandy while that messengers went and came, Duke William gathered his Knightes, and prepar-maketh his proed his nauie, and all other thinges necessary vuto the warre, and had the assent of the usion to come Lordes of his lande to ayde and assist him in his journey. The like preparation also (sayth Polidore) was made by Harold to defende the realme from the inuasion of the Normans.

And moreover he so informed the Bishop of Rome then named Alexander the se-Alexander Bicond, that he confirmed him in taking of that voyage, and sent vnto him a Banner, the shop of Rome sedeth vnto Wilwhich he willed him to beare in the Ship that he himselfe should sayle in. And so having ha duke of Norall thinges in a redinesse, he sped him to the sea syde, and tooke shipping in the Hauen mandy a Baner to carry with of Saint Valery, where he tarved a long tyme before he could have a meete and conver him in his ship nient winde: for the which the Souldiours murmured and grudged, and sayd it was a against England. madnesse and greatly displeasing vnto God, to desyre a nother mannes kingdome by strength, & namely when God withstandeth it by the working of his Elemet.

At the last the wind came about, and he tooke shipping, and helde his course to-warde England vpon this ground and title following.

The first and principall was to chalenge his right, and to have the dominion of the thiefe cause of land that to him was genen of king Edward his nephew.

2 The seconde was to be reuenged of the death and cruell murther of his Nephew lenge of the Alphred, and brother of king Edward, which he ascribed wholy vnto king Harolde.

3 The thirde was, for to be reuenged on the wrong that was done vnto Robert, that was Areuegemet for Archebishop of Cauntorbury, which as he was enformed was exiled by the meanes and the banishing of Robert Archbilabour of Harolde in the tyme of king Edward, as is aforesayde.

The landing of Duke William keping his course, at the last landed in Sussex, at place called Peue-bury.

The landing of nessey nere vnto Hastings. And in his goyng out of his ship, & taking the land, his one william duke foote slipped, & the other stack fast in the sand: the which one of his knightes sawe, & of Normandy. beyng nere vnto him, sayd: now Sir Duke thou holdest Englande, and thou shalt soone be turned from a Duke to a King.

William duke of Realme of Eng-

take any prayes, or do any force to the people: for he sayd that it was reasonable that he should spare that thing that should be his awn.

Harold was now in the North parts.

At this time Harold was king in the North partes of England, and had knowledge of the landing of the Normanes, & he made all the haste towards them that he might, and gathered his strength out of the Countries as he came. But the Duke passed still forward. and at the last came to Kingstone, where he and his armie passed ouer the Thamys, and made such good speede that he came to London before the king, where he was holden out vntill he had put in good pledges, that he and his people should passe through the Citie without tariyng, the which he did, and so went through the Citie, and passed ouer London Bridge, and so returned againe into Sussex.

An vnskilful messenger.

Wing Harold entending to know the strength of his enimies sent spies into the Dukes hoste, the which made report vnto the king, that all Duke Williams Souldiours were priestes: For they had their vpper lippes and cheekes shauen, and the Englishmen at those dayes used the heare of their vpper lippes shad and not shauen. But Harold vnte that aunswered and sayde, they be no priestes, but are stoute and valyaunt Knights.

Good sounseil is not not alwayes regarded.

Then Gurth or rather Biorno, one of the yongest brethren of Harold, counsayled him that he should stand a parte, and suffer him with other of his Lordes to fight with the Normanes, forsomuch as he was sworne vnto the Duke, and they were not, saiving moreouer, that if they were slaine or ouerthrowne, that yet he might defende his quarell, and fight for his Country.

Thre offers Harold by William duke of Normandy.

¶ In this meane time, Duke Wylliam sent a Monke vnto king Harold and made him made vate king three offers. The first that according to his othe he should render the land, or delyuer it vp vnto him as his awne proper possession, and that done, to take it againe of him, and to hold it of him as in Fee, and so to reigne under him for terme of his lyfe, and after hys death to returne it to hym againe, or to such a one of his sonnes as he would assigne it vnto.

Tor thirdly in exchewing of the shedding of Christian mens bloud, that he would defend his quarell in his awne person against the Duke, and they two onely to trie the matter. by dent of sworde.

¶ But Harold refused these offers, and sayde he would trie his quarrell by dent of swordes, and not by one sworde, and that he and his Knightes and Souldiours would defende their Countrie against all straunge Nations, praising God to judge the right betwene them twaine.

When Duke Wylliam had receyued this aunswere from Harold, and saw well that there was no meane, but to abide fortune in battaile, he charged his people that might watch, to occupie themselues in prayer, and specially the Priestes and the religious people, where the Englishmen gaue themselves to drinking and surfeyting. Fabian.

Good counsavle if it were true.

Battail Abbey

in Sussex. Thilfer.

Then upon the Morrow being Saturday, and the xiiij. daye of October, both hostes assayled other in the place where stood the Abbay of Battaile in Sussex. In the beginning of this battaile a Norman called Thilfer splayed a Banner before the hoste of the Normans and slue an Englishman that came against him, and after that another, and so the thirde, and at the laste was slaine himselfe.

Then the Holberds smote together with a great showt and cry, and they fought sore a long season. And the Englishmen defended themselves manfully, and the better for that they kept them whole & close together without scattering or spreding abrode. Wylliam perceyued, he gaue a signe vnto his knightes, that they should geue back, and made a countenance as though they did flie. Then the Normans enbatteled their footemen, & set Horsemen for winges on euerie side. By the which, while the Englishmen were dissenered, and soone out of array, the Normans turned againe vpon the Englishmen, and slue them downe on euerie side.

. This battaile was sore foughten of the Englishmen, so that Duke Wylliam was thrise felled felled that day, by reason that thre horses were slaine under him. Lastly Harold was King Harold wounded in the eye with an arrowe, and fell to the ground and was slaine, and his people liam the Conscattered, so that well was he that might saue him selfe by fligng. Then Duke William querour had the buryed his men that there were slaine, and suffered his enemyes to do the same.

When the death of Harold was knowne to the Erles of Mertia and of Northuberland, the which for streightnesse of way could not bring their people to that field, or else for that they wilfully withdrew themselues from Harold, because he did none otherwise depart the prayes amongst them & their knightes at the former field of the Norwayes: then they drewe the next way to London, and tooke Agatha Haroldes wyfe, and sent her to Chester. Agatha, Ha-And they and Aldredus Bishop of Yorke with the Londoners, were agreed and promised rolles wife committed to Cheseyther to other that they would make Edgar Atheling king, and defend his right to the vt-ter. termost of their powers. But that promes notwithstanding, when they heard of the great strength that dayly fell to Duke William, and of his provisions, they were faine to breake that apointment. And the sayde Erles submitted themselves, and gave vnto him pledges, and became to him his liege men by homage and fealtie.

¶ And thus when Harold had ruled the lande, from the fift day of Ianuary to the, xiiii, day of October, he was slaine, when he had reigned nine Monethes and odde dayes, and was buryed at the Monasterie of Waltham, which he before had founded.

¶ And here endeth the gouernement of the Saxons, the which continued from the first The ende of the yere of the reigne of Hengest in the yere of our Lord. 475. vnto this conquest, which was government of the space of. 590. yeres.

NOwe for as much as it pleased Almightie God to suffer this duke to conquere so noble a land, and to be Lorde and souereigne over so many noble inheritours as then were, and nowe are within the same. I thinke it therefore contenient to show the dissent of the same

Duke, and howe nere of blood he was vnto king Edward that last dyed.

¶ Rollo who was first an Heathen, and after christened and named Robert, who maried The Pedegree of Will pro Con Silla the daughter of Charles the Simple, sometime king of Fraunce, and had for her querour. dower the Duchy of Normandy, which he ruled xiiij, yeres, and the sayde Robert had by Silla a sonne named William, the which after was called Longa Spata, that is to say, William with the long Sworde. This William was Duke after his father, xxv. yeres, and left after him a sonne named Richard, which was named Richard the Hardy, and was the thirde Duke, and reigned, lij. yeres and had by his wife a sonne named Richard the good and Emma that was wyfe to Egeldred and mother to the last Edward the king. After blindle good Richard was Duke, and reigned. xxviij. yeres, and left after him two sonnes, Richard, and Robert. The first some after two yeres, was slaine by treason of his brother Revent so that Robert was then Duke, and reigned. ix. yeres: The which Robert was fa her valo this Duke William, and begat him of his concubine, called Arlet. And this William was the seventh Duke of Normandy, and ruled it before he conquered England. xxx. yeres. And thus it may apere that Emma was Aunte to Duke Robert, father of William Conquerour, and Emma was mother vnto king Edward, and so this duke William and king Edward of England were by the fathers syde cosyn Germaynes removued.

A SUMMARIE OF THE AFORESAID HYSTORIE.

Briteyn first inhabited by Brute. Conquered by the Romanes.

Briteynes receyned the faith of christ.

Conquered and ouercom by the Saxons.

Conquered & Danes.

Conquered & quietly possessed by the Normanes.

IN the former part of this Hystorye it maye appere vnto you (that after the opinion of most wryters) Brute did first inhabite this land, and called it then after his awne name Briteyn, in the. 2855, yere after the creation of the Worlde, and in the. 1108, yere before the birth of our sauiour Christ. And the same land of Briteyn was conquered by C. Iulius Cesar, and made tributarye to the Romaynes in the fiftie yere before Christes Incarnation, and it so continued. 483. yeres. And the Briteynes reigned without Tribute, and vnder Tribute, from Brute vntill the fourth yere of the reigne of King Cadwalader. which was in the yere of our Lorde, 686. And so the Briteynes had continuance of the Gouernement of this land the space of 1794. yeres. And then was the kingdome of Britevn deuided into seuen kingdomes. And Britevn received the fayth of Christ in the seventh yere of the reigne of King Lucy, which was in the. C. lxxxvii. yere after the birth of Christ. And after the Britons, entered the Saxons in the third yere of Vortiger, and in the yere of our Lord. 450, and they gouerned vntill the last yere of King Athelstane, which was in the. 938, yere of Christ. And so the tyme of the Saxons first entraunce into this Realme, and the tyme of their Government, was the space of. 487. yeres. But yet in the time of the Gouernement of the Saxons, that is to say, in the. ix. yere of the reigne of king Brithricus, which was in the yere of our lord. 787. The Danes entered into the Realme, and spoyled and persecuted the people therein most grieuously: And at the last Sweno, or Swayn the Dane, obteyned the possession and kingdome of this Realme, guercome by the in the yere of our Lord. 1012. and he reigned three yeres. And after him reigned Canutus his Sonne. xix. yeres. And after him Harold his sonne three yeres. And after him Hardikenitus the sonne of Canutus, who reigned three yeres, and was the last king of the Danes, for then the Danes were vtterly expulsed and dryuen out of the Realme, which was in the yere of our Lorde. 1042. And thus it may apere that the Danes reigned kinges of this Realme the space of xxviii. yeres. And it may also apere, that from the time of the first entery of the Danes into this Realme, vnto their last expulsion, was. CC. lv. yeres. And finally, the Normanes entered this lande, and made a Conquest of this Realme, as before is expressed, in the yere of our Lord. 1067. Which is sithen vnto this present yere of our Lorde. 1568. the number of fine hundreth yeres.

of England as before is shewed, began his dominion over this Realme of England the. xv. day of October, in the yere of our Lord. M. Ixvij. and was crowned king of the same at William Con-Westminster voon Christmasse day next following of Aldredus Archebishop of Yorke: querour because at that time Stigandus Archebishop of Cauntorbury, was then absent, and durst not come in the presence of the king, vnto whome the king ought no great fauour, as hereafter shall apere. Some write that the sayde Duke required the aforesayde Stigand to consecrate him, because the office of consecrating of kings had alwayes apperteyned vnto the Archebishops of Cauntorbury. But forasmuch as he had aspired vnto the crowne by violence and vnlawfull meanes, the sayd Stigand would not be present at his coronation, nor in any wise assent thervnto. Some againe say that the Duke refused to be crowned of him, because he was no lawfull Bishop, inasmuch as he received his Pall of Benet the tenth who was an vsurper of the Popedome, and not a lawfull Pope as they then tearmed him. And some againe make the cause of his rejection to be the corrupt life of the sayde Stigand. Polidore wryteth that immediatly vpon the overthrow of king Harold, duke William marched towards London, where Edwin Erle of middle England, and Marcarus or Marcatus Erle of Northumberland, earnestly mindyng the conscruation of their country, and to defende the libertie thereof, moued the nobilitie and commons to crowne Edgar Atheling, who onely was left aliue of the blood royall of the Realme. Vnto the which sentence although many did accorde, yet there were some of diverse opinions concerning this matter: But for all that, at the last they laid all their heades together and aduysed themselves howe and which way they might honestly submit them selves vnto the savde Duke. But afterwardes, when he was come to the Citie, they made an ende of consultation, and enery man for feare submitted himselfe and receyued him as though they had bene right ioyous of his comming, deliuering him hostages, & praiving him withall to receive them to grace, and that they might be at peace with him: To whome the sayde Duke aunswered againe right curteously, making them many large and fayre promises, and that done, he was by them (although all were not like joyfull at that solemnitie) crowned king vpon Christmasse day as aforesayde. But I finde written by one William Thorne Monke of Cauntorbury, among other things by him veric well noted and collected, of the beginning of the gouernance of william the Conquerour this story following. After (sayth he) that the sayd Duke William had obteyned the victory, and had slaine king Haro'de, and in like maner had taken the Citie of London, streight wayes he directed and bent his journey towardes the Castell of Douer, to the entent he might conquere that also, with the other parts of Kent. The which beyng perfittly vuderstood: the Archebishop Stigand, and the Stigand Arche Abbot Egelsyne, beyng then the chiefe potestates and gouernours of all Kent, vnder- bishop of Caa-torbury prestanding all the Kingdome and Realme to be in an euill case, and that where as before the serued the commyng of the sayde William there were no slaues or bondmen, now that all, aswell liberties of Kent. noble as meane men were brought vnder the perpetuall scrayle voke of the Normanes, by their neighbours daungers, taking an occasion first of their countries safegard & of their awne, gathered together at Cauntorbury the whole people and force of Kent, to whome they declared the daungers hangyng ouer theyr heades, the misery of their neighbors, the insolency of the Normanes, and the hardnesse of scruile condition: And the whole people rather desyring to ende their haplesse lyfe, then to beare the vnacustomed yoke of seruitude, with a comon consent decreed to meete Duke William, & to fight A wise and very with him for their auncient lawes and libertyes. The aforenamed Stigand the Arche-good policye. bishop, and Egelsyne the Abbot, chosyng rather death in warre, then to see the miseries of theyr Nation, beyng hartened by the examples of the Machabees, were made Capitaynes of the Armie, and at the day apoynted, all the Kentishemen met at Swanescome, beyng hidden in the woodes, and wayted the comming of the aforesayd Duke William. And because sufficient warinesse, and heed takyng in doubtfull cases doth no harme, they

by their former talke were agreed among themselves, that when the Duke approched nere, all passages beyng shut vp, least any wayes he should escape, that every severall person, as well horsemen as footemen should carry a greene bough in his hand. The next day after, the Duke comming into the fieldes and territories nere vnto Swanescome. and seeing all the country ready set to hedge him in, and marking also a moueable wood with moderate pace drawing nere toward him, not without astonishment of his mynde, much maruayled at it. And assoone as the Captaynes of the Kentishemen espied Duke William enclosed in the middest of their armie, they caused their Trumpets to be sounded, and their Banners to be displayed, and threwe downe their Boughes, and with their Bowes beyng bent, and their swordes drawen, and with their speares and other kinde of Armour, beyng set in a redinesse, shewed themselues ready to fight it out. At the which sight Duke william with his adherentes & complices, not without cause were much amased. And he that a little before perswaded himselfe to have helde all England in his fist, now doubted much of his awne lyfe. The Archebishop Stigand therefore, and the Abbot Egelsyne were incontinently sent foorth to Duke William on the part and behalfe of the Kentishmen, who did their message vnto him after this sort. Sir Duke beholde here the people and inhabitants of Kent commeth foorth to meete thee, and to receive thee as their liege Lorde and gouernour, requiryng peace at thy handes vnder this condicion, that all they and theyr posteritie may quietly and peaceably enjoy their auncient libertyes, and that they may vie still their olde and accustomed lawes, otherwise they are nowe in a readinesse presentlye to bid thee battayle, beyng readyer here altogether to leave their lyues, then to depart from their auncient lawes and customes, or to submit themselues vnto slauish seruitude, which they have not yet bene acquainted with. The Duke perceyving himselfe to be entrapped, and in a streight, debating a while this matter with his wise Capteynes, noting also wisely that if he should susteyne a repulse or any hinderance at these peoples handes, which were accompted the key of England, that then all the bottom of threde which he a little before had sponne, were vntwisted, and that all his hope and securitie were turned into daunger, did not so willingly as wisely graunt all that which the Kentishmen demaunded of him, and sure pledges therevpon geuen from eyther parte to other. And then the joyfull Kentishe men did conduct the gladded Normanes, and yelded to them the Countie of Kent and noble Castell of Douer, and so the auncient liberties of Englishe men, and their Countries, lawes, and customes, which before the comming of William Duke of Normandy, were equally held through the whole realm of England, now was onely in the Countie of Kent, and that by the industry of Stigand Archebishop, and Egelsyne the Abbot of the Monastery of S. Austyns in Cauntorbury as aforesayd, and is vnto this day inuiolably observed and kept, namely that tenure which at this day is called Gauell kynde. Thus farre William Thorne.

The names of the Gentlemen that came out of Normandy with William Duke of that prouynce when he conquered this noble Realme of England. The which I have taken out of an auncient recorde that I had of Mayster Clarencius King at armes.

Nowe when as king William had possessed the imperial Crowne and Diademe of this Realme of England as aforesayde: He then as a conquerour altered and chaunged the whole state and government thereof. And first by displaying of such as before had borne rule, he advaunced the Lordes and people of his awne Nation vnto the highe and and principall offices and dignities thereof, insomuch that Reynulph sayth, that there was skant left in England a Lorde that was an English man, and that then it was a shame to be called an English man. Polli. 7. Cap. 4. And after he caused a Proclamation to be made, that all former grauntes, liberties, and princileges geuen or graunted by any Prince or King of this Realme aforetyme, should be from thence forth viterly voyde to all constructions and purposes, except suche as should be renued and confirmed by him. by reason whereof, all degrees of people in the Realme, namely all fraternities, corporations, and bodies politique, were forced to become newe suters to him, and compelled to make King Willia ga- newe fines at his will and pleasure: And by this meanes he gathered into his possession the greatest part of all the ryches and treasure of the lande, as well of the Clergie, as of That done, he changed the lawes of the Realme, and made such newe lawes as were profitable to himselfe, and grieuous to the people, and he caused those lawes to be set forth in the Norman language to advaunce his awne tongue as a worthy and famous spech, and condemning ours as vile & barbarous: The which lawes are yet wyth vs in the same tongue.

thered great tresure. Lawes altered.

King Willia sayled into Normandy.

and Mertia.

While king William was thus occupied as abouesayde, it so chaunced that the people of Normandie began to quarrell among them selves, and there was such parttakying among them, that if it had not been looked vnto in tyme, it had lyke to have turned to the destruction and confusion of the whole Duchy. Wherefore king William for the pacifying therof was forced to gather an armie, and to leave England for a while, and sayle into Normandie. And at his departure out of Englande, when he had set thinges in good order to his minde, he betooke the government of the Realme to hys brother on the mothers syde named Odo, Bishop of Bayon, and in the Lent next following he sayled into Normandy, & led with him the chiefe Lordes & rulers of England, for feare they should have made any commocion or sturre in the tyme of his absence, with all those Marcarus & Ed- also that lay for hostages and pledges. Among the which number, were the Erles Mar-Northumberland carus, or Morcatus, and Edwyn aforesayde, Dukes of Northumberland, and Mertia, and also Stigandus Archebishop of Cauntorbury, and Edgar Ethelyng. To the which Stigandus, king william shewed great reuerence and countenaunce of much loue, and hartie fauour, but all proued great dissimulation, as after appeared by his deposyng, and emprisoning at Winchester a long tyme. And beyng arrived in Normandy, he passed through the countrie triumphauntly, and like a conquerour. But Polidore sayth that the cause of his goyng thether was, that for as much as he sawe how that from thencefoorth he should be altogether occupied about the affayres of this Realme, and settyng of orders in the same, he would first set such a stay in his Duchy of Normandie, that nothing might lightly happen afterwardes, by reason whereof he should be compelled to make his repayre thether againe.

The next yere when king William had sped his businesse in the sayde Countrie, he returned into England with great pompe, and shortly after set a sore taxe vpon the Eng. Taxes begat relishe men, yea, so grieuous was he vnto them, that he neuer ceased to burthen them with newe taxes and impositions. Of the nobles he made so little accompt, that he seemed thereby howe he minded nothing else but their vtter destruction. By reason whereof in some partes of the land was there rebellion against him, namely in Deuonshire, & in Northumberland, but at the last he compelled them by force to obedience, and delt very cruelly with them. Many both of the Nobilitie and Commons he deprived as well of goodes as of aucthoritie and rule, and conferred the same vnto the Normanes and that for very small and light causes.

For these, and for other sterne and cruell deedes done by hym, the sayde Nobles were sore moved against him. And for that cause many of them fled the lande, some into Norway, and some into Denmarke, and some into one Countrie, and some into another. Marcarus, or Marcatus, Erle of Northumberland, and Edwyn Erle of middle England, with Edgar Athelyng, and dynerse other, as Edgars mother, and his two sisters Edgar Atheling Margaret, and Christian fled into Scotland. But another Chronicle (sayth Fabian) wry- w other fled into Scotland. teth that Edgar entending with Agatha his mother and his two sisters to have sayled into high Almayne or Hungary where he was borne, was by tempest of the Sca, dryuen into Scotland: where of Malcolyne or Malcolme then the thirde Scottishe king of that name, they were ioyously received. And in processe of tyme, the sayde Malcolyne cast such loue vnto the said Margaret, that he tooke her to wife, as before is touched in the story of Canutus. Of the which Margaret the sayde Malcolyne receyued two daughters, and six sonnes, wherof three, that is to say, Edgar, Alexander, and Dauid, were kinges of Scotland one after an other next after their father. And Molde one of the sayde daugh- Molde the ters, was afterwardes maried vnto Henry the first of that name king of England, and the aforesayd Marother daughter Mary was maryed to Eustace Erle of Bolovgne. Of Molde the first garet Queene of daughter, king Henry receiued two sonnes, named William, and Richard, the which ryed to Henrie both dyed before their father, as after shall apere. And he receyved also two daughters the first king of England of that named Molde and Mary, which Molde or Mawde was maried to Henry the fourth of name. that name, Emperour of Almaine. After whose death she was againe maryed to Geoffrey Plantagenet Erle of Aungeow. Of whom discended Henry surnamed Shortmantell, afterwards king of England by the name of Henry the second. And the other daughter Mary, was maryed to the Erle of Bloys, of whome discended Mawde, or Mary that was wife vnto king Stephen,

Nowe when king William had leuyed suche taskes vpon the Englishe men as is before sayde, and espied their grudgyng thereat, and also when he considered howe his Lordes were departed, he then had a neerer eye to the Lordes that remayned, and kept them a little strayter: But it was not long after, but that Marcarus was reconciled to the king, and yet after fayled and forsoke him againe. For this & other causes, king William highly advanced himselfe and his people with the possessions of this Realme, insomuch as they were greatly enriched, and the Englishe men in maner vterly decayed. Then cau-King Willia sed he foure Castels to be made, whereof two were set at Yorke, the thirde at Noting-made foure Castels ham, and the fourth at Lyncolne, and manned them all with Normanes, or as Polydore tless sayth one at Notingham, an other at Lyncolne, the thirde at Yorke, and the fourth at Hasting where he first landed. And this did he because that these foresayde places which were very commodius for the enemies, beyng thus manned and fortifyed might make all men afearde, & to beware how they went about to disturbe the state of the realme by any newe devised treason. And to make the people more quiet, and lesse able to rebell, he caused all their weapons and armor to be taken from them, and ordeyned also that every housekeper should be within his awne dores by eight of the clocke at night, and then to couer or rake vp his fyre, and go to bed. And because they should not passe that houre, he caused a Bell to be rong in every towne and village just at. viij. of the clocke, the which is vsed in most countries of England yet at this day, and is called in the Norman language, Couer le fue, which we new corruptly call Curfur,

About the thirde yere of his reigne: Harolde, and Canutus sonnes of Swanus king of Denmarke, came and sayled into the North part of Humber with a strong nauie of two hundred sayle and more, and in all haste drew them towardes Yorke. Whether Edgar his Danes landed Athelyng came vnto them bringgyng with him such English men as had before fled into Scotland, by whom his power was encreased. Then the Normanes which had the rule of the towne and Castelles aforesayde, fearing that the Englishe men would ayde the Danes, and with the houses of the Suburbes of the towne, have filled the towne ditches. set the Suburbes a fyre: Whereof the flame was so big, and with the winde so strong. that it tooke into the Citie, and brent a parte thereof with the Minster of Saint Peter. In tyme of which fyre the Danes by fauour of some of the Citizens entred the Citie. Fabian, and slue more than three thousande of the Normanes.

But Polidore reporteth the matter touching this invasion of the Danes farre otherwise as followeth: Whiles these thinges were done in England, the Englishe Lordes that were fled into Denmarke, ceased not to move Canutus the fourth then king of that Countrie, to warre upon the Normanes, and to inuent newe causes whereby they might the soner incense him therevoto, saiving how the crowne of England ought of right to apperteyne vnto the kinges of Denmarke, as vnto them vnto whome the possession thereof had beene in tymes past no lesse profitable than honourable: and for that cause it should not stande with his honour, to suffer the same to be vaiustlye possessed of a newe Lorde that had no right or just title therevato, specially sith the time selfe served so well for the purpose, in the which the Norman was so farre as yet from benefiting eyther the Englishe Nation, or such as bordred on them, that he nowe played the open tyraunt, and was hated of them all: And sayde further, that forsomuche as there was so great hope of victory and successe, specially if he would prevent his enemie, and take suche holdes and places as were very fit for his purpose, it behoued him not to stay or sleepe the matter. This done. Canutus beyng much moued with these and such lyke perswasions, determined with himselfe to make warre against the Normanes. And it followeth in the same wryter: I am not ignoraunt howe it is reported in the Englishe Chronicle, that this warre against the Normanes was not made of Canutus, but of his brother Harold by his perswasion: The which thing Savo Grammaticus a wryter of the Danish History doth not affirme, neyther is it likely to be true, because Harold was a quyet man of nature, and one that much desyred to eschew the trauayles of Martiall affayres and lyued not scarcely two yeres after he was made king, so that out of doubt it is, that he neuer durst be the aucthour of so great a warfare, neyther had he tyme or leysure therevnto. Hetherto Polidore. returne to the matter. It was not long after, but king William ouerthrewe them in battaile, and chased them to their shippes, and tooke so great displeasure with the inhabitants of that Prouince for reuolting to Canutus, that he destroyed the land living betweene Yorke and Durham in such wise, that. ix. yeres after it lay vnlaboured and vntilled, except the land of Saint Iohns of Beuerley onely.

countrie roud about vtterly destroyed. Famyn.

And of the famyn that the people of that Countrie sustayned afterward, great wonders are reported: For it is written that they were for necessitie compelled to eate all kinde of Vermine, as Cattes, Rattes, Dogges, and such lyke, so harde and streit they were kept by the warre of the king. And in that yere also Molde, or Mawde the wife of king William was crowned Queene of England, of Aldredus Archbishop of Yorke, and was also delyuered of a fayre sonne named Henry, who was afterwardes king of England and called

Henry the first of that name.

In the fourth yere of the reigne of this king the Scottes with Malcolyne, or Malcolme their king entered Northumberland, and wasted and destroyd sore that Countrie, and slue therein much people, and many they toke prisoners, and helde them as bonde men.

After this, king William (whose greedy and couetous appetite and desyre of treasure being not yet quenched with the former great taskes or payments set upon the people of this Realme) did by counsayle proceede further to enquire and search of all the Abbeyes.

in England, to vinderstand what ryches was in them, & after an Inuentary taken thereof, caused the same to be brought into his treasurie. And the same yere he caused the newe The building o Forest to be made in the Countrey of Southamton, for the finishing whereof he was enforced to pull downe diverse townes and Churches. xxx. myles of length, and stored the same with wilde beastes, and then made sharpe lawes for the maintenance and encrease of them, as the losse of even, and other lymmes.

And soone after there was a sinode or counsaile holden at Winchester of the Clergie of England. At the which counsayle were present two Cardinalles, sent from the second Alexander then Bishop of Rome. In this counsavle, Stigandus Archbishop of Cantorbury Stigand Archeaforesayd, was deprived from his dignitie, and that for three causes, as Fabian sayth. First bishop deprived. for that he had holden wrongfully that Bishoprike, while Robert the Archebishop was The second, because he receyued the Pall of Benet the. x. Byshop of Rome, who was compted an vsurper of the Papacie. The thirde, for that he occupied the sayde Stigandus Pall, without the aucthoritie of the Court of Rome. Polidore addeth a fourth cause, which Cauntorbury. was for that contrary vnto the Canons, he helde the Bishoprike of Winchester with the See of Cauntorbury.

And when Stigandus sawe himselfe brought into this thraldome, he then thought good to prove what the king who had before in the tyme of his prosperitie pretended so much frendship and good will towardes him, would do for him in this case. But where before he made him a louying and friendly countenaunce, and did vito him great reverence, then he chaunged all his mildenesse into stoutnesse, and excused himselfe by the Bishop of Romes Dissimulation. aucthoritie, so that in the ende Stigandus was depriued of his dignitie, and afterwardes committed to perpetuall prison in Winchester, where he dyed shortly after his sayd deposition.

It was reported of this Stigandus, that he was so couetous and sparing, that he woulde spende nothing more than he needes must, and vsed to sweare by All halowes, that he had not one pennie to blesse himselfe withall: But that othe was not found true, for after his death, there was found a little key about his necke, by reason whereof there was founde great treasure vnder the earth in mo places than one, as sayth Fabian.

In this counsayle also were put downe diuerse other Bishops, Abbots, and Priours, by Bishoppes dethe meanes of king William, and all to the entent that he might preferre Normanes to the princed. rule of the Church, as he had preferred his knightes to the rule of the Temporaltie, and by that meane stand in the more suretie of his estate, and bring riches and treasure to his possession.

In this counsayle also, Wolstane that then was Bishop of Worcester, was an earnest Wolstane bishop suter vnto the King for certeyne possessions fallen into hys handes by the death of Aldre- of Worcester, dus last Archbishop of Yorke, which were withholden from his See by the sayd Aldredus. But the king would not seme to viderstand his sute, for hurting the Church of Yorke. Fabian.

And shortly after the king gaue that Archebishopricke vnto Thomas a Chanon of Bayon, who was the first that buylded the Mynster of Yorke, and sent for Lanfranke then Abbot of Cane, and gaue vnto him the Archbishoprike of Cauntorbury. This Lanfranke was an Lanfranke. Italian borne, and a very good deuine, and right expert withall in the gouernement both of Spirituall and Temporall thinges. And soone after that he was made Archebishop of Cauntorbury, Thomas that before was chosen Archbishop of Yorke came vnto him to be sacred of him as the auncient vsage and custome was. Of whom Lanfranke required an othe, and required his profession in writing concerning his obedience vnto the See of Cauntor-Thomas answered and sayde, that he would neuer do that, except he might therof here sufficient aucthoritie and skilfull reasons, by the which it might apere that he should so do without any empechement or prejudice of his Church of Yorke.

Then the King callyng Lanfranke before him sayde, that the sayd Lanfranke trusted more in his cunning, than he did in good fayth or reason: But he aunswered so reasonably vnto the King, that in the ende, Thomas by the Kinges commaundement was faine to come againe to Lanfranke to be sacred, and wrote his profession with his awne hand, of his obedience, and read it, in the which was conteyned, that he shoulde be obedient in all that belongeth to the worship of God and all Christian faith, which done he was sacred, and so departed. And shortly after Lanfranke required the like othe and profession of all the Bishops of England.

Egelwinus Bishop of Duresme starued with hunger.

Isle of Ely.

In the fift yere of this Kinges reigne, Edwyn and Marcarus or Morcatus, Erles of Mertia and Northumberland, beyng in feare and daunger of their lives, voyded the kinges Court secretly, and rebelled for a little time: But at length it turned to both their harmes. For Edwyn was slaine as he went toward Scotland, or as some write in Scotland of his awne company, and Erle Marcarus, with the Bishop of Duresme named Egelwinus, tooke Marcarus & the the Isle of Ely for their sauegard. But the king helde them so short, that in processe of resme fled to the tyme they were faine to yelde and submit themselves to the kings grace and mercie. he sent the Bishop to the Abbey of Abingdon, to be kept there as prisoner, where he was so daintily fed, that at the length he dyed for hunger. But some writers report, that he was so high hearted and loftie of courage, that after he knewe that he should remaine there as Prisoner, he would neuer eate meate more, and Erle Marcarus was had to the Tower of London. But Polidore sayth he scaped out of the Isle in a ship, and fled into Scotland, which was the cause why the king warred anon after vpon the Scots. sixt yere of his reigne, he went with a great armie against them, and subdued Malcolme their king, and compelled him to do him both homage and fealtie. He also disherited Gospatrik Erle of Comberland, and exiled him the land, and gaue all Comberland with the honour of Carlisle to Raufe Meschynes, and made him Erle thereof. Also aboute Thenewe Forest this tyme, king William made the newe Forest in the Countie of Southhamten: And for the enlarging of the same, he ouerthrewe Townes and Churches a great number by the space of, xxx, myles, and replenished the same with Deere, and then made sharpe lawes for the encrease and maintenaunce thereof.

Lanfranke.

In the seventh yere of king William, Thomas Archebishop of Yorke, not beyng content to be under the rule and obedience of Lanfranke Archebishop of Cauntorbury, appealed to the Court of Rome, so that the sayde two Archebishoppes apered both in proper . person before Alexander Bishop of Rome. In whose presence Lanfranke, was so well favoured, that where Thomas above named, and Remigius Bishop of Dorchester, were for iust causes depriued of their Croyses and Ringes, he by his fauour and meanes (as sayth Fabian) restored them to their former dignitie. The cause of Thomas his deprivation was, for that he had holpen Duke William towarde his journey into England: for the which the said Duke promised him a Bisshoprick if hee obtained victory. And the other was deprived for that he was proued a Priests sonne.

The primacye of Cauntorbury.

Then Thomas moued the cause of the Primacie of Cauntorburie, and of the subjection that to him should belong, and sayde that these two Sees were farre asonder, that is to say, Cauntorbury and Yorke, and that neyther of them by the constitution of Gregorie shoulde be subject vnto another, but that the one is more worthie than the other, for somuchelas hee is of elder tyme. To this aunswered Lanfranke and sayde that the constitutions of Gregorie made no mencion of Cantorbury, but of Yorke and London. Then the Bishop of Rome remitted this matter to be determined before the king, and the Bishops of England, and he gaue the Pall to Lanfranke.

But because this worde or terme Pall is to many vnknowen, I will therefore here shew vnto you what thing it is. This Pall is an indowment that euerie Archbishop must haue, and he is not in full aucthoritie of an Archbishop (by the Bishop of Romes ordinance) vntill he have received the Pall, and it is a thing of wnite Sylke, the bredth of a Stole that the Priest was wont to weare at his masse, but it is of another fashion. And that ye may the better knowe it, if ye looke vpon the armes of any Archebishop, there ye shall see it. set out in white with a great many of blacke crosses upon it.

Nowe

Nowe when Lanfranke had thus finished his businesse at Rome, he with the other two Bishoppes returned into England, where this matter hangyng in variaunce betweene the sayde two Archebishoppes was had in communication. For triall whereof Bedes History was brought foorth: wherein it appered, that from the first Augustines time, to Bedes last dayes, which was. C. xxxix. yeres, the Archbishop of Cauntorbury had the Primacie of all the Bishoppes in England. Fabian.

When Thomas had heard all these allegations, he denyed all, and laid for him the Epistle, The contention in the which Gregory Bishop of Rome demed that the Church of Yorke, and of London between the should be even Peres, and neyther of them subject to the other.

To this was aunswered by Lanfranke, that he was not Bishop of London, nor this ques- the Archbishop tion was not moued for the Church of London. But Thomas sayde that Gregorye had of the should be graunted to Augustyne power to have vnder him all the Bishoppes of Englande, and that chiefe. London at that day was the principall See of all England. Albeit that the Bishop of Romes minde was that betweene London and Yorke should be no diversitie of honour, because they beyng Archebishoppes might lyue in an vnite to the good example of all other. And though Augustyne chaunged the See from London to Cauntorbury, yet Gregory would not that Augustynes successors should be aboue the Bishoppes of Yorke. For he woulde have then set in his Epistle these wordes following: I graunt to thee Augustyne and to thy successors: But for that he would there should no such power stretch to his successours, therefore he made no mention of them.

Lanfranke to this aunswered and said: If that aucthority were graunted to Augustine alone, and not to his successors, it was a simple gift that the Bishop of Rome gaue to Augustine that was so familier with him, & namely while Augustyne sacred no Bishop of Yorke while he lyued. For the See was full during his life, by reason whereof he put not his aucthoritie in execution. But privileges of Bishoppes of Rome confirmeth this dignitie to Augustines successors of Cauntorbury, and demeth that it is skill and good reason, that all the churches of England shoulde take light and knowledge at that place.

By these reasons and other, Thomas was at length ouercome, & graunted gladly that the farther brinke of Humber should be the beginning of his Diocesse. And furthermore The Archbishop it was there demed, that in all thinges concerning the worship of God and the fayth of of Yorke judged subject to the holy Churche, the Archebishop of Yorke should be subject to the Archebishop of Caun- Archebishop of torbury: So that if the Archebishop of Cauntorbury would call a counsaile in any part of Catorbury. England, the Archebishop of Yorke shoulde be thereat with all the Bishoppes of his Prouince, and be also obedient vnto his lawfull hestes. And at all seasons when the Archebishop of Cauntorbury should be sacred, the Archebishop of Yorke with the Bishops of his Province should come to Cauntorbury and consecrate him there. And if the Archbishop of Yorke should be stalled or sacred, then shall be come to Cauntorbury, or else where in Englande, where the Archebishop of Cauntorbury shall assigne him, and there to be sacred of him, and he shall make to him anothe, with profession of obedience.

When Lanfranke heard this judgement genen, he rejoysed inwardly. And to the entent Lanfrankes it should remaine of recorde, that his successors should not neede to pleade that matter, vaine glory. he therefore caused it to be regestred in moste substanciall wise. And besides that sent a Pistle for that cause to Alexander the aforenamed Bishop of Rome of all this doyng, with the profession of Thomas the Archebishop aforesayd. Of this Lanfranke are by dyuerse writers many notable thinges written, sayth Fabian.

In the. x. yere of this kinges reigne, Roger Erle of Hereford who had geuen his sister in mariage vnto Raufe Erle of Norffolke and Suffolke against the kinges minde. sayde Roger together with the sayde Raufe conspired against the king, and caused Walrefe . Duke of Northumberlande, and Erle of Huntyngdon, and Northamton, by their subtile perswasions to be agreeable to their vntruth. But at the last, when this Duke Walrefe had Treason will well understand the purpose that they went aboute, he went to Lanfranke and shewed him breake forthall the matter: By whose counsayle he shortly after sayled vnto the king then beyng in Normandy,

When the king had heard these tidyngs, he made good semblance vnto the Duke Walrefe. and sped him the faster into England: But howsoeuer it came to passe, the two sayde Erles were warned of the disclosyng of thys matter, in such wise as they gathered to them such strength that \( \frac{1}{2} \) king could not have them at his pleasure, but as he was fayne by strong hande to chace and outlawe them. And for that he fayled of his purpose of them, he imprisoned Duke Walrefe at Winchester, and lastly caused him to be behedded, more of tyranny than of iustice.

In the. xij. yere of his reigne was holden a great counsayle or Synode of the Clergie of the land in S. Paules Church of London, where amongest many thinges ordevned for the rule of the Church of England, dyuerse Bishops Sees were translated from one place to another, as Selwy, to Chichester, Kyrton to Exeter, Wellas to Bathe, Shereborne to Sarisburye, Dorchester to Lyncolne, and the See of Lichefield to Chester, which things thus ordered with many other for the Church, the said cousail was desolved.

In the. xiij, yere of his reigne, after the death of Harman Bishop of Sarisbury, succeded Osmond, or Oswald the kinges Chauncelor, the which builded there a newe Church within the kinges Castell, and brought thether Clerkes that were garnished with vertue and cun-And he himselfe wrote and bounde bookes, that were ordered and made for the more deuout and solemne settyng out of the decine service of the Church, as the ordinall and other, and it was then called Sarisbury vse. While king William was thus occupied in Normandy, the Northumbers rebelled, and slue in their rage Walter the Bishop of Durham, but the cause is not expressed, whose death Odo Bishop of Baion shortly after revenged. After the aforesayde battaile in Normandy, king William returned into Englande, bringing with him the sayde Robert his sonne, whome he incontinent vpon his returne sent with an armye against Malcolme king of Scottes, for that contrary to the league betwixt them, he had made in hys absence dyuerse roades into the borders of England. But when Robert vnderstood that the sayd Malcolme was retired into Scotland, he ceased to pursue him any further, and therefore retyred he vnto the water of Tyne, where he lay in campe a season, and there builded a New Castell vp- forte, where as at thys day standeth newe Castell vpon Tyne: But the towne and wall was builded afterwardes by king Iohn, who gaue many great privileges and liberties vnto the same, which was before but a small fisher towne without walles named Pandon.

In the. xvij. yere of king William, there fell an vnhappy strife betwene Thurston Abbot of Glascenbury a Norman, and his Monkes, the cause whereof (in part sayth Fabian)

was, that the Abbot despised and would have set apart such song and offices as by Gregorie Bishop of Rome & Augustine his disciple, of olde tyme was to them assigned, and would have compelled them to have followed the vse of William of Fescampe. And besyde that, this Thurstone wasted and inordinatly spent the goodes of that place, in lechery, and by other insolent meanes, and withdrewe from the Monkes, their olde and accustomed diet. For the which causes, first began great wordes with chyding, and after strokes and fightes, so that the Abbot gate vnto him armed men, and fell vpon the monkes, Thurstone Aband slue two of them at the high altare, and wounded. xviij. of them, and the Monkes bot of Glascenwith Formes and Candlesticks defeded themselues in such wise, that they hurt many of § bury & his monks fought armed men.

After complaint was brought hereof before the king, by whose judgement, Thurstone was againe returned into Cadonie, from whence he was brought, and the Monkes were spred abrode into dyuerse houses through England. But it is sayde that in the tyme of William Rufus, this Thurston obteyned the rule of the Abbey againe for the price of.

In the xix, yere of his reigne, king William raysed a new maner of Taxe: For he caused to be gathered through England of every hyde of land vj. shillinges. And not long after he caused to be searched howe much lande eche of hys Barons helde, A great and howe many knightes Fees, howe many townes, and what number of men and of beastes streyght inquiwere within this land: whereof he commaunded a booke to be made, which also was done, and that afterward turned this land to sundry griefes and plagues, as after shall apere.

In the. xx. yere of his reigne, Canutus king of Denmarke, with the helpe of the Fleminges came with a great armie toward England: But by the prouision of the king, they were so feared, that they wer let of that iorney.

Of this Robert reporteth Reynulph that he scraped Couentrie. from one Beame of his Church in Couentrie fiue hundreth marke, to fill the hande of king William. For Leofricus that was Duke of Mertia in the time of Edward the Confessor, had adourned that Church, with great riches of Golde, Siluer & Iewelles.

In this yere Edgar Atheling, which was reconciled to the kinges fauour, by lycence of the king, sayled into Apulia.

Now began the aforesayde plagues to spring: For great moreyne fell vpon brute beastes, and brenning Feuers among the people, and also great hunger and barennesse of the earth. Also in this yere great hurt was done in many places of the land by fyre, and specially in the City of London, whervpon the sixt day of Iuly the Church of Saint Paules brene. Paule in London was brent, and all that was therein, as in a table hanging on the North syde of the Quyere may apere. And it was in the tyme that Morice was Bishop of London. And lykewyse was brent a great part of the Citie of London at the same

At this tyme king William beyng in Normandy prepared for warre against the French king: But shortly after he fell sicke, and kept his Chamber at Roan a long tyme, wherefore Philip the French king beyng merely disposed, sayde that william lay in Childebed, and norisshed his fat belly. The which wordes when they came to king Williams eares, he was much amoued therewith, and sayd, when I am churched I wyll offer vnto him a thousand Candelles light, with the which he shall holde himselfe smally contented. The which promise, he after performed. For in the moneth of Iuly following, when corne, fruite, & grapes were most flourishyng, he entered into Fraunce with a great armie, and set on fyre many Cities and townes on the west syde of Fraunce, and at the last came vnto the Citie of Meaux, and fyred it, and brent a great part thereof, with the Church of our Lady, wherein he brent a woman beyng closed in the Wall of the sayde Church, as a recluse.

In this heate, or as some say by the leaping of a horse, king William tooke such a disease and sicknesse, that it was shortly after the cause of hys death. And when he felt himselfe thus grieued, he called his sonnes before him, and exhorted them in his best and most louyng maner, that they should charitably loue and fauour eyther other of them, and to holde together as louyng brethren, and so afterward made his testament and last will.

King Willia had five children, & what came of them.

He had five children, Robert the eldest, to whome he gave the Dukedome of Normandy, Richard, the second, who died in his youth, William Rufus the thirde, to whome he gave the kingdome of England, and Henry the fourth that also succeded him in the same Kingdome. And one daughter named Adela, who he gave in mariage to Stephen Erle of Bloys or Bonony, who got on hir Stephen that after was king of England. But other write that king Henry the first maryed Molde the daughter of Margaret Quene of Scottes, and by her had issue two daughters, named Molde, and Mary. And Molde was first maryed to Henry the Emperor, and after to Geoffrey Plantagenet, by whome she had issue king Henry the second. And Mary was maryed to Eustace Erle of Bloys, by whome she had issue king Stephen. So that king Henry the seconde came of the elder sister, and Stephen of the yonger sister. The which Molde and Mary were the daughters of Margaret the wyfe of Malcolyne, or Malcolme king of Scottes, which was sister to Edgar Atheling, and of Edward the outlawe, which was the sonne of Edmond Ironsyde.

Charitie is most wised in the extreeme pangues of death. After that king William had advertised his sonnes as aforesayd, and had made his last will and Testament, he then delivered out of Prison his awne brother the Bishop of Bayon, Marcarus Erle of Northumberland, Wilnotus the sonne of Harold, or as some do write he was the sonne of Goodwyn, which was sent to William by Edward the Confessor to remain for a pledge for his sayd father Goodwyn. And shortlye after these thinges with other were done, he dyed the viij. day of September, when he had reigned king of England. xx. yeres, x. The description of King William the Conquerour.

After his death, men spake of him as they do of other Princes, and said that he was wise and guileful, riche and couetous, and loued well to be magnifyed and praysed, a fayre speaker, and a deepe dissembler, a man of goodly stature, but something fatte in the belly, sterne in countenaunce, & strong in armes, and therewith couragious and bolde, and had greate pleasure in hunting and making of great feastes. But he passed all other in leuiyng of Taskes, which condicion his subjectes construed three maner of wayes, and sayde, that eyther it was to excell all other in ryches, or else to withstand and defend his enimyes, or to staunche the appetyte of his couetous mynde. He builded two Abbeyes in England, one at Battill in Sussex, where he wan the fielde against Harolde, the which was called vntill the suppression thereof the Abbey of Battaile. And the other he set in Southwarke besyde London, vpon the Southsyde of Thames, and named it Barmondsey. And he builded also one in Cane in Normandie where he was buried, and dedicated the same vnto Saint Steuen.

And when all ceremonies apperteyning vnto the Funerall were finished and done, and that he should nowe be layd in his tombe, there sodeinly stepped foorth one that resisted and woulde not suffer him to be buryed in that place, saiying with a lowde voyce, how that the ground where they purposed to bury him, was percell of his auncient inheritance, which the Duke in his lyfe tyme had wrongfully taken from him perforce, and against his will for the buylding of that Abbey, and had neuer made him any recompence or amendes for the same, and therfore would not to die for it assent ne suffer that he shoulde there be buryed, onelesse he were first recompenced and agreed with accordingly, wherevoon they were faine to see him recompenced before he could be enterred, so that maruell it was that so great and noble a conquerour as he was when he was aliue, could not after his death atteyne somuch ground as might receive and couer his poore Carkas, without great adoo and businesse.

The sayde king had to Issue (sayth Polidore) by Mawde his wife, Robert vnto whome he bequethed the Dukedome of Normandy: Richard, who dyed very yong: William Rufus, and Henry which were afterwardes kinges of England one after another. Of this Henry he prophecyed before (as the fame went) that he should rule both England and Normandy together after his brethren, vnto whome he gaue by testament a great part of his treasure. He had also fine daughters, that is to weete, Cicill which was made a Nonne, Constance whome Alley Dude of hether Briteyne maried, and Adela the wyfe of Stephen Erle of Bloys, mother to king Stephen, who reigned after the sayde king Henry: The names of the other two are not remembred of writers, which dyed ere they were mariageable, one of the which as is before mencioned should have beene the wife of Harolde, if fortune had not beene against it.

It is also reported that when this king lay at the poynt of death, and should now depart the world, he much repented him of the cruell handelyng of the English men, specially because he had bene by them so much encreased as well in honour as Empire.

And although this king helde Englishe men in great subjection, and as is aforesayd suffered almost no Englishe man to gouerne or rule within the Realme: Yet it should appere he somedeale fauoured the Citie of London, for at the speciall sute and request of the right reuerend father in God William then Bishop of London, the sayde Conquerour in the first yere of his reigne graunted vnto the Citizens of London their first Charter and liberties, in as large forme as they enjoyed the same in the tyme of Saint Edward the confessor that reigned before the Conquest. And the Citizens to shewe themselues thankefull vnto the sayde Bishop for his great loue and fauour, did not onely accompt him as a deere and speciall friend vnto them so long as he lived, but also after his death and buriall, beyng enterred in the middle Isle of the West ende of Paules Church, they fixed on his grave stone this Epitaph folowyng.

The Epitaphe of the reuerend father in God William Bishop of London, who of his great loue and charitie towarde the Citizens of the same, did first obteyne for them of William the Conquerour theyr Charter, liberties and privileges, as by the inscription of the sayde stone may apéere, the contentes and effect whereof followeth, first in Latine, and then in Englishe.

WILLIAM RVFVS.

Illiam Rufus, or William the Red, the thirde sonne of William the Conquerour. began to reigne ouer this realme next after his father, the. ix. of September, in the yere of our Lorde. M. lxxxvij. Who beyng in Normandy at hys fathers death, departed thence before his funerall obsequy was finished and done, and in all haste addressed him into England, where he was sooner arryued than he was looked for, and being come into the Realme, he by and by made Lanfranke then Archebishop of Cauntorbury (in whose friendship and faythfulnesse he had reposed no small trust and confidence) privile to all his counsayle, praising him withall to put to his helping hand, that he might be crowned king as shortly as might be, according to his fathers Will and Testament: The whiche was at the last brought to passe by the importune laboure and sute of the sayde Lanfranke, who for his learning was highly esteemed, aswell with the Nobilitie as also of the Commons of the Realme, but yet not without much ado: For a great many bare better good will vnto his brother Robert than vnto him, because he was of a more mylde and gentle nature, and besyde that he was the elder brother, and therefore ought by lawe and conscience to have beene preferred: But yet the matter was so wrought by the wisedome of Lanfranke, promising all thinges in his name, that might by any meanes purchase him credite or fauour with the people, that all in maner assented vnto his coronation, and so was he by him the sayde Lanfranke, with the assistance of diverse other Bishoppes, whose names are all rehersed by by Mathewe of Westminster annoynted and crowned king at Westminster, the first day of October, the vere of our Lord abouesayd.

Reynulph Monke of Chester that wrote Polichronicon sayth, that Robert Curthose eldest some of William the Conquerour, was at the tyme of hys fathers death in Almaine, gatheryng of a great host against his father. And afterward heering that he was dead, and that he had preferred his yonger brother to the kingdome of England, was therefore greatly Robert Curthose amoued, insomuch that he layde halfe his Dukedome to pledge vnto his brother Henry to the brother of Rufus entered maintevne warre against king William. The which thing done, he gathered a great army, England with and shortly after landed at Hamton.

When William Rufus had vnderstanding thereof, he in all hast sent vnto him messengers, to whome he gaue in commission to say as followeth. Thy brother William prayeth thee to take no griefe with that he bath done, for he calleth himselfe not king, but as vnder king to reigne vnder thee, and by helpe of thee that art greater than he, and his elder brother. And if thou consider it well, he hath nothing misssed himselfe against thee, for he hatk taken vpon him the gouernement of this Realme for a tyme because of thyne absence. But for that he is now in aucthority and crowned by thy sufferance, he prayeth that vnder thee he maye so continue, paiying to thee yerely three thousand Markes, with condicion y who soeuer ouerliueth other may enioy the Kingdome. When Robert had heard this message vnto the ende, he wagged his head, as he that conceyued some doublenesse in this report. But for that he was liberall, and allowed more honour than he did his profite, as in Robert Curthose other things following of his deedes it shall apere, therefore he lightly assented to all that was soone dispatched with was desired, and returned shortly eafter into Normandy with pleasant wordes and many father wordes. favre promises without profite.

This yere in the beginning of Sommer, Odo Bishop of Bayon, which as before ye have heard was delivered out of Prison by William Conquerour, came into England, whom the king joyfully receyued, and gaue vnto him shortly after the Erledome of Kent. But he Odo bishop of tooke vpon him in processe of tyme to rule, in such wise as the king grudged at his doyng. to king William And for this the king and his vncle fell at vnkindenesse, so that he withdrewe himselfe from conquerour. the king, and alved him with the bishop of Duresme, the Erles of Northumberland, Shrewesbury, and others. The which beyng confederate together, conspired against the The Lordes king, and made his brother Robert Curthose against him, and wrought many thinges to his conspired against king, and wrought many thinges to his king Wylliam displeasure and hurt. And amongest all other damages by them done, Roger de Mount Rufus. Gomorik, Erle of Shrewesbury, destroyed the Countrie and northwest parts of England Robellions to Worcester towne, by the ayde and helpe of the Welshemen: But in the ende, the Welshemen were so feeble and weake, that a fewe knightes discomfited a great armie of them.

When king William perceyued that almost all the Normanes tooke part against him, he then beyng forced by necessitie, drewe to him the Englishe men, and fauoured them by giftes and easy lawes: So that by theyr strength he did in the ende reconcile the Erle of Shrewesbury and chased some other of his enemies, and shortly after occupyed the strong Castelles and holdes in Kent, belonging to Bishop Odo his foresayd vincle, and in the ende compelled him to yelde himselfe and to forsweare England. And that done he besieged Rochester, wherein the Bishop of Duresme, the Erle of Northumberlande, and other noble Roben Curthose men were gathered, and wan it at the last by yeldyng, so that his enemies were vnto him was againe re reconciled also, and in like maner was his brother Robert, who then again taking his leaue conciled vnto his brother of the king returned into Normandy.

In the thirde yere of his reigne dyed Lanfranke, when he had beene Archebishop of Cantorbury, xviii, yeres. By whose meanes the Monkes of England were brought to the vse of their Religion, which before lived like seculer priestes, and not like religious men. Lanfranke Fabian.

About this tyme Robert Curthose Duke of Normandy entendyng to take his voyage into the holy land, layed his Dukedome to pledge vnto hys brother William for ten thousand pound. For the leuiyng whereof, Kyng William set a taske vpon his commons and subiectes, and raysed a farre exceeding summe, vnder colour of the same, so that Bishops melted their plate, and the temporall Lordes spoyled their Tenantes for the payment thereof. But as some wryte these thinges were done a good space after.

At this tyme also, the king of Scots brake the peace before made with William Conquerour, and wasted and tooke prayes in the Country of Northumberland. Then the king provided a Navie, and sayled thether in the Winter tyme: But by the tempest of the sea, halfe his Nauie or a great part thereof was drowned, and many of his knightes were lost for colde and hunger. But yet in the ende after diverse skirmishes and bickeringes, by meof Scots done to diation of friendes, a peace was concluded: So that Malcolyne or Malcolme then kyng of Scottes should be obedient to king William, vnder the same othe that he was before tyme sworne vnto his father, and king William should geue him yerely in the way of a fee. xij. In the fourth yere of his reigne, and the fift day of October, a passing great tempest chaunced in sundrye places of Englande, and specially in the towne of Winchecombe. A great tempest. For there by tempest of thunder and lightning a part of the steple of the Church was throwne downe. &c.

Also this yere by force of the sayde tempest there was great hurte done at London, insomuch as Reynulph sayth, it blewe downe there. vj. hundreth houses, and other like mischiefes were done in sundry places by the sayd tempest. And the same tyme was the roofe of Bowe Church in London blowen downe which killed two personnes, as Fabian sayth.

In the fift yere of his reigne, he went into Northumberland, and repayred such holdes and Castelles as the Scottes by their warres had eyther rased or else hurt and appayred, and caused a newe Castell to be made at Carlyll and repayred the same Towne which the Danes two hundreth yere passed had destroyed. In the same yere the maine roofe of the great Churche of Sarisbury was consumed and brent with lightnyng. And after the king returned vnto Gloucester, where he was grieuously vexed with sicknesse, so that he thought he should have dyed. In the which tyme he tooke great repentaunce, and promised that if he might escape, he would amend his liuyng and become a new man: But

And in the yere following, king William to have the Countrie in more quyet, hewed downe muche of the Wood, and builded in sundrie places of Wales strong Castelles and pyles, by meane whereof, they were plucked more and more to obedience and quyetnesse, and specially in the dayes of Edward the first, and Edward the thirde.

At this time Malcoline, or Malcolme king of Scotland came vnto Gloucester, to commen with the king of dyuerse matters, and to make a finall agreement. But because king William would have deemed him in his Court, therefore the same Malcolyne departed from the king in great displeasure, for the which and for other causes the warre betweene England and Scotland was reuyued, so that shortly after the sayd Scottish king with his retinue fought with an Erle named Robert Moubraye, which then was Erle of Northumberland,

How he was slaine Hector Boethius sheweth in the. xij. booke of the Story of Scotland on this wise: When they within the Castell were now ready to yelde and brought to extreeme necessitie, and in maner famished for lacke of victualles, a certaine aduenturous and couragious Englishe knight beyng mounted on a very swift Gelding, hauyng a speare in his hande, at the ende whereof were fastened the keyes of the Castell, rode vp to the kinges campe, makyng semblant as though he had bene come to give up the Castell unto the king. When the Scottes sawe this, they drewe together, and for love made a great showte and noves, thinking their long trauayles and paynes had nowe bene at an ende, and then brought him where the king lay, who heering this poyes came out of his tent to know what the matter was. The Englishe knight when he sawe the king, helde downe his speare as though he woulde have delivered him the keyes: And whilest every mannes eyes and mynde was fixed thereon, he in the meane time sodenly thurst his speare into the kinges left eye, and so wounded him therewith, that he there presently fell downe starke deade: and that done, he foorthwith dashed his spurres into his horse and fled into the next woodes, and so escaped. And it is sayde that when king Rufus heard of this aduenturous deed, he sent for the sayde knight, and gaue him certeyne of his landes and reuenewes in Northumberland, and commaunded him euer afterwardes to be called Perseyc, because he had perced or bored out the kinges eye, of whome (sayth he) that familie tooke their beginning, which have bene sence that tyme Erles of Northumberland. When the king was slaine, the Scottes departed and went euery man his way, and so the siege brake vp and ended. Edward the sayde Scotishe kinges sonne was slaine before in a skirmishe at the same siege. Hetherto Hector Boethius.

For sorowe whereof, Margaret Queene of Scotland, and sister vnto Edgar Atheling (as before in the story of William the Conquerour is shewed) died soone after. Then the Edgar the son of Scottes made Donwalde or Dunkard the brother of Malcolyne their king, and put by his Malcolyne made sonnes. But king William made Edgar the sonne of Malcolyne king of Scottes, and he who did homage did vnto him homage for the same kingdome.

Polidore setteth out these warres and the causes therof, and such things as chaunced in Normandy betwixt king William and Duke Robert his brother, and the rebellion of the Welshemen that followed shortly after on this wise: When the businesse of Scotland (sayth Robert duke of he) was thus quieted, Robert Duke of Normandie who alwayes bare a grudge to the king chargeth king his brother, for that he was by him defeated of the Crowne, sent Ambassadors vnto the William his brother, sayd king, & by the same charged him with periury for that he had not firmely kept and ry. holden the coditions of peace that were agreed vpon betwixt them, wherewith Rufus beyng highly displeased, reysed forthwith a great armie, and sayled into Normandy, purposyng so to trye the matter with him, that he would rather hazard his estate at once, then thus dayly be troubled and vnquieted by him. Howbeit his wrath beyng shortly after asswaged, he sought not to fight with him by and by: but after he had once or twice lightly ouerrunne the Countrie thereabout without any great damage or hurt doyng, he fell to a communication with him, where after long conference, they were at the length both contented by the intreatie of their friendes, to commit the effect of all matters in controuersie betwixt them, to the hearyng and arbiterment of certaine most graue and honourable personages, who (the causes and allegations of both the sayde parties, first deliberately heard and debated) A sentence gene gaue sentence for the Duke, awarding that the king should pay him a certeyne summe of on the behalfe of duke Rebert money in the name of a mulcte or penaltie, for that he had thus contrary to the league agaynst king betwixt them ouerrunne and wasted his Countrie. But when the king vnderstoode their ther. awarde, he was by and by in a great chafe, and sayde that he would in no wyse stande vnto it: Therefore bothe the sayde partyes beyng greatlye mooued eyther with other gaue warres renued ouer talking and fell to fighting. The king toke perforce the Castell of Bure, and Robert william and by the aide of king Phillip of Fraunce, set vpon those Holdes and Castells which king Duke Robert William helde in Normandy, by vertue of the former composition betwixt them, and first

Argenton Cas- of all he wanne by assault the Castell of Argenton, wherein he toke prisoner Roger Lieuetenant or deputie of Poiters, and with him. lxxx. men of armes, and with like successe also wan he the Castell of, Vlmes. At the length the king considering with himselfe howe there needed a greater force to subdue his aduersaryes, and spedily to finishe the warres that were comming vpon him, commaunded in all hast an armye of. xx. thousand men or thereabout to be leuyed in Englande, and spedily to be conveyed over vnto him; nowe when all this multitude were assembled and come together at Hastinges in Sussex at the tyme appoynted, where the kinges Shippes lay at Anker to receive them, and that they were nowe in readinesse and willyng to depart: The kinges Agent met them there also, genying intelligence vito the Capitaines that they should signifie vito the rest, howe the Princes pleasure was of a speciall desyre he had to spare hys people, and deliuer them from further paynes and trauayles of warrefare by them to be sustayned, that euery Souldiour there prest should pay ten shillynges, and therevpon to be discharged from that voyage, and to returne home againe, the which thing the more part of them was better wyllyng to do, then to commit themselues vnto the daungers of the sea, but the intent and purpose of the Prince was to fight against his brother, rather with a golden weapon, than with one of yron or steele, thinking vnder pretence of those warres to gether such a masse of money of his subjectes, as should both be sufficient to bye peace, Therefore when both the armyes were nowe in a redinesse and also to enrych him selfe. to fight, and that William had found the meanes so to pacify Phillip the French king with gifts & rewards, that he would no more ayde the sayde Duke, then by and by the whole with riche gifter stave and strength of his warres was quite fallen downe, and for wantyng the French A peace conclu-kinges ayde, he was of necessitie compelled to sue vnto the king his brother for peace and at the length obteyned it.

When king William had thus finished the warres of Normandy after his mynde, he foorthwith returned into Englande, where anon after chaunced vnto him greater businesse than he had before. For the Welshemen hearyng of the variaunce that begunne to growe betwixt him and his brother, armed themselves mindyng to rob and pill the Countryes adjoyning vnto them after their accustomed maner. And so entrying into the Marches, they burned houses and villages, draue away Cattell, tooke prisoners, and slue aswell Normanes as Englishe men: and finally rased townes and Castels where so euer they came. When the king was hereof enfourmed, he assembled a power in all haste to helpe his distressed people, and to kepe the countrie from vtter spoilyng and wastyng, and hauing vsed great speede in hys iourney, he set vpon them on a sodein: But for all that the Welshmen did not onely manfully abide the brunt of the assaultes, but also enforced the king to geue back & retyre, and that with no small losse and domage, wherefore being now three dayes iourney on his way, in his retyre he determined with himselfe to yelde vnto fortune for the tyme present, and so departed vnto London to prepare a stronger power. After whose departure, the Welshe men waxed so prowde and gathered such a courage vnto them, that they besieged the Castell of Mount Gomericke of all the fortes and Castelles in Wales the strongest, and afterward notwithstanding it was for a whyle manfully defended by the kinges garison attempted to race it, and at length hauving beaten Castell of mount downe the Walles thereof they toke it, and very cruelly slue all that they found therein: But the king being this while letted by treason newly sprong vp against him in his awne land, & determining first to suppresse that before he prepared any resistance against them. went into Northumberland where the Authours of this newe conspiracie put themselves in armes against him: For Robert Erle of that Countrie who had oftentymes before required the king to consider the good service he had done what tyme he beyng generall of the armie, the Scottish king was slaine in maner aforesayde, and perceyuyng the king not to be so redye to rewarde him for that worthie deede as he looked he should have bene, was therewith so moued, that beyng sent for by the kinges letters, he openly refused to go vnto him. And in the meane season ceased not privily to devise howe and which way he might deprive him of the Crowne: But the conspiracie beyng by chaunce shortlye after disclosed, the king toke dyuerse of the Conspirators vpon a sodeine and put them to death: But Robert for that he knew himselfe guiltie, and therefore feared least he should be punished according to his deserts, fled away, whom the king pursued to the Castell called at this day the Castell of Banburghe, whether he was gotten for succor with his Banborough wife and children, which the king forthwith besieged, and because the same beyng most Castell. strongly defended aswell by nature as mans industrie and policie seemed impregnable, he began to close it with a wall of Plankes or Bordes, so that no man might enter in or issue out of it. But when Robert distrusting his state and case, or at the least wyse the fidelitie of his friendes, sawe the boorde worke begon, he priuely conucighed himselfe out in the dead of the night, but yet not so privilye but the kinges scout perceyued it and pursued after, and beyng constreyned to go vnto Tinmouth, he there tooke sanctuary in Robert Erle of the Churche of saint Oswine the martyr, out of the which he was by and by drawen by Northumberlad violence, and taken prisoner, and so brought vnto the King: Nowe when the rest that were within the Castell ceased not yet to make resistance and to defende themselues, the king to beate a greater terror and feare into them, caused Robert to be brought before the Castell gate that they within might see him, and made proclamation withall, that vulesse the sayde Castell were yelded, foorthwith his eyes should out of hand be plucked out of his head, the which thing they beholding and fearing aswell their awne partes as the Erles, at the last yelded themselves and gave vp the Castell, of whom part were banished, and some had their eares cut off, and other some one of their eyes put out to make the rest to beware by their example, and so sent home: but Robert was had to the Castell of Windsor, and there cast in prison: When this businesse was at an ende, king Rufus bent all his whole force against the Welshemen, who still continued in their outrage besides all measure, and adressyng himselfe wyth his armie with all hast to Wales warde, when he sawe that the Welshemen would at no hand geue him any oportunitie to fight with them, but hid themselves in woodes of purpose, he then began to waste and destroy the country next adjoining, and attempted to passe through those places even where most daungerous and hardest passage was, to the intent he might come where the enemies were, and fight with them. But contrarywise, the Welshemen kept either the mountaynes or woodes, who beyng sufficiently prepared and furnished for the tyme, set vpon the kinges armie, sometymes here, and sometimes there, euer as they espyed any aduantage, in such wise, that they either wounded or slue very many of them. The which was the cause that the king desirous to be advenged on them, pursued them more feruently then circumspectly through mountaynes and marishes more to his losse and damage, than to the losse and anoyance of his enemies: who after he had lost many of his men and horses, and saw there was no hope for him to do any good there gaue ouer his purpose againe. and made an ende of those warres. Hetherto Polidore.

In the. vij. yere of the reigne of king William, Anselme that was Archbishop of Yorke was removed to Cauntorbury as affirmeth one Chronicle: But Reynulph and Guido say, that Hugh Lupus Erle of Chester beyng sick and diseased, in the vj. yere of the reigne of William Rufus, sent into Normandie for Anselme then Abbot of Berry or Beccy for thre causes. The first, to visite and see him, and to be reconciled of him, as the man that he moste trusted. The second cause was that he should relieve some Abbeys of England, whom the king had vexed with grieuous tribute. And the third, that he should found an Abbey in Chester, which place he after buylded, and made one Richarde his Chapleyn first Abbot there, and soone after he was made Archebishop of Cauntorbury: whereby it appereth that the sayde See was voyde ouer the terme of three yeres. And at this tyme, England and Normandy were sore visited with the plague of pestilence, and Pestilence. the same was so great, as some write, that many lay vnburyed, and the tillyng of the Tillage beyon ground was put off for that yere, and thereafter ensued great and extreme hunger.

This yere also the Scottes slue their king Edgar, and restored againe to the rule of the lande lande the aforenamed Donwald. And many straunge and wonderfull sightes were seene this present vere in the Skie, as hostes of men fightyng, and flames of fyre brennyng, and shotyng out of the Elament, and other monstruous thinges, as sayth Fabian.

Westminster Hall builded.

In the, x, vere of this king, strife and dissention fell betwene hym and Anseline Archebishop of Cauntorbury, because Anselme might not be suffered to call his Sinodes, and correct his clergie but as the king would. The king also chalenged the investiture of Bishoppes, and tooke of the Spiritualtie and Temporalty great taskes and tributes, the which he spent you the walling of the Tower of London, and the making of Westminster Hall as some wryte. But Ihon Rastall sayth in his Chronicle that it is not lyke to be true that the great Hall of Westminster that is now, was buylded by this king, but rather in the tyme of king Richarde the second. For sayth he, the Armes that are there both on the timber and on the stone worke, which is the three Lyons quartered with the flower de luce, and the white Hart for his badge, were the armes of king Richard. For there was neuer king of England that gaue the flower de luce which was the armes of Fraunce before king Edward the thirde. And therefore it manifestly apereth that the great Hall which is nowe, was not builded by Rufus, except it were that he made the foundation thereof: But if Rufus made any Hall there, it was that which is aboue the stayers that we nowe call the white Hall. And besydes all this the kinges seruauntes grieued and pilled Englishe men vnreasonably. And to this miserie was joyned the couetousnesse of Revnulph that was sometime Chapleyn vnto William Conquerour, the which at this day was the kinges procurator, and gathered his taskes ouer all England. He was so couetous and so euill disposed, that he would leav three taskes for two. He pilled the riche, and bare downe the poore, and caused many men to lose their landes for small causes, and therefore the king did greatly fauour him. And by hys meanes, Bishoprikes were bought and solde as commonly as other marchandices. Also at this time priestes vsed bushed and breyded heades, long tayled gownes and blasyng clothes shinyng, and golden Girdelles, and road with guilt Spurres, with vsyng of dyuerse other enormities. All which vices Anselme would have corrected, but he lacked assistance of his brethren the Bishops, for the which cause and other he departed the land; Wherewith the king beyng miscontented, sent after him suche personnes as robbed and spoyled him, and intreated him in most cruell maner. For the which deede, Raufe Bishop of Chichester blamed the king, and also rebuked all such Bishops as had refused the party of Anselme, & had fauoured the king in causes concerning the aforesayde variaunce. And furthermore he will stoode the king and his officers in takyng of fynes of priestes for the cryme of fornication, for which causes the king with the sayd Raufe was sore amoued, and discontented, and obteyned such fauour that he suspended many Churches of his diocesse. But in the ende, Raufe demened him in suche wise that he had his awne will, and his Churches enlarged and freed that before were stopped with Thornes. And the king gaue vnto him the fynes of priestes within his Diocesse, and endued the See of Chichester with many great giftes.

And youn a tyme as king William was ridyng towarde his disport of huntyng, sodeynly a messenger came vnto him, & sayde that the City of Cenemona or Constancia in Normandy was besieged of the French men: wherefore he without long tariyng or aduisement, tooke the streight way to the sea syde, and sent to his Lordes, charging them to followe. When the sayde Lordes came to his presence, they adulysed him to tary untill his goyng into Nor-mady of William people were assembled. But he would do nothing after their counsayle, but sayd such as him loued would surely followe, and so went to Ship, setting aside all perils.

The desperate goyng into Nor-Rufus.

> The may ster of the Ship was afrayde, and saw the weather so darke and clowdie, and the sea somewhat rough by reason of the south wind that then blewe, that he counsayled. the king to tary vntill the wynde would blow more fauourably: But he commaunded him to make all the speede he coulde vpon paine of his lyfe, saiving that he neuer heard that anye Kinge was drowned. And so he passed the sea and landed in Normandie a good while before there was any brute of his comming, and there gathered vnto hym his Knightes.

A noble courage of a kiug.

When the Captaine of the Siege (whose name was Helias) knewe of the kinges landyng, he feared, and anone began to breake the siege: But by treason he was taken and brought to the kinges presence. To whome the king shewed such pitie, that he suffered him to be at his libertie, which after the opinion of William de Regibus, was done more of pride than of compassion. Polidore wryteth that when the capteyn was brought vnto the kinges presence, he iested at him as one that had no courage nor mannes stomack. Then the sayde Captevne turning him vnto the king sayde boldely againe. Sir king, thy fortune is nowe to take me prisoner, but if I were at libertie I would make thee to vnderstand that I were not a man so little to be passed on as thou makest me. And with that the king commaunded him to be set at libertie and then sayd voto him, now go whether thou wilt, and do the worst thou canst against me: But (sayth he) it is not red that he euer attempted any thing against the king afterwardes.

In the, xi, yere of his reigne, at a towne called Finchester in the country of Barkeshire, a Well cast out blood as before it had done water. And after by the space of. xv. dayes great flames of fyre were seene in sundrie places, and at sundry tymes. This yere also A straunge the two Erles of Shrewesbury and of Chester who were both named Hugh, by the kinges commaundement entered with their knightes the Isle of Anglesay, which was the chiefe refuge of the Welshe men, and slue there a number of them, and shewed there such crueltie besydes, as the like had not bene heard of before, for vnto some they put out their eyes, to some they cut off their noses, handes, legges, or armes, and some againe

Among the which a priest named Kynradus was drawen out of a Church and serued in the same maner, and had also his tongue cut out of his heade, and one of his eyes put out. In which season and tyme the King of Norway wanne the Isles then called Orcades, and nowe Orkeyes, and after came with his strength vnto the aforesayd Isle of Anglesay to rescue the people of the Isle, where at the same season were the sayde two Erles. Then betwene them was a mortall fight, in the which Hugh Erle of Shrewes- Hugh Erle of bury was stryken with an arow in the eye, and dyed within. viij. dayes after. But as sayth slaine Guydo, the Danes were chased, and the Englishe men had the victory, but as other do wryte there was no notable thing else there done besides the death of the sayde Erle.

. King William at this tyme was much in Normandy, because that Robert his brother was all this while in the holy land, of whose actes some mention shall be made in the story of Henry the first. And William had much paine to rule the Normanes, for they rebelled often against him.

Robert Losaunge that sometyme had bene Abbot of Ramsey, and then by the gift of a thousand pound to the King, was made Bishop of Thetforde, repented him after, and bewayled that vnskilfull deede, and tooke his way to Rome, and did for it his adioyned penance, and after returned into England, and turned his See from Thetford to Norwiche, and founded there a fayre Monastery of his awne goodes, and not of the patrimonie of Christes Churche: But therein resteth a doubt, for he was first Abbot and then Bishop, savth Fabian.

After that king William as before is sayde, was returned out of Normandie, many wonderfull prodigies and tokens were shewed in England, as the swellyng or risyng of the water of the Thamys, in suche wyse that it drowned many townes, and did much harme by out passyng of his boundes in dyuerse places about London and else where, with dynerse other thinges whiche I passe ouer.

In the xiij, were of his reigne and the beginning thereof the thirde day of August as sayth Reynulph, or as some other write vpon Lammas day, thys king William beyng at his disport on huntyng within the newe Forest, now called the Forest of Windsore, or Forest of rather as Reynulph sayth in the new Forest in Hamshire besydes Sarisbury by glaunsyng Windsere. of an arrowe, which a knight named Sir Walter Tirell a Frenche man did shote at a The death of Decre, and hit the king, and wounded him to death, so that he gaue but one grone and king William Vol. 1.

dyed presently, when he had reigned. xij. yeres. xj. monethes lackyng. viij. dayes. And it is written by Ihon Hardyng, that king Rufus to enlarge the aforesayde Forest did pull downe foure Abbeyes, xvij. parishe Churches, and all the townes to them belongyng. Water Hennyngforde wryteth, that in the place where the king was slaine had beene a Church in olde tyme, the which Church with other in his fathers tyme was pulled downe, and destroyed for the enlargyng of his said Forest, and that in the same Forest by a like chaunce was slaine also a little before Richard the kinges nephew, sonne vnto Robert Duke of Normandy of a knight of his awne.

After this deede, the sayde Walter escaped and saued himselfe, for fewe they were that pursued after him. And so the king thus wounded was layde in a horse Litter, and conueyed to Winchester, and was there buryed in the Church of Peter and Paule.

Of this William, reporteth Henry of Huntingdon and sayth that though this man were light in some things, yet he was stedfast and stable of his promise, so that what he promised good or eall it should be performed, & though he were named couetous, yet it should apere by this that followeth, that he sometymes shewed himselfe liberall: For thus wryteth he of hym.

Vpon a certaine time, when the Abbot of an Abbey in England was dead, two Monkes of the same place, the which before had gathered money together, made their friendes to king William, and offered large offers either of them to be promoted to that dignitie. There was also a thirde Monke, the which of meekenesse and humblenesse followed the other two, to the entent that vpon him that the king should admit for Abbot, he would have geven attendance, and as his Chapleyn to have returned with him. The king called before him the two Monkes severally, and either out profered other: And at the length he cast his eye asyde, and espyed the thirde Monke, the which he supposed had come for the same cause. Then the king called him and asked him, if he would geve any more than his brethren had profered to be Abbot. But he aunswered to the king and sayde, that he would offer, neyther yet geve for it one penny, nor woulde have so great a charge by any wrongfull meane. When the king had well considered of this thirde Monkes aunswere, he sayd that he was best worthie to be Abbot, and to have the rule of so holy a charge: and so he gave vnto him that promocion, without taking of hym one pennye.

This king William was variable and inconstant of his behaulour, very couetous, and therewithall cruell, and burdened the people with great taxes. Furthermore he neuer maryed but vsed concubines continually, wherefore he dyed without issue legittimate, when he had reigned as aforesayd fully. xij. yeres, and almost xj. monethes.

Of this king it is written that he was wastful and sumptuous in hys apparell, an example whereof is brought in by a certaine wryter to the great reproofe of excesse of apparell vsed in these our dayes. For when his Chamberleyn on a tyme brought him a newe payre of Hosen, he demaunded of him what they cost, who aunswered three shillings, wherat the king beyng somewhat moued, commaunded him to prepare him a paire of xiij shillinges. iiij. pence. Nowe if kinges were then thought to exceede that bestowed a Marke vpon a paire of hosen, what is to be thought of many meane men which in our tyme bestow so much of one payre as that king did vpon twentie, vere of our Lorde M. C. the government of this Realme of England, and was crowned Coronation of king thereof very shortly after at Westminster, of Thomas Archebishop of Yorke, or as king Henrie the first.

Polydore and some other say, of Mawrice Bishop of London.

His elder brother Robert Duke of Normandie was at that season not yet returned from the warres of Siria, and therefore had he the better oportunitie to bring is purpose aboute. For manye there were both of the nobles and others which fauoured the sayde Duke, and woulde have done their endeaour to have crowned him king if he had bene present: And for this cause he found the meanes, what by geuyng of great rewardes, and what by fayre wordes and large promises to preuent him: But no one thing moued the whole Realme more to agree vpon him, then the faythfull promise he made to abholishe his fathers lawes, which were deemed of the people to be both against equitie and conscience. But first of all, so soone as he hearde of his brother Rufus death, he seazed vpon his goods and moueables, whereby he became the stronger, and better able to go thorowe with this enterprise.

This king in his youth had so well applied his study, that he was well sene in the seuen liberall sciences. And he at his entery reformed the ministers of the Church, and the dignitie of the same which had bene corrupted by his brother and he restored againe and vsed saint Edwardes lawes with the amendment of them, besydes the reformation and amendment of sundry and diverse other abuses in the common welth.

He banished out of his Court nicenesse and wantonnesse, and committed Reynulph Bi- Reynulph bishop of Duresme, a man hated of all men for oppression, bribery, and diverse other no-shop of Dutable crymes, and a chiefe Counsaylour and perswader also of the king his brother in all his Wantonnesse lewde and vngodly attemptes to the tower of London, the which before as you have heard the kinges was so great with his brother William: and he sent for Anselme that was Archebishop of Court which be-Cauntorbury, which before was fled for the feare and wrath of William Rufus, and gaue the tokened good government. Bishoprike of Winchester then miserablye spoyled vnto Gyfford, a right graue and learned man, and conferred also the rule and government of such Abbeyes as had bene of long tyme vacant vnto Monkes. Furthermore he remitted all such taxes and paymentes as had bene by hys father and brother newely raysed vpon the people.

This king corrected and reformed the olde and vntrue measures that were vsed in this Measures made Realme, and caused a yarde of the length of his awne arme to be made and vsed (and the same king Henry the thing at this day is most metest to be reformed, for now almost no countrie kepeth eyther first. weight or measure one with the other to the great hurt of the Realme) and lykewise he reformed manye thinges that before his tyme had bene abused. Also he abhorred the excesse Henry the first of meates and drinkes, and vsed to fight more with good counsaile than with the sworde.

In the second yere of his reigne, Robert his brother that by all this time had bene occupied in warres vpon Christes enemies, having worde of the death of his brother William, and howe his brother Henry had taken vpon him as king, returned into Normandye, and Robert theeldest there made preparation for to come into England.

In this time also Reynulph Bishop of Duresme brake out of the tower of London, and claymeth the went to Robert Duke of Normandy, who stirred and pricked forwarde the same Duke Crowne. Robert in all that he might to warre vpon his brother Henry, so that he assembled a strong thop of Duarmye of kuightes and tooke shipping, and shortlye after landed at Portesmouth. But by reame a lewide mediation of friendes, a peace was made, and that in such condicion, that he should have bishop. verely three thousande Markes payed vnto him as a tribute, as before was promised hym by William Rufus his brother, with condicions of succession and other thinges the which for length I passe ouer.

Thus Robert beyng contented, contrary to the mindes of his Lordes, after a while that Robert duke of he had disported himselfe in England, he returned to Normandie, where of his Lordes he Normady. was for this and other undiscrete dedes by him before done, as after shall be shewed, little, or lesse and lesse set by. For albeit by his fathers lyfe he had offended, and vtterly displeased him as before is touched, yet by his manhood and manfull deedes, he wanne the heartes of the Aa2 people, people, specially for the worthie actes he did at the winnyng of the Citie of Acon your the miscreantes and Turkes.

This Robert was wise in counsayle, strong in battaile, and also right liberall, and in hys returne from Hierusalem hee maryed the daughter of William, or as Polidore sayth, Roger de Auersana Lorde of Apulia, with whome he receyued great summes of money for his dower, the whiche by meane of his liberalitie was not long vuspent. Then fortune eth many tymes began to frowne vpon him, and set his awne Lordes against him, who sent vnto king Henry of England, and moued him to come into Normandy against his brother, and they would deliuer vnto him the countrie and Duchie of Normandie, and take him for their chiefe Lorde and gouernour: wherevnto as sayth the English Chronicle, king Henry soone consented.

Fortune fromnvoon Princes.

> But or ever this warre began betwene them, this king Henry had maryed the foresayde Molde or Mawde the daughter of Malcolyne or Malcolme king of Scotland, and of Margaret his wife daughter of Edward the outlaw as is expressed in the beginning of William Conquerour. Of the which Mawde, he received two sonnes, and two daughters, that is to say, William, and Richard, Mawde and Mary.

Vnnaturali warre.

After this Duke Robert of Normandie came into Englande to his brother, and he was here honourably entertayned, and in the ende at the request of his sister the wife of king Henry, or rather (as Polydore wryteth) beyng ouercome with the fayre wordes of his sayde landeth in Eng- brother, he released vnto hym the aforenamed tribute of three thousand Markes: but by euill tales, and couetousnesse of seignorie, this brotherly loue lasted not long, but such a varyaunce fell betweene them, that king Henry with a strong armie sayled into Normandie. and helde his brother with so sharpe warre, that he chased him from one country to another, and wanne from him the Citie of Roan, Cane, Valoys, and all the good townes of Normandy, and at the last constreyned him to seeke helpe of the French king, and after of the Erle of Flaunders, but he fayled of them both. Then sayth Polidore, when he considered with himselfe how vnable he was to match with the king his brother, and saw also how he was distressed on every side, by reason wherof diverse of his Lordes and Subiectes forsooke him, and tooke parte with his sayd brother, and that his enemyes dayly encreased, and his power decreased, and waxed lesse and lesse, he determined with himselfe no longer to trye the matter by battayle and force of armes, but to repose all hope of pacification in brotherly charity. And because he thought that it would little preuaile to send any Ambassadors for the matter, he being accopanied with a few persons went himselfe into England, the said king then living at Northamton, where the Duke made humble sute vnto him, that he might be at peace with him, vsyng all the perswasions he could to induce him therevnto, and submitted himselfe and his Dukedome and all that he had besydes, wholy to his order, grace, and mercy, with the which request and humble submission of his, the king was nothing at all moued, insomuch that he turned from him in a fume, mutteryng with himselfe certaine threatning wordes against him. And this straunge countenaunce shewed he, eyther because of his brothers inconstancye, whereof he had had often experience, or else for that he was nowe fully bent and mynded to pursue him with most extreme crueltie, euen to death or vtter destruction. When Duk? Robert saw this, he de-testing the prowde and stately behaulour of his brother, departed the Court and returned into Normandy with all convenient speede, fully determinyng, rather than to suffer his honour thus to be desteyned, to put him selfe in daunger either of death, or else of perpertual seruitude. For he well perceyued, it booted not to put any longer hope or trust in brotherly loue. Therfore with such power as he could make, he gaue battaile vnto his brother Henry, who followed him with a newe armie, in the which battaile he was taken Robert duke of prisoner and sent ouer into England, and put into the Castell of Cardiffe in Wales, where Normandie he remayned as prisoner so long as he lived, and when he was dead, he was buryed at taken prisoner. Gloucester.

Mathew of Westmynster wryteth that at the first he was not streightly kept as a prisoner, but was permitted by the kinges licence to hawke, hunt, and vse al other pastimes what he would for his disport & recreation, hauving his keper with him, and was also allowed such apparell & dyet as was convenient for his estate, vntill at length he practised to have conueyed himselfe away: And beyng taken againe (as sayth the aforesayde wryter) he by the kinges commaundement had both his eyes put out, but in such wyse that the balles of them Touchyng his death it is further reported of the same Author, how king Henry hauyng on a time made a scarlet Robe with a hoode (as the fashion then was) for himselfe, & puttyng it on to assay whether it was meete for him or no, and perceyuyng the sayd hoode to be somewhat to little for his head, bad the yoman of his Wardrop to sende it vnto his brother Robert, because (sayth he) his head is somewhat lesse than mine. And when the Messenger that brought it was demaunded of Duke Robert whether any had euer worne it before or no, and the sayde messenger vnaduisedly shewed him what the king had done and sayd: Then sayd Duke Robert, nowe may I well thinke that my most wretched lyfe had bene ouerlong prolonged sith the iniurious king my brother hath so little regard of me, that he clotheth me with his cast apparell, and after that he would never eate nor drinke, but pyned away for hunger and sorow.

Nowe when king Henry had fynished his warres in Normandy he returned into England, and at that tyme Robert of Bolisme which was the eldest sonne of Hugh of mount Robert of Bo-Gomericke Erle of Shrewesbury arose against the king, and manned his Castelles of Shrewesbury re-Shrewesbury, of Brugges, of Arondell, and of Tekynhill, and incouraged the Welshe-belled. men against the king. But the king pursued the sayd Robert so egerly, that within. xl. dayes he wanne all those Castelles, and slue many of his men, and gate the fauour of the Welshemen by giftes and pleasant wordes, and also compelled the sayde Robert to forsake England: the which sayled into a corner of Normandye, and kept him there secretly, vntill such tyme as William Erle of Cornewall came thether vnto him, which William was also Erle of Mortom in Normandy. When these two Erles were met, they gathered to them a great strength of Normanes, and did great harme within the Prouynce. Wherefore the king sailed thether and made sharpe warre vpon them, in the which he lost manye of his men: But in the ende hee put from them their strength, and tooke them both Prisoners, and so kept them duryng their lyues. And that done he set that Countrie in good rest and peace, and after returned into England. After which returne the Lawer made king made sharpe lawes against theeues and other that vsed vnlawfull doynges. In the and thecues which lawes was conteyned, losyng of lyfe, of eyes, of stones, and other members of man, as the fault and offence required.

And shortly after, Anselme Archebishop of Cauntorbury assembled a great counsail at Anselme Archebishop of Gator-London of the Clergie of England: By aucthority of which counsail, diverse Abbottes bury. & other were put from their dignitie, for that they had taken before tyme their Abbeyes Priestes put by vnlawful meanes. And among all other decrees one was, that priests should forgo theyr from their wives, as saith Fabian.

Then strife fell betwene the king and Anselme, for that he would not sacre the Catorbury. priestes that had taken investiture of the kinges handes, which before was forbidden vpon paine of curssing. But Giralde Archebishop of Yorke for the pleasure of the king, sa-

And about this tyme Sir Robert le Fitzham Erle of Glocester buylded the towne of Tewkesburye, and there was buryed, and also buylded the Castell of Bristow.

In the sixt yere of the king, the Countrie of Flaunders was sore blemished and hurt by meane of the sea, so that the Fleminges were enforced to seeke for succour and place Flaunders ouerof dwellyng, and required of the king to have lycence that they might inhabite in the East part of Twede, the which to them was graunted. But after a certeyne of yeres they were removed into west Wales, where they remayned a long while, but after they spred all England ouer.

In the. vij. yere of his reigne, vpon a Fryday at night in the first weeke of cleane Lent. was seene a straunge and wonderfull starre-betweene the South and the West, the which nightly apered at an houre, and continued so by the space of. xxv. dayes. And right against that, on the East part apered a great flamying beame of great brightnesse, whiche stretched towarde the sayde starre. And voon Maundy thursday next following, were seene two Moones, the one in the East and the other in the West.

Anselme returned from Rome.

A couocation at London.

This yere also Anselme by the kinges agreement returned from Rome, and shortly after called a convocation at London, in the which by the Bishop of Romes aucthoritie, it was newly enacted and confirmed, that no temporal man after that day should make any inuesture with Crosse and Ryng.

In the viii, yere of his reigne, the fourth Henry Emperour of Almaine, the which was affianced to Molde the eldest daughter of this king Henry, when she was of the age of five yeres, emprisoned Pascall Bishop of Rome and dynerse of the Cardinalles.

In the ix, yere of his reigne, the Archbishop Anselme professed Gerard Archebishop of Yorke to the yoke of obedience, as he was before taught by Lanfranke his predecessor. And the. x. day of August following, he sacred fine Bishoppes at one tyme, as of Winchester, of Sarisbury, of Exceter, of Herford, and Glamorgan. And king Henry ordeyned a bishops See at Ely, and to the Bishoppes See at Lyncolne he gaue his awne towne of Spaldyng, for he had minished that See by the erection of Ely.

In the. x. yere dyed Anselme Archebishop of Cauntorbury, after whose death the See was voyde fine yeres, and the goodes of the Church spent to the kinges vse. And when he was prayed to helpe the Church that was without an head and a pastour, he vsed to aunswere that his father and also his brother had accustomed to set there the best proued men that they coulde finde, and to the entent that he might do the same, he toke the more tyme and leysure. And with such mylde aunsweres he put off the tyme, and filled his Cofers with the great summes of the Benefice. And at this tyme, the king maried his brother Roberts bastard sonne, to Mabell daughter and heyre of Robert Fitzham, and made him the first Erle of Glocester, who after buylded the strong Castell of Bristow.

About this tyme (as sayth the Frenche Chronicle) a controuersie began betwixt the king, and Lewes king of Fraunce sonne vnto Philip the first. This Lewes was surnamed Lewes the great, eyther for the bygnesse of his person, or else for the greatnesse of his This Lewes sent vnto King Henry beyng in Normandy, and gaue vnto him monition to do his homage for the Duchy of Normandy, and also that he should restore vnto him, or else beate downe the Castell of Gysours, and also make recompence and restitution vnto him for the hurtes and harmes that his Normanes had done in those partes, But all this of king Henry was denied, and shortly after skirmishes and bickerings began betwene the sayde two Princes, king Henry then living at the said Castell of Gysours, and Lewes at a place called mount Calue. But this encreased in such wise, that shortly after, eyther of the Princes sought for places of more rowme, and their knightes met sundrie times. But of any notable battaile betwene them I find no remembrance although the same warres continued two yeres. In the ende of which two yeres William the eldest sonne of king Henry, beyng a childe and within age, contented so well the minde of Lewes, that he refrayned from his warre for that time.

In the xiii, yere of his reigne, at Shrewesbury, and at Notyngham was a great earthquake from the morning vnto night. The River of Trent in the moneth of Iune flowed not for the space of a mile so as sayth Guydo, that men might there have gone dueshod ouer it, as though the water had bene gone another way, and this continued the space of one whole day. And soone after appered a blasyng starre, wherevpon followed an hard Wynter, great death of the people, and scarcetie of victualles by the great Moreyn of beastes that ensued. And in this yere also the king founded the Abbey of hide without the walles of Winchester, that of olde tyme was within the walles, and first founded by king Alphred called the new Abbey of Winchester. The Citie of Worcester was in this worcester vere almost all consumed with fyre. And in this time began the Parliament in England breat: first to be instituted and ordeyned for reformation and government of this Realme. The maner whereof as I have tound it set foorth in an olde Pamphlet. I entende at large to set forth in the reigne of king Edward the third, where and when Parliaments were yerely and orderly kept.

In the. xiiij. yere of his reigne he subdued the Welshemen (sayth Polydore) and that not without great slaughter of them, which before by often breaking out into the frontiers and marches of Englande, wasted those Countryes very sore.

Aboute this time also (sayth the same wryter) Henry the fourth of that name Emperor, vnto whom Mawde the kinges daughter was fianced, sent vnto king Henry for his wife. being now able to company with a man, who to prepare a convenient dowry for her, seassed a great payment vpon the people to be leaved by the Acre, that is to say vpon euery Acre of land that any man helde a certaine porcion: By reason whereof he gathered a great masse of money, the which he sent with her to the aforesayd Emperour.

In the. xv. yere of his reigne, the king entended to have promoted Fabricus, Abbot of Abyngdon vnto the See of Cauntorbury but in a sinode or counsaile of Bishoppes kept at Winsore, the kinges minde was chaunged, and to y See was then admitted Raufe that was before bishop of Rochester.

And the same yere one Thurston was chosen Archebishop of Yorke, the which denyed Thurston his profession of obedience, that he should owe vnto the See of Cauntorbury, wherefore Yorke denyed at length he was depriued of his dignitie. But after by labour that he made to Pascall obedience to the Bishop of Rome, the sayd Bishop of Rome wrote to the king that he should restore him Catorbury. againe to the sayd See: By the which meane he was restored, but yet disdeyned he to do his lawfull obedience vnto the sayde Raufe Archebishop of Cauntorbury. Then the strife Contention for was againe renued which Lanfranke before had appeased, and at the length brought in argument before the Bishop of Rome. The which at the kinges request promised that he would nothing do, nor ordeine that should prejudice the Archebishop of Cauntorbury, or the dignitie of his Church. But in conclusion the sayd Bishop of Rome gaue such a defuse sentence in this matter, that he left the strife vndetermined. And when the kinges procurators and the Archbishops of Cauntorburies also were absent, were it for mede or for fanour, the Bishop of Rome was so bent, that he forsooke the olde rule vsed before his dayes, and sacred the sayd Thurston himselfe, and gave him the Pall. For Thurston made this dede the king was sore discontented with Thurston, and forbad him the entery of his Cantorbury. land. Wherefore the Bishop of Rome wrote shortly after to the king, willing him to suffer Thurston to occupie the See peaceably, or he should be accurssed, and suspended by the dignitie of the office of Cauntorbury, and so Thurston quietly enjoyed his See by that man sent ayde and succour. And afterward the king sayled ouer with a strong army, and sent a noble man named Stephen into the Lordship of Brye, to defend it against the French king. When Lewes vnderstoode that king Henry was landed in Normandy with so great a power, he in all the hast assembled a great and strong power, and came towardes him. But there were such strong Holdes so well manned with Normanes, and also so great and deepe rivers that the Frenche king coulde not come at King Henry. But at the last he wanne a towne named Lingues in Cause, in the which towne was a bridge to passe ouer the ryuer of Thee, and so into Normandy.

In the xvij. yere of his reigne, the warre againe betweene him and Lewes the French king was renued and the occasioner thereof, as sayth the French Chronicle, was Thibauld Erle of Charters or Champaigne, which Thibauld was grieued by the French king, Warres againe and for necessitie required ayde of the king of Englande, to whome the king as his kins- France.

Male assise Castell

When a certeyne of the knightes of Lewes had thus wonne the towne aforesayde, the sayde Lewes with his people sped him shortly after and rescued his foresayde Knightes. and then spoyled and robbed the Towne which was riche, bicause it had beene in rest and quiet many yeres before. He also slue and tooke prisoners all the Normans there dwelling, and put in their steed Frenchmen. And that done, he sped him towardes king Henrie, the which was at a Castle called Male assise, & there made prouision for the defence of the Frenchmen. And when he had garnished and furnished it to hys pleasure and contentation, he then departed from thence. And shortly after the French king came thether with his whole army of Frenchmen, and after many sore and cruell assaultes, he wonne the sayde Castell, and bet it downe to the grounde. After which victorie, as sayth the French Chronicle, there chaunced to the French king manye misfortunes. For shortly after among manye other mischaunces, a Noble Capitaine of his named Angueran de Chaumounte, the which had done much harme in Normandy to king Henry and had wonne there sundrie Castels and strong holdes, dyed sodeynlye. And in short time after Baldwin Erle of Flaunders, a man of great strength, and puyssaunce as he besieged a Castell was wounded in the face, and died within sixe dayes after. Then Fauques Erle of Aungeros, in whome also thys Lewes affied muche and trusted, married his daughter vnto William the eldest sonne of King Henry, and refused the French kings parte, and ayded and assisted king Henry in all that he might, so that daylie the power of Henry encreased. and the French Kings minished. Finally, these two Princes met with both their armies in plaine field and fought a deadly and cruell battayle, where in the ende the French king was ouercome, and lost muche of his people, & was compelled to flee vnto a place called Audeley for his safegarde. But this overthrowe of the Frenchemen is by them excused in the most fayrest maner, so that they (as Fabian sayeth) excuse themselves and save. that King Henry set vpon Lewes when he was not ware, and hys Knights at that tyme were all out of order & aray: and also that King Henry had a farre greater number then the French king had, with other wordes in the praise and commendation of themselves. which is to their rebuke.

Now it followeth in the storie, when these two Princes were agreed, William the sonne of King Henry did homage vnto the French king for the landes of Normandy, by the agreement of his father: for the king thought himselfe to good to be vnder the obeysaunce of the French king. Then king Henry caused his free men of Englande and of Normandy to doe homage lykewise vnto his sonne Wylliam.

And sone after Fauques before named, left his Erledom of Angers, in the guyding of King Henry, and went himselfe into the holye lande, and wylled in his Testament, that if he returned not againe, that then the sayde Erledome should remayne vnto his sonne in lawe Wylliam, sonne of King Henry which had maried his daughter.

About the twentie yere of the reigne of King Henry, Queene Molde or Mawde his wyfe dyed in Normandy, the which in her youth, was set by her father the king of Scottes into a Nonnery and there did weare and vse the vayle and habite of a Nonne. For the which cause when king Henry was agreeable to take her vnto his wife, this matter fell in great disputation, and Anselme then Archebishop of Cauntorburie was sore against that mariage to aduoyde vnworthy wooers.

When king Henry had continued in Normandy almost three yeres, he tooke shippyng at Harflete in Normandy, and sayled happely into England the same day, that is to say, the. xxiiij. day of Nouember. And shortly after William Duke of Normandy with Richard his brother, Mary his daughter, Richard Erle of Chester, with his wyfe the kinges nece, and the Archedeacon of Herforde and other to the number of one hundreth & threscore personnes, tooke shippyng at the same port, and were all drowned, a Boocher only ex- A pitifull cepted: which misfortune chaunced partly by the violent rage of tempest, and partly by chaunce. the ouersight of the maister and other, which in the night had quarelled among themselves, by reason whereof they ranne vpon a rock as sayd the Boocher. From this daunger William Duke of Normandy escaped, and was in the Shipboate nere vnto the land: but when he heard the lamentable cry of his sister, he commaunded the Rowers to returne and sauc her, which done by what misfortune I can not tell, after she was received into the Boate, were it by tempest, or ouercharging of the Boate, or otherwise, they were all swallowed of the sea, so that none of them was after found, but part of their goodes.

In the, xxi, yere of his reigne, king Henry made the Parke of Woodstock besyde Oxenford, and walled it with stone, besydes other pleasures to the same belonging. And about this time Fauques Erle of Angers returned out of the holy land, and maryed the sister of Woodstock her that before he had maried vnto William Duke of Normandy, vnto the sonne of Robert Fauques Erle of Curthose, and gaue with her the Erledome of Cenomanna. And strife began to kindle be-Angiers. twene king Henry and the said, Fauques, for the withholding of the dower or ioynter of hose. his first daughter maryed vnto William the kinges sonne, and for the cruell handlyng of

In the. xxiij. yere of the king, Raufe Archebishop of Cauntorbury died, and a Clerke named William was placed in the See after him. ## KING STEPHEN.

C Tephen Erle of Boloigne, sonne of the Erle of Bloys and Adela daughter to kine william the Conquerour, and nephewe vnto king Henry the first, tooke on him the gouernaunce of this Realme of England, the second day of December. 1135. through the counsayle and ayde of many Lordes of England, contrary to their othe made to Mawde the Empresse.

This was a noble man and hardy. But yet contrary to his othe y he made to Molde or Mawde the Empresse as aforesayde, hee tooke vpon him the Crowne of this Realme, and was crowned on Saint Stephens day in Christmas weeke at Westminster of William Archebishop of Cauntorbury, which Bishop in lyke maner had made the lyke othe vnto the sayde Empresse, in the presence of the king her father as before is touched: In punishment of which periury as men suppose, the sayd Archebishop dyed shortly after.

The Lordes also of the whole realme as abouesaid had made like othes, and committed the lyke periury, and therfore scaped not punishment. A great part of this periury (as sayth one aucthour) was this: one Hugh Bygot Steward sometyme of king Henry the first, immediately after the decease of the sayde Henry came into England, and before the sayde Archebishop and other Lordes of the land, he tooke wilfully an othe, and sware that he was present a little before the kinges death, when king Henry admitted and chose for his heyre to be king after him Stephen his nephew, because Molde his daughter had displeased him: wherevnto the Archebishop & the other Lords gaue to hasty credence. When king Stephen was crowned he sware before the Lordes at Oxenford that he would not holde in his hande the Bishoprikes and benefices that were voyde, and that he would forgeue the Dane gelt as king Henry before him had done, with sundrie other thinges. And Dane gelt. because this Stephen feared the commyng of Mawde the Empresse, he therefore gaue licence vnto his Lordes that every of them might buylde a Castell or strong fortresse vpon his awne ground. Then in his returne homeward he toke Alexander Bishop of Lincolne & kept him in durance vntill he Alexander Bihad given vnto him the Castell of Newarke. And then he chased Nigellus Bishop of Ely. shop of Lin-But sayth Polidore, after he had thus finished the matter with the Scottes in hys returne againe into England he went to Wales and their besieged and wanne Ludlow the head towne of those partes, the which he founde possessed of his enimies, where Henrie prince of Scotland as he was in fight neere vnto the towne walles, was sodeynly of the aduersaries that were within the towne plucked from his Horsse with a crooked engine of Iron, and therewith had beene taken up into the towne, if God had not so prouyded that the King came foorthwith and rescued him in that present daunger.

About this tyme also he tooke such displeasure with his louing friend, Roger Bishop of Roger bishop of Sarisbury, for that he suspected him as he did all those that had lately buylded any Fort or Sarisbury. Castell to fauor the Empresse part, that he cast him into prison vntill the sayd Roger had rendred vnto him his two Castels: of Vises and Sherborne the which himselfe had builded. For the which the sayde Roger in remembring the great ingratitude of the king, tooke suche thought that he dyed shortly after, and left behinde him in readie covne in his sayde Castels fourtie thousand Markes, which after his death came to the Kings Cofers, and with that treasure (sayth Reynulph) he found the meanes to marry his sonne Eustace to Lady

About the fourth yere of his reigne, Dauid king of Scottes repenting him of his former agreement made with the king, entred of newe within the boundes of Northumberland about the ryuer of Thayse towarde the Prouynce of Yorke, and brent and slue the people, Scottee reball. and speyled the Countrie in most cruell wise, not sparing neyther man woman nor chylde. Against whom Thurston Archbishop of Yorke by the kings commaundement was sent, who Thurston with his power did acquite himselfe so valiauntly, that he overthrewe the hoste of Scottes, Archebishop of and slue ten thousand of them, and in fine compelled them to withdrawe againe into Scot- the king of Reynulph.

In the sixt yere of his reigne, and in the Moneth of Iuly, Mawde the Empresse with her brother Robert and other of her friends entred the lande at the hauen of Portesmouth, and from thence went to Arundell and tooke the Castell there. Then Robert Erle of Gloucester leaving her in the sayde Castell, having with him onely ten horsemen, with so many Archers on horsbacke, passed through his enimies Countries and sped him to Gloucester, as well to signifie vnto the people the landing of his sister the Empresse, as to cause an armie to ayde hir. And though the same towne were at his comming manned with the kings power: Yet when the townesmen vnderstood that he was come, they of their owne accorde put the kings Garrisons out of the towne and receyued him, that done the sayde Erle not onely assembled an armie there, but found the meanes also that the places and Countrie adjoining, willyngly submitted themselves vnto the Empresse.

Now when king Stephen who then layde siege to Wallyngford Castel vnderstood that the Empresse was landed, he incontinent brake vp his siege, and with his whole power spedely addressed himselfe to the towne of Arondell and besieged the Castell. But when he had there continued his siege a certaine space, and nothing was yet done according to his expectation, some of them which were secrete friendes and ayders of the Empresse. ceassed not to beate into his head that the same Castell was impregnable, and therefore his living there was but in vaine, saiying further, that it were best for him to leave his siege and suffer her to issue out, and to go to some other holde or place where he might more easily come by her, the which was done to this only ende, that she beyng now in the case that she was, not able to hold out any longer for lacke of victualles, might escape the present daunger she was in, and flie to some other place of more suretie, where shee might make herselfe more strong against her enemies. And so Stephen following this decevueable counsayle, departed incontinent with his armie so farre that the enemies should not feare to issue out whether they would. The which thing the sayd Empresse perceyuyng, departed thence in the dead of the night, and so kept on her journey to Bristowe, whether there came to her shortly after her commyng great succours out of all partes of the Realme: The whiche when king Stephen was enformed of, he repented him (but to late) that he had followed the former euill counsayle. Wherefore he hastened him towards Bristowe to the entent to lay siege to the towne, and there to enclose his enemie if he might by any meanes. But the Empresse hearyng of his comming, and understanding his purpose, departed thence, and went first to Gloucester and then to Lyncolne, where she victualled the towne, and so fortefied it with men and munition, that she might safely there tary till eyther she were rescued by the Erle her brother and others of her friendes, or else by the fauour and ayde of the Commons, be restored to her right without bloudshed & battayle, and king Stephen deposed. But he beyng advertised what was there by her done, pursued after withall haste and besieged the same Citie.

After which season the Erle Robert, and Reynulph before named with a great power of Welshemen, and the power of the Empresse, came agaynst the king intendyng to Where when both armies were redye to ioyne. The Erle Reynulph of rayse the siege. Strife who should Chester spake to his knightes and sayde, I require you, that I that am cause of your perill, may be the first that shall enter into perill. Then aunswered Erle Robert and sayd, it is not vnworthie to thee that askest the first stroke and dignitie of this fight: for vnto thee it is sittyng, for noblenesse of blood and vertue of strength in the which thou passest other men: But the kinges false othe moueth men to warre and fight, wherein we must nowe either winne the maystry or be ouercome. And hee that hath none other succour, is constreyned to defende himselfe by knightly and strong dedes of armes and of manhood, and so shall we nowe joyne with them that are blemished with guile & wickednesse, as Robert Erle of Mellent, the Erle also of Albemarle, and Simon of Hampton,

Then king Stephen prepared to set forward his people, and Erle Baldwyn had wordes of comfort to the kinges people, and sayde: Vnto men that shall fight there are three Thre things are speciall thinges to be considered. And the thirde is, the lustinesse, courage, and strength of knightes, that the matter quayle not for lacke of stoute, hardie courage, and assured fightyng in the tyme of neede. speeche, and darke in vnderstandyng. There is also Reynulph Erle of Chester, a man without reason, and full of foolishehardinesse, redy and prompt to all conspiracie, and vnstedfast in al his deedes and attemptes: hastie and furious of heart, and vnware of perilles. He assayeth oft to atchieue great deedes, but he bringeth none to effect. And what he fiercely and freshely beginneth, he cowardly and fayntly forsaketh, as infortunate and vnhappy in all his dedes, and is ouercome in euery place, for he is a companion with banished men and sculkers, and the mo of them that are in a company, the sooner they be ouerthrowne: and feeble they be in fightyng, for eyther of them putteth his trust in his felow, whyle he hymselfe is ouerthrowen.

By reason of which fight and the slaughter thereof, the greene fielde was turned into a perfite red, so that many a pale and wanne visage was there sene yelding vp of the ghost, with armes and legges disseuered and departed from the bodyes. A long while this fight stood in doubt, whether partie should obteine victory. But in the ende king Stephens partie gaue backe and fled, but hee valiauntly abode in the fielde with a fewe of his knightes and was taken, and so he was brought vnto the Empresse: the King Stephen which commaunded him to be conueyed vnder sure keepyng vnto Bristow, where he was taken prisoner.

When the Empresse had wonne this victorye, and had committed the king to warde, as before ye have heard, she was not therewith a little exalted, but thought in her mynde, that she was in a suretie of the possession of the whole Realine: But she was deceyued, for the Countie of Kent tooke partie with king Stephen. And after this victory she departed thence, and toke the towne of Cicester, and afterwardes went vnto Winchester, where shee was solemply receyued of the Bishop and the people with procession, and from thence came to Wilton, to Oxford, to Reding, and to Saint Albones, into the which The triumphing of Mawde the Cities and townes she was ioyfully receyued withall honour, but esspecially was she wel-Empresse. comed of Theobaldus then Archebishop of Cantorbury, and many of the nobilitie besydes. Lastly, she came to London for to enter the state of the land, and while she remayned there, the Quene king Stephens wyfe made earnest labor for the deliuery of the Alarge promise king her husband, promising that he should surrender the land into her possession, and which was neuer purposed to be he to become a religious man, either else a pilgrim to his lyues ende. But all was in performed. vaine, for she could purchase no grace as then upon no maner of conditions.

For this the Citizens were discontented, and knowing that the Countrye of Kent which fauoured king Stephen would strength theyr party, purposed to have taken her. But she The fleying of the Empresse. beyng thereof warned, departed in haste, and left behinde her her store of housholde, and so fled vnto Oxenford, where she abode, but her people was deuyded and scattered. And in this while she sent vnto Dauid the king of Scottes and her vncle for to ayde her, who in all haste came vnto her, and so went to Winchester, where she layde siege to the Bishoppes Tower, the which, the Bishop beyng the kinges brother at that tyme helde with great strength.

Then the Queene with the ayde of her friendes, that is to say, of Kentishe men and other, made a strong hoste, whereof was chiefe Capitayne a Knight named Guylliam Ypres. When the Empresse heard of the great strength of the Queene, and sawe that A wise and couher awne dayly minished rather than encreased, was in such feare that she caused her selfe to be caryed in a horse Litter to Gloucester as though shee had bene dead.

Then meanes was made vpon either side for the deliuery and exchaunge of prisoners. so that in f end it was agreed, that the king should be deliuered for Erle Robert. But before this agreement was fully concluded, great losse and mischiefe was done within this Realme euery way, for the Empresse pilled and spoyled on her partie, and the Queene by manaces and promises borowed and tooke vpon the othersyde, and the Souldiours stale, extorted, and spoyled vpon both parties, so that riche men were made needy, and the poore oppressed on euery side.

The returne of the Empresse vato Oxenford.

In this meane while the Empresse returned againe to Oxenforde, and victualled it and manned it in her best maner. And lastly the king was deliuered vpon holy Rood day in Haruest, and soone after he compassed Oxenford with a great armye, from the tyme of Michaelmasse vnto Christmasse next following, at which tyme and season, the Empresse vsed a newe guile for constraint and necessitie of victuall.

A hard scape. The maner of departure of the Propresse.

In that tyme great plentye of snowe fell vpon the ground, and the frost was therewithall so great, that Thames with other great rivers were then frosen ouer, so that man and horse might passe upon the Ise. The Empresse then constreyed by neede (as aforesayd) apparelled her and her company in white clothing, which a farre of semed like snow, and so vpon a plumbe going together as neere as they might, escaped the daunger of their enemyes, and so came first to the pyle or Castell of Shereborne, and then to Wallingford. And from thence in short time, she departed with a small company into Normandy vnto her husband.

So soone as the Empresse was thus departed from Oxenford the towne was yelded vnto the king, where the king had much of the Empresse stuffe, as well harnesse as other stuffe of houshold. Then the king entended to have pursued her, but tidynges came vnto him that Reynulph Erle of Chester with an hoste of Welshemen was commyng towardes him: But by mediation of friendes this Reynulph in the ende was reconciled to the king, and was with him fully agreed. But shortly after sayth Reynulph, in a Parliament holden at Northamton, he was taken of the king by a traine, and not deliuered againe before he had geuen vp the Castell of Lincolne.

About this tyme as certeyne write, the Iewes then beyng in England crucifyed a childe named William in the Citie of Norwiche in derision of the Christian religion. And in Iewes crucified a the time of Henry the second, about the vi. yere of his reigne (as sayth Reynulph) they crucifyed another at Gloucester.

In the xij. yere of his reigne, king Stephen was againe crowned at Lincolne after the geuyng vp of the sayd Citie where neuer none of his predecessors had bene euer crowned before.

Robert Erle of Gloucester well rewarded of the king.

Robert Erle of Gloucester made also new warre vpon the king, at Wilton, so that he was in great perill, and like to have fallen into Roberts daunger, and escaped but verye narowly. And there was taken a Barron of the kinges named Sir William Martell, for whose raunsome and delivery, the king gave after to the sayd Erle the Castell of Sherborne. And that done, the sayd Erle Robert began to buyld a strong Castell at Faringdon: Whereof the king beyng enformed, assembled his knightes and sped him thetherward, by meane whereof the worke was for that tyme empeached and let. These thinges done (sayth Polidore) the rage of warre ceased for a tyme. In the meane while, the king went ynto London, and there helde a Parliament, in the which he spake vnto his Nobles and Prelates as followeth.

Where you have betherto (my most deare and trusty Lords all) followed me as chiefe and head Capitaine in defending your libertie, I desire you that you will not nowe forsake me but do the lyke hereafter, and continue as loyall and faythful vnto me your souereigne liege Lord, as you have hetherto bene: for as concerning me, though I have not yet (I confesse) done my duetie in the princely regiment committed vnto me, accord-

And because you shall not thinke that hetherto little or nothing hath beene done of any importaunce: you shall understand that our enimies are already so weakened by my meanes, that will they nyll they, they must needes yeeld them shortly to our grace and mercie. There remayneth onely that you will for your partes helpe to maintaine those warres which by oure consent and counsayle were first begonne and taken in hande by mee, for the defence of the common wealth. And manye other wordes spake he vnto them of lyke sentence, to the entent to move them to contribute to the aforesayde warres as the present necessitie should require.

When he had thus spoken euery man promised wyllingly to ayde him with that they might, aswell for their awne safetie, as for the defence of the common libertie of the The Bishops and Priestes also, because it was not lawfull for them to fight, were contented yet to ayde him with money. For the which thing, he beyng desyrous to gratefie them againe, caused it to be ordeyned and enacted in the Parliament, that whosoeuer from that daye forwarde layde violent handes vpon any that was within holy orders, or did arrest any such, for what cryme socuer it were, or take them prisoners without the ordinaries processe and expresse commaundement, should be accounted ac-

In the. xv. yere of his reigne, the Ryuer of Thamys was so strongly ouer frosen that

It is also written by Robert a Chronicler that king Stephen conceyuing great displeasure against the Citie of Worcester, because they received the Duke of Gloucester. and Mawde the Empresse, did therefore cause the same Citie to be set on fyre and brent to coles.

In the. xvij. yere, Reynulph Erle of Chester dyed, and was the fourth Erle after the Conquest, and his sonne Hugh was Earle after hym, which was a man of great strength and power. And in the same yere (as sayeth Guydo and other) dyed Geoffrey Plan- The death of tagenet husband of Mawde the Empresse. And so this Henry was Erle of Angeow by his father, and Duke of Normandy by his mother, and Erle of Poytowe by his wyfe.

It was not long after, that Eustace the sonne of King Stephen, wyth aide of the French king, warred vpon Henry Duke of Normandy, the which (as some write) was practised by Stephen his father, to the intent to let or stop him that he should not come into England to clayme his inheritaunce. But Duke Henry defended himselfe so knightly, that the saide Eustace wan thereby lyttle honour and lesse profite.

An olde Chronicle sheweth that king Stephen entended to have crowned the sayd Eustace his sonne king of Englande by his dayes, but the Byshoppes refused that deede by the commaundement of the Bishop of Rome.

In the. xviij. yere, the king layde siege vnto the Castelles of Newbury, of Walyngforde, and of Warwike & Warwell, the which had bene kept by the Empresse friendes, from the time of her departure vnto that day, and hoped of reskues by Henry Duke of Normandy. But the king then wan the Castelles of Newbury and of Warwell, but Warwike and Wallyngford defended themselues vntill the commyng of Henry the Duke, the The landing of which in the ende of the sayde yere with a great armye entred England, and first wanne Henry Duke of Normandy. the Castell of Malmesbury.

Then king Stephen with his power drewe towarde the Duke. And finally, by meane of mediators, as Thibalde Archbishop of Cauntorbury and other, both Princes to common of peace, met nere vnto the water of Vrine, or Vrne. But as fast as some laboured for peace, so fast other laboured to have warre, so that at that communication the peace was not concluded.

After the king and the Duke were departed, the king went toward Ipswitch in Suffolke: And the Duke tooke the way towarde Shrewesbury, where he wanne the Castell of the sayd towne. From thence he went to Notyngham, and wan that towne, but would not meddle with the Castell, because he thought it to strong to be wonne. To the which couenauntes justly to be holden, the king was first sworne, and then his base sonne William and after his Lordes spirituall and Temporall, and so went both vnto London, where they were roially receiued. And when the king had feasted the Duke, and geuen vnto him riche giftes, he Duke Henry re- tooke his journey toward Normandy. But the English Chronicle sayth that the accord was made vpon the decision of the land between them, that is to say, that both should reigne together, and either of them to enjoy halfe the lande. But how that decision was made, or which part of the land eyther of them should holde, no mention thereof is made. Of dyuerse aucthours, as Reynulph and other, it is recorded that this Stephen liued in

And as before ye have heard in the latter ende of the story of king William the Conquerour, that king Henry the second, and king Stephen, came of two sisters, after the opinion of some wryters which were the daughters of king Henry the first who had maryed Molde the daughter of Malcolyne king of Scottes, whereof the elder was named Molde maried to Geoffrey Plantagenet of whome he begat king Henry the second: And the other sister named Mary was the mother of king Stephen: So also is it to be vnderstand, that by king Henry the seconde returned the blood of the Saxons to the crowne of England, and so it did by Stephen, but yet more properly by king Henry the first, as by the discent of his mother expressed before in the ende of the story of William Conquerour may apere. By which reason it followeth, that the blood of William Conquerour reigned ouer England but lxviij. yeres, one moneth and. xvj. dayes, if it be accompted from the first yere of king William Conquerour, vnto the last yere of king Henry the first: But if we reckon it to the ende of the reigne of king Stephen, then was it. lxxxvij. yeres, and. xij. dayes.

By king Hery the second the blood of the Saxons was restored againe. The blood of the Normas how long it reigned

HEnry the seconde of that name, sonne of Geoffrey Plantagenet Erle of Angeow, and of Molde or Mawde the Empresse daughter of king Henry the first, began his reigne

He was harrish of voyce, but yet eloquent and well learned, and also noble and valiaunt in knyghthood, wise in counsayle, but dread ouermuche destinies. He was free and liberall to straungers, and heard and holdyng from his familiers and seruauntes. And whome he loued or hated entierly, hard it was to turne him to the contrary. He loued rest and peace, to the ende he might the rather follow his pleasure, with mo vices rehersed by Gerald and others, the which for length I passe ouer.

Howbeit as Reynulph witnesseth he was not barren of all vertues, for he was of so Henry the segreat a courage, that he would often say, that all the worlde suffised not to a couragious gious prince. And he encreased his heritage so mightily, that he wanne Irelande, anone after Ireland iowned to his coronation by strength, and tooke the king of Scottes prisoner, and joyned that king-the crowne of England. dome of Scotlande to hys awne. From the South Occean, vnto the North Islandes of Orcades, he closed all the landes as it were vnder one dominion, and spred so largely his Henry the se-Empire, that we read not that any of his progenitors had so many Prouynces and Coun-cond greatly entreys under their gouernance and rule. For besyde the Realme of England and Scotland, nion. he had in his rule Normandy, Gascoyne, and Guyan, Angeow and Poyters: and he made subject to him Aluerne and other landes. And by Elianor his wyfe he obteyned as in her right, the Erledome of Tolous.

Of the which wife he receyued sixe sonnes, and thre daughters, the which five sonnes King Heary had to name, William, Henry, Richard, Godfrey, and Ihon, but what the sixt was call-by Elianorhis ed is not remembred of wryters. The eldest of the maydens was named Molde or wife ix children. Mawde, and was maryed to the Duke of Saxon, the second Elianor, maryed to the king of Spaine, and the thirde named Iane, maryed to the king of Sicile.

This Henry was prosperous in his beginning, and infortunate in the ende, and special-iect to tyure. ly in the last flue yeres of his reigne, for in the first of those flue yeres, his strength began to minishe: The second yere he lost a voyage in Irelande: In the thirde, he lost Aluerne, warryng agaynst the King of Fraunce: In the fourth yere he lost Briteyn, and in the fift the Citie of Cenomanna, and Turon, with many Holdes to them belonging.

When tidynges was brought vnto this Henry of king Stephens death, he fortuned to lye at the siege of a Castell which was withholden and kept from him by the frenche king. And beyng aduertised by his counsayle forthwith to breake up his siege, and to hasten him into England to take possession of the Crowne, least happely any styrre or businesse might arise by protractyng of y time: he vpon the affiance that he had in his rightfull cause aunswered againe, that no man durst be so hardie as to attempt any thing agaynst him. And so though he were dayly counsayled to the contrary, yet would he not depart before he had wonne the sayde Castell. That done, he sped him into England, and was erowned at Westminster of Theobald Archbishop of Cauntorbury, not without great solemnitic and roioysing of the people, the Sonday before Christmas day. 1154. louyngly spake vnto them both generally and privately, that every man conceyved thereby great hope of his good government to come, and that they should have a very good and gracious Prince of him.

In the first yere of his reigne, after he had chosen centeyne graue, wise, discrete, and well learned men in the lawes of the Realme to be of his privile counsaile, and had by their aduice reformed the sayd lawes, then because justice and equitie should no lenger be oppressed by such malefactors, as being called out of foreyn countryes by king Stephen to serue him in his warres, were not afeard to commit all kinde of mischiefe, vnder pretence of a libertie permitted to Souldiours by the law of armes in warre tyme: he made proclamation, that all such straungers whatsoeuer they were, should advoide the Realme by a day assigned, vnder a great paine: But especially the Flemings whereof at that tyme there was a great number come hether, whome he hated more then any other Nation. That done, he rased diverse Castelles that before in the tyme of King Stephen were buylded. eyther for displeasure of the owners, or for that they stood not commodiously and for his purpose: Or else for feare least they should at any time be fortefyed of his enemyes Lordes and gen- against him. Furthermore, he banished many of the Lordes and gentlemen that were highly in king Stephens fauour. And from such as by purchase, gift, or otherwise helde any landes, sometymes belonging to the Crowne, he tooke the sayde landes and seased songed to the erowne are taken vpon them in whose handes soeuer they were. By the which fact of his, a number (sayth Polidore) were offended, gatheryng plainely thereof, that he would in tyme to come be nye himselfe, and regard his awne commoditie.

In the beginning of the seconde yere which was the yere of our Lorde M. C. lv. Quene Eleanor his wyfe was brought a bed of a man childe whom he called Henry.

This yere he went downe into the North Countrie, and so to Yorke, where he seased into his handes certeyne Castelles and Fortes which had bene a great while possessed of private personnes: But especially the strong Castell of Scarborough. After this he tooke from the Scottishe king the Countrie of Comberland, and then went he to Northumberlande, and recourred that Countrey wholy, notwithstanding that it was genen vnto king Dauid of Scotland by Mawde the Empresse his mother, because the sayde Dauid tooke part with her against king Stephen, the which countries were at that season in the handes and possession of Malcolme who succeded the said Dauid: But because he would not seme altogether vngratefull vnto him, that had so well deserved of his mother, he permitted the sayde Malcolme still to enjoy and reteyne the Erledome of Huntingdon, the which, as is before sayde, king Stephen gaue vnto Henry the eldest sonne of Dauyd: But yet on condicion that he should sweare to do homage and fealtie vnto him for the same Erledome.

Of this wonder sheweth the Aucthor of Chronica Chronicarum, saiyng that about this tyme in Italy there appered three Sunnes by the space of three houres in And in the yere following apered three Moones whereof the middle Moone had a red crosse ouerthwart, which is there set out and noted for a prodigie and token of the Schisme that afterwardes fell amongest the Cardinalles about the election of the Bishop of Rome Alexander the thirde, the which Schisme endured almost. xx. yeres.

About this tyme Adrian the fourth of that name called Nicholas was Bishop of Rome, borne at Saint Albons or nere there aboutes, and as Reynulph wryteth was a bondman of the Abbey, who because he desyred to be professed a monke in the sayde Monastery, and could not be receyued, went shortly after beyond the seas, where he profited so much in learning that the Bishop of Rome made him first Bishop of Alba, and afterwardes Cardinal, and and his indgement at the last after the death of Anastasius Bishop of Rome, he was chosen Bishop of Rome. And beyng advanced to the Popedome, he gave many great privileges to the sayd Abbey. At the length he dyed beyng choked with a flie in his drink, who a little before his

Richard, surnamed (for his manhood) Cuer de lyon, in English, Lyons hart, was this yere borne at Oxford, in the kings Palace there, which as is before sayde was buylded by Henrie the first, and afterwards geuen by Richard Duke of Cornewall brother vnto king The birth of Henrie the thirde, vnto the order of the Carmelites then newly come into this Realme, to called Richard make them a house to inhabite in, which was called as it is yet at this day y white Friers. Cuer de Lion.

After this sayeth Polidore, the Realme of Englande was verye quyet and king Henry at peace, as well with his awne subjectes as with other forrein nations, vntill worde was brought him that his brother Geoffrey made a great sturre and businesse beyonde the sea, the originall cause wherof was this. Geoffrey Plantagenet his father lying on his death bed, left behinde him three sonnes, that is to say, Henry, Geoffrey and William, and ordeyned by his will and last testament that whensoeuer his eldest sonne Henry should chaunce to be in full possession, as well of the Realme of England, as of the Dukedome of Normandy, that then and from thenceforth, his brother Geoffrey to have and hold as in his awne proper right and inheritance the whole Countie and Erledome of Anioye: And in the meane season, vntill it fell vnto him, to have the possession of these three Townes following, that is to saye, Chinon, Lendum and Mirabellum, bicause that when God should call for his father he having the aide of the aforesayd three townes might the easier come by his right, and not be lightly kept from the possession thereof. And fearing least his sonne Henry (who was then absent) woulde afterwardes breake this his will and testament, he compelled dyuers noble men and prelates that then were present to promise him vpon their othe that they would not suffer his body to be enterred before they had receiued a corporall othe of his sonne Henrye for the firme and inviolable performance thereof. The whiche othe Henry afterwardes tooke (though full sore against his will) An oth taken by more to avoyde the great infamy and dishonour that should have else ensued vpon the de-Henry the second for the perniall thereof, then otherwise. But not long after when by the death of king Stephen, he formance of his was crowned king of England, being inflamed with ambition, and following the nature of fathers will. all couetous persons, who the more they have, the more they desire, he so vsed the matter with Adrian the fourth then Bishop of Rome, that he was by him dispensed of The Pope dishis aforesayde othe. And being so dispensed withall, contrarie to all right, equitie, law penseth we king thenry for his and conscience, he then little regarding his fathers will, made warre vpon hys sayde othe. brother, and in short time subdued him: & so spoyling him of his rightfull inheritance seased the sayde Erledome into his owne handes. Howbeit, he gaue him afterwardes certaine other landes in recompence, bicause he should not lack lyuing to maintaine his estate. But the sayde Geoffrey being thus vnuaturally intreated of his brother lyued not long after. Polidore.

All this while there was priuie grudge and hart burnyng betwene king Henry of England and Lewes of Fraunce, neyther could the same be otherwise quenched, then by oft renuyng of amitie and friendship betwixt them, the which yet was euermore but coloured and dissembled on both parties for the tyme, insomuch that it would burst out againe ypon the least occasion that might be. The chiefe cause of this mutuall grudge was for that Henry maried Aleanor, from whom the said Lewes as is beforesaid, had bene before devorced, after he had had two daughters by her. This Aleanor was nece and heyre Variance & disvnto William sometymes Duke of Aquitaine, and Erle of Tholose, who dyed in the holy king Henry and land: Wherefore king Henry hauyng now maryed the sayde Alianor claimed as in her the French king. right the Erledome of Tholose, which then was witholden from him by the Erle Reymond, who had maried lady Constance the french kinges sister, wherevoon both the sayd kinges were in armes redie to assayle eche other with sharpe and cruell warre, had not the matter bene taken vp by their friendes, and a peace concluded betwixt them. For confirmation whereof, it was agreed betwixt the sayd two Princes, that Henry the second A mariage con- sonne of king Henry, but the eldest then aliue, beyng a child of. viij. yeres of age. shoulde mary the daughter of Lewes the, viii, named Margaret beyng then but three yeres olde. The which daughter the sayde Lewes receyued of his seconde wife Constance the daughter of the king of Spaine: and this conclusion of peace & mariage was (as both Polidore and William of Newbrough do affirme) the viii, yere of v reigne of king Henry.

This yere also was the Citie of Cauntorbury almost all brent and consumed with fyre, although Fabian sayth that it was in the sixt yere.

The same yere also dyed Theobalde Archebishop of Cauntorbury. This man was a great fauourer of good letters and learned men, but especially he loued (for what qualities I know not) Thomas Becket a Londoner borne, the sonne of one Gilbert Becket, & of a woman of Siria. Insomuch that he not onely made him Archedeacon of Cauntor-Thomas Becket bury, but also was a meane vnto the king that he was made Lordchauncelour of England. Of the which Theobald it is also written, that immediately after his election to the Archebishoprick, he went to Rome, and there receyued his Pall of Innocent the second, and was made of him Legate. And hereof it came that all other Archbishoppes that succeded him were euermore called Legati nati.

The same yere Queene Aleanor was brought a bed of a daughter named Mawde. And shortly after the death of the sayde Theobald, Thomas Beckett aforesayd, was by the kinges procurement chosen and consecrated Archebishop of Cauntorbury, that is to say the. ix. yere of king Henry.

And this yere the Queene was brought a bed at Roan of a daughter which was called Aleanor, after her mothers name.

About this time king Henry caused all the States and Prelates of his Realme to sweare the kinges sonne fealtie to his sonne Henry, a Prince of great towardnesse: And of all other, Thomas Lorde Chauncelor and Archebishop of Cauntorbury was the first that tooke the othe, with reservation of the fealtie all ready made vnto the king his father so long as he lyued.

> Not long after the sayd Archebishop resigned the office of the Chauncelorship, and gaue vp the great Seale into the kinges handes, the which the king tooke in very euill part. The yere following which was the yere of our Lord. M. C. lxiii, and the. x. yere of the reigne of the king, there fell great variance betwene the king and the sayde Thomas Becket, insomuch that the kinges minde was nowe cleane alienated from him: The occa-displeasure w' Thomas Becket, sion and ground of which variance shall afterwardes be declared.

In the. xj. yere of his reigne the Welshemen rebelled againe, the which rebellion was by the king easely appeased without any great slaughter. For the chiefe doers and beginners hereof, he so punished, that it was thought that they would not eftsoones rebell but of their awne accorde remaine true and faythfull Subjectes.

The. xij. yere of his reigne dyed Malcolme king of Scottes, next after whome succeded his brother William, who as sone as he was crowned went to London and there did homage and fealtie vnto king Henry, as Malcolme had done before. But Reynulph in his. vij. booke, and. xxiij. Chapter setteth foorth the maner and doyng of this homage as followeth. This yere (sayth he) the. xij. day before September, William king of Scotland by the assent of his Lordes and Barons came vnto Yorke where then king Henry was with his Nobles, and there sware fealtie and made his homage vnto the sayd king Henry of England. And also the sayd king William did then and there confesse and acknowledge by his letters patentes that he and his successors men of Scotland should do homage, allegeance and fealtie to the kinges of England, as often as they shall be required therevnto. And in token of this subjection, the sayde king of Scotland offered his Hat, and his Saddell vpon Saint Peters aulter in the Churche of Yorke, which are extant there to be seene at this day. And moreover the Lordes of Scotlande there present at that time, tooke their othe in solempne maner, that if the king of Scotlande would withdrawe him at any tyme from the sayd fayth and loyaltie, that then they would ryse against him, and so remaine his enemyes, vntill he would returne and reconcile himselfe.

About this time dyed Conanus duke of Briteyne without issue male, leanyng behinde Geoffrey the him one onely daughter named Constance, which though she were then voder age and not kinges sonne maried to Coyet mariable, king Henry found the meanes to mary his sonne Geoffrey vnto, and so was stance the

In the. xiij. yere of his reigne dyed Mawde the Empresse the kinges mother, a woman teyn. as well for her wisedome and pollecye in warres, as all other her notable qualities incomparable.

This tyme also the Kinge marved his daughter Mawde vnto Henry Duke of Saxony. After this the king beyng at peace with all foreine nations from the. xiij. yere of his to ye duke of Saxony. reigne the space of two yeres and more, because he would not idlely consume the tyme, King Henry neyther yet to suffer his souldiours by feastyng, banquettyng, and other vnsittyng pastymes, with his son, which they are commonly wont to gene themselves vnto in peace tyme, which should Briteyne. withdrawe their myndes from martiall affayres, taking his sonne with him, made a voyage into Briteyne, where he spent a great part of his time in ridyng about and viewyng of the Countrie, and in fortifiyng of townes and holdes, and finally in hauyng of familier conference and friendly talke with the noble men there. Then departyng from thence he went into Normandy, and there also tooke order with matters of that Countrie accordyngly. These thinges done, in the beginning of the next spring, he returned into England, but not without some misfortune vpon the sea: For one of his Shippes was drowned by tem- A great mispest, wherein as it is reported were three hundreth persons which were all drowned. And fortune vpon the after his returne he went to Windsore, where he made his abode and kept his Christmas, and the greatest part of all the Nobles of the realme were there with him. And thether came also king William of Scotlande with his brother Dauid to signific vnto him how glad and loyfull they were of hys prosperous successe in his late voyage, whom he right curteously embraced againe, geuyng them at theyr departure many riche and large giftes.

Now to returne vnto Thomas Becket: the cause of the aforesayd varyaunce and discention betwixt the king and him was as it is written of diuers Aucthours of good credite, that certein wicked persons of the Clergie whose murders, robberyes, and grieuous transgressions against the lawes of the Realme, beyng declared to the king by his ludges: The king therewith was not a little agreeued, and for reformation therof, called a Parliament in the. ix. yere of his reigne at Northampton, requiring to have established by aucthoritie thereof, that due punishment might be executed vpon such transgressors of the Clergie of this Realme according to the auncient order of the lawes: notwithstanding the prerogative and privelege which the ecclesiasticall persons claymed, saiying that they were exempt from all temporall iurisdiction. Thomas Becket then beyng Archebishop of Cauntorbury, vnderstandyng the king to go about to set lawes, prejudiciall to the priuelege of the Clergie, would not agree therevnto, desiryng the king that vnder Christ our newe king, and vnder the newe lawe of Christ he woulde not bring in anye newe proceedyngs agaynst the ordinances and decrees of the auncient holye fathers: And if he would, he sayde that he neither ought to sustaine it, nor would not. The king beyng moued therewith, alleageth againe and exacteth the olde lawes and customes of his Grandfather, observed and agreed vpon by Archebishops, Bishoppes, Prelates, and other pri ueleged persons, requiryng likewise of him, whether he would agree to the same, or else now in his reigne condempne that, which in the reigne of his Grandfather was well alow-And those constitutions are in number. xxviij. or. xxix. whereof certeine follows.

Besides these constitutions there were many other which I passe ouer, for that the afore rehersed articles are the chiefe. And now let vs returne to the matter betwixt the king and Thomas Becket aforesayd.

The king as is aforesayde, conventyng hys nobles and Clarkes together, required to have the punishment of the aforesayde misdoers of the Clergie. But Thomas Becket would not consent therevnto. Wherfore the king demaunded of him whether he woulde consent with hys Clergie, that the customes then set foorth in the realme (meaning the first parte of the aforesayde decrees) should be observed. To the which the Archbishop consulting together with his brethren, giueth aunswere agayne, that he was contented the kings ordinances should be observed, adding this withall Saluo ordine suo, that is, saving his order. And so in lyke maner all the other Bishops after, being demaunded in order. answered with the same addition Saluo ordine suo. Onely Hillarius Bishop of Chichester, perceyuing the king to be exasperate with that addition, in stead of Saluo ordine suo, was agreed to observe them bona fide. The king hearing them not simply to agree vnto him but with an exception, was greatly offended, who then turning to the Archbishop and the Prelates, sayde: that he was not well content with that clause of theirs Saluo ordine suo, which he sayde was captious and deceytfull, having some maner of venym lurcking vnder it, and therefore required an absolute graunt of them, without any exception, to agree to the former ordynaunces. To thys the Archbishop replyeth that they had sworne vnto hym their fidelitie, both lyfe, body and earthly honour: Saluo ordine suo: and that in the same earthly honour, all those ordynances were comprehended. And to the observing of them they would bynde themselves after none other forme, but as they had sworne before. The king with this was moved, and all his nobilitie, and that not a little. The day beyng well spent the king when he could get none other aunswere of them, departed in great anger, geuyng no worde of salutation vnto the Bishops. And Hillarius Bishop likewise euery one of the Bishops departed to his awne house. The bishop of Chichester among the rest was greatly rebuked of his felowes for chaungyng the exception contrary to the voice of all the other. The next day following the king tooke from the Archebishop all suche honours and Lordshippes as he had geuen him before, in the tyme that he Thomas Becket was Chauncelour, whereby appered the great displeasure that the king bare against him and the Clergie.

resorted to him to craue his fauour: and gaue him counsayle withall to ioyne some of the Bishoppes on his syde, least if all were against him, peraduenture he might the sooner be overthrowne. And thus the greatest number of the Bishoppes were by this meanes reconciled againe vnto the king, except the Archebishop and a fewe other Bishoppes. The king thinking to trie all maner of wayes, when he sawe neither feare, nor threates coulde turne them, he did then assay them with gentlenesse, but it would not serue. Many of the Nobles labouring betwixt them both, exhorted the Archebishop to relent vnto the king, but it would not be. Likewise the Archbishop of Yorke, with divers other Bishops & Abbots especially the Bishop of Chester did the same: Besydes his awne housholde dayly called vpon him, but no man could perswade him. At length he having vnderstandyng, partly by them that came to him, what daunger might happen not onely to himselfe, but to all the other of the Clergie, vpon the kinges displeasure, and partly also considering the olde loue and kindenesse of the king towardes him in tymes past, yeldeth somewas content to geue ouer to the kinges request, and came to Oxenford to the king, re- what to the concilying himselfe aboute the addiction which had displeased the king so much. Where-king. vpon the king beyng somewhat mittigated, receyued him with a more cheerefull countenaunce (but yet not so familiarly as before) saiving that he woulde have his ordinaunces and proceedinges after that forme confirmed in the publique audience and open sight of his Bishoppes and all his Nobles. After this, the king beyng at Clarendon, there called his Nobilitie and Prelates before him, requiryng to haue that performed, which they had den and kept at graunted in consenting to the obseruing of his Grandfathers ordinances and proceedyngs. Besydes these two Bishoppes, there went to him other two noble peeres of the Realme, Great labour labouryng with him to relent, & condiscend to the kinges desyre. If not, they should Thomas Becket be enforced to vse violence, as neyther would stand with the kings fame, and much lesse to his bounden with his quietnesse: But he would not geue ouer. After this came to him two Rulers of the Temple called Templares, one named Richard de hast: another called Constance de Houerio with their company, lamenting and bewailyng the great perill, which they declared vnto him to hang ouer his head, and yet neyther with their teares, nor with their kneelynges would he be remoued. At the length came the last message from the king, signifiyng vnto him with expresse words, and also with teares what he should trust vnto, if he would not geue ouer vnto the kinges request.

By reason of which message, he either terrefied or else perswaded, was content to submit himselfe: Wherevpon the king incontinent assembling the States together, the Archebishop first before all other begynneth to promise to the king obedience, and submission vnto his customes, and that cum bonu fide, leaving out his former addiction, Saluo ordine, mencioned before, in steede whereof, he promised in verbo veritatis, to observe and Thomas Becket keepe the kinges customes & sweare to the same. After him the other bishops likewise sware to kepe the kinges ordimade the like othe. Wherevoon the king commaunded certeine instrumentes obligatory nances. to be drawen, of the which the king should have one, the Archbishop of Cantorbury another, and the Archbishop of Yorke the thirde, requiryng also the said Archbishop to Thomas Becket set to his hande and seale. Thomas Becket the king Alanus one of the foure wryters of the lyfe of this Thomas Becket, recordeth that the and obedience to Archbishop in his voiage toward Winchester began greatly to repent that he had done before, partly through the instigation of certain about him, but chiefely of his crossebearer, who goving before the Archbishop did sharpely and earnestly rebuke him, for genung ouer to the kings request, against the privilege and liberties of the Church, pollutyng not onely his fame & conscience, but also genyng a pernicious example to them that should come after, with many like wordes.

to the Court, to the king.

An arrogant subject to stad in such maner with his Prince.

Rotrodus Archebishop of Roan.

To make the matter short, the Archebishop was so touched vpon the same, with such repentance, that kepyng himselfe from company, lamentyng with teares, with fastyng, and with much penaunce, tearyng and scourgyng his awne body, did also suspend himselfe from all deuyne service, and would not receive comfort, before he had sent to the Popc, and had graunt that he should be assoyled of him, who directed to him againe letters by the same messenger that came from the sayde Archebishop. In which letters, he not onely assoyled him of his trespasse, but also with wordes of great consolation did courage him to be stoute in the quarrell he toke in hand. Vpon these letters of the Pope, Becket was not a little comforted & encouraged. The king heering of Thomas Beckets wrath encreased going back & how he denied to set his seale to those sactions which he codiscended vnto agaynst Thomas before, toke no little displeasure against him, insomuch as he threatnyng to him banishment and death, began to call him to reconvinges, and to burthen him with paymentes, that all men might vinderstand that the kinges mynde was sore set agaynst him. The Archbishop herevpon, whether more for the loue of y Pope, or dread of his Prince, thought Thomas Becket to make an escape out of the realme, and so crept out in the night with two or purposed to make an escape, three with him, stealing from his houshold, & attempted to take the sea privily, but the weather not seruying him, he was driven home againe. And shortly after that he was gone, his departure was knowne and novsed abroade: By reason of which noves the kinges officers came to Cauntorbury, and purposed to have seased upon his goodes on the Thomas Becket kinges behalfe. But as it chaunced the night before their commyng, Becket returned and was founde at home, wherefore they did not proceede in their purpose. Nowe Becket well understanding the king to be sore bent against him, and perceveying that the Seas Thomas Beckes would not serue him, made haste to the Court, the king living then at Woodstocke, where commeth againe the king receyued him after a certeyne maner, but nothing so familiarly as he was wont, taunting him iestingly and merily, as though one Realme were not able to holde them Becket, although he was permitted to go and come at his pleasure to the Court, yet he coulde not obteyne the fauour that he would, perceyuing both in himselfe, and confessing no lesse vnto others howe the matter would fall out, so that either he should be constreyred to geue ouer with shame, or stoutelye he must stande to that which he had so boldely taken in hande. The Archebishop of Yorke in the meane time goving betweene the king and Becket, laboured to make peace and loue betwene them: But the king in no case would be reconciled, onlesse the other would subscribe to his lawes. that while the king would none otherwise agree, neither that Becket would in no wise subscribe, there was a foule discorde betwixt them. The king for his regall aucthoritie thought it much that any subject of his should stande against him. The Archbishop againe thinking himselfe to have so good a quarrell as in the defending of the liberties of the Church, and also bearing himselfe bold upon the letters of the Pope lately written unto him, thought himselfe strong yough against the king and all the realme besvde. Wherefore the Archebishop trustyng to these thinges, woulde geue no place, but by vertue of his Apostolike aucthoritie gaue censure vpon these lawes and constitutions of the king, condemnyng some, and other some approuving for good and Catholike. Besides this there came also to the king Rotrodus Archbishop of Roan sent from the Pope to make peace betwene the king and the Archebishop. To the which the king was well content to agree, so that the Pope would agree to ratefie his ordinaunces. But when that could in no wysc be obteyined at the Popes handes, then the king thus beying stopped and frustrate of his purpose by reason of Beckets Apostolike Legacie, beyng Legatus a latere: thought good to send vp to the Pope: and so he did to obteyne of him, that the same aucthoritie of the Apostolike Legacy might be coferred to another, after his apointment which was the Archbishop of Yorke: But that the Pope denied. Notwithstandyng at the request of the kinges The king dis-Clergie, the Pope was content that the king shoulde be Legate himselfe, whereat the king deyneth to be the Popes Letooke great indignation as (Houeden wryteth) so that he sent the Pope his letters againe. gate.

And when the kings Ambassadors were returned with the aforesaid letters, & had declared the kings pleasure & request. The Pope at the last grauted, that the Legate should be removed, & that the Archbishop of York should be placed in that office after his awne request. And yet addeth this promise withall, that the sayd Becket should recevue no harme nor domage thereby.

Assone as the king had receyued the Popes letters to authorise the Archbishop of Yorke in the Legacie, he then caused Becket to be cyted up to appeare by a certaine day at the Thomas Becket towne of Northampton, there to make aunswere to suche things as should be layde to his at Northampton. charge. So when the daye was come, all the Peeres and Nobles with the Prelates of the realine upon the kings proclamation being assembled in the Castell of Northampton great faulte was found with the Archebishop, for that he beyng cited personally came not himselfe, but sent another for him. The cause why he came not (Houeden sayth) was this, because the king had placed his horse and horsemen in the Archebishops lodging, which was a house there of Chanons, wherewith he being offended, sent worde agayne that he would not appere onlesse his lodgings were auoyded of the kinges horsemen. Wherevoon by publique sentence as well of the Nobles as of the Bishops, his moueables A indgement were adjudged to be confiscate for the king.

The Archbishop against for his parte against the order and forme of that judgement complayned, alleging for himselfe, that seing he was the Primate & spirituall father, not only of all other in the realme, but also of the king himselfe, he thought it not couenient, A stoute replie father so to be judged of hys children, nor the pastor of the flock so to be codempned. Becket. And this was the first daies action.

geuen against Thomas Beckets

The next daye following the king layde an action against him, for one that was his King Henry co-Marshall called Ihon, for certaine iniurie done to hym, and required of the sayde Arch-against Thomas bishop the repaiying againe of certayne money, which he as he sayde had lent vnto him in Becket. the tyme he was Chauncelour, the somme whereof was fyue hundreth Markes. money the Archebishop denyed not but that he had received it of the king, albeit by the waye and tytle of gift (as he tooke it) though he could bring no proofe thereof. ypon the king required hym to put in assurance for the payment thereof, whereat the Archbishop making delayes, not well contented at the matter, he was so called vpon, that eyther he should be comptable to the king for the money, or else he should incurre present daunger, the king being so bent against him. 'The Archbishop being brought to such a strayte, and destitute of his awne suffraganes, could not here by no meanes escape, had not fyue persons of their awne accorde stepped in, being bound for him, euery one in one hundreth Markes, and this was vpon the second day concluded.

The morrow after which was the thirde daye of the Counsayle, as the Archbishop was sitting beneth in a conclave with his felow Bishops about him, consulting togither, the sayde Bishops labored by sundry wayes and meanes, and with verie vehement perswasions and learned arguments to wyll him to obedience and to submit himselfe to the king, the which perswasions for the length of them I doe here omit: But to conclude, when they had long spent their labour, good wyll and wisedome, to have reduced him to good order, he would not condissend vnto them, but sayde as followeth.

I perceyue sayth he, and vnderstand that ye go aboute to maintaine and cherishe but A bolde and your owne cowardnesse vnder the colourable shadowe of sufferance, and vnder the pre-stoute aunswere VOL. I. tence mas Beckes.

tence of dissembling softnesse, to choke the libertie of Christes Church: who hath thus bewitched you, O vnsaciable Bishoppes? what meane ye? why do you so vnder the impudent title of forbearing, beare a double heart, and cloke your manifest iniquitie? What call ye this bearing with tyme, the detriment of the Church of Christ? Let termes serue the matter, why peruert you the matter that is good with vocables and termes vntrue? For that ye say we must beare with the malice of tyme, I graunt with you, but yet we must not heape sinne to sinne. Is not God able to helpe the state and condicion of his Church, but with the sinfull dissimulation of the teachers of the Church? Certes God is disposed to tempt you. And tell me I pray you, when should the gouernours of the Church put themselves to daugers for the Church, in tyme of tranquilitie or in tyme of distresse? Ye will be ashamed to denie the contrary, but in distresse. And nowe then the Churche living in so great distresse and vexation, why should not the good pastour put himselfe in perill therfore? For neither do I thinke it a greater act or merite, for the auncient bishops of the olde tyme, to found the Church than with their blood, or then now for vs to shead our blood for the liberties of the same. And to tell you plaine, I thinke it not safe for you, to swarue from the forme and example which you have received of your holy elders.

After these thinges were spoken, they sate all in silence a certaine space, beyng locked in together as aforsayde: But at the length to finde a shift to cause the dore to be opened. I would sayth the Archebishop speake with two Erles that are about the king, and named them who they were, which beyng called, opened the dore and came in with haste, thinkyng to heare some thing which should appease the kinges minde, to whome the Archbishop spake in this maner. As touchyng and concernyng the matters betwene the king and vs. we have here conferred together. And forasmuch as we have them not here present with vs now, which know better in the matter than we do, whose aduise we would also be glad to follow, therefore we craue so much respyte as vntill to morow, and then we will be redy to geue vp our answere vnto the king: with this message two bishops were sent vnto the king, which was the Bishop of London and the Bishop of Rochester.

London to helpe the matter, and to set quietnesse, addyng something more to the message, sayde to the king, that the Archebishop craued a little delay of time to prepare suche wrytings and instrumentes, wherein he should set forth and declare his mind, in accomplishing the kinges desyre. &c. Wherfore two Barons were sent to him from the king to graunt him that respite or stay, so that he woulde ratefie that which the messengers had signified to the king. To the which the Archebishop aunswereth that he sent no suche message as was intimate in his name: but onely that the next day he woulde come and geue aunswere to the king, in that which he had to say. And so the convocation of the Bishoppes dissolued, and they were dismissed home. So that the most part of them that came with the Archebishop and accompanied him before, for feare of the kinges displeasure seuered them selues from him. The Archebishop thus forsaken and destitute (as the History of him sayth) sent about for the poore, the lame, & the halt, to come in and furnish his house, saiyng, that by them he might soner obteyne his victory, than by the other, which had so slipt from him.

On the next day following, because it was Sunday nothing was done. So the day after, which was the second fery, the Archebishop was cited to apere: But the night before beyng taken with the disease of the Cholike, all that day he kept his bed, and not able as he sayd to aryse. Euery man supposed it to be but a feyned sicknesse, certeyne of the chiefe Nobles were sent to trie out the matter, & to cite him to the Court namely Robert, Erle of Leycester, & Reginald Erle of Deuonshire. To whom the Archebishop answered. that as that day he was so diseased that he coulde not come, and thoughe he were brought Thomas Becket, in a horse Litter: so that day passed ouer.

The morow after, certeine that were aboute him, fearing no lesse but that some daunhaue a Masse of s. Stephe to de- ger would happen vnto him, gaue him counsaile in the mornyng to haue a Masse in the honour honour of the holy Martyr Saint Stephen, to kepe him from the handes of his enemies that day. When the Morow was come beyng Tuesday, there came to him the Bishops and Prelates, counsailyng and perswadyng him couertly by insinuation (for apertly they durst not) that he woulde submit himselfe aswell for all other his goodes, as also his Archebishoprike to the will of the king, if paraduenture his indignation by that meanes might asswage. Addyng moreouer, that onlesse he would so do, periury should be layd against him, for that he vnder the othe of fidelitie had promised to kepe the kinges lawes Thomas Becket and ordinaunces, and nowe woulde not observe them. To this Becket aunswereth againe: was charged with Brethren ye see and perceyue well howe the worlde is set against me, and how the enemy riseth and seketh my confusion. And although these be dolorous and lamentable, yet the thing that grieueth me most of all is this: the sonnes of myne awne mother be prickes and thornes against me. And albeit that I do holde my peace, yet the posteritie to come will knowe and report howe cowardlye you have turned your backes, and have left me your Archebishop and Metropolitane alone in this conflict, and how you have sitten in iudgement against me (although an vnworthie sinner) nowe two dayes together, and not that onely in the Civile or spiritual Court, but also in the temporal Court redy to do the same. But in generall this I charge and commaunde you all, by the vertue of pure obedience, and in perill of your awne order, that ye be not present personally in judgement against me. And that ye shall not so do, I here appeale to our mother and refuge of all such as be oppressed, the Church of Rome: and if any seculer man shall lay handes upon Thomas Becket me (as it is rumored they will) I streightly enioyne & charge you in the same vertue of appealeth to obedience, that you exercise your censure Ecclesiasticall upon them, as it becommeth you to do for your father and Archebishop. And this I do you to vinderstand, that though the world rage, and the enemy be fierce, and the body trembleth, for the flesh is weake, yet Thomas Beckee God so fauouryng me, I will neyther cowardlye shrinke, nor vilye forsake my flocke committed to my charge. But the Bishop of London contrary to this commaundement, did incontinent appeale Gilbert Byshop from him. And thus the Bishops departed from him to the Court, saue onely two, that of London apwas Henry Bishop of Winchester, and Ioselyne of Sarisbury, who returned with him se-Thomas Becket. cretly to his Chamber and comforted him. This done, the Archebishop the next day ad-A Masse of S. Stocket. dressed him to the Masse of S. of the king. The Masse beyng ended, the Archebishop puttyng off his Pall, his Miter and other robes, proceedeth to the kinges Court, and taketh also the Sacrament privily about him. And commyng towardes the kinges Chamber there to attend vpon y king, as he was entering in at the dore, he taketh from Alexander his Crosyer, the Crosse with the Crossestaffe, Robert Bishop in the sight of all that stode by, and caryeth it in himselfe, the other bishops following hym, of Hartford. and saiving he did otherwise then became him. Amongest other, Robert bishop of Hertford offered himselfe to beare his crosse, rather than he should so do, for that was not comely: but the Archbishope would not suffer him. Then sayde the Dishop of London vnto him, if the king shall see you come armed into his Chamber, perchaunce he will drawe out his sworde against you, which is stronger than yours, and then what shall this your armour profite you? The Archbishop aunswereth againe: if the kinges sworde do cut carnally, yet my sworde cutteth spiritually, and striketh downe to hell: But you my Lorde, as ye have played the foole in this matter, so you will not leave off your folly so farre as I can see, and so he came into the chamber. & the maner thereof, taryed not long, but came where Becket was set in a place by himselfe with his other Bishops about him. First the cryer callyng all the Prelates and all the Lordes of the Temporaltie together: that beyng done, and every one placed in his seate, according to his degree: The king beginneth with a great complaint against the Archbishop, for his maner of entering into the court, not as into a kings court, but as a traytor, shewing himselfe so like a traytor as hath not bene seene before in any christian kinges court: To this all there present gaue witnesse with the kings wordes. And so altogether with one crie called him on euery side Traytor. Wherevpon, great horror and feare was what should befall on him. The Archbishop of Yorke commyng downe to his men, sayd he could not abide to see what the Archebishop of Cantorbury was like to suffrr. Likewise, the Tipstaues and other ministers of the assembly commyng downe with an outas agaynst him, crossed them to see his hautie stobernesse, & the businesse that there was towards him. Certeine there were of hys friendes one or two, sittyng at his feete, some comfortyng him softly, and biddyng him to lay his cursse vpon them: Other contrary, biddyng him not to cursse, but to pray and to forgeue them: and if he lost his life in the quarrell of the Church and the libertie thereof, he should be happy. Afterward one of them named Iohannes Stephani, willyng to speake something in his eare, but could not be suffered by the kinges Marshall, who forbade that any man should have any talke with him. Then he, because that he could not otherwise speake vnto him, wrought by signes, making a crosse and lokyng vp with his eyes, and wagging his lippes meaning that he should pray, & manfully stande to the Crosse. In the meane time cometh to him Bartholomew Bishop of Exeter, desirying him to haue regard and copassion vpon himselfe, & also of them, or else they were all like to perish for the hatred of him. for there commeth out, saith he, a precept from the king, that you shall be taken, and so suffer for an open rebell, and who so hereafter taketh your part shall have the like punishment. It is sayd moreouer, that Ioselinus Bishop of Sarisbury, and William Bishop of Norwiche are to be had to the place of execution for their resistyng, and makyng intercession for you. When he had thus sayd, the Archbishop lokyng vpon the sayd bishop of Exeter said: Aduoyde sayd he, hence from me, thou vnderstandest not, neither doest Becket as Peter thou sauour those thinges that be of God.

The bishops to Rome of periury.

The bishops refuse obedience to Thomas Becket.

" That is to say, do call you or sommon you.

The Bishops and Prelates then going aside by themselves from the other Nobles (the king so permitting them to do) tooke counsaile together what was to be done. Here the matter stoode in a doubtfull perplexitie, for eyther must they incurre the daungerous indignation of the king: or else with the nobles they must proceede in condemnatio against the Archbishop for resisting the kinges sanctions, which they did not fauour themselves. In this straite necessitie they declysing what way to take, at length agreed upon this, that they with a common assent shoulde appeale the Archbishop to the See of Rome vpon peragree to appeale iurie. And that they shoulde oblige and binde themselues to the king, with a sure pro-Thomas Becket mise to woorke their diligence in deposing the Archbishop vpon this condition, that the king should promise their safety, and discharge them from the perill of that judgement which was towarde him. So all the Bishops obligging themselves thus to the king, went foorth to the Archeishop, of whome one speaking for the reast (which was Hilary Bishop of Chichester) had these wordes. Once you have bene our Archbishop, and so long we were bounde to your obedience: but now for as much as you once swearing your fidelitie to the king, doe resist hym, neglecting his Injunctions and ordinaunces concerning and perteyning to his terrene honor and dignitie, wherefore we here pronounce you periured, neyther be we bound to geue obedience to § Archbishop thus periured. But putting our selues & all oures in the Popes protection do appeale you* to his presence. And your the same assigned him his day & time to apere. The Archbishop answering again said, he heard him wel ynough, And vpon this sedeth vp to Rome in al hast to the Pope, signifying to him by letters the whole matter, how and wherefore & by whom he was appealed: After the Archbishop was thus appealed to Rome as before you have heard, he then sitting w his crosse wayting in the Court, at the last the king sent by certain Erles and Barons commandment to him (Robert the Erle of Leycester doing the message) that he should without delay come and render a full accompt of all things that he had receyued in fruits Thomas Becket & revenues of the realme, in the time he being his Chaucelor, and especially for the once again charged to be in 30000 Markes for the which he was accomptable to the king. To whom the Archbishop the kinges dept. aunswereth, that the king knew how ofte he had made his reconning and accompt of those things which he nowe required. Further and besides, he sayde that Henry his sonne and heyre of the Realme, with all hys Barons and also Richarde Lucye his chiefe iustice tolde him that he was free and quit to God & holy Church from all receiptes and computations. and from all secular exactions on the kings behalfe. And so he taking this his discharge at their handes, entered into his office, and therefore other accompt besides he woulde make none. When this worde was brought to the king, he required his Barons to do the lawe upon hym: who judged him to be apprehended and layde in prison. This done the Thomas Becket king sendeth vnto him Reginald Erle of Cornewall and of Deuonshire, and Robert Erle indged to be imprisoned. of Leycester, to declare to hym what was his judgement. To whome the Archbishop aunswereth, heare my sonne and good Erle, what I say vnto you: how much more pre- A prowd and cious the soule is then the bodye, so muche more ought you to obey me in the Lord, rather speach. than your terrene king: Neyther doth any lawe or reason permit the children to judge and condemne their father. Wherefore to advoyde both the judgement of the king and youres, and of all other, I put myselfe onelye to the Arbitrement of the Pope vnder Thomas Becket God alone, to be judged of him and of none other. To whose presence here before you appealeth from the king to the all I do appeale, committyng the ordering of the Church of Cantorbury my dignitie, Pope. with all other thinges apperteying to the same, voto the protection of God and his. And as for you my brethren and felow bishops (which rather obey man than God) you also I call and clayme to the audience and judgement of the Pope, and hence I depart from you as from the enemyes of the Catholike Church, & of the aucthority of the Apostolike See.

While the Barons returned with this aunswere to the king, the Archebishop passing Thomas Becket through the throng, taketh to him his Palfrey, holdyng hys Crosse in the one hande, and the Bridle of his Palfrey in the other, the Courtiers following after criging Traytor, Traytor, tary & here thy judgement: But he passed on vntill he came to the vttermost gate of the Court, which beyng fast locked, there he had bene stayed, had not one of his servaunts called Peter, named Deiunctorio, fyndyng there a bunch of keyes hangyng by, first prouyng one key, and then another, at the last chaunced vpon the right key, and so opened the gate and let him out. The Archebishop went streight way to the house of Chanons where he did lye, callyng in to him the poore where they could be found. When supper was done, making as though he would go to bed (which he caused to bee made betwixt two Altars) he in the meane tyme preuily, while the king was at Supper in the Euenyng, prepareth his iourney secretly to escape away, chaunging his garment and his name beyng called Derman, first went to Lincolne, from thence to Sandwich, where Thomas Becket he tooke Ship, and sayled into Flaunders, & from thence iourneyed to Fraunce as Houe- chaugeth his den sayth. But Alanus differyng in the order of his flight, sayth that he did not flie that escapeth. night, for at supper tyme there came vnto him the Bishops of London, and Chichester, declarying to him that if he would surrender up to the king his two maners of Otford and Wingham, there were hope to recouer the kinges fauour, and to have all remitted: But when the Archebishop would not agree therevnto, forasmuch as those Manours were belongyng to the Church of Cantorbury: And the king heeryng thereof was greatlye of-Insomuche that the next day, Becket was faine to sende to the king two Bishops and his Chapleyn to have leave to depart the realme. To the which message the king aunswered, that he would take a pause vntyll the next day, and then he should haueaunswere. But Becket not tariyng for his aunswere, the same day conveyed himselfe away secretly, as is aforesaid to Lodouicus the French king. But before he came to the French to Fraunce, preuented him, requiryng of the sayd French king in the behalfe of the king of England that he would not receive nor reteyne within his dominion the Archbishop of Can-Moreouer, y at his instance he would be a meanes to the Pope, not to shew any familiaritie vnto him. But the king of England in this povnt seemed to have more confidence in the French king, then knowledge of his disposition. For thinkyng that the French king would be as a good neighbour to him, in trustyng to him he was deceyued. Neither cosidered he with himselfe enough the maner and nature of the French men, at that time against the Realme of England, who then were glad to seke and take all maner of occasions to do some acte against England. And therefore Lodouike the French king understanding the matter, and thinkyng percase to have some advauntage thereby agaynst the king and Realme of England by y occasion hereof: Contrary to the kings letters of request, not onely harboureth and cherisheth this Dereman, but also wrytyng to the Pope by his Almoner and brother, entreateth him vpon all loues, as euer he would have his favour to tender the cause of the Archebishop Becket. Thus the kinges Ambassadors repulsed of the French king returned, at what tyme he sent another Ambassade vpon the lyke cause to Alexander the Pope, then beyng at Sene in Fraunce. The Ambassadors sent on this message were, Roger Archebishop of Yorke, Gilbart Bishop of London, Henry Bishop of Winchester, Hillary Bishop of Chichester, Bartholemew Bishop of Exceter with other Doctors and Clerkes: Also William Erle of Arondell, with certeyne mo Lordes and Barons. Who commyng to the Popes Court, were friendly accepted of certaine of the Cardinalles, amongest the which Cardinalles, there arose also discention about the same cause, some judgyng the Bishop of Cauntorbury in the defence of the libertyes of the Church, as in a good case was to be mainteyned: Some thinking againe that he beyng a perturber of peace and vnitie, was rather to be brideled for his presumption, then to bee fostered and encouraged therin. But the Pope partly bearing with his cause, and partly incensed therevnto wyth the letters of the French king, did wholy encline to Becket. Wherefore the Pope the next day following sitting in consistory with his Cardinalles, when the Ambassadors were called for, to the heeryng of Beckets matter, first begynneth the Bishop of London, next the Archebishop of Yorke, then Exceter, and through the Bishoppes every one in their order to speake. Whose Orations beyong not well accepted of the Pope, and some of them also disdeyned: The Erle of Arondell perceyuyng that, somewhat to qualifie and temper the matter to the Popes eares began after this maner.

Oration of the Erle of Arondell which he made in French.

Although to me it is vnknowen (sayth he) which am both vnlettered and ignoraunt, what it is, that these Bishoppes here have sayde, neyther am I in that tongue so able to expresse my minde as they have done: yet beyng sent and charged therevnto of my Prince, neyther can, nor ought I but to declare (as well as I may) what the cause is of our sending hether, not to contende or strive with any person nor to offer any injury or harme vnto any man, especially in this place, and in the presence here of such a one, vnto whose becke and aucthoritie all the worlde doth stoupe and yeelde. But for this intent is our Legacye hether directed, to present here before you, and in the presence of the whole Church of Rome, the deuocion and loue of our king and master, which euer he hath had, and yet hath still toward you. And that the same may the better appere to your excellencie, he hath assigned and appoynted to the furniture of this Legacie, not the least, but the greatest: not the worst, but the best and chiefest of all his subjectes, both Archebishoppes, Bishoppes, Erles, Barons, with other Potentates mo, of such worthinesse and parentage, that if he could have found greater in all his Realme, he woulde haue sent them, both for the reuerence of your person and of the holy Church of Rome. Ouer and besydes this I might adde to more, which your holinesse hath sufficiently tryed and proued all ready, the true and heartie fidelitie of this our Souereigne towarde you: Who in his first entrance into his kingdome wholy submitted himselfe, with all that is his besydes, to your will and pleasure.

And

And truely to testifie of his maiestie howe he is disposed to the vnitie of the Catholique favth, we beleue there is none more faythfull in Christ than he, nor more deuoute to God, nor yet more moderate in kepyng the vnitie of peace wherevnto he is called. as I may be bolde this to protest for our king and maister: so neyther do I deny touching the Archbishop of Cauntorbury, a man also not destitute nor vnfurnished with giftes and ornaments in his kinde of callyng, to be a man both sage and discrete, in such thinges as to him apperteyne, saue onely that he semeth to some, more quicke and sharpe than nedeth. This blot alone if it were not, and the breache betweene him and our king had not happened, both the regimentes together of the Temporaltie and Spiritualtie might quietly haue flourished, one with the other, in much peace and concorde, both vnder a Prince so worthie, and a Pastor so vertuous. Wherefore the case so standyng as it doth, our message hether and our supplication is to your vigilant prudence, that through your fauour and wisedome, the necke of this discention may be broken, and that reformation of vnitie and love may by some good meanes be sought.

This Oration of his, although it was liked of them for the softnesse and moderation thereof: yet it could not so perswade the bishop of Rome to condiscende to their sute and request, which was to have two Legates or Arbitrers to be sent from him into England to examine and to take vp the controuersie betweene the king and the Archebishop. But the Pope beyng encensed as is sayde before, would not graunt to their peticion, forasmuch as it should be (sayth he) prejudiciall, tendyng to the oppression of the Archebishop to graunt vnto it, he beyng not present. And therefore willed them to tary hys commyng, or else, he beyng absent, he would not he sayde in any case proceede against him. But they allegying againe, their tyme to be expyred appointed them of the king, having besydes other lettes & causes, as they alleaged, said, they could not there wayte for the commyng of Becket, and so returned backe their cause frustrated without the Popes blessyng to the king. Within foure dayes after, Becket commeth to the Popes court, where he prostrating himselfe at his feete, brought out of his bosome a scroll conteining the customes and ordinaunces of the king afore mentioned. The Pope receiving the sayd scroll, and readyng it in the open heering of his Cardinalles, condempned and curssed the most part of those decrees of the king, which he called Consuetudines auitas, that is, his Grandfathers ordinaunces: Besides, the Pope moreouer blamed Becket, for that he so much yelded vnto them at the beginning, as he did: Yet notwithstanding, because he was repentant for his vnaduised fact, he was content to assoyle him for the same. and that the rather because of his great troubles, which for the liberties of the holye Church he did sustaine, and so with great fauour for that day they dismissed him.

The next day, Alexander the Pope assemblyng his Cardinals together in his secret Chamber, appereth before them the Archbishop of Cantorbury, who made there a solempne Oration, and there and then resigned into the handes of the Pope the Archbi- The sentence of shoprike of Cantorbury, & his Oration beyng ended, he was bidden to stand apart. The the Pope and his Cardinalles. Pope then coferring vpo this with his Cardinalles, about the resignation of Becket, what was best to be done: Some thought it best to take the occasion offered, thinking thereby the kings wrath might easily be swaged, if the Church of Cantorbury were assigned to some other person, and yet the sayd Becket to be otherwise prouided for notwithstanding. Contrary, other again thought otherwyse, whose reason was: For if he y for the liberties of the Church had ventured not only his goodes, dignitie, & aucthoritie, but also his life. should nowe at the kinges pleasure be deprived, like as it might be a president hereafter to others in resisting their king in like sort, if his cause were mainteyned: so contrary. if it were quayled, it should be an example to all other hereafter none to resist his Prince in the like case, & so might redound not only to the weakening of the state of the Catholike Church, but also to the derogation of the Popes aucthoritie. Brieflye this sentence at length preuayled, that Becket receyueth his pastoral office at the Popes hand againe, with commendation & much fauour. But forsomuch as he could not be well placed in England, in the

Who vpon the same directed out certaine Injunctions against the Pope & the Archtions agaynst the bishop of Cantorbury, much like, & the same in effect that are before rehersed in the beginning of this Hystory.

And besides his Injunctions, the king also set foorth his proclamation that all maner of persons both men and women, who socuer were founde of the kindred of Thomas Becket, should be banished without taking anye parte of their goodes with them, and sent to him where he was, which was no little vexation to Becket to beholde them. Moreouer, for so muche as he was then lying with Gwaryn Abbot of Pontiniack, to whome the Pope as is aforesayde had commended him, therefore the king wryting to the same Abbot, required him not to retayne the Archbishop of Cauntorbury in his house, eyther else he would dryue out of his realme all the Monkes of his order. Wherevoon Becket was inforced to remove from thence, and went vnto Lewes the French king, by whome he was placed at Senon and there founde of him the space of five yeres, as is aboue mencioned.

After the aforesayde Injunctions and proclamation were thus set foorth, which greeued and troubled Becket not a little, then he for helpe resorted to the Pope, and obteyind of him letters to the king, and likewise the king agayne wrote to the Pope: And at the last the Archbishop in his owne name wrote to the king, and to sundrie of the Clergie, namely to certaine Bishops, who verie learnedly and plainely aunswered him, in suche maner as he had no hope of any good enterteynment in this realme. And in the ende he receyued a learned & worthy answere from the whole Clergie of England, (which for length I ouerpasse) so effectually & substancially written, as there could not be a better. But all this moued him nothing: And now that he saw himselfe to be of smal estimation among the Clergie of England, he therfore earnestly besought the Pope of aide & helpe against his adversaries: and at the last he obteyned of him certaine cursses & excommu-And first he put his cursse in execution vpon the Ministers of his church of Cantorbury, and then executed the same vpon certaine Bishops that had contempned hym, and lastly he procured two Legates to be sent from the Pope to the king to cursse him and all the whole realme, if the king would not restore him againe to his pristinate state and dignitie.

The King being thus vexed with the Archebishop, departed into Normandy, and shortly after into Fraunce to the French king, where then the Archbishop was present, and the French king perceyuing the king of England to be disguieted, and he desirous to procure peace, or at the leastwise pretending to set agreement betweene them, brought the matter to a communication among them. In the which communication the French king made himselfe as an Vmpere betwene them. The king of Englande vnderstanding French king and that the Archbishop would commit himselfe to his arbitrement, was the more wylling to the king of Eng-land, & Thomas admyt his presence. Wherevpon many being there present, the Archebishop (prostrating himselfe at the kings feete) declared vnto him kneeling vpon his knees that he would commit the whole cause, whereof the dissension arose betweene them, vnto his awne arbitrement, adding thereto as he did before Saluo honore dei, that is, sauing the honour of God. The king then as is sayde before was greatly offended at this worde Saluo honore dei, and also hearyng and seing the stiffenesse of the man, sticking so muche to this worde Saluo honore. &c. was highly therewith displeased, rebuking him with many grieuous wordes, as a man prowde and stubborne, and he also charged him with sundry & great benefites bestowed vpon him, as a person vnkinde and forgettyng what he so gently had done and bestowed vpon him.

And

And speaking to the French king then being present: See Sir if it please you (sayth the kyng of Englande) whatsoeuer displeaseth this man, that he sayth to be contrary to the honour of God. And so by this meanes he will vendicate and chalenge to himselfe both that is his and myne also. And yet notwithstandyng, for that I will not seeme to do any thing contrary or prejudiciall to Gods honour, this I offer him: There have bene kinges in England before me, both of greater and lesse puissaunce then I am: Lykewise, there haue bene Bishoppes of Cauntorbury many both great and holy men, what the greatest and most holyest of all his predecessors before him, have done to the least of my progenitors & predecessors before me, let him do the same to me, and I am content. They that stood by, heeryng these wordes of the king cryed all with one voyce, the king hath debased himselfe ynough to the Bishop. The Archebishop staiyng a little at this with silence, what sayth the French king to him, my Lorde Archbishop, will you be better then these holy men? will you be greater then Peter? what stande you doubting? heare, now have you peace & quietnesse put into your awne handes if ye will take it. To this the Archbishop answering againe: truth said he, my predecessors before me were much Thomas Beckets both better and greater than I, and of them, every one for his tyme, although he did king of Engnot extirpe and cut off all, yet some thing they did plucke vp and correct, which semed lande. adverse and repugnaunt agaynst Gods honour. For if they had taken altogether away, no such occasion then had bene left to any man, to rayse vp this fyre of temptation against vs as nowe is raysed, to prooue vs withall, that we beyng so prooued with them, might also be crowned with them, being likewise partakers of their prayse and rewarde, as we are of their labour and trauayle. And though some of them have beene slacke or exceede in their duetie doyng, in that we are not bound to follow their example.

Peter, when he denved Christ, we therefore rebuke him: But when he resisted the rage of Nero, therein we commend him. And therefore, because he could not finde in his conscience to consent vnto him, he ought in no wyse to dissemble with him, neyther did, by reason whereof he lost his life. By such lyke oppressions the Church hath alwayes grower. Our forefathers and predecessors because they would not dissemble the name and honor of Christ, therefore they suffered: And shall I to have the favour of one man suffer the honour of Christ to be suppressed. The Nobles standyng by hearyng him thus speake were greatly agreeued with him, notyng in him arrogancy and wilfulnesse, in perturbyng and refusyng such an honest order of agreement: But specially one among all the rest, who there openly protested, that seeing the Archebishop so refused the counsayle and request of both the kinges, he was not worthie to have the helpe of either other, whome as the kingdome of England had rejected, so the kingdome of Fraunce should not entertaine.

Alanus, Herbertus, and other of his Chapleynes that commytted to story the doyngs of Becket, do recorde (whether truely or no I can not say) that after this, the French king sendyng for him, as one much sorowyng and lamentyng the wordes that he had spoken at the commyng of Becket, did prostrate himselfe at the feete of the Archebishop, confessyng his fault in genyng that counsayle to him in such a cause, perteynyng to the honour of God, to relent therein, and to yelde to the pleasure of man: Wherefore declarying his repentaunce, desyred to be assoyled thereof. So that after that the French king and Becket were great friendes together, insomuch that king Henry sendyng to the king, to entreate and desyre him, that he would not support nor maintaine his enemie within his Realme: The French king vtterly denyed the kinges request, takyng part with the Archbishop rather than with him.

Besydes these quarelles and grudges between the king and the Archebishop about mentioned: there followed yet moreover a nother, which was this. Shortly after this communication betwene the kynges and Becket, the king of England returning againe from Normandy into England, which was the yere of our Lord M.C.lxvij. and the. xiiij. yere of his reigne about Midsommer kept his Court of Parliament at Westminster. The chiefe occasion that Parliament through the assent of the Clergie, and the Lordes Temporall, he caused his thride crowned king. Which coronation was done by the handes of Roger father Henry the Archbishop of Yorke, with the assistance of other bishops ministring to the same, as Gilbert of London, Ioselyn of Sarisbury, Hugh of Duresme, and Gualter of Rochester. By reason whereof, Becket of Cauntorbury beyng there neyther mentioned nor called for, tooke no little displeasure. And so did Lodouick the French king, heeryng that Margaret his daughter was not crowned with her husbande, wherevoon gatheryng a great army, he marched toward Normandy. But that matter was sone composed by the king of England, who sendyng his sonne to him in Normandy, intreated there, and concluded peace with him, promisyng that his son should be crowned againe and his daughter also. But the Archebishop not ceasing his displeasure, sent againe vnto the Pope, complaining upon these foure Bishops, especially of the Archebishop of Yorke, who durst be so bolde in hys absence, and without his knowledge or his licence to entermeddle to crowne the king, beyng a matter proper and peculier to his iurisdiction. At the instance Thomas Becket of whom, the Pope sent downe the sentence of excomunication against the Bishop of The other three Bishops with the Bishop of Yorke, he suspended, whose sencurse against the London. tence and letters thereof, for the aduoidyng of prolixitie I here omit. The king heeryng this was highly moued.

And in the meane season, the French king for his part, and his Clergie, and Courtiers the king of Eng-slackt none occasion to insite and solicite Alexander. the Pope, against the king of England, to excommunicate him also, sekyng thereby, and thinkyng to have some vauntage agaynst the Realme: Neither was the king ignorant of this, which made him more ready to apply to some agreement of reconciliation. At length cometh downe from the Pope two Legates, the one the Archbishop of Roan, & the other, the Bishop of Nauerne, with direction, and full commission either to drive the king to be reconciled, or to be interdited by the Popes censures out of the Church. The king vnderstanding himselfe to be in greater streights than he could well advoyde, at length through the mediation of the French king, and of other Prelates & great Princes, he was content to yelde to peace and reconciliation with the Archbishop whome he receyued both to his fauour, and also permitted and graunted him free returne to his Church againe. Albeit concerning his possessions and landes of the Church of Cantorbury, although Becket made great labour therfore, yet the king beyng then in Normandy, would not graunt him that, before he should repayre into England, to see how he would there agree with his subjectes. Thus peace after a sort beyng concluded betwene the king and him, the Archebishop returned into England, where he was right joyfully received of the Church of Cauntor bury: Albeit of Henry the yong king he was not so greatly welcommed. Insomuch that he comming up to Lendon to the king, was returned and commaunded backe to Cauntorbury, and there bidden to kepe his house.

Roger Houeden maketh mencion in his Chronicle, that the Archebishop vpon Christmas day did excommunicate Robert de Brock, for cuttyng off the tayle of one of his horses the day before.

In this meane time, the foure Bishoppes before mencioned whome the Archbishop did excommunicate, as is aforesayde, sent to him humbly, desiryng to be released of their censure. To whome when as the Archebishop would not graunt clerely and simply, without cautels and exceptions, they went ouer vnto the king, declaryng to him and complainyng of their miserable estate and vncurteous handlyng of the Archebishop. Wherevpon the King conceyued great displeasure in his minde towarde the Archebishop. Insomuche that he lamented oft and sundry tymes to them about him, that among so manye as he deine death of had done for, there was none that woulde reuenge him of his enemye: By the occasion of which wordes, certaine that were about the king, to the number of foure, heering the king,

thus complaine and lament, addressed themselues in great heate of haste to satisfie the agricued minde and quarell of their Prince: Who within foure dayes after the aforesayde Christmasse day, saylyng ouer into England, hauyng a forwarde and a prosperous wynde in their iourney, beyng in the deepe of winter, came to Cauntorbury where Becket was commanded to kepe. Where after certeine aduisement and consultation had among themselves, they pressed at length into the Bishops palace, where the Archbishop was sittyng with his company about him: And first they assayed him with gentle wordes to see whether he would relent to the kinges minde, and come to some conformitie, and said, that they had brought to him a comaundement from the king, which, whether he had rather openly there in presence, or secretly, to be declared vnto him, they bid him chose. Then the company beyng bidden to advoyde, as he sate alone, they sayde: you are commaunded from the king beyond the Sea, to repayre to the king here his sonne, there to do your dutye to him, in swearing to him your fidelitie for your baronage and other thinges, and to amend those thinges wherein yee haue offended against him. Wherevpon the Archbishop deniyng to sweare, and perceyuyng they entent, called in his company againe: and in multipliyng of wordes to and fro, at length they came to the Bishoppes which were excommunicate for the coronation of the king, whome they commaunded him in the kings name, that he should absolue and set free againe. The Archebishop aunswered that he neyther suspended nor excommunicated them but the Pope, wherefore if that were the matter that greened them, they should resorte to the Pope, he had nothing to do with the matter. Then sayde Reginald one of the foure. Although you in your awne person did not excommunicate them, yet thorow your instigatio it was done. To whom the Archbishop againe aunswered: and if the Pope sayde he, tendering the injuries done to me and to my Churche, wrought this reuenge for me, I confesse it offendeth me nothing. Thus then sayde they, it appereth by your awne wordes that it pleaseth you right well, in contempt and contumely of the kings Maiestie, to sequester his Bishops from their ministerie, who at the commaundement of the king did service in the Coronation of his sonne. And seing ye have presumed thus to stande against the exaltation of this oure souereigne oure newe king, it seemeth lykely that you will aspire to take his crowne from him, and to be exalted king your selfe. I aspire not sayde he to the crowne and name of the king, but rather if I had four crownes to geue him more, I would set them all vpon him, such good wyll I doe beare him, that onely his father the king excepted, there is none whose honor I more tender and love. And as concerning the sequestring of those Bishops, this I gene you to understand, that there was nothing done in that behalfe without the knowledge and assent of the king himselfe, to whome when I had made my complaint at the Feast of Mary Magdalene of the wrong and injurie done to me and my Church therein, he gaue me his good leaue to obteine at the Popes hand such remedie therein as I could, promising moreover his helpe to me in the same. What is this quoth they that thou sayest? Makest thou the king a traitor & bewrayer of the king his awne son, that when he had commaunded the Bishops to crowne his sonne, he would grue thee leave after to suspend them for so doing? Certes, it had hence better for thee not to have accused the king of this prodition. The Archbishop said to Reginald one of the foure, that he was there present himselfe at that time and heard it, but that he denyed and swore it was not so: and thinke you said they, that we the kings subjectes will or ought to suffer this? And so approching necrer vnto him sayde, he had spoken ynough against his awne head: wherevoon followed great exclamation and many threatning words. Then the Archebishop sayde, I have sithen my comming over, susteyed manye injuries and rebukes, concerning both my selfe, my men, my cattell, my wynes & other goodes, notwithstanding the king writing ouer to his sonne, required him that I should lyue in safetie and peace, and nowe besydes all other, you come hither to threaten mee. To this Reginald aunswered and sayde, if there be any that worketh you injurie, otherwise then right is, the lawe is open, why doe you not complayne? To whom sayde Becket should I complayne? To the yong king sayde they. Then Becket sayde, I have complayned ynough Ee2

if that would helpe. I have sought for remedie at the kings handes so long as I could be suffered to come vnto his speche: but now seing I am stopped from that, neyther can finde redresse of so great vexations and iniuries as I have and daylie doe susteyne, nor can have the benefite of law or reason: such right and lawe as an Archebishop maye haue, that will I exercise and let for no man. At these wordes one of them burst out in exclamation and cryed, he threatneth: he threatneth: what, wyll you also interdict the whole Realme and vs altogether? Nay, that shall be not sayth another, be hath interdicted to many already. And drawyng more nere vnto him, they protested and denounced him to have spoken wordes to the ieopardie of his awne head. And so departing in great violence, and with many high wordes, rushed out of the dores: Who by the way returnyng to the Monkes, charged them in the kinges name to kepe him forthcomming that he should not escape away. What quoth the Archebishop, thinke ye that I will flie away? Nay, neyther for the king nor for anye man aliue will I stirre one foote from you. No sayd they, thou shalt not aduoyde though that thou wouldest. And so they departed in hye clamour of wordes. The Archbishop, followeth them out of the Chamber dore, criving after them, here, here, here shall you finde me, laiving his hand on his crowne. The names of these foure men. were these, Reginald Bereson, Hugh Morteuyll, William Thracy, and Richard Briton: But Fabian nameth them, William Briton, Hugh Moruile, William Thracy and Reignold Fitzyre, who goyng to harnesse themselves, returned the same day againe: But fynding the Hall dore of the Palace of Cauntorbury shut against them, they went to an inwarde backe dore, leadyng into an Orchard, and there brake vp a Windowe and opened the dore, and so entered into the place. The Monkes (beyng about Euensong tyme) had got the Archbishop into the Church, who beyng perswaded by them, caused his crosse to be borne before him, and so through the Cloyster by a dore which was broken vp for him, proceded into the Quier. The harnessed men followed after, and at the last came to the Church dore, which dore the Monkes would have shut against them, but (as their story sayth) the Archebishop would not suffer them. So they approchyng into the Church, and the Thomas Becket Bishop meting them youn the stayers, there he was slaine, every one of them striking him with his sworde into the head. And after they had thus slaine him they fled into the North countrie, and at length with much a do, obteyning their pardon of the Pope, through the kinges procurement (as some storyes record) they were enjoyned in penaunce to go on pilgrimage to Ierusalem. And thus an ende of the story of the life and death of Thomas Becket.

The king sëdeth

an Ambassade to Rome to purge him of to curse or assoyle on good Friday.

Richarde Prior of Douer succeded Thomas Becket and was chosen Archebishop after him, a man of an yll lyfe and an inordinate waster of the goodes of the Church.

Now when Becket was thus murthered, the king fearyng the Popes wrath and cursse to be layd vpon him (wherevnto Lodouike or Lewes the French king also holpe what he could to set the matter forward) sent to Rome the Archebishop of Roan with certain other the death of Thomas Becket. bishops and Archedeacons vnto the Pope, with his excuse, which the Pope woulde in no wise heere. And after, he sent second messengers, which some of the Cardinalles receyued. The Pope vseth shewyng them that on good fryday (beyng then nie at hande) the Pope of custome was vsed to assoyle or to cursse, and that it was noysed that the king of England with his Bishops should be curssed by name, and his lande enterdicted, and herevpon the kinges messengers were put in prison. Whervpon certeyne of the Cardinalles shewed the Pope that the Messengers had power to sweare to the Pope, that the king should obey to his punishment and penance. Which was taken both for the king and for the Archebishop of Yorke: So that in the same day the Pope curssed the deede doers with such as were of their consent, eyther that ayded or harboured them, which deede doers had after in penance to go in their Lynnen clothes barefote, in fastyng and prayer to Ierusalem, which by reason of this hard penance are sayde to die in fewe yeres after. And shortly after, as sayth Fabian, Cooper, and other, the Pope Canonized Thomas Becket for a Saint & holy Martyr.

The kinges Ambassadors living as is sayd in Rome, could find no grace or fauour a long tyme at the Popes hande. At the length with much a do, it was agreed that two Cardinalles should be sent downe, to enquire out the matter concernyng them that were consenting to Beckets death. The king perceyuing what was in preparing at Rome, neither beyng yet certeine, whereto the intent of the Pope and the commyng downe of the Cardinalles woulde tende, in the meane time time addressed himselfe with a great power The king forbad to enter into Irelande, geuing in charge and commaundement (as Houeden wryteth) that that no bringer of any processe no bringer of any briefe or any letter should in his absence come ouer into England, or should come into passe out of the realme, of what degree or condicion so euer he were, without speciall li-lycence. cence and assurance, to bring nothing that should be prejudiciall to him, or to the realme.

The aforesaid order being set and ordevned, the king with foure hundreth great ships taketh his journey to Ireland in the aforesayd yere of his reigne where he subdued in short tyme the whole lande vnto him, which at that time was gouerned vnder diverse Theking saileth kinges, to the number of five. Of whom foure submitted themselves vnto the sayd king into Ireland with Henry: Onely the fift who was the king of Tonacta, denyed to be subdued, kepyng him inWoodes and Marisshes. And hauyng subdued that countrie, he by the helpe of the Archbishop of Armach, reformed their religion in three speciall poyntes. First, he ordeyned that the deuine service should be sayde and song, and the Sacramentes ministered after the English maner: Secondly he tooke order for tythes and other dutyes to be payde vnto the Curates and Ministers by the lay people. Thirdly, he orderned that every man should make his testament and last wil in the presence of his neighbours, or at the leastwise cause it to be read before them.

In the meane season while the king was thus occupied in Ireland, the two Cardinalles sent from the Pope, Theodinus and Albertus, were come to Normandy: vnto whome the king the next yere following resorted about the Moneth of October. But before, durying the tyme of the kinges beyng in Ireland, the Bishop of London, and Ioselyne Bishop of Sarisbury had sent to Rome, & procured their Absolution from the Pope. The king returning out of Ireland by Wales into England, & thence into Normandy, there made his purgation before the Popes Legates as touchyng the death of the aforesaid Becket, to the which he sware that he was neither ayding nor comfortyng, but onely spake rigorous wordes against him, for that his knightes would not avenge him against the sayde Becket. For the which cause this penance was enjoyed vnto him vnder his othe.

sion whereof, the Cardinalles tooke no little pride, vsyng this verse of the Psalme, Qui respicit terram, & facit eam tremere, qui tangit montes & fumigant. That is, which looketh vpon the earth, and maketh it tremble, which toucheth the hilles and they smoke. Moreover, it is mentioned in Historyes of the sayd king that a little after, at what william king of time William king of Scottes made a roade into the Realme, he returning out of Nor-Scottes made a mandy into England, came first to Cauntorbury, and by the way so sone as he came lad while ye king within the sight of Beckets Church, lighting off his horsse, and puttying off his hosen and shoen, he went barefoote to his Tombe, whose steppes were found bloody through the roughnesse of the stones. And not onely that, but also receiued further penaunce by by every Monke of the Cloyster, that is to say a certeyne discipline of a Rod. Monkes of Can- which by all likelyhood was the secret penaunce that the Cardinalles enjoying him.

In the. xxj. yere of his reigne he caused a connocation of Bishops to be holden at Westmynster by Richard Archebishop of Cauntorburie. In which conventicle, then being present all the Bishoppes and Abbottes of the prouynce of Cauntorburie, a great conten-A conuocatio of tion arose betweene the two Archebishops of Cauntorbury and Yorke, as it had done a little before in king William the Conquerours time, and vij. yere of his reigne 1074. about the obedience that the Archbishop of Yorke shoulde doe to Cauntorbury, that is, whether primacie of Yorke and Can- the Archebishop of Yorke might beare his Crosse in the Diocesse of Cauntorbury, or no: Also aboute the Bishoprick of Lyncolne, of Chichester, of Worcester, of Hereford, whether these Churches were vnder the iurisdiction of the See of Yorke, or not. &c. Vpon these and such other like matters rose such controuersie betwene these two Sees. that the one appealed the other to the presence of the Bishop of Rome.

In this and suche cases lyke, howe muche better had it bene if the primacie had remayned more nere in the kinges handes at home, whereby not onely much labour and trauaile had bene saued, but also the great and wastfull expences bestowed at Rome might with muche fruite and thanke have bene converted to their cures and flocks committed vnto them, and also percase their cause no lesse indifferently heard, at the least more spedely might have bene decided: but to the purpose againe.

In this controuersy diverse of the Bishop of Yorkes Clergie, suche as were of Gloucester, belonging to the Church of Saint Oswalde, were excommunicate by the Archbishop of Cauntorbury, because they beyng summoned, refused to appere before him. At length, that is to say, the next yere following, there was a Cardinall sent downe from Rome by the kinges procurement, who studied to set peace betwene the two Archbishops. So that the way of agreement was taken, by the meanes of the king at Winchester, that as touching the Church of Saint Oswalde in Gloucester, the Archebyshop of Cauntorbury should cease of his clayme thereof, molestyng the See of Yorke no more therein. Also he should absolue againe the Clerkes thereof whom he had excommunicated before. And as concerning the bearing of the Crosse and all other matters, it was referred to the Archebishop of Roan and of other Bishops of Fraunce, so that for the space of fyue yeres an order was taken betwixt them, till they shoulde haue a full determination of their cause.

Shortly after this, the king purchased a dispensation of the Bishop of Rome for the voyage which he promised to make in proper person into the holy lande, to fight against the enemies of the Christian religion before two Cardinalles as is aforesayde: The which dispensiation was graunted vpon condition that he should builde three Abbayes in Englande. For the accomplishment whereof he put out of the house of Waltham secular Chanons, and placed in their steede reguler. And for the second he advoyded the monks that were in the Abbey of Ambresburie, and set in their place Mynchions or Nonnes which he brought with him from beyond the Sea. And for the third he repayred after a homely sorte the Charterhouse of Wytham in the dioces of Bath and Welles.

Reynulph of Chester in his booke entitled Polichronicon, in his. vij. booke and. xxij. Chapter, sayth that thys king had long kept a bewtifull Damosell for his Paramour, whome he called Rosamond, and that the sayde king had buylded for her at his place of Woodstock beside Oxforde a Bowre or chamber, which was so artificially wrought, and was such a laberinth and so full of turnings, dores, and wayes most curiously deuysed and made, that it was not possible without teaching to come to any that was therein, and that the same is called at this day Rosamonds Bowre: and he sayth that the cause of the making of the sayd Bowre, was for that the Queene could not abide the sayde damosell, and therefore would she have done hir dipleasure if she might have come by her; and it is also written of some that at the last the Queene by a clewe or bothome of threede that was brought vnto hir, founde the way and came vnto hir, and that she lyued not long after, but dyed and was buried at Godestowe besyde Oxenford in the Chapterhouse there. And vpon hir Tombe was written this Epitaph.

Hic iacet in tumba, rosa mundi, non rosa munda

Non redolet, sed olet, que redolere solet,

Which is Englished by Fabian in meter as followeth.

The Rose of the worlde, but not the cleane flower, Is here nowe grauen: to whom beautie was lent.

In this graue full darke, now is her Bowere That by her life was sweete and redolent.

But nowe that she is, from this life blent

Though she were sweete, nowe fowly doth she stinke,

A myrrour good for all that on her thinke.

The sayde Authour sayth also that the aforesaide Rosamond had a little Coffer scarcely two foote long, merueylous artificially wrought, which is yet (sayth he) to be seene there, wherein Gyauntes seeme to fight, beastes do startle and stirre, and fowles fliving in the ayre, and fishes swim in the water, without any mannes mouyng or helpe.

In the xxi, yere of his reigne, he caused Henry his sonne to be the second tyme crowned king, with Margaret his wyfe the daughter of the Frenche king, by Roger Archbishop of Roan, in a Parliament holden at Wynchester, as he had promised to her father that Henry ye son of king Herry the he woulde do, as before ye haue heard.

And this yere the king deuided the realme into sixe partes, and ordeyned vpon every crowned king of Englad with his part three Iustices of Assise yerely to passe through the Realme, which now are called wife Margoret The circuite or limitation of which Iustices was thus disposed. The first the French king, company had Norffolke, Suffolke, Cambridgeshire, huntingdonshire, Bedfordshire, Buckinghamshire, Essex, and Herfordshire.

The second company, had Lincolneshire, Notinghamshire, Derbyshire, Staffordshire, Warwikeshire, Northamptonshire, and Leycestershire.

The thirde company, had Kent, Surrey, Southhamptonshire, Sussex, Barkeshire, Oxfordshire.

The fourth company, had Herfordshire, Gloucestershire, Worcestershire, and Shrop-

The fift company, had Wiltshire, Dorcetshire, Sommersetshire, Deuonshire, and Cornewall.

The sixt companie, had Euerwikeshire, nowe called Yorkeshire, Richemondshire, Lancaster, Copeland, Westmerläd, Northüberland & Cöberläd.

But now these circuites are altered, & so are the number of the Instices.

In the. xxij. yere of his reigne, as saith Cooper, or as some other write in the. xxi. king Henry the sonne, by the exciting of the king of Fraunce, Aleanor his mother, and certeyne of the Nobles, as Robert Erle of Leycester, and other tooke armes, and arrered deadly warre against his naturall father. Diverse strong battailes were foughten, aswell in England by the deputyes and friendes of both partes, as also in Normandy, Poytow, Guyan, and Briteyn, where they were corporally present: But the victory alway enclyned to the father. Fraunce, William, king of Scotland, Henry, Geoffrey, and Ihon his awne sonnes, Robert Erle of Leicester, Hugh of Chester, and other. But in the end, the sonnes with their allies were costrayned to bend to their fathers will, and to desyre peace, which he gently graunted vnto them, and forgaue them their trespasse. But William king of Scottes forfeyted and lost the Erledome of Huntingdon, for taking of king Henry the sonnes part against the father.

And besides that, beyng discomfited and taken Prisoner at' the Castell of Alnewike in Northumberland, he was compelled to yelde for his raunsome the Citie of Careleyll, the Castell of Bambourgh and the newe Castell vpon Tine, and swore for euer to be true vnto the king, and as well he as his successours to do their homage as often as it should be required. The cause of which warres was as some wryte, because the king had emprisoned Quene Aleanor his wife for the loue of the Lady Rosamond mencioned before in the last yere, a Damosell of incomparable beautie. But Fabian sayth, that after the takying of William king of Scottes, the sayde William by the assent of his Lordes spirituall and temporall did homage to king Henry at his Citie of Yorke, where the sayde William graunted by his Letters patentes, that he and his successors kinges of Scotland, should make their homage and fidelitie vnto the king of England as often as they should be necessarily required. And in signe and token thereof, the king offered his Hat and his Saddell vpon the Aultar of Saint Peter in the Church of Yorke, which for a remembraunce of that dede, the sayde Hat and Saddle were there kept many yeres after. And moreouer, the Lordes of Scotland tooke a solemne othe that if their king at any time would withdraw him from his allegiance, they would all arise against him, and be to him as enemies, vntill he were returned vnto his fayth and kepyng of his promise. And for the better confirmation of the sayd composition, the king of Scottes being summoned, came afterwardes vnto the kinges Parliament holden at Northampton, and at another season into Normandie.

Contention for the election of the Pope. In the. xxiij. yere of his reigne, the king and his sonnes were made agreed, and a new aliaunce by mariage was made with Lewes of Fraunce: For Adela his daughter was fianced to Richard king Henry his sonne.

In this kinges tyme there arose great discorde and variance at Rome for the election of the Bishop thereof. For some of the Cardinalles chose one Octavian: But other some, and the more part chose Alexander. At which time the Emperour, to whose judgement it was referred, when that Alexander disdeyned to abyde his judgement, he confirmed Octauian. Then did Alexander flee into Fraunce, and there excommunicated out of the company of the faythfull, both Frederick the Emperour, and Octavian the Antipape: And in a counsaile at Claremont, disanulled the actes of the counsaile of Pauie. This Schisme continued almost. xx. yeres: But shortly after Alexander Bishop of Rome returned out of Fraunce into Rome, and was received of the people contrary to the Emperours minde. Then followed sundry and great warres betwene the aforesayde Alexander and Fredericke, and therein was great effusion of blood: But in the ende, Fredericke the Emperour was driven to the worse. And at the last by perswasion and entreatie of sundrie noble personages, the Emperor submitted himselfe to Alexander Bishop of Rome, and came vnto him to Venice, where, of a long time the Pope would not speake with him, but caused him to attend: But at the last a tyme was appoynted him to come to the Popes presence, where he so behaued and humbled himselfe, that he suffered him to treade vpon him, and to set his fete in his necke, and while he so did his Quier sang this verse of the Psalter. Super Aspidem & Basiliscum ambulabis, & conculcabis Leonem & Draconem, that is: Thou shalt walke vpon the Adder and the Basiliske: and shalt treade downe the Lion and the Dragon. But Frederick seeying the Pope so to vse him, sayd vnto him, I do not this obedience to thee but to Peter: and the Pope aunswered both to me and to Peter. Of this outragious pride, let the Reader judge. But this is to be noted as a truth, that the sayde Bishop of Rome, stirred and procured mortall and cruell cruell warres, as before is sayde, without any just cause, but onely for his private election, and would neyther obey to counsaile nor aucthoritie, nor yet condiscend to any atonement.

In the xxiiij. yere also of this king, there chaunced great tempestes of thunder and lightnyng in the middle of Winter: and in the next Sommer following there fell hayle of such bignesse that it slue both man and beast. And in this tyme there arose great discorde and variance among the Nobilitie in Englande.

In the xxv. yere of his reigne king Henrie gaue vnto his base sonne Geoffrey the Bishoprike of Lincolne in a Sinode holden at Northampton, after it had bene vacant a long tyme, who wastfully consuming the reuenues thereof, not mindying to enter into the ministerie, within short space after resigned it. But the same Geoffrey was afterwards preferred vnto the Archbishoprike of Yorke.

About this time, the king restored Robert Erle of Leycester (who as is beforesayd was taken prisoner in the battaile of Saint Edmondes bury) to his Erledome in a Parliament holden at Oxford, and made his yongest sonne Iohn, Lorde of all Irelande. Margaret also the wife of king Henry his sonne was brought a bed of a daughter called Margaret, which lived not about three dayes after her birth.

About this tyme also there were a great multitude of Iewes in every quarter of the realme, and had but one place assigned them to bury in, which was London, whether all the Corses and dead bodyes of their Nation were brought to be buryed, where so ever their chaunce was to die in the Realme. Therefore fynding it to be a great anoyance and discommoditie vnto them, they became suters vnto the king that they might have a place assigned them to bury in wheresoever they dwelt, the which was graunted vnto them.

In the. xxvj. yere of his reigne Lewes the French king came into England to visite the Church and Tombe of Thomas Becket, as he had vowed to do, whome assone as he was landed, kyng Henry with his Nobles met and receiued very honourably. The which done, they went both together to Cauntorbury, and there offered at the Tombe of the sayd Becket, (such was the blindnesse of that time.) And when he had perfourmed his vowe, and had adorned the said Tombe with many riche Iewels, he returned into Fraunce and died as it was sayd very shortly after, leauyng behinde him one onelye sonne named Philip, who succeeded him, and as Polidore sayth was crowned king by his fathers life time.

In the xxviij, yere of his reigne, as sayth Fabian, Henry his eldest son, who in the life of his father as aforesaid, was crowned king, died very penitently.

In the. xxx. yere of his reigne: Heraclius the Patriarke of Ierusalem came into England to have ayde agaynst the Sarasens, who had wonne a great part of Christendome which they possessed in the holy lande, and also prayed ayde for the defence of the City of Ierusalem, which shortly after was wonne by Saladyne the Prince of Surrey. But by the report of Peter Disroy a Frenchman, the sayde Citie was wonne by Godfrey du Bulyon, in the yere of our Sauiour Christ. M. xcix. and so continued vnder the rule of. ix. Christian kinges, vntill the last king named Guy of Lesyngham, who lost it, in the yere of. our Lord. M. C. lxxxix. and the. xxxvj. yere of his reigne.

Then it followeth in the story: This Heraclius made earnest request vnto the king for aide as is aforesayde, and profered him the kingdome thereof, and the keyes both of the Citie and of the Sepulchre of Christ and deliuered him letters from Lucius the thirde of that name then Bishop of Rome, chargying him that he should take vpon him that iourney, and to have minde of the othe that he before tyme had made. The king deferred his aunswere: And Baldwyn then Archbishop preached, and exhorted men to take the Crosse, by whose meanes, many there were that aduowed that iourney. In the ende, the king gaue aunswere and sayd, that he might not leave his land without keeping, nor yet leave it to the pray and robbery of the French men: But he would geue largely of his awne to such as would take vpon him that voiage. With his aunswere the Patriarch was discontent and sayd: We seke a man and not money, well nere every Christian Region sendeth vnto vs money, but no land sendeth to vs a Prince. Therefore we aske a Prince that needth money, and not money that needeth a Prince. But the king layd for himselfe such excuses, that the Patriarch departed from him discontented and comfortlesse. Whereof the King beyng aduertised, entendyng to recomfort him with some pleasant wordes, folowed him to the sea syde: But the more the king thought to satisfie him with his favre speeche, the more the Patriarche was out of quiet: insomuch that at the last the sayd Patriarch sayd vnto him: Thou hast hetherto reigned gloriously, but hereafter thou shalt be forsaken of him that thou at this tyme forsakest. Thinke on him what he hath geven to thee and what thou hast yelden to him againe: howe first thou wast false to the king of Fraunce, and after slue Thomas Becket, and lastly thou forsakes t the protection of Christes fayth. The king was amoued with these wordes, and sayde vnto the Patriarch: Though all the men in the land were one body, and spake with one mouth, they durst not speake to me such words. No wonder sayde the Patriarche, for they loue thine and not thee: that is to say, they loue thy goodes temporall, and feare thee for losse of promotion, but they loue not thy soule. And when he had so sayde, he offered his heade to the king saiyng, do by me euen as thou diddest by Thomas Becket, for I had leuer to be slaine of thee, then of the Sarisyns, for thou art worsse than any Sarasyn, and thy people followeth pray and not a man. But the king kept his pacience and sayde: I may not wende out of my lande, for mine awne sonnes will rise against me, when I were absent. No wonder sayd the Patriarche, for of the deuill they came, and to the deuill they shall, and so departed from the king in great

And here the olde Historiographers finde a great fault with the king for his refusall of the office made by the Patriarch, declaring that to be the greatest cause of Gods plagues which after ensued vpon him by his children, as the Patriarche prophesied vnto hym, which story is a good lesson to good Princes, not to denie their necessarie helpe to their distressed neighbours, especially the cause pertayning to God.

King Henry the seconde was a famous prince.

The wisedome, discretion, manhoode and ryches of thys Prynce was so spreade and renowmed thorough all quarters that messages came to hym from Emanuell Emperour of Constantinople, Frederyck Emperour of Rome, and Wylliam Archebishop of Treuer in Almayn, and Duke of Saxon, and from the Erle of Flaundyrs, and from the french king, vpon determination of great questions and strifes, to aske counsell and determination thereof of this king Henry, as of one most wise, and schoolemaister of all wisedome and justice, to have solution of their questions and doubtes. Moreover Alphonsus King of Castile, and Sauncius king of Nauerne, beyng in strife for certeine Castelles, and other possessious, submitted them of their fre accorde, and by their othe to abyde the awarde of this king Henry who made a warde and pleased both. Whereby it is not to be presupposed that this king, to whome other Princes did so resort, as to their Arbitrer and decisor, did attend to any slouth or vicious liuyng. Wherefore this Princes actes may be a myrrour vnto all Princes.

The. xxxiij. yere of his reigne, Geoffrey Duke of Briteyn died at Paris, leauyng his wife Constance great with childe, which shortly after was delivered of a sonne named Arthur.

Among many other thinges in this king memorable, this is one to be noted (folow it who can) that he reignyng, xxxv. yeres, & hauyng so many warres with his enemies, yet he neuer put any tribute, impost, or taxe vpon his subjectes, nor yet vpon the spiritualty, first fruites, or appropriation of benefices, belyke they were not then knowen, but sure it is, they were not vsed. And yet his treasure after his death, beyng weyed by king Richard his sonne, amounted aboue nine hundreth thousand pound, besyde Iewelles, precious stones, plate, and housholde stuffe. Of the which substance, xj. thousand pound Bulles are peril- came to him by the death of Roger Archbishop of Yorke, who had procured a Bull of the Pope, that if any priest dyed in his prouynce without testament, then he should have all his goodes.

At which tyme the aforesayde Archebishop of Yorke, sitting on the right hande of the yong king, sayd: Sir ye haue good cause this daye to loye: For there is no Prince in the worlde that hath suche an officer this day. &c. And the yong king disdayning his wordes, sayde: my father is not dishonoured in this doing, for I am a King and a Queenes sonne, Aprowde Prince and so is not he. And not onely this, but also afterwarde he persecuted his father, as ye & an vnthank-full. before have heard. Wherefore he escaped not Gods plague from his youth, after he had reigned a fewe yeres, he dyed as aforesayde, teaching vs what is the price and rewarde God his just for the breaking of the just commaundements of God.

After him likewise, Richard his sonne (who for his courage was called Cuer de lyon) rebelled against his father in the. xxxiiij. yere of his reigne. And also Iohn his yongest sonne did not much degenerate from his Brethrens steppes. In so much that the aforesayde Richarde, lyke an vnkinde childe, persecuting and taking part with the French king against his father, brought him to suche distresse of body and minde, that for thought of heart he fell into an Ague, and within foure dayes dyed in Normandy when he had reigned. xxxiiij. yeares. ix. It is written of this King that he first ordeyned that Lyons shoulde be kept in the Tower of London.

RICHARDE THE FIRST.

R Ichard the first of that name, and eldest sonne lyuing of king Henry the second, for his valiaunt and lustic courage, surnamed Cuer de lyon, that is the heart of a Lyon, began his reigne ouer thys realme of England the sixt day of July in the yere of our Lorde. 1189. and reigned. ix. veres and. ix. monethes and odde dayes.

This king Richard prouyded diligently after the death of his father to set good rule in Normandy. For first of all he sommoned a Parliament in Normandy, and caused all the Nobles of that Countrie to sweare fealtie vnto him. After that beyng desyrous to know what treasure his father had left behynde him, and where it was, he commytted to warde Stephen Lieutenant of Aniow, and by that meanes compelled him to bring out all the treasure which he had long before layde vp in dyuerse Castels by the commaundement of king Henry his father.

And whiles he was thus occupied (sayth Polydore) his brother Iohn came vnto him, whom he receyued very curteously, and advaunced him to many high dignities and preferments, as afterwardes shall be declared.

Then calling to remembraunce the captiuitie of Alianor his mother, which as yet was in durance in Englande, he streight wayes sent ouer hys letters and commaunded that she Ff2 should should be forthwith set at libertie, committyng the whole order and government of the realme vnto her, who beyng set at libertie, roade throughout the Realme, and shewed great curtesy vnto the people in all places: and as one that in her selfe had felt the grieuuous miseries of captiuitie, pitiyng the case of all such as were pressed therewith, losed all captives and prisoners wheresoever she came.

Then entering into league with Philip the French king, he received againe all the holdes and precess which his father had lost a little before, at what tyme, also he tooke ynto him Adela sister vnto the French king, which was promised vnto him in his fathers life tyme: But shortly after hauyng a vehement presumption that she had bene carnally knowne of his sayd father, he sent her home againe vnto her brother, but not without an honourable dowrye, and manye riche and large giftes. And after this he sped him into England, and first of all went vnto Winchester, & then to Saresbury, where he founde no small treasure: For as the fame went, there was found besides apparell, Iewelles, and plate, nine hundreth thousande poundes in coyne. From thence returned he to London, and was the thirde day of the moneth of September following crowned at Westminster of Baldwyn Archbishop of Cauntorbury. Vpon the which day the Iewes that then dwelt in England, and namely in the Citie of London and suburbes of the same, beyng assembled together, a great number of them presumed farther then was lawfull for them to do. For which presumption, they were first rebuked, and after one of them was striken by one of the kinges chiefe officers, which thing beyng scene of the common people, who supposed the same to be done by the kinges commaundement, did therefore in a fury (as persons asmuch hated of the people as the deuill himselfe, for their vsury and other their vnhappie condicions) fall vpon them, and chased them to their houses, and robbed and spoyled them without all pitie, and brent some of their houses, whereof the rumor ranne to Westminster to the kinges herryng. Wherefore in all haste he sent downe, geuyng streyte commaundement that they should cease off that ryot: But the people were in such yre and madnesse, that they refrayned not for all the kinges commaundement, vntill they had executed the full of their malice. And albeit, that this ryot was afterwarde grieuously declared against the Commons of the Citie, yet it passed vnpunished, for the great number of the transgressors. And the sayd day of Coronation, all prisoners that lay in any prison about London at the kinges sute, or for other small and triffying actions, were freely discharged and deliuered.

> And here is a meete place to say somewhat of the gouernement of this noble Citie of London, for that in this first yere of the reigne of this famous Prince, the same was gonerned by two Baylifes, as may appere by Fabian. The which Fabian also sayth, that the same before tyme was governed by persones grave and wyse, and were named Portgreues, or rather Portgraues, the which is deriued of two Saxon wordes (as he sayth) that is to say, Port, and Greue, or rather Graue, for so are the rulers of the townes in Duchelande called at this day, that is to say, all such Rulers of townes or Countries as are nere the sea, are called Mergraue, as at this day in Andwarpe, the chiefe ruler is called Mergraue, that is to say, the Erle or Lorde of a towne or Countrie ioynyng to the sea, and such rulers as are higher into the lande, and farther from the sea, are called Lantgraue, that is, the ruler or Erle of a Citie or Countrie within the lande so that these wordes Portgraue, which Fabian interpreteth, the ruler of a towne, I do accompt it not so nere the truth, as to enterpret it as it is at this day in London, we call the ruler thereof not onely Major, because he is the chiefe ruler of the Citie, but we adde for a more dignitie vnto that state, and call him Lorde Maior: So thinke I of Portgraues, for Port is a towne, and Graue is an Erle, and that they were then accompted as chiefe Lordes or Erles of the Cnie, and were of no lesse estimation then the ruler is nowe, although peraduenture not so glorious. And the name of the Shirifes of London at this day, which are vnder officers vnto the Maior, are in all the Queenes writtes named Vice commiti, that is voder Erles, or vnder Lordes, or vnder rulers.

It was not long after that the king had thus exalted his brother John (as aboue is shewed) but that he also preferred him to the maryage of the Erle of Gloucesters daughter, by reason whereof he was Lord of that Erledome. These great advauncementes made him after vokinde to his brother and by pryde thereof to couet after the whole kingdome.

This yere also king Richard was assoyled, of the rebellion that he vsed against his fa- Absolucion. In recompence whereof (sayth Guydo) he voluntarily tooke vpon him and promised to warre vpon Christes enemies, but to speake truly, it was at the request of the Pope.

And this yere, as sayth Fabian, king Richard gaue ouer the Castelles of Barwike, and Rokesborough to the Scottishe king, for the summe of ten thousand pound, for the ex-ployte of his voyage to Ierusalem.

And about this tyme as sayth Iohn Maior, in his Chronicle of Scotland, there were Robert Hood many robbers and outlawes in England, among the which number, he specially noteth Robin Hoods. Robert Hood, whom we now call Robyn Hood, and little Iohn, who were famous theres. they continued in woodes, mountaynes, and forestes, spoiling and robbing, namely such as were riche. Murders commonly they did none, except it were by the prouocation of such as resisted them in their rifelynges and spoyles. And the sayde Maior sayth, that the aforesaid Robyn Hood had at his rule and commaundement an hundreth tall vomen, Robin Hood which were mightie men and exceedyng good archers, and they were mainteyned by suche tall yome waitspoyles as came to their handes: And he sayth moreouer, that those hundreth were such yng vpon him. picked men, and of such force, that foure hundreth men who soeuer they were, durst neuer set vpon them. And one thing was much commended in him, that he would suffer A worthie verno woman to be oppressed, violated or otherwise abused. The poorer sort of people he fauoured, and would in no wise suffer their goodes to be touched or spoyled, but relieued and ayded them with suche goodes as hee gate from the riche, which he spared not, namely the riche priestes, fat Abbottes, and the houses of riche Carles. And although his theft and rapyne was to be contemned, yet the aforesayd Aucthour prayseth him and sayth, that among the number of theeues, he was worthie the name of the most gentle Agentle thouse. theefe.

But in an olde and auncient Pamphlet I finde this written of the sayd Robert Hood. This man (sayth he) discended of a noble parentage: or rather beyng of a base stocke and linage, was for his manhoode and chiualry advanced to the noble dignitie of an Erle, excelling principally in Archery, or shooting, his manly courage agreeing therevito: But afterwardes he so prodigally exceeded in charges and expences, that he fell into great debt, by reason whereof, so many actions and sutes were commenced against him, wherevnto he aunswered not, that by order of lawe he was outlawed, and then for a tewde shift, as his last refuge, gathered together a companye of Roysters and Cutters, and practised robberyes and spoylyng of the kinges subjects, and occupied and frequented the Forestes or wilde Countries. The which beyng certefyed to the King, and he beyng greatly offended therewith, caused his proclamation to be made that whosoeuer would bryng him quicke or dead, the king would geue him a great summe of money, as by the recordes in the Exchequer is to be seene: But of this promise, no man enjoyed any benefite. For the sayd Robert Hood, beyng afterwardes troubled with sicknesse, came to a certein Nonry in Yorkshire called Bircklies, where desirying to be let blood, he was betrayed & bled to death. After whose death the Prioresse of the same place caused him.

to be buried by the high way side, where he had vsed to rob and spoyle those that passed that way. And vpon his graue the sayde Prioresse did lay a very fayre stone, wherein the names of Robert Hood, William of Goldesborough, and others were grauen. And the cause why she buryed him there, was, for that the common passengers and trauailers knowyng and seeyng him there buryed, might more safely and without feare take their iorneys that way, which they durst not do in the life of the sayd outlawes. And at eyther ende of the sayde Tombe was erected a crosse of stone, which is to be seene there at this present.

Little Iohn.

Gerardus Marcator in his Cosmographie and discription of England, sayth that in a towne or village called little Morauie in Scotland, there are kept the bones of a great and mightie man, which was called little Iohn, among the which bones, the huckle bone or hip bone was of such largenesse, as witnesseth Boethus, that he thrust his arme through the whole thereof, and the same bone being conferred to the other partes of his body, did declare the man to be, xiiij, foote long.

Contention for superioritie.

But before the king tooke his iourney, great preparation was made for money. At that time it appereth that taxes, tolles, exactions, and subsidies, eyther were not knowen, or not so much then had in vse as of late tymes they have bene: By reason whereof, this king was driven to make other shift, by sellyng Lordships, Castels, Offices, Liberties, Privileges, Bishoprikes, &c. And as he sayd himselfe, he woulde have solde London also, if he coulde have found any able to buy it. Vpon this occasion it came that diverse Bishoppes, namely such as were best monyed, purchaced to their Bishoprikes dyuerse Lordshippes, as Godfrey Bishop of Winchester, purchased Wargrave, and Menes. And Hugh Bishop of Durham purchased the Lordship called Hadberge with all the appurtenances, for five hundreth Markes. &c. And also he purchased the whole Province of Durham of the king to be his awne, and himselfe to be made Erle of the same, whervyon the old wryters as Houeden Cestrensis, and other, rebuke the sayde Bishop in their Chronicles, the king also iestyng at the same, saiyng, that of an olde Bishoppe, he had made a yong Erle.

Now when king Richard had appoynted all things for his iourney, and the same beyng in a redinesse, he then commytted the custodie of his realme of England into the handes of foure men, that is to say, two Prelates, and two lay men, of whom the two Prelates, which were Hugh Bishop of Durisme, and William Bishop of Ely, were the chiefe and principall. These two fallyng at varyance amongest themselves for superioritie, at length this order was taken by the king: That the Bishop of Durisme (who a little before had purchased of the King certeine free Lordshippes, and also to remaine as Iustice without controlment or checke as aforesayd) should have vnder hys custodie, from Humber to the Scottishe sea: The other Bishop, which was the Bishop of Ely, should have all the South partes besides: But the sayde Ely beyng more ambicious, so practised with the king, and by the kings Ambassadors sent his letters to the Pope, that at the last he obteyned the aucthoritie Legantine ouer the whole realme of England.

And as soone as the king had thus set the realme of England in an order, he then sayled into Normandy, where he settyng that country also vnder safe keping, did shortly after mete with the French king called Philip the second, and after with Frederick the Emperor, & they together set forward on theyr iourney vntill they came to Turon, and there they passed away the winter. In the which time eyther of them with other made assurance for the continuance of that great iourney. And at the spring time of the yere, these three great Princes set forwarde on their voyage toward the holy lande. That is to say, king Richard by the sea, and the Emperour and king Philip by land, and appoynted to meete together in the land of Scicill. But king Richard, as sayth an olde written Chronicle, before his departure called all his Lordes and knightes vnto him, and did swere them for euermore to be true vnto him, and to take his part. And in token thereof

he gaue to every of them a blewe Lace or Ribband to be known by, and hereof (sayth that olde Chronicle) began the first occasion of the order of the Garter.

In this meane time in England, the Iewes in dynerse places of this realme, as Lincolne, Staunford, and Linne were robbed and spoyled: And at Yorke to the number of foure hundreth of them and mo, did cut their master vaynes, and so bled to death, as

These two kings according to their appointment met in Scicill, where grudge began to kindle between them. And the cause thereof as Reynulph sayth, first began for that king Richard denyed vnto king Philip the halfe of his winninges in Cypres according to the couenant assured betweene them at Turon. But king Richard sayde that the convention stretched no farther then to such goodes as should be wonne within the limmites and boundes of the holy lande. Another cause of grudge was, by reason that the French king ayded not the Erle of Campayne beyng in distresse and neede. Wherefore the sayd Erle beyng therewith discontent, sayd to the Frenche king: Sir hetherto I have done according to my duetie: But hereafter I will doe as neede compelleth me. For your grace hath hetherto cherished mee but for mine, but now I will go to him that is more redier to geue then to take, and so departed vnto king Richarde where he was right well enterteyned. And the third cause was, as saith Reynulph, that king Richard at his first entring into Scicill maryed the sister of the king of Nauerne, where before he had promised the sayde French king to have maryed his sister Adela. But the French Chronicle chargeth King Richarde king Richard to be in great fault, namely that he was a breaker of promise in all that he French men couenaunted with king Philip, and also that he solde the Isle of Cipres which he wan be-with many great offices. fore he came vnto Syria vnto the Templers, for thirtie thousande Marke, and after tooke it from them againe by strength, and exchaunged it with Guy of Lesyngham that was the last christened king of Ierusalem, for the same kingdome, and therefore the kings of England were long time after called kings of Ierusalem. Also that he should take from a knight of the Duke of Ostrich & said Dukes Baner, beyng first set ypon the walles of Acon at the skalving thereof, and in dispite of the sayde Duke, did treade it vider his feete. and did vnto it all the dispite that he might, and set his awne Banner in the same place. And also that where Conradus Marques of Tyre was trayterously slaine by two of his awne seruauntes, king Richard should lay the charge of the fault therof vnto the French king. And for these grudges and sicknesse, with also feare of treason (as sayth the French Chronicle) to be wrought betwene Saladine the Soudane and king Richard: king Philip returned first into Appulia, and then to Rome, whether he had vowed a pilgrimage, and from thence into Fraunce. But howsoever the breach was between the foresayd two kinges, great pittie it was, for as long as they continued in amitie together, so long they did many valiaunt and famous actes, as in winnyng of Acon, and dyuerse other Cities, and many mo had like to haue Contention is bene done, if they had not disseuered themselves. And not long after the departure of the cause of losse and hinderthe Frenche king, king Richarde at the next spring following returned also. Who in his ance. returne, driven by distresse of weather about the partes of Austria, in a towne called Sinaca, was there taken by Leopold Duke of the same countrie, who solde him to the Emperour for three score thousand Markes (though all wryters do not agree vpon the somme) 6 King Richard and for no small ioy thereof, the sayd Emperor wryteth to the French king these Letters taken prisoner folowyng.

Henry by the grace of God Emperour of the Romaynes euer most noble, to his welbe-Henry ye sixt of loued and especiall friend Philip the famous king of France sendeth gretyng, with further perour, and declaration of his syncere loue: Forasmuch as the Empyre doubteth not but that your sonne of Frederick. kingly magnificence, is alwayes right ioyous to heere of any such thing with the which the Almightie power of our creator hath adorned and advaunced vs and our Romaine Empyre, we thought good by the tenor of these presentes to declare vnto your noblenesse that the enemye of our Empire, and perturber of your Kingdome the king of Englande, as he was passyng the sea in his returne homewardes from the lande of promes, it chaunced (the ship in which he was, beyng wrecked) that he was dryuen by the winde into the coast of Histria, vnto a place which is between Aquileia and Venice, whether the sayde king by the sufferance of God after his Shipwreck with a fewe other escaped. vpon our faythfull friend the Erle Maynard of Goorce, and the people of that courty, hering that he was in their land, & diligently considering, what prodicion spoyle and treason the sayde king had vsed in the lande of promes, did pursue him entending to take him captiue: And after they had put the king to flight, they tooke. viij. of his knightes prisoners. And afterwardes the sayde king went forwarde to a Borough in the Archebishoprike of Salsburge named Frisors, where Fredericke of Betsow, as the king was postyng toward Austria in the night season, tooke sixe of his knightes prisoners. And our welbeloued cosyn Leopold Duke of Austria laiving wayte by euery way did take the king captiue at Dena in a village nere therevnto, in a simple house. Now therefore seeying he is in our possession, and hath bene alwayes the cause of molestyng and troubling of you, we consideryng the premisses, thought good to signific thus much vnto your noblenesse, assurying our selues that the same will be right pleasant and acceptable newes vnto you, and an occasion of joy and gladnes. Richard Ceur de lion, why he was so called.

It is read of this Richarde that duryng the tyme of his imprisonment, he should slay a Lion, and teare the heart out of his body, and thereof it came that he was called Richard Ceur de Lyon, that is, the heart of a Lion. But of the learned it is thought that this is but a fable, but rather that he was so called for his inuincible courage and strength. The time also of his imprisonment, his brother Ihon by the setting on of the French king, made great war within the land, and tooke by strength the Castell of Windsore, of Notyngham and others, and the French king made strong warre in Normandy.

Howbeit, as touching the returne of king Richard out of Syria, and his taking by Leopald Archeduke of Austrich, the matter is farre otherwise reported by Polidore after this maner: When he had comforted the christian men in Syria, with such words as are before rehearsed, he then having prepared his Nauie for that purpose, sent away before him his wyfe Berengaria with her sister Ione and a great part of his army into Sicill, which from thence sayled into Englande: and then he himselfe followed with the rest, which were but a fewe in number, minding to sayle into Thracia: but by tempest his chaunce was to be driven into Dalmatia, where he arryued and chaunged his apparell, because he would not be acknowne, and determined with him selfe to go home into England through high Almayne, trauayling at his ease, sometime on horseback, and sometime on foote. And when he was come to the Countrie of Austriche, he remembring the breche that was betweene him and the Duke of the same countrie for casting downe his banner from the walles of Acon at the wynning therof: And therefore mistrusting that the saide Duke would be reuenged on him for the sayde dishonour, and being also aduertised by his espialles, that the fame of his comming was now bruted abroade throughout all the Countrie, he beganne to feare himselfe, and therefore trauayled very circumspectly, sending ener hys spialles before to search the wayes that he should passe by. But yet could he by no meanes escape that which was by desteny appointed to happen vnto him. For as sone as he was entered into the Citie of Vienna, which is the chiefe Citie of that Countrie, he was by his tongue knowne to be an Englishman. And because he was more delicate and devntie then became a person being so homely appareled, he was thereby suspected of manye to be the king himselfe, & the rather because it was a constant rumor, that he was come into the Coun-The duke heeryng of this, beset the house by and by wherein he was lodged with men of armes, that none should escape out, and then sent he other into the house to view and see what maner of guestes were within. When king Richard perceyued that the house was thus beset rounde about with harnessed men, in such wise that it was not possible for hym to flie, he caused himselfe to be apparelled lyke a king, and having the same constancie of minde which he euer vsed in all his martiall affaires, he shewed himselfe vnto the souldiours, now being entred the house, demaunding of them what the matter was, that they in such forcible wise came vnto him, who aunsered that they came to take him. To whome he answered againe, how it was not seemely for a king to yeelde himselfe prisoner vnto any but to the Duke himselfe, and therefore if the Duke himselfe would come, he would be content to yeelde himselfe vnto him. Then came the Duke, whome the king met and delyuered him his sworde, and so yeelded himselfe vnto him, who being glad that he had gotten such a praye vnlooked for, had him home with hym to hys house, geuing him verie fayre wordes all the waye as he passed, and then delyuered him vnto cer-tevne noble men of his Countrie to be safely kept. &c, In this meane time that the king was so occupied in the warres with the Sarasens as is aforesayde, the Bishop of Elye of whome mencion is made before, being first authorised by the king as governor of this realme, & after made the Popes Legate, tooke then not a little state vpon him in the absence of the king, in such ambicious and prowde sort that he made all the realine crye out vpon him. This Bishop whose name was William Long- Willia Logchampe a Norman borne, and commyng of a base stocke, after he had aspired to the Bi-champe Bishop shoprike of Ely, and then to be Chauncelor of England, and after the Popes Legate, of Ely, a provide hauving now in the absence of the king the whole rule and government of the Realme in his awne hande, grewe out of measure in suche pompe and pride, that he became intollerable both to the Clergie, and to the Laiety. First he beginneth to assemble a generall counsaile together at London. The colour and pretence was for Religion, but in verye deede, as sayth the olde storyes, the cause was his awne pompe and ambicion, with importunate oppression of the Clergie. And no lesse troublesome was he also vnto the Layty, wonderfully oppressyng the Commons, abusyng the kinges aucthoritie, and aduaunsyng vaine glory. His vse was to ride with a thousande horses continually, so that the noble mennes sonnes were glad to become his slaues. And with the best Barons, Erles, and Peeres of this realme, maryed he his Cosyns, Neces and kinswomen (I will not say his daughters) and for all that, his Grandfather was but a poore Ploughman, and his father a Cowheard. And hauyng so tirannously abused his office, fearyng least he shoulde haue bene The prowde Bicalled to his examination, he fled with a fewe of his trusty seruauntes to Douer Castell, shop of Ely glad mindyng to haue stolen ouer the sea: And commyng in the night in a womans apparell, to hide his head. with a peece of cloth vnder his Arme, and a met yard in his hande, vpon suspicion (as God would haue it) beyng knowen what he was, his Kerchefe was pulled off his head, & his shauen crowne appered on his head. And then was he drawen along the sea vpon the sandes, with a great wondering of the people: Some rated him, some reuiled him, some Godsiust plague. bespatteled him, some drawing him by the armes, some by the legges from place to place, his awne seruauntes not beyng able to helpe him. And at the last they brought him into a seller, where they shut him fast in, and so couered him from the people with shame ynough, vntill the counsaile of the realme sent for him, and after was brought to the Tower of London, and there imprisoned, examined, deprined, and banished the realme: And at the length restored againe by king Richard, and after beyng sent to

But Polidore sayth, that king Richarde beyng moued therevnto by the dayly complaintes of his nobles, depriued him of the Gouernorship by hys letters, and placed in his steede William Archebishop of Roan, which was the cause that he would have fled the realme, neither maketh he any mention that he was restored by the sayd king.

Rome by the way there dyed. 1197.

And after this, king Richard beyng prisoner, sent Hubert bishop of Sarisbury into England to have the guydyng thereof, and also to treate with the Lordes and Commons for the kinges deliuery, and for his raunsome: But for the payment of the sayd raunsome all the Wolles of the white Monkes and Chanons in England were solde, and Ringes and Crosses of Prelates, with vesselles and Chalices of all Churches throughout the realme, VOL. thon was againe reconciled to king Richard his brother.

When the king and his brother Iohn were thus agreed, they road ouer the land to visite the countries, and to see how they were guyded by the kings officers. Among other, two Two Promoters there were, which shewed that they would do many things to the kinges profite, the one was Abbot of Cadonence in Normandye, and the other was named William with the long bearde, as sayth Reynulphe.

The Abbot warned the king of the fraude of his officers, whereby he thought by the punishment of his officers, he should winne great fauour of the people. Then this Abbot gate a warrant of the king, and went to London, and there called before him diverse officers, and caused them to make there accomptes before him. But he dyed shortly, so that his purpose tooke small effect.

William with the long bearde.

And William with the long bearde shewed vnto the king the outrage of the riche men, which (as he sayde) spared their awne, and pilled the poore people. It is sayde that this William was borne in London, and purchased that name by the vse of his beard. was quicke of witte, and somethyng learned, bolde of speche, and graue of countenance, & toke vpon him greater matters then he could compasse, and some cruelnesse he vsed, as apered in the accusyng of his awne brother of treason, the which was a Citizen of London, and had shewed to him great loue and friendship, even bringyng him vp in his youth.

A Libertyne.

An hipocrite.

This William stirred and excited the common people to desyre and loue fredome and libertie, and blamed the excesse and outrage of riche men. By such meanes he drue to him many great companies, and with all his power defended the poore mennes causes against the riche, and accused diverse to the king, shewyng that by their meanes the king

Now to returne to king Richarde, at the length he was raunsomed for an hundreth thousande pounde, as Polichronicon, Fabian, and Cooper say, from the couetous captiuitie of the Emperour, and beyng deliuered, he returned againe into England, and landed at Sandwiche, and so came to London, where when he had arested him a little while, he then roade with a certeine number of knightes to Notingham, and wanne the Castell by force, and after that the Castell of Tykhill. And shortly after called a counsaile of his Lordes at Winchester, where by aucthoritie of the sayd counsaile he deprined John his brother (then beyng in Fraunce) of all honour, and tooke from him all such landes as he before had geuen vnto him, for that in his absence he ioyned with the Frenche king agaynst him, and also sought to have possessed the Crowne and realme of England into his awne possession.

And shortly after, that is to say, in the. viij. yere of his reigne, he caused himselfe to be crowned againe at Winchester. After which coronation he called a Parliament, by aucthoritie whereof, he resumed againe all patentes, and annuities, fees, and other grauntes before his voyage by him solde and graunted, and caused the parties to be contented with such revenues and profites as they had received of the sayde offices or landes, in the tyme of his absence: And spared not for any sufficiencie of wrytyng, that by him before was made.

When the king by these aforesayd meanes had gathered some money, he then in the moneth of July sayled into Fraunce, and besieged a Castell called Arques, and sped there, as sayth Polichronica, dynersly, which worde dinersly may well here be spoken. For who so readeth the Frenche Chronicle, shall finde that the French king was victor, although the Englishe booke sayth otherwise, but who had the victory in dede is vncerteine. But the French Chronicle sayth, that king Richard so scarred the French kinges host, that he tooke the kinges Sumpter horse and parts of his treasure. And shortly after a peace was lost many forfeytes and escheates. For this cause, gentlemen and men of honour hated him, but he had such comfort of the king, as he kept on his purpose. But afterward, the king heeryng of the congregations that this William made, commaunded him to cease off such doynges, that the people might exercise their artes and occupacions: By reason whereof, it was left for a while, but it did not clearely cease. For within a while after, they followed him more then they did before. And then he preached vnto them, the which Sermon is at length set out in Reynulph, the. vij. booke, and. xxx. Chapter, and likewise in Fabian. But after his Sermon, he was sent for to the Archebishop of Cauntorbury, but he came with such a multitude following him, that the Lordes were contented to remit him at that tyme with faire and pleasant wordes, and secretly commanded certeyne personnes to espie when he was voyde of company, and then to take him and put him in sure kepyng. The which according to the commaundement at tyme convenient (as they thought) set voon him to have taken him: But he with an Axe resisted them, and slue one of them, A murderer. and after fled into Saint Mary Bow Church in Cheape, and tooke that for his sauegard,

But within a little while after, by meanes of the heades and rulers of the Citie, the people minished, so that ere it were long he was left with a few personnes, and so was taken, but not without shedding of blood. After which taking, he was arreigned before the Iudges, and there he and. ix. of his adherentes had iudgement to die, and were hanged william with the day following. But yet the rumour ceased not, for the common people raysed a yollow bearde hanged. great cryme vpon the Archbishop of Cauntorbury and other, and sayd, that by their meanes. William that was an innocent of such crymes, as were objected and put against him, was a defender of the poore people against extorcioners and wrong doers, and that hee was by them put wrongfullye to death, affirming him an holy man, and a martyr in such wise as followeth. They sayde that a man beyng sicke of a feuer, was cured by vertue of a Ignorance ye cheyne which this William was bound withall duryng the tyme of his imprisonment, which mother and beby a Priest of the kindred of the sayd William was openly declared and preached. getter of Super-Whereby he brought the people into such an errour that they gaue credence to his wordes, and secretly in the night conueyed away the lebet that he was hanged vpon, and scraped away the blood of him where he was headed and quartered, so that they made there a hollow place, by fetchyng away of that earth, and sayd that sicke men and sicke women were cured of diverse sicknesses by vertue of that blood and earth. By these meanes, and spreadyng abroade the fame thereof, that place was the more visited by women and van vndiscrete personnes, of the which some watched there all night in prayer: so that the lenger this continued, the more outcry and slaunder ranne vpon the Iudges and Iustices that put him to death.

Howbeit, at the last, when his dedes were declared, as the sleaving of a man with his Awhoremouses, awne hand, and vsyng of his Concubine within Saint Mary Church of Bow, in the time of his there beyng, as he openly confessed at the houre of his death, with other detestable crymes, somewhat cooled the hastie flame of the hoate Pilgrimage: But not clearely vntill the Archbishop accursed the Priest that brought vp the first tale, and also caused that place to be watched, that such Idolatrie should there no more be vsed.

Reynulph in his. vij. booke and. xxxj. Chapter maketh mencion that about this tyme a Prince of Wales, whome he called Rees or Rice dyed, in whose prayse this that followeth is written, by the sayde Aucthor.

In the Month of Aprill and in the. ix. yere of his reigne, when the king had prouyded to sende foorth twentie thousande pounde to the Emperour, for full payment of hys raunsome, the pledges which had lyen for the same came sodainely into England, and shewed vnto the king, that after hys departing the Emperor sent them vnto the Duke of Ostrich. to remayne with him vntill the money were payde. And they sayde also that the Duke was accurssed of Innocent the thirde, then Bishop of Rome, by reason of hys wrong done to king Richarde, and that his Prouince was vexed with manye mischiefes. And as the Duke roade foorth on a day in his disport, being saint Stephens daye, he hurt his foote in such wise with a thorne, or other venym which rankled and grewe so sore, that lastly he must die or cut it of. But in hope of recouery, he continued vntill in the ende there was none other way but death. Then he sent for his Bishops, and desyred to be assoyled of the sentence of the Churche which he stood in. The which was denyed him, except he would sweare to stande and abyde the ordinance and judgement of holy Church, touching the wrong that he had done to king Richard. The Duke sware and was assoyled: and shortly after, the two Bishops, pledges for the money, were set at their libertie. King Richard sayleth into the Kinge of Fraunce.

Normady against the Frenche king and him drewe nere at hand, he therefore made him readie and sayled into Normandy: where before his comming, the Frenche king, by occasion of the Normans (as sayeth the Frenche booke) was entered the Countrie of Burges, towarde whome king Richarde sped him with all possible speede, so that both hostes laye parted wyth the ryuer of Osson or Ossyne. Then to follow the Frenche booke, for so much as the Englishe Chronicle speaketh little or nothing of this act, let wise men that reade thys Chronicle conster it after it after their discretions: For although the Frenchman wrote it to the honour of his countrie men, it will the rather redound to their dishonor. thus sayth the sayd Chronicle, these two hostes thus as is abouesayde living together without skirmishe or assault, king Richard contrary to the minde and opinion of his Lordes, with a few accompanyed and vnharnessed, came to the French kinges tent, and there in presence of his Lordes did homage to the French king for the Duchie of Normandie, and Counties of Angeow and of Poyters, and there sware to the king to kepe peace duryng his life: And after. viij. dayes met againe and finished the sayde peace with an assured othe on either partie, and after departed as friendes, eyther resorting into their awne country: but it semed a faynt peace, for within foure monethes next folowyng, king Richard with his hoste entered into the Prouynce of Berry, and layde siege to the Castell of Wyersone, and gate it by strength. And after went to the Castell of Noryncourt, which was delivered to him by appoyntment.

nicler of king

Richard.

When the French king heard of the wynnyng and ouerthrow of the Castell of Wyersone, he in dammagyng of king Richard, layde siege to the Castell of Aubeuyle, and assayled it egerly: But it was so strong and so well defended by the Normans, that the French king was holden off. When king Richard had garnished & fortefied the Castell of Norincourt with all thinges necessary to the warre, he drue him toward Aubeuyle to. remoue king Philip from that siege, and fell vpon the Frenchmen vnwarily. the Frenchmen quit themselves so knightly, that they chased king Richarde and his people, and tooke a Norman knight prisoner, named Guy de Thonars, a man of great hardinesse. And then king Philip returned to the towne and Castell of Aubeuile, and assaulted it more sharpely, so that in the ende the Souldiours of the towne yelded it with the Castell for a summe of money. And when he had possession of the towne, he threwe downe the Castell plaine with the ground, and after strengthened the towne with Frenchmen, & then went to the Castell of Gysors, and from thence to the Castell of Norin- Greore Castell. court: And assayled it in so cruell maner, that shortly he wan it, & toke therein. xv. knights, and xxiiii, yomen with plentie of victuall and Armour.

In this time and season, king Richard gathered againe a new strength, and allyed himselfe with Baldwyn Erle of Flaunders, and Reignold Erle of Dampmartyn and of Boleyn. By whose meanes (as sayth the Frenche booke) king Richard wasted sore the Countrie of Fraunce, and brent therein some Townes and villages, and tooke therein many riche

In the. x. yere of his reigne, and about the begynnyng of the moneth of October, king Richard entred into the country of Vnequecyne with a strong host, and made there cruell warre in destroiving of the country, & assaulted the Castel of Gysors, & threw to the Castell of ground a strong hold called Courcellys, and brent thereabout many villages. Wherewith soulted. king Philip was so sore amoued, that with a small number of knightes he piersed the hoste of Englishemen, and entred the Castell or towne of Gysors. But of his men were taken a great number, chiefely such as were men of name, with the which prisoners and manye riche prayes the king departed, leauvng the Frenche king within Gysors.

It was not long after that king Richard was thus departed, but king Philip callyng to mynde the losse and dishonour that he had receyued by that warre, assembled a great army, and entred the Duchie of Normandye, and wasted the country from Newesborough to Beawmont le Rogier. And that done, he returned into Fraunce, and lycenced his knightes eche man to go into his awne countrie.

When the Frenche king had thus taken his pleasure in the spoyle of a great peece of Normandy, then king Richard with his army entered the former countrey of Vnequecyn, Vnequecyne and Bewuocyne, and there tooke as he before had done many rich prayes, and so came a countrie in Fraunce. away, whome the bishop of Bewuays beyng a good Knight and hardie of his handes, with The Bishop of a companye of knightes and other, followed to have reskewed the prisoners that king prisoner. Bewuays take Rychard had taken. But they themselves were discomfited, and a great many of them taken and slaine. At the same tyme the Erle of Flaunders with the helpe of the Englishmen, toke the towne of S. Omer from the French king.

Sone after Christmasse next following, king Richard besieged a Castell nere vnto Ly- Castell of This Castell in the French tongue is called Chalons, & in the English boke it is Chalons other-wise called Gail-named Gayllard. But Reynulph calleth it Caulx.

The cause of this siege (as sayth most wryters) was for certeine riche treasure that was founde within the Seigniory of king Richard, the which one Wydomer vicount of Lemonke had founden, and withhelde the same from king Richard, and for his sauegardefled into the aforenamed Castell, and defended it manfully from the first weeke of Lent, vntill the sixt day of Aprill. Vpon the which day, king Richarde walking vnwisely aboute the Castell, to espie the feblenesse thereof, one named Bertrand Guedon marked the king, and wounded him in the heade (or as some wryte) in the arme, with a venemous quarrell. King Rychard After which wounde receyued by the king, he commaunded sharpe assault to be made to death. the Castell, in the which assault the Castell was wonne.

Then the king caused inquirie to be made who it was that did hurt him, the which being founde, was brought vnto the kinges presence, and named himselfe as aforesayde, but after some wryters, he was called Peter Basile. Then the king demaunded of him, why he did so lye in waite rather to hurte him, then any other of the company? and he aunswered, because thou slewest my father and my brethren (sayd he) and I entended to aduenge their death what soeuer became of me. A subsedy of thre shillings of ouerye plough land.

Fter the Death of king Richarde, reigned his brother Iohn Erle of Morton, yongest sonne of Henry the seconde, called Iohn without lande, who at the tyme of hys brothers death was in Normandy, where immediatly after the death of hys sayde brother he possessed his treasure, and was proclaymed king of England the. vj. day of Aprill 1199. & then sent Hubert Archbishop of Cantorbury into England to make provision for his And vpon Easter day next following, he was gyrde with the sworde of the Duke of Briteyn, and sone after came into Englande, where he was crowned king at Westmynster, vpon holye Thursdaye then next following of the aforenamed Hubert.

But in this meane time the French king helde a counsayle at Cenamanna in Turon, where (to the derogacon of king Iohn) Arthur the sonne of Geaffrey Plantagenet, and Nephew to the sayde Iohn, was made duke of Briteyn: who incontinently after, with a great armie entered the Countrie of Angeou and tooke possession thereof. And king Philip with his people entred the Duchy of Normandy, and layed siege vnto the Citie of Eureux, and wanne it with all the strong holdes there aboutes, and stuffed them with victuall, and strengthned them with his awne knights, and that done wasted and spoyled the Countrie, vntill he came to the Citie of Meux, where met with him the aforenamed Arthur, and did to him homage for the Countrie of Angiers. On the other side, the Britones which fauoured Arthur tooke and kept for his behoofe (as sayth Polidore) these townes, Gorneium, Butauentu and Gensolium: and following also the good successe of victorie, recourred againe the Citie of Angiers, the which king Iohn had taken from Arthur the yere before.

In the Moneth of May following, Alianour sometime wyfe to king Henry the second, and mother to king Richard the first came into Fraunce, to the French king to Meux aforesaid, & made him homage for the Countrie of Poyters as her inheritaunce. And sone after the French king returned into Fraunce, & the Duke of Briteyn with hym, which as yet was within age.

King Iohn heryng of thys warre in Normandy, and losse of the Countries aboue named, was greatly moued, charging y French king with breche of truce, whervpo he assembled a counsaile and asked ayde of his Lordes and commons, to wynne agayne theaforesayde landes, and there was graunted vnto him as some write three shillings of every Plough land thorough England beside the subsidie of the spiritual lands. And when all things were in readinesse that was meete for that voyage he then on Saint Iohn Baptistes daye following sayled into Normandy, and came to Roan, where as he was royally received, & shortly after a truce was concluded betweene the French king and him for one yere following. And then there came vnto hym the Erle of Flaundyrs, and all other the Lordes of Fraunce that were of king Richards bond and friendship, and were sworne vnto him.

Not long after, king Philip taking homage of Arthur for the Duchye of Normandie and PhiliptheFrench all other the possessions of king Iohn beyond the sea, promised him helpe against king king aydeth Ar-Iohn. After this king Ihon and the Frenche king spake together about an houres space. king Iohn. And the Frenche king asked so muche lande for himselfe, and Duke Arthur, that king Iohn would none graunt, and so departed in wrath.

The same yere a Legate came ynto King Iohn into England and commaunded him This was ye vnder paine of interdiction of his land, that he should deliuer the Archebishop which he Bewuays that kept in Prison. And the king denyed so to do, vntill he had payed him sixe thousand was taken by Markes for his raunsome, because he was taken in harnesse in the fielde, and had before first in the last sworne that he would never weare harnesse agaynst any Christian man.

At this time a deuorcement was made, between king Iohn and Auis his wife, daughter to the Erle of Gloucester, because they were in the thirde degre of kindred. And after by the Counsaile of the Frenche king: King Iohn maried Isabell daughter of the Erle of Augolisme, fianced before vnto Hugh Erle of March, and had by her two sonnes. Henry and Richard, and three daughters, Isabell, Alianor, and Iane.

At this tyme fell strife betwene king Iohn, and Geoffrey Archbishop of Yorke for diverse variance becauses. First because he woulde not suffer and permit the Shirife of Yorke in such affayres and Geoffrey as he had to do for the king, within his diocesse. Secondly, because he did also excommu-Archbishop of nicate the sayd Shirife. Thirdly because he would not saile with him into Normandy, to Yorke, make the mariage betwene Lewes the French kinges sonne, and his neece. &c.

Polidore sayth, that the cause of this fallyng out of king Iohn with his base brother Geoffrey Archebishop of Yorke, was for that he had reproued him for his great exactions and payments which he layde voon his people without all measure, by reason whereof he was so much offended with him, that he spoyled him of all that he had, and then banished him out of the court: And such (sayth the aforsayd Author) was the kinges displeasure conceyued against him, that he could not by any meanes be pacified, neyther entreated to receyue him to grace againe, vntill it was a yere after: But here Polidores saiving is not to be hastily credited of the reader, for truly such was the blindnesse of the tyme, that Polidore had no good opinion of king lohn, and therfore wryteth very vehemently against him in his History, which vehemency or fonde malice I thought meete rather to suppresse, then to make any mention thereof.

Also in this yere as sayth Reynulph, William king of Scottes did homage to king Iohn Homage of Wilat Lincolne, or as some write at London, and sware in the presence of a Legate of Scottes, Rome, and xiij. Bishops, to be true liege man to him, and to his heyres kinges. But Hector Boethus sayth, that this homage was done for the landes of Northumberland, Comberland, and Huntingdon, which the Scottishe king helde of the king of England, and not for the realme of Scotland, the which is not true.

At the same time king Iohn, earnestly requested the sayd Scottish king to ayde him agaynst Philip of Fraunce, but he made many excuses that he could not so do, specially without the consent of his Peeres and Commons, that done he hastened himselfe home againe into Scotland.

This yere in the moneth of December were seene in the Elament about ten of the Clocke in the night time, in the Prouince of Yorke five Moones, one in the West, another in Astraungeright. the East, the thirde in the South, the fourth in the North, and the fift in the middest of the Elament. The same tyme also in the spring season king Iohn sayled into Normandy, and shortly after went vnto Paris, where he was very honourably receyued of the Frenche king, from whence after he had made a new league with him, he went vnto Chiuon, but the sayde league continued but a while. For it was not long after, but that the French king required of king Iohn that he shoulde depart with all his landes in Normandy, and Pictauia, and else where within the dominion of Fraunce, vnto Arthure his nephew, and that incontinent, or else he woulde warre against him, and foorthwith made great prouision for warre, and ioynyng with him the sayd Arthur, with a great army and puyssance,

'The pedegre of Briteyn.

This Arthur was sonne to Gooffrey Duke of Briteyn, which was the elder brother of Arthur Duke of king Iohn, and so thys Arthur was king Iohns Nephew. And to make the matter more euident, king Henry the second had eyght children, one Wylliam which dyed in his childhood, the second Henry, which also dyed in his youth, after he was crowned king, hys father being alyue, the third Geoffrey Duke of Briteyn, which also dyed in hys fathers life time, leaving behinde him two children, Arthur and Brecca, the fourth Richarde the first, surnamed Cuer de lyon, the fift Iohn who succeeded Richard hys brother, with three other daughters named, Elianor married to the king of Spaine, Ione Countesse of Tholouse, and Mawde Duches of Saxon, that afterwards was Empresse.

The sayde Arthur being thus taken in warre, was brought before the king at the Castle of Falesie in Normandy, who being exhorted with manye gentle wordes to leave the French king, and to enclyne to his Vncle, aunswering agayne stoutly and with great indignation, required stowie aunswere, the kingdome of Englande with all there to belonging to be restored to him, as to the lawfull heyre of the Crowne: by reason whereof, prouoking the kinges displeasure against him, he was sent to the Tower of Roane, where at the length, whether by leaping into the diche, thinking to make his escape, or whether by some other privile hande, or by what Arthures death. chaunce else it appereth not certaine by stories, he finished his life, by the occasion whereof, the sayd Iohn was had after in great suspicion, whether justly or vniustly God knoweth.

Thys yere as sayeth Fabian there were chosen in London, xxxv. of the most substanciall Counsaile of the and wisest Citizens, which were called the counsaile of the Citie, out of the which number Citie. yerelye the Baylifes, and afterwarde the Majors and Shirifes were chosen.

And this yere also (as sayth Reynulph) happened many great and wonderfull tempestes, with lightninges and thunder, and the same also was of long continuaunce, and in that tempest there fell hayle of the greatnesse of Hennes egges, the which destroyed fruite, corne and cattell, besyde manye other hurtes that the same did. And in the sayde yere in the moneth of July dyed Queene Alianor the kinges mother, Hubert Archbi- and shortly after dyed also Hubert Archebishop of Cauntorbury: whose decease after it bury deceassed, was knowen to the Monkes of Cauntorbury, before his body was yet comitted to the earth, the yonger sort of \( \frac{1}{2} \) Monkes there gathered themselves together at midnight, and elected their Subprior Reignold: without the kinges licence or yet his knowledge, and they preuilye placed him in the Metropoliticall seate, singing Te deum at midnight. craftic Monker. the King shoulde not make their election voyde, they charged him foorthwith to go to Rome to the Pope for his confirmation, and made him to sweare that he should kepe all thinges secrete by the way as he went, & not to make their doyngs knowen to any man before he came o the Pope. But he contrarye to his othe, assoone as he came into Flaunders, opened abroade all the matter and vttered their counsaile. Wherevoon the Monkes beyng not a little agreeued with him, sent to him preuily that without delay he should go forwarde of his journey. And so soone as he was departed, the next day following they sent to the king, desiryng of him his gracious licence Canonically to choose their Archbishop. The king most gentely and fauourably graunted their peticion, requiring them instantly, and desirying that for his sake they would shewe fauour to Iohn Gray then Bishop of Norwiche, and president of his counsaile as they did in deede, erecting him into that seate of high Primacie.

Nowe when this their election was presented vnto the king, the king gaue vnto them his great and heartie thankes, and of his awne costes and charges he sent his messengers vnto Rome to the Pope to have the same election ratefied.

After the former elections made as aforesayde, the suffraganes of Cantorburye beyng not a little offended at the sayde elections, sent spedilye to Rome, to have them both staied, for that they were not called to neither of the elections: By reason whereof there grewe a great tumult.

This yere sayth Fabian by reason of fowle weathering, wheate was solde for. xv. shillinges the quarter, which was then thought a great price, and euen so it was if ye consider the value of their money, which was then valued at. xx. pence the ounce of silver, and now it is current with vs at five shillings the ounce, and so after that rate, when they payed. xv. shillinges for a quarter, the same was of our money. xlv. shillings a quarter.

And in the Sommer next following, king John maryed his bastarde daughter vnto Lewlyn Prince of Wales, and gaue with her the Castell and Lordship of Elyngsmer, beyng in the Marches of Southwales.

This yere the Suffraganes of the Prouynce of Cauntorbury of the one side, and the Monkes of Cauntorbury on the other syde, came before the Pope with their lewde elections. First the Monkes presenting Reignold their Subprior, desired that their election might be confirmed. The Suffraganes likewise complayed that the Monkes woulde presume to choose the Archebishop without their consent, and therefore desired by divers reasons the first election to be of none effect. The Pope decisyng the matter betwene The Suffraganes them both, pronounced with the Monkes, charging the Suffraganes and Bishops to med-pope, from the dle no more with that election, but to let the Monkes alone.

The Monkes of Cauntorbury now hauyng the whole election in their awne handes, fell also at a square among themselues, the yonger sort with the elder. The yonger sort which had chosen Reignold their Subprior, would have that election to stande. The olde sort of Monkes replied againe, saiyng: that the first election was by stealth and by night, and -by the yonger part also without the consent of the elder Monkes, and also done without the kinges licence or appointment, and without the due solemnitie therevato belonging. And as concerning our election, say they, it was done in the cleare day light, by the which it had aucthoritie, and in the presence of oure liege Lorde the king, and his consent and counsaile, beyng to the same.

This Allegation thus proponed, the Subpriors proctor, or man of law, stood foorth and proued the former election to be good, and this latter to be voyde and of no value. after this sort. Whether the first election (sayth he) were just or vniust, ye ought first by the lawe to have condemned it, before ye should have presumed to the seconde: But this ye did not, therefore is this your latter doyng no election at all, the first therefore is rather to be ratefied than yours.

When they had thus multiplied talke vpon both sydes, with many friuolous allegations a long time, and could not agree vpon one person. Pope Innocent condemned both these elections, commanding them to chose Stephen Langton, then Cardinall of Saint Stephen Langton, the Cardinal Stephen Langton Stephen they durst not so do, without the consent of their king, and also for that it was prejudi-the Pope.

ciall to their auncient liberties. The Pope by and by (sayth the story) as one in a fury. takyng their wordes out of their mouthes, sayd thus vnto them, we will you to knowe it, that we have full power and aucthoritie over the Church of Cantorbury: neither are we The Popes great wont to tary the consent of Princes, therefore we commaund you vpon paine of our great cursse that ye chose him onely whom we have appoynted you.

> The Monkes at these wordes were abashed and terrefied (although they much murmured in their hearts) yet consented all in one, & thervpon sang, Te Deum: only did Doctor Helias Brantfield withdraw himselfe from that election, whom the king had sent for the admission of the Bishop of Norwiche.

> Thus was Stephen Langton in the high Church of Viterby by Innocent the Popes awne mouth made Archbishop of Cantorbury. From thence foorth therefore (sayth Mathew of Paris) the Pope could do no lesse, but mightely defend him from all vexation and daunger, considering that he was of his awne preferment.

Vpon this occasion king Iohn conceyued an excedyng displeasur against the Monkes of Cantorbury (as he had good cause) they doyng so many euils against his Princely prerogative: Without his licence they elected their Archbishop, and put by the Bishop of Norwiche whom he had appropried: They wasted a great part of his treasure for the warres, and vtterly against the kings minde they made Stephen Langton their Metropolitane, whom he toke for a grieuous enimy vnto the whole realme, chiefly for that he was Monkes of Can- alwayes so familiar with the French king. Wherefore in his anger he banished them out of his land to the number of. lxiiii, for their contumacy and contempt of his regall power.

The Monkes of Cauntorbury thus beyng banished, the king forthwith sendeth messenters to the Pope. gers to the Pope with his letters, wherein he doth sharpely and expressly quarell with the Pope: First, for that he so vncurteously did administ the election of the Bishop of Norwich, & set vp one Stephen Langton, a man vnknowne to him, and brought vp amongst his enimies along tyme in the kingdome of Fraunce, consecrating him Archebishop of Cauntorbury, and letting the other go. Also, which is more, it redowneth, sayth he, to the subuersion and derogation of the liberties apperteining to his crowne, that his consent being not asked before of the Monkes, which should have bene done, they notwithstanding rashly presumed to promote and preferre the same election. Wherefore he cannot maruaile he sayth, ynough, that neither the sayde Pope, nor the court of Rome doth consider, and revolue with themselves, how necessary his love and favour hath bene alwayes hetherto vnto the See of Rome: and that they fixe not the eye of reason vpon thys, what great fruite and reuenues hath proceeded hetherto to them oute of the realine of Englande, the lyke whereof hath not bene received out of any other Country besides, on this side the Alpes. He addeth moreover & sayth, that for his liberties, he will stand, if neede be, vnto death, neyther can he be so removed and shaken off from the election of the bishop of Norwich, which he seeth to be to him so commodious and profitable. Finally thus he concludeth, saiving: that in case in this his request he be not heard, he will so provide by the seas, that there shall bee no such gadding nor coursing over any more to Rome, suffering the ryches of the lande anye more to be exported ouer, whereby he should himselfe be the lesse able to withstand his enimies. And seing he hath of his awne at home both Archebishops, Bishops, and other Prelates of the Church, both of Englishmen and of other, sufficiently prouided and instructed in all kinde of knowledge, therefore he shall not neede to seeke for justice and judgement any farther abroad. Now when these letters came to the Popes-intelligence, he directeth letters to the king agayne in this forme.

Innocent Pope, seruaunt of the seruants of God, to oure welbeloued sonne in Christ, the king of England, health & Apostolicall blessing: where as we have written to you heretofore exhorting and entreating you after an humble, gentle, and diligent sorte, concerning the matter of the Church of Cauntorbury, you have written to vs againe after a threatning sort, and vpbrayding manner, both spitefully, and also frowardly. And where as wee more and aboue that our right and duetie required, haue borne and geuen to you:

IO The Popes letters written to King Iohn.

you againe for your parte haue geuen to vs not so much as by right and duetie ye are bound to doe. And though your devocion (as ye say) hath bene to vs very necessary, yet consider againe, that oures also is not a little oportune and expedient for you. And where as we in suche lyke cases have not shewed at any time the lyke honor to any Prince, as vnto you, you agayne haue so much derogated to our honour, as no Prince else hath presumed to doe, but you alone, pretending certaine friuolous causes and occasions I cannot tell what, why you would not condiscend to the election of Stephen Langton Cardinall of Saint Chrisogono chosen by the Monkes of Cauntorbury, for that the sayde Stephen, as you say, hath bene conversaunt and brought vp among your enimies, and his person to you vnknowne. But you know what is the Prouerbe of Salomon: The net is cast: but in vayne in the eyes and sight of the fligng birdes, with much other matter more in the same epistle, wherin he falleth into commendation of Stephen Langton his Cardinall, declarying howe learned he was in the liberall artes, and in diuinitie, insomuch as he was prebentated at Paris, also come of an honest stock, and an English man borne, and not vnknowen to the king, seeyng the King had written thrise to him before, &c. Moreouer, declarying in the sayde letter, howe the messengers of the King had specefied to him another cause, which was, for that the Monkes of Cauntorbury which had to do in the election, came not to him before for his consent, declarying moreover in the sayd letter, how the sayde Messengers of the king intreated in the kinges behalfe, that forsomuch as the Popes letters wherein the king was commaunded to send his Proctours to Rome for the same matter, came not to the kinges hande, neither did v Monkes direct any such letters or message to the king to have his consent, therefore, that the Pope considering the same, would graunt so much for the regard of the kinges honour, that the Monkes of Cauntorbury should proceede, not without the kinges assent therein: And forasmuch as that hath not bene done as yet, therefore they desyred some delay therein to be geuen sufficient for the doyng thereof. Wherevnto he sayde, that he had graunted and fulfilled his request, in sendyng his messengers and letters once or twise for the same purpose, although he sayd it was not the maner of the See Apostolike, who hath the fulnesse of power ouer the church of Cantorbury, to wayte for Princes consentes in such elections, who then coulde not be suffered to do that which they came for. &c. Wherefore in the knittyng vp of his letter, he concludeth in these wordes.

And therefore, seeying the matter so standeth, we see no cause why we should require or tary for the kinges fauour or consent any more therein, but intend so to proceede in this matter, neither enclynyng on the right hande, neyther yet on the left, according as the canonicall ordinances of the holy fathers shall direct vs: that is, that all impediments and delayes set asyde, so to prouide that the Church of Cauntorbury be no lenger destitute of her Pastour. Wherefore, be it knowen to your discretion or kingly prudence, that forsomuch as this election of Stephen Langton, hath orderly and concordly thus proceded without fraude or deceite vpon a person meete for the same: therefore we will not for no manues pleasure, neyther may we without dauger, of fame and of conscience, differre or protract any lenger the consummation of the sayde election. Wherefore my welbeloued sonne, seeying we have had respect to your honour above that our right and duetie requireth, studye to honour vs so muche as your dutie requireth againe, so that you may the more plentifully deserve fauour both at Goddes handes and oures, least that by the doyng the contrary, you bring your selfe into such a pecke of troubles, as afterward ye shall scarce rid your selfe of againe. For this know for a certaine, in the ende it must needes fall out, that he shall have the better, vnto whom every knee heavenly, earthly, and infernall creatures do bowe, whose turne I serue in earth, though I be vnworthie. Therefore settle not your selfe to obey their perswasions whiche alwayes desyre your vnquietnesse, whereby they may the better fishe in the water when it is troubled, but commit your selfe to our pleasure, which vndoubtedly shall turne to your prayse, glory, and honour, for it should not be much for your safety in this cause to resist God and the Hh2 Church,

Church, in whose quarrell that blessed Martyr and glorious Thomas bath of late shed his blood, especially seeing your father and your brother of famous memory then kings of England did geue ouer those three wicked customes into the handes of the Legates of the See Apostolique. But if you will yelde your selfe humbly into our handes, we will looke that you and yours shall be sufficiently prouided for, that no prejudice may aryse herevpon to you ward.

Geuen at Laterane the tenth yere of our popedome.

Not long after this letter was sent out, there followed especiall charge and commaundement sent into England vnto certeine Bishops there, requyryng them by aucthoritie Apostolicall, that if the sayd king would not receive the aforenamed Prior of Catorbury and his Monkes, that then they should enterdict the king throughout all his For the executing whereof, foure Bishops were appointed by the aucthoritie of Willia bishop of the popes Bulles, that is to say, William Bishop of London, Eustace Bishop of Ely, London, Bustace Walter bishop of Winchester, and Gyles Bishop of Herford. Which sayd foure Bishoppes Walter bishop of went vnto the king, and shewed them their commission from the Pope (as is abouesayde)

Giles bishop of willyng him to consent therevnto. &c.

But the king refused the same, and would by no meanes graunt theyr request: Wherevpon, they departing from his grace, went the morow after the Annunciation of our Lady, The Bishops en- and pronounced the sayde generall interdiction throughout the realme of England: so terdicted yo king that the Church dores were shut vp with keyes and other fasteninges, and with walles. & cand all the

Nowe when the king heard of this, he began to be moved against them, and tooke all the possessions of the foure bishops into his handes, appoynting certaine men to kepe the liuyngs of the Clergie throughout the realme, that they should enjoy no part thereof. Which thing when the Bishops vnderstoode, they cursed all them that kept or should meddle with Church goodes, against the will of them that ought them: and vnderstanding for all that, that the king nothing regarded their doyngs, they went ouer the sea to the Archbishop of Cauntorbury and informed him what had happened. Who heering the same, willed them againe to returne to Cauntorbury, and he would come thether to them, or else sende certeine personnes thether in his steede, that should do asmuch as if he were there himselfe. Then when the Bishoppes heard this, they returned again into Englande to Cauntorbury, which tydynges came shortly to the king, that they were come againe thether, and because he might not himselfe trauaile to them, he sent thether Bishops, Erles, and Abbottes, to entreate them that the king might receive the Archebishop Stephen, and the Prior and all the Monkes of Cauntorbury, promisyng in his behalfe, that he should neuer take any thing of the church goodes against the will of them that owe them, but would make amendes to them of whome he had taken any goodes, and the Church should have all her fraunchesse in as ample maner as in Saint Edwardes time the Confessor.

This king was in a great perplexitie.

> When the forme of agreement was thus concluded, it was ingressed in a payre of indentures, which the foresayde foure Bishops to the one part thereof set to their seales, and the other part the sayd Erles, Bishops, and Abbots, carved to the king. the king saw the order thereof, he lyked it well, sauving he would not agree to make restitution of the Church goodes. So he sent to the foure Bishops againe, that they should put out that poynt of restitution: But they aunswered stoutly that they would not put Then the king sent to the Archbishop, by the foure Bishoppes, that he out one worde. should come to Cauntorbury to speake with him, and for his safeconduit to come and go Medges sent for againe at his will, he sent his Iustices as pledges, that is to say, Gilbert Peltwyn, William de la Bereuer, & Ihon Lefitz: which thing this done, the Archbishop Stephen came to Cauntorbury & the king heeryng thereof came to Chilham, from whence he sent his Treasurer bishop of Winchester to him, to have him put out of the Indentures the clause of restitution aforesayde, who deniyng to alter any worde of the same, moued the king in such sort, that immediatly was proclaymed throughout England at the kings commaund-

ment, that all those that had any Church living, and went over the sea, that they should A proclamation come again into England at a certein day, or else lose their liuyngs for euermore. And king against the further in that Proclaymation, he charged all Shirifes within the Realme to enquire if any mind of Stephen Bishoppes, Abbottes, Priors, or any other Church men, from that day forwarde, receyued any commaundement that came from the Pope, that they shoulde take his or theyr body, and bryng it before him. And also that they should take into their handes for the kinges vse all the Church landes that were geuen to any man through the Bishop Stephen or by the Prior of Cauntorbury from the time of the election of the Archebishop. And further charged that all the woods that were the Archbishops, should be cut downe and all solde.

When tidynges came to the Pope that the king had thus done, being moued thereby with fiery wrath, he sent to the king two Legates, the one called Pandulph, and the other Du- Pandulph & rant, to warne him in the Popes name, that he should cease off his doynges to holy Burant the Church, and amend the wrong that hee had done to the Archebishop of Cauntorbury, and to the Priors & Monkes of Cantorbury, and to all the Clergie of England. And further that he should restore againe the goodes that he had taken of them agaynst their will: or else they should cursse the king by name: and to do this, the Pope tooke them his

These two Legates commyng into England, resorted to the king to Northampton, where he helde his Parliament, and saluting him sayde: they came from the Pope of Rome, to reforme the peace of holy Church. And first they sayd, we admonishe you on the Popes behalfe that ye make full restitution of the goodes that ye have ravished of holy Church and of the land. And that ye receive Stephen the Archbishop of Cauntorbury into his dignitie, and the Prior of Cauntorbury, and his Monkes. And that ve yelde againe vnto the Archebishop all his landes and rentes without any withholdyng. And sir yet moreouer, that ye shall make suche restitution to them as the Church shall thinke sufficient.

Then aunswered the king, as touching the Priour and hys Monkes of Cauntorbury; all that ye have sayde I will gladly doe, and all thing else that ye would ordeyne: But as touching the Archebishop, I shall tell you as it lyeth in my hart. Let the Archebishop leave hys Bishoprike, and if the Pope then shall intreate for him, peraducuture I may like to geue him some other Bishoprick in England: And upon this condition I will receyue and admyt him.

Then sayde Pandolph vnto the king: holy Church was wont neuer to disgrade an Archbishop without cause reasonable, but ever she was wont to correct Princes that were dis-

What, how now, quoth the king? threaten ye me? Nay sayd Pandolph, but ye haue A stout spech openly tolde as it standeth in your hart: and nowe we will tell you what is the Popes will, of a straunger to and thus it standeth: that he hath wholy interdicted and accursed you, for the wrongs away realment ye haue done to holy Church, and to the Clergy: and for as much as ye dwell in your awne malice and will come to none amendment: ye shall vnderstand that from this tyme The Legate forwarde, the sentences upon you given have force & strength. And all those that you curse the king. have commoned withall before this time, whether that they be Erles, Barons or Knights, or any other whatsoeuer they be, we assoyle them safely vnto thys day. And from this time forward, of what condition soeuer they be, we accurse them openly and specially by this our sentence, that doe with you common. And we assoyle moreouer Earles, Barons, Knightes, and all other maner of men of their homages, service and fealues that they should doe vnto you. And thys thing to confirme, we geue playne powre to the Bishop of Winchester, & to the Bishop of Norwich. And the same powre against Scotland to the Bishop of Rochester and of Sarisburie. And in Wales, we geue the sanie power to the Bishop of Saint Dauid and Landaff and of S. Asse.

And moreover we send throughout all christendome, that all the Bishops beyonde the sea, shall accursse all those that helpe or counsell you in any maner of neede, that ye haue to doe in any parte of the worlde. And that they also assoyle them against you, how many socuer they be. And further we assoyle them by the aucthoritie of the Pope, and also commaund them to warre with you, as with him that is enimie to the Church.

Then the king heeryng thys, aunswered, what may ye doe to me more? If I had knowne this to be the cause of your comming, I would have kept you back for one yere. Pandolphe the Cardinall aunswered: full well we thought at our first comming, that ye would have bene obedient to God and to holy Church, and to have fulfilled the Popes commaundement, which we have shewed and pronounced to you as we were charged therewith: But now if ye had wist the cause of our comming, ye woulde have made vs tarie one whole yere, which ye might as well haue sayde, that ye would haue a whole yeres respite by the Popes lycence. But for to suffer what death that you can ordeyne, we will not spare to tell you all the Popes message.

Vpon this occasion Pope Innocent yet once agains commainded vpon paine of his great cursse, that no man should obey king Iohn, neyther yet keepe company with him, to common or counsayle with him, yea, his awne familier houshold to doe him anye kinde of seruice, eyther at bed or at boord, in Church, Hall or stable: But what followed thereof? the greater parte of them which after such sort fled from him, by the ordinance of God, of dyuerse and sundrie diseases the same yere dyed. And between both nations English and French, fell that yere great amitie, but secret, subtile and false, to the bitter betraiyng of England. Neither was the Pope content onely with this, but moreouer the sayd Pope Innocent gaue sentence definitive, by counsaile of his Cardinalles, that king Iohn should be deposed and put from his seate Regall, and another put in his rowme. And to the spedy execution thereof, he apointed king Philip the French king, promising to & any nmercifull. geue him full remission of all his sinnes, and the cleare possession of all the realme of England to him and his heyres for ever, if he did eyther kill him or expell him.

Moreouer, he wrote vnto other Nations that they should take on them the livery or badge of the crosse, and be reuenged on him for the manifolde iniuries done to the Church vni-uersall, by that Turke and Pagan king Iohn, as he called him.

But for all that the Pope could do vnto him, he ceased not to be auenged on such Bishoppes and Priestes as trayterously had conspired against him, partly by puttyng them to exile, and partly by seasyng vpon their goodes and livinges. And mistrustyng that his people would not now continue true vnto him, by reason he stood accurssed, and also the land was interdicted for his sake, he caused the whole realme to be sworne vnto him againe. And then assembled he an armic intending to warre vpon Alexander the second king of Scottes, for that he receyued many of the Nobles of the Realme that dayly fled vnto him for succour, and by that meanes to be avenged vpon him, for breaking the league that was betwixt them.

And when he had thus prepared for warre, he hastened him shortly after to Northumberland, and marchyng forward from thence toward Scotland, he inuaded the Frontiers of his enemyes, and offered them battaile. But the Scottish king perceiung himselfe to weake to resist the power of England, and therfore thinking that it would be little for his profite, if he had then joyned battaile with him, did by the aduice of his counsayle refuse to fight, and so dismissyng his army, he sent vnto king Iohn, and made great sute to bee at peace with him, the which at the length he bought, though with much a do, and for a great summe of money: But to returne from whence we have digressed.

The next yere after the aforesayde interdiction, the French king began his attempt in hope of the crowne of England, beyng well manned with the Bishoppes, Monkes, Prelates and Priestes, and their servauntes to mainteyne the same, braggyng of the letters which they had receyued of the great men there. But beholde the worke of God: The Englishe nauie tooke three hundreth of the Frenche kinges Shippes, well loaden with wheate, wyne, meale, flesh, armor, and such other like, meete for the warre, and an hun-

Now, to bring this Peter in credite, and the king out of all credite with his people, dinerse vaine persons bruted dayly among the Commons of the realme, that Christ had twise apered vnto him in the shape of a childe betwene the priests handes, once at Yorke, another tyme at Pomfret, and that he had breathed vpon him thrise saiyng, peace, peace, peace, and teachyng many things, which he anon after declared to the bishops, and bid the people amend their naughtie liuyng: Beyng rapt also imspirite, they sayde he behelde the loyes of headen, and sorowes of hell. for scant were there three in the Realme, sayde he, that lined christianly.

This counterfeated soothsayer prophecied of king Ihon that he should reigne no longer then the Ascentio day next following, which was in the yere of our Lord. 1211, and was the. xiii, yere from his coronation, & this he sayd he had by reuelation. Then it was of him demaunded, whether he should be slaine, or be deposed, or should voluntarily geue ouer the crowne? He aunswered that he could not tell: But of this he was sure (he sayd) that neither he nor any of his stocke or linage should reigne after that day.

The king heeryng of this, laughed much at it, and made but a scoffe therat: Tush king thon sayth he, it is but an ideot knaue, and such a one as lacketh his right wittes. But when should appere this foolishe prophet had so escaped the daunger of the kinges displeasure, and that he learned. made no more of it, he gate him abroade and prated thereof at large, as he was a very idle vagabond, and vsed to trattle and talke more than ynough, so that they which loued the king caused him anone after to be apprehended as a malefactor, and to be throwen in prison, the king not yet knowing thereof.

Anone after, the fame of this phantasticall prophet went all the realme ouer, and his name was knowen every where, as foolishnesse is muche regarded of the people, where wisedome is not in place: specially, because then he was emprisoned for the matter, the rumor was the larger, their wonderinges were the wantoner, their practises the foolisher, their busye talkes and other idle doynges, the greater. Continually from thence, as the rude maner of people is, olde Gossyps tales went abroade, newe tales were invented, fables were added to fables, and lyes grewe vpon lyes. So that every day newe slaunders were layde on the king, and not one of them true, rumors arose, blasphemyes were spred, the enemyes rejoysed, and treasons by the priestes were mainteyned, and what lykewyse was surmysed, or other subtiltye practised, all was then fathered vpon this foolishe prophet, as thus sayth Peter Wakefielde, thus hath he prophecied, and thus it shall come to passe, yea, many times when he thought nothing lesse. When the Ascention day was Ascentio day come, which was prophecied of before, king Ihon commaunded his regall tent to be spred which should be the last day of in the open fielde, passing that day with his noble counsayle and men of honour, in the kinge Iehna greatest solemnitie that ever he did before, solacyng himselfe with Musicall instrumentes reign as Peter Wakefielde & songes, most in sight amongst his trustie friendes. When that day was past in all pros-sayde. peritief and myrth, his enemies beyng confused, turned all vuto an allegoricall vuderstandyng to make the prophet good, and sayde, he is no longer kyng, for the Pope reigneth' and not he: yet reigned he styll, and his sonne after him to proue that prophet a lyer.

Then was the king by his counsaile perswaded, that this false prophet had troubled the realme, peruerted the heartes of the people, and raysed the commons against him, for his woordes went oner the sea, by the helpe of his prelates, and came to the Frenche kinges care, and gaue to him a great encouragement to inuade the lande: he had not else done it so sodeinly. But he was most fowly deceyued, as all they are and shall be that put their trust in such darke drowsye dreames of hippocrites. The king therefore commaunded that he should be hanged up, and his sonne also with him, least any more false prophetes Peter the proshould aryse of that race.

The king thus compassed about on every side with enemies, and seeving the great dawnger that was like to folowe, and himselfe to be brought to such a streyght, that none other way could be found to anoyde the present destruction both of his person and the realme also, but vtterly to be subuerted, and specially fearyng the French king, was enforced to submit himselfe vnto the Pope, converting his lande into the patrimony of S. Peter, as many other had done before him, and so became a subject to the See of Rome, thinkyng thereby to anoyde all daungers imminent: for of this he was sure (though not without shame) that beyng vinder his protection, no foreyne potentate throughout the whole Empire was able to subdue him. Wherefore he thus submittying himselfe did enter into bonde to the Pope, the Copye of which bonde followeth.

But Sir Thomas Moore knight wrytyng in a booke of his entituled, the supplication of soules, against the supplication of beggers, certeinly affirmeth that there was neuer any such tribute graunted, eyther for England or Ireland. And he sayth further, that neither Rome can shew any such graunt, nor neuer could, & if they could it were right nought worth: for neuer could any king of England geue away the Realme to the Pope, or make the lande tributary, though he would, and that no such money (sayth he) is there payd, nor neuer was. This saiyng I leaue to your iudgemet. But I maruail much that maister

Moore beyng a great learned man, would not for the auguchment of his credite, and the truth of so great a matter, in reprouing a thing so manifestly written by a great number of Aucthours, as namely Reynulph of Chester, Polydore, and a great number of other, which affirme the aforesayd History to be true, that he doth not allege so much as the testimonie and aucthoritie of some one aucthor, for the prouyng of his assertion: But as aforesaid I leave this to the judgement of the reader.

But before the releasement of the interdiction, the king was miserably compelled kneel- The miserable yng on his knees to geue ouer both his crowne and scepter to the Pope of Rome, for the estate of king space of fiue dayes, and as his client, vassall, feedary, and tenant, to receyue it of him againe at the handes of another Cardinall. And to this was he bound obligatory, both for himselfe, and for them which should succede him, paiying yerely for a knowledge thereof, a thousand Markes for England and Ireland as aforesayde, So was the inter- The interdiction diction discharged the second day of July after sixe yeres three monethes and. xvj. dayes of this realme from the first proclaymyng thereof.

In this new rufflyng, the king easily graunted that Abbots, Deanes, & Curates should be elected frely every where, so that the lawes of the realme were truely observed. But against that were the Bishops, alleagyng theyr Canonical decrees, & rules synodall, determinyng the king therein to have nothing a do, but onely to geue his consent after they had once elected. But among that company, there were some that consented not to that error: A sort also there were of prelates that time which were not pleased that the landes interdiction should ceasse, till the king had payde all which their Clergie in all quarters of the realme had demaunded without reason: yea euery sawcy Sir Ihon for his part, euen to the very breakyng of their hedges, the stealyng of their Apples, and their other occasionall dammages, demaunded allowance which grew to an incredible summe and impossible to be answered.

Notwithstanding that which is vttered before, concerning the bitter malice of the clergie against the king, yet did the Popes Legate and Cardinall Nicholaus Tusculanus muche fauour the king hys doinges and allowe his proceedings, wherefore certaine of the Clergie reported of hym that he was exceeding parciall, and regarded not their matters ecclesiasticall as he should have done, for leaving the accompt of their restitutions, he went with the kings officers as the kings pleasure was to the Cathedrall Ministers, Abbeyes, Pryories, Deanries and great Churches vacant. And there for the next incumbent alwayes he appoynted two, one for the king, another for the parties. But vpon him onely whome the king nominated, he compelled most commonly the election to passe, which vexed them wonderfully: Vpon this therefore they raysed a new conspiracie against the kings person, and we behelde (sayth Houeden) about the same time manye noble houses and assemblyes deuyded in many places; the fathers and the aged men stode upon the kinges parte, but the yonger sort contrarye. And some there were that for love of their kindred, and in other sundrie respects, forsoke the king againe: yea, and the fame went that time (sayth he) that they were confederated with Alexander the Scottish king and Alexander the Leoline Prince of Wales to worke him an vtter mischiefe. Their outragious and frantick clamours so much prevayled in those dayes, that it grewe to a greeuous tumult and a most perillous commotion.

In the yere of our Lord 1212 as witnesseth Paulus Emilius and other Histories, Pope Innocent the third held a generall counsaile at Rome called the counsell of Laterane. The chiefe causes of that counsel were these. In the dayes of this Innocent, heresie (as Counsaile of he calleth it) beganne to rise vp very high, and to spreade forth his braunches abroade. By reason whereof many Princes were excommunicate: as Otho the Emperour, Ihon the king of Englande, Peter king of Aragon, Raymond the Erle of Tholouse and a VOL. I.

great sort more. And many landes were interdicted, as England, Irelande, Prouance. Tolouse, Aquitane, Sataloni, and such other lyke as is aforesayde. So that it could be none otherwise (sayth Houeden) but with the sharpe Axe of the Gospell (for so the Pope called excommunications) they ought of necessity to have bene cut of from the church. Therefore was thys counsell prouyded and proclaymed, and Prelates from all Nations therevato called. And to colour those mischiefes which he then went about, he caused it by his Legates and Cardinalles to be noysed abroade that hys intent was therein onely to haue the Church vniuersally reformed, and the holy lande from the Turkes handes recovered. But all this was but craft and falshoode as the sequele thereof hath manifestly declared. For hys purpose thereby was to subdue all Princes, and to make himselfe riche and wealthy. For there he made this Act, and established it by publique decree, that the Pope shoulde haue the correct haue from thence foorth the correction of all Christian Princes, and that no Emperour should be admitted, except he were sworne before, and were also crowned of him. He ordevned moreouer that whatsoeuer he were the which should speake euill of the Pope, he should be punished in hell with eternall damnation, Conradus Vspergensis, Hieronimus He also ordeyned auriculer confession. Also in this counsaile was first inuented and brought in transubstanciation.

The pope to tion of all Christian Princes.

Stephen Long-

But nowe let vs returne to king Iohn againe, and marke howe the priestes and their adherentes were plagued for their homely handlyng of his Maiestie. In the aforesayd stephen Long counsayle of Laterane, and the same yere, was Stephen Langton the Archebishop of Cauntorburye excommunicated of Pope Innocent, with all those Bishops, prelates, priestes, Barons and Commons which had bene of counsaile with him in the former rebellion. And when the sayd Archbishop had made instant sute to the Pope to be assoyled, anone he made him this aunswere with great indignation: Brother mine, I swere by Saint Peter, thou shalt not so soone at my hande obteyne the benefite of absolution, for why, thou hast not onely done harme to the king of England, but also thou hast in a great many of thinges injured the Church of Rome here: and therefore thou shalt tary my leysure. The Archbishop was also at that tyme suspended out of the Churche, and commaunded to say no Masse at all, neither yet to exercise any other ecclesiastical office, because he would not at tyme conuenient execute the Popes cursse vpon the rebellious Barons: With them the sayd Pope had bene so depely offended and angred a little before, that the great Charter of the liberties of England, with great indignation and countenance most terrible, he rent and destroyed by sentence diffinitive condemnyng it for ever. And by and by, therevpon curssed all the other rebelles with Bell and Candell. Capteines of them which were the Cityzens of London for that assay, were pronounced excommunicate by name, and remayned still in that state: wherefore they appealed to the generall counsayle.

Also in the sayde vere, those great men were likewise sommoned to appere at Rome in the generall Sinode, which neuer consented to the kinges deposyng: though they were called (they sayd) therevnto by the Archebishop of Cauntorbury and others, and required by other to subscribe to the same, yet could they not of conscience do it, because he had humbled himselfe, and also graunted to kepe peace with all men. Thus was the whole realme miserably then devided into two factions, through the malice of the Clergie, & so strifes increased in the land every where. Yet were there of the Lordes and Gentelmen a great number at that tyme that followed the king, and allowed his doyngs. But they which were on the other syde, not a little suspecting the state that they were in, fled spedely to the Frenche king Philip, desirying him that he would graunt vinto them his eldest sonne Ludouicke, and they would elect him to be their king, and that without much tari-They be sought him moreover, that he would sende with him a strong and mightye power, as were able to subdue him vtterly, that they might (they sayd) be delivered of such a wicked Tyraunt. Such was the report that those wicked men gaue of their Christian gouernor appoynted to them of God, whom they ought to have obeyed though he had bene euill, euen for very conscience sake. And as certeyne of the Lordes and Barons, The Barons of were in doying to chose the sayde Ludouick for their king, the Pope sent thether one England sought to have Lewes Gualo, the Cardinall of S. Martyn, to stop those rashe and cruell attemptes, chargyng the Frenche kings vpon his allegeance, that he with all power possible, should fauor, mainbe king of Engteine, and defende king Iohn of England, feodarie and tenant to the sea of Rome. French king thereto made aunswere, as one not contented with that arrogant precept. The realme of England, sayd he, was neuer yet any part of Saint Peters patrimonic, neither is it nowe, nor yet at any time shall be hereafter. This spake he, for that he was in hope to obteyne it for hys sonne, by treason of the Barons.

No prince or Potentate (sayde Philip the Frenche king) may pledge or geue away the The French king kingdome (which is besydes the landes) the gouernement of his realmes and whole com-reasoning about mon wealth, without the lawfull consent of hys Barons, which are bound to defende the England. same. If the Pope shall introduce or set vp such a president in the Christianitie, he shall at his pleasure bring all Christen kinges and their kingdomes to naught. I like not this example in these dayes begonne. I cannot therefore allowe this fact of king Iohn of England, though he be mine vtter aduersary, but I much lament that he hath so endammaged his realme, and hath brought the noble ground & Queene of Prouynces under miserable tribute. The chiefe Lordes and men of his nobilitie standing by when he vitered these wordes, beyng as it were in a fury cryed with one voyce. By the blood of God, in whome we trust to besaued, we will stick in this article to the losyng of our heades (let the king of England do therin what him liketh) that no king may put his land vnder tribute, and so make his nobilitie captiue seruauntes. With that came in Ludouicke the kinges eldest sonne Lodouicke or and sayd vnto them all there present, I beseche you let not my purposed iourney: the eldest sonne. Barons of England haue elected me for their Lorde and king, and I will not surely lose my right: But I will fight for it even to the death, yea so long as heart shall styrre within my breast, and I doubt not but that I shall well obteyne it, for I have friends among them. His father the king stood still as he had bene in a doompe, and answered neuer a worde, but fared as though he had dissembled the matter. About the same tyme, were such treasons and conspiracies wrought by the Bishops.

finde trusty friendes. He was then compelled by the vucertenty of his subjectes to trauaile from place to place, but not without a great army of men, loking every day when king tohn in his Barons and their confederates would cruelly set vpon him. At the last he came to great perplexitie. Douer, and there loked for aide from other quarters, which loued him better then did his awne people. And thether to him resorted from Flaunders, Brabant and Holland. on the one syde, and from Guyan, Gascoyn and Poyters on the other syde, and from other countries more, a wonderfull number of men. The report went then that the Pope had written to those countries, mightily to assist him for dyuerse considerations. One was, for that he had both submitted himselfe and his dominion to his protection. Another was, because he had taken on him a little before, the lyuery of the crosse to winne againe Ierusalem. The thirde was, for that he had gotten by him the dominion of England and Ireland, and feared to lose both, if he should chaunce to decay. Also in this tyme king Iohn sailyng to the Isle of Wight abode there the space of three Monethes, and remained of purpose for the quieting of him selfe from tumultes, and led there a solitary life, among ryuers and watermen: where as he accompted rather to die then to liue, beyng so trayterously handeled of his Bishops and Barons, and not knowing justly howe to be aduenged on them. Vpon the Purification of our Lady therefore, he tooke vpon him the crosse or voyage against the Turkes for the recourry of Ierusalem, moued therevuto rather for the doubtes he had in his people, then for any other deuotion else. And thus he sayde to his familier seruauntes: since I submitted my selfe and my landes, England and Ireland to the Church of Rome (sorowe come to it) neuer thing prospered with me, but it hath gone against me.

In the next yere after, Symon Langton was chosen Archebishop of Yorke, but that election was anon after dissolved, for information was geven to the Pope, that the sayde Simon was brother to Stephen the Archebishop of Cauntorbury, which had bene the occasion gener of all the tumults which were at that tyme in England. And the Pope had the more hate vnto him, for that he had brought him vp of naught, and did finde him at that tyme so stubborne: wherfore he placed in his roome Walter Gray bishop of Winchester.

Sualo the Popes Legate, cursseth Lewes the Frenche kinges sonne. The solemnitie of curssyng.

In the same yere, Gualo the Popes Legate renued his great curse vpon Lewes the french kinges sonne, for vsurping vpon king Iohn. Likewise vpon Symon Langton and Geruys Hobruge, for prouoking him to the same, and that with a wonderfull solempnitie. For in that doing, he made all the Belles to be rong, the Candels to be light, the dores to be opened and the booke of excommunications and interdictions publiquely to be reade. committing them wholy to the Deuill for their contumacie and contempt. He also commaunded the Bishops and Curates to publishe it abroade ouer all the whole realme, to the terror of all subjects. The sayde Symon and Geruys laughed him to scorne, and derided much his doings in that behalfe, saiyng: that for the just title of Ludowike or Lewes, they had appealed to the generall counsell at Rome.

The Magistrates of London and Citizens of the same did likewise vilipend and disdevnously mocke all that the Pope had there commaunded and done: And in spite both of him and his Legate, they kept company with them that were excommunicate, both at Table and at church, shewing themselves thereby as open contemners both of him and his lawes. Lewes being at London, and taking himselfe for king, constituted Symon Langton for hys high Chauncelor, and Geruis Hobruge for his chiefe preacher. By whose London and was receyued as king. daylie preachings, as well the Barons as the Citizens themselves, being both excommunicate, caused all the Church dores to be opened, and the service to be song, and the sayde

Lewes was in all pointes fit for their hands.

It chaunced about this time, that the Vicount of Melun, a verye noble man of the realme of Fraunce, which came bether with Ludowike to fall deadly sicke at London, and also mooued in conscience to call certayne of the Englishe Barons vnto him, suche as were there appointed to the custody of that Citie, and thus he sayde vnto them. I lament your sorowfull case, and pittie with my hart the destruction that is comming towards you and your Countrie. The daungerous snares which are prepared for your vtter confusion, are hidden from you, you doe not beholde them, but take you heede of them in Agood warnyng. tyme. Prince Ludowike hath sworne a great othe, and. xvj. of his Erles and noble men are of counsell with hym, that if he obteyne the Crowne of England, he will banishe all them then of service and deprive them of lands & goodes, as many as he findeth now to go against their liege king, and are traytours to his noble person: And because you shall not take this tale for a fable, I assure you on my faith living now at the mercy of God on my death bed, that I was one of them, which was sworne to the same. I have great conscience thereof, and therefore I geue you thys warning, I pittie poore Englande, which hath beene so noble a Region, that nowe it is come to extreme miserie. And when he with teares had lamented it a space, he turned againe vnto them and sayde: my friends, I counsayle you earnestly to looke to your selues, and to prouide remedie in tyme, least it come vpon you vnwares. Your king for a season hath kept you vnder: But if Lewes preuayle, he will put you from all. Of two extreme euilles, choose the more easie, and kepe that secrete which I have tolde you of good will. With that he gave over and dethemselues betrapped every way, and to be in exceding great daunger. And this dayly A greate plague augmented that feare which then came vpon the Barons: They were extremely hated of the Pope and his Legates, every weeke came vpon them newe excommunications. Dayly realmed detriments they had besydes in they possessions and goodes, in their landes and houses, come and cattell, wives and children, so that some of them were driven to such nede that they were enforsed to seeke prayes and bootyes for susteyning their miserable lyues. For looke what Prince Lodouicke obteyned by his warres either territories or Castelles, he gave them all to the French men in spight of their heades, and sayd, that they were but Traytours, lyke as they had warning before, which grieued them worst of all. At the last they perceyuyng that in seeking to advoyde one mischiefe, they were ready to fall into another much worsse: They began to cast their wittes together, consenting to submit themselves wholy and humbly to their late souereigne Lorde king Iohn. And for that they were somewhat in doubt of their lyues, for the treason before committed, many of the friendes of them, which were of most credite with him, made sute for them. So were a great number of them pardoned, after instant and great sute made for them.

And here I thinke mete to put in remembraunce such certeine seuerall matters as happened to be done in this Realme, in all the tyme and processe of the former history, which of purpose I deferred, because I thought best and most comodious for the reader to have the whole story of this king Iohn or rather his tragedy together and in one place, then in several yeres to have set out the same in sundry partes as they chaunced. And therefore nowe I will returne to the order that I kept from the first yere of this king vnto the fift yere of his reigne, where I began with the story aforesayde, in the yere of our Lorde a thousand two hundreth and three.

In the. vj. yere of his reigne (as sayth Fabian) at Oxenfoord in Suffolke was taken in the sea a monstruous fishe, which was in the forme and shape of a man, and was kept sixe monethes aliue vpon the land, and fed with rawe fleshe and fishe. And because they could have no speach of it, they cast it into the sea againe.

And in this yere both the Welsh men, and Irishe men rebelled, for that as some write that the king would have set taskes vpon them to have ayded him against the French king. And after he had pacified the Welshe men, he was compelled to demaund an ayde and taske of all England for the quieting of Irelande. And besyde that taske he demaunded of the white Monkes of England sixe thousande Markes, the which they denyed, makyng their excuse by their generall head, wherewith the King was sore displeased, and at his returne out of Irelande, he sore troubled and vexed them, and tooke of them much more then he required first, and caused many of the Monkes to forsake both their houses and the realme. And after that he had prepared his armie and all thinges that belonged to the same, he with a great number of shippes sayled into Ireland and shortly subdued them, and settyng all things in good order, he returned againe into England:

In the. viij. yere of his reigne, and the first day of the moneth of October his first sonne Henry by name was horne by Isabell his seconde wife at Winchester.

In the. ix. yere of his reigne, he graunted to the city of London, that where before tyme the same Citie was ruled by two Baylifes, that now they should elect among themselves a Maior and two Shirifes, which should have the rule and governaunce of the sayd Citie, and from thence foorth the name of Baylifes should ceasse.

Some write that the cause of this alteration of Officers was, because the purueyers for the kinges housholde, beyng then a great dearth of corne, would have taken vp of the provision of the Citie to serve the king withall: The which thing Roger Winchester and Edmond Hardell then Baylifes, would in no wise suffer them to do: Wherevpon the king taking great displeasure with them, deprived them of their offices, and afterwardes committed them to warde: But yet beyng at the length pacified againe, in the steede of two Baylifes, he gave the Citizens aucthoritie yerely to choose amongest themselves a Maior and two Shirifes, which should have the government of the Citie: The first Major was Henry Fitz aleyn, and the first Shirifes, Peter Duke, and Thomas Neele.

And in the. x. yere, London bridge which before was made of Timber and repayred by a Colledge of Priestes, was nowe begonne to be builded of stone.

Nowe to conclude, in the xvij. and last yere of his reigne, the Barons submitted themselues vnto him as is abouesayde in the ende of the story, and then Kinge Iohn with a great armye went into Suffolke and Norffolke, and there hee afflicted suche as had sworne to his enemies, with great and grieuous mischiefe. After that, he destroyed the two Abbeyes of Peterborough, and Crowland for the great treasons which they also had wrought against him, and so he departed from thence to Lincolneshire. And in this yere the. xvij. day of July dyed Pope Innocent the thirde, and was buryed in a Citic called Perusum, in Italy, where as he had trauayled to make a peace between the Genouayes, and the Pyses, for his awne commoditie and advauntage. After him succeded one Cintius, otherwise called Honorius the thirde, a man of very great age, yet lived he in the Papacie ten yeres and a halfe and more. When this was once knowen in Englande, a great rejoyce had all they which were king Iohns enemyes, speciallye the priestes: yet had they small cause as will appere hereafter. They noysed it all the realme ouer, that this new Pope would set a new order, and not rule thinges as the other Pope did: thinking thereby, that he would have done all thinges to their commoditie, but they founde it otherwise, for he made all them which were excommunicate to pay double and treble, before they could be restored againe to their former lyuinges.

Simon Swinestede a Monke poysoned king

And in the same selfe yere, King Iohn came to Swinestedes Abbey, not farre from Lyncolne, he rested there two dayes, where as certeyne wryters report that he was most trayterously poysoned, by a Monke of the same Abbey, beyng of the order of Saint Barnard, called Simon Swynested, and as Caxton sayth in his booke called fructus temporum and Polichronicon also sayth the same, the aforesayde Monke named Simon, hearyng the king vpon an occasion to talke of breade, should say that if he lived a yere lenger. he would make that lofe of breade beyng then of the value of one halfepeny woorth twelve pence, meaning that he would so persecute his rebellious people, that he would not leave one of them to be the owner of a plough. The Monke heeryng the king thus speake, conceyued of the king a very euill opinion, insomuch that forthwith the Monke went to his Abbot shewing him the whole matter, and what he was mynded to do. He alleged for himselfe the prophecie of Cayphas, saiying: it is better that one man dye, then all the people should perishe. I am well content, sayth he, to die & to become a martyr, so that I may vtterly destroy this Tyraunt. With that the Abbot wept for gladnesse, and much commended his feruent zeale as he toke it. The Monke then beyog absolued of his Abbot for doyng of this act aforehande, went secretly into a Gardeyne vpon the backesyde. and findyng there a most venemous toade, he so pricked him, and pressed him with his penne knife, that he made him vomit all the povson that was within him. This done, he conveyed it into a cup of Wine, and with a smilyng and flatteryng countenance he sayd thus to the king, if it shall lyke your Princely Maiestie, here is such a Cup of Wine as ye neuer dranke before in all your life tyme, I trust this wassall shall make all England glad. And with that he dranke a great draught, the king pledging him. The Monke anone after went to the Farmory, and there dyed, his guttes gushing out of his belly, and had continually from thence forth three Monkes to sing Masses for his soule, confirmed by their generall Chapter. The king within shorte space after, feelyng great griefe in bys body, asked for Simon the Monke, and aunswere was made that he was departed this lyfe: Then God haue mercy vpon me (sayde the king) I suspected as muche. With that he commaunded his Chariot to be brought, for he was not able to ryde. So went he from thence to Slaford Castell, and from thence to Newarke vpon Trent, and there within lesse then three dayes he dyed, when he had reigned. xvij. yeres. vj. monethes and odde dayes, and was honourably buryed at Worcester, with all his armed men attendyng vpon the buryall.

The death of king lohn.

King

King Iohn thus departing as is abouesaid, left behind him foure sonnes, and three The discription daughters. First Henry who succeded him in the same kingdome, the second, Richard of king loins. king of Almaine, & third, William of Valentia, the fourth Guydo Disnay. He had also another sonne, who after was made Bishop. Of his daughters, first was Isabell maried to Frederick the Emperor, the secod maried to Willia Marshal erle of Worcester, the third to v erle of Leicester.

Roger Houeden sayth, that this king Iohn was a mightie and valiaunt prince, but not fortunate as many were. Not altogether valike to Marius & noble Romain, he tasted fortune both wayes, but much in mercy. In warres sometime he won, & sometime againe he lost: He was also very bounteous & liberal vnto straungers, but to his awne people, for their daily treasons sake, he was a great oppressor, for he trusted more to foreynes then to them.

HENRIE THE THIRDE.

CO soone as king Iohn was dead and buryed, as is sayde before, the Princes, Lordes and Barons, so many as were of his part, aswell of Straungers as of them that were borne here, by counsaile of the Legate Gualo, gathered themselves together, and all with one consent proclaymed Henry his sonne beyng then of the age of. ix. yeres, for king of this realme of England. And for that onely cause was king Ihon buryed at Worcester, and not by testament, for that oneley place of the realme in those dayes appered most sure and safe, where they which were friendes to the Crowne, might best deliberate with them selues in that matter, what was best to be done. So went they from thence to the towne of Gloucester, with William Marshall Erle of the same, and there was this yong king annoynted and crowned king by the Legate Gualo, assisted by Peter Bishop of Winchester, and Ioseline the Bishop of Bathe, with other which then were in the realme, and called Henry the thirde, and this was done in the feastfull day of the Apostles Simon and Iude. 1216. After the which coronation he was committed to the tuicion of Henry Bishop of Winchester aforsayd, or as Polidore writeth, to William Erle of Gloucester.

The Court of Rome at that tyme, not beyng slacke in their affayres, sent heether with all spede, and commaunded that they should manfully stande by the yong king, and to defende England with armour and his excommunications against Lewes the French kinges sonne, and his complices. And then Honorius the Pope not onely confirmed his Legate Gualo, or Swalo, but also committed to his discretion, all that apperteyned to that office of his, no appellations to the contrary admitted. Vpon this aucthoritie, the Legate beyng bolde, compelled the Prelates of Englande to be sworne true to the yong king: and those that refused to take that othe, he punished very sore. And Henry or after some writers Peter, Bishop of Winchester, was not all behinde in that commission for his parte, who put a gricuous taxe vpon the beneficed men and Priestes of his diocesse, to helpe the king in his warres against Lewes, which was not all amisse. Such as were great beneficed men, and might well pay, those Gualo reserved to his awne aucthoritie, and in the ende for great summes of money dispensed with them. Some that were obstinate and frowarde, he disgraded: some he excommunicated, and sent to Rome for their absolutions, not leaving one Priest vnpunished that had taken part with Lewes, having every where his searchers and spyes to finde them out.

And in this time, divers of the chiefe of the Barons forsooke Lewes the French kinges sonne, namely the Erles of Penbrooke, and of Chester, with all their retinue, and submitted themselves to the yong king.

Sone after the coronation of the king, certaine commissions were sent out into all places of England to gather strength of men to withstand the aforesayde Lewes, and to put him and his Frenchmen with other Alyaunts out of the land, which then had vnder their rule and custody, the Castelles of Berkhamsted, of Hartford and dyuers other. And for that Lewes would not cease of his warre and returne into Fraunce, therefore theaforesayde Legate Gualo accurssed him first by name, and after all such as him maintained or fauoured in this warre against king Henry. Then theaforenamed Erles accompanied with Wylliam Erle Marshall of Englande, Wylliam le Bruize Erle of Ferreys with many other went to Lyncoln, and wanne the Towne vpon the straungers, where was slaine a Frenchman called Erle of Perches with many other Souldiours. And there was taken of Englishmen, Serle Erle of Winchester, and Homffrey de Bohan Erle of Hartforde with dyuers other men of name.

as some called him, ye Popes Legate curseth Lewes the French kinges sonne.

Lewlyn prince of Wales.

And in this while Lewlyn or Lluellen Prince of Wales, for that he ayded the parte of Lewes was accurssed and his lande enterdicted.

After the Towne of Lyncolne was thus wonne from the Frenchmen, Lewes with the other parte of his Souldiours, drewe towarde London: for so much as worde was brought to him that his father had sent him a new company of Souldiours the which should land in England shortly. Truth it was that such an ayde of Souldiours was made by the French king, and committed to a Captain called Eustace the Monke, the which was encountered vpon the Sea, with a captaine or Master of the five Portes called Hubert at Burgh, and gave to him battayle, and discomfited hym at length, and sent the head of the sayde Eustace vnto the king.

made capitaine of an army.

Eustace a Monk

When Lewes heard of these tydings, and considered howe daylie hys strength minished, he was more inclinable vnto peace: so that in conclusion, he toke money sayth Reynulph and yeelded vp hys Castelles and strengthes which he helde, and after was assoyled, and so returned into Fraunce: But of this money that Lewes receyued there are dyuers opinions. The Englishe booke named it a thousand Marke, and the Frenche booke sayth. xv. thousand Marke.

Now, after that the straungers were avoided, then inquisition was made to know what persons had favoured the partie of Lewes against the king, and there was founde a great multitude, of the which the king pardoned a great number of the laye Fee: But the spiritual were put to such fines, that they were compelled to lay that they had to pledge to please the king, and besides that, to sue to Rome to be assoyled.

Reynulph Erle

to lerusalem.

And this yere Reynulph Erle of Chester, for considerations him mouing, toke his iourney into the holy land. But one writer sayth, that he tooke that iourney vpon him, bicause he had contrary to his allegeance made homage vnto Lewes aboue named, and for malice which he bare vnto king Iohn, entended at the time of that homage doyng, to have made the sayde Lewes king of Englande.

And at this tyme was a Parliament holden at London, wherein was graunted two shillyngs of euerye Plough lande, through Englande, which was for the charge that he before had with Lewes at warre. And this Parliament king Edwards lawes were again restored, & Magna carta confirmed.

This yere also king Henry began to build the new worke of the Church of Westminster, which was that part where now all the kings are buried in.

This yere Alexander king of Scottes maryed dame Iane the sister of king Henry. And this yere was great harme done in England by violence of a whirle winde, and fiery dragons were seene flight in the agre.

Shortly

Shortly after proclamations were made in London, and throughout all England, that all straungers should advoyde by Michaelmasse next following, except such as came with Marchandise, and to make sale of their wares under the kinges safecondust. Which Proclamation was chiefly made to advoyde Foulkes de Brent and his complices, which kept the Castell of Bedford against the kinges will and pleasure.

Of this Foulkes it is written by Polidore and others, howe that about this season, he assemblying together a great rowte of Ruffians and Robbers issued out of the Castell of Bedford which he then helde, and wasted and destroyed all the Countrie, with the townes and villages thereabout, but specially the towne and Abbey of Saint Albon.

This yere also king Henry was the seconde tyme crowned at Westminster the. xvij. day King Henry of May. And the sayd yere Reynulph Erle of Chester returned out of the holy lande, crowned against the second time.

and began to buylde the Castelles of Chartley and Beston.

At this tyme also was holden a generall counsaile of the Bishops, and Clergie of the Realme at Oxford. In the tyme of which counsayle, a man was taken, which shewed himselfe to be Christ, and hee reprodued manye abuses, which the Clerkes at those dayes A counterfeater vsed, as sayth Fabian. And to approve that he was Iesus the sonne of God, and that he was come to reforme those abuses, he shewed the Carectes and woundes in his bodye, handes and feete, lyke vnto Iesus that was nayled on the Crosse. Then was he examined, and found a false dissembler: Wherefore by the judgement and aucthoritie of that counsaile, he was judged to be nayled vnto the Crosse, and so delivered to the executioners, the which at a place called Adurbury, or Alburbury, nayled him vnto a Crosse vntill he was dead.

This yere the men of Caithnes in Scotland burned their bishop, because he curssed them for not paiving of their Tithes. For which cause the king of Scottes did hang foure hundreth of the cheefe doers, gelded their children, and dishenerited the Erle of that Countrie. Cooper.

And in this tyme there was a great conspiracie in London against king Henry, made by one Constantyne the sonne of Arnulph, with the which conspiracie y king was so offended that he had thought to have overthrowne the walles of the Citie of London; But shortly after, the sayde Constantine was taken and condemned, and was hanged drawen and quartered: This Constantine was borne in the Citie of London, & taken by Hubert Brough, who offered the same Brough at the tyme of his taking, to have let him scape xv. thousand markes: But Brough refused it.

This yere Iohn king of Ierusalem came into Englande, and required an ayde of king Henry to recouer againe Ierusalem, which the Turkes had wonne from him: But shortly he returned without any great comfort.

This yere the king began the foundation of Sarisbury Minster, and laide the first stone of the Church.

And this yere the king layd siege vnto the Castell of Bedford that Foulkes de Brent had so long holden by strength: This siege began youn the Euen of the Assention of our Lorde, and so continued vntill the day of the Assumption of our Lady next following. In the whiche tyme many strong assaultes were made, and great losse of men on both parties. But finally, about the aforesayde day of Assumption, it was taken by fierce assault: Where in was taken Foulkes de Brent, and about the number of. lxxx. Souldiours, whereof the more part were put to death, and the sayde Foulkes after he had lyen a certaine of tyme in prison, was for his finance delivered, and banished the land. And in this time came the Gray Friers first into England.

About this time a Parliament was holden, in the which was graunted to the king and his heyres kinges of this realme by the Barony of England the warde and mariage of their

This law for wardes was first made by king Edgar, in the yere of our Lorde. 962. But the mariages of them was added by king Edwarde the Confessor in the yere of our VOL. I. Kk Lorde, Lorde, 1056. And here is to be much lamented that Wardes are bought and solde as commonlye as are Beastes, and mariages are made with them that are many tymes very vngodly, for dyuerse of them beyng of yong and tender yeres, are forced to judge by another mannes affection, to see with another mannes eye, and say yea with another mannes tongue, and finally consent with another mannes hart. For none of these sences be perfited to the parties in that minoritie, and so the election beyng vnfree, and the veres varipe, eche of them almost of necessitie must hate the other, whome yet they have had no judgement to loue. And certeinely the common bergaynyng and selling of them is to be abhorred, beside the shamefull polling that many vse, which if they consent not to suche as are their sellers, they shall be handeled as the common saiying is, lyke Wardes. and striped almost out of al they have, when the same should do them most good. God graunt the Maiestrates maye take some good order therein, for surely it is nedefull, for many do so vse them, as the same is not sufferable in a Christian realme. For who seeth not daylye, what innumerable inconveniences, devorces, yea and some murders have of suche mariages (or rather no mariages at all) proceded, the present time sheweth to many examples, which minister sufficient cause for vs to bewayle the same: But the greatest iniury is to God who hath made that free, namely matrimony, which the lawe of the realme maketh bonde, the redresse whereof belongeth onely to the Prince, in whome like as the same God hath caused movertues to meete than in any other creature of her callyng, so we doubt not, but that his Godhead will when his good pleasure shall be, vouchsafe not onely to preserve her highnes with the encrease of vertue and wisedome, but also to move her heart to the Godly redresse of these and many other enormities and abuses, to the great comfort of all her graces louvng and obedient subjectes.

This yere Richarde the brother of king Henrie, did very valiauntly in Fraunce, and ouerthrewe great numbers of Frenche men, and recouered Poyters, and kept the Gascovnes in due obedience.

In the. x. yere of the reigne of this king, the Plees of the Crowne were pleded in the Tower of London. And at this tyme the souldyours that kept dyucrse Castelles and holdes in Poyters in Fraunce, were compelled to yelde and geue vp the same into the hands of Lewes the French king, which of long tyme before belonged vnto the kinges of England.

The king at this time bearing great fauour to the Citie and Citizens of London, graunted vnto them the Shriualtie of London and Middlesex in Fee farme for three hundred pounde by the yere. And he graunted also that all the weares in the Thames should be plucked vp and destroyed for euer. And also by his Charter ensealed, he graunted that the Citizens of London shoulde passe tolle free throughout Englande. And that if any Citizen were constreyned in any Citie, Borough or Towne in Englande to pay any tolle, that then the Shrifes of London to attache any man comming to London of the sayde den are tell free Citie Borough or Towne where such tolle was payde, and hym and his goodes to with holde and keepe untill the Citizens of London were restored of all suche money as they payde for the sayde tolle, with all costes and dammages susteyned for the same. And the same yere also he graunted to the sayde Citizens of London free wareyn, that is to say, that the Citizens have free libertie of hunting in a certeyne circuite aboute London.

> This yere the king confirmed the Charter and liberties of the Citie of London, & also certain liberties and privileges he graunted to the Shriefes of London, as havyng of Clercks and other,

> Also about this time a Parliament was holden at London, in the which it was ordered that the English Grote should be coyned of a certaine weight and of the one side the kings picture, and one the other side a crosse as large fully as the Grote, to advoyd clippyng. And at thys tyme was vsed to be couned that standard and finenesse that was called sterling money, which before as ye maye reade was first coyned in the Towne of Sterlyng in Scotland, and therefore it taketh the name of Sterlyng.

Wherefore the king sent ouer his brother Richarde Erle of Cornewal shortly after, and landed at Burdeaux with foure hundred Shippes. But some other writers saye, that the king himselfe sayled with an armie into Briteyne against Lewes the french king, where after spoyling the Countrie, a peace was concluded betweene the sayde two inges.

At this time there was an order taken in the Citie of London that no Shriefe should continue in the Shriualtie lenger then one yere, the cause was, that they were had in suspicion to be great Brybers and takers of rewardes.

This yere was graunted to the king a fiftene of the temporaltie, and a disme and a halfe of the spiritualtie to recouer his landes lost in Normandie, Guyan and Poyteau. And about this time also Hubert of Burgh being then chiefe Iustice of England had displeased Hubert of Burgh the king in such wise, that he was compelled to flee the kings sight. And after by the la-chiefe Iustice of England fled bour of Bishyp Edmond of Pountney he was againe restored to the kings fauour. And at England.

this time in London, was great hurt done by fyre.

Vpon complaint brought before the king by the friendes of Lewlyn or Lluellen Prince of Wales, that Wylliam le Bruce should conspire against the king, or as some say, for that he kept vnlawfully the wyfe of the aforenamed Lewlyn, or Lluellen: he was after long imprisonment hanged. Also at this tyme dyed Reynulph Erle of Chester, Lyncolne Bruze haged. and Huntyngdon. And his sisters sonne named Iohn, sonne vnto the Erle of Anguish who was his heyre, and helde that Lordeship after him. This Iohn of most wryters is called Iohn Scot, for so much as his father was a Scot. This foresayde Reynulph had Iohn Scot. no childe, albeit he had foure sisters. The eldest was named Mawde, and was maried to Dauid Erle of Anguishe, and was mother to the aforesayde Iohn Scot. The seconde was named Hawes, and was maried vnto the Erle of Arundell, the thirde Agnes, which was maryed to the Erle of Darby. And the fourth named Mabely, which was maryed vnto the Erle of Winchester called Quinacie. This Reynulph dyed at Wallingforde, and was burved in the Chapter house of the Monkes of Chester, and ordeyned the aforenamed Scot to be his heyre, for that he would not have so noble a Lordeship run, or be deuided among so many distaues. And this yere dyed Maister Wethershed Archebishop of Cauntorbury, whose successour was Edmond of Pountney.

And at this time beganne great variaunce betweene the king and his Lordes, because he put out of his service certeyne Englishe men and trusted straungers aswell in his counsaile, as in other offices.

About this time the king began the foundation of the Hospitall of Saint John without the East gate of Oxforde.

This yere the king put from him the straungers, and restored the Englishmen to their offices: and the same yere also the Iewes dwellyng in Norwich were accused for steling of a child whom they purposed to have crucified.

And this yere Frederick the second of that name Emperour of Almain, maried the sister of king Henry named Isabell. In the which yere also fell wonderfull sore weather, with such thunder and lightnyng as the like had not bene sene. And there followed an earthquake to the great feare of the inhabitauntes of Huntyngdon.

This yere the king maryed Alianor the daughter of Raymond Erle of Prouince, and the bishop of Cantorbury maried them in his Church of Cantorbury. And shortly after she was crewned at Westminster as Queene of England, where in the fielde of Westminster now called Tothyll liyng at the west ende of the Church, were royall pastymes, and goodly Iustice kept by the space of. viij. dayes, w lange to the whenter of other and

About this time dyed Iohn Scot before named Erle of Chester without Issue: Wherefore the king consideryng the great Prerogatius belongyng to that Erledome, gaue vnto the sisters of Reynulph other possessions, and tooke the Erledome into his awne handes. This yere also Queene Elianor founded the hospitall of Saint Katheryns besydes the

Shortly after a Legate named Octobone came into England to reforme the Clergie, but the youth of the Clergie lyked him not, and it chaunced him that as he passed through Oxfoorde, the schollers picked a quarrell vnto his seruauntes, and fought with them, and slue one of them, and put the Legate in such feare, that for his sauegard he tooke the sate from Rome. Belfrey of Osney, and there held him vntill the kings ministers came from Abingdon, who with strength mixed with fayre wordes deliuered him, and conueyed him after with a conuenient companie to Wallyngforde, where he accursed the misdoers, and punished them in such wise, that the Regentes and maisters of that Vniuersity, were compelled in the ende, to go barefooted, through Chepe to Paules at London, and there to aske of him forgeuenesse, and had that trespasse with great difficultie so forgeuen.

And about this tyme, Sir Simon Mountford maryed the kinges sister, named Alianor countesse of Pembrooke, and he gaue with her to the sayde Sir Simond in the name of a

The yere following a Clercke of Oxford that feyned himselfe mad, and before tyme had espyed certeyne secret places of the kinges Court, came by a window toward the kinges Chamber, at his manor of Woodstocke, entendyng to haue slaine the king in his bed. But he was espied by a woman and taken and conveyed to Coventry, and there arrevned of that dede: Where after lawfull profes of his malicious entent made, he for the same, was there hanged, and drawen. Polidore wryteth that the king as hap was had chaunged his bed that night, and so escaped the daunger of the treason.

23 Edward called Lögshank named Edward the first borne at Westminster.

And this yere also the. xxvj. day of Iune was borne at Westminster, Edward that was after surnamed Longshanks, who after his father was king.

In the. xxv. yere of the reigne of this king, a Citizen of London whose name was Gerard Bat, which had bene chosen Maior of London, was chosen againe. And after his election, was presented vnto the king: But the king hauyng some information of his euyll dealyng the yere before, sayde that he would not admitte him to that office, vntill suche tyme as he came to Westminster, with which aunswere the sayde Gerard and his companye returned to London. It was not long after or the king came to Westminster, where accordyng to their duetie, they wayted to knowe his pleasure. Then the king called vnto him the sayd Maior, and after certeine questions to him ministred, he caused him to be sworne in his presence. After which othe, the king charged him by the vertue of the same, that he should not take of the bakers, Brewers, and other victuallers of the City fortie pound, which other of his predecessors, and he himselfe the last vere had done. And also that he incontinently after his commyng to London should restore vnto the sayd victuallers and other Citizens, al such money as he had with wrong in the former yere taken of the Commonaltie of the Citie. But because the sayde Gerard alleged for him certeine considerations, beseching the king to pardon him of that restitution: The king in displeasure swore a great othe that he should not that yere be Maior, nor at any tyme after. And so the Commons certefied of the kinges pleasure, chose in his place or steede

After this he sayled into Normandy with a goodly army to recouer Guyan, and other Countries, but returned without any good successe. And the same yere were first chosen within the Citie of London Aldermen, which then had the rule of the same, and of the se-Aldermen first uerall wardes thereof, and were then yerely chaunged, as nowe the Shirifes of London appointed in London.

The king this yere prepared a goodly armye, and sayled into Fraunce, and warred vpon the Frenche king. The cause of this warre (as sayth the French Chronicle) was made by the styrryng of a Frenche man, named the Erle of Marche, because he refused to doe homage to Alphons, brother of Lewes the tenth of that name, and surnamed, S. Lewes, then king of Fraunce.

This Lewes the yere before had maried his brother Alphons vnto the daughter of the Erle of Tolouse, and had geuen to his sayd brother the Erledome of Poyters, with all the landes of Aluerne. By reason whereof, he would have caused the sayde Erle of March to have done homage vnto the said Alphons for such landes as the sayd Erle helde of the Erledome of Poyters. But for that the sayd Erle knew well that the right of Guyan belonged to the king of England, he therefore, and for other aliaunces made betwene king Henry and him, refused the doyng of that homage, and after came to king Henry, and moued him to make warre vpon the French king. By reason whereof the king sayled ouer as aforesayde, and landed with a strong power at Burdeaux. And as the French Chronicle affirmeth, this Erle of Marche maryed the mother of this king Henry.

In this time the French king warred upon the landes of the Erle of March, and had wonne two Castelles of his, named Founteynes, and Villiers, with diverse other which I here omit. And when he had beaten downe some of them, and had manned some with newe Souldiours: he then went vnto a Castell named Mawcome, or Mawcoune, and brake a Bridge after him, because he was enformed that the king of England was nere vnto him. At the sayd bridge was a small skirmishe, and little harme done. Then the French king tooke the way ouer the river of Tharent, toward Tailborough, wasting and destroiving the Countrie as he went, and so foorth towarde the towne called Sainces. Nowe king Henry with his power made towarde him in all that he might. In kepyng this course the vauntgarde encountered with the Erle of Boleyn, which was vpon the Frenche kinges partie, and that time the Erle of Sainces, bare the banner of the Erle of Marches, beyng the vauntgard of the king. But betweene these two Erles was a sore fight, so that many vpon both parties were slaine, among the which the sayd Erle of Sainces was slaine. Then came on both strengthes on eyther syde, so that both the kinges fought in that battaile, and a great slaughter of men upon both sydes: But in the ende the Frenche men were victors, and tooke prisoners. xx. men of name, as knightes and men of higher degree, and three Clerckes of great fame and riches, besyde other to the number of fine hundreth meane people (as sayth the French booke.) But of these men of name, nor yet of the three Clerckes, no mencion is made what they payed for theyr raunsomes.

Then the Erle of March, by meane of his sonne, was reconciled to the French king, and restored to his landes, except three Castelles, which were named Mespyn, Cretainc. and Easterday, the which the French king reteyned in his possession. And sone after came vnto the French king the Lordes of the Castelles of Mirable, and of Mortaygne, submittyng themselues also vnto the kinges grace, besechyng him of pardon, that they had so to his high displeasure favoured his enemie the king of Englande. And after came in dyuerse other Lordes and Capitaines, that he was in possession of all the Countrie of

I have rehearsed the more of this Chronicle of Fraunce, to the entent that the readers may the better perceive the pride and boldnes of the French men, for in all their wrytyng, when they come to any matter that soundeth any thing to theyr honour, it is written at the length, and in most shewyng maner, to their honour and worship: But if it sound any thing to their dishonour, then shall it be abreviated and hid, that the truth shall not be knowen, for they ever delight to tell of winnyng, but never of losyng. Now after this euill fortine, king Henry returned againe into England.

Then he appealed from Innocents Court, to Christes awne throne.

This yere the Maior and Aldermen, and Citizens of London, who in tymes past were wont to ryde by lande the morowe after the day of Simon and Iude to present their Maior at Westminster where he tooke his othe, did nowe take Barges, euery company a scuerall Barge decked with Banners, Streamers, and Flagges very richly, and so rowed by water to Westminster, and vse the same still to this day:

But this Bishop boldely denyed his admission, and wrote vnto Innocent the Pope againe, that he could not, nor woulde receyue any suche vnto cure of soule, that could not rule himselfe. Therefore this Robert was summoned to apere before the Pope, and therepon accurssed.

This yere also the king summoned a Parliament at London, in the which it was enacted that a coyne of a certeine weight of siluer called a grote should be stamped, and that it should have on the one syde the picture of the kinges face, and on the other a crosse extended in length to the extreme partes therof, to the entet there should be no deceyt vsed by diminishing or clipping y same.

Shortly after the king gaue in mariage his daughter Mary, but some called her Margaret, vnto Alexander the king of Scottes, at the Citie of Yorke, and there did receyue of him homage for the kingdome of Scotland, in like maner as many of his progenitors King Henry maryed his had done dyucrse and many tymes before, as in this worke hath and shall appere.

This yere was a great wynde vpon the day of Simon and Iude, which did much harme scots, who did

And at this tyme, the water of the Thames sprang so high that it drowned many houses about the water syde, by meane whereof much marchaundise was perished and lost. And Citizens of Lonthis yere also the king graunted vnto the Citizens, that hereafter they should paye no ska-don are free of toll & skauage uage or tolle for Beastes by them bought, as they had vsed before tyme.

And nowe sayth Fabian, by the procurement of Sir Richarde Erle of Cornewall, for displeasure which he bare towarde the Citic, for exchaunge of certeine ground to the same belonging. The king vnder colour that the Maior had not done due execution vpon the Bakers for lackyng of theyr syzes, seazed the liberties of the Citie. That is to say, The liberties of that where the Major and Communaltie of the Citic had by the kinges graunt the Citie to ferme, with dynerse customes and offices for a stynted and an asserteyned summe of money: nowe the king placed officers in them at his will and pleasure, the which were accomptable vnto him for all reuenues and profites that grewe within the sayd Citie. But within foure dayes following, the Citizens agreed with the sayd Erle, for sixe hundreth Money salueth marke. After which agreement with him concluded, they were againe restored to their many sores. liberties.

In this tyme and yere was Sir Edwarde the kinges sonne and heyre maryed vnto Alia Edward the nor the kinges sister of Spaine, or as some other write, to the daughter of Alphons king kinges eldest some maryed to To whom the king his father gaue the Principalitie of Wales, with the go-Ahanory uernance of Guyan and Irelande, whereof beganne that the kinges of Englande ordeyn-kinges sister of. ed their eldest sonnes Princes of Wales. And in the same yere the king and Queene landed at Douer, and so came to London, and were lodged at the Tower, where he sent for the Major and Shirifes of London, with whome he reasoned greuously for the escape of one called Iohn Gate: This Iohn had murdered a Prior allyed to the king. The Major excused himselfe, and burdened the Shirifes therewith, saiying that viito them belonged the keeping of all the Prisonnes and prisoners that were within the Citic of London. And so the Major returned home: But the Shirifes remayned there as prisoners by the space of a moneth after or more. And in their places, and for them were chosen Stephen Oystergate, and Henry Walmode. But howe the olde Shirifes passed out of the kinges. daunger, I know not.

This yere the Ladie Alianor wife vnto Prince Edward came through London, where she was honourably receyued of the Citizens, and the Citie hanged with riche clothes of Silke and Golde. And there was present the Prince her husband, who conveyed her

And not long after, the king seazed the liberties of London for certeyne money which the Queene claymed for her right of the Citizens, so that in the ende they payed vnto her Money maketh foure hundreth Markes and had theyr libertyes againe restored.

And about this time were brought vnto Westminster an hundreth and two Iewes from lewes condemn- Lincolne, the which were also accused of the crucifiyng of a childe at Lincolne in despite of Christes religion, which Iewes were after sent vnto the Tower of London. 1256

A folkemot was an assebly of declared vnto

This yere certeyne Lordes that came out of Germany made their homage vnto Sir Richarde Erle of Cornewall and brother vnto the king, the which as then stoode king of Almaine, and of Romaines. And shortly after he departed from the kinges Court, and sped him with his wife, and Sir Henry his sonne vnto the sea syde, and after tooke shippyng in Iarnesey, and landed at Dordrite in Holland. And soone after, he was crowned king of the Romaynes in the Citie of Aquis Granum.

And now the kyng of England set forward toward Wales for to subdue Lewlyn or Lluellen the sonne of Griffyth the which with his Welsh men rebelled against the king, Prince of Wales because Sir Edwarde his sonne, to whome he had a little before geuen the Erledome of Chester, would have chaunged some of their skittishe condicions. And for to bring his purpose the better about, he sent for an army of Souldiours into Ireland, and tarved for their commyng at his Castell of Brecknocke. But the yere passed so farre on, that he could do no good that yere, and therefore returned to London.

And this present yere, where there had beene a great and long sute between the Abbot of Waltham, and the Citizens of London, about certein toll to be payde at the fayre there holden: It was agreed that from thence foorth the Citizens of London should come and go toll free, and that the distresses taken for the same should be restored, and if any were perished by keping, then the Abbot to make them good.

Nowe approched great vexation and trouble to the Citie and Citizens of London, as after shall appere. It so chaunced by the meanes of some euil member, that bare no good will to the Citizens of London, that a certeine grieuous Bill of complaint was made and written in a great roll of Perchment, and the same Perchement was enclosed in greene waxe, and was cast or left in the kings Wardrobe at § Castell of Windsore, into the which Wardrobe, the kinges grace did often vse to come, & in this roll was written certeine most heynous articles and complaints against the Maior and rulers of the Citie, for the misgouernement of the same. And this Bill the king found, and after he had read and perused the contentes thereof he grewe into great displeasure therewith. And therevpon he sent Mancell one of his Iustices to London, and there commaunded him the next holyday folowyng, that by the kings aucthoritie he should call a folckmote at Paules crosse, people to say yea where then was present Sir Richard de Clare Erle of Gloucester, and diverse other of or nay to that which should be the kinges counsaile. In which place the sayde Iohn Mancell caused the sayde roll to be read to the people that were there assembled, and after the readyng thereof, he stoode vp and shewed the people the kinges pleasure and minde was that they should be ruled with justice, and that the liberties of the Citie should be mainteyned in euery poynt. And if the king might know those personnes that had wronged the Communaltie of the Citie, they should bee gricuously punished to the example of other. And then the sayd Iohn

Mancell charged openly the Major, to commaund that every Alderman in hys warde should the morrow following, assemble his Wardmote. And that all those Wardmotes A Wardmote is should assemble in one place, and chose of themselves without any counsell or advise of the people of any of their Aldermen. xxxvj. persons, and them to present before the Lordes and him, the Warde for at the same houre the next day in the Bishops Pallace at Paules. Then vpon the morrow said before of a all thing was done according to his common density. all thing was done according to his commaundment. And when the sayde. xxxvj. per- folkemote. sons were presented before the saide Iohn Mancell, Henry Baa and other Iustices: the sayde Mancell sayde vnto them that they vpon their othe should certefie all such persons as they knewe guiltie in the Articles before shewed vnto the commonaltie, wherevnto the sayde. xxxvi. Citizens aunswered, that it was contrarie to their liberties to be sworne so many for any matter of trespasse betweene the king and any of the Citizens, wherefore they required a sparying. With which aunswere the sayde Iohn Mancell being discontented, warned them to appere before the kings Counsayle at the Guildhall vpon the morrow following, where they kept their day, and thether came the sayde Iustices, Iohn Mancell and Henry Baa, Sir Henrye Wengham Chauncelour of England, Philip Louell vnder treasorer, and dyuers other of the kings counsayle.

Then the sayde Iohn Mancell, exhorted the sayde persons to be sworne, and vsed vnto them many perswasions, but all was in vayne, for they excused themselves still, that it was contrarie to their othe, and against the libertie of the Citie. Wherefore the kings counsell departed from the hall somewhat disconteted, & shewed vnto the king the demeanor of the said Citizens.

Vpon Candelmas even, the Maior being warned that the king should come to Westmynster, he with the more parte of the Aldermen came vnto knights Bridge, and houed there to salute the king, and to know his further pleasure. But when the king came neere The king cothat place, and heard of their being there, he sent vnto them a Squire of houshold, and maunded the Major out of his charged them that they shoulde not presume to come in his sight: wyth which message, sight. they beyng greatly discomfited, returned home to the Citie.

Shortly after, Mighell Tony and Adam Basyng returned from the Courte, whome the Major before had sent thether, that by such friendes as they could make to vnderstande the cause of the kings wrath and displeasure. They brought worde, that the king was well minded vnto the Citie, but he was in full purpose to have such persons chastised, that had oppressed the commonaltie of the same.

The next day following came vnto the Guyldhall, Iohn Mancell with other of the kings counsell the which to the people there assembled, vttered manye fayre and pleasaunt wordes: among the which he declared that the kings minde and will was, to correct all suche persons as had oppressed the commonaltie of this his deerest beloued Citie: and asked of the commons whether they woulde be agreeable to the same: who incontinently beyng a multitude whereof many were without discretion, and knew full little what that question meant, cryed, yee, yee, yee. And after that graunt thus had of the Commons, The answerc of the sayde Iohn Mancell discharged the Maior, Shirifes, and Chamberleyn of their offices The liberties of and delyuered the custody thereof, vuto the Constable of the Towre, & put in the rome the Citie against of the Shirifes, Michaell Tony and Iohn Adrian. And moreouer all rolles and tolles and seazed tallages before made, were deliuered vnto the sayde Iohn Mancell, the which he there sealed and deliuered them vnto the Chamberleyne. Now when the Commons had well marked and considered whereaboutes he went, they returned home to their houses altogether confounded and amazed.

Then the sayd Iohn Mancell with diverse of the kinges counsaile, kept their dayly courtes, and called before them. xij. wardes of the Citie. Of every of the which xij. wardes was taken three men, so that of those, xij, wards there were, xxxvj, men empaneled and sworne for to enquire of the aforesayd articles, and what personnes in the Citie had offended them. This Court thus kept and holden at the Guyldhall, no man was called to aunswere, nor no question put vnto any person by the sayd enquest, or by any VOL. I.

other. And soone after, that is to say vpon the first Sonday in Lent, the Maior, Aldermen and Shirifes, with the sayd enquest, and foure men of every ward were charged to appere at Westminster, before the king; at which appearance they were countermaunded vntill Howethe Major the next day following. At which season they coming into the kings Exchequer found and Citizens are sitting there, the Erles of Gloucester and of Warwick, John Mancell, Henry Baa Iustices, the Constable of the tower, then Custos of the Citie, & diverse other of the kings counsaile. Then was called Raufe Hardell that vere Major, Nicholas Bat, Nicholas Fitz Iosue, Mathewe Bokerell, John Tolesham and John le Minour, Aldermen. Then sayd John Mancell, that the king by his lawes and inquisition of the Citizens of the Citie, had found them culpable, that they had wronged and hurt the communaltie of his Citie by diverse meanes, as by the sayde inquisition apered, and forthwith caused it to be read before And when the more part thereof was read he sayd vnto them, thus may you see that the communaltie of the Citie hath bene by you most grieuously oppressed, and by your meanes and counsaile the common weale of the same destroyed as by alteryng of the tolles and other good auncient customes, turnying them to your singuler advauntage and lucre. All which matters the sayde Raufe and his company denyed, and that the commons was not by any such meanes by them nor none of them grieved or hurt, and that they offered to be justified and judged by the law and customes of the Citie.

> Then Henry Baa Iustice asked them whether they would holde the aduenture of the enquirie that they had heard read before, or else stande vpon the saiying of the other wardes, that had not yet bene sworne, but they kept them to their first aunswere. Then John Mancel demanded of the Major what was their law and custome. The Major aunswered and sayd, that for trespasse of a Citizen done against the king, he should defende him by xij. of the sayd Citizens, and for murder and sleaving of a man by xxx. Citizens, and for trespasse against a straunger by the other of sixe and himselfe. Then after many reasons made by the sayde Iohn Mancell, and also by the Maior and Aldermen, day was geven them againe to appere the next day following before the king and his counsaile.

> Vpon the day following, the king with many of his Lordes sittyng in the said Exchequer, the aforesaid inquisition was read. And that done the Maior and Aldermen were called by name, and two Aldermen more, which the day before were not called, that is to say, Arnold Thedmare, & Henry Walmode.

When Raufe Hardell had heard the king speake in the matter, he tooke such feare, that he and Nicholas Bat without any farther answere, put them in the kinges grace, sauyng to them their liberties and Fraunchises of the Citie. But the other sixe besought the king of his rightwisenesse, that they might then be demed after the lawes and customes of the Citie. Then was layde to their charge, that besyde many wronges by them done to the king, and to the communaltie of the Citie: they had altered the kinges Beame, and ordered it to the advantage of themselves, and of the riche men of the Citie. Wherevnto the parties aunswered and said, that the alteration of the Beame was not done by them onely, but by the aduice and consent of fine hundreth of the best of the Citie. For where before the Weyer vsed to leane his draught toward the Marchandice, so that the buyer had by that meane. x. or. xij. pound in a draught to his advauntage, and the seller so much disaduauntage, nowe for indifferencye and equalitie of both persons or Marchauntes, was orderned that the Beame should stande vpright in the cleft thereof, enclining to neyther partie, as it doth in weiging of Golde and Silver, and the buyer to have of the seller allowed vnto him for all thinges * foure pounde of the hundreth.

After these reasons and sundrie other by them made, the king commaunded that in the morning next following, a folkemote should be called at Paules Crosse, and so that court was dissolued, and the Maior and the other returned to London.

The next day the folkemote beyng assembled at Paules crosse, these sixe Aldermen heeryng the murmuration of the common people, and knowyng that neither the Aldermen, nor the worshipfull of the Citie, should have any saiying in the matter, fearing their cause,

This is that allowance yt Grocers call Cloffe.

A folkemote againe called. wet into a Canons house of Paules, where at that time the sayd John Mancell and other sent from the king tarved the assembling of the people, and shewed vnto them that they entended not to pleade any lenger with the king, but were contented to put themselves fully in the kinges grace and mercye, sauvng alway to them and all other Citizens their liberties and Fraunchise of the Citie.

After the which agreement the sayd Iohn Mancell with other came vnto the Court of Folkemote, where was rehearsed vnto the People a faire and pleasant tale, promising to them their liberties should be wholy & inniplately preserved by the king, with many other thinges to the great comfort of them. And lastly it was demaunded of them, whether the law and custome was such as was the day before rehearsed or no? Wherevnto like vndiscrete and valearned men, they cryed and aunswered rudely, nay, nay, nay, notwithstand-Rude and rushe yng the sayde lawe and custome had before this time beene vied tyme out of mynde. to this, neither Major, nor Alderman, nor other of the chiefe of the Citie that might replie nor impugne or make any reason for the defence of their auncient lawes and customes.

It was not much to be marueyled that the king was thus offended against the Citie, for by such euill disposed people as he had about him, the land was euill ruled, and much mischiefe was vsed: Whereof ensued much sorow after, as appereth in the sequele of this historie, as sayth Fabian.

Then Iohn Mancell called the Major and Aldermen before him and charged them to be at Westminster the next day following to gene attendance vpon the kinges grace. next day the Major and Aldermen tariying the kinges comming in the great Hall at Westminster, lastly the king came into Saint Stephens Chappell, where a while he had communication with his Lordes, and after went into the Chequer Chamber, and there sate him downe and his Lordes about him. Anon after the Maior and Aldermen were called into the sayde Chamber, and shortly after called by name, and commaunded to stande nere to the barre. Then, Henry Baa Justice sayde ynto the Maior and the seuen Aldermen, that forsomuche as by forme of the kings lawes they were found culpable in diverse articles touching transgression agaynst the king, therefore the Court awarded that they should make A fudgement fine and raunsome, after the discretion of the sayde Court: But, for that they had put the Major & Cithem in the kinges grace and mercy, the king hath commaunded the fine to be put in respyte, y ye be not pained so grieuously as ye have deserved.

After which judgement genen, they kneled downe, and then the Major with weping sence of the teares, thanked the king of his bountie and goodnesse, and besought him to be good and gracious Lorde vnto the Citie and to them as his faythfull subjectes. . Wherevnto the king made no aunswere, but rose streight up, and went his way, leaving them there. And asspone as the king was departed, they were all arested and kept there till they had found surety, and every Alderman, of them discharged of his ward and office that they had within the Citie, but shortly after they put in sureties, and so returned heapilye to London.

Anon after that, was William Fitz Richard by the kinges commaundement made Major, and Thomas Fitz Thomas, and William Grappisgate Shirifes.

After this, day by day, the Chamberleyn was called to an accompt before the sayde John , Mancell of all such tolles, as, was gathered in the tyme of the Mayralic of John Tolysham, and of Raufe Hardel, and there were present to here the sayd accompt diverse of the Communalty of the Citic, but none of the heades: By the which accompt no fault could be found against any, of the Personnes that were connict before the king. By reason whereof, diverse of them were shortly after admitted againe to the kinges favour and restored to their offices, but not without payment of money, whereof the certeintie is not knowen.

And in this yere wheate was so scant, that it was solde at London for. xxiiij shillinges a England in the quarter, and scanter shoulde haue beene, if plentic had not come out of Almaine: For time of scarsitie .. in Fraunce and Normandie it fayled likewise. By meane of this dearth and scarsitie, straungers much poore people dyed for hunger, and many of diverse countries of England, came vnto the Citie, and nere thereabout for comfort of victuall: For it was then better chepe in London then in many shires of England there aboutes. And shortly after was the sayde Iohn Mancell made knight and chiefe Iustice of England.

Insanu Parlia-Parliament.

Barons warre.

Also this yere the king helde a Parliament at Oxenford, which was called insanum Parmentum, or mad liamentum, that is to say, the mad Parliament. For in this Parliament were made many actes against the kings prerogative and pleasure, for the reformation of the state of the lande, which after turned to the confusion and hurt of the land, and the death and destruction of many noble men, so that by occasion thereof began that hatefull strife, called at this day the Barons warre, whereof ensued much trouble and mischiefe, as after shall appere.

Then as is aforesayde, to aduoyde the enormities, and to reforme the euill rule that was then vsed in the lande, by such euill persons as daylie were about the king, manye and diuers ordinances were made: wherevnto the king (somewhat against bys wyll) and Sir Edward his sonnes and others agreed. And for that these actes should be holden firme and stable, there were at this Parliament chosen. xij. Peeres, which were named Douze perys, to whome authoritie was given by vertue of this Parliament to correct all such as offended in breaking of these ordinances, and such other, as by the sayde. xij. peres, shoulde afterward be deuysed and ordered touching and concerning the same matter and purpose. Of which, xij. Peeres the names ensue.

The Archebishop of Cauntorbury, the Bishop of worcester, Sir Roger Bygot then Erle of Norffolk and Marshall of Englande, Sir Symon de Mountforde Erle of Leyceter, Sir Richard Clare Erle of Gloucestre, Sir Humffrey Bothum Erle of Herfford of Warwike and of Arondell. Sir Iohn Mancell chiefe Iustice of Englande, Sir Roger Mortymer, Sir Hugh Bigraue, Sir Peter de Sauoy, Sir Iames Audely, and Sir Peter de Mountford. And for that the kings brother on the mothers syde, that is to saye Sir Eym Erle of Wynchester, Sir William de valaunce, Sir Godfrey de Lyndsey and Sir Guy de Lyndsey, woulde not assent to the aforesayde ordinances, they withdrew them towarde the Sea side with such stuffe as they had, and would have departed the land, if they might then have had shipping: for lack whereof they were fayne to returne, and so went to Wynchester. But it was not long after, that they were lycenced to depart the lande, with a certaine companie, and a certaine summe of money to paye for their costes, and their day set by Bartholomewtyde to aduoyde vpon payne of imprisonement, which day by them was kept.

It was not long after the finishing of thys Parliament but that strife and variaunce beganne to kindle betweene the king and the Erles of Leycester and Gloucestre, by meane of such officers as the sayde Erles had removed, and put other in their romes. Among the which Iohn Mancell was discharged of hys office, and Sir Hugh Bygot then admitted for him. And bicause the aforesayde peres heard of the murmure of the Courte, fearing that the king should be advertised shortly to alter from his promise, therfore they entending to make their partie the stronger, the next day following, the king being at Westmynster, the Erle Marshall, the Erle of Leycester, with dyuers other came vnto the Guildhall at London where the Maior, Aldermen and commonaltie of the Citie were assembled, where the sayde Lordes shewed an instrument, or wryting, at the which hanged many labelles with Seales, as the kings seale, Sir Edward his sonnes, with manye other of the nobles of the lande, the which was the content of the Articles which were made and ordeyned at Oxenforde, wylling the Maior and Aldermen (considering the saide actes were made vnto the honour of God, fidelitie vnto the king, and profite of the realme,) that they would also in vpholding of the same, set to also their common Seale of the Citie. After which request thus to the Civizens made, and after advise and counsell among themselves taken, they desyred a sparing of the Lordes, till they might speake with the king, and know his pleasure in that behalfe. But finally no sparying at that tyme might be graunted, so that in the ende, by the labour that the lordes made, with helpe of such solicitors as they had within the Citie, the common Seale was put to, and the Maior and diverse of the Citie

sworne to mainteyne the same, their allegeance saued to the king, with preservation of the liberties and fraunchises of the Citie and so departed.

Then day by day, the Douze Peeres assembled at the newe Temple, where they kept their counsailes and Courtes for the reformation of the olde griefes, and removed from the king divers of his Menyall servauntes, and set in their places and office such as pleased

And vpon the. ix. day of August, proclamation was made in diverse accustomed places of the sayd Citie, that none of the kinges takers should take any thing within the liberties of London, without the will of the owner, except two Tonne of Wine, which the king This is called the Buttelerage. Buttelerage. accustomably had of euery ship comyng from Burdeaux, paiyng but fortie shillynges for a Tonne. By meane of which Proclamation, nothing was taken by the kinges officers, but it were streight payed for within the Citie & libertie of the same, which vsance continued but a while.

In the xlij, yere, the king helde a Parliament at Westminster, and another (or else proroged the same) to Winchester. And in this yere, Sir Hugh Bygot Iustice, with Roger Tuckley, and other, kept his Court at Saint Sauiours, and there held their Plees called Itineraii. The which is to meane the traueylyng or the way Plees. For ye shall ynderstand, that at those daies they were kept in diuerse places in Englande, which nowe beene holden at Westminster, and Ludges ordeyned to kepe a circuite, as nowe they kepe the Sizes in time of vacation. At this sayd Court, these Indges punished sore Baylifes and other officers, that before them were connict for dinerse trespasses, & specially for taking of amerciamentes otherwise then the law permitted them to do. For the which the sayde chiefe Iustice emprisoned them, and after seassed them at grieuous fines. Also he sommoned the Citezens of London to come to the same Court, for Tolles that they had taken vpon the further syde of the water. But it was answered that the tolles that they there toke, were taken lawfully as they were redy to proue in places & Court convenient to the same, which was within the precinct of their libertie. But notwithstanding that aunswere, the saide Sir Hugh charged them vpon a quest of. xij. knightes of Surrey to enquire of that matter and other, the which acquited the sayde Citizens, and shewed that the sayd Toll belonged to them of ryght

After this, the sayde Sir Hugh with other, came vnto the Guyldehall, and kept his Court and Plees there, without all order of lawe, and contrary to the libertyes of the Citie, and there punished the Bakers for lack of Size, by the Tomberell, where beforetymes, they were a kinde of Pilpunished by the Pillorye, and ordered many other thinges at his will, more then by anye lory made foure good order of lawe.

A Tomberell was square that turned round about.

This yere came vnto London from beyonde the Sea Richard king of Almaine, and Erle of Cornewall, with his wife and children, which had bene there and taken possession of that kingdome, as before is shewed. Against whose commyng the Citie of London was richely hanged, with clothes of Silke and Arras, and loyously he was received of the Citizeus.

And in the. xliij. yere of his reigne in the Parliament holden at Westminster was reade in the presence of all the Lordes and commonalty at sundrie times, all the actes and ordinaunces before made in the Parliament holden at Oxenford, with certeyne other articles by the aforesayde. xij. Pieres therevuto added. After the readyng of which articles, there being rejected the Archbishop of Cauntorbury with other, to the number of ix. Bishops besyde Abbots and other, denounced all them accurssed that attempted in worde or deed to breake the sayde Statutes or any of them.

In this Parliament also was graunted a taske called the Scutage, that is to say, xl. A taske called shillinges of enery knightes tee through the realme of England, the which extended to a Scuttage. great summe of money. For after dynerse wryters, there be (saith Fabian) in England in the possession of the Spiritualty and of the Temporaltie, or at those dayes were, over thousand pound.

& aboue. xl. thousand knightes fees, which after that rate should extende to fourescore

The sixt day of November following, the king came to Paules, where by his comaundement was assembled the Court of folkmote, where the king fearing rebellion of his nobles, did according to the former ordinances made, aske licence of the commonaltie of the Citie, for to passe the sea, and promised there in the presence of a great multitude of people, that he would be good and gracious Lorde vnto the Citie by the mouth of Sir Hugh Bigot his chiefe Justice, and to mainteine their liberties vnhurt: For the which the people for joy made an exceeding shoute.

Vpon the viij, day of Nouember the king roade through the Citie towarde the sea syde. And vpon the day of Saint Brice, or the xiij day of Nouember, he tooke his ship, and so sayled vnto Burdeaux, where when he had taryed a season, he road vnto the French king, then beyng king Lewes vnto Paris. Of whom he was honourably receyued, and was lodged in his awne Pallace, by the space of a whole weke, makyng to him great feastes, and gening to him and his, many costly and riche giftes. And from thence king Henry roade vnto Saint Denice, where of the Abbot and Couent he was received with procession, & taryed there by the space of a moneth. In which season a maryage was concluded, betwene Iohn Duke of Briteyne, and one of the kinges daughters. And at his departing, he gave to the Abbot a Cuppe of Golde, and a Bason with an Ewer of Siluer. And for his more consolation certaine Lordes and other noble men of Fraunce gave attendaunce vpon him, to convey him, and shewe him a part of Fraunce, with all disport of huntyng and hawkyng, and other many pleasures of the Countrie.

And in this time, the French king assembled his Parliament at Paris, where he shewed vnto his Lordes, that his conscience grudged with the withholdyng of all such landes as Philip the second wanne from king John in Normandy, vpon the which he desyred their faythfull and fruitefull counsaile, where after many reasons and argumentes made, it was concluded for a finall concorde to be had between king Henry and him, that if king Henrie with the agreement of his Lordes would resigne into the Frenche Kinges handes, all such title and right as he had in the whole Duchie of Normandy, Angeow, Poyteau, and Mayne for him and for his heyres for euer, that then the French king of his great bountie and grace, should geve voto the king of England, and to his heyres kinges, the Lordship of Guian, Angeou, and Mayne, and by rightfull title, ever after to be called the Duke of Guian, and besydes that, he should bee admitted for a Peere of Fraunce: To all which condicions, as appereth by the French Chronicle, king Henrie at his returne from his disport was agreable, and with consent of his Baronnye, and in their presence, with also the Barony of France, did his homage vnto the sayde Lewes for the Duchie of Guyan, and after made his othe according to the same. And after great giftes receyued on eyther syde, king Henry returned vnto Burdeaux.

Of this peace speaketh Guido, and sayth, that king Henry sayled into Fraunce, and asked restitution of the French king, of such landes as Philip the second his ayle had with extort power taken from king Iohn his father. But because he found the French king straunge in his answere, and also had little trust in his Lordes to have their ayde, he fell to agreement with the French king, and solde him his title that he had in Normandy, Gascovne and Guyan, the which extended vnto the yerely value of twentie thousand pound, taking for the same title three hundreth thousande of small Turon money, whereof a pound is in value after sterlyng money but two shillings and three pence, or there about, so that he should after that rate have for his sayde title, after the value of sterlyng money. xxxiiij.

While king Henry was thus occupyed in Fraunce, dissention fell in England, betweene A variaunce be- Sir Edward the kinges sonne, and Sir Richarde Erle of Gloucester. For the appeasing twene Sir Edward the Prince whereof, a Parliament, that is to saye, a counsaile of his Lordes was called at Westminand the Erle of ster, which continued by the space of three weekes and more. To the which counsaile the Lordes came with great companies, and specially the sayde Sir Edwarde, and the Erle of Gloucester, the which entended to have lodged within the Citie. Wherefore the Major went voto the Bishop of Worcester, and sir Hugh Bigot, and sir Philip Basset, to whome the king with the Archbishop of Cauntorbury had taken the rule of the lande in his absence, the which went vnto the king of Almaine to have his advise in that matter: Where it was concluded, that neyther the sayd sir Edward, nor the Erle, should come within the Citie there to be lodged, nor none that helde vpon eyther of the parties. And further it was prouided, that all such as were within the Citie, and was of the age of, xy, yeres and above, should be in harnesse to watch and kepe the City both day and night and that the gates should be shut vpon the day, & certaine men in harnesse to kepe every gate of the City. And sone after, for y safegard of the Citie, and sure keeping of the peace within the same, the king of Romaines, with the sayd Sir Hugh came into the Citie, and there were lodged with their companies, and suche other as they would assigne to strength the Citie if neede required.

Shortly after the king came to London from beyond the sea, and was lodged at the Bishop of Londons Palace. After whose commyng, by his assignment, the Erle of Gloucester was lodged within the Citie, and Sir Edward his sonne was lodged in his awne Palace at Westminster. And soone after the king commaunded him to be lodged at S. Johns without Smithfield Barres in the Suburbes of London, and al the other Lordes were lodged in other places without the Citie. And the king of Romaynes removed againe to Westminster.

In the which tyme an order was taken betweene the sayde partyes, and a new assembly or Parliament was appointed in the Quindena of Saint Iohn Baptist. And from that tyme to the entent that all thinges might be set in an order, it was proroged vnto the feast of saint Edward, at which tyme all thinges were in quiet, and so continued a tyme.

And here Fabian telleth a tale of a Iewe, saiying that at Tewkesbury there fell a Iewe A tewe drowned into a lakes or Gonge vpon a Saterday, which was his Sabboth day, and would not for in a Preny, reverence of his Sabboth day be plucked out, whereof heeryng the Erle of Gloucester that the Iewe did so great reverence to his Sabboth day, thought he would do asmuch to his holy day, which was Sunday, and so commaunded him to be kept there vntill Monday at which tyme he was found dead.

This yere the king kept a great feast at Westmynster and there made divers knights. Among the which Iohn Duke of Briteyn which had maried one of the kings daughters was there made knight. And soone after was Sir Hugh Spencer made chiefe Iustice.

And some after this he commanded a Folkemote to be called at Paules Crosse, where A folkemote. he in proper person with the king of Almayne, the Archebishop of Cauntorbury, and many other nobles came: where the king commaunded the Maior that euery striplyng of the age of. xij. veres and aboue shoulde the next day be sworne before hys Alderman, to be true to the king and to his heyres kings of England, and that the gates of the Citie should be kept with harnessedmen, as before by the king of Romanes was deuysed.

About this time also, at a Fayre kept at Northhampton variaunce fell betweene the Londoners and the men of the Towne, so that betweene the Citizens of London and them continued long sute and plee, and it was for a man of Northhampton that then was slaine, to the great vexation and trouble of both partes: But in the ende the Citie of London had the better.

The Barons also at this tyme with the consent of the peres discharged Sir Hugh Spencer, and admitted for him Sir Philip Basset to be chiefe Iustice, vnwitting to the king. By reason whereof, another grudge and displeasure began to kindle betweene the king and his Lordes, and encreased more and more. But by the pollecie of the king of Almayn, and some prelates of the lande, it was set in quiet for a while, but it continued scantly to the ende of the yere.

And this yere the Barons admitted and made the Shirifes of diuers shires of England,

and discharged such as before the king had admytted, and named them Gardians and kepers of Coun-keepers of the Counties and Shires. And besydes that, the sayde Barons would not suffer the Iustice, that the king had admitted to keepe the Plees and lawes called Itinerarij, but such as were of their admyssion. Wherewith the king was greuously discontented, in so much that after that time, he labored that he might make frustrate and vtterly voyde the aforesayde statutes and ordynances: In so much, that vpon the second Sunday in Lent next following, the king commaunded to be read at Paules crosse a Bull of the graunt of Vrban, Bishop of Rome and the third of that name, as a confirmation of another Bull before purchased of hys predecessour Alexander the thirde, for to assoyle the king and all other that before had sworne to the maintenance of the aforesayde Articles made at Oxenforde. And after caused the absolution to be shewed throughout the realme of Englande, Wales and Ireland, gening strayte charge to all his subjects, that none to be so hardie to disobey the sayde absolution. And if anye person were founden disobedient to his commandement that he were streight way committed to prison, and not to be raunsomed nor delyuered vnfill the kinges pleasure were further knowne.

A folkemote.

In the Month of Iune next following, the king of Almain tooke shipping and sayled into Almayn. And king Henry at a Folkemote holden on S. Peters daye in the Month of Iuly following had lycence to sayle into Fraunce. And the next day he departed from London towarde the sea syde, with the Queene and other Lordes, his two sonnes Sir Edward and Sir Edmond being then in Guyan. When the king had bene a while in Fraunce, he returned vnto Burdeaux, where he fell sicke, by occasion whereof, he taried in those parties vntill December next following. And in this meane time dyed Richard Clare Duke of Gloucester, and Sir Gilbert de Clare his son was Erle after him. the father gaue great charge that he should vpholde the former ordinaunces.

46 Murder vpon murder.

And it happened soone after, that a Iew fell at variance with a Christian man at Cole Church in London besyde the great Conduit in Chepe, and wounded the Christian man within the same Church. Wherefore the people of the Citie in a fury, pursued the sayd Iewe to his house, and there slue him, and after fell vpon the other Iewes, and slue and robbed many of them.

And shortly after the king landed at Douer, and came to London in the beginning of Ianuary following. And this yere about the vi. of December began a great frost, and continued the space of one moneth and more, in such wise that the Thames was so frosen that men passed ouer on horseback. And in the same Winter the kings Palace at Westminster perished by fyre, namely a great part thereof, which happened by negligence.

Variance betwene the Constable of the Tower and the Citizens of London.

About this time also a displeasure and variance began to growe between the Constable of the Tower, and the Citizens of London, for that the Constable contrary to the liberties of the Citie, tooke certeine shippes passyng by the tower with wheat and other victuall, and caryed the same into the tower, making the price thereof at his awne will and plea-Wherevpon great harme had ensued, had not bene the polecie of wyse men: Which thing was shewed vnto the kinges counsaile, by whose direction, the matter was committed vnto Sir Philip Basset then chiefe Iustice, and other, to set an order and rule betwene the sayd parties. Then before them were brought all euidences and privileges for the advantage of both parties: Where finally after long plee and argument, it was firmely demed and judged, that if the Constable or any other officer of the Tower, would at any tyme take wheate or other victuall to the vse of the king, or of the Tower, that he should come vnto the market holden within the Citie, and there to haue it two pence in a quarter within the Maiors price, and other victualles after the same rate: And if he, or any of his officers would do contrary to that ordinaunce, that then the shirifes should make report vnto the kinges counsaile, and to withstande him in all that they might, so that the kinges peace were kept.

An order made betwene the Constable of the Tower and the Citizens of London.

> At this tyme was spread many tales, and there arose among the people a mutteryng and murmuryng, that shortly there would be warres betwene the Lordes and the king, for the

Bull

Bull of dispensation before mencioned. But by the helpe and mediation of good wise men, these murmours and grudges were so appeased, that the king agreed againe to the maintenance of those statutes, and sent his writtes wherein the sayd articles were comprised, into all the Shires of England, geuing straight commaundement to all men to observe and kepe the same, and such other as were to them adjoyned by the discretion of the Erle Marshall, the Erle of Leycester, Sir Philip Basset, Sir Hugh Bigot and others, the which shortly after was reuoked and denied. Wherevpon the Archebishop of Cauntorbury, fearyng what after might ensue, made him an errand to Rome, and so by licence of the king and of the Lordes he departed the land, and by that meanes kept him out of the realme vntill the trouble was appeared and ceased.

Then vpon a midlent Sunday the Maior and the commons beyng present at a folkemote Afolkemote. holden at Paules Crosse before Sir Philip Basset, and other of the kinges Counsaile, the Major was sworne to be true vnto the king, and to his heyres kinges. And the next day after at the Guyldhall, every Alderman in the presence of the Mayor tooke the same othe. And vpon the Sonday following, euery stripplying of the age of. xij. veres and aboue, before his Alderman in his warde was newly charged with the same othe.

Then the displeasure betwene the king and the Barons began to breake forth, which by a long time had bene couered and hidden; insomuch as diverse of the Barons assembled themselves in the marches of Wales, and gathered vnto them strong power, and sent a letter vnto the king, vnder the Seale of Sir Roger Clifforde, besechyng him to haue in remembraunce, the othe and manifolde promises that he had made for the obseruing of the statutes made at his towne of Oxenforde, with other ordinaunces made to the honour of God, for fayth and allegeance to his person, and for the weale and profite of his realme: Willyng him further, to withstand and defye all such persons, as will be against the sayd

After the which letter thus sent, and receauyng of it no answere, the sayd Barons, with Barons begin to Baner displayed went agaynst suche as they knewe that helde against the sayde actes. And first at Hertford they tooke the Bishop of that see, and as many of his Chanons as were aliauntes borne, and tooke suche treasure and Cattaile as they there found, and bare it with them. And after went and sent vnto such manours as the sayd Bishop and Chanons had, and robbed and spoyled them, and some of them, they threwe to the grounde and consumed with fire, and put the sayd Bishop and Chanons in safe and sure keping, and set others in their places: and after went into other partes of the realme, where they supposed to finde any of their enimies, keping still theyr course towarde London, bearing before them a Banner of the kings armes, and goyng on theyr journey, much people drewe vnto them. And in their passage, euer as they found any that they knewe to be against the maintenance of the sayde actes, those they imprisoned and spoyled their places and houses, were they spirituall or temporall men, and in dyuerse of the kinges Castels they set in such men as they lyked, and put out such as the king had placed there before, and gaue vnto them an othe, that they should be true and faythfull to the king, & kepe those Castels to his vse & to the weale of the realme.

About Midsommer following, they drewe nere to London, and sent a letter to the Mafor and Aldermen under the seale of Sir Simon Mountford, requiring to knowe of them, whether they would observe and mainteine the actes and statutes made at Oxenford or not, or else they would aide and assist such personnes as entended the breche of the same, and sent vnto them a copie of the same actes with a prouiso, that if there were any of them. that should seeme to be hurtfull to the realme or common weale of the same, that they then by discrete persons of the land should be altered and amended. The which Copie the Maior bare vnto the king beyng then at the Tower, accompanied with the Queene and the king of Almaine, which lately was returned from beyond the sea, and Sir Edward his sonne and other of hys Counsaile.

Then the king entendyog to knowe the minde of the Citie asked the Maior what he VOL. I. Mm thought of those ordinaunces and actes, knowing well that before his commyng thether, he had counsayled with the Aldermen, and some of the Commons of the Citie.

The Maior then abashed with that question, besought the king that he might common with his brethren the Aldermen, and then he would declare vnto him both his and their opinions. But the king sayd, he would here his aduice without more councell. Then the Maior boldely sayde, that before tymes, he with his brethren and commonaltie of the Citie, by his commaundement were sworne to mainteyne all actes made to the honour of God, to the fayth of the king, and profite of the realme, which othe by his lycence and most gracious fauour they entended to observe and kepe. And moreover to advoyde all occasion that might growe of grudge or varyance betweene his grace and his Barons within the Citie, they would advoyde all aliauntes and straungers out thereof, if his grace were so contented. With the which aunswere, the king seemed to be pleased, so that the Maior with his fauour departed, and sent aunswere to the Barons, according to the sayd communication, their liberties alwayes viholden and saued.

Then shortly after, forsomuch as dyuerse noble men of the land, which helde against those statutes, were ridden toward Douer, and there entended to have taken shipping for feare of the Barons, the king sent after them diverse persons of his houshold, and of the Citizens of London to reforme and enduce them to retorne and tary with the king.

And in this tyme all aliauntes and straungers, the which were taken suspect of any favour borne to the one part or to the other, were aduoyded the Citie. But it was not long after that Sir Edwarde the kinges sonne, set them or many of them in offices within the Castell of Windsore. Then watch was kept dayly within the Citie, and in the nightes a certeine were appointed to ryde about the Citie, with a certeyne number of footemen to attend vpon them to searche all the Citie ouer, but of that ensued harme: For while the ridyng watch was in one part of the Citie, some euill disposed personnes vnder the colour of watchmen, and to search for straungers, robbed and spoiled many houses within the Citie. For remedie whereof, a standyng watche was appointed in euery warde: But now the king hearing that the Barons approched nere the Citie, he shortly after departed thence.

Then the Barons entered the Citie in the moneth of Iuly. And shortly after, the king returned to Westmynster, with the Queene and other of hys counsayle. And sone after by the consent of the king and the Barons, Sir Hugh le Spencer was made chiefe Iustice

The next day after Mary Magdaleyn daye, a writ was directed vnto the Maior and Aldermen, charging them that the kings peace were firmely kept within the Citie. And in the same writ it was also expressed, that the King and his Barons were louingly agreed. Furthermore it was by the same writ commaunded that if within the precinct of their Fraunches, were any person or persons knowne, that would withstande the aforesayde ordynances and statutes, that all such should be attached and put in prison, & their goodes attached for the king, vntill they knewe his further pleasure.

Ye shall vnderstande, that while the Lordes laye thus in the Citie, dyuers couenticles and gatherings were made of the Citizens and other, that robbed in the Citie and did much harme. The which was smally corrected, they were so borne out and mainteyned by their maysters. And lykewise the Commons of the Citie were farre out of rule by the insensyng of ryotous persons, that in assemblies and courts, that then were kept at the Guyldhall or other places, simple and vndiscreete persons should have the voyce, and the worshipfull men little or nothing regarded, whereof ensued daylie much vnhappinesse and sorrow, as after shall appere.

The Barons then, to obteyne the more favour of the Citie willed them to shewe if they had any parte of their liberties withdrawne that they might againe to them be restored, and also to deuyse some newe to their weale and profite, and they would labour to the king that they might have them graunted. For the which comforte of the Lordes, the Maior called

called the commons vnto the Guyldehall, and shewed to them the beneuolence of the sayd Lords, and wylled them that eueric officer for hys offyce, to decayse such things as might be beneficiall for the Citie.

Wherevpon they counsayled together and made a note in a paper, of dyuers statutes, provisions and ordynaunces to be graunted, which might (sayth Fabian) more properly be named abhominations, for they were decised to their singular profite, and to the great hurte of all other Marchauntes comming to the Citie, and to all other Fayres and Markettes of England, and also Prejudiciall to the vniuersall weale of the Realme.

The which when they were perused and ouersene by the heades of the Citie, it was shewed vnto the sayde Commons, that their ordinaunces were not lawfull nor charitablic considered, and therefore they knewe well they should not be admytted, wylling them to deuise other, but all was in vayne. By meane whereof, both those and other that were right necessarie for the common weale of the Citie were rejected and put of.

The Barons departed from London the morowe after Saint Iames day, and went toward Wyndsore, to see the guyding of the Castell: where at their comming they put out the sayde alyantes before set in, by Sir Edward the kings sonne, who being accompanied with other went to Fulham to the king and shewed him that the Barons had spoyled them of such goods as they had, and that without cause. But the king put them of for that season and warned them to sue to him about Mighelmas, when more of hys counsayle was with him, and then they shoulde have justice.

The. xxiii. day of September, the King, the Queene with his sonnes and other nobles of this land tooke shipping and sayled into Fraunce, to be present at the French kinges Parliament then holden at Bonony, and shortly after he returned againe and the. viii. day of October next following, landed at Douer, and the Friday following came to Lon-

The. xv. day of October there were a Iury of. xij. knightes of Middlesex, sworne betwene the Abbot of Westminster and the Citie of London, for certaine princleges that the Citie claymed within Westminster. Where, by the said Iury it was founden before Gilbert of Preston then chiefe Baron of the kinges Exchequer, that the Shirifes of London at those dayes might lawfully enter into the towne of Westminster, and all other Tenementes, that the Abbot had within Middlesex, and vnto the gate of the sayde Abbey, and there to make sommons and distreyne for lacke of appearaunce, all and every Tenant of the sayd Abbot.

And soone after Michelmasse, the former complaint of the alyens or straungers, was shewed before the king and the Lordes in the Parliament, or rather counsaile holden at Westminster, where at the last, sentence was geuen, that the Barons should restore all such goodes as they and their company had taken from such persons before that day, as well to aliauntes as other, spirituall or temporall persons: And also that such meniall seruauntes as should be dayly in the kinges house, and about his person, should be such as the king would chose and admit himselfe, the which two articles, the Barons vtterly denyed. Wherefore olde rancoure tooke place, and dissention kindled his fyre of malice againe between the king and his Lords feruently.

And in the yere following, the Commons of the Citie of London chose vnto their Maior for that yere Thomas fitz Thomas, and without counsell of the Aldermen sware him at the Guildhal vpon the day of Simon & Iude, and made no presentment of him vpon the next day following, neyther to the king, nor yet to the Barons of the Exchequer, as they of right ought to have done: For the which presumption the king was grieuously discontented against the Citie. And sone after he being aduertised that the Citizens would take part with the Barons, caused Sir Edward his sonne to take the Castell of Windsore by a traine. Whereof, when he knewe that he was in possession, the king early in the morning a little The king flicth before Christmasse, departed from Westminster, and road to the sayd Castell, whether for feate of the shortly after came many of the Lordes vpon the kinges partie. knightes which helde with the Erle of Leycester, drewe them toward London, so that on eyther partie great numbers of people were assembled. And in this tyme some well disposed persons laboured to have peace and concorde betwene the king and his Lordes: By whose meanes at the last, it was agreed, that all matters concerning the aforesayde articles or statutes made at Oxenford, and after by the xii. Piers, should be demed and judged by the French king, so that he should allow or disalow those that should be kept or broken. and as he judged, so both parties to be contented to stand vnto & abide firmely & surely. Vpon which agreement, copies were made of the sayde statutes, and with letters (shewyng the effect of the former agreement) sent vnto Lewes the Frenche King as aforesavde. And at Christmasse next after, the King tooke shippyng, with Sir Edward his sonne, and other of the Counsayle, and sayled into Fraunce for the aforesayde cause. And for the partie of the sayde Barons, was sent ouer Sir Peter de Mountforde and other. Then before Lewes king of Fraunce those statutes were sore argued.

The Frenchking iudged agaynst the Barons of England

In the ende, the French king having before him both the parties, the xxiiii, day of Ianuary, syttyng in judgement gaue expresse sentence, that all and euery of those statutes and ordinaunces should be from that day forward vtterly fordone and set at naught. and all such bandes and promises that the king or any other had made for the maintenance of the same, should be adnulled and canceled, and the king and all other, for any matter concerning those statutes set at libertie.

After which sentence thus geuen, the king returned into Englande, so that he came vnto London the. xv. day of February. But the Barons beyng sore amoued with this sentence, and notyng great parcialitie in the Frenche king, departed from London Westward, and so into the marches of Wales, where they drewe to them great power, and warred vpon the landes and Castelles of Sir Roger Mortimer, & threw some of them vnto the ground, and spoyled of his what they might finde, and ouer that, brent of his manours and houses. In whose ayde, Sir Edward the kinges sonne commyng, hys people were distressed, and he almost taken.

A new Parliament holden at Oxford, but it tooke none effect.

For reformation of which matter a newe Parliament or counsayle was called and appointed to be holden & kept. xv. dayes after Easter at Oxenford, but it neuer toke effect. Howbeit another Chronicle sayth, y from this Parliament then holden at Oxford, the king and his Lordes parted in displeasure.

Then the Barons drewe towarde London, and the king remayned at Woodstocke, And then newe assurance by wrytyng indented was made betwene the commonaltie of the Citie, and the Barons, without consent of many of the rulers of the sayde Citie. Wherefore the Commons, as men in a rage and furye, made of them selues two Capitaines, whiche they named Constables of the Citie, that is to say, Thomas Piwelsdon, and Stephen Bukerel. At whose commaundement, by tollyng of the great Bell of Paules all the Citie should be readye shortly in harnesse, to geue attendaunce vpon their said Capitaynes.

The Citizens of London chose the two newe Capitaines.

About the beginning of Lent, the Constable of the Tower, Sir Hugh le Spencer, came with a fayre company of men of armes before him into the Citie, and desyred assistance of the aforenamed Constables. The which commaunded the sayde Bell to be tolled: By meane whereof, the people shut in their shops, and came out in harnesse in great multi-The which after proclamation made, that they should follow their Capitaines, without knowledge what to do, or whether to go, followed their sayde Capitaynes, and so Thistleworth the went to Thistleworth, viij. miles beyond Westminster, and there spoyled the Manor of the Manor of Richard the king of Romaynes, and set it after vpon a fyre. And that done, his water Milles and other commodities that he there had, put them vnto vtter ruyne, and after with great noyse and cry returned to London.

The Citizens of London brent at of Romaynes.

> This dede as saith Fabian, was the cause of the mortall warre following. For where before time the said king of Romaines had gone about for the aliaunce that was between him and the Erle of Gloucester, a treatie of peace, to be had betwene the king and his Barons: after that deede done, he was enemie vnto them to the vttermost of his power.

> > The

The king herving of this ryot, gathered vnto him a great power. And for that he heard that Sir Peter de Mountfort was at Northampton gatheryng of people to strength the Barons partie, he sped him thether, and wan the towne vpon him by force, and slue many of his men, and in the ende tooke him and Sir Simond the sonne of the Erle of Leycester, with diverse other on live, the which, with many Burgesses of that towne, that had taken their partes, the king sent vnto diuerse prisonnes, and some he closed within the Castell of the same towne.

And aboute this tyme, that is to save, the weeke before Easter, all the Iewes in Lon-A ryot made don were spoyled and robbed, and the number of fine hundreth of them were slaine, and vpon the Iewes. diverse of their houses brent and destroyed, and such of them as were saued, were conueved for great neede vnto the Tower, and there kept from the fury of the Commons. And the occasion of this riot was, for that one Iewe woulde have forced a Christian man to have geven vnto him more than two pence for the vsury of twenty shillynges for a weeke lendyng. For ye shall understande that in those dayes by licence graunted unto the Vsury allowed lewes of the king, they might take by vsury of euery man that of them would borow mo- among the lewes & suffered ney, two pence of a pound for a weekes lendyng, and so of greater and of smaller summes in England. after the rate.

And soone after the Iewes were thus punished, many houses of relygion within the Citie, and nere there about, were searched for goodes of aliguntes, and muche founde. Whereof a part was brought vnto the Barons, but the more part was stolne and bribed.

In this season the king passed by dynerse Countries, and lastly came into Sussex, with a strong power. Whereof hering the Lordes, they made preparation to go against him. In all which tyme the Wardens of the five Portes kept the sea with shippes that no straun-gers should enter the land to ayde the king against the Barons.

In the ende of Aprill, the Barons with a multitude of the Citie, which they put in the vawarde, departed from London, takyng their journey towarde the king. And when they were well onwarde vpon their way, worde was brought vnto them, that the king with an howge power was at Lewes. Wherfore they by an whole assent, deuysed a letter, and sent it in the name of all the Barons vnto the king, whose names herevnder folow, but not conteyned as foloweth.

TO the most excellent Lord, king Henry, by the grace of God king of Englande, A letter written Lorde of Irelande, and Duke of Guyan, the Barons and other faythfull your seruauntes, by the Barons and other faythfull your seruauntes, by the Barons their fidelitie and othe to God and to you coueting to kepe, send to you due salutying with all reuerence and honoure, vnder due obeysaunce. Lyketh it your highnesse to vnderstand, that many beyng aboute you, have before tymes shewed vnto your Lordship of vs many euill and vntrue reportes, and have found suggestions, not al onely of vs, but also: of your selfe, to bring this your realme vnto subucrsion. Know your excellency, that we entend nothing but health and surety to your person, to the vttermost of our powers: and not alonely to our enemies, but also yours, and of all thys your realme, we entend ytter greuaunce and correction. Besechyng your grace, hereafter to geue to them little credence, for ye shall finde vs your true and faythfull subjectes to the vttermost of our powers. And we Erle of Leycester, and Erle of Gloucester, at the request of other, & for our selues, have put to our seales, the. x. day of the moneth of May.

The

The kinges sunswere to the Brons letter. The aunswere vnto the aforesayde letter.

HEnry by the grace of God, king of England, Lord of Ireland, & Duke of Guyan's To Simond de Mountfort, and Gilbert de Clare, and their complices. Whereas by warre and generall perturbaunce in this our realme, by you begon and continued, with also brennynges and other hurtes, and enormities, that euidently it appereth that your fidelitie to vs due, ye have not kept, nor the suretie of our person ye have little regarded, for so much as our Lordes and other trustie friendes which dayly abyde with vs, ye vexe and greeue, and them pursue to the vttermost of your powers, and yet dayly entend as ye by report of your letters have vs asserteyned: We the griefe of them admit and take to be our awne, specially when they for their fidelitie, which they to vs dayly impend, stand & abyde by vs, to oppresse your infidelitie and vntruth. Wherefore of your favour and assurance we set little store, but you as our enemies we vtterly defye. Witnesse our selfe at our towne of Lewes, the xii day of this moneth of May.

And besydes this, the king of Romaynes, Sir Edward the kinges sonne, and other Lordes beyng then with the king, sent vnto them another letter whereof the tenor ensueth.

Another letter sent to the Barens.

RIchard by the grace of God king of Romaynes, alwayes Augustus and Edwarde the Noble first begotten sonne of the king of Englande, all other Barons firmely standing and abyding with our souereigne Lorde the king, to Symond de Mountfort, Gilbert de Clare, and all other their false fellowes: By the Letters which ye sent vnto the king our most sonereigne Lorde, we understanding that we are defyed of you. Neuerthelesse, thys worde of defiance appeard vnto vs sufficiently before, by the deprivation and brenning of our manors, and carying awaye of oure goodes. Wherefore we wyll that ye vnderstande, that we defye you as our mortall and publique enemies. And whensoeuer we maye come to the reuengement of the injuries that ye to vs have done, we shall acquite it to the vttermost of oure powers. And where ye put vpon vs that we are neyther true nor good to oure Souereigne Lorde the king. We geue you to understand that ye therin say, falsely and vntruely of vs. And if that saiving ye Sir Symond de Mountfort and Sir Gilbert de Clare wyll testifie in the Court of our souereigne Lord the king: we are readie to purchace to you suretic and safe comming, that there we maye proue our true and faythfull innocencie, and your false and trayterous living. Witnessed with the Seales of Rycharde king of the Romaynes and sir Edward aforenamed. Geuen at Lewes the, xij. day of May.

When the Barons had received these Letters from the king and hys Lordes, they perceyued well that there was none other meane, but to defend their cause by dent of sworde, wherfore, they putting their trust in God, sped them forth toward the king. And vpon Wednesday being the, xxiiij, day of May, earely in the morning bothe the hostes met: where after the Londoners had geuen the first assault, they were beaten back, so that they began to drawe from the sharp shot and strokes, to the discomfort of the Barons hoste. But the Barons encouraged and comforted there men in suche wise, that not all onely the freshe and lustic knightes fought egerly, but also suche as before were discomfited, gathered a newe courage vnto them, and fought without feare, insomuch that the kings Vaward lost their places. Then was the fielde couered with dead bodyes, and gasping and groning was heard on euery side, for eyther of them was desyrous to bring others out of lyfe. And the father spared not the sonne, neyther yet the sonne spared the father. Alliance at that time was turned to defiaunce, & christian bloud that day was shed without pittie. Thus duryng the fyght by the more parte of the daye, lastly the victorie fell to the Barons, so that there were taken the king, and the king of Romaynes, Sir Edward the kings sonne, with many other noble men, to the number of. xxv. Barons and Banarets, and of the common people there were slaine aboue twentie thousand as saith Fabian & Cowper.

The king & his brother & sonne taken.

> When the Barons had thus obtayned the victorye, prouision was made for the safe keepyng of the prisoners, so that all were sente vnto dyuerse Castelles and Prysons, except the

the King and hys brother the King of Almayne, and Sir Edwarde his Sonne, the which the Barons helde with them vntill they came to London. Then a newe graunt was made Thekinggrauntby the king, that the aforesayde statutes should stand in strength. And if anye were thought consall theyr vireasonable, they to be corrected and amended by foure noble men of the realme, that requestes. is to saye, two of the spiritualtie, and two of the temporaltie. And if those foure could not agree, then the Erle of Angeou and Duke of Burgovn to be judges of the matter, And this to be firmely e holden and obeyed by the king and his brother: The kinges graunted that their sonnes and heyres should remaine with the Barons as prisoners vntill all thinges were finished, according to the former agreement. And vpon this was a Parliament appoynted to be holden at London the Whitsontyde following, but that came never to passe. Then the Tewesday before the Ascention day, a peace was proclaymed in London betwene the king and the Barons.

The next day the king and the Barons came to London with the king of Romaynes, and Sir Edward the kinges sonne. Then Sir Edwarde as pledge for the king, and Sir Henry sonne to the king of Almaine, were sent vnto the Tower, and there lodged, and from thence to Douer Castell. And the king was lodged in the Bishops Palace beside Paules, and the king of Almaine and diverse other within the tower. Then it was agreed by the king, that for his more suretie, and for the weale of the lande that the Erle of Leycester should be resiaunt in the kinges Court. Vpon which agreement and other, many of the Prisoners were set at large.

In this meane while, before the Battaile of Lewes, the Queene and the king of Romaynes had sent ouer the sea for Souldiours, to ayde the king agaynst the Barons, which nowe were come in great number vnto Douer, and there houed on the Sea to have landed. Whereof heeryng the Barons, they sent the king of Romaynes as prisoner to Barkham- Kynges by stede, vntill the sayd Aliauntes were returned: and caused king Henry with a great power power are forced to do as other to ryde thether, and to force the sayde hoste of straungers to returne vnto their Countryes wil, and not as from whence they came.

And when the king had returned the sayde straungers, he shortly after with the agreement of the Barons sayled ouer into Fraunce, and returned againe within short tyme.

And shortly after the Lordes of the Marches of Wales assembled themselves together, and did much harme vpon the Lordeshippes and Manors of the Erles of Leycester and Gloucester. Wherefore the king so soone as he returned out of Fraunce, forthwith roade to Gloucester, and called there a Counsaile of his Lordes, by the aucthoritie of which counsaile, it was enacted that as many of the sayd Lordes as came not in by the Octaues of Saint Hillary next following, & yelded them vnto the kings grace, should be exiled. in the sayd Counsayle it was also agreed, that in the sayd Octaues there should be a Parliament holden at Westminster. At the which tyme the king with his Lordes spirituall and temporall, and commons of his lande, began his foresayd Parliament. And in the same mention made of it was there moued (the king himselfe beyng present) that neither he the king, nor yet Sir Parliament holden by the Edward his sonne, nor none of them should after that day greue or cause to be greued three estates. the Erles of Leycester and of Gloucester, the Baronnes, Banerettes, or knightes, the Citizens of London, and Barons of the fine Portes, nor none other person or persons of high or low degree, that was vpon the partie of the sayd Erles, for any matter of displeasure done against the king, and the sayde Sir Edward his sonne, at any tyme before that The king sworme day. And that to do and vpholde, the king before his Lordes was sworne.

After this there was read a Charter or Pardon, concerning the cause and matter of offence aforesayde. And afterwarde also was concluded a confirmation of the statutes of the Forest, with many other acces and statutes before graunted of the king, as Magna Carta, and other.

The. xij. day of March next following Sir Edwarde the kinges sonne that before was also sworne to perfourme suche promises as the king had made before in the Parliament, was delivered and set at libertie, and lykewise was Sir Henry the kinges sonne of Almaine, the which had bene kept as pledges (as before you have heard) about the space of, ix, monethes & odde dayes vpon assurance made, that the sayd Sir Edward should dwell and abyde in the kinges court, and not to depart from thence without licence of the king, and of a certeine of the Barons.

Then were many Instrumentes and Bondes made by the king and Sir Edward his sonne for the performance of diverse and sundry covenants made betwene the king & his Ba-

Now shortly after, that is to say, betweene Easter and Whitsontide, for the ordering and maner of executyng of the aforesayde statutes made at Oxenforde, fell great dissention betwene the Erles of Leycester and Gloucester, so that wordes of displeasure were vttered betwene them, the king and they also beyng then at Gloucester. Then the king and his Barons had much to do to set them at quiet and rest. And the same season, the Barons of the five Portes with their ships were vpon the sea, and robbed and spoyled all that they might take, for all was fish that came to the net, sparing neither English Merchauntes nor other. And the Bootie that they gate was no small thing. Of whiche as the common fame went, some of the Barons had no small share.

The Whitsontide following, the king with the Erle of Leycester, and Sir Edward his sonne, with many other his Lordes beyng at Hereford in the Edge of Wales: The sayd-Sir Edward secretly and without licence, departed from the Court, and went vnto Chester, where he called vnto him the Erle of Gloucester, and the Lordes of the marches, the Erle of Wareyn, Sir Roger Mortimer, and other, and they fallyng into felowship, and joynyng in a confederacie, went from thence vnto Gloucester, breaking the bridges as they went, to the entent that he were not followed vntill he had assembled his power.

When knowledge of this came to the Erle of Leycester, he in all haste sent vnto Sir Simond his sonne that he should gather his knightes vnto him. The which according to that commaundement, assembled vito him with much people, and with them drew toward Winchester, so that he came before the Citie the. xiiij. day of the moneth of Iuly, where he was shut out, for so much as the Citizens knewe not whether he came as the kinges friend or not. And also a little before, they had received a letter from Sir Edward, willyng them to kepe them out of the Citie, and to suffer them by no meanes to enter. For these causes the Citizens closed their Gates against the sayde Sir Symond and his com-But it was not long before the Citie yelded and gaue vp. Then they spoyled the towne, and slue the greatest part of the Iewes that were therein. And that done, they layde siege vnto the Castell, and assaulted it: But sodeynly a feyned newes was brought vnto them, saiying that Sir Edward and his power was commyng euen at hande, wherefore they departed shortly thence, and went to Kenelworth.

And the last day of Iuly Sir Edward and his hoste came vnto Kenelworth aforesayde, and fell sodeinly upon the hoste of the aforenamed Sir Simond, and with sheddyng of little blood tooke there prisoners, the Erle of Oxenford, William de mount Canise, Adam de Newmarket, Sir Baldwyn Wake, and Hugh Neuile, with dyuerse other, and Sir Simond fled into the Castell and so escaped. Then the aforenamed Prisoners were sent to Gloucester, and there put in safe kepyng.

In this meane tyme Sir Simond Erle of Leycester tooke his leave of the king, which then from Hereforde passed the Ryuer of Seuerne, and so went vnto worcester, and the Erle with great paine passed the Bridges before broken by Sir Edward, and so coasted the countries in gathering of the people as he went: so that at the length he had with him a strong power. And When sir Edward heard therof, he made towards him so fast as he Battaile of Eui- might. And the sixt day of August they met at Euisham in Worcestershire, where betwene them was foughten a cruell and bloody battayle, in the which was slaine the sayd Sir-Simond the Erle, and sir Henry his sonne and heyre, Sir Hugh le Spencer, Sir Peter de Mountford and many other noble men that helde vpon the Barons partie. After which discomfiture, some malicious persons in despite of the Erle cut off his head and his preuymembers, and fastened them vpon either syde of his nose, and after made a present therof vnto the wyfe of Sir Roger Mortimer: his feete also and his handes were cut of from the body and sent to sundrie places, and the truncke of hys bodie buryed within the Church of Euisham.

Sone after this victorie thus obtayned by Sir Edward, the king and he met with no small ioy and comforte to them both. And then by the aucthoritie of the king all the prisoners that before had bene taken, and imprisoned were delyuered and set at libertie, and manye other daylie accused and set in for them. And about the. viij. daye of September next following a Parliament or counsell was holden at Winchester, where by the authoritie of the A Parliament same, all statutes and ordinaunces before made, by the Barons at Oxenford in the. xlj. at Winchester. vere of the king, were vtterly fordone and set at naught. And all bondes and wrytings Oxenford against made by the king, or any other for the observing of the same, were cancelled and broken, condemned Also at thys counsell was ordeyned, that all suche as had fauoured the Barons, being then in prison, or at large, should be disherited and then the king resumed into his handes all grauntes before made and geuen to any person. And for Sir Symond Mountfort the Astraunge alsonne of the Erle that was slaine could not agree with the king at the Parliament, he was teration. restored again to the Castell of Kenelworth as he before was assured, the which he with Sir Henry de Hastyngs and other, kept and defended against the kings power, a long time

After the Parliament ended the king came to Windsore wyth a great power, entending, as the fame went, to destroye the Citie of London, for the great wrath and displeasure greatly displeasure that he had conceyued for the ayding of the Barons against hym. Of the which when the pleased with tha Major and Aldermen were enformed, they were striken into a wonderfull feare: Although citic of London manye of the rude and rashe commoners were in full purpose to have defended the Citie against the king: and thus among them were dyuerse and sundrie opinions, and no great maruaile, for at those dayes the Citie was inhabited with sundrie nations and people.

At the last the sad and grave Citizens being called together by the Maior and his brethren to the Guyldhall, it was among them agreed & thought meete, to make a most humble supplication ynto the king, and to sende it by some religious person. Of the which they made divers, and sent them by sundrie persons, but all analysed nothing. For the king was most greeuously incensed against the Citizens by some of hys Counsayle, so that he woulde not looke vpon, nor hearken vnto any of their supplications. And if it fortuned any to move the kings favour towards the Citizens, he would so storme and geue vnto them such vnpleasant and wrathfull lookes, that no man durst once open his mouth vnto him for them.

Then the Citizens were counsayled by their Friends that they should make a wryting, and seale it with the common seale, and in the same they should offer themselues, and put them wholy in the kings grace and mercy, touching their liues and goodes. And at the last according to this counsayle, they decised a writing, and sealed it with their common seale, and that done chose, viij, persons of the Citie suche as had friendes in the Courte, and the, vi. day of October sent them toward Wyndsore, and as they passed thorough Colbrook they met a knight of the kings, called Sir Roger Leyborne, the which caused the sayde. viij. persons to sir Roger Leyborne, turne agains vnto the Citie, and he accompanied them vntill he came almost at the Citie, borne knight and there departed from them, and roade vpon the backesyde of the towne vnto the tower. But at his departing he willed them to warne the Maior with certeine of the Citie to meete with him vpon the morow at Barkyng Church. And on the morow, when the Maior and the sayd Sir Roger met, the same Sir Roger after a long processe made, shewed and declared the kinges most grieuous displeasure agaynst the Citie, and also tolde them what meanes their friendes and louers had made to obteyne the kinges graces fauour for the Citie: But in the ende he concluded that there was no grace to be obteyed for them, except they would by their common seale, bynde themselves fully and wholy to stande at the kinges grace, and to put into his mercy their lyues and goodes: The which when the VOL. J. Nn

Major and his brethren conferryng with sundrye other of the Citizens had well weved and considered, and also beyng greatly afearde of the Kinges wrath agaynst the Citie, for it was bruted that he woulde viterly e destroy the same by fyre: Wherefore in the ende they graunted to all that Sir Roger had moved, and delyvered the aforesayde wrytyng vnto the aforesayde Roger, praiving him to be a good meane and intercessor for them vnto the king. And the next day the sayd Sir Roger went vnto the Court, and returned againe the sixt day after, and willed the Major and Aldermen to mete with him again at the foresaid Church. Where he shewed to them, that the king by great instance of their friendes, had received their writing, and woulde first for the beginning and contentation of his mynde, that all the Chaynes that was in every streete, and stoode at everye Lanes ende. should be losed from their Postes, and the Post also drawen out of the earth, and all they to be brought vnto the Tower of London: And that done, that the Major with a certeine of Citizens, to the number of. xl. persons should the day folowing be at Windsore to confirme the graunt of their writing. And that they should go and come in safe and sure wise, he deliuered vnto them the kinges letter and seale, for the terme of foure dayes. which all was done according to the former deuise, and the Maior with the aforesayde persons were ready on the morow which was Sunday, at Windsore by one of the clocke, and there targed vntill foure of the same day: At which tyme the king commyng from his disport, entered the Castell without countenance or castyng of his eyen vpon the Londoners. And when the king and his people entered the Castell, the Londoners woulde haue followed, but they were warned to abide without.

And immediately the king caused a Proclamation to be made, that no man of high or lowe degree, should by worde or deede shewe any displeasure vnto the Londoners. And in the euenyng came vnto them, the aforesayde sir Roger and Sir Robert Waleys knightes and brought them into the Castell, and said that the kings pleasure was not to speake with them that night. And afterwardes the sayde knightes delivered them vnto the Constable of the Castell, which closed them all in a large Tower, where that night they had small cheere and worsse lodgyng.

The next day beyng Monday, towardes night they were taken out of that tower, and delivered to the Bayly of the sayde Castell, and lodged by his assignement, except v. persons, that is to say, Thomas fitz Thomas Maior, Mighell Tony, Stephen Bukerell, Thomas Piwellisdon, and Iohn de Fleete. The which five persons the king had geven to Sir Edwarde his sonne, at whose commaundement they remayned still in the sayde Tower long after, notwithstandyng the kinges safe conduite to them made as before is sayde. tidinges hereof came to the Citie of London, albeit, that for feare many were before adnovded, yet then a great manye mo gate them thence with spede into diverse countries of England, and very many of them never returned.

The sixt day of Nouember following, the king came to Westminster. And shortly after he gaue vnto diverse of his houshold servauntes, more than lx. housholdes and houses within the Citie of London, so that the owners were compelled to agree and redeme their away in the Citie houses and housholde, with all goodes that in them were, or else to advoyde and suffer such persons to enter as the sayde houses were geuen vnto, and not alonely that, but also such lands and Tenements, goodes and Cattelles, as the sayd Citizens had in any other places of England. And at that tyme the king made Custos and Gardian of the Citie, Sir Othon Constable of the Tower of London, which sir Othon chose to be Baylifes vn-Tower was made der him, and to be to him accomptable to the vse of the king, Ihon Adrian, and Walter Henry Citizens of the same Citie.

> And after this, the king tooke pledges of the best mennes sonnes of the Citie, that his peace should be surely kept within the same. The which pledges were kept in the Tower of London, and there found at the cost of theyr parentes. And shortly after by great labour and sute made, all the aforesayde persones which were in the kepyng of the Baylife of Windsore Castell, foure onely except, that is to say, Richard Bonauenture, Simon and the other, ix, were kept still in the Tower of Windsore.

Nowe was dayly sute and labour made vnto the king to have his gracious favour, and to know his pleasure what fine he would have of the Citye for their transgressions. For the which the king demaunded. xl. thousande pounde, and firmely helde him at fiftie thousand markes. But the Citizens alledged for them, that the pore Commoners (whereof many were advoided) were the trespassours, and besydes that, the best men of the Citie were spoyled by those riotous persons, and by the Rouers also of the sea, as the Wardeynes of the five Portes, and other, so that in this troublesome tyme they lost the greatest part of their substaunce. For the which considerations, and many other, that were here to tedious to wryte, the Citizens besought the king of his most gracious clemency and fauour, and to take of them that they might beare.

This matter thus hanging, the king youn the sixt day of December departed from West-Stewardes or minster towarde Northhampton. And a little before hys departure, he ordeyned Sir Ihon pounted to haue Linde knight, and maister Ihon Waldren Clerke, to be Gardians of the Citie and Tower the rule of the. of London, the which were named in the kinges wrytyng Seneschalles, or stewardes of the City.

The next day after that the king was ridden as aforesayde, the aforenamed two Stewardes, sent for, xxiiij, of the most notable men of the Citie, and warned them to apere the next day following before the Counsayle at Westminster: Where at the tyme of their appearance was shewed vnto them by Sir Roger Leyborne, that the kinges minde was, that they should have the rule of the Citie in his absence, vnder the aforesayde Stewardes: and for to see good rule to be kept within the Citie they should be sworne there, before his And there they were sworne, and so commaunded to return againe into the Citie. But yet ceassed not meanes to be made, and continuall labour to the king for his gracious fauour in the leuiyng of a mercifull fine, such as the poore Citizens might be able to And in Christmasse weeke at the last, the king at the prayer of suche friendes as the Citie made vnto him, graunted the Citie to be released for all maner of transgressions, and to have their whole liberties restored vnto them againe for. xx. thousand marke, those The liberties of persons only except which the king had geuen to Sir Edward his sonne, beyng, as is afore-the Citic against restored for the sayde, at Wyndsore. For the payment of which somme at the dayes agreed vpon, Sir summe of xx. Roger Leyborne, and mayster Robert Warien Clerke, were assigned to take sureties for marke, the same. After which assuraunce by them received, and sent vnto the king at Northhampton, the king sent immediately after vnto the Citizens a Charter vnder his broade seale, the tenor whereof ensueth.

HEnry by the grace of God, king of England, Lorde of Ireland, and Duke of Guyan : A Pardon To all men health. Know ye that for the fine of. xx. thousande marke, the which our Citizens of Lon-Citizens of London to vs made, for the redemption of the transgressions and trespasses don by the king. to vs, to our Queene, to our noble brother Richard king of Almaine, and to Edward our first begotten sonne done, we remit and pardon for vs and our heires, to the said Citizens and their heires, as much as in vs is, so that they have and enjoy all theyr former graunces and liberties, rentes and profites from the feast of Christmasse last past: And also that the sayde Citizens have to them, all forfeites of all malefactors of the Citie, which in the perturbance before made, were endited, or for the same be yet to be endited: Except the goodes and Cattalles of them, of the which we have geven the bodies vnto our foresayd sonne Edward, and except the rents and tenementes of all those Citizens, which now be and shall be our eschete, by reason of the aforcsaide transgressions. And that all prisoners, which now remaine in prison, be frely delyuered, except those personnes, whose bodyes we have geven to Edward our sonne. And that the sayd Citizens be as free, as they were before the sayde transgressions in all partes and coastes of this our landes,

After the Citizens had receyued this pardon, then were all the pledges for them. which were in the tower of London deliuered, and also foure of them that were in the Castell of Windsore. Then also were discharged the aforenamed Stewardes, and the Citizens of themselves chose for Maior, William Fitz Richard, and for Shirifies, Thomas Delaforde, and Gregory de Rokesley. Then for the leuiyng this fine, were taxed, aswell couenant seruaunts as also housholders, and many refused the liberties of the Citie, to be

While the king lay thus at Northhampton, Sir Simond de Mountforte referred the iudgement of his cause vnto Octobonus the Legate, that before was come into thys lande to reforme things in the Church of Englande, and also to set vnitie and rest betweene the king and his Lordes. To whose order and judgement and to the king of Romaines the sayde Sir Symond dyd bynde himselfe to stande. Vpon which promise and band, he was set at libertie, and was at large in the kings court, and did there awhile contynue, but at the last, when the king was come to London, he departed sodainely out of the courte, and roade to Winchelsey where he accompanied with the Rouers of the Sea, and (after some prises taken) departed from them and so sayled into Fraunce, and put himselfe in seruice with Lewes the French king.

Kenelwoorth Castell.

And shortly after, the king besieged the Castell of Kenelworth with a great power. But Sir Henry Hastings with such as were within it, defended it so strongly, that the king and all his power might not winne it, of a long time, as after shall appere.

It was before declared that the Queene to helpe her Lorde the king against the Barons, before the battaile at Lewes, had caused an host of straugers to be prepared to come into Englande. And the same time also she purchased a cursse of the Pope, to accurse the Barons, and all their ayders and helpers, and had commissions directed to certaine Bishops of England to execute the same, as London, Winchester, and Chichester, the which for feare of the Barons denyed the doing thereof. Wherefore the Queene made new labour to the Pope, then Vrban the thirde, and had it graunted, that the sayde Bishoppes for their disobedience should be corrected. And for thys the aforesayde Legate Octobone, this yere at a counsell holden by him at Paules Church in London, suspended the sayde Bishops, and sent them to Rome to be assoyled of Clement the third.

And nowe was the Castell of Kenelworth yelded by appoyntment, which had bene becion that Sir Henry Hastinges and all other that were with him in the sayde Castelle, Kenelworth Castel yelded.

About this time also, the Wardeynes of the flue portes were reconciled to the King, by reconciled to the fauour and helpe of Sir Edward the kinges sonne. And notwithstandyng the great harme that they had done by roauyng youn the sea, as well to Englishe merchauntes, as to other, they had to them confirmed all their former privileges. And moreover there was graved to them, that if any man English or other, would sue for restitutio of goodes, by them before taken, or for the death of any of their friendes before slaine: that all such complayntes should be sued and shewed in their Courtes, and there to have theyr matters determined, and not else where. But what the cause was of this end thus made betweene the king and them, it is not shewed: But the common fame at that day ranne, that the sayde Wardeynes of the fine Portes, had at this day the dominion of the Sea: wherefore the king was faine to followe their pleasures.

Parliament at

In the former yere also, in the begynning of the moneth of May, the king helde his Northhampton. Parliament at Northhampton: In the which Parliament was confirmed vnto the Citie of The liberties of London the olde fraunchises and liberties by the kinges progenitors graunted to the sayde Citie, with a newe graunt also for the shire of Middlesex. And in this Parliament were

manye noble men dishenherited, that before tooke part with the Barons. For the which cause they assembled together and robbed in dyuerse coastes of the land, and tooke the Anewereach towne of Lincolne and spoyled it, and after raunsomed many of the riche Burgesses of lion. the towne, and tooke the Isle of Ely, and strengthned it in such wyse, as they helde it a great while after.

This yere fell a great controuersie betweene the rulers of the Citie of London, and the commons of the same, about the chosyng of the Maior. The Rulers named Alyn Souch: Trouble about But the Commons (specially such as were of the meaner sort) cryed vpon Thomas fitz the election of the Major of Thomas, who was then prisoner in the Castell of Windsore. Wherefore the Aldermen London. were compelled to call for the helpe of sir Roger Leyborne and other, who came to the Guyld hall, beyng harnessed under their gownes, and at the last were enforced to carye certevne of the rascalles to the Counters and other Prisons, and then quietly they went to the election of the sayd Aleyn Souche.

The Gentlemen of whom ye heard before, that kept the Isle of Ely, did now breake The Citie of Norwiche spoylout sundry tymes, and did much hurt in Norffolke and Suffolke and Cambridge shire, ed. and toke the citie of Norwich, and after the spoyllyng and sackyng thereof, caryed away with them many of the Citizens beyng riche, and raunsomed them at great sommes of money, and lyued there in that Isle lyke vnto Outlawes. By these and other many hurtesin diverse places of the land were done, and namely by Theues and persons of euill disposition: but what wickednesse so euer was done, the blame thereof was laid to the Octobone the charge of these gentlemen. And at this time Octobone the Legate laboured vnto the king Popes Legate. that the sayd disenherited gentlemen might purchase theyr landes againe of him by fine and raunsome. By whose labour, the king, at the last agreed that they should have their landes againe by fynes of fyue yere value of their landes. As he that might dispende. xx. pound by the yere should pay an hundreth pound in fiue yeres, and of other after that rate, except sir Robert Ferrers Erle of Darby, Sir John de la Ware, and hym that stroke of the fist of the kinges pursuyuant, and some other persons that were of small countenaunce, should be fined by discretion of the kinges counsaile, but this tooke none effect.

About this tyme was made the statute of weightes and measures, that is to say, that a sterlyng penny should waye. xxxij. graynes of wheate drie and round, and taken in the middes of the eare, and. xx. of those pence shoulde make an ounce, and. xij. ounces make a pound Troy: And. viij. pound Troy weight make a gallon of Wine, and. viij. wyne galons to make a London bushell, which is the viij. part of a quarter. Also three barly Cornes dry and round should make an ynch, &. xij. ynches a foote, & thre foote a yard, and fine yards, halfe a perch, or poll, &. xl. pol in length & thre in bredth an acreof land.

And these standardes of weight and measures were confirmed in the. xv. yere of king Edward the thirde, and also in the tyme of Henry the sixt and of Edward the fourth, and lastly confirmed in the last yere of Henry the seventh. But in the time of king Henry the sixt it was ordeyned that the same ounce should be deuided into. xxx. pence, and in the tyme of king Edward the fourth, into. xl. pence, and in the tyme of king Henry the eight into. xliii, pence: But the weight of the ounce Troy, and the measure of the foote continued alwayes one.

And about this tyme, of what occasion I knowe not, Sir Gilbert de Clare Erle of Gloucester gathered out of the Marches of Wales a great and strong power against the king, and with him also ioyned Sir Iohn Eiuile, and other of the disenherited company, Anew rebellion and shortly after Christmasse came with a great host nere vnto London, Octobone the de Clare Erle of Popes Legate living then in the Tower of London. Gloucester gathered out of the Marches of Wales a great and strong power against the Popes Legate living then in the Tower of London.

Assoone as the Maior and Aldermen of the Citie of London had knowledge of the Erles commyng, and that with a great power, and they themselves not knowyng whether he came as the kinges friend or no: they shut the Gates agaynst the foreryders: and at that tyme neyther was the king nor any of his counsaile in the Citie, nor nere thereun-

to. Wherefore the Major and Aldermen went to the Legate, and required his counsaile whether they should suffer the Erle to enter the Citie or not? And the Legate aunswered that he thought they might let him come in, for he knewe well that he was the kinges true subject and friend.

And immediately after this talke, a messenger came from the Erle to the Maior, willyng to have licence to passe through the Citie into Southwarke, where he entended to lodge him and his people, which was graunted vnto him: and so the Erle passed through the Citie, and was lodged in Southwarke. To whome came shortly after by Southwarke syde sir Iohn Eiuile with a great companie.

The Major at that tyme caused the Gate of the bridge to be shut, and caused a certein number of armed men to watch it, as wel by day as by night, and so did he all the Citie through. And sodeinly the Legate and the Erle agreed so well together, that the Erle by his aduice was suffered, with a certeine of his people to be lodged within the Citie of Lodon. By reason wherof he dayly drue more and more of his people into the Citie. so that at the last many thinges were ordered by him, and many of the Commons tooks hys part against the Major and Aldermen.

And shortly after he gathered vnto him such a courage and aucthoritie, that he tooke the keyes of the bridge, and of the Gates, from the officers of the Citie, and delyuered them to such as pleased him, and receyued into the Citie many of the disherited persons, and gaue to them free libertie to passe the bridge by all houres of the day and night.

The Major of this sent worde to the king, who then was gatheryng of his power in Norffolke, and made hastie spede towardes London. And in the meane while the Erle with his companie made Bulwarkes and Barbicanes between the Tower and the Citie, and cast ditches and trenches in some places of the Citie, and fortefyed it wonderfully.

Then a great number of the sober and graue Citizens feared a new Insurrection, and therefore advoyded the Citie as secretly as they might, whose goodes the Erle seased to his owne vse, or suffered his men to spoyle them at their awne pleasure. And now the rude Commons had quite forgotten theyr great and late affliction and punishment: and as men desperate and without the feare of God, or obedience to their Prince, nor yet respecting nor regardyng any thing at all their awne weales and states, neyther the weales of their Citizens of Lon- householdes, as their wives, children, or friendes, toke certeyne of the Aldermen and cast them in prison, and sequestred their goodes, and spoyled a great part thereof. And in this their rage and fury, they ran to the Guildhall, and there did chose for their Major or Custos of the Citie, Sir Richard Culworth knight, and for Bailifes, Robert Lynton, and Roger Marshall, and discharged the olde Maior and Shirifes. And after this, then went they vnto Newgate, Ludgate, and Creplegate, and all other prisons within the Citie, where they discharged and set at libertie all that were emprisoned for any matter touchyng the Barons warre before passed.

Nowe, the Legate beholdyng all this businesse, and well considering this rebellion and discorde, repented him of his former counsaile geuen to the Maior: and for that he sawe that he could not reforme the Erle of his error, he threatned him with the censures of the Church, and to accursse him as the disenherited were. And forthwith he commaunded the deuine service, to be sayde without note, and the Church dores to be shut in the I doe not thinke tyme of the seruice doyng, and that no Bell were rong vnto the sayde seruice: And all because that the disenherited which stood accursed shoulde not enter into the Churches to we nowe vse, but here the deuine seruice.

And shortly after Easter the king came to him, three miles from London, and he himselfe was lodged in the Abbey of White Monkes in Stratfoord: and sone after the Legate Arte and making came thether vnto him, and was lodged also in the same Abbey, where for streightnesse of lodging, his horse & Mules were set in the Cloyster of the same Abbey. Then the kinges hostes made dayly assaultes, and Gunnes and other ordinaunce were shot into the Citie, which did little or no hurte at all, the towne was so strongly fortefyed.

that these were such Gunnes as rather some pot Gunne, or some such other inuention, for the of Gunnes was not then inuented nor many veres after.

And

And in this tyme the Legate on the one part, and the king of Romaynes on the other part, for alliaunce that was betwene him and the Erle of Gloucester, and chiefely for the advoyding of spillyng and sheddyng of blood, laboured so to the king, that a reformation of peace was spoken of. And during the tyme of the entreatie, the Souldiours that lay in Southwarke, committed many robberyes in Southerey, and many other places, and roued ouer vnto Westminster, and spoyled there the kinges Palace, and deuoured hys Wine, and brake the Glasse of the Windowes, and made a common spoyle of all that belonged to the sayde Palayce, and they did the like also in sundrie places of London. And of that company of Rouers there were foure taken that had the cognisaunce of the Erle of Darby, whose handes the Erle caused to be cut off, and legges to be bound, and them Aiust punishto be put into a sacke, and then to be cast into the Thames and drowned. And about the. xi. day of Iune next following, a peace betweene the King and the Erle of Gloucester was concluded.

And so soone as the former peace was concluded, the Erle remoued out the Citie, and was lodged againe in Southwarke: and the king entered the Citic the Sonday before Midsommer day. And forthwith the kinges Proclamation was made through the Citie of the peace betweene the king and the Erle. And afterwarde was graunted to the disenherited persons that they should have. xj. dayes after to shift for themselves, that is to say, eyther to advoyde vnto such places, where they might be in some suretie, or else to agree to the former composition made by the Legate, and to pay the fift part of the stint of their landes, certeine persons excepted, as before is rehersed.

And as touchyng the Erle, and such other as before were not disenherited, and also the Citizens of London to be clerely pardoned and forgeuen.

And forthwith were restored to their offices Aleyn Sowche for Major, and Thomas Basyng, and Robert de Cornehill for Shriefes, and the Aldermen that before were deposed, were agayne restored to their wardes and offices.

And on the Wednesday nexte following, the Legate enterdicted all the City of London enterdon: which endured from. vj. of the clock in the morning vntill thre of the .ock the next day at after none, and then he discharged it, vpon the othe of two commoners which were sworne in the name of all the Citie, that the Citie shoulde sande to the ordynance and judgement of holy church. But another Chronycle sayth, that this interdiction should haue continued lenger, if the stoutnesse of the Londwers had not beene, who helde the Legate so streyte, that they inforced him to withdrawe that sentence vpon the aforesayde condition.

Sone after, were all the Bullwarkes, Rampires and Barbicans that the Erle had made in and aboute the Citie pulled vp, and the diches filled, that no parte of them was sene. Now were the Citizens enforced agayne to sue for a newe pardon, and aunswere was made vnto them, that as yet they had not recompenced the king of Romaines for the subuersion A pardon against of his manor of Thistleworth which they brent, and for the same he demaunded. vj. thou-more money. sand markes: So that at the last, with great labour and friendship, they agreed to geue vnto hym for amendes a thousande Markes to bee payde in two yeeres.

And not long after the king receyued into his favour Sir Iohn Einyle, Sir Nicholas de Segraue, Sir William Mermion, Sir Richarde Gray, Sir Iohn Fitz Iohn, and Sir Gilbert de Lucye with other. And agreement was also made betweene sir Edwarde the kings sonne and the aforenamed Erle of Gloucester. And then also were all the fortresses and other defences which were made in Southwarke during the time of the lying of the Erle of Gloucesters armie there, and all other places adjoying to the same, pulled downe & destroyed, and the Erle and al other souldiours cleane advoyded. And after all things were set in order and rest, except such as yet kept the Isle of Ely: the king roade to Shrewesbury where he taried a season, for to common of matters betweene hym and Lewelyn or Lleuellen Prince of Wales.

The king thus being at Shrewesbury, a Writ was directed to Sir Aleyn Souche Maior

of London, eight dayes before Mighelmas from the king, charging him that the Citizens shoulde not proceede to the election of newe Shriefes vntill his comming to London, but to suffer the olde to remaine and stande still in office.

This yere there happened a variance betwene the companies of Goldsmithes and Taylors of London, which grewe to making of partes. So that with the Goldsmithes the tooke parte, and with the Taylers tooke parte the Steyners. And Felowship of by this occasion much people mightily gathered in the streetes in harnesse. And at length the sayde parties met to the number of fyue hundreth, and they ranne together with suche violence, that divers were slaine, and many wounded, wherevpon an outcrie was made. so that the Shriefes with the helpe of other Citizens came vnto the ende of the fray, and tooke divers of them, and sent them to sundrie prisons: and the morowe after such inquisition and searche was made, that the greatest part of the principalles and causers of this fray were taken, and put in ward. Then shortly after, Sessions were kept at Newgate by the Major and Laurence de Broke Iustice, and other, where at that tyme was arreigned of felony. xxx. of the sayde persons, whereof. xiij. were condemned and hanged. And for that one Godfray of Beuerley did helpe to arme one of the sayde persons. he was also cast among the other.

The Lent next following, the king being at Westminster, commaunded the Major of London to present vnto him sixe persons, such as were able to be Shirifes. Of the which sixe so presented, the king chose two to be Shirifes, that is to say, William de Durham, and Walter Henry, and then caused them to be sworne, that they should gather the profites of the Citie, and to geue a true accompt for the same before the Barons of the Exchequer.

And the xxvj. day of July, the king discharged Sir Aleyn Sowche of the Mayraltie, and made Stephen Edworth Constable of the Tower, and Custos of the Citie of London. Of these rulers of the Citie, after the yere that Thomas fitz Thomas was Maior. diverse opinions. For after some writers, from that yere, which was the, xlviij. yere of the signe of king Henry, vntill the. lviij. yere of his reigne, in the which yere Iohn Adrian Dieger was Maior, were all Custos and Gardians of the Citie of London.

And at this the by the mediation of Sir Edward the kinges sonne all suche disenherited personnes as kept the Isle of Ely, were reconciled to the king, and all fortresses and defences by them there made, were plucked vp and destroyed.

And in the latter ende of this money of Iuly, Octobone the Legate, after he had made many rules in the Church, not without grew charge of dismes leuyed of the same, tooke his leave of the king and roade towarde the sea zyde, with great treasure, and so returned in processe of tyme to Rome. Where after Innoceat the fift, in the yere of our Lorde a thousand two hundreth seuentie sixe, he was chosen and created Pope of Rome, and then named Adrian the fift, and dyed within fiftie dayes after his election.

Citizens forced to flee the Citie.

At this tyme also, because many of the Citizens of London (for the great imposition and charge that they were set at, toward the fine of. xx. thousand marke aforenamed, with other charges) voyded the Citie, with their householdes and goodes, and inhabited themselves in diverse places of the realme, thinkyng thereby to be acquited of the sayd cessyng or charge: The other of the sayde Citie which remayned, made instant sute and labour to the King, that all such as had for the sayd cause voyded their goodes out of the Citie, should be distreyned by the Shirife of that Shire where they then dwelled, and forced to paye all suche summes of money, as they before were sessed at, which sute they obteyned of the king.

And in the Moneth of September following, the arorenamed five Citizens, which had were imprisoned remayned prisoners in the Tower of Windsore, as before is mencioned in the xlviii, vere, made at this tyme their ende with Sir Edward the kinges sonne for great summes of money, againe delivered, and so were delivered.

In this season was a great and an extreme frost, and began at S. Androwes day, and cotinued vnto Candlemas folowing, & the Thames was so frosen, that men, horse, and A great float. cart went safely ouer betwene London and Westminster. But a little after the breakyng vp of the sayd frost, there fell such an aboundance of raine, that the Thames rose so high, that the lyke thereof had not bene seene by any man then lyuyng. Whereof ensued much harme about London, for the Sellers by the Water syde were all drowned, and in them great plentie of Marchandise perished and was lost.

And this yere the king gaue to Sir Edwarde his sonne the rule of the Citie of London, The Citie of with all reuenues and profites to the same in any wise belonging. After which gift, the prince Edward sayd Sir Edward made Sir Hugh the sonne of Othon Constable of the Tower, and Custos the kinges eldest of the Citie,

And the. ix. day of Aprill following, Sir Edmond the kinges other sonne (surnamed Edmonde Crouchbacke) maryed at Westminster the daughter of the Erle of Aumarle: For solem-kinges second nitie whereof, the king kept in the great Hall there an honourable feast the Sonday fo-sonne.

The last day of Aprill following, Sir Edwarde the kinges sonne, commaunded the Citizens of London to present vnto him sixe persons able to be Shirifes of London. Of the which he admitted to that office, William de Hadistoke, and Anketyll de Alucrne, and sware them to be accomptantes as their predecessors were.

At these dayes a newe custome or toll was vsed to be payed by the Citizens of London A newe toll vnto the king: Which toll Sir Edward had then letten to ferme to a Marchant straunger taxed vpon the Citizens. for. xx. marke a yere. Wherefore the Citizens not willyng to be vnder the rule of a straunger, made great sute vnto the sayd Sir Edward, and lastly agreed with him to buy the same toll fee, for the summe of two hundreth marke.

And in the ende of this yere, the king had graunted vnto him towarde his voyage pur- A great sum of posed into the holy land, the twentie penny of euery mannes substance moueable through- money graunted to the king for out his land of the lay fee: And of the spiritualty three dismes to be levied in three yeres, his voyage to-

And this yere the king of Romaines concluded a couenaunt with Sir Gilbert de Clare, ward lerusalem. Erle of Gloucester, for a voyage to be taken into the holye lande, by the sayde Erle for the king. For the which voyage, the sayde Erle should have of the king towarde his charges. viij. thousand markes, and at the takyng of his shippyng other foure thousand markes, and to be ready by the first day of May next following: And if the Erle were not ready at the sea syde at that day with his company to take shippyng, he should then forfeite to the king two thousand markes. For suretie whereof, the sayde Erle should deliuer into the kinges possession his Castell of Henleger standyng vpon the Marches of Wales: But this came after to no purpose, but the cause why is not shewed. But that Iourney was afterward performed by Sir Edward the kinges sonne, as after shall appere.

In this meane while, the Citizens of London so well pleased and contented Sir Edward the kinges sonnes minde, that he so laboured vnto the kinges grace for them, that he obteyned of the king their Charter in suche wise newely to be confirmed vnto them, The charter and that they should after their auncient liberties chose of themselves a Maior, and two Shi-don againe newly rifes, and the sayde Shirifes to have the offices therevnto belonging to farme. After which graunted. confirmation thus graunted and passed by the kinges broade seale: The Citizens upon the. xiiij. day of Iuly next folowyng, assembled themselves at the Guildhall, and there did choose for their Maior Iohn Adrian Draper, and for their Shirifes, Walter Potter, and Iohn Taylor. And within two daies next following Sir Edward being present, they presented them to the king at Westminster, where they were admitted and sworne, and then was Sir Hugh of Othon discharged of the rule of the Citie.

Then the Citizens of their free will gaue vnto the king an hundreth marke, and to Sir Edward five hundreth marke, which gift the king well accepted. And sone after they receyued their Charter of confirmation bearyng date the. xxi. day of Iuly and the. lv. yere of the reigne of the king.

And by reason the former couenant and agreement that was made between the king and the Erle of Gloucester tooke none effect, therefore Sir Edward tooke vpon him the kinges Crosse: To whom the king gaue all the money that was graunted of the lay Fee, as before is shewed, and then he tooke shippying at Douer the. xx. day of August, and so sayled to Burdeaux, with his wife accompanied with many noble personages.

And because Lewes king of Fraunce was gone before sir Edwarde came, therefore he taried but a little while at Burdeaux, and after went with his foresayde companie toward the Citie of Thunys, where the French king was. But before he could come thether, the French king was deade, and a peace was concluded betwene Philip his sonne, and the king of Thunys. Wherefore Sir Edward entendyng to greeue the enemyes of God, accompanyed with some knightes of Fraunce that entended the same, tooke their leaue of the French kyng, and of Sir Charles his vncle then kyng of Sicile, and sayled further into the holy land, and arryued at a Porte of Acris or Acon. For at that daye there was no mo Cities of the holy lande in the possession of the Christians but the cities of Acon and Tyre, with certeine Castels wherevnto the Christians fled often for succour against the Sarazens.

When Sir Edward was come to Acon, the Christian knyghtes receaued him with great honour and gladnesse, & lodged him in theyr best maner: Where he taried by the space of a yere after, as saith the French Chronicle. And it was not long after that he came thether, but that the Souldane of Surrey came thether also (the which had wonne all the Countries there aboutes) with a great power of Sarazens, and assaulted the Citie strongly and fiercely: But Sir Edward with the ayde of Christen men, bare him so knightly and valyantly, that he defended both the Cities and the Castelles to the same belongyng, and the territories of the same, so that the Souldane for all his great multitude and power gate there little honour: Notwithstanding, he had in his host, as sayth the French Chronicle, aboue an hundreth thousand Sarazens. And the sayd Chronicle affirmeth moreouer, that Sir Edward in his pollecies, and manfull actes so honourably behaued himselfe, that he neuer did the like act all his lyfe folowyng, although he did afterward many honourable deedes, but yet none comparable to those that he did there: By reason whereof, his name among the Infidelles was had in memory many yeres after.

Of the honour of this martiall and valiaunt knight, I have made the lenger rehersall, bicause I finde the same wytnessed of the Frenchmen, the which I knowe well, there must be some great and notable matter that moueth them when they write anye thing in the fauour and commendation of any English Prince, or of any thing done by the nation.

Then this noble Prince being thus in Acon, and daylie putting the Souldane and the Sarazens to shame and great dammages, they seyng that they might not preuayle against hym by strength of battaile, cast howe they might destroy him by treason, and sent vnto him a Sarazen in the name of a Messenger, the which in tellyng of his feyned message, wounded him with a knife enuenomed, of the which wound he laye long before he were thereof cured and healed. But after confession made by the Sarazens of all hys compassed treason, he was put vnto most cruell death.

About this time, the Steeple of S. Mary Bow Church in Cheape in London fell downe and slue both men, women, and children.

This yere the king helde his Parliament in Nouember at Westmynster, in the which the Marchauntes of London and of other partes of the Realme, exhibited a Byll of complaint against the Countesse of Flaundyrs, for that shee had taken from them certayne goodes amountyng to a great summe. Vpon which complaynt, the king sent vnto her to make restitution: But because she made none, the king therefore commanded, that all men which were borne in those parts and now being resiaunt in England, should be arrested, and they and their goodes to be put vnder sure and safe keping. By occasion whereof she at the length sent ouer Ambassadors, and besought the king that his Merchaunts might vse their entercourse into Flaundyrs, as they before tyme had done, and all suche

And in thys yere the Monasterie of the Trinitie in the City of Norwich, was consumed Trinitie Abbay with fyre, by reason of a fray made betweene the seruauntes of the Abbey, and certayne in Norwich beent. Citizens of the Cytie, which grewe to a great skirmish: For the Priour of the same, and others Monkes prouyded souldiours, and helde the Belfraye and the Church by force of armes, & threwe out stones and dartes, and shot many arrowes, by reason whereof, manye of the Towne were both wounded and slayne: which brought the commons and yong men into such a furie and madnesse, that they fyred the Gates, and after forced the fyre with Reede and drie Wood, that the Church wyth the Bookes and all other ornaments of the same, and all houses of office belonging to the same Abbey, were cleane brent and throwne downe, so that nothing was preserved, except it were a little Chapell.

When tydings of thys riot came to the kings knowledge, he was therewith greatly displeased and offended, so that he road thether in hast, and there commaunded questes to be charged, both of knights and Squires that dwelled in the Countrie aboute, and to endite all such persons as were the occasioners and doers of that deede. By reason of which enquirie, there were condemned and judged. xxx. young men of the Towne, the which were after drawne to the place of execution, and there hanged and brent, to the Execution. great discomfiture of the Citizens. For they thought that the Prior of the place was the occasioner of all that mischiefe, which was borne out and defended by the Bishop of Norwich, then named Roger.

Nowe approched the ende, that all fleshe is borne vnto, which is death, of the which nothing is more certeyne to all persons, though the day and houre is most vncerteine. At this tyme the king sickened, and forced to kepe his bed at Westminster, called before him Sir Gilbert Clare Erle of Gloucester: and caused him to be newely sworne to kepe the peace of the lande, to the behoofe of Edward his sonne, and then dyed the. xvj. day of King Henry the Nouember, when he had reigned. lvj. yeres, and. xxvij. dayes, leauyng after him Sir Ed- third died. ward before named for his heyre, and Edmond Crouchbacke his sonnes, and is buryed at Westminster.

EDWARDE THE FIRST.

P Dward the first of that name, and sonne of king Henry the third, surnamed Long- King Edwardthe shanke, beyng of the age of. xxxv. yeres, began his reigne ouer Englande the. xvij. first. day of the moneth of November, and in the yere of oure Lorde. M. CC. lxxij.

This Edward as before is shewed in the. lv. yere of his fathers reigne, was in the holye land when his father dyed, and there did manye notable feates of warre as is aforesayd. And while he was so exercised, tidyngs was brought vnto him that his father was dead: Wherefore in all hast, he sped him into England, and came to London the seconde day of August, and was crowned at Westminster, with Alianor his wife sister vnto the king of Spaigne, the xiiij. day of December following of Robert Archebishop of Cauntorbury, 002 which was in the beginning of the second yere of his reigne. At his Coronation were present the king of Scottes, and John Erle of Britein, with they wyues the kinges sisters which lived short while after. Mathew of Westminster.

The next day after his Coronation, the Scottishe king aforesayde dyd homage vnto him for the realme of Scotland.

In the beginning of the reigne of this king Edward the first, the busic Citizens of London attempted to have made a Maior as they woulde, but they were by the discreter number preuented: Notwithstanding in the yere following their purpose tooks more effect.

As before is sayde in the moneth of August, the King came to London, where he was ioyfully received of the Citizens, and with all honour conveyed to Westminster, where he kept great observaunces for his father a certeyne of tyme after.

Nowe the lewde purpose which the yere passed was in the light Citizens, began to breake foorth: For where Philip le Taylor who before had beene chosen Maior of London, shoulde vpon the day of Simon and Iude haue bene placed in the Chayre of the Guyldhall as the maner is, dyuerse of the Citizens put him besyde the Chayre, and put therein Walter Heruy, that was Maior the yere before. By reason whereof, great rumor and grudge arose among the Citizens: the matter whereof was after brought before the king, who heeryng the reasons of both partes, forsomuche as he could not agree them, he put both the sayd Sir Walter, and the sayd Philip asyde, and did choose Henry Frowike for Custos of the Citie, and so continued vntill Candelmasse next after. At which time by discrete & wise peaceable meanes, the aforenamed Sir Walter Haruie was set in aucthoritie as Maior, and so continued the whole yere.

Lluellen Prince At this time Lewlyn, or Lluellen Prince of Wales rebelled, and king Edward after the solempnitie of his Coronation gathered a great power together, and went toward Wales, Lewlynsubdued and subdued the sayd Lewlyn.

The cause of this rebellion (saith Polidore) was for that the same Lluellyn being desyrous to make a styrre and businesse in England, and joynyng in amitie with the French king, sent messengers to king Philip of Fraunce to desyre his good will that he might mary Ladie Alianor the daughter of Simon Mountfort Erle of Leycester, which then was a banished woman in Fraunce, as was her mother also, and Henry her brother. The which request of his the king graunted, and so sent the Damosell vnto him by her sayd brother The which Alianor with her brother were both taken by the English fleete, when they were approched nere vnto Wales about Bristow, and were brought vnto king Edward. Nowe when Prince Lluellen vnderstood this, he was so moued with the fact, that he streight wayes armed himselfe, and so makyng a roade into the Marches of Englande, wasted and destroyed the Countrie as he went, and slue all that he met with. For repression of the which his outrage and fury, and to relieve his distressed subjects there, the king reysed a puyssaunt armie, and at the length, when the Prince sawe what daunger he was in, and how lyke he was to be discomfitted, he submitted and yelded himselfe to his mercy, who vpon the sayd submission pardoned him, and with much ado deliuered him the sayd Ladie that was sent him (her virginitie remayning vinspotted) whome he shortly after maryed. But Mathew of Westminster sayth, that he gaue the king afore hand in the name of a fine for his transgression fiftie thousande markes, and bound himselfe to pay yerely in the kinges Exchequer, a thousand markes more. And sone after he returned and ordeyned certeine newe lawes for the wealth of the Realme, which are to long here to reherse. Among the which one was that Bakers making bread lacking the weight assigned, after the price of corne, should first be punished by losse of bread, and the second tyme by emprisonment, and lastly by the correction of the Pillory: And Milners for stealyng of corne, to be punished by the Tomberell: And for the execution hereof, he gaue aucthoritie, to all Maiors, Bailifes, and other officers through England, but specially to the Maior of London. He made a law also the same time against the excessive takyng of Vsurie

Vsurie by the Iewes, and that they should weare a certeine cognisaunce upon their uppermost garment, whereby they should be knowne from Christians.

And this yere the king confirmed the liberties of the Citie of London, and graunted

And at this time he helde his great Court of Parliament at Westminster, and summoned A parliamet. Lewlyn Prince of Wales to come to the same, the which presumptuously he denied. Lewlyn Prince Wherefore then shortly after he entered agains into Wales, and so warred vpon the sayd of Wales again Lewlyn, that he was constrayned to submit himselfe to the kinges graces mercie, and ob-rebelled and was subdued. teyned it with great difficultie, as is beforesayd.

After this king Edward builded the Castell of Flint, and strengthned the Castell of Rutland and other, with Englishe men, to kepe the Welshmen in due obedience, and so returned to London.

The aforenamed Walter Haruy who after long controuersie and strife by him made and Walter Haruy chosen Maior. continued against the Aldermen of London, and in the first yere of the king was at a folkemote holden at Paules crosse chosen Major of London, and continued out that whole A folkemote. yere to the great trouble and hurt of the Citie, and he was this yere accused of dyuerse periuryes, and dedes done contrary to his othe. For the which, and for making of assemblyes of the Commons that fauoured him in his euill deedes, he was depriued of his Walter Harvy Aldermanship and counsaile of the Citie for euer, and found suretie of. xij. honest persons that he should be of good abearyng for kepyng of the kinges peace within the Citie, for terme of his life.

And this yere was the statute of Mortmayn first enacted, which is that no man should geue vnto the Church any landes or rentes, without a speciall lycence first obteyined of the king: which acte sithen that tyme is set out more largely, and divers things added there-Mortmain. vnto.

In this tyme the king had in his court one Dauid brother vnto Lewlyn Prince of Wales, which Dauid did vnto the king suche pleasaunt seruice that the king bare him such loue and fauour that he gaue him the Lordship of Froddesham in Chesshire, but afterwarde, it did David brother of right well appere, that he was but a Trayterous spie to geue his brother Lewlin warning of Wales a spie. and knowledge, of all the kings will and minde.

And thys yere Mighelmas Terme was kept at Shrowesburie, but at Hillarie Terme following, it was agayne remoued to Westmynster. In the which by reason of caryage and of great raynes that then did fall, the records were sore blemished and defaced.

And in thys tyme a Parliament was holden at London chiefely for the reformation of the kings coyne, which then was sore clipped, by reason wherof, the same was much diminished and empayred.

The coyne sore

And in the time of thys Parliament, manye of the Iewes in London, and other places of the Realme were taken and put in prison for clypping of Money, and in December following, dyuers enquestes were charged in London to enquire of the sayde Iewes and other that had so blemished the kings coyne. By the which enquestes the Iewes of the Citie, with dyners Goldsmithes that kept exchange of Siluer were endicted. And shortly after Candlemas, the Maior and Iustices of the lande, sat at London, where before them was cast. CClxxxxvii. persons. Of the which were but three Englishemen, and all the reast were Iewes, and A great execusuche as came of Iewes borne in this Realme or else where, who were all at sundrie places tion of Iewes. & tymes put to execution.

And this yere beganne the foundation of the black Fryers beside Ludgate and of Baynardes Castell. And the same yere also was the Towne of Boston in Lincolneshire, greatly Boston brent. blemished with fyre.

And at thys tyme the king caused the half peny and farthing to be coyned of Siluer: where before, other coynes of mettall went among the people, to their great noyaunce.

But the lack of theaforesayde coynes in these oure dayes are a great losse and hinderaunce farthings lack in to the pouertie of thys Realme. And in the Winter of thys yere, there fell so great snow, that thereof ensued much harme.

Wales.

At thus tyme Dauid the brother of Lewlyn Prince of Wales (of whom before you haue heard) which dwelled in the kings court, to know the kings Coun-ayle, and thereof to David brother of informe hys brother: when he had that he wayted for, he secretly gate him into Wales to Lewlyn fled into his brother, & prouoked him against the king in all that he might: and caused hym to victuall and man certaine Castelles within Wales, and specially the Castell of Swandon, wherein he much trusted, and gathered vnto him the Welshemen, by giftes and other meanes, so that he was verie strong.

Whereof, when the king was informed, he woulde therevnto geue no credite, vntill he he had sent thether, and received from thence the certaintie. But for so much as winter was then toward, he might not as then go thether with any power, and therefore he prouyded to sende men and victualles to strengthen the Castels of Flynt and Rutlande, and other holdes which he there had, and made prouision to warre vppon them in the beginning of the next spring.

The king sendeth a power into Wales to tame

But the king yet hearing more and more of the vnstedfastnesse of the welshemen, and to keepe them from the anoyeng of his holdes sent thether the Erles of Northumberlande and Surrey with a lustic Crewe of Souldiours, and with them went Sir Roger Clifforde, Sir Wylliam Lyndsey, Sir Richard Tanny, and many other knightes and Esquires. the welshemen. which with great courage entered Wales, and made with the Welshmen manye skirmishes vntill at the last vpon Palme Sunday, Dauid with a great power of Welshmen, met with The Englishmen the sayde Lordes and knightes at a place neere to a Towne called Hauerden, where betwene them was a sore fight, but in the end the losse fell to the Englishmen, for there were slaine Sir Wylliam Lyndsey. Sir Richarde Tanny with manye other, and Sir Roger Clifford was taken.

After the which ouerthrowe of the Englishe men, the sayd Dauid layde siege vnto the Castelles of Flint and Rutland. And his brother in that tyme warred and occupyed the landes of Sir Edmond Mortimer, and wan the towne called Llan matreuer, and threwe the Walles thereof downe to the ground. This towne also is called Abriswith, or rather Oswistrey. It was not long after or the brute of the ouerthrowe of the Englishe men came vnto the towne, wherefore he sped him the faster thetherward.

Nowe, while king Edward was busyed in the rescuying of his men that were besieged of Dauid, Sir Roger Clifford with other, which entended to rayse men to set upon the Welshemen, was drowned by follie vpon a bridge made of Barges & Plankes to have passed a water betwene Snowdon and Anglesey. And the thirde day of December next following, was Lewlyn Prince of Wales slaine by Sir Edmond Mortimer and his companie, and his Wales stained head was sent vnto the king then being at Rutland: The which he sent vnto London, chargyng that it should be set vpon the Tower of London.

About this tyme was Marton College in Oxford founded by Water Marton Bishop of Rochester, and Lord Chauncelor of England, who was drowned passyng ouer the water of Rochester, having at that tyme no bridge for people to passe ouer as it nowe hath.

Wales deuided into shires.

The king continuong still in Wales, prosecuted Dauid the brother of Lewlyn from towne to towne, so that at the last he was taken and brought to the king, about Midsommer, and there kept in warde, vntill the king had sped his businesse. And then had the king the whole countrie at his will, and gaue vnto Englishe Lordes, Townes in the middle of Wales, and deuyded the Countrie into shires, and ordeined there Shirifes & other officers in like maner as then was vsed in England, and as it is there now at this day. At Aberconow he made a strong Castell, where before there was a house of white Monkes: The which he removed from thence, & provided for them in another place called afterwardes Vale Royall. He also made then the Castel of Carnaruan fast by Snowdon hill, and repayred agains the towne Llan Matreuer aforesayd, which Lewlyn had beaten downe. Also he garnished the Castelles and holdes standyng vpon the sea syde with Englishe men, and made the Englishemen Englishemen Lordes of the groundes belonging to the same. And when the king had put the A parliamet at Countrie in good order, and all thinges were quieted, then about Michaelmasse he returned Shrewesbury. to Shrewesbury, where he helde a Parliament. In the tyme whereof the aforesayde Dauyd, Dauid the broas chiefe styrrer & beginner of all this warre, was there demed to be drawen, hanged, and ther of Lewlyn quartered, and so he was shortly after at the sayde towne of Shrewesbury, and his head & quartered. sent to London, and set by the heade of his brother Lewlyn, or Lluellen.

And this yere the king had his first sonne borne at the Castell of Carnaruan, while he Edward of Carwas in Wales, and he was named Edward of Carnaruan, and was borne vpon the. xxv. kinges first day of Aprill, and was king after him.

In this yere also, there was found one Lawrence Doket a Citizen of London, deade Lawrence and hanged in Saint Mary Bow Church in Chepe. For the which, enquiries were made, Bowe Church and in the ende for that dede were attainted these, vii. persons following, that is to say: Reignold of Lancaster, Robert Pynnot, Paule of Stepinhithe, Thomas Cordwayner, Iohn Execution. Talanson, Thomas Russell, & Robert Scot, the which were all for that deede drawne & hanged. And a woman also for the same decde was brent. And Raufe Crepyn, Iourdan Goodchepe, Gilbert Clerke, and Geoffrey Clerke, were also attainted for the same cause: But they were repryed & sent vnto the Tower of London, where they remayned long after, but at the last were deliuered.

And in this yere the great Conduit in London, standing against the church called Acres Variance between ye king in Chepe was first begon to be made. And in this yere began a strife or vnkindnes to and the Eric of kindle betwene the king, & the Erle of Leycester, or as some write of Gloucester, which Leycester. after turned to the great trouble of manye townes in Englande, but specially to the Citie of London, as after shall be shewed.

This yere the king seazed the liberties of the Citie, and discharged the Maior that then was, who was named Gregory Rokesley, and appoynted Stephen Sandwich to be Custos and Gardian of the Citie of London, and the same Sandwich continued in the office vntill Liberties of London against Candlemas next following, and then was he discharged, and Sir Ihon Breton knight seazed. charged for the rest of the yere.

The cause of the displeasure that the king had against the Citie, as appereth by Iohn Rastell, was that the sayd Gregory Rokesley tooke certaine bribes of the Bakers, and suffered them to sell bread that lacked sixe or seven ounces in a penny loafe. But this appereth not to be a sufficient cause, for the offence of the Maior beyng but one man, to take away the liberties of the whole Citie who offended not: Wherefore I thinke there was some greater cause.

And in this yere was full finished and ended the newe worke of the Church of Westminter, to the ende of the Quire, begon as before is shewed in the thirde yere of the thirde Henry: By which accompt, it should appere that the sayd Church was. lxvj. yeres in But of the buildyng of this Church are sundrie opinions, as ye may se more at large in Fabian.

This yere the king helde his Parliament at Westminster, wherin were made the statutes called Additamenta Glocestria, that is to say, additions of statutes ioyned to them which before were made at Gloucester.

Also it happened aboute this tyme that a Citizen of London named Thomas Piwelsdon, certria. which in the tyme of the Barons warre before mencioned, had bene a great styrrer vp of the Commons of the Citie for to mainteine the Barons part against the king, was nowe newely accused, that he with other of euill disposition should make conventicles and assemblies to the newe griefe and disturbaunce of the Citie. Whereof report was made vnto the king, who remitted the inquirie thereof vnto Sir Raufe Sandwiche then Custos of the Citie.

Then the sayd Thomas with other were put in sure and safe keping vntill the matter were duely enquired of. After whiche inquisition made and found, report thereof was made vnto the king. Then the king sent downe a writ, and commaunded it to be proclaymed shortly after within the boundes of the Citie, whereof the effect was thus: That Citizens banish the sayde Thomas Piwelsdon, William de Heywood, Richard de Coundrys, Richard le Cofferre, Robert de Darby, Albyn de Darby, William Mayo Mercer, and John Ling Draper, with dyuerse other to the number of fiftie persons, should be banished out of the Citie for euer. And if any of the sayde fiftie persons were at that tyme of the Proclamation voyded the Citie for feare or otherwise, that they should remain & not returne vnto the Citie vpon paine of losyng his life.

> And in this tyme also, where of long tyme before the Marchant straungers comming with their Marchaundise were lodged within Citizens of the Citie of London, and solde all their wares by the procurement of hys hoste, for the which his sayde hoste had a certaine of enery pounde. But now the sayde Marchauntes had so brought it to passe, that they might hier for themselves, houses to dwel in, and sellers for stowage of their wares, so that no Citizen had to doe with them: By meane whereof, they vsed many deceits, both in vtteraunce of false wares, and also in weightes which they vsed in their awne houses, to the great hurte of the whole Realme of Englande. Wherefore sodainely search was made. and their weightes founde and proued false. And besides that, all such wares as they shoulde have weyed at the kings Beame, they weighed much thereof at their awne houses, to the hinderaunce of the kinges Custome, for which offences against them proued, to the number of twentie of the sayde straungers were arrested, and sent to the Tower of London, and their weightes brent and consumed in West Cheape of London. But in the ende the sayde Marchauntes were delivered by making of fine to the king of a thousande pounde, when of a long season they had suffred harde and vyle imprisonment.

15 Great sumes of money was offered to the king to banish all the lewes out of England. King Edward did homage for the Duchie of Guyan.

Thys yere the commons of Englande offered vnto the king the fift part of their moueables to have the Iewes cleerely banished the realme of Englande: But the Iewes perceauing the lutent of the commons, dyd preuent them, and gaue to the king great summes of money, but within fewe yeres after they were all exyled.

And in this yere about the beginning of May, the king sayled into France where he was most honorably receyued of Philip the French king, where king Edward did to him homage for the Duchye of Guyan. And after king Edwarde had remayned there a while, he returned vnto Burdeaux, whether came vnto him certaine Ambassadours from the king of Spaine, with the which he helde long dalyaunce. Wherefore, of the French king he was suspected that he shoulde alve himselfe with the king of Spayne agaynste the Frenche king.

Aboute this time fell a great variaunce betweene Sir Paine Tiptoft Wardein of certein Castelles in Wales, and a Welshe knight called sir Rice ap Mordack, or Meridock, so that sundrie skirmishes were foughten betwene them, and men slaine on both sydes, to the great disturbance of all the Countrie.

This yere and in the moneth of August, king Edward returned out of Fraunce, and came to the Citie of London, where he was honourably receiued by the Citizens, and conveyed to Westminster, where shortly after were brought vnto him many grieuous complaintes of diverse of his Iustices, as Sir Thomas Weyland, Adam Stretton, and other, whome the king caused to be streitly examined, and in the end they were found guiltie of such trespasses and causes as they were accused of. Wherefore some of them were outlawed, and lost such goodes as they had, and the other punished by long imprisonment, and at the last delivered by paiving of great fines.

And in the ende of this yere, Alexander king of Scottes, as he was runnyng his horse, Alexander king fell horse and man to the grounde and brake his necke, and died immediatly, by reason his neck. whereof there ensued great warre and trouble for the enheritance of that land. the last by the consent of king Edward, the crowne was geuen to Ihon Bailioll, who afterward to gratifie the English nation, buylded a Colledge in Oxford nowe called Bailioll Bailioll colledge Colledge. Also at this time, Sir Gilbert de Clare Erle of Gloucester maried dame Iohan daughter Gilbert de Clare of king Edward. This yere died Quene Alianor the kinges wife, & was buried at Westminster. This Gentelwoman as before is touched in the. xxxviij. yere of king Henry y third, was sister vnto the king of Spaine: by whom king Edward had foure sonnes, that is to say, Iohn, Queene Alianour the kinges wife Henry, Alphons, and Edward, which Edward succeded his father, for that the other deceased three dyed before their father. Also he had by her five daughters. The first Alianor, who was maryed vnto William Barre. The seconde Iohan of Acres, or of Acon, maryed vnto the Erle of Gloucester, the thirde Margaret, maryed to the Duke of Brabandes sonne, the fourth Mary, who was made a Nonne at Ambresbury, and the fift named Elizabeth, who was maryed vnto the Erle of Holland, and after his death she was maryed vnto Humfrey Boherum Erle of Herfort. Notwithstanding afterward the king considering their great burdens and entending somewhat to gratefie them againe, promised to graut them something for to pleasure them if they would aske it at his hands. And nowe againe the king helde his high Court of Parliament at London, vnto the which came the king of Scottes and dyners Lordes of that Prouynce. And after he had remayned there a certayne tyme, he was then conuaved by dyuers Lordes of thys Realme. a great way vpon his journey toward his awne Countrie.

And here by the way for a note, it happened one called Richarde Bagle an officer of London to arest a man, and leadyng hys prisoner to the Compter, there came three men and rescued the sayde prisoner, and tooke him from the officer: The which were pursued A rescue punish- and taken, and by judgement & lawe then vsed, they were brought into west Cheape in London, and there had their right handes striken of by the wrestes.

About the midst of September following the Erle of Barre a Frenchman maried Alianour the kinges daughter in the towne of Bristowe.

Now again the Welshemen beganne to sturre, by the prouocation of one Madock: wherof when the king was informed, he in all haste sped him vnto Westchester, and about the sixt day of 'December wanne from the sayde Madock the Isle called Anglesey, and buylded newe the Castle and Citie of Bew marise, and brought the vnstedfast welshmen to a better order and stay; and then he caused the woodes of the Countrie to be hewen downe, wherein before tyme they used to hyde them, as a Cony doth in his hole: and he so repayred the Castels and strong holdes, and buylded some newe, in such wise that he caused the welshmen to be quiet and to go about their awne thrift, against their willes, for by the strength of those Castelles, they were kept from their olde accustomed rauynes and stealings, and put so to execution by the Capitaines of the saide Castels that they fell vnto occupation, and to byeng and sellyng, and gathered treasure together, and began to lyue after the manner of Englishmen, so that more and more that Countrey grewe vnto restfulnesse and peace.

And this yere the Frenchmen with a certaine of Shippes landed at Douer, and spoyled that Towne, and brent a parte of it. In which skirmishe was slaine one Thomas of Douer.

This yere also as sayeth the French Chronicle, Charles de valoys brother vnto king Philip of Fraunce, was sent by his sayde brother into Gascoyne, with a great hoste. Charles layde his siege vnto the Castell of Ryon, wherein were at that tyme, Sir Iohn Seynt Iohn, and Iohn of Briteyn, the which manfully and valiauntly defended the aforesayde Castell against the Frenchmen all that yere and more.

Now in the xxiiii, yere of his reigne, for that he had great warres, as well with the French king as else where, he commaunded a newe subsedy to be leuyed vpon all Serplers A subsedic leny- of wolle goyng out of Englande, with all Felles and Hydes in lyke maner. And besides this he required also of the Clergie all the money which they had graunted towarde the defence of the holye lande, and the rather for that he hearde from the Court of Rome of the Popes maners, and therefore commaunded it to be brought into his treasurie. And more-Agreat subsedie ouer, by a convocation of the sayde Clergie, he had graunted vnto him towardes his warres, halfe of their spirituall and temporall lands, beginning at twentie Marke benefice, and so ascending vpward, the which was not payde in one yere but by deuided porcions, it was payde in three yeres next ensuying. And of the lay fee or Temporaltie of Englande, he had graunted vnto him the tenth penny of their moueables, the which was payde in two yeres next ensuying.

> This yere also was hanged drawne and quartered in London for treason done in Fraunce a knight called Sir Thomas Turbeuyle.

Also about the time of Easter, when Charles de valoys as ye before haue heard, had Iven long at the Castell of Ryon, and had no hope to wynne anye thing vpon the English-Ryon Castell men but that daylie he lost the best of his knightes, he sent then for more ayde and succour. newly assaulted, At which tyme came vnto hym Sir Rause Nele Constable of Fraunce with a freshe company, and then assaulted it a newe. But when they had lyen there a season, and sawe they preuayled nothing against their enemies, they went vnto a holde thereby named Pou-Poudency is. dency, and assaulted it, because the greatest parte of the souldiours there were Normans: and after viij. dayes, by appointment or otherwise, they gate the sayde holde, so that all the Englishmen had their libertie and goodes, and the Normanes were taken as prisoners, the which they brought after vnto the Castell of Ryon, and there in sight of the Souldyours. hanged all or the more parte of the sayde Normans. When the Gascoynes being within the Towne and Castell of Ryons, sawe their cosyns and Countreymen hanged before their even. they cast in their minde, that it was done by treason of Englishmen, and that they woulde at length deale with them in lyke maner. By reason whereof, strife and varyaunce arose, betweene the Englishmen and the Gascoynes, so that either of them feared the treason of the other. For the which cause, Sir Iohn Seynt Iohn, and Iohn of Briteyn, Sir Robert Typtoft, Sir Raufe Tanny, Sir Hugh Bardolph, and Sir Adam Cretyng, with dyuers other fled by Sea, & in that maner saued themselves: and soone after the sayde Towne and Castell of Ryons was wonne by the Frenchemen, and the inhabitaunts of the same sworne vnto Ryon Castellis the french king.

But here a little to returne back, ye have before in the. xviij. yere of thys king heard, that A briefe colafter the death of Alexander king of Scottes, many questions fell among the same Scottes, homages done by who by right of inheritaunce shoulde be king of that lande, considering that the sayde the Scottishe kinger vnto the Alexander, had left after hym three daughters the which in the lyfe of their father were kinger of Eug-The first to Sir Iohn Bayliol, the second to Robert le Bruze, and the thirde to land. one named Hastynges. Many of the Lordes of Scotland woulde have crowned Sir John Bayliol, by reason that he maried the eldest daughter: But the friendes of Robert le Bruze withstoode it with all their power: And other there were, that helde with Hastings, so that after long strife and great variaunce the matter was brought before king Edwarde, as chiefe Lorde and Souereigne of that lande, and all those that made clayme to the Crowne of Scotlande promised to abyde and stande vnto suche determination & judgement, as king Edward should set therein. Then king Edwarde, to the ende that the Scottes should knowe perfitely, that the king of Englande ought of right to be their chiefe head and souereigne. shewed vnto them suche olde wrytings, as he a little before had caused to be searched & founde out, in the which it was conteyned by the authoritie of olde Chroniclers and writers, as Marianus the Scot, Wylliam of Malmesburie, Roger of Huntyngdon and other that in the yere of our Lorde nine hundred and twentie, king Edward the elder made The subjection subject vnto hym the kings of Combrys and of Scottes. And in the nine hundred xxj. and homage of yere the aforesayde Scottes and Combrys, chose the sayde Edwarde the elder to be their scottes, chiefe Lorde and patrone. And in the yere of our Lorde nine hundred. xxvj. Athelstane then king of England subdued Constantine then king of Scottes with the Northumbres, Constantine and receyued of them againe othe and homage. And it is further founde in the sayde Kinge of Scottes. Moreover it is there further witnessed, that Canutus in the. xvi. yere of his reigne subdued Malcolyn then king of Scottes, and receaucd of him fealtie Malcolme Kinge and homage. Furthermore, William Conquerour in the. vj. vere of his reigne subdued of Scottes. Malcolyne king of Scotlande, the which before tyme had receyued the sayde kingdome of the gift of Edward king and confessor. And Wylliam Rufus or Wylliam the Red, did in likewise to the sayde Malcolyn, and vnto his two sonnes that reigned in Scotlande the one after the other. his coronation, and after came vnto hys father Henry the seconde, when the aforenamed Henry was dead in Normandy and made his homage to him againe. This Henry that was sonne vnto Henry the second, is of many writers named Henry the thirde, bicause he was the thirde king that was crowned of that name: But because he dyed before his father, his deedes be little spoken of, so that of some writers he is nothing minded. And it followeth in the storie, how that Alexander king of Scots in the. xxxv. yere of Henry the thirde or sonne of king Iohn, maryed at Yorke Margaret the daughter of the sayde Henry. and did vnto him homage for the Realme of Scotlande, and bounde him and hys heyres kings of Scotland by his letters patentz to be true vnto the sayde Henry, and vnto his heyres kinges of Englande lyke as before Wylliam king of Scottes had bounde himselfe vnto the seconde Henry, as before in the. xxij. yere of his reigne is more manifestly shewed. And more, there was shewed vnto them the Popes Bulles, the which were sent before time into Scotlande, by aucthoritie whereof, the kinges of Scotlande were accurssed because they woulde not be obedient to their Lordes kinges of Englande.

Parliamet holden at Norham

¶ When all these presidentes were seene by the Scottes, a day was assigned of meetyng at Norham in the marches betweene England and Scotland, whether vnto the king came, & al the nobles and chiefe rulers of Scotland. And there and then also the king helde his high Court of Parliament, where openly in the presence of all the nobilitie of Scotland who were called specially thether, the king himselfe in the Churche of Norham declared that the right of the Dominion and superioritie of the realme of Scotlande doth iustly apperteigne and belong vnto the Crowne of England, and therefore required of them to acknowledge and confesse the same, protestyng and makyng his vowe that he would defende the same his right with the aduenture of the losse of his life, and further he required of them that they would enter into bond, not onely to acknowledge him their chiefe and supreme Lorde, but also to abyde his sentence, order and judgement, in appoynting and placyng such a person to reigne ouer them, as their king, as should by his judgement be thought to have most right therevnto: But the Scottes not willyng to be bound, vsed many excuses, but at the last they consented: Wherevoon all the Nobilitie of Scotland, and namely all those that made claime to the crowne, entered into bond, the tenor whereof followeth, beyng made letters patentes, wherevnto were fixed their seuerall seales.

The confession of the Noblemen of Scotland and their bond of Englande.

TO all men that shall eyther see or heere these presentes, Florence Erle of Holland, Robert Bruze Lorde of Valley Androw, John Baylioll Lorde of Galloway, John Hastings Lorde of Aberganenny, Iohn Comynes Lord of Badenagh, Patrike of Dunbarre Erle of made to the king March, Iohn Vessy deputie for his father, Nicholas of Sules, William of Roos, sendeth gretyng in the Lord: Where as we beleue and thinke that we have a right and title to the kingdome of Scotland, and our entent and meaning is to declare, chalenge, and trie the same right and title before him which hath the superiour power, iurisdiction and aucthoritie to debate and examine the same: And the noble prince Lord Edward by the grace of God king of England hath informed vs by good and sufficient reasons, that the same belogeth to him, & that he ought to have the superiour dominion of the kingdome of Scotlande, and the aucthoritie to here, examine, and decyde our right and title. awne proper accorde, not beyng compelled or enforced therevnto, will, and graunt to receyue our ryght and title before him as superior Lorde of the land. Moreouer we will and promise to observe and holde his deede firme and stable: And that he shall have and enioy the kingdome, to whome the better right and title shall before him be tryed and iudged. In witnesse whereof, we vnto these wrytynges haue put our Seales, dated at Norham the thirde day after the Ascention of our Lorde. 1291.

¶ Now after the Lordes of Scotland had acknowledged the superiority of Dominion of Scotland to apperteyne to the king of Englande, and had submitted themselues to receyue and abyde his determination and judgement: Then the king demanded of them the possession of their Castelles, and of the whole realme of Scotland, that he might be peaceably seased in his right of superioritie and dominion mencioned in their former letters, to the entent the same might clerely appere vnto the worlde. And forthwith, they graunted vnto the kinges peticion, and therevppon made their letters in French, and signed and sealed the same in maner and forme following.

TO all men that shall see or heere these presents, Florence Erle of Holland, Robert The letters of Bruce Lorde of Vally Androw, Iohn Bailioll Lorde of Galloway, Iohn Hastings Lorde the Lordes of of Aberganenny, Iohn Comynes Lorde of Badenagh, Patrike of Dunbarre Erle of March, Scotlande vnto king Edward. Iohn Vessy Deputie for his father, Nicholas Sules, and William of Roos sende gretyng in our Lorde: Forasmuch as wee of our good will and common assent, without all compulsion have yelded and graunted vnto the noble Prince Lorde Edwarde, by the grace of God king of England, that he as the superiour Lorde of the land of Scotlande hath power to heere, examine, and decyde our chalenges and sutes which we entende to declare and proue for the receyuyng of our ryght and title before him as the superiour Lord of the land: promising moreover that we will observe firme and stable whatsoever he judgeth or determineth, and that he shall obteyne the kingdome of Scotland, whose title shall before him be proued and judged to be most lawfull: But forasmuch as the said king can neyther make nor accomplishe his examination without judgement, neyther ought judgement to be without execution, nor can he duely make execution without the possession and seisyn of the sayde lande and Castelles of the same: We therefore will, permit, and graunt, that he as the superior Lorde shall have for the accomplishing and perfourmance of the premisses, the seisyn of the whole land of Scotlande, and Castelles of the same, vntill suche tyme as the matter be determined betwene them, who make claime and chalenge the right to be king of Scotland: But yet vpon this condicion, that before the sayde king Edward haue the seisyn, he make good and sufficient assuraunce vnto the sutors, wardeynes and communaltie of the kingdome of Scotland, for the restitutio and redeliuerie to them of the kingdome, with all the royaltie, dignitie, and dominion, liberties, customes, rightes, lawes, vses, possessions, and all what socuer therevnto apperteine, in the same state wherein they were at the time of seisyn deliuered to hym: And he shall deliuer it vnto him to whome by right it shall be due, according to his royall judgement: Sauyng vnto the king of England the homage of him that shal be king. And this restitution shall be made within two monethes after the tyme that this title shall be discussed, ratefied and established: The revenues of the aforesayd land in the meane tyme shall be receyued and layd vp in safe custodie, and shall be well kept by the handes of the treasurer of Scotlande that nowe is, and his whom herevnto the king of Engiand shall assigne, & this to be done vnder their seales, sauyng a reasonable sustentation of the lande, Castelles, and ministers of the kingdome. In witnesse of all the premisses, we have vnto these writinges put our seales, dated at Norham the Wednesday next ensuying the Ascention of our Lorde, 1291.

These two aforesaid letters, the king caused sundry copies of them to be made, & sent the same under his primy seale to diverse Abbeyes in the realme, of England in the. xix. yere of his reigne, that they might there be recorded for perpetual memory, & to be published by the Monkes in their Chronicles.

And foorthwith, by the common assent of the nobilitie of Scotlande, the king had the King Edward in season and possession of the whole realme of Scotland, and helde the same vntill suche seased of all time as he had determined who of right was the next heire to the sayde Kingdome.

The same yere the King of Englande, after the feast of the nativitie of Saint Iohn Baptist went into Scotland, and there received the allegacions of those that made clayme to the Kingdome of Scotlande, according to the aucthority to him committed, and did cause to be elected and chosen. xl. persons that is to say, xx. of England, and xx. of Scotland, which with good aduisement should consider vpon their allegations, and to make report vnto him of their sentence and iudgement, before the feast of Saint Mighell then next following. And when the sayde feast came, after great and long debatyng, by the consent of them all, king Edward adjudged the kingdome of Scotland of right to apperteyne

King Edward to John Bailioll, which came of the eldest daughter of Dauid king of Scottes. Robert dom of Scotland de Bruce, betweene whome and the aforesayde Iohn the strife did chiefely consist, although to lohn Baylioll, he had some colour of title, yet he discended of the second daughter of Dauid, and so his claying tooke no place: Wherefore the aforesayd Iohn Bailioll at the feast of Saint Androw next following, was with much honour brought vnto the Regall seate, and in the same place was placed, and afterward crowned with great solempnitie in a Church of a house of Chanons in Scotland.

After his coronation he came vnto the King of England, who then kept his feast of Christmasse at Newe Castell vpon Tyne, and there made his homage with these wordes.

I Iohn Bailioll King of Scottes do knowledge me to be your liege man for all the Kingdome of Scotland, and of all those thinges that in any wyse belong to the same, and that I holde the same Kingdome, and of right I ought and clayme to holde the same of you, and of your heyres kinges of England with the adventure of my lyfe and members, and of all earthly honour against all men that can line and die.

And the Kyng receiued his homage in forme aforesayde, addyng a sauyng for his awne and others rightes. And assone as the King had receyued this homage of Iohn Bailioll aforesayd, he without any delay restored to the said Iohn the whole kingdome of Scotland with all the appurtenances. &c.

Madock or Meridock taken and hanged.

And this yere was taken the aforenamed Madock or Meridock, which as ye heard before in the xxiij, yere of the reigne of this king caused y welsh men to rebell, and he was drawen and hanged at London.

The king shortly after caused a great quantitie of wheate to be gathered and taken vo in England to the number (as some write) of an hundreth thousand quarters, and sent Edmond erle of the same into Gascoyne and Guyan. And shortlye after he sent thether Sir Edmond hys brother Erle of Lancaster, Sir Henry Lacye Erle of Lyncoln and Sir Wylliam Veyseye Baron, with dyuers other Lordes and knightes, to strength such people as he there had readye while he prepared another armie against the Scottes.

> Ye have heard in the former yere howe Sir Iohn Baylioll king of Scottes made othe and homage vnto king Edwarde for the Kingdome of Scotlande. Of the which he repented him shortly after by reason of the counsell of the Abbot of Menros, as sayeth Reynulph.

But howsoeuer it was, full yntruely he forsooke his former othe and promise, and reysed warre against the king. Wherfore king Edward sped him thether with a great host, minding to have made a generall spoyle and destruction of that nation, but that he was partly perswaded and steved by some that made excuses for Bailioll, but chiefly for the people. Notwithstanding the king proceeding foorth on his purposed journey came to Newe Castle vppon Tyne, at the which place he caused Iohn king of Scottes to be summoned by a publique Edict that he should appeare and answere vnto such things as should be objected against him at a daye and place prefixed: But Bailioll appered not nor none for him, and therefore the king determyned to proceede in his pretended purpose, and wyth good speede he passed to Berwick

When king Edward heard of the pride of the Scottes and vnderstoode of their foolishe rymes, he was somewhat moued, and therfore so encouraged his knightes, that they gaue a newe onset on Barwick, and wanne the Diche of the towne, and after in processe with great labor & daunger wanne the Bulwarkes, so that they came vnto the Gates and made there so strong an assault that in the ende they wanne the towne, and slue of the Scottes A great slaugh- (as sayth dyuers wryters) aboue the number of. xxv. thousande, and as Hector Boethus the Scot wryteth in his Chronicle in the xiiij. of people was so great that a Myll might have bene well dryuen by the space of two dayes, with the streames of bloud that at that tyme ranne of the ground. If you thinke not this to be truth, I will not enforce you, but remember it is the tale of a Scot, who as he is to be suspected in this, so is the truth of his storie to be doubted of in a great number of places mo. And there were taken prisoners Sir Wylliam Douglas, Sir Symon de Frisell, Prisoners. the Erle Patrike and Sir Robert Bruze with divers other. And in short time after, the wardeyn of the Castell of Berwike, perceyuing that to him was sent no succour, yeelded vp the sayde Castell by apointment. And when the king had possessio of the Castell & Barwike wonne. Towne of Berwike he then strengthened them with Englishmen. And afterwarde wanne the holdes of Tyndall, of Exham, of Wyerbyrd and of Lamerstock, with divers other.

And while that king Edward was thus busied about the wynning of the aforesayde holdes, he sent Sir Hugh Spencer with Sir Hugh Percye and other noble men, with a parte of his hoste to laye siege vnto the Castell of Patrick of Dunbarre. Where when Dunbarre they had lyen a certaine tyme, an armie of the Scottes came thether to remove the siege, sieged. with whome the Englishmen had a fierce and a cruell battayle, but in the ende, by the help of God, the Englishmen had the victorie, and slue of the Scottes about the number Victory vpo the of twentie thousande, and lost of the English company a very small number, which as sayeth Caxton, Cowper and other, were but. xviij. persons.

And after this victorie the towne and Castell of Dunbarre was wonne, in the which Dunbarre were taken prisoners three Erles, seauen Barons and. xxviij. Knightes with divers men of wonne. the clergie. Then the king went to Edenborough, and shortly after wanne the Towne Edenborough and Castell: In which were founde the Regalyes of Scotland, that is to saye, the crowne wonne. And at this time the king being at Berwike and fortifying the same, the king of Scotlande wryteth a letter vnto him and in the same resigneth hys homage and fealtie, the Copie of which letter followeth.

TO the renowmed prince and Lorde, Edwarde by the grace of God king of England: A letter sent from ye king of Iohn by the same grace king of Scotland sendeth greeting: where as you and they of your Scotles to the realme by violent power haue openly and very often inferred and done to vs and to the king of England, wherein inhabitauntes of oure realme, greeuous, yearather intollerable iniuries, contemptes, an- the sayde king noyaunces, and also innumerable losses and dammages, contrarie vnto the liberties of of Scottes reoure realme, and also against God and all iustice, whereof you are not, nor ought not to mage and fealtie. be ignorant by cityng and sommonyng vs to appere out of our realme, and vnlawfully vexing vs, for every small and light motion of your minde and pleasure, by entring upon the Castelles, lands and possessions of ve and our subjects which are within our realme, without our demerites or desarts interceptyng our Marchaunts as well by Sea as by lande, by sleying and murthering other the inhabitaunts of our realme, by violent takying and cariyng our people out of our dominion, and there with you deteyning and imprisonyng of. them. For reformation whereof, we have often times sent our Ambassadors: But they as yet not onely remaine vnreformed, but also from daye to day more greenous injuries are by you and on your subjects behalfe exaggerated and heaped vp. For you now in cruell maner have entered our marches with an innumerable multitude of armed men, hauyng gathered together a generall hoste to the entent to dishenerite vs and the inhabitantes of our realme, and thencefoorth proceeding into our kingdome, haue both by Sea and also by lande committed dyuers tymes murthers and brenned our Townes, and also have made assaultes and violent invasions: we not being hable any lenger to susteyne the sayde iniuries, contempts, griefes, danimages and herce assaultes, (by reason of our Fealtie and The resignation of homage and ho homage to you done) to the doyng whereof we were enforced by violence and threaten-fealise. ings) we can neyther defende our selues nor oure kingdome, for the defence whereof we are bounde by othe: we therefore in our owne name, and in the names of all and singu-

King Edward admitteth the resignation of Scottishe kinges homage. The king when he had read thys letter did admit the resignation of the homage, and commaunded hys Chauncelour that the same should be enrolled and recorded for perpetuall memorie, and then passed on his iourney and tooke and ouerthrewe dynerse townes and Castels, and at the last passed the Scottish Sea, and came to a towne in Scotland called saint Iohns vpon the day and feast of Saint Iohn the Baptist, where he solempnly kept the same Feast certaine dayes.

The Scottishe king prayeth for peace and mercie. And while these things were in doyng, Iohn Bailioll king of Scotlande sawe that he was forsaken of all men, and that he had no power hable to resist or withstande the power of the king of Englande: wherefore he sent his Ambassadors vnto him praiyng for peace and desiryng mercy. To whom the king being mooued with pittie sent a countermaund that the sayde king Iohn wyth his Nobles should come with his messenger vnto hys Castell of Bruthyn within. xv. dayes next following, and there to treate. And the king of England sent at that tyme as his Ambassador, Anthony Bishop of Duresme with a full power & aucthoritie, vnto the which place the king of Scots with his Nobles came at the day prefixed, who after much controuersie and debating of sundrie cases, did at the last simply and playnly submit himselfe vnto king Edward, and resigned vnto hym the kingdome of Scotlande to be ordered and gouerned according to his will and pleasure. And for the performance of the sayd submission, the king of Scottes delyuered his sonne in hostage, and caused his letters of submission to be made in Frenche in forme following.

The submission of ye king of Scots to the king of England.

The king of Scottes resigneth the crowne and kingdome of Scotland to king Edward.

IOhn by the grace of God king of Scotlande, to all whosoeuer shall see or here these present letters: knowe ye that for as much as we by euill & false counsaile, and by our foolishe simplicitie have most greeuously offended and provoked our Lorde Edward by the grace of God king of Englande, Lorde of Irelande and Duke of Aquitayn in many things, that is to saye, that in the time that we remayned in his fealtie and homage, we ioyned our selues vnto the French king, who was then his enemy and yet is, onely for the conclusion of a mariage to have bene procured between the daughter of the sayde French king and our sonne. And for the further griefe and offence made vnto our sayde Lorde the king, we joyned with the sayde French king in armor against the sayde king of Englande to the vttermost of oure power by order of warre and all other wayes of enemi-And furthermore by our peruerse counsail we defyed our sayd Lord the king of England, and put our selfes out of his fealtie and homage, and sent our men of warre into his lande of Englande burnyng and spoylyng the same, & caryeng from thence sundrie prayes, and committed sundrie murthers and other dammages. And the lande of Scotlande which is of his Fee, we mainteyned against him, plantyng and placyng men of warre in sundrie Castels and Townes for the defence of the sayde land against him, purposing to have removed him from his sayde Fee, for the which trespace our sayd Lorde the king of England entred into Scotlande with his power, and the same conquered and possessed, notwithstanding any thing that we were hable to doe against hym, as it was right lawfull for him to doe as the Lorde of the Fee, because we did resigne vnto hym our homage and rebelled agaynst him: We therefore being agayne restored to our full power, of our free wyll redelyuer vnto him the realme of Scotlande and all the people of the same with all the homages. And in wytnesse hereof, these our letters we have made patentes, dated at Bruthyn the. x. day of Iulij in the fourth yere of our reigne.

¶ Shortly after this, king Edward called his Parliament at Berwick and thether came all the nobilitie of Scotlande, and there did vnto him fealtie and homage. And for a perpetuall remembrance thereof, they caused the same to be made by their letters patents sealed with their seuerall seales, the tenour whereof ensueth.

We receive the same for the landes of which you are now seased, saving our title or the title of other, and exceptyng the landes which Iohn Bailioll in tymes past king of Scotland gaue vnto vs after that we had delyuered to him the kingdome of Scotlande, if paraduenture he hath geuen any.

Moreouer, we all and euerye of vs by himselfe hath made fealtie and loyaltie vnto our Fealtie.

Lorde the king aforesayde in these wordes.

I will be faithfull and loyall, and will observe my fealtie and loyaltie to Edward king of Englande and his heyres, of lyfe and members and earthly honour against all men which may live and die, and never for any will I beare armour nor be in counsaile, or ayde agaynst hym or his heyres in anye thing that may happen, but will faythfully acknowledge and doe those services which doe apperteyne vnto the tenement that I clayme of hym, so God helpe me. &c. In witnesse of these things, the letters patents are made and sealed with our Seales, dated at Berwick the. xxiiiij. yere of the reigne of our Lorde king Edward of England. &c.

And shortly after he translated Iohn Comines Erle of Bardenagh London, & Alein of Lawghan out of Scotlande and sent them into England beyond Trent, commandyng them vpon paine of their heds not to returne again into Scotland so long as he had war with Fraunce. And sone after he returned into Englad with many prisoners.

But while these trauayles were taken in hande in Scotlande, the Englishe men susteyned many harde and sharpe showers in Gascoygne and Guyan. Among the which, one is remembred in the Frenche Chronicle, saiyng, that Edmond Duke of Lancaster dyed at Bay- zamend Duke on, after whose death, while the towne and other strong holdes prepared them to withstand of Lancaster the French men, Robert Erle of Arthoys, which a little before had encountered with sir John Saint Huon, and had bene of him ouerset, reassembled his companie, and made him another skirmishe. In whiche he slue vpon an hundreth Englishe men and Gascoynes, and tooke prisoners the aforenamed Sir Iohn Saint Iohn, Sir William Mortimer, and other to the number of. lax. the which were sent into Fraunce into diverse prisons.

And soone after the king with a puissaunt army, sayled into Flaundyrs in the moneth of August, to ayde and helpe Guye then Erle of Flaundyrs against the French king, the which at that tyme was sore vexed by the French king, for he had wonne from him the The king sayleth towne of Marquet, and the Countrie thereabout. The liberties of London again restored.

Certein Aliens that were beneficed me are put out of thekinges protection. of the sayde Guye, the French king caused Robert Erle of Arthoys to inuade the Countrie of Flaudyrs towarde Picardie, and encountered with the same Guye nere vnto a towne called Furnes. Where betweene the sayde two Erles was foughten a sharpe battaile, so that many men were slaine vpon both partes. After which fight the Erle of Flaundyrs sped him toward Gaunt, where king Edward at that tyme was, and the Erle of Arthoys drewe him toward the French king, the whiche shortlye after was received into the towne of Bruges. In the which tyme and season, while the sayde two kinges lay thus at eyther towne, a meane of peace was treated of, and finally a peace was concluded betwene the two kinges, and betweene the French king and Guye Erle of Flaundyrs, vntill the feast of all Saintes then next ensuyng. And continued from that day vnto the feast of all Saintes then two yeres folowyng. After which peace so stablished, king Edward departed from the towne of Gaunt and went vnto Burdeaux: And the French king returned into Fraunce, and prisoners were delyuered on both parties.

Now while king Edward was thus occupyed in Flaundyrs, the Scots by the enticement of the French king, to the entent to make king Edwarde to kepe home, and that he should not ayde the Erle of Flaundyrs, began to make warre vpon the Kinges souldiours, which the King had left there in diverse holdes. And also vpon the borders of Northumberlande, and made sharpe warre vpon the inhabiters of that Countrie. And for that Sir Iohn Baylioll their King, was at that tyme prisoner in the Tower of London: Therefore the sayde Scottes made them a Capitaine, whome they named William Walys, a man of vnknowen or low birth, to whom they obeyed as vnto their king. Anon as the king heard of the rebellion of the Scots, which to him was no great wonder, considering their great vnstedfastnesse, he wrote his letters vnto sir Henry Percy Erle of Northumberland, to sir William Latimer, and to sir Hugh Cressyngham then treasurer of England, and to other, that they in all goodly haste should make provision to withstand the Scottes. The which persons after the receipt of the kings letters, sped them all in spedy maner, so that they entered Scotland shortly after, and compelled the Scottes to returne backe vnto a towne named Streuelyn, where in a skirmishe foughten betwene the Englishe men and the Scottes, sir Hugh Cressyngham aforenamed and dyuerse other Englishe men were slaine. But yet the Scottes were holden so streight of the Englishe hoste, that after that skirmishe, they woulde not of a certeine time come in plaine fielde againe, but kept them within their Castelles and strong holdes.

And about this tyme certeine of London brake vp the Tonne in Cornehyll in London, and tooke out certeine prisoners from thence which sir Ihon Briteyn as custos of the Citie had committed thether. By the which it maye appere, that there hath bene a prison in the streete of Cornehyll before tyme, which then was called the Tonne, as nowe we call them the Coumpters. For the which ryot, the sayd persons, that is to say Thomas Romaine, and viij. other, were afterwarde grieuously punished, as first by imprisonment, and after by fynes

This yere king Edward in the moneth of October returned into England, and so to Winchester, where the Citizens of London made such labour vnto his grace, that shortly after they obtained graunt of their liberties, which had bene kept from them by the space of xij. yeres and more, so that on saint Edwardes day next following they chose them a Maior, where by all the tyme aforesayd their Custos or Gardian was put in by the king, or by such as the king would assigne: But it is to be thought that this was not redemed without summes of money, for as some write it cost the Citie three thousande markes.

This yere also king Edward put out of his protection certeine Aliens that were richely beneficed in Englande: The cause was for that the sayde Aliens would not ayde the king with their goodes, as the other of his lande did, but purchased an inhibicion of Boniface the. viij. that they & their goodes should be free from all the kinges dismes and taskes. Therefore the king seised the temporalties, and suffered them with their spiritualties, vn-till they had agreed with the king.

And

And about this tyme there were a certaine number of persons that fell to diggyng in London in the Church called saint Martynes le graund, for certeine treasure that should be there hidden. But they laboured in vaine, for there was nothing found.

And this yere the king prepared a strong power against Scotland, and went himselfe the- King Edward ther. And first appoynted his Lordes with three companies to mete with him at Yorke, whe-cruell warre ther came a great hoste, the which he himselfe led into Scotlande, and brent and spoyled upon the Scottesthe Countrie as he went, and taried a while at Berwike. And from thence he sped him in winnyng of Castels and townes as he went, vntill he came to a towne called Faukirke, The battaile of Fankirke, or Fankirke, where the xxij. day of July met him the power of Scotland, and gaue vnto him a sore battaile: But in the ende the victorie fell vnto the Englishe men, so that of the Agreat slaughter of Scottes. Scottes were slaine in the fielde as witnesseth sundrye Aucthours, xxxii, thousand, and of Englishe men but barely. xxviij. persons. After which discomfiture, the Scottes yelded The Scotts once wnto the king the greatest part of their strong holdes and Castelles, that they before had againe make their homage, holden against him, and made vnto him a new othe and promise, and yelded themselves vnto his grace and mercy.

And when the king had set that Countrie in an order, he then returned into England, Coynes of money to London: Where hy the advise of contained the red included into England, Coynes of money condemned. and so to London: Where by the aduice of certaine of his cousaile, he sodeinely condemned certein coynes of money called Pollards, Crocardes, and Rosaryes, and caused them to be brought to newe coynage, to his great aduauntage.

The latter ende of this yere there were certeine Ambassadors sent from the Pope to the sent from the king of England, earnestly entreatyng the king for the deliverie out of prison of John Pope to king Baylioli late Scottishe king, which now was in the Tower of London, and they promised delivery of Ioha the king in the Popes name, that he should be safe from troublyng eyther of the king or Bailioll late king of his realme, and that no perill should come by his deliveraunce. And after that the king had conferred with his counsayle, and considered of this the Popes request, he condiscended there vnto, and made delivery of the sayd Iohn Baylioll vnto the Popes messengers, and they conueved him into Fraunce to his awne landes called Bayliolles landes, and there left him in safe keepyng, under the order and gouernement of certaine Prelates.

And yet agains the king heryng that the Scottes were not in quiet, but were as brag and as busic as before they had bene, therefore he made nowe his thirde voyage into Scotland, and did so Princely, and valiauntly, that within short time after his commyng thether, The scots against rebell and are he subdued the greater part of the land. And forward he went to the Castell of Estriue-subdued lyn, wherein were many of the great Lordes of Scotland, and he compassed the Castell Estriucly. with a strong siege, but he lay there somewhat long without any great advauntage or hurt besieged. done vnto the Scottes: Wherefore, of pollecie he caused to be made two payre of Gallowes in the sight of the Castell, and afterward commaunded proclamation to be made, that if the Scots by a certeine day woulde yelde that Castell vnto the king, they should have lyfe and limme: and if not, but that he wanne it by strengh, as many as were within the sayd Castell should be hanged vpon those Galowes, no estate nor person to be ex-

Nowe when the Scottes had aduised themselves well vpon this Proclamation, and considered the strength of their enemies & their awne weakenesse and feblenesse, and lack of succour, they assented to yelde them and their Castell vnto the king, which shortly Estrivelyn they did; Whereof when king Edward was possessed, he stuffed the same with Englishe to the king. knightes, and after tooke a newe othe of the Lordes and Capitaynes, the which he found closed within that Castell, of true and faythfull allegeaunce, and then suffered them to go

And when William Walys, which as before is sayde pretended the rule and gouernaunce of Scotland, heard tell that the strong Castell of Estriuelyn was yelded vnto king Edward, and that the Lordes and knightes therein founden (in whome he much trusted) were sworne to the kinges allegeance, he feared sore least the sayde company would betray him, and Q 9 2

The Scots submit themselues vnto ye kings mercy.

Then the poore Commons of the lande presented them selves by great companies, and put them wholy in the kinges grace and mercye, so that the king then thought that he was in peaceable possession, or at the least in a great suretie of the land. Wherefore, after he had caused to be sworne vnto him the rulers of dyuers Boroughes, Cities and townes, with other officers of the lande, he returned vnto Barwike, and so into Englande, and lastly to Westminster.

The comming of Queene Margares into Englad.

Troylebasto.

When the king was returned out of Scotlande, he caused shortly after an inquisition to be made through his lande, which afterwarde was called Troylebastone. ypon all officers, as Majors, Shirifes, Baylifes, Excheters, and other officers that misbehaved themselves in their offices, or had vsed any extorcion or evill dealyng with the kinges people, otherwise then they might lawfully do by vertue of their offices. By reason of which inquisition, many were accused, and redemed their offices by grieuous fynes to the kinges great profite and aduauntage. Other offences and forfeytures were sought out also, as forfeytures agaynst the Crowne, the which brought great summes of money into the kinges Coffers, toward the great charges of his warres that he susteyned in Wales, Fraunce, and Scotland, as before is shewed.

And as sayth Polydore, when king Edward returned out of Scotland into England, because he would not leave any monument or remembraunce of the former estate of their Kinges, he caused therefore to be brought from thence a stone Chayre, in the which their kinges were wont to be crowned, and the same nowe remayneth in Westminster Church.

And the sayde tyme also the Lorde Chauncelor and Judges came from Yorke, where they had remayned and kept their termes by the space of seven yeres, and now came to London by the kinges commaundement.

Langton bishop of Chester, complained to the King vpon Prince Edwarde.

It chaunced at this time that maister Langton then Bishop of Chester, made a gricuous complaint to the king of sir Edward his eldest sonne, for that he with Piers of Gauestone and other wanton and wilde persons, had broken the Parke of the sayde bishop, and riotously destroyed the game within it. With the which complaint the king was sore agreed against his sonne, and commaunded him to Prison and the other his complices. terward when the king was fully and truely informed of the lewde and wanton dispositions for offending of a of the sayd Piers Gauestone, he therefore banished the sayde Piers out of England for Butafter the death of king Edward, this banishement continued not, for he was againe restored by his sonne, whereof ensued much harme and trouble, aswell to the king, as also to the Nobles and whole Realme.

The king commaudeth his eldest son to prison subject.

> And thys yere dyed Edmond Erle of Cornewall the sonne of Richarde sometime Erle of that Countrie and king of Almayn without Issue, wherefore that Erledome returned agains to the Crowne of Englande.

> And also about thys tyme the king gaue vnto Sir Edwarde his sonne the principality of Wales, & ioyned thervnto the said Erledome of Cornewal.

The writer of the Scottishe Chronicle, namely Hector Boethus setteth foorth a great ouerthrowe that the Scottes gaue vnto the Englishmen in this yere at Roslyng, where sayth A scottishe his- he, there was not one Englishe man that escaped alyue, and he sayeth further, that the toric in defacyng Englishmen came upon them with the number of, xxx. thousand men deuyded into three and advancing severall battailes, and that the Scottes were in number but eyght thousand men, and yet they

they gaue the ouerthrow to all the three battailes, beginning with the first whom they vanquished, and then came the seconde and set freshe vpon them, whom also they ouerthrewe, A scottishe reand lastly came the thirde battayle lykewise freshe vpon them, and although the Scottes beyng that Englishmen so small a number, and were sore weried with the fight and overthrow of the two former had in Scotlande. armies, yet espyeng the thirde to approche, they tooke their stomakes so couragiously unto them and gaue them so fierce and sharpe an onset, that they ouerthrew them man and mothers sonne. But as sayeth the aforesayde Scot, this victorie lasted not long, for after king Edward heard of thys losse, he returned to Scotland and went thorough the land brennyng and spoylyng the same from the North to the South, and compelled all to sweare to him homage and fealtie and herein ye may beleue the Scot as ye thinke good. But this conquest seemeth to be the same that we spake of in the. xxvij. yere of thys kinges reigne. A parliamet And thys yere the king helde his Parliament at Cauntorbury.

Dominick, and sent vnto London, and there arreigned, and the. xxiiij. of August he was drawen, hanged hedded and quartered, and his hed set vpon London bridge, and his foure Wylliam Waleys quarters sent into Scotland, and there hanged vpon the gates of certayne townes of the land. & quartered.

And within, xiiii, dayes after, a peace was taken betweene Scotlande and Englande vnto the conclusion whereof, at Mighelmas next following, the king then holding his Parliament at Westmynster, thether came out of Scotlande, the Bishop of S. Androwes Robert Bruze, Sir Symond de Frysell Erle of Dunbarre, Sir Iohn of Cambrees Erle of Atleys, and Sir Iohn Comyn with other, the which voluntarily were sworne, in the presence of the The Scots against king and his Lordes, that they should be true vnto the king of Englande, and keepe the aunce to king lande of Scotlande to hys vse, agaynst all other persons. And if any rebell or other ma-Edwarde. licious person disturbed the lande, or brake the kinges peace, they should cause him to be taken and sent vnto the king, with sundry other articles of their allegeaunce which they falsely brake and conspired to the contrarie and that foorthwith.

Robert le Bruze aboue mencioned returning in Scotlande, did contrary to his othe assemble the Lordes of that realme, and by the counsell of the Abbot of stone and other that fauored his vntruth, he sent vnto Clement the fift then bishop of Rome for a dispensation of hys othe before made vnto king Edward, and surmised to him that king Edrebell. ward vexed and greeued the Realme of Scotlande wrongfully: wherevoon the Pope wrote vnto-king Edward his Letter, the summe and effect whereof ensueth.

That Pope Boniface being informed and procured by the Scottes, sent his letters vnto The Popes Letthe king of England, & therein did first alledge that the kingdome of Scotlande did be-king Edward. long vnto the right of the Church of Rome: And that the king of Englande did chalenge the subjection thereof against God and right, and to the prejudice and harme of the Sea apostolike, & for proofe thereof, he allegeth these reasons following.

1 First, that whereas Henry the father of the king that nowe is, obteyned of Alexander king of Scots an ayde and assistence in his warre against Symon Mountfort. To the entent that the same ayde should not be thought to be required or geuen by the right of any subjection or duetie: the same Henry by his letters patents did confesse and acknowledge that he received it not of duetie, but of special fauour.

2 Also where as he being called vnto the coronation of the king that nowe is, by his letters that he as his friend might in so great solempnities exhibite and geue vuto him his friendly presence. And so he came not of duetie, but of speciall fauour.

3 Furthermore, where as the king of Scotlande came personally vnto the king of Englande to make fealtie vnto him for the landes of Tindale and Pembreth living within the realme of Englande, he made that fealtie onely for those landes which lye in Englande, and not as king of Scottes, nor for the kingdome of Scotland: For he openly protested in the presence of all the people that he ought not to make any fealtie vnto the king of England for the kingdome of Scotland.

4 Also that the aforesaide king Alexander left behinde him a young mayde his heyre called Margaret nece vnto the king of England, the supreme dominion of which kingdome came not vnto her, but vnto certaine peeres of the kingdome of Scotlande elected therefore, and therefore she ought not to doe homage vnto him,

5 Also the Pope reprodued the king, for as much as he after the decease of the sayde king Alexander subdued vnto him by force, the Scottes being then without a gouernour, and not having the helpe of any guyde to the prejudice and no small greeuance of the Church of Rome.

6 Also he affirmed that when the sea of Rome doth commit the office of a Legate to anye man to be executed within the Realme of Englande for the payment of Tithes or for any other lawfull cause, and this Legacy doth not by speciall letters and privileges of the sea apostolike extend vnto the kingdome of Scotlande, that they should resist and withstande the same, as it chaunced evidently in the time of Adrian: For the Legate was not by anye meanes admitted vnto the sayde king of Scotlande, vntill the office of a Legate there was by speciall letters apostolike committed vnto him.

7 Also that the same realme of Scotlande was converted vnto the vnitie of the Catholique fayth, by the reverend reliques of Saint Peter the Apostle not without the giftes of heavenly grace.

8 Also that in auncient time the Archebishop of Yorke, when a question was moued concerning the right of the Metropolitane against the prelates of Scotlande, coulde not obteyne sentence with him.

These thinges thus alleged, the Pope admonished the king by his letters to permit and suffer the Bishops, Abbots, Clerkes and all other of the kingdome of Scotlande which he deteyned prisoners, freely to departe, and that he should call home out of the sayde kingdome of Scotlande his officers which he had appointed and set to the prejudice, injurie and greeuous offence of the faythfull people and for the oppression of the iust, whereby he should be the more acceptable and beloued with God, and the better obteyne the fauour of the Sea apostolike. And if the king of Englande woulde allege that he had right or title to the kingdome of Scotland or to anye parte thereof, that then he shoulde sende his procurators vnto the Sea apostolique and Ambassadors specially appointed with the right lawes and miniments concerning that businesse, and there he should receyue a full performance of Iustice.

When the king had read and well considered the aforesayde letter, he then called together his parliament at Lyncolne, and shewed the same letter vnto his Lords, and after long conference had with them, it was agreed that the king shoulde write agains to the Pope in his awne name, concerning the right of his superioritie of Scotlande: But for the latter parte of the same letter, that where the Pope would that the matter should be brought in iudgment before him, that they desyred that they might answere by their letter in their owne names: And soone after the king wrote his letter vnto the Pope as followeth.

The kinges Letter to the Pope.

THe most highe God knoweth it to be regestred in our recordes, the style whereof may neuer be blotted out, that our predecessours and progenitors being kings of Englande haue reigned ouer the kingdome of Scotlande and all the kinges therof, and ouer their temporalties and other things therevnto annexed of long and auncient tyme heretofore, by the title of the superiority and direct dominion, of the same: And have received of the same kinges for the kingdome of Scotlande and of other the Nobles of whome them pleased loyall homage, and due othes of fidelitie. We continuyng the possession of our sayde title and dominion, haue likewise taken the same, as well of the king of Scotlande as of the Nobles of the same Realme. And oure progenitors have had suche prerogative of right and dominion over the realme of Scotlande and the kinges of the same, that they bestowed the same vpon their faythfull subjectes, removing thence for just causes such as were their kinges. And so ordeyned and set in their place others to reigne: which things are without doubt to be well knowne and apparaunt to all. Althoughe peraduenture it hath by false insinuation otherwise beene certefied thorough the children of rebellion and enuiours of peace vnto your eares, from whose craftie and imagined faynings, that your holynesse holynesse would turne your cares we humbly doe beseeche and craue with deuout affection your fatherly clemencie and excellencie. And for breuities sake, passing ouer actes done in former tyme, that we may touche some for example. In the time of Hely the high Priest and of Samuell the prophet, there was a certaine noble man named Brute of the Troyan stocke, who possessed thys whole Realme, and named it after his awne name Briteyne, wherein were conteyned that parte which now is called Scotland and one other part that was called Camber, but now it is called Wales. &c. he proceedeth in his sayde letter and proueth that England and Scotland is but one Monarchy, and so discendeth in hys proues from Prince to Prince vntill he come to king Edward named the elder, who was the sonne of king Alured and so successively vnto Edward the confessor and Wylliam the conquerour, and last vnto king Henry the thirde this kings father. And at the length having declared that the title of the superiour dominion of Scotland was due vnto his father king Henry the third & so consequently to hym, he concludeth thus, saying. Where therfore we doe know our selues in full possession of the same Realme by the title of a full dominion, we neyther can nor ought but represse the insolencie of our subjectes and rebels, and if we finde any, and that in such maner as it shall seeme good by our kingly preheminence. And because by the premisses and other it doth euidently appere and is manifestly knowne, that the sayde kingdome of Scotland, as well by reason of possession as of propertie doth appertaine vnto vs by full right, nor that we have done nor prouvded anve thing by worde or deede (as we could not) by which anye thing ought to be withdrawne of the same right and possession aforesayde: we humbly beseech your helynesse, the premisses being with good meditation considered, that you wyll vouchsafe to withdrawe your motion of minde, and not to geue credite in thys behalfe vnto the euill wyllers of the contrarie side, but also that you would if it please you with meere affection commend and set foorth oure state together with our kingly rightes aforesayde, and thus. &c.

And immediately the Lordes also did write theyr letter vnto the Pope, the tenor

OVr holy mother the Church of Rome, by whose ministerie the Catholike fayth doth The letters of with such perfection in her actes proceede (as we do firmely beleue and holde) that she England written will be prejudiciall to none: But will mainteyne and preserve the right and title of every to she Pope. man inviolate. In a generall Parliament sommoned at Lincolne by our most excellent and souereigne Lorde Edward, by the grace of God king of England, he our sayd souereigne Lord caused certeine letters Apostolike to be brought foorth, and seriously to be expounded to vs, which he had received from your fatherhood concerning certain businesse and affayres touchyng the state & condicion of this our realme. The which letters beyng heard, and diligently considered, we perceived therin to be conteyned thinges both merueylous and straunge vnto vs, which before this time was neuer heard of. For we are certeine (most holy father) and in our parties it is well knowen, as also to many others it remayneth not obscure, that euer sithence the first institution of the Kingdome of England, the kinges thereof, aswell in the tyme of Britons, as of the English men, haue had in their possession the right, title, and dominion of Scotland, or else haue bene the chiefe Lordes in the superioritie both of the right and direct dominion of the sayde Kingdome of Scotland at all tymes continually, and that the sayd kingdome in temporal matters hath not at any time perteyned, or by any right now doth apperteyne vnto the Church abouesayde. And moreover the same Kingdome of Scotland hath vnto the progenitors of our sayde king beyng Kynges of Englande, and vnto him also of auncient tyme remayned feodarie: Neither hath the king of Scottes and kingdome of Scotlande beene subject to any other then to the kings of England. Neyther have the kinges of England concerning the right and title to the Kingdome aforesayd, or other the percelles thereof, aunswered, or were bound to aunswere before any judge spirituall or temporall by reason of the preheminence of their estate or kingly dignitie at al times inviolately served and kept. Wherfore having treated and diligently deliberated vpon the contents of your letters, the vniuersal assent and consent of all and every of vs. hath bene, is, and Godwillyng hereafter most firmely shall be, that our foresaid souereigne Lorde the King shall in no wise aunswere in judgement before you, concerning the right and title to the Kingdome of Scotland or other the percelles thereof, nor shall by any meanes submit himselfe to judgement, nor shall bring his foresayde right and title in doubt, neither shal he send any procurators or Ambassadors vnto your presence in this behalfe, especially forasmuch as the premisses would manifestly tend vnto the disherison of the title & right of the crowne of this realme of Englande, and kingly dignity, and to the notorious subversion of the state therof, and also to the prejudice of the liberties, customes & lawes of our forefathers: vnto the observation and defence wherof, we are obliged and bound by our othe, the which also we will defende and mainteyne with our whole might and power, God Willyng. Neither do we permit, or in any wise will permit (as neyther we may nor ought) our foresayde souereigne Lorde the King, yea, although he were willyng to do, or by any meanes to attempt the premisses, beyng thinges vnaccustomed, vnlawfull, prejudiciall and at no time before euer heard of. Wherefore we do reverently and humbly beseech your holinesse, that you will more benignly suffer and permit our foresayde souereigne Lord the king (who among other princes of the worlde doth shewe himselfe most Catholyke and deugate vnto the Church of Rome) quietly to enjoy and possesse his aforesayde right, title, liberties, customes and lawes inuiolably without diminucion or disquiet. And vnto this letter, were fixed of the Nobles and Lordes of the Realine (as sayth my recorde) more than an hundreth of the seuerall seales of their armes.

King Edward againe entreth into Scotland with a great armic. ¶ And in the ende of this yere, the king kepyng his feast of Christmasse in the North partes, did so sone as the feast was ended prepare an armye against the Scottes: and his sonne Edward Prince of Wales likewise following him with a great host of warlike men, and entered Scotland, and passed through a great part of the same, but found not one Scot that resisted.

At this time also the French king, whose sister beyng called the Ladie Margaret, which the king of England did shortly after mary as shal appere, sent the Abbot of Compeyn and certeine other Ambassadors vnto the king of England, desyryng him to have peace with the Scottes callyng them hys friendes, which notwithstandyng receyued a short auns-were and so returned in vayne.

King Edward callyng to his remembraunce that the tyme of the truce lately taken between him and the French king was almost expired, called his preuy Counsaile vnto him at Westminster sone after the feast of Christmasse, and agreed and sent very noble and honorable Ambassadors vnto the French king, praiyng him to declare and shewe his minde whether he had aduisedly determined to haue, truce, warre, or peace: To the which the French King aunswered, that without the presence of the xij. peeres he could not deale in so weightie a matter, and also that the same Peeres were then occupyed in the prouision of news warre: But he sayd that within xv. dayes he loked for their commyng. Which tyme beyng come, and they meetyng together, sayde that they would not meddle in the matter without the aduice of the Scottes. And so soone as the Englishe Ambassadours heard this, they returned into England.

A parliament holden at Westminster.

And shortly after king Edward called his Parliament at Westminster, and there declared the delayes and craftie dealyngs of the French king: But in the meane time the French king sent his Ambassadors to the king of England. And after a litle conference, it was agreed that both the kinges should mete together in a place convenient betweene Flaundyrs and Picardie, and that then they would intreat and conclude of a friendly and continual peace: Which meetyng was done with speede, and the sayde peace concluded vpon sondrie conditions, and among other this was one, that king Edward should take vnto wife Margaret, the sister of Philip le Beawe the Frenche King, and with her was delivered in peaceable maner the Countie of Gascoyne with all rightes and liberties, in as large maner as the King helde the same in the begynnyng of his warres: The which Margaret while the king was in Scotland was brought vnto Douer, and so vnto Cauntorbury, where the king maried her in the Month of September, & had by her in proces of tyme two sonnes, named Thomas and Edmond, and a daughter named Margaret. The first of the sonnes was named Thomas of Brotherton, and the second Edmond of Wodstocke.

And in the meane while that this matter was thus complayned vpo to the Pope, the sayd Robert le Bruze made all the labor he might vnto the Lordes of Scotland to be ad-Robert le Bruze mitted for king of that Region, so y vpon the. viij. day of December, a great assembly lordes to make of the Lords was made at the Abbey of Stone. And the next day following, by the meanes Scotland. of the Abbot of that place, many of the sayde Lords assented vnto the will of the sayde Robert, except Sir Iohn Comyn onely. The which in defence of his truth and othe before sworne vnto king Edwarde made many reasons and excuses, but finally sayde that he would not falsefie his othe for no man. And for this cause Robert le Bruce bare vnto Sir Iohn Comyn a great stomacke, and so did many other of the Nobles. But he helde his opinion so firmely and stoutly, that other began to take his part, so that in the counsayle arose such varietie of opinions, that the sayd counsayle was dissoluted, and anewe assembled at the Gray Friers of Dunfrise, at Candlemasse next following. At which day of assembly, when the cause of their meetyng was by Robert Bruce published and declared, and many of the great Lordes had graunted vnto him their ayde and assistance: But the aforenamed Sir Iohn Comyn and other sate still and sayd nothing. Which Robert le Bruze marked well, and to him sayde: And you Sir Iohn I trust for the defence and weale of this realme, will not be behinde. Wherevnto he aunswered: Sir I would that you and all my Lordes here present knewe well, that for the weale, defence, and in the right of this land, I will stand with it to the vttermost of my power: But for that I see, ye rather entend the subuersion then the weale thereof, I geue you therefore knowledge I will neyther ayde you with counsaile, nor yet with strength: And some other also were present which allowed very well the graue saiving and aunswere of Sir Iohn Comyn. But Robert le Bruze was Sir Iohn Comyn so amoued therewithall, that when Sir Iohn Comyn, and Sir Roger his brother was de-aworthie knight. parted from the counsaile, and was come into the Church of the Friers, Robert le Bruze followed him, and wounded him to death with his sworde, and when his brother would Sir Iohn Comyn haue defended him, he slue him also. After which murder little or no resistaunce was is murdered. made against the vntrue meanyng and dedes of the sayde Robert le Bruze, so that he at Robert le Bruze Saint Iohns towne was crowned king shortly after.

Assoone as king Edward was admonished of the murther of sir Iohn Comyn, and that King Edwarde he had also well considered the continual vntrouth of the Scottes, he forthwith made pro-once agayne uision and gathered a great power together to enter into Scotland. And hauyng, and great power to holdyng at that time beyng Whitsontide a great feast of his Baronnie at Westminster, and subdue ye Scots. duryng the time of the same feast, he made aboue two hundreth knightes. And assoone as his feast was ended, he sent with a goodly company of knightes and furniture of Warlike men, Sir Aymer de valaunce Erle of Pembrooke and Sir Henry Percy Erle of Northumberlande into Scotland, and shortly after the king himselfe followed with his host.

And it was not long after that the Erle of Pembrooke was arryued with his power in Scotlande, but that Robert le Bruse with a great power of the Scottes were gathered together in a place called Methfen, everye of them having vpon his harnesse a whyte shyrte, and there they bade the Erle battayle. And the Erle with his power set manfully and Methfen, courageously vpon them, so that there perished with the sworde that daye a great number of the Scottes that came with the false king. And the sayde false king was that day three times beaten downe, but was euer releued by Sir Symon Frisell that valyaunt warryour, and by the craft and help of his whyte shyrte, he fled and escaped out of the battayle. Robert le Bruse The names of the chiefe prisoners that were taken at this skirmish of the Scottes were flyeth.

these, Thomas the sonne of Rainulph, Dauid of Inkmartyn, Iohn of Someruile knightes, Nicholas Huttynges Marshall, and Hugh the false kinges Chapleyn who that daye was standard bearer and many other whose names were here to long to reherse. And the aforesayd Hugh the priest with dyuers other were shortly after condemned, but the priest was first hanged because he had sayd, that I the priest will beare your banner and lead you this iourney.

Sone after the flyeng of Robert Bruse, the king of Englande with his sonne the prince of Wales, being then about the x. daye of August entered Scotlande being accompanied wyth a great number of the Nobles of the realme and a puyssaunt armie. And of manye of the Scottes the king was honorably receyued, and many fled from him and hid themselues in woodes and marishes. The King going foorth in Scotland with his armie, raunged ouer all the lande and tooke many of the fugitive Scottes, and many he put to death, and also manye he pardoned. But among other that were taken, there were two Bishops and an Abbot which crowned Robert le Bruse the false king, the which were hardly and streightly kept in strong prison so long as the king lyued. There was also taken the aforenamed Symon Frisell in whome rested all the Scottes hope and trust. And there was taken Herebert of Morham, a man of excellent bewtie and stature, farre exceeding all the other Scottes. The aforesayde Symon was shortly after hanged: But Herebert with his Squyre Thomas de boys were behedded. And the head of Symon Frisell for the manifold treasons by him committed was set vpon London bridge nexte vnto the head of Wylliam Walleys who was placed there before.

King Edwarde causeth an inquisition to be made in Scotlande for the murder of Sir Iohn Comyn.

And shortlye after the king of Englande caused an inquirie to be made thorough the realme of Scotland by the othes of honest and good men, who and how many they were that murdered and consented to the murther of the noble man Iohn Comyn before named, and also to the coronation of the aforesayde Robert Bruse. And in a maner he tooke them all and put them to death. And suche as submitted themselues vnto the kings will and pleasure, he kept in streight and hard prison. And Iohn Seyton and Christofer hys brother which were the Esquiers of Robert Bruse, and consented vnto the shamefull murder of the sayde worthy and noble Iohn Comyn were also taken. Of the which Iohn Seyton at New Castell vpon Tyne, and Christopher at Domfrise were hanged, drawen, and quartered.

Robert le Bruze escaped by flyengAnd during the time that this iustice was executed vpon the wicked and wretched Scottes, the lewde and vnworthye crowned king Robert Bruse fled into the Mountaynes, hyding hymselfe in suche places as he might best lurck in. And lykewise Sir Iohn of Cambres Erle of Athles practised to flye and escape, but by the prouydence of God he was taken: which when the king heard, although he was then troubled with greeuous sickenesse, yet he bare the same the better, as one much comforted with these newes.

The aforenamed Sir Iohn of Cambres, Erle of Atles, as I finde in an auncient recorde, after he was apprehended, and among other prisoners committed to warde: There were certaine that resorted vnto the king, and shewed him that this Erle was of the bloud royall, and therfore they thought it vnseemely that he should be committed among the other comon offendors. To whome the king not respecting his bloud and progeny sayde: The higher that he is of degree, the more greeuous is his fall: if he among the other murderers did excel in bloud, then is it meete that he for his mischiefe should hang higher then any of the other: Take him, saith he, and carie him to London and there let him haue justice. And shortly after, that is to say the. vij. day of Nouember, next following he was arreigned in Westminster Hall and found giltie of treason, and of the murder of Sir Iohn Comyn, and had judgement of death. And because he came of the bloud royall as aforesayde, he was not drawne, but was set vpon an horse, and so brought to the place of execution, and there hanged vpon a payre of Galowes that were fiftie foote high, hauing before his eyes a great fyre burnyng, and before he was halfe dead, he was cut downe and behedded, and his bodye cast into the burnyng fyre, where it consumed vnto Ashes, & his head was set vpon

London bridge among the other Traytours and murderers heads, but a great deale higher

About the ende of Februarie a certaine Scot of Galoway named Dongaldus came with three hundreth men and withstood a great Nauie of Pirates replenished with. vij. C. men of warre that woulde have landed vpon his ground: But he set so fiercely vpon them, that what with the fight and by drowning in the Sea and hauen, and following such as had recovered land and fled, they in a maner all perished. And among the principall of these theeues that were slaine in thys skirmish, the sayde Dongallus brought vnto the king of England the head of Malcolyn the Lorde of Kentyr, and two heads of two rulers of Irelande. And he brought with him as prisoners Thomas Bruse knight, and Alexander his brother Dean of Glaskowe, both brethren Germaynes of Robert Bruse the false king of Scotland. And also they presented Reynould of Craunford knight which was sore wounded, and halfe dead. Of which number Thomas Bruse knight was drawen, hanged and hedded. And the rest were onely hanged and headed at Carlisle.

And the aforesayde yere there came from the Pope vnto the king of Englande a Cardinall and Mayster Peter a Spanyard as Ambassadors, to conclude a mariage betwene Edward the king of Englands sonne Prince of Wales, and the Lady Isabell the daughter of the French king, the which in the yere following was fully fynished.

Robert le Bruze, after this discomfiture and losse of his chiefe friends, and fearing least Robert le Bruze the Scottes with suche Englishmen as king Edward lefte there, would arise against hym: escaped by flyedid therefore all comfortlesse flie vnto the king of Norwaye, and there abode during the lyfe of king Edward.

When this noble and valiaunt Prince had thus subdued the Scottes, he yeelded thankes vnto almightie God for this victorie. And when he was truely asserteyned of the flyeng and departing of Robert le Bruse, and also that he had set the lande in a good and quiet order, he returned into England.

And in this meane while, the aforesayde Lordes of Scotland were arreigned at London, The Scottishe and there condempned and put to death, and their heads set vpon London bridge. shortlye after was Iohn Waleys brother to Wylliam Waleys (which for lyke treason was put to death the yere nexte before) taken, hanged and quartered, and some of the Scottes that were taken as prisoners, remayned there a long time before they were hable to pay their fines.

And shortly after the king for divers causes returned againe into Scotlande, but some say he remayned at Barwike and kept hys Christmas and Easter there, and did not returne to London vntill the Sommer followyng. And that then in the time of his returne a sicknesse tooke hym so feruently, that he knowe well he should die. Wherefore he being King Edwarde at Bourgh vpon the sandes beyond Carlyle, called to him Sir Aymer de Valaunce Erle of greenous disease. Penbrooke, Sir Henry Percye Erle of Northumberlande, Sir Henry Lacye Erle of Lyncoln, and Sir Robert Clyfford Baron, and caused them to be sworne before him, that they should crowne Edward his sonne in as conuenient time after his death as they might, and to keepe the lande to his vse vntill he were crowned.

And after his Barons had taken the sayde othe, he then called vnto him his sonne Ed-King Edward ward, and charged him with dyuers pointes vpon his blessing: among the which one es-charge to his peciall was, that he should neuer after that daye suffer Piers of Gaueston to returne into sonne. Englande, and so shortly after ended his lyfe vppon the. vij. daye of Iulie, when he had reigned. xxxiiij. yeres. vij. Moneths and odde dayes. And after with great solempnity was conveyghed vnto Westmynster, and there buried in the Chapell of S. Edward vpon the The issue of this south side, in a plaine Tombe of Marble at the head of his father. This noble prince had the xx. and. two wyfes, and had issue by them as may appere before in the twentie yere, and in the. xxvij. xxvij. yere of his reigne. yere of this kings reigne, where it is at large set out.

tenaunce, having black eyes, which when he waxed angry, would seeme to be fyrie: his heare was black and curled, he was very healthy and of a stoute courage, that neuer fayled in any daunger, or adversitie, he was verie pregnant and had an excellent wyt, and commonly atcheeued any enterprise he tooke in hande. He was a great louer and fauourer of religion, but yet a great enemie to the pride and insolencie of Priestes which in his dayes exceeded, and he judged the same onely to spring of their wealth and riches. And therfore to bridle their wantonnesse he established the lawe for graunting landes in Mortmayn. Of friendship he was constaunt, and not easie to be reconciled where he conceyued a displeasure. And in vacant times he gaue himself much to huntyng. Thus much Polidore.

EDWARDE THE SECONDE.

King Edward the seconde.

E DWarde the seconde of that name, and sonne of Edward the first, borne at Carnaruan beyng a towne of Wales, began his reigne ouer this realme of England the. viij. day of July in the yere of our Lord. 1307. and was crowned king at Westminster the. xxiiij. day of February in the yere aforesayd.

The description the second.

This king was fayre of body, but vnstedfast of maners and disposed to lightnesse. He reof king Edward fused the company of his Lordes and men of honor, and haunted among villeynes and vile personages. He gaue himselfe also to ouermuche drinking, and lightly he would disclose things of great counsaile: and besides that, he was geuen to these vices by nature, he was made much worsse by the counsaile and familiaritie of certain euill disposed persons, as Piers of Gaueston, Hugh Spencer the father, and the sonne, and other, whose wanton company and counsayle prouoked him to the appetyte and pleasure of the bodie, nothing ordering hys common weale by sadnesse, discretion and justice, which thing caused great variance betwene him and his Lords, so that shortlye he became to them hatefull, and in the ende was depriued of his kingdom.

Piers of Gaue-

But Polidore sayth, that immediatly after the death of his father he being then in Scotland at Dunfrieze, callyng his counsayle together, did first of all cause the Lordes and rulers of Scotland to sweare vnto him homage and fealtie, the which every one, except certeine that leaned to the part of Robert le Bruze did willyngly offer. And then leauyng sufficient furniture for defence in Scotland, he returned into England and so to London.

So soone as his father was buryed, and the Exequies scantly finished, he forgettyng the high and chargeable commaundement of his sayde father, sent in all hast for his olde compire Piers Gaueston, the which he received with all ioy and gladnesse, and aduaunced him to much honour.

And shortly after, that is to say in December next following, he sayled into Fraunce, and the. xv. day of Ianuary following, he maryed at Boleyn Isabell the daughter of Philip the French king, which, as saith Froisart was one of the goodlyest Ladyes in the worlde. And shortly after he returned wyth her vnto London, where they were honourably re-Kinges daughter. ceyued of the Citizens, and so conueyed to Westmynster where as it is before rehersed they were both solempnly crowned the xxiiij. day of February. At the which coronation was such prease that a knight called Sir Iohn Bakewell was thrested to death.

Nowe shortlye after, the king callyng to hys remembraunce the great displeasure done vnto him and to his familier Piers of Gaueston by the Bishop of Chester, mencioned before in the. xxviij. yere of the reigne of king Edward the first, commaunded him vnto the Langton Bishop Tower of London, where he was streightly kept many dayes after.

Valance Erle of Lyncolne of Warwike & of Penbrook, to whom the noble Prince Edward the first, had geuen so great charge, that Piers Gaueston should no more come into Englande, sawe the rule of the lande, and howe that the kings treasorie by meane of the sayde Piers was wasted, assembled them in counsell & of one assent, with ayde of other Lords of the realme, so spake to the king, that contrarie to his pleasure, he was advoyded the Piers Gaueston land, and banished into Ireland for that yere. But the king sent vnto him often tymes di-banished the uerse secrete messengers, and comforted him wyth many rich giftes, and made him his chiefe ruler of that countrie.

And afterward, diverse and sondry grudges happened betwene the king and his Lordes for the banishment of the sayd Piers Gauestone: wherefore to continue amitie betwene him and them, the sayd Piers was fet home againe, and so continued to the more viquietnes and mischiefe of the realme.

About this tyme (as sayth the Aucthor of Chronica chronicarum and other) the knightes of the order of saint Iohn Baptist, called Saint Iohns of Ierusalem, by knightly Manhoode, put out of the Isle of Rhodes the Turkes and infidels which to that day had kept and oc- The Isle of the cupied the same Isle: and after that they wanne dayly and yerely vpon the sayd Turkes, Rhodes first reso that they had in their possession much of the landes of the Turkes. The aforesayde Piers of Gauestone, more and more encreasyng in the kinges fauour. had at the last the guydyng of all the kinges Iewelles and treasure. And at a certeyne tyme he went to Westinynster, and there out of the kinges Iewell house he tooke a Table A Table we and a payre of Tresselles of gold, and conueied them with other lewelles out of the land, tresselles of gold take out of the to the great empouerishing of the same. And moreover, he brought the king by meane kings lewell house by Piers of of hys wanton condicions to manifold vices, as adulterie, and other. Wherefore the Gaueston. aforesayd Lordes, seyng the mischiefe that dayly encreased by occasion of this vnhappie man, tooke their counsayle together at Lincolne, and there concluded to advoyde him againe out of England: so that shortly after he was exiled into Flaunders, to the kinges Gaueston againe great displeasure.

In this yere was borne at Windsore the kinges eldest sonne named Edwarde, which after the death of his father was king of this realme, by the name of king Edward the third, & he was borne the. xiij. day of Nouember.

And this yere also was the aforesayd Gauestone called home againe out of Flaundyrs, kinges eldest which after his returne, did worsse then euer he did before: In somuch that he disdeyned sonne, who after was king Edthe Lordes of England, flouted, scorned, and rudely taunted them. Wherfore the Lordes warde the thirde. assented and agreed to put him to death: And soone after assemblyng theyr powers, they besieged him in the Castell of Scarborough, and in short tyme wanne the Castell, and tooke him and brought him vnto Gauerseede besyde Warwike, and there the. xix. daye of Gaueston Iune smote off his heade. But when the king was informed thereof, he shewed himselfe Lordes. to be most grieuouslye displeased with the sayd Lordes, and made a solemne vowe that The king greatly offended with his death should be reuenged, as afterwarde it was, as shall appere.

Nowe by this occasion, the rancour and Malice that before was kindeled between the Gauestons king and his Lordes, was againe so encreased and inflamed, that it burst out to the understanding of the whole realme: For after this day the king neither studied nor endeu ored himselfe to any thing so much, as to seeke some cause agaynst his Lordes, that by some one meane or other, hee might attaine to an occasion of reuengement, for the death of the aforenamed Gauestone. In this meane tyme dyed Sir Henry Lacy Erle of Lincolne, the which living vpon his death bed charged Sir Thomas Erle of Lancaster that had maryed his daughter, that he should stand with the other Lordes in the defence for the weale of England, the which request the said Erle graunted, and so did firmely observe and kepe it, which was the occasion of the losse both of his awne life, and of many others also, as after shall appere.

At this tyme the king helde his high Court of Parliament at London, where by the advice of his Lordes, he made many good ordinaunces and statutes for the suppression of riots and other mischiefes that then reigned: And in the ende, the king was sworne to keepe them, and so were all his Lordes,

The returne of Robert le Bruze.

And shortly after, worde was brought vnto the king that Robert le Bruze was returned into Scotlande, and had caused the Scottes to rebell of newe. Before in the. xxxiij. yeere of king Edwarde the first ye have heard how the sayde Edward chased the aforenamed Robert le Bruze out of Scotland into Normandy. But as it may be well conjectured, nowe when he vnderstoode of the misgoueruaunce of the realme of Englande, and specially of the decision between the king and his Lordes, he was encouraged with a small ayde of the Normans to returne againe into Scotland, where he behaued himselfe in such wise to the Lordes of Scotland, that some after they agayne made him king of the Realme, and then warred he sore vppon England, and wanne many Castels and strong holdes, and did to the Englishmen great harme and dammage, and (as sayth Sir Iohn Froissart) the Scottes came brennyng and spoylyng this Realme, so farre, that they were foure or five dayes iourney within the Realme of Englande.

Nowe when the king was truely certefyed of thys great rage of the Scottes, he with all convenient speede made provision to resist them, and gathering together a great power did passe by water and entered into Scotland and brent and destroyed suche Villages and Townes as lay in his way without all mercye. Whereof, when Robert le Bruze had knowledge, he with the whole power of Scotland coasted toward the Englishmen, and vpon Mydsomer day, mette with king Edwarde and his hoast at a place called Estreuelyn,

When thys vileyn had thus continued a whyle, not wythout some rumour in the lande, John Poydrasa lastly he was taken out of that place and caryed as a Felon vnto Northampton, and there ed drawen and was arreigned and judged for his falsenesse, and so drawen and hanged. Thus king Edward beset with manye aduersities kept a counsayle at Yorke sayth Poli- A counsayle at Yorke dore, for preparation of warre with Scotlande, and other things meete to be done for the weale of the realme of England. And shortly after Sir Peter Spaldyng knight was sent to ding knight. Barwike with a crewe of Souldiours to fortefie that Towne, because the king had a certaine vnderstanding, that Robert le Bruze entended hastely to lay siege to that Towne.

And not long after the sayde Castell and Towne of Barwike was yeelden or lost, by treason of the aforesayde Sir Peter Spaldyng (as the common fame went) vnto Robert le Bruze sing of Scottes. Also in this tyme was great misery in England by dearth of Corne, Barwike was scarcetie of victualles and Moreyn and death of Cattell. Moreouer, in this time was yelded to the sent into Englande two Cardinalles from Clement the fift bishop of Rome to set an vnity king of Scottes. and peace betwene the Kinges of England and Scotland, and as they were rydyng into Scotland they were met withall vpon the Moore of Wigilsdon in Yorkeshire, and there Two Cardinalles robbed of suche stuffe and treasure as they brought with them. After which robbery, were robbed, great inquirie was made, and at the last two knightes named Sir Gilbert Myddleton and Sir Gilbert Middleton and Wal-Walter Selby with vj. hundred men were accused to be the doers of the same, and were ter Selby committed to prison for that felony, and after were at London condempned, drawen and knightes condemn demn ed and hanged for the same, and their heades set vpon London Bridge: But the Cardynalles re-hanged. ceyued of the king double the value of their harmes.

About this time also, Sir Goslyn Deynuile and his brother (as sayth Iohn Hardyng) hauyng in his companye two hundreth persons clothed in Fryers weedes, passed thorough the Countries as Outlawes and banished men, and robbed and spoyled all that they coulde meete with, and namely, they robbed and spoyled the Byshop of Durhams house and left nothing therein but bare walles, but at the last they were taken and hanged at Yorke.

And in the ende of this yere fell such aboundaunce of rayne and vnseasonable weather, that they could not carie in that little corne that they had on the grounde, by reason whereof followed great scarcetie, dearth, pestilence and death both of men and beastes.

Now againe the Scottes entred into Northumberland, and robbed and brent the Countrie most cruelly, and spared neither man, woman, nor childe, and did so great harme, that the Country was thereby greatly impouerished. To this mischiefe also was joyned another misery: For as it is rehearsed before, victuall by reason of the Moreyn was waxed Agreed scarcities. so scant and dere, that people were forced to eate Dogges, and other vncleane and filthie beastes, as Fabian and other do recite. And the dearth of graine was so great this yere that A great dearth. wheat was solde for foure marke a quarter, which if you conferre with the value of an ounce of siluer then currant, as is before expressed in the. xv. yere of king Edward the first, which was. xx. pence, with y time now which is the tenth yere of the reigne of our souereigne Ladye Queene Elizabeth in the which an ounce of siluer is current for fine shillinges, then after that rate, foure marke a quarter of that money, is of the money that is now current with vs. viii. pound, and that is. xx. shillinges a bushell, which may well be called both a great price, and a great dearth: and by reason of this dearth of grayne, and scarcitie of victuall, and of the warres with the Scottes, the people dyed and perished both by hunger and pestilence, so that the land was greatly wasted and almost desolate of people, for the people liuing were scant so many in number as were able to bury the dead.

Yet the king assembled againe as great a power as he could get in thys realme of England, and went into Northumberland to resist the malice of the Scottes which dayly made assaultes upon the Borders, and entered far within the realme of England, robbyng, brennyng and spoylyng the same. Wherefore, for great lacke and distresse of men, the king had manye people out of the South and East partes of England. And among other. the Citie of London, contrary to their liberties, were constreyned to find at their costes and charges two hundreth men, and so sent them to Yorke.

When the king then beyng at Yorke had received his people from sundry Countries and good townes of England, he with a convenient number road toward Barwicke, and so sped his journey, that at the length he came nere vnto Barwike, and layde his siege

When the king was informed of this ouerthrow of the Northren men, and also that it drewe so here wynter, he therefore brake vp his siege and returned vnto Yorke, and shortly after went further into England.

Sir Hugh Spencer the father, and Sir Hugh Spencer the sonne ruled all England.

At this tyme there was nothing done that concerned the order and gouernement of the realme, without the aduice and counsayles of sir Hugh the Spencers, the father and the sonne, by whose procurement many thinges were done in England to the great grudge, as well of the noble men of the realme, as of the comons of the same, so that they were had in as great hatred and indignation, as before tymes was Piers Gauestone. And many euill reportes and great extorcions were tolde of them, as commonly it happeneth to all those that are out of fauour with the common people.

This yere the king helde his counsayle or Parliament at Yorke, where contrary to the mynde of the Lordes Sir Hugh Spencer the sonne was made high Chamberlaine of England: By reason whereof he waxed so hautie and prowde, that no Lorde of this land durst displease him at any tyme, whereof grewe the occasion of the Barons warre, as after shall appere.

A parliamet at Yorke.

> Before ye heard of two Cardinalles that came to trauaile to make a peace betwene the two kinges, but it would not be, wherefore the king purchased a cursse of Iohn the. xxij. Bishop of Rome, to accursse the Scottishe king and all that helde with him, or mainteyned him. But it auayled nothing, but put the king to great costes and charges, for the Scottes ceassed not for all their curssynges, and the poore commons were so vexed and that with so many troubles, as losse of their moueable goodes, of their possessions, and of all that euer they had, not onely by the foreyne enemie, but euen here among our awne people, by reason of the misgouernance of the king, as also by the trouble and variaunce that was between him and his Lordes: so that many were viterly vidone, & a fewe singuler disordered persons aduaunced.

Now when the greatest part of the Baronny of England behelde this miserie of the people, how they were punished by the hand of God, and also by the ignorance of the king. they in secret maner assembled themselves together at a towne called Sherborne, and there The Baros asconcluded a reformation for this mischiefe, which was, to remoue from the king the sayd sembled in a Spencers, both the father and the sonne. And that this might take effect, Sir Thomas Erle Sheepborne. of Lancaster, Sir Humfrey Bohum Erle of Herfford, Sir Iohn Moubray Baron, Sir Roger Clifforde Baron, Sir Goslyn Daniell Baron, Sir Roger Toket, Roger Benefield, Sir Roger Mortimer, sir William Sulland, Sir William Elmenbridge, Sir Iohn Gifford, and Sir Iohn Tyers, Barons and knightes with divers other, sware eche of them to stand by other vntill they had amended the state of the realme.

And shortly after, by their aduice and agreement, Sir Iohn Mowbray, Sir Roger Clyf-

Of the which ryot the Spencers complayned to the king. And for an cers. order of due punishment for these to be taken, y king called vnto him dyuers of his counsell at Wyndsore, and there it was determined that the sayde sir Iohn Mowbraye, Sir Roger Clifford and Sir Goselyn Danyell should appere before the kinges counsell shortly after, and there to make answere vpon that rvot. And if they refused that to doe, that then they should advoyed the lande shortly after as banished men. But no day of apparaunce was kept by them. Wherefore proclamations was made in dyuers places of the realme and at London the. xvi. day of Marche, that the sayde Sir Iohn Mowbraye, Sir Roger Clifford and Sir Goslyne Daniell, should advoyde the lande within x. dayes following vpon paine of death. Whereof hering the Lords and Barons before named, reassembled A message sent them a more strong power, and vpon that sent a messenger vnto the king, beseeching hym to ye king from the Barons that humbly, to exclude and remoue from him the counsell of the Spencers, which daylie did he should revnto him great dishonour, and to the common weale of the realme great hinderaunce. moue the Spensor The king heering this humble request, was with it nothing content, but yet fearyng greatly the destruction of his awne person, assembled his counsaile for the reformation of thys matter: where it was concluded, that the king shoulde call a Parliament at London. And foorthwith the king wrote his letters and sent thesame vnto the sayde Barons, commaundyng them at a daye prefixed to bee at the sayde Parliament, who at the day appointed, made their apperaunce at London, bringing with them a great hoste of men of armes in a sute of Iacquets or Cotes parted, yelow and greene, with a band of white cast ouerthwart. And for this cause, that Parliament long after was of the common people called the Parliament of The Parliament

At this tyme the Maiour of the Citie of London for the preservation of the sayd Citie, & for the sure keeping of the kings peace, caused daylie a thousand men being well armed, to warde the Gates and water sydes of the sayd Citie and the same warders or watchemen to beginne their watche at foure of the clock in the morning, and so continued vntill. vj. of The Citie of the clock at night. 13 The Spencers are called home againe by the king.

The king being bewitched with the floue of the aforesayde Spencers did now againe reuoke the actes and ordynaunces made in the last Parliament, and called againe into Englande the foresayde Spencers to theirs and his castyng awaye, as after it shall appeare, and set them agayne in aucthoritic as high as euer they were, mawgre the heart and minde of all his Barous, and to the great vuquietnesse of all the realme. And shortly after beganne quarell piking, and the king beganne claymyng a title by the Queene of the Castell of Ledes in Kent, which belonged to sir Barthen Bladesmore knight then being on the Barons party, and the king besieged the sayde Castell, and by the helpe of the Citizens of London did at the last by strength wynne the same, and spoyled the moueables thereof.

Nowe when the king had thus called home the Spencers, and things were ruled and gouerned after their sensuall appetites and pleasures, without having any respect or regard to the common weale of the realme of England. The Barons also well pondering and considering among themselves that this lewde kinde of government vsed by the Spencers must of necessity at the last bring the lande to great ruyne, and the king to great dishonour: they entendyug to preuent the mischiefe that might ensue thereof, gathered vnto them a great power. And in the meane time that Sir Thomas Erle of Lancaster was gathering of his people, the two Mortymers, that is to say, Sir Roger Mortymer of warke, and Sir Roger of Wygmore with other, went vnto the Marches of Wales, and tooke by strength certayne Cities and Townes belonging to the Spencers, and pursued also some of the kinges seruauntes. Wherfore the king heryng of the rebellion of hys Lords, made hastie speede, and with a great hoste came about by Shrewesbury, and was neere vnto The Mortimers them before they were ware of hym, so that for feare, the sayde Mortymers yielded themselues vnto the kings grace and mercy, the which forthwith were conueved as prisoners vnto the Tower of London.

When the king had set all thinges in order about the Marches of Wales, he then gathered more strength about him, and therefore about the begynnyng of March, he set forward and came to Glocester, where the Spencers with all their people met with him. from thence they went to Lichefield, at which tyme the Erles of Lancaster and of Herfford with their host were at Burton vpon Trent, and fortefied the bridge, that the king might not come ouer the sayde Riuer. Then the king was brought vnto a foorde, and began to set ouer his knightes, whereof heeryng the sayde Erles, they forsooke the towne and But before they could passe farre vpon their journey, they were encountered of Sir Aymer de Valaunce Erle of Pembrooke, with the Spencers and other of the kinges host vpon the. xij. of March, and them did ouerset, and caused them to flie, who at the last came to Pomfret. In this meane tyme, the Erle Thomas had sent a knight of his named Robert Holland, into Lancashire for to arrere his tenauntes. But when the sayde Sir Robert heard of the sayde skirmishe, and howe his maister was fled, he then drewe to the king, and presented him with such company as he then brought. And thus the kinges power daylye encreased, and the Barons discreased. Then the Barons heeryng of the goyng goyng of Sir Robert Holland vnto the kinges partie, were therewithall astonied, and tooke their counsaile in the Friers of Pomfret, Where after sondrie reasons and argumentes they concluded that they would go ynto the Castell of Dunstanborough, and there to remaine vntill such tyme as they might purchase the kinges mercie. And as they set forward vpon their purposed journey, takyng with them such people as they had, at the last they came to a towne called Burghbridge, where they were encountered of Sir Andrew of Harkeley knight, with other that were come out of the North with a strong company: Who gaue there an onset vpon the Barons, and in the ende discomfited them, and chased their people. In the which fight was slaine the Erle of Herfford, sir Roger Benefielde, and sir Thomas Erle of William Sulland, and other: and there was taken the Erle of Lancaster, sir Roger Clifford, diuers other of sir Iohn Mowbray, sir Roger Tuckettes, sir William Fitz William, with dyuerse other, and the Barons they were led to Yorke. Shortly after Maister Robert Baldock, a man of euill fame and name, was by the king Robert Baldock made Chauncelour of England. And he helped forwarde that good store of forfeites and an euill man made Chauncelfines were gathered into the kinges treasury, without sparyng of privileged places or other: our of England. so that whatsoeuer could be found, the same was seased for the king: By reason whereof, much treasure was brought vnto the kinges Coffers, besides great thinges that were brybed and spoyled by the Officers of divers shires.

This yere sayth Fabian, the king gathered the sixt penny of all temporal mennes goodes within England, Ireland, & Wales which was graunted vato him in the aforesayd Parliament for the defence of Scotland: which money was not payed without great murmure and Agreet takegrudge, considering the manifold miseries that the common people at those dayes were

16 The king againe entreth Scotland but returneth home without any victory.

About this tyme the Scottes entendyng to do a feate in Ireland, and to subdue that countrie to their obeysaunce, entered it with a strong host under their Capitaine, Edward le Bruze, brother to the Scottish king. But the Irishe men bare them so manfully, that they vanguished the Scottes, and chased them out of that countrie. In which chase and fight the sayd Edward le Bruze and many other noble men of Scotland were slaine.

Nowe againe the king made great prouision for to have entred vppon Scotland, so that he was entring the lande about the beginning of August. But the Scottes having knowledge of the greatnesse and strength of hys armie, withdrewe themselves into Mountaynes, Marisses and other suche places, as the Englishe army could not come at them: And this was done by the Scottes of purpose to werye and tyer the Englishe army. shortly after among the hoste entered sundrie diseases and sicknesses, so that many of them dyed, and were cast away in that iourney, aswell for lack of victuall, as by other infirmities, so that the king for these causes & other, was constreyned to returne againe into England without doying any notable act: Wherof when the Scottes were informed, sir John Douglas, and other Capiteines followed and costed the king in such wise, that they had almost taken the king at dinner, at an Abbey called Bellaunde. Then the king of pure constraint defended himselfe, and withstood the Scottes so well as he might. But after a small and weake fight, the king was compelled to flie, and by that meane to saue him selfe.

In the aforesayde skirmishe was taken Sir Iohn Britayne Erle of Richemonde, and the kinges treasour was there spoyled and caried awaye, and the ordynaunce belonging to the hoste, a great parte of it, was by the Scottes caryed into Scotlande.

Then the Scottes in their returne homeward, wanne the Castell of Norham and robbed the Towne of Northallerton, and other. For this losse and harmes Sir Andrewe of Harkeley Erle of Carleysle was much blamed and charged by misleadyng of the kinges hoste.

This yere it was ordeyned, that when anye theefe or other trespasser should be hanged, that from thenceforth, the same should foorthwith be cut downe and buried, where before they were wont to hang still vntill they were consumed.

The king now being informed that the great dishonour and losse before mencioned by the Scottes, happened by the vntruth and treason of the aforesayde Sir Andrewe of Harkeley Erle of Carleisle, caused a knight named Sir Anthony Lucye to arest the sayde Sir Andrewe Erle of Carleyl, and to bring him safely vnto hys presence. And the sayde Sir Anthony made suche speede herein that the second day of Marche following the sayde Erle was taken, & so kept in prison vntill October next following, at which tyme the Sir Andrew Erle sayde Sir Andrewe was arreigned and condemned for that he had taken money of the Scottes to betray the king his naturall Lorde. For the which treason he was at Westchester or at Shrewesbury drawen and hanged, and his head sent after to London, and set vpon the Bridge.

At this time also, the warre began to quicken in Guyan betweene the Englishmen and Frenchemen, whereof the occasion was (sayth the French Chronicle) for a Bastile or Fortresse buylded by the Lorde Mount Pesart, a Lorde of Gascoyne, vpon the Frenche kinges ground, as the Frenchemen sayde: But the Gascoynes and Englishmen iustified it to be within the territory of Guyan. For this, first began great words, and after many threates, but in the ende, mortall warre. So that the Gascoynes, with the ayde of the kings Steward of Englande slue many of the Frenchemen that came to overthrowe the sayde Bastile.

When Charles the French king heard of the ouerthrow of the Frenchmen, and howe the Gascoynes fortified the sayde Bastile within his sayde Seignory as he was informed, he sent with all speede his Vncle Charles de Valoys with a great hoste, who made sharpe and cruell warre agaynst the Gascoynes, and wanne from them the Towne of Angeow and Amyas with dyuers other, and at the last came vnto the Townes or Citie of Ryoll, and layed siege vnto the same: But the Englishmen with the Gascoynes issued out of the towne and gaue battaile vnto the Frenchemen, and put them to the worsse, and slue. The French men xiiij. C. of them. Among the which a Lorde, called the Lord of Saint Florentine, with discomfited. other noble men of Fraunce were slayne, and the other enforced to lye further from the Towne. Howbeit in the ende, the sayd Towne by appropriate was yelden to the Frenchmen yoon condition, that all suche Englishmen as were within the Towne should go freely with their goodes to Burdeaux, or if they woulde remaine there still, then to be sworne vnto the French king, and to remayne there as Frenchmen.

After which Towne yeelded as aforesayde, Sir Edmond of Woodstock the kinges brother, then beyng at Burdeaux as the kinges Deputie, made suche resistaunce agaynst the sayde Charles de Valoys, that a truce was taken for that yere.

And about Mydlent next following, the king having knowledge of this warre in Guyan, and howe the French king entended to sease all Gascoyne and Guyan, for breaking of couenauntes betweene them made, and not by king Edward performed, sent ouer the Queene his wife the French kinges sister to entreate an agreement and peace betweene them, as sayth Fabian. into Fraunce.

When the Queene (sayth he) perceyued the pride of the Spencers and howe they preuayled with the king, and had caused him to put to death the greatest parte of the nobles of his realme of Englande, and also that they bare towarde hir a sower countenaunce, and she fearing least they should have put something into the kinges head, that might have beene to the perill of her lyfe, was therefore desyrous to be out of this feare, and pitiyng also the miserable government daylie practised and vsed against the whole state and communaltie of the Realme in all kinde of tyrannies and cruelties, by theaforesayde Spencers. The Queene therefore purposed nowe to flye the Realme and to go into Fraunce, and therefore did feyne her selfe that shee would go on pilgrimage to Saint Thomas of Cauntorbury, from whence she tooke hir way to Winchelsey, and in the night entred into a ship which before was prepared for her, and had with her, her eldest sonne Edwarde, and the Erle of Cane, and Sir Roger Mortymer, who a little before brake out of the Tower of London, as after shall be shewed. And in another Ship they had placed their necessarie provision and furnyture & then havyng wind at will, they arrived shortly at the haven of The Quene Boleyn in Fraunce, where shee was most ioyfully receyued of the Capiteyne of the Towne, in Fraunce. and also of the Abbot there, who conveyed her and all her company into the Abbey, where they were feasted and cheered. And after the Queene had remayned there two dayes, she then daylie iourneyed so farre, that at the last shee came to Paris. But the French king her brother, having before knowledge of her comming, had sent to meete her dyners of the greatest Lordes of his realme, as the Lorde, sir Robert de Artoys, the Lorde of Crucy, the Lord of Sully, the Lorde of Roy, and dyuers other, who honorably did recease her The Quene was and brought her into the Citie of Paris, vnto the king hir brother. And when the king honorably resawe his sister, whome he had not sene long before: as she should have entred into his Fraunce. Chamber he met her, and tooke her in his armes and kissed her and sayd: ye be welcome favre sister, with my fayre Nephew your sonne and tooke them by the handes and led them The Queene who had no great love at her heart, but that she was so neere to the king her brother, she woulde have kneeled downe two or three times at the feete of the king: But the king would not suffer her, but helde her still by the right hande, demaundyng right gently of her estate and businesse. And she aunswered him right sagely, and recounted to him all the vilanges and injuries done to her by Sir Hugh Spencer, and prayed of him his ayde and comfort.

When the Noble king Charles of Fraunce had heard his sisters lamentation, who with teares had expressed her heavie case, he most comfortably spake vnto her and sayd: fayre sister quiet your selfe, for by the fayth I owe to God and saint Denise, I shall right well prouyde for you some remedy. The Queene then kneeled downe whether the king would or not, and sayd: My right deere Lord and fayre brother, I pray God rewarde you. The king then tooke hir vp in his armes, and led hir into another chamber, the which was appareled for hir, and for the yong Prince Edward her sonne, and so for that time departed from her, and caused all thinges that was behouefull and meete for her and her sonne to be delyuered vnto them at hys costes and charges.

And not long after, the sayde Charles, French king, for thys cause chiefly assembled together a great number of the greatest Lordes and Barons of his realme, to have their coun-The Frenchking sayle and good aduise, howe he might best prouvde to remedy and help the distresse of consulteth with his sister the Quene of Englande. And it was thought best to them, that the Frenche king his Lordes how to ayde his sister should suffer hys sister to make the best friendes she could, in Fraunce or any other where and that the king shoulde not take anye knowledge thereof: For sayde they, the king to kingland. minister an occasion of warre with Englande, and so bring hys awne realme in trouble, is neyther honorable for hymselfe nor profitable for his resime. And they concluded, y the king might conveniently avde her with Golde and Sylver, which is the Metall that purchaseth both the loue of the Gentleman and also of the souldyour. And to thys counsell and aduyce the king agreed: and caused thys determination to be shewed to the

The Baros of England write to the Quene ouer into France.

Nowe the Barons of Englande that were lefte, considering that the Spencers had so drawne the king to doe and consent to whatsoeuer they required: and considering also how they had not onely made awaye the greatest parte of the Barony of Englande, but also kept those that remayned in such feare and awe that they could beare no rule, nor be heard with the King by reason of their authoritie. Therefore the sayde Barons which were left, assembled themselves together, and with one accord, wrote over into France to the Queene of England, certefying her that if she could finde the meanes to have any company of men of armes (if it were but to y number of a thousand) and to bring hir some and heyre with her into England: that then they would all drawe to her, and obey vnto her and her sonne Edward, and ayde them with all their power, as they were bounde to doe of duetie.

The aforesayde letters beyng secretly sent vnto her out of Englande, she shewed them The French king vnto king Charles her brother: Who aunswered her and sayd, Good sister, if God be your ayde, your businesse shall preuail the better. Take of my men and subjectes, to Quene his sister, the number of that your friendes have written vnto you for, and I consent well to this voyage: I will cause to be delivered vnto you, golde, and silver so muche as shall suffice you: And herein the Queene had so traueyled, what with her prayer, giftes and promises, that many great Lordes and yong knightes agreed to bring her again into England. Then the Queene as secretly as she coulde, prepared for her voyage, and made her prouision: But she could not do it so secretly, but that sir Hugh Spencer had knowledge thereof. Wherefore he thought to get the good will of the French king her brother from her, by giftes: And secretly he sent messengers into Fraunce, with great plentie of golde, syluer and riche Iewels, and specially to the king, and to his preuy counsaile: The which giftes tooke such effect, that in a short space, the French king and all his preuie counsaile were as colde and as straunge to helpe the Queene forwarde in her voyage as though they had neuer talked of the matter. And the Frenche king brake that voyage, and made proclamation, commaundyng all his subjectes vpon paine of banishement, that none should be so hardie, as to go with the Quene to bring her againe into England. sides this, the sayd sir Hugh Spencer practised more malice, and compassed and deuised with himselfe a further mischiefe, which was, howe he might bring to passe to get againe the Quene into England, to be vnder the kinges daunger and his. And to bring this about, the sayde sir Hugh caused the king to wryte vnto the Pope, effecteously desyryng him that he would sende and wryte to the Frenche king, that he should send the Queene his wyfe againe into England. For he tooke God to record that it was not through his faulte or occasion that she departed from him, for he entended nothing towardes her, but love and good fayth, as belongeth vnto matrimonye. And he caused also like letters to be made to dynerse of the Cardinalles, wherin were practised many subtile decises, which were to long here to be rehersed. And to such as were most nerest and about the Money is of so Pope, he sent great plentie of golde and silver: insomuch, that they so traveyled and that it corruptpreuayled with the Pope, that they caused him to write vnto the French king, that vpon eth Popes. payne of curssyng, he should send his sister Isabel into England to the king her husband. These letters were brought vnto the French king by the Byshop of Xayntes, whome the The French king goeth fro Pope had sent in that legation. And when the king had red the letters, he caused them his word and is to be shewed to the Queene his sister, whome he had not seene of a long space before, in displeasure and now he comaunded her forthwith to aduoide his realine, or else he would cause her Queenc his sisto advoide with shame.

When this tidinges was brought to the Queene, she was at her wittes ende, and knewe not what to do, or what aduise to take, for as then, all the Barons of Fraunce had forsaken her by the commaundement of the French king, and so she was left all comfortlesse, sauying that her dere Cosyn the Erle of Arthoys did secretly counsaile and comfort A friend in her as muche as he might, for otherwise he durst not, because the king had forbidden friend in dede. him: But he was fully perswaded that the Queene was wrongfully vexed and troubled. Thus was sir Robert of Arthoys at the Queenes commaundement, but he durst not speake nor be acknown thereof. For he heard the king say and sweare, that whosoeuer spake to him for the Queene his sister, should lose his landes and be banished the realme. And he knewe secretly howe the king was in minde and will, to cause his sister to be taken, and Edward her sonne, and the Erle of Cane, and sir Roger Mortimer, and to put them al in the handes of the king, and of sir Hugh Spencer. Wherefore he came on a night and declared all this to the Queene, and aduised her of the perill that she was in. Then Sir Robert de Arthoys a true the Queene was greatly abashed, and besaught him with weepyng eyes to geue her his & faythfull best counsaile. Then he sayd, Madame I counsayle you that you departe and go into friend to the Queene. the Empire, where as there bee manye great Lordes, who may right well ayde you, and specially the Erle Guillam of Henault, and sir Iohn of Henault his brother. These two are great Lordes and wise men, true, drad, and redoubted of their enemies. Then the Queene caused to be made redy all her provision, and payde for every thing as secretly as she might, and so she and her sonne, and the Erle of Cane, and all her company de- The Queene fivparted from Paris and rode towarde Henault, and so long shee roade vntill at the last France. she came to Cambresey. And when she knewe that she was in the Empire, then she thought her selfe in some better assurance than she was in before: And so passed through Cambresey, & entered into Ostrenaunt in Henault, and lodged at Ambreticourt in a knightes house, who was called sir Dambricourt, who receyued her right ioyously in the best maner to his power. In somuch that afterward the Quene of England and her sonne had the same knight and his wife and children with them into Englande and advanced them in diverse maners.

And in this meane tyme (sayth Polydore) Water Stapleton Bishop of Exeter, which hetherto had bene with the Queene and was of her counsaile in Fraunce, did priuely flie from her into England vnto the king, and reueled vnto him all Queene Isabels counsayles and ententes, the which his doings was the beginning of his mischiefe, as shall be shewed.

Sone after the commyng of the Queene of England and her sonne into Henault, the The coming of same was well knowen in the house of the good Erle of Henault, who then was at Va- the Quenc into Henault. lenciens. And sir Iohn of Henault was certified of the tyme when the Queene came to the house of sir Dambrecourt, the which sayde Iohn was brother to the sayde Erle Guyllam. And the sayd sir Iohn as one all youg and lustie and desyrous of honor, mounted on his horse backe and departed with a small companie from Valenciens, and came the same night to Ambreticourt, and did to the Queene all the honour and reverence that he could deuise.

The great friendship and gentlenesse of the good knight Sir Iohn of Hehim with wepyng eyes her miserable case, whereof the sayde sir Iohn had great pitie, so that the water ran out of his eyen, and sayd, fayre Lady, beholde me here your awne knight, who will not fayle to dye for you in the quarrell, I will do the best of my power to conduct you and my Lorde your sonne, and helpe to bring you into your estates in England by the grace of God, and with the helpe of your friendes in those parties. And I and such other as I can desyre, will put our lives and goodes in adventure for your sake, and we will get men of warre sufficient (if God be pleased) without the daunger of the French king your brother.

Then the Queene would have kneeled downe for great joy that shee had, and to have velded thankes for the good will that he had offred vnto her: But this noble knight tooke her vp quickly in his armes, and sayde: By the grace of God, the noble Queene of Englande shall not kneele to me. But Madame, recomfort your selfe and all your companie, for I will keepe you faythfull promise, and ye shall go see the Erle my brother, and the Countesse his wife, and all their fayre children, who will receive you with great joy, for so I hearde them say they would do.

The Quene is greatly comfort-ed by Sir John Heynault.

Then the Queene sayde, sir I finde in you more love and comfort then in all the worlde, And for this that you have sayde and affirmed vnto me, I thanke you a thousand times: and if you will do this that you have promised, in all curtesie and honour I and my sonne shall be to you for euer bound, and the whole realme of Englande shall consider your great curtesy and gentlenesse, and it is right that it should so be.

And after these wordes, when they were thus agreed, sir Iohn of Henault took his leaue of the Queene for that night, and went to Douaingue, and lay in the Abbey. in the morning he tooke his horse, and came againe vnto the Queene, who received him with great ioy: And before he came, the Queene had dyned, and was ready to mount on her horse, and to go wyth him: And forthwith the Queene departed from the Castell of Dambrecourt, taking her leaue of the knight, and of the Lady, and thanked them for their gentle enterteynment, and sayde, that shee trusted once that she or her sonne should remember well their curtesie.

The Quene vsed no delayeng of her weightie affayres.

> Thus departed the Queene in the company of Sir Iohn Heynault, Lorde Beamont: who right ioyously did conduct her to Valenciens: and to salute and welcome her, there came many of the Burgesses of the Towne, and receaued her right honorably. And so was shee brought before the Erle Guyllam of Henault, who receaued her with great ioye, and in like maner did the Countesse his wyfe, and feasted her right nobly. And at the same time the sayde Erle had foure fayre daughters, Margaret, Philip, Iane, and Isabell. Among whome the young Prince Edward set most his love, and had to his company Philip, and also that young Lady was in all honor more conversaunt with hym, then was any of hir sisters. Thus the Queene of England aboade at Valencians by the space of. viii. dayes with the good Erle, and with the Countesse his wife, whose name was Iane de Valovs.

The Quene applyeth her busimesse.

Bir Iohn of Heymault is aduised not to take this enterprise in hand, but his corage would forward, who euer said nay.

In the meane season, the Queene prepared and called on for the settyng forward of her businesse: and the aforesayde Sir Iohn wrote letters very effectuously vnto knightes, and suche companions as he trusted best in all Heynault, in Brabant, and in Behaigne, and prayed them of all loues and friendships that was betwene them, that they would go with him in this enterprice into Englande, and there came great numbers, what of one Countrie and other, that were content to go with him for his loue. But this sayde Sir Iohn Henault was greatly discouraged, and counsayled to the contrary both of the Erle hys brother, and of the chiefe of the counsell of the countrie, because it seemed to them that the enterprise was right highe and perilous, considering the great discorde and hatredes that then were in Englande amongst the Barons themselves. And also considering that the Englishmen most commonly have enuye at straungers. Therefore they doubted that the sayde Sir Iohn of Heynault, and his company shoulde not returne agayne with But howsoeuer they blamed or counsayled him, the gentle knight would never chaunge chaunge his purpose, but sayd that he had but one death to dye, the which should be when and howe as God would, and sayde moreover, that all knightes ought to ayde, to their powers, all Ladyes and damoselles, chased out of their awne Countries, being bothe without counsayle and comfort.

Now thys courageous and lusty knight assembled his people, and appointed at a daye, the Henaultes to be readie at Hale, the Brabanders at Bredas, and the Hollanders at Durdright. Then the Queene of Englande tooke her leaue of the Erle of Henault, and The Quene deof the Countesse, and thanked them greatly for their honorable feastyng and great cheere Erle of Henault that they had made her, and kissed them at her departure. Thus the Quene with her yeldyng great sonne and all the rest of her company came forward with Sir Iohn of Heynault, who with honourable enmuche adoe gate leave to depart from his brother the Erle, saying vnto him: my Lorde testainment. and brother, I am young, and I thinke that God hath prouyded for me this enterprise of Henault for mine advantement. I beleve verily that wrongfully and synfully this Lady hath bene taketh his leave chased out of England, and also her sonne. It is almose and glorie to God, and to the the Erle. worlde to comforte and helpe them that are comfortlesse, and specially so highe and noble a Lady as this is, who is daughter to a king, and descended of a royall king: we be of her bloud, and she is of oures. I had rather renounce and forsake all that ever I have, & go serve God over the sea, and never to returne into this courtey, rather then thys good Lady should have departed from vs without our comfort and helpe. Therefore deere brother, suffer me to go with your good will, wherein ye shall doe nobly, and I will geue you most humble thankes for the same, and my voyage shal be the more prosperous. And when the good Erle of Henault had well heard his brother, and perceaued the great desyre he had to this enterprice, and sawe well it might turne hym and hys heyres to great honour hereafter, sayde to him. My dere brother, God forbid that your good purpose should bee broken or let: therefore in the name of God I geue you leaue, and kyssed hym, streyning hym by the hande, in token of great loue.

Thus he departed, and roade the same night to Mounce in Heynauld with the Quene of England. What should I make long processe, they made so speedie journeys, that shortly they came to Durdright in Holland, where they made their speciall assembly. And they prouyded for shippes great and small, such as they could get, and shipped their horses and harneys and other provision, and committed themselves into the handes and defence of almightie God, and so tooke shypping, and set forward on their passage by Sea. The fourth day they set forward in § adventure, desyring God to be their guyde, and as people that had suffred cold and tempests, with hunger also and feare went weakely onward as well as they might. And thus they kept their course by hilles and dales on the one side & on the other, vntill at the last they found Villages, & a great Abbay of black Monkes, the which was called S. Hamon, where as they three dayes refreshed themselves wel. And then newes was spread abrode thorough the realme, of the landyng of the Quene and of her sonne, so that at the last it came to the knowledge of the Barons, by whom the Queene was called again into England, and they appareled themselves in all haste to come to Edwarde her sonne, whome they would have to their sovereigne Lord. And the first that came and gave them most comfort was Henry Erle of Lācaster with § wrieneck, called Tort coll, who was brother to Thomas Erle of Lācaster ý was behedded, as ye have heard before, who was a right vertuous & good knight as after ye shal here.

How the Lordes came to the ayde of the Queene. This Erle Henry came vnto the Quene with a great company of men of warre. And after him came from one part & other, Erles, Barons, knightes, and Esquiers, with so many people that they thought themselues out of all perilles, and their power still en-creased as they went.

So sone as king Edward had knowledge of the landyng of the Quene his wife, and of his sonne Prince Edwarde, and heeryng also howe the Barons and Nobles of the realme resorted vnto her with great powers from all partes: The king beyng then at London, left the sayde Citie vnder the gouernment and order of Maister Walter Stapleton, Bishop of Exeter, who was nowehigh treasurer of England, and the king himselfe accompanyed with the Spencers, and a few other, taketh his way into Wales: But when he came to Bristowe, he caused that towne to be fortefyed, and committed the charge and custodie thereof vnto sir Hugh Spencer the elder, and the Erle of Arondell: and he himselfe with sir Hugh Spencer the yonger, entered into the Castell, and fortefied the same.

The Queene herryng of the kinges departyng from London, did forthwith send her letter to the Maior and communaltie of the sayde Citie requyring of them aide to subdue the oppressors of the comon wealth of the realme, and that they would see that the Citie of London & the Tower might be kept to the vse of the Prince her sonne: and sondrie other thinges were conteyred in the sayd letter, but for that the Copie that came to my hande seemed to conteyne dynerse repugnaunces, I have therefore omitted the rehersall thereof. After the receipt of this letter, Fabian sayth, that Walter Stapleton, Bishop of Excester, to whome the custodie and gouernement of the Citie was committed, as aforesaide, sent to the Major of London to have the keyes of the Gates of the Citie by vertue of his commission, which the Maior, whose name was Hamond Chickwell, denyed. But the Bishop vsed such stoute wordes in the kings name, to the Maior and Citizens. who had an euill opinion of him, for bearyng with the Spencers, whom the people hated as euill as the Deuill, and also for betraiving of the Queene and Prince as is aforesayde. that the sayde Citizens in a rage and fury tooke the sayde Byshop the. xiiii. day of October, and him with two of his housholde seruauntes beheaded at the Standard in Chepe in London, of the which two one was his brother, as appereth by a monument in the Cathedrall Church of Excester. And the same day, sayth Fabian, was taken for a spie a Citizen called Iohn Marshal, which fauoured the Spencers partie and was beheaded in the same place. And the dead corps of the sayd Bishop and his two servants, & of Marshall were harved vnto the Thamys syde, where the sayd bishop had begon to buylde a tower, and there in the rubbishe or sand of the same, they buryed the foure bodyes aforesaide. And Polidore sayth that after the Citizens had thys done with the Bishop, that then they went vnto the Tower and possessed the same, and there killed and spoyled all the kinges officers, and put in new officers geuyng them charge to keepe the same for the Queene and her sonne the Princes vse. And when these thinges were done, the Maior sente vnto the Queene and her sonne three graue personages, and certefied them of all that the Citezens had done, with promise that they would obey whatsoeuer shoulde please the Queene and her sonne to commaund them, and that the Citie was quiet and at their commaundement: The which message the Queene and her sonne accepted very thankfully, and suffered not the Messengers to depart vnrewarded.

The Quene and her Lordes beyng thus assembled, as aforesayd, counsayled and agreed among themselues to go the streight way to Bristowe, where as the king was, who had a strong was a stron on a good port of the sea, and a strong Castell, the sea beatyng round about it. therein was the king, and sir Hugh Spencer the elder, who was aboue ninetic yeres of age, to take the Casand sir Hugh Spencer his sonne, who was the chiefe gouernour of the king, and cousayled him in all his euill dedes. Also there was the Erle of Arondell, who had maryed the daughter of sir Hugh Spencer, & diuers other knightes and Esquiers attendyng and waytyng on the kinges Court.

Then the Queene and all her companie, the Lordes of Heynault Erles and Barons, and The Queene beall other Englishe men, tooke the right way to the towne of Bristowe, and in every towne of Bristow where they entered, they were receyued with great feast and honour, and alwayes their wherein the king people encreased, and so long they roade by their journeyes, that at the last they came to Bristow, and besieged the towne round about as nere as they might. But the king and Sir Hugh Spencer the yonger helde them in the Castell, and the olde sir Hugh, and the Erle of

And when the people of the towne sawe and considered what a power the Queene had, (for the greatest part of the whole power of England came with her,) and also perceived what peril and daunger they themselves were presently in: They tooke counsaile among themselues, and determined to yelde vp the towne to the Queene, so that their lyues and goodes might be saued. And forthwith they sent to treate with the Queene and her counsaile in this matter: But the Queene nor her Counsayle would not agree therevnto, without she might do with sir Hugh Spencer, and with the Erle of Arondell, what her pleasure was.

When the people of the towne saw they could have no peace otherwise, neyther save the towne, their goodes, nor their lyues, beyng in that distresse they agreed to the Queene, and opened the Gates, so that sir Iohn of Heynault, and all her Barons, knightes, and Esquires, entered into the towne, and tooke their lodgyngs within as many as might, and the rest without.

Then sir Hugh Spencer, and the Erle of Arondell were taken, and brought before the cer the elder and Queene, to do her pleasure with them. Then also was brought to the Queene her awae the Erle of Avochildren, Iohn her sonne, & her two daughters, which had beene in the kepyng of the and brought besayd Sir Hugh Spencer: At the sight of whome the Queene much joyed, because she had fore the Queene. not seene them long before. And at this tyme, it may well be conjectured, that the king The heavy & and Sir Hugh Spencer the yonger, had great sorow and care, to see that they themselves daungerous eswere fast enclosed, and that the greatest part of the realme turned to the ayde and suc-ward the second cour of the Queene, and to Edward her eldest sonne.

Nowe when the Queene and her Barons, and all the companie that came with her, stood in. were lodged at their case, then they besieged the Castell as nere as they might. And the Quene caused sir Hugh Spencer the elder, & the Erle of Arondell to be brought The arreignment of Sir Hugh forth before her, and her sonne, & before all the Barons that were present: and sayd, Spencer and of that she and her sonne would take right and lawe vpon them according to their desertes. the Erle of Arondell, Then sir Hugh Spencer said, Madaine, God be to you a good iudge, and graunt vnto you good judgement: and if we cannot have it in this worlde, I pray God we may have it in another. Then stood foorth a good knight called sir Thomas Wage which was Marshall of the Queenes hoste, and there openly he red and rehersed their deedes in wry-

Then the sayd knight counsayled with others, that is to say, with the Barons and Erles, and knightes there present, and then he reported their opinions and judgementes. The which was, that they had well deserved death for their diverse and horrible deedes that they had committed, and to have judgement three maner of waves. First to be drawne, and after to be headed, and then their bodyes to be hanged on a Gibbet. And as this judgement was geven, so was it executed before the Castell gate of Bristow, in the sight of the king, and of sir Hugh Spencer the yonger. 1325. And after thys execution, the king and the yong Spencer seyng themselves thus trapped and besieged, and beyng wythout hope of any comfort: In a morning betymes, they two with a small companye entred into a little Vessell behinde the Castell, thinking to have fled into the Countrie of Wales. And they were, xi, dayes in the ship, and enforced it to sayle as much as they might: But whatsoeuer they did, the winde was so contrary vnto them (for it seemed that God would so have it) that every daye once or twise they were brought againe within a quarter of a myle of the sayde Castell. At the last it happened Sir Henry Beamond, sonne to the Vicount Beamond in England (espyeng the sayd small Vessell so often to come before the Castell) to enter into a Barge and certaine companye with hym, and rowed after this Vessell so long, that the ship wherin the king was, could not make any great way before them, but at the last they were ouer taken, & so brought agayne to the Towne of Bristowe, and delyuered to the Queene and her sonne as pri-

And thus by their helpe and the Lordes of England, Queene Isabell conquered agayne all her estate and dignitie, and put vnto execution her great enemies, to the great comfort and rejoysing of the greatest parte of the realme.

> And when the king and Sir Hugh Spencer were brought to Bristow by the aforesayde Sir Henry Beamond. Then the king by the counsayle of all the Barons and knightes was sent vnto the strong Castell of Barkeley, and put in good and honest keeping, for there were ordeyned people of estate about him and such as knewe right well what they ought to doe: But they were streightly commaunded, that they should in no wise suffer him to passe out of the Castell. Then Sir Hugh Spencer the sonne was delyuered to Sir Thomas Wage Marshall of the hoste.

These things done, the Quene set forward towards London, the chiefest Citie in Englande, and her grace and her sonne with all her hoste and company, tooke so their iourneves, that at the last they came to the City of Harfford. And in all the waye, Sir Thosir Hugh Spen- mas Wage had caused syr Hugh Spencer to be bounde and to be set vpon a lewde Iade, and was lead after the Quene, and he had put vpon him a Tabarte, such as Traytors & wondermet lyke theeues were wont to weare, & thus he passed thorough the townes with Trumpes & Pipes of Reedes blowen before him, to do him the more scorne & despight.

And when the Quene was come to Herfford the Citizens receaued her very honorably with great solempnitie. And there she and all her company remayned & kept the feast of all Saintes very royally, and the more bountifully and honorably it was done, because of her sonne and the straugers that were present.

Nowe when this feast was done: then Sir Hugh Spencer the sonne who was nothing beloued, was brought foorth before the Queene and all the Lordes and knightes. And The arreigament before him in wryting was rehersed all hys deedes, vnto the which he would make no & iudgement of maner of aunswere. And so was he then iudged by playne sentence. First, to be drawen on a hardell with Trompes and Trumpettes throughout all the Citie of Herfford, and after to be brought into the market place, where as all the people were assembled, and there to be tyed vpon an high ladder that every man might see hym: & in the same place a great fyre to be made, and there hys privile members to be cut from hym, and to be brent in the fyre before his face. And then his harte to be drawen out of his body and cast into the fyre because he had conspired treason and was a false traytour in his heart, and that by his Trayterous counsell and extorcion the king had shamed his realme and brought the people thereof to a great mischiefe, for he had caused to be behedded the greatest Lordes of his realme, by whome this Realme ought to have been governed and defend-And he had so enduced the king, that he would not see the Queene his Wyfe, nor Edward his eldest sonne, and caused hym to chase them out of the realme for feare of their lyues. And then his head was stryken off and sent to London, and so according to his judgement he was executed.

After this execution the Quene and all her Lordes tooke their wave to London, wherof the Citizens both she and her sonne, were very honorably and joyfully receaued. Now after the straungers had bene there feasted. xv. dayes, they, namely Sir Iohn of Heynault nault desireth liand all his company, had great desyre to returne agayne into their awne countries, for cence to depart they thought they had well done their deuoyre and atcheued great honor: and therefore to his Countrie. tooke their leave of the Quene and of the Lordes of the realme. But the Queene and the Lordes entreated them earnestly to tary lenger, and chiefly that they shoulde see what shoulde be done with the king before they went. But the straungers had such minde home, that they would not be entreated to targe anye lenger. And when the Quene and her counsayle sawe that, then yet she intreated Sir Iohn of Heynault to tarie vntill it was past Christmas, and to reteigne with him such of his company as pleased him best. And he lyke a gentle knight would not leaue to performe his scruice, but curteously graunted the The straungers Quene to tarrie as long as it should please her, and he caused of hys company such to tarie depart, but sir as he could entreat, which was but a fewe, for the rest would needes awaye, with the taryeth. which he was displeased.

When the Quene and her counsayle sawe that no intreatic could cause them to tarie any lenger: Then she made vnto them great chere and feastes. And the Queene caused to be geuen vnto them plentie of Golde and Sylver for their costes and services, and also rewarded everye of them wyth riche and goodly Iewelles, according to their estates and degrees, so as they all helde themselves right well pleased and contented. And besides this, they had money for their horsses, such as they would leave behinde them at their awne price, without any grudging.

And thus Sir Iohn of Henault abode still in England with a small company, but he was so beloued, chered, and feasted of the Englishe men (who honored him in the best maner that they could imagine) and recreated him with sundrie disportes and pastymes, that the time seemed the lesse vnto him. And in lyke maner he was welcomed to the Ladies and Damosels: for at that tyme there was with the Quene many Ladies and Countesses, which came specially to accompany the Quene.

Nowe after that the most part of the companie of Henault were departed, and sir Iohn of Henault Lorde of Beamond taryed: The Queene discharged her armie, and gaue them leaue to returne home enery man to his Countrie and place, sauyng certeine noble men, which she still kept about her and her sonne as their counsaylors, and all the other knightes and gentlemen she commaunded to returne againe at Christmasse, at which tyme she promised to keepe open houshold, and so she did. And immediately after the dispatche of these people, the Queene with her soune, by the aduice of her counsaile sommoned her high Court of Parliament at Westminster which began the, xvj. day of Ianuary. A parliamet at And in this assembly it was declared that this realm could not continue without a heade and governour: And therefore first they agreed to drawe into articles the misgovernement of the king that was in prison, and all his euill doynges, which he had done by euill and naughtie counsaile: And when the sayd articles were read and made knowen to all the Lordes, Nobles, and Commons of the realme, then they consulted howe the realme should be governed thenceforth: and after good deliberation and consideration of the aforesaid articles of the kinges euill gouernement, they concluded, that such a man was not worthie to be a king, nor to weare a crowne royall. And therfore they all agreed that Edward his eldest sonne, who was there present, and was rightfull heyre, should be crowned king in steed of his father, so that he would take about him, sage, true, and good counsaile. and that from thencefoorth the realme might be better gouerned, then before it had bene. And it was also agreed, that the olde king his father should be well and honestly kept as long as he lyued, according to his estate.

Kenelworth Castell.

And so sone as all things were cocluded, as aforesayd, it was then further ordred & agreed, that during the Parliament time, a solemne message should be sent vnto the king to Kenelworth Castell, to declare vnto him not onely the determination of the three estates concerning his deposyng from the Kingdome, but also to resigne vnto him in the name of the whole realme, all theyr homages that before tyme they had done vnto him. And to do this message there was assigned three Bishops, three Erles, two Abbots, two Barons, and two Iustices, with the speaker of the Parliament, whose name was sir William Trussell. And when these messengers were come into the kinges presence at Kenelworth aforesayde, the aforenamed sir William Trussell the. xxv. day of Ianuary by the aucthoritie of his office in the heering of the aforesayd Lordes, vsed vnto the king these wordes to sir Iohn of

Henault

I William Trussell in the name of all men of this land of England, and speaker of the of king Edward Parliament, resigne to thee Edward, the homage that sometime was made vnto thee, and from this time foorth deprive thee of all kingly power, and I shall never be attendant vnto thee as king, after this time.

Nowe sir Iohn of Heynault, who had remayned with the Queene all the Christmasse, and perceyuyng king Edwarde deposed, who had reigned king of this realme fully, xviii. yeres. vi. monethes, and odde dayes, desired licence of the Queene, and would needes Rewardes geuen depart, and could by no meanes be entreated to tary any lenger: Wherefore the Queene by the assent of her sonne and counsaile gaue vnto him foure hundreth markes sterlyng, of rent, heritable to holde of the king in fee, to be payde enery yere in the towne of Bridges. This gift after the rate that money was then valued, which was at. xx. pence the ounce, and our money is now valued at fyue shillynges the ounce, was after that rate of our money nowe currant, viii, hundreth pound yerely. And likewise the Queene rewarded Philip of Chasteaux his Chiefe Esquier and Counsaylour, with one hundreth markes of yerely rent, to be payde at the aforesayde place. And also she deliuered vnto them great summes of money to pay for their costes and charges, when they were ouer the sea. besyde many riche and massy Cheynes, and costly Iewelles, that she rewarded all the Gentlemen withall that came with him. And when this noble knight was readie to depart, the Queene caused him to be conducted with many noble knightes and Gentlemen to Douer, and there deliuered him and all his passage free. And to the Ladyes that were come into England wyth the Queene, and namely to the Countesse of Garennes, who was sister to the Erle of Barre, and to dyuerse other Ladyes and Damosells, there were geuen many riche and fayre Iewelles at their departure.

King Edward kept in the Castell of Kenelworth.

And here to ende and finishe this history of king Edward the seconde, ye have heard howe he was deposed, and remayned in the Castell of Kenelworth vnder the custody and kepyng of Sir Henry Erle of Lancaster, which was brother vnto Erle Thomas of Lancaster, that was behedded at Pomfret. And Robert Baldocke, who was the kinges Chauncelour beyng a man of very euill name and fame, was committed to the prison of Newegate in London, where shortly after he dyed miserably. And the Erle Iohn of Arondell was put to death at Herforde within foure dayes after sir Hugh Spencer the sonne.

EDWARDE THE THIRDE.

Fter the deposicion of king Edward the seconde, as before ye have heard, then Edward hys sonne, begotten of Isabell the onely daughter and child of Philip le Beaw French king, was proclaymed king of Englande by the name of king Edward the thirde (hys father yet lyuyng) the, xxvj. day of Ianuarij, 1326, and was crowned at Westminster vpon Candlemas daye then next following, being then of the age of. xv. yeres.

In his begynnyng, sayth Fabian, chaunced many good haps, for the earth became plenteous, the ayre temperate, and the Sea had quietnesse, and to the Church grewe peace.

And first he confirmed the liberties and Fraunchises of the Citie of Lodon, and ordered that the Maior for the tyme beyng should sit in all places of judgement within the liberties of the same for chiefe Iustice, the kinges person onely except. And that every Alderman that had bene Major, should be Justice in all London, and Middlesex, and every Alderman that had not bene Major, should be Iustice of peace within his awne warde. And also he graunted to the Citezens, the Fee farme of London for three hundred pound by Iustice in Lonthe yere, & that they should not be costreyned to go out of the Citie to fight or defend the don and Mydland for any neede. Also that after y day, the Fraunchises of the Citie should not be other Alderman seased into the kings hands, but onely for treason & rebellion done by the whole City. to be a Justice of And at that time also Southwarke was admitted to be vnder the gouernement and rule of awne Warde. the Citie, and the Majour of London to be Bailyfe of Southwarke, and the Major to chose vnder hym suche a Bailife of that Borough as him lyketh, the which ordynaunce endureth to this day.

About the Moneth of Aprill, many great and sundrie sutes were made for the releasing of king Edward that was in prison. But among all other the Freer preachers, commonly called the Black Fryers, laboured most earnestly for him, and practised sundry decises both by night and day which way to get him out of prison. And among the companye that the Fryers had princely procured & brought, there was one Fryer called Dunhed, which should haue bene the Chife Capitaine and worker of their enterprice, but he was bewrayed and taken, and then put into the Castell of Poinfret, and there he dyed in prison.

Shortly after, syr Henry Erle of Lancaster that had Edward the kinges father in keeping, did by the commaundement of the king deliuer the sayde Edward by Indenture to Sir Morice of Barkelcy. And then Sir Iohn Matreuers and the sayde Sir Morice led him to the Castell of Barkeley, and kept him there safely. And often tymes while the king was The olde king is there imprisoned, he would say vnto his keepers. What haue I trespassed Isabell my remound to Barkeley Castell. wife or Edward my sonne which nowe is made king, that none of them will come and visit me? And then his keepers aunswered, my worthy Lorde be not offended that I tell you a truth: the cause is, for that they are certefied, in thys wise, that if the Quene your wyfe came any thing nere you, that ye would strangle and kyll her. And that ye would doe lykewise to the king your sonne. Then aunswered he with heavie chere: alas, alas, am not I here in prison, & at your awne will? and God I take to witnesse I neuer thought it: But I would to God I were deade, for then were I past all my trouble.

And shortly after, the king thorough the Counsell of Sir Roger Mortymer, as sayth Caxton in his Chronicle (which he calleth the Frute of Tyme) graunted the keeping and garde of Sir Edward his father vnto Sir Thomas Toiourley, and to the aforesayde Sir Iohn 1326

Matreuers by his letter sealed and cleerely discharged the aforesayde Sir Morice of the keeping of him. And then they toke and led the king vnto the Castell of Corfe, the which Castell the king hated to the death: But other writers saye, that he was brought to the Castell of Barkeley, but what Castell soener it was, there, sayth mine Authour, they kept Sir Roger Mor- him vntill September next following. And then the aforesayde Sir Roger sent a letter vnto them, signifying howe and in what wise he should be put to death. And anone after that the aforesayde Thomas and Iohn had receyued the letter, and considered the contents therof, they made the king good cheere and good countenaunce at his supper, when he thought least of the purposed treason. And when bed tyme came, the king went to his bed and laye and slept soundely. And he beyng in his sound sleepe, these traytours and-false forsworne persons agaynst their homage and fealtie, came princly into his Chamber, and their company with them, and layde a great Table vpon his belly, and with strength of men at all the foure corners pressed it downe vpon his body, wherewith the king awooke and beyng sore afrayde of death turned hys bodye, so that then he laye grouelyng. these murderers tooke a horne and thrust it vp into his fundement as farre as they might, and then tooke a hote burnyng Spit, and put it thorough the horne into his body, and in the ende kylled and vilve murdered him; but yet in suche wise, that after his death it could not be perceyued howe he came by his death, but being dead he was after buryed at Gloucester.

Now, sayth Froissart, after the departure of Sir Iohn of Heynault, the yong king of England, and the Queene his mother gouerned the realme by the counsaile of the Erle of Kent Vucle vuto the king, and by the counsaile of sir Roger Mortimer, of whome mencion is made before in the. xvij. yere of king Edward the second, the which Mortimer was taken when the Barons and Lords were taken, as aforesayd, and he was no smal doer among them, and therefore was committed to the tower of London, where in the begynnyng of August next folowyng, by the meane of a sleapyng poyson or drinke that he gaue to his kepers (as the common fame went) he escaped, and went with the Queene into Fraunce, and returned againe with her, as before you have heard. And besydes these counsaylors, the king vsed much counsaile of Sir Thomas Wage, who was accomted for a very sage and graue counsaylour, but these counsaylours were not without some enemies, as fewe counsaylours are (as sayth Froyssart) the which commonly happeneth, not onely in England, but also in all other countries.

About this tyme, Robert le Bruze king of Scottes, who had bene hardie and suffered much trauaile against Englishe men, and oftentimes in the life of king Edward the first, Graundfather to this yong king Edward the thirde, he had bene chased and discomfited, and was nowe become very aged, and sicke (as it was sayde) of the great euill and maladie: He nowe hearyng of the troubles of late happened in England, and of the deposying of the olde king, and also of the puttyng to death of certeine of his counsaylors (as before you have heard) thought a meete tyme for him to enter this realme, and to invade the same, and the rather because king Edward the third was yong. And therefore about Robert le Bruze Easter in the yere of our Lorde. 1327. he sent his letters of defiaunce vnto the aforeking of Scottes, sayd yong king, sendyng him worde how that he would enter into the realme of England, and brenne before him as he had done before tyme, at suche season as the discomfiture was at the Castell of Estreuelyn, where the Englishe men received great dammage.

When the king of England and his counsaile perceyued that they were defied, they caused it to be knowen ouer all the realme, and commaunded that the Nobles, and all the other should be in a redinesse, everye man after his estate by Ascention day next after, at the Citie of Yorke. The king sent much people before to kepe the frontiers against Scot-Sir John of He- land, and with much speede he sent a great Ambassade to sir John of Heynault, praiving him right effectuously that he would ayde him, and accompanie him in this voyage agaynst the Scottes, and that he would be with him at Yorke the day before appointed, with such companie as he might get of men of warre in those partes.

kis letters, and his messengers into every place where as he thought to recover or atteyne any company of men of warre. And shortly to tell, the sayde sir John Henault made such speede that he landed at Douer, accompanied with a great number of valiaunt knightes, to the number of five hundreth men of armes, whose names for tediousnesse I ouerpasse, and within three dayes of Whitsonday, he with all his Lordes and knightes came to Yorke, where the king and his mother then were, being accompanied with all their Nobles, and a great hoste tariyng the commyng of sir Iohn of Heynault: But the Sir Iohn of Heyking had sente many of his Lordes and men of armes and common people before, and company are lodged them five or sixe mile before him. And when sir Iohn of Henault was come to hartely welcomthe king and Queene, he and hys Lordes and knightes were most ioyously receyued, and med to the king and Queene. heartely welcomed. And such as came with sir Iohn of Henault, were lodged in the Suburbes of the Citie of Yorke, and sir Iohn Henault himselfe was lodged in an Abbey of white Monkes, where he and his housholde remayned.

And the king of England the better to feast and enterteyne the straunge Lordes and knightes, helde a great feast on Trinitie Sonday in the Friers, where he and the Queene The king feasthis mother were lodged, kepyng their house eche of them apart. At this feast the king eth the straunhad there besyde his Nobles, fiue hundreth knightes that gaue their attendaunce upon the straungers, and lykewise had the Queene aboue. lx. freshly apparelled ready to have daunced if they might have had leave. But such was the vnhappy chaunce, y incontinent after diner there began a great fray betwene some of the gromes and pages of the straugers, and of the Archers of England, which were lodg- Alewde and vaed among them in the sayd suburbes: And anone all the Archers assembled them happie fray. together with their Bowes, and droue the straungers home to their lodgings. And the most parte of the knights and Masters of them were as then in the kings Court: But assone as they heard tydings of the fray, eche of them drew to their lodgyngs in great haste, so many as might enter, & such as could not get in, were in great perill. For the Archers who were to the number of three thousand shot fiercely, sparying neyther masters nor varlets. And it was thought and supposed that this fray was begonne by some of the friendes of the Spencers and of the Erle of Arondels, who were put to death before by the ayde and counsayle of Sir Iohn of Henault, as is aforesayde, and as then thought to be somewhat reuenged by setting of discord in the hoste. And the Englishmen that were Hosts to these straungers, shut fast their dores & Wyndowes, and would not suffer them to enter into their lodgings: Howbeit some gate in on the backside and quicklie armed themselves, but they durst not issue out into the streete for feare of arrowes: Then the straungers breakyng out on the backsydes, brake downe Pales and hedges of Gardyns and drew them into a certaine playne place, and there targed for their company, till at the last they were an hundreth men of armes and mo, and as manye mo voharnessed, which could not get into their lodgings. And when they were assembled together, they made speede to succour and releue their companions who defended their lodgings in the great strete. And as they went forth, they passed by the lodging of the Lorde of Denghyen, when as there was greate gates both before and behynde openyng into the streete, and the Archers of Englande, shot fiercely at that house, and there were many of the Henawdes hurt. But finally the Archers that were at that fray were discomfited and put to chase, and there were of them dead in that place about the number of three hundred, & as the report was, they were all Lincolnshiremen. But continually after thys The straungers fray the straungers were in great feare. many good deuises and ordynaunces for their awne sauegarde. And at the ende of three wekes, knowledge came from the king to the Marshals of the hoste, that the next weeke euery man should prouyde for Cartes and Chariots with Tentes and Pauilions to lye in the field, & for all other necessaries therevnto belonging, to the entent to draw into Scot-And when the time came, the king of England and his hoste heard of the fyres that the Scottes made daylie in England, for the Scottes vnknowne to the kings armie The Scots came were gotten over the ryuer of Tyne and were entred into Englande: But the king with all ouer the ryuer of Tyne, and so his power in all possible hast followed them, and hunted them from towne to towne, and entred into Eng- from mountayne to mountayne, and from place to place, from day to day, and weeke to weeke, by the space of v. weekes and when the king thought himselfe most sure of them and had hedged them in, they escaped at Midnight and were gone where the king could not follow them, for his people, were tyred, and the wayes were ouer such mountaynes and thorough marishes and such combersome places that he lost both manye of his people and also of hys carvages. And so this puyssaunt armye, which was deuided into three battailes, wherein were, xxx, thousand armed men, and, xxiiij, thousande Archers, beside two wynges, wherein were fine hundreth good men of armes, returned home agayne with euill luck, and did nothing at all worthy the wryting. But surely it was a very chargeable armye vnto the king and the realme, for besides the provision of all the Englishmen and their municion, the very charges of Sir Iohn Henault and the straungers that came with him were so great, that the king lacked money presentlye to pay them, and Sir Iohn of Heynault tooke voon hym to promise the payment therof, which, as Froissart sayth, was payd within one yere following, euery man according to his awne asking. But the euil hap of this journey, was imputed to Sir Roger Mortymer who afterwarde was charged therewith as ye shall here.

Now after the returne of the king out of Scotland, and breakyng vp of the sayd warre, the gentle knight sir Iohu of Henault tooke his leave of the king and Queene, and departed with all his men of armes into their coutrie.

And shortly after, the king and the Queene his mother, the Erle of kent his Vncle, the Erle of Lancaster, and sir Roger Mortimer, who then bare the chiefe rule of this realme vnder the king, and all the Barons of England with the aduice and consent of the kinges Counsaile, sent a Bishop and two knightes Banerettes, with two notable Clerkes, to Sir Iohn of Heynault, praiyng him to be a meane that theyr Lorde the yong king of England might have in mariage the yongest daughter of the Erle of Henault his brother, named with his brother Philip: for the king and all the Nobles of the Realme desyred rather to have her then any other Ladve, chiefely for the loue they bare vnto the said Sir Iohn of Henault. And when the Ambassadors were come to Sir Iohn of Henault (who right gently and honourably enterteyned them) and that they had shewed their message and ambassade vnto him. He then (after that he had feasted them and made vnto them great cheere) brought them to Valenciens to the Erle his brother, who also right honourably receyved them, and made vnto them merueylous great and costly cheere, which were to long here to reherse. when they had expressed and shewed the content of the message or ambassade vnto the Erle. The Erle sayd, Sirs I thanke greatly and most hartely the king your Prince, and the Queene his mother, and all the Lordes of England, for that they have sent such sufficient persons as you be, to do me suche honour as to treate for the mariage, to the which request I do right well agree, if our holy father the Pope will consent therevnto. With the which aunswere the Ambassadors were right well content, and forthwith they sent two knightes, and two Clerkes to the Pope to Auignion to purchase a dispensation for this mariage. For without licence they might not mary, because they were of Kinne in the thirde degree, for their two mothers were cosyn Germaynes, and issued of two brethren. And to be short, the licence was graunted, and the Messengers returned and brought the same from the Pope, vnto Valenciens, and then was this mariage concluded on both And the mariage was foorthwith made, and solempnized by procuration from the king of England. And after the solemnitie thereof, and the feastes ended: this yong Queene came onward of her journey, and tooke shippyng at Wisant, and safely arrived with all her companie at Douer. And sir Iohn of Henault her Vncle did conduct her to the Citie of London, where she was most honourably and triumphantly received. Frois-But Fabian sayth, this maryage was solemnized in Yorke.

Nowe when all thinges were finished that belonged to the receyuyng of the yong Quene, then sir Iohn of Henault Vncle to the Queene, tooke hys leaue of the king and the yong Queene, and also of the olde Queene, and of all the Lordes and Barons of England, and so departed towardes his countrie, beyng conducted to the See with the companie of divers and sundrye Lordes.

Soone after his departure, the king at whitsontide following called his high Court of Parliament at Northhampton. At the which Parliament (as sayth Fabian) by § euill A parliamet at counsaile of syr Roger Mortimer, & the old Quene, (as the common fame and report Northhampton. was) the king made with the Scottes an vnprofitable and a dishonorable peace, to endure A dishonourable three yeres. For first, he released vnto them their fealtie and homage, and he delivered peace made with the Scottes. vnto them theyr olde and auncient writyngs, sealed with the Seales of the kinges of Scots, and of diverse Lordes of the land, both spirituall & temporal, with many other Charters and Patentes, namely one called Ragman, by the which the King of Scottes bound him-Ragman. selfe and them to be Feodaries to the Crowne of England. At the which tyme also were delyuered certaine Iewelles, which before tymes had bene wonne from the Scottes by kinges of England, and among other, the blacke crosse of Scotland is chiefely named. And not onely the king by thys doyng lost the right and title that he had to the realme of Scotland, so farre as he could passe from it, but also all the Lordes and Barons, and all other men of Englande that had any landes or rentes within Scotland, lost their right in lyke maner, except they would dwell voon the sayde landes, and become the king of Scottes liege men. And shortly after was concluded a mariage, betwene Dauid le Bruze, sonne of Robert le Bruze, and Iane the kinges sister, which of divers writers is surnamed Iohan of Towres.

Shortly after, there was another Parliament holden at Salsbury, or rather Sarisbury, at the which Parliament sir Roger Mortimer was made Erle of Marche against the minde and will of all the Barons, and sir Iohn of Eltham the kinges brother, was made Erle Aparliamet at of Cornewall: To the which Parliament, Henry Erle of Lancaster would not come. Wherefore the king was brought in beliefe, that he ment euill towardes him, and that he purposed the destruction of his person. For the which, the king by the meane of sir Roger Mortimer, caused to be assembled a great hoste, and made towardes Bedford, where Erle Henry lay with his company. Then the Erle Marshal, and the Erle of Kent, made a peace betweene the king and the Erle of Lancaster: on whose part was sir Henry Lord Beamond, sir Fouke Fyzwayn, sir Thomas Rocellyn, sir William Trussell, sir Thomas Wyther, and about an hundreth knightes, who all were exiled and banished Englande, by the counsaile of Queene Isabell, and the Erle Mortimer. For the sayd Mortimer was couetous, and thought to have obteyned all their landes.

This yere Robert le Bruze the false king of Scottes dyed of a leapory, leauyng behinde him his sonne Dauid of the age of. viii, yeres, whome the Scottes received willyngly for their king.

Also about this tyme (as sayth Fabian) sir Edmond of Woodstock Erle of Kent, sup- Sir Edmod of posyng that his brother king Edward the second had beene aliue, (for so he was informed,) of Kent appreand mindyng a reformation of the misorder of the realme, wrote certeine letters vnto him, hended. conteyning decreases for his delivery, and sent them vnto him: Of the which downg he was shortly after accused, by the procurement of sir Roger Mortimer, who ought him ma-And by aucthoritie of parliament holden at Winchester, about Whitsontide followyng, he for that deede was adjudged to have his heade smitten off, which execution was done in the sayd Citie of Winchester the. xxv. day of May folowyng.

But Froissart sayth, he was behedded the. x. daye of October. And not long after sayth he (it was openly reported) that Isabell the kinges mother was with childe by Mor. tymer: and howe that the sayde Mortymer had caused the king to put to death his Vncle without reasonable or just cause, for all the realme accompted him for a noble and good writers name him the black prince.

In this time the king helde his high Court of Parliament at London (as sayth Fabian) duryng which tyme the king caused Sir Roger Mortymer Erle of Marche to be apprehended at Nottyngham, and brought to Lodon. And before the Lordes and nobles were expressed and declared in wrytyng, the wickednesse and offences of the sayde Mortymer. Then the king demaunded of his counsaile what should be done with him: And all the Lords by one assent gaue judgement and sayd, he hath deserved to die the same death that Sir Hugh Spencer the sonne dyed. And after thys judgement there was no sparying, respite or delaye could be graunted : but incontinent, he was drawen on a hardell thorough London, and then set on a Ladder, and hys members cut from him, and cast into the fyre. and hys heart also, because he had conspired treason, and then quartered, and his quarters sent to foure of the best Cities of the realme, and his head set vpon London Bridge. Thus farre Froissart.

Mortimer.

But Fabian sayth, he was charged and condempned for sundry articles, whereof he maketh mencion of fyue especiall, which follow.

I First, that Sir Edwarde of Carnaruan, which was King Edward the second, was by against sir Roger his meanes, by most tyrannous death murthered in the Castel of Barkeley.

2 The second, that to the kings great dishonour and dammage, the Scots by his meanes and treason, escaped from the king at the Parke on Stanhope, which then should have fallen in the kings daunger, if the sayd Roger had not fauoured them.

3 The thirde, that he for the execution of the sayde Treason, receaued of the Capitaine of the sayde Scottes, named Sir Iames Douglas, great summes of money; but another writer sayth, he receaued. xx. thousand pound and also that he had for lyke meede, to the great dishonour of the king, and hurt of this realme, concluded a peace between the king and the Scottes, and caused to be delyuered vnto them, the Chartre or Indenture called Ragman, with many other things, to the Scottes great advantage, and to the great dishonour of the imperial state of this realme of England.

4 The fourth, he was charged, that by sinister and vnlawfull meanes, contrary to the kings pleasure and will, or assent of the Lordes of the kings counsaile, he had gotten into his possession much of the kings treasure, and that he had prodigally and vnskilfully wasted and spent the same. By reason wherof, the king was in necessity and driven perforce to assay his friends.

5 The fift, that he had impropered vnto him divers wards, belonging vnto the king, to his great gayne, and the kinges great hurte: and that he was more secret with Quene Isabell the kings mother, then was to Gods pleasure or the kings honour.

The Quenecommitted to prison.

Sone after this, the king by the aduise of his counsell, commaunded that the Quene his mother should be kept close in a Castell, and to have appointed to attende vpon her certaine Ladies and damozelles, and knightes and Esquires according to her estate, and certaine landes were assigned wherewith to maintayne her noble estate during her lyfe: But speciall commission was geuen, that she should not departe out of the Castell, onlesse it were to see such sportes as sometime were shewed before the Castell gate for her recreation. Thus this lady led there her lyfe meekely, and once or twise a yere the king her sonne came to visite and see her.

zether at a Synode holden at London, in the which after dyuers abuses removed, and other good things restored in their places, he then and there among other things, by the consent of the saide Synode, excomunicated all those, whatsoever they were, generally, that were guiltie of the death of Walter Stapleton Bishop of Excester, or did procure or consent of the same, or layde any handes upon him. The which maner of doying seemeth somewhat straunge to mee, for the sayde Stapleton as before ye have heard was put to death by the Citezens as an enimie to the Quene, and was also the same yere and in the first Parliament that king Edwarde the thirde helde attaynted of high treason by name, with the two Spencers afore mencioned, but I leave this to the consideration and judgement of the reader.

And Polidore sayth moreover, that the sayde Stapleton Bishop of Excester paraducuture did foresee that he could not long continue in the service of princes with the sauctie of his lyfe, and therefore (when he had time) he builded at Oxford two notable houses that should endure many hundreds of yeres, whereof the one to this day is called Excester Col-Excester College ledge, and the other is called Hartes ball, in the which he placed a number of scholers, Hartes hall,

Now after that the king had caused to be done the aforesayd executions, he chose vnto hym newe counsaylours of the noblest and sagest persons of his realme. And towarde the ende of thys yere Philip Valoys, beyng newly crowned king of Fraunce, all the Barons of hys realme came to him to doe their homage and Fealtie, and likewise did all other noble personages that helde of him, except the king of England, who had not done his homage for the Duchy of Guyan, neyther was he sommoned therevuto. Wherefore, the French king by the aduise of his counsayle, sent as an Ambassade into Englande, the Lorde Auycenes, the Lorde Beausalt, and two noble Clarkes Maysters of the Parliament of Paris, whose names were, Mayster Peter of Orlyaunce and Maister Peter of Masiers. These foure departed from Paris, and came into Englande to the king then beyong at Wyndsore. The king of Englande for the honour of the French king his Cosyn, caused them to come into his presence, and receaued them honorably, and then they published their message vnto the king. And the king aunswered that as then the nobles of his realme was not about him, neyther was his counsell then present, wherfore he prayed them to resort to the Citie of London, and there to stay awhile, and they should have aunswere to their conten-Ambassadors tation. And so they dyned in the kinges Chamber, and after departed, and laye the same sent from the French king to night at Colbroke, and the next day at London.

And shortly after, the king came to his palace at Westminster where he assembled all to demaunde hohis counsaile: And thether came the French Ambassadors, and there agayne declared the Duchieof Guian. occasion of their comming, and delivered their letters. Then the king and his counsell went aside into the counsell Chamber, and counsayled what was to be done. And they agreed that the Ambassadors should be aunswered by the ordynaunce and stile of his predecessors, by the Bishop of London. Then were the Frenchmen called into the counsayle

Chamber.

The Bishop of London then sayde, ye Lordes that are here assembled for the king of An answere The kings grace my sourceigne Lorde hath heard your wordes and read the made to the Amtenour of your letters. And for aunswere, we say vnto you, that we will counsell the king our Byshop of soucreigne Lorde here present, that he go into Fraunce to see your master his deare Cosyn who right louingly hath sent for him. And as touching his faith and homage, he will doe his devoyre in every thing that of right he ought to doe. And ye may shewe vnto the king your master, that win short space that the king of England our master will arryue in Fraunce, and there to doe all that reason shall require.

Then these Messengers, after they had beene feasted, and that the king had rewarded them with great giftes, and riche Iewelles, they tooke theyr leave, and at the last came to Parys to king Philip, to whome they declared their aunswere and message: Whereof the Frenche King was right glad and joyfull, when he vnderstood of the kinges commyng, for he was very desyrous to see him, because he neuer sawe him, and yet was hys nere Cosyn and kinsman. Then the French king caused this to be spread abroade throughout all Fraunce. Then Dukes, Erles, and other Lordes apparelled and appoynted themselves in their best maner. And the Frenche king wrote his letters to king Charles of Behaygne his Cosyn, and to the king of Nauerre, certefyng them of the day and time when the king of England would be in Fraunce, desiryng them to be with him at the same day and tyme, and so they came came with a great aray. Then was it counsailed the French king, that he should receive the king of England at the Citie of Amyas, and there to make provision for his commyng: There were Halles, Chambers, Hosteries, and lodgynges made redy, and apparelled to receaue them all and their companie. And also for the Duke of Burgoyne, the Duke of Burbon, the Duke of Loreyn, and Sir Iohn of Arthoys. There was provision made for a thousand horse, and for sixe hundreth horse that should come wyth the king of England.

King Edward goeth into Frauce. The yong king forgate not his voyage into Fraunce, and beyng furnished of all thing mete for him and his trayne, he departed out of England, accompanied with three Bishoppes, foure Erles whose names were, Henry Erle of Darby, the Erle of Salsbury, the Erle of Warwike, and the Erle of Herfford, and sixe Barons, the Lorde Reignold Cobham, the Lorde Thomas Wage Marshall of England, the Lorde Percey, the Lorde Manney, and the Lorde Mowbray, and mo then xl. knightes, so that the king and hys companie were about a thousand horse, and the king was two dayes in passing betwene Douer

Then the king and his company roade to Boleyn, and there taryed one day, and this was about the middest of August. And anone tidynges came to king Philip of Fraunce, howe the king of England was at Boleyn. Then the French king sent his Constable with a great number of knightes to mete the king of Englande, who then was come to Mountrell, and there were great embracynges and shewynges of frendship on both sydes, from thence the king of England, now beyng accompanied with the Constable of Frauce and other French Lordes, and his awne Lordes, road forwarde so long vntill they came to the Citie of Amyas, where the French king, and the king of Bohaingne, the king of Mailorgues, and the king of Nauerre, beyng well appoynted, were ready to receyue him, with many other Dukes, Erles, and Barons. For there were all the xij. Peeres of Fraunce, ready to feast, and to cheere the king of England and his Nobles, and also to be there in peaceable maner to beare witnesse of the king of Englandes homage.

And thus the king of England beyng nobly and honourably receyued, taryed and was feasted with these kinges, and other Princes in Amyas. xv. dayes. And in that meane tyme there were sondrie wayes deuysed howe the king should do his homage, but so farre (sayth Froissart) as I could learne, the king of England made his homage vnto the French king onely by word and not by puttyng of his handes betwene the Frenche kinges handes, nor none other Prince nor Prelate limited nor appoynted to do it for him, neyther would the king of England do his homage any otherwise, but was determined rather to returne againe into England. And there was red openly the privileges that of auncient tyme were graunted, the which declared how and in what maner the king should do his homage to the French king, and what service he should do him. Then sayd the French king: Cosyn, we will not at this tyme any further trouble you, for that ye have nowe done, contenteth vs well, vntill ye be returned home againe into your realme, and that ye have seene vnder the seales of your predecessors, howe and in what wise ye should do your homage.

King Edwarde did homage to the French king for the Duchie of Guyan.

And shortly after, the king of England toke his leaue of the French King, and of all the other Princes that were there, and departed very louingly, the one embracyng the other. Then the King made hast homeward, and wyth good speede returned into England, and so to Windsore, where of the Quene he was received right ioyfully. Then she The king seueth demaunded howe her Vncle the French King did, and her Kinsfolkes that were about a great comment that he king shewed her all that he knew, and of the great cheere & honor that he had there, and sayde that in hys opinion, there was no Realme to be compared to the Realme of Fraunce.

It was not long after, but that the French King sent a newe Ambassade to the King of A new Ambas-Englande, who were certeine of his preuie counsaile, as the Bishop of Charters, the Bi- sade sent out of Frauce to king shop of Beauuoys, the Lorde Lewes of Cleremount, the Duke of Burbon, the Erle of Edward for the Hercourt, and the Erle of Tankeruile, with diverse other Knightes and Clerkes, who, as doying of hys homest hand the Erle of Tankeruile, with diverse other Knightes and Clerkes, who, as doying of hys homest hand the Erle of Tankeruile, with diverse other Knightes and Clerkes, who, as aforesayd, were sent to the King, and to the Counsaile of England, which was then holden Duchy of Guya and kept at London, about the performance of the kinges homege, whereof ye heard before. and Aquitaine.

Now when the King of England and his counsaile had well considered the maner of his predecessors in doving their homage for the Duchye of Aquitaine (although there were many in England that murmured and sayde, that the King theyr Lorde was never by succession vnto the crowne of Fraunce, then Philip of Valoys that was nowe French King) yet the King nor hys counsaile would not know it at this time, nor speake a worde thereof, but the counsaile and assembly aforesaid had much ado about this homage. And they were so long in the matter, that the Ambassadsrs were inforced to tary here all the Winter vntill May folowyng, before they had any aunswere definitive. But finally the King w the advice of his counsayle, vpon the sight of former presidentes, to the which they gaue great credite, did determine to write letters in the maner of patentes, sealed with his great seale, knowledgyng therein the homage that he ought to do to the Frenche King, as in Froissard ve may read more at large.

The King of Euglande was now enformed that king Dauid of Scotlande, who had maried his sister, was seased of the towne of Barwike, the which ought to apperteine to the realme of Englande, for king Edward the first, his Grandfather, had it in his peaceable possession. Also the King was enformed that the realme of Scotland should holde in chiefe of the Crowne of England: and how the young king of Scottes had not as then done his homage. Wherefore the King of England sent his Amhassade to the King of The king of Scottes, desyryng him to make deliverance of the towne of Barwike, for it perteyned to Scottes is somhis heritage. And also that they should sommon the sayd king of Scottes to come vnto moned to come and do his ho-the King of Englande, and to do his homage for the realme of Scotland.

Then the King of Scoties tooke counsaile howe to aunswere this matter. And at the king of England for the last, he aunswered the Ambassadors and sayd, sirs, both I and all the Nobles of my kingdome of realme meruayle greatly of that ye have required vs to do, for we finde no auncient re- Scotland. The answere of corde that the realme of Scotlande should be subject to the realme of England, neyther the king of Scottes. by homage, nor other wayes: neyther did the noble King our father any homage vnto the Kinges of England, for any warre that was made vnto him by anye of them, and no more doe I purpose to do. And as for the towne of Barwike, our father conquered it by force of armes against king Edward your Kinges father, and by right helde it all the dayes of his life, as his good heritage, and we purpose to the best of our power to do lykewise. Notwithstandyng, we require you Lordes to be meanes to the King your Maister, whose sister we have maryed, that he will suffer vs peaceably to enjoy our fraunches and rightes. as his auncetours have done here before.

Then the Ambassadors aunswered and sayde, sir we have well understand your aunswere, and we will declare it vnto the King our Lorde. And so tooke their leave and returned into England to the King, and declared their aunswere, wherewithall the King was nothing contented.

Then the king sommoned a Parliament to be holden at Westmynster, where all the no-Aparliament bles and wise men of this realme were assembled, to determine what was meetest to be minster. done in this matter. And they concluded, that it was not for the kinges honour to beare those in uries and wronges that the Scottes did daylie vnto him, and they be sought him to prouyde his force and strength of men of warre, to attavne thereby the Towne of Barwike, and to enter into the realme of Scotland with such force, that he should constrayed the king

Then the king with his armie drew nere to Barwike, for the king of Scots made none other answere then he did at the first, wherfore they somoned him, & then openly defyed And so the king of England taried not at Barwike, but went forward into Scotlande and burned the Countrey as he went. In the which journey he wasted & destroyed all the plaine countrey of Scotland, & brent and destroyed many townes and villages & toke the strong Castell of Edynborough and set therein a garison. And then he passed ouer the second ryuer in Scotland, & ran ouer all the countrey there about to Scone, and destroyed the good towne of Donfremlyn, Dondy & Dombritayne, and many other, for there were no Scottes that would appere before the Englishmen, for they were fled into the Forest of Gedwoorth with all their goods and they cared not much for that they left behinde. And it was no great meruayle though they were thus driven, for the king of Scottes was but, xv. yeres of age, and the Erle of Morrey was but yong, and the Nephewe of Wylliam Dowglas, that was slaine in Spayne, was also of the same age. So as at that time the realme of Scotland was vnprouyded of Capitaines.

Now when the king had runne ouer all the playne Countrie of Scotlande, and had taryed there the space of. vi. Moneths, and sawe that none would appere against him: Then he strengthened and furnished certayne Castels that he had wonne, thinking by them to make warre to all the other. And afterwarde he withdrew hymselfe fayre and easily towarde Barwike, where the king layed his siege round about, and sayde he woulde neuer departe thence vntill he had wonne it. But after manye assaultes and sharpe skirmishes had with the Scottes for suche as kept the Towne defended the same manfully, yet at the last they yeelded the Towne to the king condicionally that they might have their lyues and goodes saued, and that the souldyours might departe into their Countrie without any dammage. And then the king entred into the Towne with great solempnitic, and tarved there, xii, dayes, & made Capitain there syr Edward Bailleol, whom also he made king of the Scots, and betooke the government of the whole realme vnto him.

And when the king had thus set all thinges in good order, he returned to London, where he was right joyfully receaued and saluted of all hys people. And thus at thys tyme the king wanne the greatest parte of Scotlande, as sayth Froyssart.

In the meane while that the king prepared the aforesayde voyage and army into Scotland, it chaunced sir Robert de Arthoys, who was one of the noblest men in Fraunce, Sir Robert Erle vpon displesure had betweene him and the French king, to flie out of Fraunce and came into England to the king disguysed in a Marchaunts apparell. This Sir Robert was he, of whom before ye have heard, that in the great distresse of the Quene and her sonne, beyng in France with her brother the French king, she found him an especiall friend and helper vnto her, and it was his counsell that she passed into Henault, where shee was releeued and by the good helpe of the gentle knight Sir Iohn of Henault was restored to vnto the Crowne of Fraunce, wherevpon he fled, as is aforesayde. Duryng the time of the aforesayde voyage into Scotlande, and the king hauyng with him the aforesayde Sir Robert, who went with him all that iourney, the sayde Sir Robert was often tymes in hande with the king (espyeng the Countrie of Scotland to be bareyne and beggerly) to leave his warres in that countrey, and to clayme his right and lawfull inheritaunce of the crowne of Fraunce, and the whole realme of the same, which justly and rightly did belong and apperteigne vnto hym, but the king gaue no eare therevnto.

The king this yere in Wynter, in the month of Nouember went againe towarde Scotlande, and kept his Christmas at Yorke. And after that feast, he went into Scotlande, where he layde siege to the Castell of Kylbrydge, and at the last wanne it by strength Kilbridge Castell and then he set the countrie in some quietnesse, and after he returned to New Castell vpon Tyne, and taried there a certaine of time, and kept there his Whitsontyde with great royaltie. And within short space after, thether came Sir Edward Bailioll king of Scots, Edward Bailioll king of Scots, king of Scottes and the. xix. day of Iune made his homage vnto king Edward for the kingdome of Scot-doth his homage land, in the presence of many of the nobles of both the realmes, and sware vnto him to king Edward for the kingdome fealty and fidelity. And that being done, he returned into Scotland, and king Edward of Scotland. went vnto Yorke and so to Wynsor. Then were all suche Lordes of Englande as before tyme in King Edward the secondes dayes, disseased of suche landes as they held in Scotland, restored agayne to their possessions, and for them made their homage vnto § king of Scots, sauyng theyr allegeaunce vnto their souereigne Lorde. Fabian.

Now shortly after, certaine Ambassadour's were sent from the French king, as the Byshop of Thuroyne and the Lorde of Ferrey, and Peynguy for to conclude certaine articles of variaunce, between their Lorde and the king of England. But this purpose toke none effect, sauying that the king graunted to send vito the French king shortly after, certaying of hys Lords to have further communication with him touching the sayde articles.

And this yere the king kept his Christmas in the Castell of Rokesborough in Scotlande, which Castell he caused to be newly repayred. And when he had set suche things in order as before he purposed: Then he returned agayne into England. And some after he sent the Archbyshop of Cauntorbury, Sir Philip de Mountague & Sir Geoffrey Scrope, Ambascadors into y realme of Fraunce, to the entent to have concluded an amity betwene him & the French king for French king, which before in the last yere was moued by the French Ambassadors. But the conclusion when these sayde Lordes were landed in Fraunce, they were long delayed before they of a peace, but it toke no effect, could come to the kinges presence, in somuch that they sayde playnely vnto such Lordes of Fraunce as were by the French king assigned to passe the time with them, that they supposed that it was not the kings pleasure to speake with them.

By meane of which wordes, they were shortly after brought vnto the Kinges presence, of whome they were receyued with ioyous countenaunce, and so continued a certeine tyme in furtheryng of their Ambassade, so that at the last, a conclusion of peace betwene England and Fraunce was agreed vpon, so farre foorth as the same should have bene published the next day in Parys by proclamation. But howe the French kinges minde altered, the Englishe Ambassadors were scantly returned vnto their lodgynges, but they were sent for againe, and further informed, that the French kinges pleasure and minde was, to have Dauid late king of Scottes to be included within the same peace, and that he should againe be restored vnto his Kingdome. The coyne 2d-

I finde written in an olde Englishe Chronicle, which beareth the name of one Robert of Auesbury, that this King Edwarde the thirde, did aboute this tyme chaunge and aduaunce his coyne, that is to say, from. xx. pence the ounce sterlyng, vnto. xxv. pence the ounce, which maketh of currant money the pound weight of siluer. xxv. shillynges, and before it was currant for. xx. shillynges.

Warreproclaymed betweene Fraunce and England.

Nowe for somuch as no conclusion of peace might be had betweene the French king and the king of Englande, warre was proclaymed upon both partes, the which warre was greatly procured by sir Robert of Arthoys, for as saith Froissart, he was ever nore about king Edward, and alwayes counsailyng him to defie the French king, who kept his heritage from him wrogfully. Of the which matter the king oftentymes conferred with his preuie counsayle, for gladly he desired to have obtevned his right, but the meane to come by it was very difficult and chargeable. And he also considered with himselfe, that to make a clayme to the Crowne of Fraunce, and not to go through with his claime, it should be better for him to say little, and to be still, rather then to make a great sturre, and then nothyng should followe nor come of it that should be to any purpose: And therefore after certaine meetyngs and conference vpon this matter, his counsaylours aunswered him saiving: Sir the matter is so weightie, and of so highe an enterprice, that we dare not speake therein, neyther to geue you any counsayle. But sir, if it may please you, we thinke it were meete that you sent sufficient Messengers well enformed of your meaning to the Erle of Henault (whose daughter ye have maryed) and to sir Iohn of Henault his brother, who hath valiantly serued you at all tymes: And to desyre them in the way of amitie and friendship, to geue you their counsaile in this matter, for they knowe better what is meete for such an enterprice than we do: And sir, if they agree to your entent, then will they counsaile you what way you shall worke, and what friendes you were best to make.

Ambassadors sent to the Erle of Henault.

The king when he had heard the aduise of his counsaylours, and had well considered the same, hethought well of it, and iudged it to be a good way of entraunce vnto his enterprice: and forthwith the King appoynted the Bishop of Lincolne, and with him two Banerettes, and two Doctors to do this message. And they made them readie and tooke shippyng, and arryued at Dunkerke, and roade through Flaunders, vntill they came to Valenciens, where they found the Erle liyng in his bed sicke of the Goute, and with him sir Iohn his brother. And after the Erle vnderstoode their message, he aunswered and sayde. As helpe me God, if the king might attaine his desire, I would be right glad thereof, for I had rather the welth of him that hath maryed my daughter, then of him that neuer did any thing for me: Though I have maryed his sister. And to say truth, I have no cause to do for him, for he letted the maryage of the yong Duke of Brabant, which should have maried one of my daughters, wherefore I will not faile to ayde my dere and welbeloued sonne the King of England, and counsaile him to the best of my power, and so shall Iohn my brother do, who hath served him or this. Howbeit, he must have more helpe then ours. For Heynault is but a small countrie in respect of the realme of Fraunce, and England is farre off to ayde vs.

The Erle of Henault geneth counsaile to king Edwarde.

Then sayd the Bishop, we thanke you on our maysters behalfe, for the comfort that ye have geven vs: Nowe we hartely desyre you to geve our maister counsaile what friendes he were best to labour vnto for his ayde. Surely sayde the Erle, I cannot devise a more puysaunt Prince to assist him then the Duke of Brabant, who is his Cosin Germaine: and the Bishop of Liege, the Duke of Guerles, who hath maried his sister. The Archebishop of Coleyn: the Marques of Iullers, Sir Arnolde de Baquehen, and the Lorde of Falkemeunt. These Lordes are they that may make most men of warre, in shortest space of any that I know: they are good men of warre and they may well make ten thousand men, so that they have wages thereafter.

After that the Erle had thus declared his mind of the best wayes to enter into the sayd enterprise, the aforesayd Ambassadors returned into England, and so to the King, and shewed him all that the Erle had sayd, & counsayled. At the which message the king did greatly reioyce, and tooke much comfort. And shortly after, the king appoynted ten Banerettes, and xl. other knightes, and sent them in Ambassade to Valenciens, and with A great Ambasthem went the bishop of Lincolne to treate with the Lordes of the Empire, such as the Erle of Henault. Erle of Henault had named. And when these Ambassadors were come to Valencieus, eche of them kept a great estate and port, and spared no cost, no more then if the king of England had beene there in proper person, whereby they did get great renowne and

Now while these thinges were thus in compassyng at Valenciens: The French king sent The French king a crewe of Souldiours into Scotland to ayde the Scottes against the Englishe men: By sendeth a crewe reason whereof the Scottes made sharpe warre vpon the king of Englandes subjectes and ayde the Scottes friendes, and put the lande to great vexation and trouble, insomuch that the king was in- against king Ed-ward. forced to assemble his power, and to spede him againe thether.

About Mydsomer the king entred Scotland by Sea and warred vpon the Scottes and French men, at which tyme the king subdued his enimies and had the victory and tooke dyuers prisoners. Among the which one called the Erle of Moret a Frenchman, was The Erle of chiefe, which afterwarde was delyuered in exchaunge for the Erle of Namur, another Moret a French French Lord.

When King Edward had now againe pacefied the Scottes, and had taken homage of The Scotts againe such as before rebelled, he then stablished agayne the aforenamed Edward Baylioll as king King Edwarde. of Scottes, and committed the rule of the lande vnto him as before times he had done. Then the King of Scottes and the nobles for the great kindnesse they had founde in the King, and partly in recompence of the great charges which he sundrie times had beene at, in the defending and ordering of that realme, graunted and bounde themselves vnto him and to his heyres, kings of England, that they would ayde and assist him agaynst all princes. And whensoeuer he or any king of Englande had warre, eyther within his awne lande or The Scats make with any other prince: The Scots of their proper expences and charges should finde him alarger offer vnto King Edthree hundreth horsemen well armed, and a thousande footemen well and substancially ward, then ever furnished for the warre, the which. xiij. hundred men the Scottes should wage for a whole performe. yere. And if the king of Englande ended not his warre within the yere, then he to hyre and wage the sayde Scottes as he did his other souldyours. And some after that these grauntes and agreements were made, the king returned into England. About thys tyme the French king, having purposed a journey into the holy lande against

And moreouer, hauving obtayined by his Ambassadors of the king of Hungary (who not a little rejoyced at that message) that he would be in a readynesse, and open the passages and streytes of his Countrey, that the kynges souldyours and armic (whom he called the Pilgrimes of God) might quietly passe through. About this tyme, I say, newes came vnto him of all the King of Englands entent and purpose agaynst the realme of Fraunce, and of the assembly of king Edwardes Ambassadors, who at that tyme were with the Erle of Henault, and of all their counsailes and Wherevoon this voyage to the Turkes was vtterly dashed and all the former travailes and provisions came to nothing, neyther coulde he abide to here of them, but bent himselfe wholy to make defence against the King of Englande, who purposed the inuasion of his realme, and to make clayme thervnto as right inheritour to the same, as after more-

King Edwarde goeth ouer into Flaundyrs to alas many friends as he could make. King Edwarde kept an honorable estate in Andwarp in Brabant.

In this meane time the Kinges Ambassadors which were sent into Henault as aforesayd, so applyed their Ambassade, y they had obteyned the good will and fauour of all, or the greatest parte of those persons whom the Erle of Henault thought meete to be labored vnto for the ayde of the king in thys enterprise. And to bring the same to a full conclusion and effect, King Edward himselfe went ouer into Flaundyrs and there allyed himselfe with Iaques Dartuell governour of all Flaundyrs, and then came to Andwarp in Brabant, lye himselfe with where he kept a most honorable estate and royall houshold, and thether came vnto him people from all partes, to see him and to beholde the great estate that he kept. And durying the time of his abode there, he sent for his Cosyn the Duke of Brabant, and the Duke of Guerles, the Marques of Iullers, the Lorde Iohn of Henault, and all suche as he trusted to have any comfort of, and they all came vnto him between Whitsontyde and Mydsomer. And when the king had well feasted them, he desyred to know their good willes towardes him, and when they would be in a readynesse: for saide he, I am vpon the promise of your good willes come hether my selfe, & not only remaine here at great expences, but also the season and convenient tyme of the yere passeth away, therefore I pray you to let me know your mindes. They altogether aunswered, that they were at that time come onely to see his grace, and not to determine any thing: but they would return home and speake with their severall counsayles, and within three weekes next following to make direct aunswer what and when they would attend upon his enterprise. And about the time of their appoyntment, they sent aunswere vnto \( \frac{1}{3} \) King that they and all their men which they had promised were in a readynesse, so that the Duke of Brabant woulde be ready for his parte: So that the King was enforced once againe to talke with the Duke of Brabant, who for that he had before made promise to the French king, that though the King of Englande were in his Countrey, whome he might not denie, because he was his Cosyn Germayne, yet he would in no wise conclude any amitie or friendship with him agaynst the sayd French King, with much ado at the last agreed to ayde the king of Engkand, but first he desyred that he might once again speake with the aforesayd Lordes: and he sent for them & after long comunication they agreed and made vnto the King of England this aunswere: we have (sayde they) assembled and conferred together, and we cannot consyder any lawfull cause that we maye defye the French King: But if your grace can obtaine the fauour and good will of the Emperour, who may commaunde vs, then we wyll be readie: And the Emperour can no lesse do, consydering how that many yeres past, there was a couenaunt sworne and sealed, that it should not be lawfull for the French King to make warre, or by any meanes to apprehend or take into his possession any thing appertayning to the Empire: and it is euidently sene and knowne that Philip now French king hath taken the Castell of Creuecure in Cambresey, and the Castell of Alues in Pallieull, & also the Citie of Cambrey, and therfore the Emperour hath good cause to defie hym, and then will we be readie. The king then consydering with himselfe how farre he had enterprised, and seing now his purpose would come to none effect, onelesse he folowed the determination and deuyses of the sayde Lordes, did therefore with all speede send his Ambassadors vnto the Emperour, with whome the sayde Lordes, for that they did beare vnto the king right true and harty good wyll, sent also Ambassadors of their owne, the which might more certainely declare their good meanings towards the king of England, if it might please the Emperours Maiestie to licence them therevuto, and so much was done therein, and chiefly by the labour of the Lady Margaret of Henault, whom Sir Lewes of Bauyer beyng Emperour had then maryed, that the Emperour graunted a commission vnto foure right honorable personages, and vnto two Doctours which were of his preuie counsayle, to aucthorise and make king Edward of Englande his Vicare generall King Edwarde throughout all the Empire, and of the same the Lordes about amed had instrumentes and was made Vicare Seales sufficiently aucthorised by the Emperour.

In this meane while, king Edwarde considering his great charge of warres that he had continually with Scotland: But chiefely and most specially foreseeying the great and inestimable charges that must followe of this his enterprice in Fraunce, did gather in England by diuers and sundrie meanes great and inestimable summes of money, so that for lacke of mo-Lacke of money ney in this realme of England (as sayth Fabian) victuall came to such reasonable cheap-causeth plenty & good cheepe of nesse and price, that at London a quarter of wheate was solde for two shillynges, and a fat Oxe Victualles. for, vi. shillynges and, viii, pence, a fat sheepe for, vi. pence, and, vi. pigeons for a pennie, a fat Goose for twopence, a fat Pigge for a pennie, and so all other victual after the same rate.

And in this. xij yere of his reigne, he helde his Parliament in England at Westminster, wherein great summes of money were graunted vnto him for the maintenance of his warres. And so soone as the same Parliament was finished, and that he had put the realme of Englande in good order, he then returned againe into Flaundyrs, and at the last stayed at Louayne Castell in Brabant, where he attended his aunswere from the Emperour, and also expected the commyng of the former Lordes. And king Edward beyng in the Castell aforesayde, kept there an honourable and Princely house, and sent into England for the Queene, for that he purposed not to returne into England vntill he had done some notable acte in Fraunce.

And in the aforesayd Parliament there was made an acte for the reformation of appa- A reformation of rell, and good cause there was that it should so be, for the people did excede maruellously, fond apparell. not so much in costly and chargeable apparell, as in fond and foolishe apparell, for, as sayth Caxton in his Chronicle, called the fruite of tyme, The Englishe men (sayth he) so much followed and counterfeated the madnesse and the folly of the straungers, that from the first commyng in of the Henaultes, they dayly chaunged their apparel, sometime long and wide, and at another tyme, cutted, short and streight, and altogether visemely and vnhonest. And the apparel of the women was more fond then the men. For their clothes were made so streyt to their bodyes, that they were faine to sowe Foxe tayles vnder their clothes, for to set forth and hyde their buttockes, the which foolish pride the Scottes deryded, and made foolishe rimes and leastes of them.

In the moneth of November next following, the king sent first to the Duke of Brabant, and then to all the other Lordes that were allied vnto him, desyring to know of them where their place of meting and Parliament shoulde be kept and holden: And the Duke of Brabant aunswered, it was best to kepe it at Arques in the Countie of Loz. And: then the King sent thether, and caused the great hall of the towne to be apparelled and appoynted in as rich maner as if it had bene the Kinges Chamber. And there the King. sate crowned with a crowne of Golde, fiue foote higher then any other, and there was read openly the letters of the Emperour, by the which the King was made Vicare generall, Letters patents & Lieutenant for the Emperour, and had power geuen him to make lawes, and to mi-graunted by the Emperour vato nister justice to every person in the Emperours name, and to coone money of Golde and king Edward the Silver. And it was further ordered and commaunded by the Emperour, that all persons thirde openly read to the of his Empire, and all other his subjectes should obey to the King of England his Vicare, Lordes of the as to himselfe, and to do him homage. And forthwith there was claime and aunswere Empire. made betweene parties as before the Emperour, and order and judgement genen. And when all these thinges were done, the Lordes tooke a day that they all would appere at

King Edward coyned both

Cambray (which towne was then French) three Weekes after Midsommer next following. and then everye man departed to his awne. King Edward as Vicare of the Empire, went then to the Castell of Louayne to the Queene his wyfe, who was newely come thether out of England with great noblenesse, and well accompanyed with beutifull Ladyes, and goodly Damozelles of England. And there the king and the Queene kept their house Golde and Sil- right honourably all that Winter, and caused great sommes of money, both of Golde ver at Andwarp. and Sylver to be coyned at Andwarpe.

The Frenche king beyng nowe credibly informed that king Edwarde would enter the realme of Fraunce to make warre vpon the same, did therefore make great provision to resist him: For the common fame was then in Fraunce, that king Edward entended not onely to claime Gascovn and Guian, but also all Fraunce as his proper and rightfull inheritaunce. as in the right of his mother. Wherefore the French king assembled an houge hoste, and committed the gouernement thereof vnto the king of Nauerne, and to the Erle of Alanson, brother vnto the sayde French king: The which sayde Capitaynes with their people awayted dayly the king of Englandes commyng, who disappoynted them for that yere.

And this yere it is noted that the king graunted, that the Officers of the Major and Shirifes of London, should from that tyme forth vse Maces of Siluer and percell gilt.

King Edwardes power out of Englande came to Villenort by

Now when the Winter was passed, and the Sommer come, Midsommer which was the tyme appoynted drewe nere. And the Lordes of Almain that were allyed with king Edward, began to set forth themselves to accomplish their promise. And in like maner the French king, who understood most of king Edwardes doynges, made marueylous great prouision to mete him, and to withstand him. But King Edward caused first his prouision for men of warre that came out of England to passe by Sea, and they were with him anone after Midsommer, and he himselfe lodged at Villenort, and there caused as many of his people as he might, to be lodged in the towne, and the rest lay along on the ryuer syde in Tentes and Pauillions, and there he tarved from the middest of July vntill the. viij. day of September, ever lookyng for the Lordes of the Empire, specially for the Duke of Brabant, on whose commyng all the other wayted. And when the King of England sawe that they came not, he sent great and honourable Messengers to every of them. sommonyng them to come as they before had promised, & to meete him at Machlyn at a day appoynted, and then to shewe him for what occasion they targed so long. Edward lay at Villenort, and kept dayly at his cost and charge, xiij, hundreth men of armes, and. x. thousand Archers that came over the Sea, besyde all other provisions, and beside the great rewardes that he had geuen to the Lordes, and besyde the great Armyes that he had vppon the Sea.

The French king on his part, had set Scots, Genowayes, Normanes, Britons, Picardes. and Spanyardes to be ready on the Sea, to enter into England assoone as the warre was opened.

In the ende, the aforesayd Lordes at the sommons of the king of England came vnto him to Machlyn, as he had approvided them, but not without much businesse: But at the last they agreed, that the king of England might well set forward within. xv. dayes And to the entent their warre should be the more laudable, they agreed to sende every of their defiaunces to the French king: that is to say. First the king of Engthe french king. land, then the Duke of Guerles, the Marques of Iullers, Sir Robert de Arthoys, Sir Iohn of Heynault, the Marques of Musse, the Marques of Blanquebource, the Lord of Falquemount, Sir Arnolde of Baquehen, the Archebishop of Coleyn, Sir Galeas his brother, and all other Lordes of the Empire. These defiaunces were written and sealed by all the Lordes (except the Duke of Brabant) who sayde he would do his dede himselfe at tyme convenient. To carie these defiances into Fraunce, was appointed the Bishop of Lincolne, who caried them to Paris, and there did his message in such sort, that he was much commended, and had his safe conduit to returne safely vnto the king of England to Machlyn.

Speciall defiaunces sent to

In this meane tyme Queene Philip the wife of king Edward, living at Andwarpe, was Lyonell the brought a bed and delivered of a man childe, which afterward was named Lionell.

Immediately after the defiaunces were made and sent, as aforesayde, the French king Andwarp. sturred not a little, but gathered vnto him an innumerable number of people, and taryed with them at Amias, from the ende of August vnto the beginning of October. And when he sawe that king Edward came not, he deuided his great hoste, and sent many of them home to their awne houses, and the other he placed in divers Castels, and Fortes thereaboutes, to let the passage of king Edward into Fraunce. And in this tyme also the French king had sent divers Ships vnto the Sea with men of warre for to take the English Marchauntes, and other that came in their course. And it so chaunced, that they encountered with two great Shippes of England called the Edward and the Christopher, the which (as sayth the French Chronicle) were fraight with great richesse, and also well manned. Assone as eyther of them was ware of the other, Gonnes went off, and Bowes and Arblasters shot, so that between them was a mortall and cruell fight, but not egall. For of the Frenchmen were. xiij. sayles great & small, and of the Englishe men but five, that is to say, these two great shippes, two Barkes and a Caruell, and the three small shippes escaped by swiftnesse of saylyng, but the two great abode, and fought more then, ix. houres, insomuch as there were slaine upon both partes aboue. vi. hundreth men: But in the ende the sayde two shippes were taken, and brought into the French kinges streames, King Edward lost two of his and many of the English men that were wounded, were cast into the Sea. And sone great ships. after the sayde French nauie landed at Southhampton, and brent and spoyled the towne, Southampton and so departed.

Assone as king Edward had brought all things into a readynesse, he set forward towarde his purposed iourney into Fraunce, and first passed from Machlyn vnto Bruzelles, and all his people passed by the Towne, and thether came to king Edward. xx. thousand Almaynes. And then the king sent once again to the Duke of Brabant, to know whether he mynded to go to Cambrey, or whether he thought it good to leaue it. And the Duke aunswered, it was best to go to Cambrey, and that assone as he heard that he had besieged the Towne, he would come thether with twelue hundred speares of good men of warre. Then the king passed forward, and the first night came to Nyuell, and there laye one night, and the next daye removed to Mons in Henault, and there he found the yong Erle of Heynault, who receaued him right loyously, and remayned with him two dayes. and from thence removed to Valencianes, and he and only. xij with him entered the Towne, and no mo persons, and thether was come the Erle of Henault and Sir Iohn of Heynault his Vncle, and the Lorde of Faguynelles. the Lorde of Verchyn, the Lorde of Haureth, and dyuers other who were about the Erle their Lorde. And the king and the Erle went hand in hand to the great Hall of the Towne, which was appointed and appareled meete for them. And as they went vp the steyres of the Hall: The Byshop of Lyncolne who was there present, spake out a lowde and sayde: Wylliam Bishop of Cam- Sommons. brey, I admonishe you as procurer to the king of England, Vicare of the Empire of Rome, that ye open the gates of the Cine of Cambrey, and if ye doe not, then shall ye forfayt your lands, and we will enter by force. There was none that aunswered to that matter, for the Bishop was not there present. Then the Bishop of Lyncolne sayde agayne, Erle of Heynault, we admonish you in the name of the Emperour, that ye come and serue the king of Englande hys Vycare before the Citie of Cambrey, with suche number as ye ought to doe. The Erle who was there present, sayde, with a right good will I am ready. And then they entered into the Hall, and the Erle brought the king into his Chamber, and anone Supper was readie. The next day the king departed and went to Asper and there taried two dayes, and suffered all hys people to passe forward. And then they came to Cambraye and lodged at Wys, and besieged the Citie of Cambray Cambray besieged. rounde about, and daylie hys power encreased. Thether came the young Erle of Henault in great aray, and Sir Iohn bys Vucle, and they lodged nere to the king, and so did the Duke of Guerles and his company the Marques of Musse, the Erle of Mouns, the Erle of Sauynes, the Lorde of Falquemount, Sir Arnold of Bouquehen, with all the other Lordes of the Empire, suche as were alved with the king of England. And within. vi. dayes next after the siege was layed to the Citie of Cambrey, the Duke of Brabant whto the French came thether with. ix. C. speares, beside other souldyours. And assone as he was come. he sent to defye the French king, who was then at Compeigne. The siege aforesayde thus continuyng, daylie assaultes and skirmishes were made, and many good feates of armes done: But in the ende the souldyours of Cambrey so valiauntly defended the Citie that it was thought but time lost to continue the siege any lenger, & namely they perceaued Wynter to approche, and that as yet they had done nothing, but had lyen at great expences and charges, wherefore the king determined to breake vp the siege, and to enter into Fraunce, and so caused the Lordes to dislodge and trusse vp their Tents and Paulions, and all maner of armor and so departed toward Mount S. Martyn, the which was at the entrie of Fraunce, and thus they roade foorth in good order, and passed the ryuer of Lescault at their ease. And when the Erle of Heynault had accompanied the king vnto the departyng out of the Empire, and that he should passe the river and enter into the realme: Then he tooke his leave of the king and sayde he would ryde no farther with him at that time, because king Philip the French king was his Vncle, and that he would not have his euill wil, and therefore he did say that he would now go and serue the French king in Fraunce, as he before had served the king of England in the Empire: And thus the Erle of Henault and the Erle of Namure forsooke the king and departed from him and all their people with them, ready to serue the Frenche king, as aforesayde. agaynst king Edward. But King Edward with those that remayned with him passed forward into Fraunce, wastyng, spoylyng, and brennyng the Countrie as they went, and at the last came so nere the Frenche armie, that they were within two leagues the one armie of the other. And the French king having. lx. thousande men and mo in his armie, and comming to a place called Vyronfosse (and knowing the king of England to be at hande as aforesayde) sayde that he would not go thence vntill he had fought with the king of England and with his The king of England vnderstanding the minde of the French king, demaunded of his Lords what he should doe, (his honour saued): for he sayde that he minded to geue the French king battayle. Then the Lordes beheld eche other, and they desyred the Duke of Brabant to saye first his minde. The Duke sayde that he was of that minde to geue battayle, for else sayde he, they coulde not saue their honours: And therefore he counsayled that Herauldes should be sent to the French king to demaunde a daye of battayle. The which request the Frenche King graunted and named the daye, which was within two dayes after. And when knowledge thereof came to the Lordes of both the hostes, they much rejoyced, and the next day following they prepared all thing in readinesse. And when the day came, both the hostes appareled and appointed themselves to fight, in order following: And first we will speake of the Englishmen, they drewe them into the field, and made three battayles on foote, and did put all their horses and baggages into a little wood behinde them, and fortefied it. The first battayle was led by the Duke of Guerles, the Marques of Musse, the Marques of Blanquebource, Sir Iohn of Heynault, the Erle of Mouns, the Erle of Sauynes, the Lorde of Falquemount, Sir Guillam du Fort, Sir Arnold of Baquehen and the Almaynes, and among them was xxij. The second battayle had the Duke of Brabant, and the Lordes and knightes of his countrey. First the Lorde Kusse, the Lorde Bergues, the Lorde of Bredaugh, the Lorde of Rodes, the Lorde of Vaucelare, the Lord of Borguynall, the Lorde of Stoneuort, the Lorde of Wyten, the Lorde of Elka, the Lorde of Cassebegne, the Lorde of Duffle, Sir Thyre of Valcourte, Sir Raufe of the Grees, Sir Iohn of Cassebegne, Sir Iohn Filife, Sir Giles of Cotereby, Sir Water of Hotebergue, the three brethren of Harlebecque, Sir

Henry of Flaundyrs, and divers other Barons & knights of Flaundyrs, who were all vuder the Duke of Brabants Baner, as the Lorde of Hallen, the Lorde of Guyten, Sir Hector Villaynes, Sir Iohn of Rodes, Sir Valflart of Guystell, Sir Wylliam of Strates, Sir Goswyn de la Mule and many other. The Duke of Brabant had. xxiiij. Banners and. lxxx.

Pennons, and in all. vij. thousand men.

The third battaile, and the greatest had king Edward, & with him his cosyn the Erle of battaile. Darby, the bishop of Lincoln, the bishop of Durham, the Erle of Salsbury, the Erle of Northhampton, & of Gloucester the Erle of Suffolke, sir Robert de Arthoys who was then Erle of Richemond, the Lorde Reynold Cobham, the Lord Percey, the Lord Roose, the Lorde Mowbray, sir Lewes, and sir Iohn Beauchamp, the Lord Delaware, the Lord of Laucome, the Lord Basset, the Lorde Fitzwater, sir Water Manny, Sir Hugh Hastynges sir Iohn Lisle, and divers other that I can not name, and among other was sir Iohn Chandos, of whome much honour was spoken. The King had with him. xxviij. Banners, and The kinges xc. Pennons, and in his battaile. vj. thousand men of armes, and. vj. thousand Archers. battaile at Viron forms. And he had set another battaile as in a wyng, whereof the Erle of Warwike, the Erle of Pembroke, the Lorde Barkeley, the Lorde Multon, and divers other were chiefe, and they were on horsebacke. Thus when every Lorde was vnder his Banner as it was comaunded by the Marshalles: The king of England mounted on a Palfrey, being accompanied onely with sir Robert de Arthoys, sir Reynold Cobham, and sir Water of Manny, roade along before all the battailes, and right gently and earnestly desyred all his Lordes and others, that they would that day defend his honour, and the honour of England, and they all willyngly promised him so to do. Then he returned vnto his awne battaile, and set enery thing in good order, and commaunded that none should go before the Marshals Banners. Now let ys speake of the Lordes of Fraunce, what they did.

In the armie of the French King, were. CCxx. Banners, foure kings, five Dukes. xxvj. The French Erles, and mo then foure thousand Knightes, and of the Commons of Fraunce, mo then. kinges armie at lx. thousand. The Kinges that were there with the French King, were the king of Behayne, the King of Nauarre, and the King of Scotland. The Duke of Normandie, the Duke of Britayne, the Duke of Burbone, the Duke of Loreyne, and the Duke of Athenes. Of Erles, the Erle of Alanson brother to the French King, the Erle of Flaundyrs, the Erle of Henault, the Erle of Bloys, the Erle of Barre, the Erle of Forestes, the Erle of Foys, the Erle of Armanack, the Erle Dolphyn of Auuergne, the Erle of Longuile, the Erle of Stampes, the Erle of Vandosme, the Erle of Harecourt, the Erle of Saint Paule, & Erle of Guisnes, The Erle of Bouloigne, the Erle of Roussy, the Erle of Dampmartyn, the Erle of Valentynoys, the Erle of Aucer, the Erle of Saucer, the Erle of Genue, the Erle of Dreux, and of Gascoigne, and of Languedocke, and so many other Erles and Vicounte's as were to long to reherse. It was a beutifull sight to beholde the Banners and Standerds Fraunce is of wauyng in the winde, and horses richely barded, and knightes and Esquiers richely armed. great power The Frenche men ordeyned three battayles, and in every Battaile. xv. thousand men of armes, and. xx. thousand footmen.

Now when both the armies aforesayd were thus in a redinesse to geue battaile, and eche of them within sight of other, it was meruelous straunge that they both departed without any stroke striken. But the Frenche men were not all of one mynde. Some sayde it were a great shame if they fought not, seyng their enemies were so nere them in their awne Countrie, & raunged in field: And some other sayd, it should be a great folly to fight, for it was heard to knowe every mannes minde and ieopardie of treason, for they sayd, if fortune were contrary to their King, as to leese the field, he then should put all his whole realme in a leopardie to be lost. And though he did discomfite his enimies, yet for al that, Many heads he should be neuer the nere of the realme of England, nor of the landes apperteyning to many wittes. any of the Lordes that were alved with him. Thus contending among themselves, the day: passed vntill noone, and then sodainely their started a Hare in the French armie, and such as saw her, made a great shoute and crie, by reason whereof, they that were behind, VOL. thought that they that were before were a fightyng, and therefore put on their Helmettest Knightes of the and tooke their speares in hand: And forthwith were made diverse newe knightes, and specially the Erle of Heynault made. xiiij. who were euer after called knightes of the Hare. And thus the battaile stood still all that day, and at night, the French King dislodged his armie, and departed into Fraunce. And in like maner king Edward brake vp his armie, and departed into Braband, and so this journey ended.

> Now when king Edward was returned into Braband, he went streight vnto Brusselles. where the Duke of Guerles, the Duke of Iuliers, the Marques of Blanquebource, the Erle of Mouns, Sir Iohn of Heynault, the Lorde of Falquemount, and all the Lordes of the Empire, suche as had bene in the former journey, did there take aduice and counsayle what should be more done in the matter that they had begon. And for the more expedicion to be had in the cause, they ordevned a Parliament to be holden at Brussels, and to come thether was desyred Iaques Dartuell of Gaunt, who came thether with a great company, and all the Counsayles of the good townes of Flaundyrs. In the which Parliament king Edward was greatly entreated and desyred of all his alves of the Empire, that he would require them of Flaundyrs, to ayde and maintegne his warre, and to defie the Frenche king. and to go with him where as he would have them: and in their so doyng, he to promise them to recouer the Isle Doway, and Bethayne. This request was well heard of the Flemyngs, and therevpon they desyred to take counsaile among themselves, and so they did, and then after said to king Edward. Sir where ye have made a request voto vs to ayde you. truely if we might do it sauvng your honour and our selues, we would gladly do it: But Sir we are bound by fayth and othe, and in the summe of two Myllyons of Floreins in the Popes Chamber, that we may make nor moue no warre against the king of Fraunce, who soeuer it be, vpon payne to forfeit and lose the sayd summe, and besydes that, to incurre the sentence of cursyng. But sir, if you will take on you the armes of Fraunce, and quarter them with the armes of Englande, and call your selfe king of Fraunce, as of right ye ought to doe: Then we will take you for rightfull king of Fraunce, and demaund of you quittaunce of our bandes, and so you to geue vs pardon thereof as King of Fraunce, and by this meanes we shall be assured and dispenced withall, and then will we go with you whether soeuer you will have vs.

Then king Edward tooke counsaile, for he thought that it was a sore matter to take on him the armes of Fraunce and the name, and as then had conquered no peece thereof. neyther could tell what might come of that enterprice: And on the other syde he was very loth to refuse the offer of the aide made vnto him by the Flemynges, who might ayde him more then any of the other. After that the king had taken counsayle of the Lordes of the Empire, and of the Lorde Robert de Arthoys, and other of his speciall friendes: He then aunswered the Fleminges, that if they would sweare, and seale to this accorde and promise to mainteyne his warre, he would with a good will do all that they requyred, and promised also to get them againe, Leyle, Doway, and Bethayne: And all they with one voyce aun-A daye of meet- swered that they were content. Then there was a day assigned to meete at Gaunt, at which day the king was there and the most part of the aforesayd Lordes, and all the Counsayles generally in Flaundyrs, where all the aforesayd matters were rehersed, sworne and sealed. And then the king quartered the armes of Fraunce with the armes of England: And from thenceforth tooke on him the name of the king of Fraunce, and so continued still vutill he left it by composition, as after shall be shewed.

> And at this counsell they determined against the next sommer following to prouide to make great warre voon Fraunce, promysing to besiege the Citie of Torney, whereof the Flemings were joyfull, for they thought themselves strong inough to get it. parliament ended, and enery ma departed home: The king of England went to Andwarp and the Queene abode still at Gaunt, and was oftentimes visited by laques Dartuell, and by other Lordes, Ladyes, and Damoselles of Gaunt. And when the kinges shippes were readie, he tooke the See, and then sayled into England, and so came to London, where he' was honorably receaued. And shortly after he had many complaintes made vnto him, howe the Frenchmen had brent and destroyed the Towne of Southampton, and had done Southampton sundrie other hurtes in England, namely vpon the Sea coastes. And the king aunswered brent. that he trusted before it were a yere lenger, it should be well reuenged.

And soone after the returne of the king into Englande, he called hys high Court of A parliamet Parliament at Westmynster, in the which was graunted vnto him toward the recourry of holden at Westhis right in Fraunce the. v. parte of the moueable goodes of euerye inhabitaunt within the A sore and gre-Realme, and the Custome of Wolles payde two yeres before hande, and the. ix. sheafe of uous subsidie. euery mannes corne: But before the same were all gathered and payde, the prayer of the subseties of people turned into curssyng, and their loue tourned into hatered. When king Edward had set all his lande in good order, and when also he had prepared all things in a redynesse for the warres of Fraunce, he toke Shypping and sayled toward Flaundyrs, and had with him two hundred sayle of good shyppes well furnished with men of warre, and the king kept his course to Sluce, and betweene Sluce and Blanqueberque on the See, there was Sir Hugh Kyryell, Sir Peter Bahuchet and Barbanoyr and aboue Cxx. great Vessels beside other, and in them were of Normans, Genowes and Picardes A great flete of aboue the number of. xl. thousande. And there they were purposely layde to resist and French shippes. withstande the landyng of king Edward when he should come to Sluce. And when the king drewe somewhat neere them and espied such a number of shippes, whose Mastes a farre of seemed as it had beene a great Forest or Wood: The king demaunded of the Master of his Ship what people he thought they were. And he answered: I thinke they be Normans, layde here by the french king to let your passage, and I thinke they be euch the same that burned Southampton, and that tooke your great Ship called the Christopher. A quoth the king, I have long desyred to fight with the french men, and now by the grace of God I shall meete wyth some of them, for they have done me many displeasures. Then the king caused all his shippes to be set in order, the greatest before, well furnished wyth The battell of Archers, and euer betwene two shippes of Archers he placed one ship wyth men of armes: sluse vpon the And then he made another battaile to lye alofe, with Archers to comfort them that were sea. most wearie if neede were. And in the sayde ships were a great number of Countesses, Ladyes, Knightes wyues and other Damoselles that were going to see the Quene at Gaunt: These Ladyes the King caused to be well kept with three hundred men of armes, and fyue hundreth Archers.

Assoone as the king and his Marshalles had ordered hys battayle, he drewe up the eayles and came with a quarter winde to have the vauntage of the sonne. And so at the last they turned a little, to have the winde at wyll. But when the Normans sawe them recule back, they had maruell why they did so. And some sayde they are afrayde to medle wyth vs, and therefore they go backe.

Then the french men beganne to set themselves in order, for they were good men of warre on the Sea, and they did set the Christopher, which before they had won, as aforesayde, formost, furnished with many Trumpets & Instruments and so gaue the onset vpon their enimies. And then began a sore battayle vpon both partes: Archers and Crosbowes beganne to shoote, and men of armes approched and fought hande to hande: and the better to come together, they had great hookes and grappelers of Iron to cast out of one Ship into another, and so tyed them fast together. There were manye worthy deedes of armes done in taking and rescuyng againe. And at the last the great Christopher was first wonne by the Englishmen, and all that were within it drowned or slaine. Then was there great crye and pitifull noyse, and the Englishmen fortefied the Christopher with Archers, and caused him to passe before to meete with the Genowayes. This battaile was right fierce and terrible, for the battayles on the Sea are more fierce and more daungerous, then are the battayles by lande. For on the Sea there is no reculyng or flyeng, there is no remedy but to fight and to abide fortune, and every man to shew his prowesse.

And in this fight Sir Hugh Kyryell and syr Bahuchet and Barbenoyr which were the Admyrals to the french flete, shewed themselves to be right good and expert men of warre. This battayle continued from the morning vntill it was noone, & the Englishmen (sayth Frovssart) endured great paine, for their enemies were foure agaynst one, and all good men on the sea.

And in this fight the king of Englande shewed himselfe a noble and valyaunt Prince of his awne handes, for he was then in the chiefe flowres of his youth. And in lyke maner did the Erle of Darby, Pembrooke, Herford, Huntyngdon, Northampton and Gloucester: Sir Raynold Cobham, Sir Richard Stafford, the Lorde Percy, Sir Water of Manny, Sir Henry of Flaundyrs, Sir Iohn Beauchamp, the Lord Felton, the Lorde Brasseton, Sir Chandos, the Lorde Delaware, the Lorde of Multon, Sir Robert de Artoys called the rie that king Ed- Erle of Richmond, and dyners other Lords & knights, who shewed themselves so valyauntly that they obteyned the victorie: So that the Frenchmen, Normans and other were discomfited, slayne and drowned, and there was not one that escaped.

> After this victorie thus atcheeued, the king all that night abode in hys ship before Sluce with great noyse of Trompets and other Instruments. And thether came to see the king dyuers of Flaundyrs, suche as had heard of the kinges comming: and then the king demaunded of the Burgesses of Bridges how Iaques Dartuell did: and they aunswered that he was gone to the Erle of Henault against the Duke of Normandy with three score

And on the next day after this battaile, which was Midsommer day, the King and all his tooke land, and the king went in Pilgrimage a foote to the Lady of Ardenborough, now called Odenbourgh, and there dyned, and then tooke his horse and roade to Gaunt, where the Queene received him with great joy, and all his cariage came after him by little and little.

Shortly after, the king wrote to the Erle Heynault, and to them that were within the Castell of Thyne, certefiyng them of his arrivall and victory. And assoone as the Erle knewe thereof, and that he had discomfitted the French armie vpon the Sea, he dislodged, and gaue leaue to all the Souldiours to depart, and tooke with him all the great Lordes to Valenciens, and there feasted them honourably, and specially the Duke of Brabant, and Laques Dartuell. Iaques Dartuell. And there Iaques Dartuell openly in the Market place in the presence of all the Lordes, and of all such as would here him, declared what right the king of Englande had to the Crowne of Fraunce: And also what puyssaunce the three Countries were of, Flaundyrs, Heynault, and Brabant, and howe they were surely ioyned in one allyaunce. And he did vtter it so grauely, and so eloquendy, that all the people that heard him, praysed him much, and sayd he had nobly spoken, and as a man of great experience. And then the Lordes departed, and promised within viij. dayes to meete at Gaunt to visite the King of Englande, and so they did, and the king feasted them right honorably, and so did the Queene who then was newly churched of a sonne called Iohn of Gaunt, who was after Duke of Lancaster by hys wife, which was daughter to Henry Duke And shortly after king Edward held a counsaile at Villenort, at a day of Lancaster. limited.

John of Gaut Duke of Lancaster.

> When the French king heard howe his armie on the sea was discomfited, he dislodged and drewe to Arras, and gaue leave to his men to depart vntill he heard other tydynges. And he sent Sir Godmer du Foye to Tourney, to see that there lacked nothyng, for he feared more the Flemynges then any other. And he sent the Lorde of Beauiewe to Mortayne, to kepe the frontiers agaynst Heynault: And he sent also many men to Saint Omers, to Ayre and to Saint Venaunt, and provided sufficiently for all the fortresses frontyng on Flaunders.

In this season there reigned a king in Cicille called Robert, who was reported to be a Robert king of great Astronomer, and he alwayes fauouryng and louyng the French king, did counsaile Cicile. and warne him in no wise to deale, nor have to do with the king of England, for sayd he, it is geuen to the king of England to be right luckie and fortunate in all his enterprices. This king Robert would gladly have set these two Kinges at a good accorde, for he bare suche loue and affection vnto the crowne of Fraunce that he was right sory to see or thinke of the desolation thereof. And in lykewise the sayd King Robert laboured to the Pope to be a meane to appease these two Kinges, but all theyr labor tooke none effect.

Ye have heard a little before, that a day of counsayle was appropried to be holden at Villenort, which day was now come. And at this counsayle were present, the King of England, the Duke of Brabant, the Erle of Heynault, Sir Iohn his Vncle, the Duke of Guerles, the Erle of Iuliers, the Marques of Falquebource, the Marques of Musse, the Erle of Mouns, Sir Robert de Arthoys, the Lorde of Falquemount, Sir William du Nort, the Erle of Namure, Iaques Dartuell and many other great Lordes, and of every good towne of Flaundyrs thre or foure personages, as counsailors.

And in this counsayle was made a league between the three countries, namely, Flaun-A counsaile dyrs, Brabant, and Heynault, that from thencefoorth eche of them should ayde and holden at Ville comfort other in all cases. And further they concluded, that if any of them had to do with any countrie, the other two should geue them ayde. And also that if hereafter it should fortune any of them to be at discorde one with another, that then the thirde should set an agreement betwene them. And if he were not able so to do, that then they should abyde the order of the king of England, vnto whose handes they did willyngly commit the same, and tooke their othes to stand, abyde, and obey his judgement. And for further and better confirmation of this love and amitie, they ordeined this agreement to be made a lawe, and to be published thoroughout those three countries, and the same afterward was called the lawe of the Companions or Allyes. And in the same counsaile it was also determined that the king of England should in the moneth of July next folowyng, beyng accompanyed with the ayde of the aforesaid Lordes, and the powers of all the good townes lay siege to Tourney. And so the Counsayle brake vp, and euery man departed home to make provision against the time appoynted.

The French King after the departure of these Lordes from the aforesayde counsayle, the French king forteficitle was informed of the most part of theyr determination, and therefore forthwyth sent to the towns of Tourney the chiefe men of warre that he had in all Fraunce, as the Erle of Ewe, the yong Tourney. Erle of Guynes his sonne, Constable of Fraunce, the Erle of Foytz and his brethren, the Erle Amery of Narbon, Sir Aymer of Poyters, Sir Geoffrey of Charney, Sir Garard of Mountfaucon, the two Marshalles, Sir Robert Bertrand, and Sir Mathewe de Troy, the Lord of Cayeux, the Seneschall of Poyteau, the Lord of Chastelayne, and Sir Iohn of Landas, and these also had with them many other valiaunt knightes, and Esquiers, and came to Tourney, and founde there sir Godmer du Foy, who was placed there, as before you have heard. And so soone as they were come thether, they diligently considered the state of the towne, first for furniture of all necessary victualles, and after for men, mu-

And nowe approched the time that king Edward and his Allyes should mete before Turney, for then the Corne beganne to rype, which was the. xxiij. day of Iuly, and the king departed from Gaunt, accompanied with vij. Erles of England viij. Bishoppes. xxviij., Baronettes. CC. knightes, foure thousand men of armes, and. ix. thousand Archers, besyde men of foote, and all out of Englande: And all his hoste passed thorough the Towns of Andwarpe, and so passed the ryuer of Lescault, & lodged before Tourney, at The siege of the gate of Saint Martyn, which was the way toward Lisle and Doway. And shortly after came the duke of Brabant, with mo then. xx. thousand men, knightes, Esquiers, and Commons, and he lodged at the bridge of Aryes, by the river of Lescault, betwene the Abbey of Saint Nicholas, and the gate of Valentenoys. And not long after, came the Erle of Heynault with a goodly company of his Countrie, with many of Holland, and Zeland, and he was lodged betwene the King, and the Duke of Brabant. Then came Jaques Dartuell with mo then. lx. thousand Flemyngs, besyde them of Ipre, Popynguy, Cassell, and Bergues, and they were sent to the other syde. The sayde lagues Dartuell lodged at the gate called Saint Fountayne. And the Duke of Guerles, the Erle of Iullers, the Marques of Blanquebource, the Marques of Musse, the Erle of Mouns, the Erle of Sauines, the Lord of Faulquemount, Sir Arnold of Baquehen, and all the Almaynes were lodged on the other syde toward Heynault. And thus the Citie of Tourney was enuyroned round about, and every host might resort eche to other, so that none could issue out without espiying.

Duryng the tyme of the siege, although they were so great a number, yet were they well prouyded and furnished of freshe victualles, and at reasonable price, for the people came from all partes to victual them. And while this siege continued, there were daylie outrodes, and dyners prayes and booties taken, and many Villages brent, and the Countries thereabouts greatly annoyed and hurt. And many and sundrie times there were sundrie skirmishes and many feates of armes done. But this siege continued long, for that the Souldyours of Torney defended the same very valiauntly, yet at the last, victualles within the Towne waxyng very scant, they were forced to put out all their needie and poore people, which passed thorough the Duke of Brabants hoste, who caused them to be conducted to the french kinges Campe, who lay then at Arras, accompanied with a great & houge hoste, to whome the poore people made a most lamentable and pittifull reporte of the state of Torney.

All the time that this siege continued, which was by the space of ten weekes and more. the Lady Iane of Valoys, sister to the French king, and mother to the Queene of England, and to the Erle of Heynault, trauayled greatly, as well on the one parte as on the other to have a truce and a respite betweene the french king and the king of England and his Allyes for a season, that they might departe without battayle. And dyuers times she kneeled at the feete of the french king in that behalfe. And in lyke maner made great laboure to the Lordes of the Empire, and specially to the Duke of Brabant and to the Duke of Iullers, who had her daughter in mariage, and also to Sir Iohn of Heynault. Insomuch that the good Lady procured, with the ayde and counsayle of Lewes Daugymount, who was welbeloued with both parties, that at the last it was graunted that ech partie should send foure sufficient persons to treate by the space of three dayes of some good wayes for the agreement of a truce. The persons that should be appointed shoulde meete in a little Chapell standyng in the fieldes called Esplotyn. And at the daye appoint-Ambassadors ap- ed these persons met, and the good Ladye with them. Of the Frenche parte, there was poynted to com- Charles king of Behayne, Charles Erle of Dalanson brother to the french king, the Bimon and deter- shop of Liege, the Erle of Flaundyrs, and the Erle of Armanack. Of the Englishe parte twene yoking of there was the Duke of Brabant, the Bisnop of Lyncolne, the Duke of Guerles, the Duke England & the of Iullers, and Sir Iohn of Heynault.

And when they were all met, they made eche vnto other louyng salutations and great cheere, and then entred into their treatie, and all that daye they commoned of dyuers wayes of accorde: And alwayes the good Lady of Valoys was among them, effecteously entreatyng them on both sydes that they would doe their endeuour to make a peace: howbeit that daye passed without anye thing done, and so they returned and agreed to meete there agayne the next day, the which day they met, and streight waye entered to the matter of their treatie: and at the last agreed vpon certaine pointes: but it was then so late that they coulde not finishe in good order, that which they had agreed vpon. The thirde day they met agayne, and finally agreed on a truce to remayne for one yere next to come betwene A truce all parties and all their men, and also between them that were in Scotlande, and all suche squeed and concluded between as made warre in Gascoyn, Poyteau, and Samton, and the same truce to beginne. xl. the king of Engdayes next ensuying: and within that space every person to geue knowledge vinto his men lande and the French king for without male engyne: and if suche companies will not keepe the peace, let them be at one yere. their choise. But as for Fraunce, Picardy, Burgoin, Britayne and Normandy to be bounde to this peace without any exception: and this peace to beginne incontinent betwene the hostes of the two kinges, namely of England and of Fraunce. And it was further determined that either of the sayde kinges should send foure or five personages as their Ambassadors, and to meete at Arras: and the Pope in lyke maner to send thether foure, and there to make a full confirmation without any meane. Also by this truce it was ordered, that everie partie should enjoye and possesse everie thing that they were then in possession of. This truce was foorthwith proclaymed in both the hostes: whereof the Brabanters were right glad, for they were sore weryed with the lyeng so long at the siege, so that the nexte day, assone as it was daye light ye should have sene such pullyng downe of Tentes and Paullions, such charging and lading of Waggons, such casting and throwing of their armour, such shootyng off of ordynaunce, both great and small, and the people remouing so thick, that so such as sawe it, it might have appered to have bene-

Thus the king of Englande departed from Torney, sore against hys minde, if he could have done otherwise, but he was fayne to yeelde to the other Lordes, and to follow their counsayles, and then he came to Gaunt to the Queene his wife, and shortly after returned into Englande with all his people, except such as were left behind to attend upon the assembly at Arras, as aforesayde, and vnto this assembly or counsaile of Arras, there came first A meetyng al from the Pope as Legates, the Cardinall of Naples, the Cardinall of Cleremount, who first Arras. came to Paris where the french king receaued them with great honor and after conueved them to Arras. For the French king thether came the Erle of Alanson the brother of the French king, the Duke of Burbon, the Erle of Flaundyrs, the Erle of Bloys, the Archebishop of Senes, the Bishop of Beawayes, and the Bishop of Aucerre. For the king of Englande, came the Bishop of Lyncolne, The Bishop of Durham, the Erle of Warwike, Sir Robert de Arthoys which was Erle of Richemond, Sir Iohn of Heynault, and Sir Henry of Flaundyrs. In the which treaty many matters were commoned of, and they continued. xv. dayes, but agreed to no one point of effect, for ever the Englishmen demaunded, and the french men would nothing graunt, but onely to render the Countie of Poytcau, the which was geuen to Quene Isabel in mariage with king Edward & second. So this assem- The truce conbly brake vp, and nothing done, but that the truce was yet prolonged two yeres more, tinued for two & that was all that the Cardinals could get graunted vnto them. And thus every man departed, & the two Cardynals went thorough Henault at the desire of § erle, who feasted them right nobly. Froissart.

In the time that the king lay at the siege of Torney, as aforesayde, the Scottes hadagayne recoursed the greatest parte of their lande, & all their fortes except three, wherefore the king was now counsayled to make a voyage into Scotland and so he did, and roade thetherward betweene Mighelmas and Halontyde, commaunding certaine Capteynes to The king with gather their men together and to follow him to Barwike, and so every man began to styre, his power a and came thether as they were commaunded. The king at the last came to Yorke and there scotland. taryed for his people. The Lordes of Scotland were enformed of the comming of the king of Englande, wherefore they gaue most sore and fierce assaultes to the Castel of Estreuelyne,

Estreuelyne, which before they had long besieged, and so constrayned those that kept it. with engynes and Canons, that they were fayne to yeelde vp the Castell, sauyng their lyues and members: but nothing' should they carie awaye.

These tydings came to the King of Englande where as he was, and then he departed and drewe towarde Estreuelyn, and came to New Castell vpon Tyne, where he taried more then a Moneth, abyding provision for hys armie, the which was shipped to come by sea. betwene Alhalontyde and the last of Nouember, but many of the shippes were cast awaye vpon the Sea, so that it was a small provision of victual that came thether. And some of the shippes were driven into Holland and into Friseland, by reason whereof the English armie had great lack of victualles, and euery thing waxed vnreasonably deare, and Winter was at hand, so that they knewe not where to have forage, and in Scotland the Scottes had put all their goods into fortresses, and the king of England had there mo then. vj. thousand horsemen and. xl. thousand footemen.

The Lordes of Scotland after theyr winnyng of Estreuelyne, drewe themselves into the Forestes of Gedeours, and they understood well howe that the king of England lay at newe Castell with a great number to brenne and spoyle Scotland. Then they tooke counsaile what they should do, they thought themselves to weake and to small a company to maintein the warre, and the rather for that they had continued the warres almost seven veres without head or Capitaine, neyther as then they could not perceyue any succour to come from their awne king, and therefore they determined to send to the King of England, a Bishop and an Abbot to desyre a truce. The which Messengers departed from Scotland and came to Newcastell, where they found the king.

A truce concluded with the Scottes for foure monethes.

These Messengers shewed to the King and his counsaile the cause of their comming; and at the last a truce was concluded for foure monethes, on this condicion, that they of Scotland should sende sufficient Ambassadors into Fraunce to king Dauid, saiyng, that if he came not before the ende of the moneth of May nexte following with puyssaunce and force sufficient to defende his realme, that then they would yelde themselues to the king of England, and neuer after to take Dauid for their king. So thus these two prelates returned againe into Scotland, and incontinent they ordeyned to send into Fraunce, Sir Robert Versay, and Sir Robert Percye, and Sir Simon Frysell and two other knightes to shew to the king their appoyntment.

The king of England agreed the sooner to this truce because his hoste lacked victuall. and so he came backe againe, and sent every man home. The Scottishe Messengers went toward Fraunce, and toke shippyng at Douer.

Nowe King Dauid of Scotland, who had beene. vij. yere in Fraunce, and knewe well that his realme was sore distressed, tooke his leaue of the French king, to the entent to come home to comfort his awne people: and so he tooke shippyng with his wyfe and such small company as he had, and put himselfe vnder the guidyng of a Mariner called Richard Flamont, and so arrived in Scotlande at a port called Moroyse, or ever that any in Scotlande knewe thereof: Neyther knewe he any thing of the Messengers that were gone into Fraunce to speake with him, nor they knewe not of his returning home.

So sone as the commyng of king Dauid was knowen to the Scottes, they came about him with great ioy, and solempnitie, and brought him to the towne of Saint Iohns, and thether came to him people from all partes of his countrey, greatly complaynyng and criving out of the dammages and great hurtes that they had susteyned in his absence by the Englishmen: To whom he aunswered that he trusted right shortly to be reuenged vpon them, or else it should cost him both his life and his realme.

Then he sent Messengers to all partes of his Countrie both farre and nere, requyryng every of them to helpe him forwarde in his enterprice, and shortly after came vnto him the Erle of Orkeney, a great Prince and a puyssant, he had maryed the kinges sister, and with him came a great number of men of warre, and divers other Lordes and knightes of Souegne, of Mebegne, and of Denmarch, some for love and some for wages, so that noved them.

Thus the Scots departed from S. Johns towne, & went to Donfremelyn, & the next day there they passed a little arme of the Sea: Then they went with great diligence, and passed by Edenbourgh, & after by Rousbourgh, the which was as then English, but they made there no tariance, for they purposed to do a great feat, before they returned again into Scotland. And so they passed forward and went not farre from Barwike, and passyng it also without any assault geuyng, they entered into the Countrie of Northumberland, and The Scots became to the ryuer of Tyne, brennyng all the countrie round about them, and at the last siege newe Cascame to New Castel vpon Tyne, and there the king of Scots and all his people lay about that towne all night.

In the morning a certeine number of Gentlemen that were within the towne issued out Askirmishe to the number of two hundreth Speares, to make a skrye in the Scottes hoste. They dashed made by the Englishmen vpo in so sodeynely vpon the Scottes, and namely vpon the Erle of Morettes tentes, who bare ye Scotts wherein the Erle of Moin his armor Syluer, thre Oreylles Goules, and there they toke him in his bed, and slue ret was take. many, before the host was moved, and wanne great pillage.

Then they returned into the Towne valiauntly, and with great love, and delyuered the Erle Moret as prisoner to the Capitaine of the Castell, which then was the Lorde Iohn Neuell.

When the Scottes were vp, they armed them, and ranne lyke mad men to the Barryers of the towne, and gaue a great assault thervnto, the which endured long, but little it analyled them, and the Scots lost there many men, for there were very many good men of warre within the towne, the which defended the same so manfully and wisely, that the Scots to their great losse were fayne and glad to withdraw their siege.

Now when the Scottishe king sawe that their tariyng at New Castell was daungerous, and that he had there neyther hope of gayne nor honour, then he departed and entred the Countrie of the Bishoprick of Durham, and there brent and wasted all that was before him, and at the last came to the Citie of Durham, and besieged it rounde about, and The Scots bemade many terrible and desperate assaultes lyke mad men, because they had lost the Erle sieged Durham. of Moret, and also they knew well that there was much ryches in that towne, for all the countrie there about was fled thether.

The Scots made Ingines and Instruments to come to the walles to make the fiercer assault. But when the Scots were gone from New Castell as you heard before, then syr Iohn Neuell Captaine there, mounted on a good horse, and tooke away farre of from the Scottes, and made suche good speede that within five dayes he come to Chyrtsay, where as king Edward lay then, & there declared vnto him the doyngs and enterprices of the Scots.

Then king Edward sent foorth Messengers into everye parte of his realme, commaundyng euery man betwene the age of. xv. and. lx. all excuses set aparte, to drawe Northward, and to meete him in that Countrie, for the ayde and defence of England, which the Scottes King Edwarde attempted to destroy, and foorthwith the king departed and taryed for no man, and suf- goeth into Scotfred every man to come after as well as they might.

Then the Lordes, knightes, Esquiers, and gentlemen drewe together, every one bringing with them as many men as they coulde make, and drew toward the North, following

In this meane tyme the Scottes gaue a most cruell assault vnto the towne of Dureham, The Scotswynne and followed the same so fiercely with Ingines and Instruments, that they that were within the towne of Durliage. were not hable to make any lenger defence, but that the Scottes entered the towne by force, and robbed and spoyled the same, and then set it on fyre, and destroyed all the people euer was there, sparying nothing that myght be spoyled or brent.

And when the Scottishe king had finished this hys tiranny vpon the Towne of Durham, he was then aduised to drawe back agayne along the ryuer of Tyne, and to come to Carlevle, and as he and his armie passed that way, he lodged beside a Castell of the Erle of Salisburies, the which was well furnished and kept with men of warre, and syr Wylliam Mountagew sonne to the Erle of Salisburyes sister was Captaine thereof. The next day the Scottes dislodged and went toward Carleyle (they had much caryage with them of suche pillage as they had at Durham) and when Sir Wylliam Mountagew sawe howe the Scottes passed by without restyng, then he with, xl. with him mounted on horsback, and issued out of the Castell, and followed couertly the hinder trayne of the Scottes, who had horses so charged with baggage, that they might scant go any great pace. And he ouertoke them at the entring into a Wood, and set vpon them, and there slue and hurt of the Scottes mo then, CC, and tooke mothen. Cxx, horses laden with pillage, and so ledde them towarde the Castell, the crie and brute of the flight came to the hering of syr Wylliam Dowglas who had the charge of the rereward, and as then he was past the Wood. When he sawe the Scottes came flyeng ouer the dales and mountaines, he had great maruell, and then he and all his company ranne foorth and rested not vntill they came to the foote of the Castell, and mounted the hill in hast. But or he came to the Bayles the Englishmen were entred, and had closed the Barryers, and put the pray in safetie. Then the Scottes beganne to assayle fiercely, and they within defended manfully. There these two Wylliams did what they might eche to greue other. This assault dured so long, that at last the king and all the hoste came back agayne and layde siege to the Castle.

field, and the Assaylauntes sore hurt, without winnyng of any thing, then he commaunded to ceasse the assault and to lodge. Then every man began to seeke for his lodgyng, and to gather together the dead men, and to dresse them that were hurt. The next day the king commaunded that euery man should be ready to assaile, and they within were as redy A sore and eruell to defend. There was a sore assault and a perillous: But there might have beene seene that day many a noble feate and deede of armes. There was within the Castell, the noble Countesse of Sarisbury, who was as then reputed and taken for the sagest and fayrest Lady of Salsbury a sage and discreete that was in all England, whose husband was taken prisoner with the Erle of Suffolke before Lisle in Flaundyrs. The king of England gaue the sayde Castell to the sayde Erle when he maryed first the sayd Lady, for the prowes and good seruice that he had done before, when he was called but sir William Mountagew. This noble Lady comforted them greatly which were within, for by her sweete countenaunce and gentle speche, she made enery man worth twaine. This assault dured long, and the Scottes lost many of their men, for they aduentured themselues very hardly, and caryed wood and tymber to have filled the ditches, to the entent to bring their engines to the walles, but they within defended them so valiauntly, that the assaylauntes were faine to drawe back. Then the king of Scottes commaunded the Ingines to be well kept that night, and the next day to enforce the assault, and then cuery man drewe backe to his lodgyng. Some wept & bewailed their friendes that were slaine, another sort comforted them that were hurt: and they of the Castell sawe well that if king Dauid continued his siege, that they should have much ado to defende their Castell, and therefore they tooke counsaile among themselues to sende to King Edward, who then lay at Yorke, as it was shewed them by such prisoners as they had taken of the Scottes. Then one of them behelde another, as who should say, who is he that dare go foorth to cary this message, and not one of them would offer him selfe, which thing sir William Mountagew perceyuyng, stepped forth and sayd, sirs I will: put my body in aduenture to do this Message, for I have such trust in you, that you will right well defende thys Castell vntill my returne: and on the other side I have such trust in the king, that I shall shortly bring you succours, which will cause you to be joyful, and I trust the king will so reward you, that ye shall be content. And when night came, the sayde sir William made him readie as priuely as he might, and it happened well for him, for it rayned all night, so that the Scottes kept still within their lodgynges. At midnyght sir William passed through the hoste of the Scottes, and was not seene, and so roade forth vntill it was day, and then he met with two Scots a mile from the hoste, driuyng before them two Oxen, and a Cowe towarde the hoste. Sir William knewe well that they were Scottes, and therefore set vpon them, and wounded them both, and slue the Cattaile, to the entent that they of the host should take no profite by them, and then sayde vnto the two hurt Scottes, go your wayes, and say to your king, that William of Mountagew hath thus passed through his hoste, and is goyng to fetch ayde of the king of England, and

In the morning the king of Scottes made a fierse assault, but yet he preuayled nothing, and dayly they assaulted it, but all in vaine. Then the king of Scottes and his counsayle, considering that there they did but lose theyr men, and that the king of England might wel come thether before the Castel were wonne, and therefore by one assent they sayd vnto the king, that theyr abydyng there, was neyther for his profite, nor yet for his honour. And further they sayd, Sir ye haue right honourably atchieued your enterprice, and haue done great despyte to the Englishe men, in that you have bene nowe in this countrie of England. xij, dayes, and taken and destroyed the Citie of Durham. Wherefore sir all thinges considered, it were good now that you returned, and to take with you the Pillage that ye have wonne, and another time ye may returne againe when it pleaseth you. The king who would not The Scottishe do against the opinions of all his counsayle, agreed to them sore against hys minde, and king flieth for the next mornyng he dislodged, and tooke the way streight to the great Forest of Gedours, Edward. there to tary at their ease, and to vnderstand what the king of England purposed further to do, eyther to go backe againe, or else to go further into Scotland.

The same day that the Scots departed from the sayd Castell, King Edward came thether with all his hoste aboute Noone, and came to the same place where as the Scottes had lodged, and he was sore displeased that he found not the Scottes there, for he came thether in such haste, that hys horse and men were sore traueyled. Then he commanded to lodge there all that night, and sayd that he would go see the Castell and the noble Lady therein, for he had not sene her sith she was maryed before, then every man tooke his lodgyng as he lust.

And assoone as the king was vnarmed, he tooke. x. or. xij. Knightes with him, and went vp to the Castell to salute the Countesse of Sarisbury, and to see the maner of the assaultes of the Scottes, and the defence that was made against them. Assoone as the Lady knews of the Kinges commyng, she set open the Gates, and came out so richely besenc, that every man marueyled at her beutie, and could not ceasse to regarde her noblenesse, and the pleasant wordes and gracious countenaunce that she had. And when shee came to the King, she kneled downe on the earth, thanking him of his succours, and so led him into the Castell, where she made him honourable chere, as she was one that could right well do it. The King beyng in the Castell went into a Window, and leaned on his elbow as one beyng in a great studie: The Ladie went about to make cheere to the Lordes and knightes that were there, and commaunded the Hall to be dressed for dinner. And when shee had made all thinges in a readinesse, then shee came to the Kyng wyth a merye cheere, who was in a great studie, and she sayde: dere Sir, what meaneth your grace so to studie without cause, it doth not apperteyne vnto you sir so to do, but rather ye should make good chere and be ioyfull, chieflye for that you have chased away your enemies, who durst not abyde your commyng, and let other men studie for the remnaunt. Then the king sayd, An amoreus A dere Lady, know for a truth, that sithe my entrance into this Castell, there is such a Prince. matter entered into my minde, that I can not choose but muse, neyther can I tell what may fall thereof, for put it out of my heart I cannot. wayes to make good cheere to comfort therewith your people, and chiefely ve haue cause to rejoyce in God, for that he hath ayded and supported you in all your great affayres and enterprises, and hath made you the most renoumed and famous Prince in all Christendome: And if the Scottishe king have done you any dispite or dammage, ye may well revenge it Wherfore sir, I pray you leave your musyng, and come into the when it shall please you. Hall (if it please you) for your dinner is all ready. A fayre Lady quoth the king, other thinges lie in my heart that ye know not off, but surely the swete and gentle behaulour of you, the great wisedome, noblenesse, and excellent beautie which I beholde in you, hath so sore surprised my heart, that I can not but loue you, and without your loue I am but Then aunswered the Lady saiving: A right noble Prince for Goddes sake mocke not, nor tempt me not, I can not beleue that it is true that ye say, neyther that so noble a Prince as ye are, could have so euill a thought, as to dishonour me and my Lord my husband, who is so valiant a knight, and hath done your grace such good service, and as yet remayneth prisoner in Fraunce for your cause and quarell: Certeinly sir, ye should in this case have but a smal praise, and nothing the better thereby: I geue almightie God thankes, that hetherto I had never such a thought in my heart, nor I trust in God shall haue at the request or perswasion of any man: And if I had any such lewde intencion. your grace ought not onely to blame me, but also to punish my bodie, and by true instice to be dismembred: and therewith the Ladie sodenly departed from the King, and went into the Hall to hast forward the dinner, and then she came againe and brought some of his Knightes with her, and sayd: sir, if it please you to come into the Hall, your Knightes abideth for you to washe, ye have bene to long fastyng. Then the King went into the Hall and washed, and sate downe in the Hall among his Lordes and knightes, and the Lady also. The King did eate very little, but sate still musing, and euer as he durst, he cast his eyne vpon the Lady. Of his sadnesse the Knightes had much maruell, for he was not accustomed so to be: Some thought it was because the Scottes were escaped from him. But to be short, although the king fared right honourably, yet could he not by any meanes be made mery, so that after dinner done, yet remayned he there all that day. And beyng wrapt in the snares and bondes of loue, he had sundrie imaginations: Sometime he imagined that honour and truth forbad him to set his heart in such a case, to dishonour such a Lady, and so true a Knight as her husband was, who had alwayes serued him so truely and valiauntly: On the other part, loue so constrained him, that the power thereof, surmounted both honour and truth: And thus was the King troubled in himselfe all that day and night. In the Mornyng the King arose and dislodged all his hoste, and drewe after the Scottes to chase them out of his realme. And at his departure he tooke his leave of the Lady, and sayd, my dere Lady, to God I commend you vntill I returne againe, requiryng you to aduyse you otherwise then you have sayde to me. Noble Prince quoth the Lady, God the father most glorious be your guide and conduct, and remoue from you all vileyne thoughts: & sir, I am and euer shall be redy to do your grace such seruice, as may be to your honour and mine, & therewith the King departed, altogether abashed.

Then the king followed the Scottes vntill he came to Berwick, & went still forward, vntill he came within foure leagues of the Forest of Gedours, where as king Dauid and all his company was entred, in trust of the great wildernesse. The king of Englande taryed there three dayes, to see if the Scottes woulde issue out to fight with him, in the which tyme there were sundrie skirmishes on both partes, and dyuers of the Scottes taken, slayne and sore hurt. Sir William Dowglas was he that did most hurt to the Englishmen, he bare Azure a Comble silver, and three starres Goules.

In this tyme that king Edwarde laye there, there were certayne noble men vpon both partes that treated for a peace to be had betweene these two kinges: And the same treatie tooke suche effect, that a truce was agreed to endure for two yere, if the French king with the Scottes would thereto agree. For the king of Scottes was so allyed to the French king, that he the French king might take no peace with the king of Englande without the consent of the french king. And

A truce take with the Scottes would agree therevato.

And therfore it was then agreed, that if the French king would not agree to the peace, then the truce to endure vntill the first day of May next following. And it was also agreed that the Erle of Moret which was prisoner in Newcastel, should be delyuered of his imprison. ment, if the king of Scottes could doe so muche with the french king as to purchace that the Erle of Salsburie might lykewise be quyte out of prison in Fraunce, And the same to be done before the feast of saint Iohn Baptist next after.

King Edward agreed the rather to this truce, for that at this instant he had warre in Fraunce, in Gascoyn, in Poyteau, in Xaynton, in Britayne and almost in euerye place he had men in wages to hys maruellous great costes and charges: And when all thinges were concluded, as aforesayde then the king returned into Englande.

And sone after, the king of Scottes sent great messengers to the french king to agree The Erle of vnto this truce: The French king was content at the desyre of the king of Scottes, and band to the Lathen was the Erle of Salsburie, who had beene long prisoner in Fraunce, sent home die a little before into Englande. And the king of England sent incontynent the Erle Moret into Scotland. chaunged for

And in the ende of this yere the Queene was deliuered of a man childe at the Towne of another prisoner in Fraunce, and Langley, the which after was named Edmond, and surnamed Edmond of Langley.

A little before ye have head how the king was striken in love with the Countesse of wyfe. Salsbury. And now it happened, that for the loue of the sayde Lady, who yet was not out of his minde, he caused a great feast to be publyshed abroad, and a lustes to be holden in the Citie of London (in the place now called west Smithfield) in the middes of August next following, the which was also proclaymed in Flaundyrs, in Henault, in Brabant, and in Fraunce, graunting to all commers out of every Countrie safe conducte to come and go. And also he gaue speciall commaundement thorough his awne Realme, that all Lords, Knights, Esquyers, Ladyes and Damosels should be there without any excuse, and commaunded expresly the Erle of Salsbury, that the Lady his wyfe should be there, and to bring with her all the Ladyes and Damoselles of that Countrie. The Erle graunted the king, as he that thought none euill. The good Ladye durst not saye nay, although shee knewe right well what was ment thereby: But yet shee durst not discouer the matter to her husband, notwithstanding she thought within her selfe that she would order the matter well ynough.

Thys was a royall feast, and at the same was the Erle Wylliam of Heynault, and syr A great feast and Iohn of Heynault his Vncle, and a great number of Lordes and knightes of high lynage. There was great triumphyng and iustyng the space of. xv. dayes. And running at the same justes was slaine the Lorde Iohn, eldest sonne to the Vycount of Beaumond of Eng-And at this triumph all the Ladves and Damoselles of England were freshly triummed and attyred, according to their degrees, except the Lady Alice Countesse of Salsbury, for she went as simply as she might, to thentent that the king should not phansie her, for she was fully determined that she would doe nothing that should dishonour her husband and her selfe. At this feast were syr Henry with the wrie neck Erle of Lancaster. and syr Henry his sonne Erle of Darby, syr Robert de Artoys Erle of Richemond, the Erles of Northhampton, of Gloucester, of Warwike, of Salsburie, of Pembroke, of Hereford, of Arondell, of Cornewall, of Oxenford, and of Suffolke, and the Baron of Staumforde and dyuers other Lordes and knightes of England.

And before this great triumph was altogether ended, and the Noble men departed, king Edward receaved sundrie and dyners Letters out of sundrie Countries, as Gascoyn, Bayon, Flaundyrs from Iaques Dartuell, and out of Scotland from the Lorde Rose, and the Lorde Percy, and from syr Edward Baileoll Captaine of Barwike, who certefied the king, that the Scottes held but simply the truce concluded the last yere, for they newly assembled together much people, but for what entent they could not tell. Also the Capitaines in Poyteau, Xanton, Rochell and Burdeloys, wrote to the king how the Frenchmen made great preparations for the warre, because the peace that was made at Arras was almost expired, which cansed y king to hasten the ende of his feasting. , After the former feast ended, the king called his Court of Parliament, who assembled together at Westmynster shortly after Easter, then next following. And in the time of the sayde Parliament, the king created Edward his first begotten sonne (who was borne in the thirde yere of his reigne) Prince of Wales, and he prooued the most royall Prince in Chiualrie that was in all Christendome. And in the sayde Parliament was graunted vnto the king toward the finishyng and ending of his warres with Fraunce of the com-Prince of Wales, mons and of the Townes and Cities of the Realme of Englande, foure fiftenes to be paide in two yeres next following, And likewise & Clergy grauted vnto him three fiftenes to be paid in three yeres, but both the commons and the clergie had graunted vnto them by the king suche liberties as ye may read in the statute made in the sayd. xviij, yere, as The Clergic are counterueyled their gift. And these fiftenes were also grauted with these codicions, that all such somes of money as should be leuied of the aforesayde grauntes, should be onely It shoulde some and wholy employed vpon the exployte and expedition of the full fynishing and ending of that the king was the warres with Fraunce, and the same to be disposed by the aduice of certayne Lordes of credite with ye and other great men that were specially e nominated and appointed thervnto by the Parliament house. And also, that the king should not for any friend, letter or letters, entreatie cause he had con-sumed so great or entreaties, nor for any fayre promises, withdraw his enterprice in the expence of this summes of mo-money in his warres of Fraunce vntill he had fully ended and fynished the same eyther by conquest, or else by the conclusion of a finall peace. And herevpon the Lordes of the realme graunted to go with the king, and to aduenture their lyues with him in the same.

And at this time also the king made a newe coyne of Golde and named it the Floreyn, that is to saye, the penny of the value of. vj. shyllings. viij. pence, the halfe penny of the value of three shyllings, foure pence, and the farthyng of the value of twentie pence, the which Coyne was specially ordered for his warres in Fraunce: For the Golde thereof was not so fyne as was the Noble, which as before in the xiiij. yere of hys reigne he caused to be covned.

Nowe after the aforesayde Parliament ended, king Edward woulde needes ayde the Countesse of Mountforde agaynst the Lorde Charles of Bloys. And for her reliefe he The death of Sir sent Sir Robert de Arthoys, Erle of Richemond accompanied with a certayne number of good men of warre, and Archers, the which Sir Robert by reason of tempestes on the Sea, was long before he came thether: But for the time he remayned there, he did very valiauntly, notwithstanding at the last he was sore wounded, and returned into England and dyed in London and was buried in the Quier, or upper parte of Paules Churche, whome king Edward caused to be buried with as solempne an obsequy, and as nobly was it done, as if it had bene for his awne Cosyn Germayn the Erle of Darby.

King Edwarde being greatly offended with the death of Sir Robert de Arthoys, sware a great othe that he would never reast but he woulde revenge his death, wherefore incontinently he sent out letters thorough out all the Realme, commaunding every noble man and other to attend vpon hym within one Moneth next after. And in the meane tyme he prepared a great number of shippes, and at the ende of the Moneth he tooke the Seas and landed in Britayne not farre from Vannes, where Sir Robert de Arthoys arryued before: power landeth in he was three dayes in landyng of all his prouision, and the fourth day he went toward Vannes. And all this meane tyme the Erle of Salsbury and the Erle of Pembrooke lay at the siege of Renes. And shortly after, the king besieged Vannes, and did many with the French noble feates of warre, and at the last the Duke of Normandy came with a mightye power to breake up the siege: But in the ende, by the meanes and labour of two Cardynalles, a truce for three yeres was agreed vpon, and so the warres brake vp, and the king returned againe into England about Christmas.

After the king was thus returned, he went to his Castell of Windsore, the which was king Edwarde, wherein he tooke great pleasure. And the sayde sir Iohn Froissart sayth, Windsore castell that in this Castell king Arthure did first begin the order of the round table, whereby first builded by king Arthure. sprang the fame of so many noble knightes throughout all the worlde. But other write that the same was orderned first at Winchester, for there is yet the table that is called king Arthures round table. And nowe king Edward purposyng a lyke encouragement of noble and worthie knightes, beyng at Windsore as aforesayde, did ordeyne and establishe in the same Castell the most honourable order of knighthood of the blewe Garter, and a Theorder of the solempne feast to be kept for the same yerely vpon Saint Georges day. And to begin Garter. this noble order, the king caused to be assembled together all the Erles, Lordes, and Knightes of his realme, and expressed vnto them his purposed deuice, wherein they toke great pleasure, because they sawe it was that which tended to great honour, and that by the same, great amitie, frienship & loue might growe among the nobles of this realme. And then were there chosen out a certeine number of the most valiauntest men in § realme, and they right gladly swore and were content to seale, to mainteine those ordinaunces that then were deuised for the sayde order.

And then also the King builded a Chappell of Saint George within the sayde Castell The Chappell of Windsore, and stablished therein certein Chanons, and other Ministers, for the saiying tell of Windsore of deuine and dayly seruice, and endued them with right good liuynges and possessions. builded by King Then the King sent to publish this his royall feast by his Heraults, into Fraunce, Scotland, Burgoyn, Henault, Flaundyrs, Brabant, and into the Empire of Almaine, geuyng and promising every Knight and Esquier that would come to the sayd feast xv. dayes of safe conduict, before the feast, and xv. dayes after the feast, the same feast to begyn on the day of Saint George next following, which was in the yere of our Lorde. 1344. and the Queene to be there, accompanyed with three hundred Ladves and Damoselles, all of noble linage, and apparelled accordingly.

When the day of this royall feast drew nere, thether came a noble company of Erles, A roiall feast. Barons, Ladyes and Damoselles, Knightes and Esquiers. And also diverse Lordes and knightes of straunge Countries came thether out of dynerse places, as out of Flaundyrs Heynault, and Brabant, but out of Fraunce came none.

Duryng the time of this feast newes, came to the king out of dynerse Countries: Thether came knightes out of Gascoyne, as the Lorde of Lespare, the Lorde of Chawmount, the Lord of Musident, who were sent from the other Lordes of the Countrie, such as were Englishe: as the Lorde de Labreth, the Lord of Puniers, the Lord of Mouferaunt, & Lord of Duras, the Lorde of Carton, the Lorde of Grayly, and divers other. And in like maner came sundrie Messengers from sundrie other places, and all aduised the king to send vnto them succours in due season, for they were in great feare of their enemy the French King, who made great provision to annoy them.

These troubleous newes caused the king the soner to shorten his feast and triumph. And when the same was ended, and all the straungers departed, and the Ladyes and Damoselles, then the king went to counsayle with his Lordes what was best to be done. And shortly they agreed that it were meete some chiefe Capitaine and succours were sent vnto Burdeaux, for the defence thereof, and for the rest of Gascoyne. Then the king agreed to sende ouer the Erle of Darby his Cosyn Germaine as Cheuetaine, who wyth all possible speede prepared himselfe, and he was accompanied with the Erle of Pembrooke, the Erle of Norffolke, the Baron of Stafford, Sir. Gualtier of Manny, Sir Richard Haydon, the Lorde Franque de la hall, the Lieure de Brabant, sir Hugh Hastynges, sir Stephen de Tombey, the Lorde of Manney, the Lord Normant of Fynefroyde, sir Robert of Lerney, sir Iohn Norwich, sir Richard Rockclefe, sir Robert of Quenton, and diuers other, to the number of. v. C. Knightes and Esquiers, and two thousand Archers. The Eile of And the King sayd to his Cosyn the Erle of Darby, take with you Gold and Siluer ynough, Burdeaux with a ye shall not lacke, and depart largely thereof vnto your men of warre, whereby ye shall goodly company get their loue and fauor, and thus the Erle of Darby departed vnto Burdeaux, who after to withstand the malice of the his comming thether did many noble and valiaunt deedes of armes, aswell in assaultyng of diverse townes, as also in conquering & recovering from & French men many rich Cities & townes.

Iaques Dartuell

In this time (as before you have heard) reigned in Flaundyrs in great prosperitie and of Gaut a great puyssaunce, Iaques Dartuell of Gaunt, who was a special friend and louer of king Edward. And the same Iaques had promised the king that he would make him Lorde and inheritour of Flaundyrs, and to endue his sonne the Prince of Wales therewith. For the which cause, aboute the Feast of Saint Iohn Baptist, king Edward went over vnto Sluce with many of his Lordes and knightes, and brought thether with him the young Prince his sonne, vpon the worde and promise of Iaques Dartuell. The King with all his nauie laye in the hauen of Sluce, and there he kept hys house, and thether came to visite him his friendes of Flaundyrs. There were great counsayles betwene the King and laques Dartuell on the one parte, and the Counsayles of the good townes of the other part. So that they of the Countrie were not of the agreement with the king, neyther with lagues Dartuell, who went aboute to perswade them to disenherite the Erle Loys their awne naturall Lorde, and also his yong sonne Loys, and to inherite the sonne of the King of Englande, to the which they sayde they would neuer agree vnto. And so the last day of their Counsaile which was kept in the Hauen at Sluce in the kinges great ship called the Katheryn: They with one minde and voyce gaue a determinate aunswere and sayd: sir, ye have desired vs to a thing that is great and weightie, the which hereafter may sore touche the Countrie of Flaundyrs and our heyres: Truely we knowe none at thys day whose preferment and honour we would be more glad to advance then yours: But sir, this thing we can not do alone, we must have herevuto the whole commonaltie of Flaundyrs. Therefore for this present we will go home, and every man to speake with his friendes generally within euery towne, and as we finde the most part to agree, so will we be right well content: and within a moneth we will be here againe with you, and geue you such aunswere as we trust ye will be content. The king neyther laques Dartuell could have none other aunswere at that time: Howbeit they required a shorter day, but that would not be.

So thus departed that Counsaile, and every man went home to theyr awne townes: But Inques Dartuell targed a little with the King, and still he promised the king that he would bring them vnto his entent, but he was foule deceyued as after will appere.

Iaques Dartuell tooke his leaue of the king and went first to Bruges and perswaded with the Lords there, and lykewise with the rulers of Ipre, and in the ende they graunted vnto him, so that Iaques made a full accompt that he had obteyned and ended this matter, for he assured himselfe of the towne of Gaunt, whom as he thought he might rule as he lust, but he found it otherwise. When he had ended at Bruges he returned to Gaunt, not suspecting any thing, but that they were his verie friends: and before he came to the towne, it was tolde to the inhabitaunts that Iaques Dartuell went about to disenherite the right Erle of Flaundyrs and his sonne, and to geue the inheritaunce vnto the sonne of king Edward of England, a straunger, at the hering wherof they assembled themselves in the Market place, and were in a great furie agaynst Iaques Dartuell, but at the last they departed from the Market place, and every man went home to his awne house. Shortly after about noone, came Iaques Dartuell into Gaunt, not knowyng anye thing of the former doing of the men of the towne, but they knewe well of his comming, and therefore walked in the streetes in heapes, euen where he should passe. And when they sawe him, of the people of they beganne to murmour, and began to whisper together and to fall to secret talke, and at entring of laques the last they spake out alowde one to another and sayde. Beholde, yonder commeth the great master that will rule all Flaundyrs as he lust, and geue the inheritance therof where he thinketh meete. Also there was a brute blowen abroade among the inhabitaunts of the Towne, that Iaques Dartuell for the space of. ix. yeres past had in his handes all the re-uenues of Flaundyrs, and neuer did accompt for the same. And farther that he had sent great ryches and treasure vnto the king of England: These tales set them of Gaunt on a fyre. And as Iaques Dartuell roade through the streete, he perceaued that there was some matter in framing against him, for he saw, as he came by, such as were wont to doe reuerence vnto him, turne their faces from him, and went into their houses. Then he began to doubt, and assone as he was alighted in his lodging, he closed fast his gates, dores and wyndowes. This was scant done, but all the streete was full of men, and specially of The poorest and them of meanest occupations, then they beset his house both behinde and before and of least discreround about, and began to breake vp the house: But he and his defended themselves with-commoly the in the house along space, and slue and hurt many without. But finally he could not endure, most busiest. for three partes of the men of that towne were at that assault. When Iaques sawe that he was so sore oppressed, he came to a wyndow with great humilitie barehedded and spake in gentle maner and sayde: Good people, what ayleth you, why are you so sore offended The wise and at me? Wherein haue I displeased you, let me vnderstande it, and I will gladly make mylde speech of laques Dartuell suche amends as I trust shall content you. Then such as heard him, aunswered all with to the common one voyce, we will have accompt made of the great treasure of Flaundyrs, that you have people. sent out of the wave without any title or reason. Then laques meekely aunswered and sayde: Certainely Sirs, of the treasure of Flaundyrs I neuer tooke any thing. I pray you withdraw your selues paciently into your houses, and come againe to morow in the morning, and I will make you so good an accompt, that ye shall be well pleased and contented withall. Then they all cryed and sayde, nay, we will have an accompt incontynent, thou shalt not scape our handes so: we knowe for truth that thou hast sent great riches into England without our knowledge, and therefore thou shalt die. When Iaques heard that A hard matter worde, he ioyned his handes together and sore weeping sayde: Sirs, such as I am ye haue to satisfic rude and disorderly made me: and ye have sworne to me or this to defende me agaynst all persons. And will persons. you now slay me agaynst all reason, and no cause heard nor examined? ye maye doe it if ye will, for I am but one man amongst you all, but yet for Gods sake take better aduise, and remember the tyme past, and consyder the great graces and frienship that I have shewed and done vnto you: and then I trust ye will not so vngently reward me, and chiefely for the great goodnesse that I have shewed vnto your towne. Ye know right well that the trade of marchaundise was cleerely decayed in this towne, and countrey, and by my meanes ye have recovered it. Also I have governed you in great peace and rest, for in the time of my gouernement ye haue had all things as your harts desvred, corne and all other marchaundise.

Then the people cryed all with one voyce, come downe to vs & preach not so high, and geue vs accompt of the great treasure of Flaundyrs which ye have governed so long without compt making, which becommeth no officer so to doe, to receauc the goodes of hys Lorde, or of hys Countrie, and make none accompt.

When laques sawe that he could not appease them: he drewe in his head and closed in lagues Darruell his Wyndow, and thought to have stollen out on the backside into the Church that ioyned without all mercy to his house: But his house was so broken that foure hundred persons were entred into it, and pitie. and finally, there he was taken and slaine without any pitie or mercie, and one Thomas Denyce gaue him his deathes stroke. And thus ended laques Dartuell.

When king Edward, who lay all this while at Sluse, abyding the aunswere of the Flemvngs, heard how they of Gaunt had slaine Iaques Dartuell his great friend, he was sore King Edward displeased. Wherefore incontinent he departed from Sluce, and entred into the Sea, sore hering of the death of laques threatuing the Fleminges and the countrie of Flaundyrs, and sayde, how his death should Dartuell re-

Then the Counsaylours of the good townes of Flaundyrs thought no lesse but that the The rulers of ye king of England would take the death of Iaques Dartuell greeuously, wherefore they de-townes in Flattermined to go to the king and excuse themselves, and specially they of Bruges, Courtray, king Edward to Iper, Andwarp & Franke: They sent into Englande to the king for a safe conduyt that they make their execuse for the might come to their excuse. The king then being somewhat cooled of his great furie, death of laques

And then there came into England men of estate out of the good graunted their desire. Townes of Flaundyrs, except out of Gaunt there came none. This was aboute Mighelmas, and the same time the King laye at Westmynster besides London.

When they were come vnto the kinges presence, they in most lowly maner humbled themselves before the king, and clerely excused themselves of the death of Iaques Dartuell, and sware solemply that they knewe nothing thereof vntill it was done. And if they had, he was the man that they would have defended to the best of their powers, and sayde that they were right sorie of his death, for he had gouerned the Countrie right politikely and wisely. And also they sayde, that though they of Gaunt had done that dede, yet should they make a sufficient amendes. And further they sayd vnto the king and his counsaile. that though he be deede, yet the king of England was never the further off from the love & fauour of them in Flaundyrs in all things, except the enheritance of Flaundyrs, which by no incane nor way they wyll put from the right heyres. And saiving also further vnto the king: Sir you have a yong daughter, and we have a yong Lorde, who is the enheritour amitie made by the Flaundyrs, we have him in our kepyng, may it please you to consent to a maryage to king Edwarde. be made betweene them two, and by that meanes the Countie of Flaundyrs may for ever be in the issue of your Childe. These wordes and many such like did greatly pacifie the king, and finally the king was content with the Flemyngs, and they with him, and so by little and little the death of Iaques Dartuell was quite forgotten.

The death of Wyllia Erle of Heynault the louer and great friend of king Edward.

The Lorde Godfrev of Harecourt being banished out of in Englande by king Edward.

And shortly after the death of Iaques Dartuell, dyed also William Erle of Henault, the kinges great louer and friend, and not long after sir Iohn of Heynault the kinges most chiefe and speciall friende (who from the first beginning and entraunce of the king into the Realme and Kingdome of England, assisted and defended him) did now refuse the king of England and became French, because as some write, that the King of Englande, refused to pay him his pencion that he graunted vnto him. And thus was King Edward destitute of a great many of his chiefe and speciall friendes, cuen vpon a sodeyne.

About this time the King heard howe his men were in sore distresse at the siege of the Castell of Aguillon in Gascoyne, and therefore prepared him selfe with a great and puissaunt army to go ouer for their reskue. And in this meane time, the Lord Godfrey of Harecourt, being banished out of Fraunce came into England, and was well received with the king, and he retayned him to remaine and continue about him, and assigned him joyfully receased landes in England to mainteine his degree.

> Then the king caused a great nauy of shippes to be readie in the Hauen of Southhampton, and caused all maner of men of warre to be there at the feast of Saint Iohn Baptist. 1345. And at that time the king departed from the Queene, and left her in the guidyng of the Erle of Cane his Cosyn. And he ordeyned and appoynted the Lorde Percey, and the Lorde Neuell to be Wardeynes of his realme, with the Archbishop of Yorke, the Bishop of Lincolne, and the Bishop of Durham: For the king at no time departed out of this realme, but that he left sufficient behind him to defend the realme if nede were. Then the king roade to Hampton, and taryed there for winde: And at the last he entred into Ship and the Prince of Wales with him, and the Lorde Godfray of Harecourt, and all other Erles, Barons, Lordes, and Knightes, with all their companies. They were in number foure thousand men of armes, and ten thousand Archers, beside Irishemen and Welshmen that followed the hoste on foote and. xj. C. sayle of shippes, as some

And here I thinke it not amisse to name vnto you all the Lordes that went in this iourney with the king. First Edward his eldest sonne Prince of Wales, who as then was king into France. of the age of. xvj. yeres, or there aboutes, the Erles of Herford, Northhampton, Arondell, Cornewall, Warwike, Huntyngdon, Suffolke, and Oxenford. And of Barons, the Lorde Mortimer, who was after Erle of Marche, the Lordes, Iohn, Lewes, and Roger of Beauchamp, and the Lorde Reynold Cobham. Of Lordes, the Lord of Mowbray, Rose, Lucy, Felton, Brastone, Myllon, Labey, Maule, Basset, Barlet, & Willoughby, and divers other Lordes_

Lordes. And of Bachelers, there were Iohn Chandoys, Fitzwaren, Peter and Iames Audeley, Roger of Vertuall, Bartholemew of Bryes, Richard of Pembruges, with divers other that I can not name.

Thus they sayled forth that day in the name of God, and they were well onward on their way toward Gascoyn: But on the thirde day, there arose a contrary wynde, and draue them on the Marches of Cornewall, and there they lay at anker. vi. dayes. In that space the king had other Counsayle by the meanes of Sir Godfrey Harecourt: he counsayled The counsail of the king not to go into Gascoyn, but rather to set a land in Normandie, and he sayde to sir Godfray Harecourt to the king, Sir the Countrie of Normandie is one of the most plenteous Countries of the king Edwarde, worlde. And Sir, on ieopardie on my head, if ye will land there, there is none that will which counsayle was good as it resist you: The people of Normandie haue not bene vscd to warre, and all the Knightes after proued. and Esquiers of the Countrie are nowe at the siege before Aguillon with the Duke. And Sir, there ye shall finde great Townes that be not walled, whereby your men shall have such wynnyng that they shall be the better thereby. xx. yere after: & ve may follow with your armie vntill ye come to Cane in Normandie. And Sir, I pray you beleue me, and take this voyage. The King who was as then but in the flower of hys youth, for he passed not. xxxv. yeres of age, and desirying nothing so much as to have deedes of Armes. enclined greatly to the saiying of the Lorde Harecourt, whome he called Cosin. Then the King Edward King commaunded the Mariners to set their course to Normandie: And he tooke into his tooke vpon him to be Admirall ship the Baner or Badge of the Admirall the Erle of Warwike, and savde howe he would to the whole be Admirall in that voyage, and so sayled on before, as gouernour of the nauic. And they The king arrived had wind at wil: Then the king arrived in the Isle of Constantine, at a port called Hoggue at Costantine an Saint Waste.

Isle in Normandie.

Tydings anone spreade abroade, howe the Englishmen were landed: The townes of Constantyne sent downe woord to Parys to king Philip. And he had heard before how that king Edward was on the sea with a great armie, but he vnderstood not what wave he woulde take, whether into Normandy, Gascoyne, or Briteyn.

Assoone as he knewe that the king of Englande was landed in Normandy, he sent his Conestable the Erle of Guynes, and the Erle of Tankeruile, who were but newly come to him from his sonne from the siege of Aguillon, to the towne of Cane, commaunding them them to keepe that towne agaynst the Englishmen: They sayde they would doe their best, and so departed from Parys with a good number of men of warre, and daylic there came mo vnto them by the waye. And so at the last came to the towne of Cane, where the men and people of that towne receyued them with great ioy. And assone as these Lordes were come, they busily prouyded for the good defence of the sayde Towne, and set all things in good order.

The king of England, as aforesayd, was arrived at the Porte Hoggue Saint Waste, neere to Saint Sauyour the vicount, which was the right heritage to the Lord Godfray of Harecourt, who as then was there with the king of England. Assone as the king was arrived in the aforesayde porte, as he lept out of his ship, the first foote that he stepped on the grounde he fell so vntowardly, that the blood brast out of his nose. The knightes that were about him, tooke him vp and sayde, syr for Gods sake enter againe into your Ship, and come not a lande this daye, for this is but an euill signe for vs. Then the king aunswered quickly and sayd, wherfore? this is a good token for mee, for the lande desyreth to haue mee. Of the which aunswere all his men were joyfull: So that day and night the king lodged on the sandes. And in the meane time discharged the ships of their horses and other baggages. There the king made two Marshalles of his hoste, the one, Lorde God-The Lorde Godfray of Harecourte, and the other the Erle of Warwike, and the Erle of Arondell Con-frey of Harestable: And he ordeyned that the Erle of Huntyngdon should keepe the Fleete of shippes of Warwike with an hundreth men of armes and foure hundred Archers. And also he ordered three made Marshalles battayles, one to go on his right hande close to the sea side, and the other on his left hande, armie. and the king himselfe in the middes, and every night to lodge all in one field.

Thus they set foorth as they were ordeyned, and they that went by the Sea tooke all the shippes that came in their wayes, and so long they went foorth what by sea, and what by Harfewe wome, lande, that at the last they came to a good porte, & to a good towne called Harflew, the which incontinent was wonne: For they within gaue vp for feare of death. And albeit the sayde towne was robbed and spoyled, and much Golde, Siluer, and riche lewels taken out of the same, yet there remayned so muche riches that the boyes and villaynes of the hoste set nothing by good furred Gownes. And before they entred into the rifelyng of the Towne, they caused all the inhabitauntes of the towne to come foorth and go into their shippes, because they would not suffer them to be behinde them for feare of rebellyng againe. And thus was the towne of Harflewe taken and spoyled without brenning. Then the armie spreade abroade in the Countrie, and did what they lust, for there was none to resist them. And at the last they came to a great and riche towne called The towne they wanne and spoyled and brent parte of it: But into the Castell they coulde not come, it was so strong and well furnished with men of warre. Then they passed forth & came to Mountbourgh, and tooke and spoyled it and brent it cleane. In thys maner they spoyled and brent many other townes in that countrey, and wanne so much ryches that it was incredible. Then they came to a great towne called Quarentyne, where there was also a strong Castell, and many souldyours within to keepe Then the Lordes came out of their shippes and made a fierce assault: The Burgesses of the towne were in great feare of their lyues, wyues and children. And they gladly suffered the Englishmen to enter into the towne against the minde and will of all the souldyours there: They put all their goodes vnto the Englishmens pleasures, because they thought they should so the better obtaine their fauour, and mitigate their rygour. When the French souldyours sawe the Englishmen enter into the towne, then they fled, and went into the Castell. And the Englishmen kept the towne two dayes, and therein made sore assaults vnto the Castell, and at the last the Frenchmen seing no remedy, did geue it ouer. And thus were the Englishmen possessed both of that good towne and Castell. And when they sawe they might not maintaine nor keepe it, they set it on fyre, and brent both towne and Castell. And while they were thus spoyling of the Towne, they made all the Burgesses and people of the towne to go into their shippes as before they had done with them of Harflew, Chierbourgh & Mountbourgh and other townes that they had wonne on the Sea side. Ail this was done by the battayle that went on the Sea side, and

Now let vs speake of the kinges battayle, when he had sent his first battaile along by the sea side, as ye have heard before, whereof the Erle of Warwyke was Captaine and the Lorde Cobham with him. Then he made his other Marshall to leade his hoste on the left hande, for he knewe the issues and entries of Normandy better then any other did. The Lorde Godfray as Marshall roade foorth with fine hundred men of armes. and roade of from the kings battayle sixe or seauen leagues, in brennyng and spoylyng the Countrey, the which Countrie was plentifull in euery thing. The Granges were full of Corne, the houses full of all ryches, riche Burgesses and Citezens, Horse, Swine, Sheepe and other beastes and Cattell great plenty: They tooke what pleased them, and brought into the kinges hoste. But the souldyours made none accompt to the king nor to none other of his officers of the Golde, Siluer, and Iewels that they did get, for that they

by them on the sea together.

Thus Sir Godfray of Harecourt road every day from the kings host, and yet for the most parte every night he resorted into the kings fielde.

The king tooke his way to Saint Clowe in Constantine, but before he came there, he lodged by a ryuer, abyding for his men that went along the Sea side. And when they were come, they set foorth their caryage: And the Erle of Warwike and the Erle of Suffolke, Syr Thomas Holland and Syr Raynold Cobham, and their company road out on the one side & wasted and spoyled the countrey as the Lorde of Harcourt had done. And the king euer roade betwene these battayles, and euery night they lodged together.

In this meane time the French King sent for Sir Iohn of Heynault, who came to him The French with a great number of men. And in like maner the sayde king sent for other men of king gathereth together a great armes, Dukes, Erles, Barons, knightes, and Esquiers, and assembled together such a power. great number of people as had not bene sene in an hundreth yeres before. He sent also for men into so farre Countries, that it was long before they came, so that the king of Englande did what him lyst in the meane season. The French king knew well ynough what he did, and sware that he shoulde neuer returne out of his Realme vnfought withail, and that such hurtes and dammages as they had done, should be deerely reuenged.

King Edward having in his battaile three thousand men of armes, and. vi. thousand Archers, and ten thousand footemen, besydes them that roade with the Marshals, left the Citie of Constance, and went to the great towne called Saint Clowe, which was a rich towne of Drapery, and many riche Burgesses therein. When the King came thether, he tooke his lodging without the towne, for he would neuer lodge within any towne for feare of fire: But he sent his men before, and the towne was immediately taken and spoyled. The towne of The ryches of that towne was very great, namely in Canuas. Then the king went towarde taken and sport-Cane, the which was a greater towne, and full of Drapery of Lynnen and Wollen cloth, ed. and other riche Marchandise, and the inhabitauntes of the towne were very riche men, noble Ladies, beutifull Damoselles, goodly and riche Churches, and two great riche Abbeyes, one of the Trinitie, another of Saint Stephen. And on the one syde of the towne one of the fayrest Castels in all Normandy, of the which sir Robert of Blargmy was Capitaine, with three hundreth Genowayes, and in the Towne was the Erle of Ewe, and of Guynes Constable of Fraunce, and the Erle of Tankeruile with a good number of men. of warre.

The King of England roade all that day in good order, and lodged all his battayles together that night, about two leagues from Cane, in a towne with a little hauen called Haustreham: and thether came also all his nauie of ships with the Erle of Huntyngdon, who was gouernour of them.

The Constable and other Lordes of Fraunce that night watched well the towne of Cane. and in the morning armed themselves, and all the fighting people in the Towne. And then the Constable tooke order that none should issue out of the Towne, but kepe their defences on the Walles, Gate, Bridge, and River, and left the suburbes voyde, because they were not closed: For they thought they should have ynough to do to defende the towne, because it was not closed, but with the river. But they of the towne sayd they would issue out, for they were strong yough to fight with the king of England. When the Constable sawe them so bent, he sayde, in the name of God be it, ye shall not fight without me. Then they issued out in good order, and made good face and shewe to fight with the Englishe men, and to out theyr lives in adventure.

The Englishe men roase earely in the mornyng, and made themselves ready to go to Cane. The King heard noyse before the sonne risyng, & therefore he and the Prince his sonne tooke their horse, and sir Godfrey of Harecourt, Marshall and leader of the host, whose counsaile the king much followed. And the kinges army went forward in good array, and approched nere to the good towne of Cane.

When they of the Towne, who then were ready in the field, sawe these thre battayles comming in good array, with their Banners and Standards wauyng with the winde, and the Archers which they had not bene accustomed to see: they were so sore afrayde that they fled towarde the towne, without any order or good array, and the Constable could not stay them: But the Englishe men pursued them egerly.

When the Constable and the Erle of Tankeruyll sawe that, they tooke a Gate at the Cane besiged entrie and saued themselues and certeine with them, for the English men were entred into taken and speytthe towne as sone as they. And suche of the Frenche as knewe the way to the Castell, went thether, and the Capitaine thereof receyued them all, for the Castell was large. The Englishe men in the chace slue many, for they tooke none to mercy.

Then the Constable and the Erle of Tankeruyll beyng in the little towre at the Bridge foote, looked along the strete, and sawe their men slaine without mercy, they doubted to fall in their handes. At the last they sawe an English knight with one eye called Sir Thomas Holland, and five or sixe other knightes with him, they knewe them, for they had seene them before in Pruce, in Granado, and in other voyages. Then they called to sir Thomas and sayde, howe they would yelde themselves prisoners. Then sir Thomas came thether with his companie, and went vp into the Gate, and there found the sayd Lordes, and xxv. knightes with them, who yelded them all vnto sir Thomas, and he tooke them for his prisoners, and left companie to keepe them. And then he tooke his horse againe and roade into the streetes, and saued the lyues of many Ladies and Damoselles, and Cloysterers from deflowryng, for the Souldiours were without all compassion and mercie. And it chaunced so happely the same time for the Englishmen, that the river which was well able to beare shippes, at that tyme was so lowe, that men went in and out beside And such of the towne as were entred into their houses, cast downe into the streete, stones, timber, and yron, and slue & hurt mo then five hundreth English men, with the which doing the King was sore displeased. And at night when he heard thereof, he commaunded that the next day that all should be put to the sworde, and the towne to be brent. But then sir Godfray of Harecourt sayd: dere sir, for Goddes sake asswage somewhat your courage, and let it suffice you that ye have done, ye have a great exployt to do before ye come to Calice, whether ye purpose to go: And Sir, in thys towne there are much people that will defende their houses, and it will cost many of your mennes lives, before that ye have all your will, and by that meane ye may fortune to be disappoynted of your voyage to Calice, the which would turne to your great griefe: Wherefore sir, saue your people, for ye may chaunce to have nede of them before this moneth passe, For I thinke verely that your adversarie King Phillip will meete with you to fight, and ye shall find many streight passages and reencountries. Wherefore your men, and ye had mo shall stande you in good steede, and Sir without any further sleaying, ye shall be Lorde of this towne, men and women will put themselues and all that euer they have vnto your pleasure.

Then the King sayd, Sir Godfray, you are our Marshall, order every thing as best shall seeme vnto you. Then sir Godfray with his Banner roade from streete to streete, and commaunded in the kinges name, none to be so hardy as to put fire in any house, to sley any person, or to violate any woman.

When they of the towne heard that crie, they receyued the Englishmen into their houses, and made them good cheere. And some opened their Coffers, and bad them take what they woulde, so that they might be assured of their lyues. Howheit at that time there were many murders, robberyes, and euill deedes done in that towne.

Cane taken and sacked by the Englishe men.

Thus the Englishmen were Lordes of the towne of Cane three dayes, & wanne great ryches, the which they sent awaye by Barkes and Barges by the ryuer of Austrehen vnto their Nauie with two hundred men of Armes and foure hundred Archers, and so the Nauie departed into Englande wyth great riches and many riche prisoners. And the king bought of syr Thomas Holland two of his prisoners, which was the Constable of Fraunce, and the Erle of Tankeruyll, & gaue him for them ten thousand Marks in old nobles.

Then the king departed from Cane, and roade in the order that he did before, brennyng and spoylyng the Countrie, and tooke the way to Ewreus, and so past by it. And from thence they road to a great towne called Louyers, it was the chiefe towne of all Normandy of Drapery, ryche and full of all Marchandise: The Englishmen soone entred into it, for as then it was not closed, and it was ouer runne, ransacked and spoyled without all mercie, and there was wonne great rychesse.

Then they entered into the Countrie of Eureux, and brent and spoyled the Countrie, except Louyers taken & spoiled. except the walked townes and Castells, to the which the king made none assault for sparyng of his people and his artillery.

On the ryuer of Seyn nere vnto Roane, there was the Erle of Harecourte brother to Sir Godfray of Harccourt, but he was on the French partie, and the Erle of Dreux with him, with a good number of men of warre. But the Englishmen left Roane and went to Gysours, where was a strong Castell, they brent the towne, and after brent Vernon and Gysors, Vernon, all the Countrie about Roan and Pount de Larche, and came to Nauntes and to Mculence & Poullarche brent and and wasted all the Cruntrie about, and passed by the strong Castell of Robbeys, and in spoyled. eueric place along the ryuer of Seyne they founde the bridges broken. At the last they came to Poyssey and found the bridge broken, but the Arches and Ioystes lay in the ryuer. The king laye there five dayes, and in the meane time the bridge was made to passe the hoste without perill. The Englishe Marshalles ranne abroade even just to Parys, and brent Saint Germain, . Saint Germayns in Lay, and Mountioye and S. Clowde, and pety Boleyn by Parys, and the Moŭtioye, Saint Cloude, Pety Quenes Bourgh. They of Parys were not well assured of themselves, for it was not as Boleyn, aldethen walled nor closed.

The French king vnderstanding the king of Englande to be so nere, removed from Paris to Saint Dionyce which is nere vnto Paris: and before he went, he caused all the Penthehouses of the Towne of Parys to be pulled downe. And vnto Saint Denyce there were al ready come to the aide of the French king, the king of Behavne, the Lorde Iohn of Heynault, the Duke of Loreyne, the Erle of Flaundyrs, the Erle of Bloys and many other great Lordes and knightes.

When the people of Paris saw their king depart, they came to him and kneeled downe and sayde: A syr, and right Noble king, what will you doe? will ye nowe departe and leave both vs and this noble Citie as a spoyle to your enemies? The king aunswered them and sayde, be not afrayde good people, for the Englishmen will come no nere you then they Why so syr quoth they, for they be within these two leagues: And assone as they knowe of your departure they will come and assayle vs, and we be notable to defend them, wherefore good syr, for Gods sake tarie here still and helpe to defende your noble Citie of Paris. Speake no more to me quoth the king, for I will go to Saint Dionyce to my men of warre, and I will encounter the Englishmen and fight with them, whatsoeuer fall

At this time the king of Englande being at Poyssy, lay at the Nonery there, and kept there the feast of our Ladye the Assumption, and sate in his robes of Scarlet furred with Ermins, and that feast being ended, he then went foorth in the same order that he did before:

The Lorde Godfrey of Harecourt road out on the syde with. v. C. men of armes and. xiij. C. Archers: And by aduenture he encountred a great number of the Burgesses of Amyens on horseback, who were ryding by the kinges commaundement to Paris. The Englishmen quickly gaue them the onset, and they valiauntly defended themselves, for they A skirmishe were a great number and well armed, and had to their Capitaines foure knights of Amyens. wherein were a great number and well armed, and had to their Capitaines foure knights of Amyens. This skirmish dured long, at the first meeting many were overthrowne of both partes: Burgesses of But finally the Burgessses were taken and almost all slaine, and the Englishmen tooke all Amiens. their caryages and harnesse: Of this number there were slaine, xij, hundred that lay in the field.

Then the king of England entred into Beauuosyn brennyng and spoyling the plaine countrie, and lodged at a fayre Abbey and a riche, called saint Messene, nere to Beaways, and there the king taried one night, and in the morning departed. And when he was on his way, he looked back and saw the Abbey on fyre, and he caused incontinent. xx. of them to be hanged that set it on fyre, for he had commaunded before vpon paine of death none to spoyle any Church, nor to brenne any Abbey or Monastery.

Then the king passed by the Citie of Beaways without anye assault gening, because he would not trouble his people nor wast his artillery. And so that daye he took his lodging betimes in a little towne called Nully. The two marshalles came so neere to Beaways, that they made a skirmishe at the Barryers in three places, the which assault dured a long space: But the Towne within was so well defended by the meane of the Byshop, who at that tyme was within the towne, that finally the Englishmen departed and brent cleane heard to the gates all the suburbes of the same. And at night they came into the kinges field.

The next day the king departed, brennyng and spoyling all before him, and at night lodged in a good village called Gracuiellure. And the next daye the king passed by Argies, and there was none to defend the Castell, wherefore it was soone taken and brent. they went foorth, destroyeng the Countrie all about, and so came to the Castell of Poys, where there was a good towne and two Castels. There was no body in them, but two fayre Damoselles daughters to the Lorde of Poys, and they were sone taken, and had bene violated if two Englishe knightes had not beene, syr Iohn Chandos and Sir Basset: They defended them and brought them to the king, who for his honour made them good cheere, and demaunded of them whether they woulde faynest go, and they sayde to Corbe, and the king caused them to be brought thether without any perill. That night the king lodged in the Towne of Poys. And they of the towne and of the Castels spake that night with the two Marshals of the host, to saue them and their towne from brennyng, and they to paye a certaine some of Floreyns, and the same was graunted vnto them. The next daye the king departed in the morning with all his hoste, except certaine that were left there to receaue the money which the towne had promised to paye. When they of the towne sawe the hoste departed and gone, and that there were few left behinde: then they sayde, that they would pay neuer a penny, and so ranne vpon the Englishmen, who defended themselves. as well as they might, and sent after the host for succour.

When Sir Thomas Holland, and Sir Reignold Cobham, who had the rule of the reregarde, heard therof, they returned & cried treason, treason and so came againe to Poys ward, & found their Companions fighting styll with them of the towne. Then anone they of the towne were nighe all slaine, and the towne brent, and the two Castelles beaten downe. Then they returned to the kinges Hoste, who was as then at Araynes, and there lodged, and commaunded all maner of men vpon paine of death to do no hurt to no towne of Arsyn, for there the king was minded to lie a day or two to take aduise howe he might passe the riuer of Some: For it was necessary for him to passe the riuer, as after

The Frenche king was nowe in great redinesse to folowe the king of England, and was so farre forward, that he with a merueylous great armie of the number of a hundreth thousande men and mo, were come as farre as Amyens, and thought to have enclosed the king of England with the water of Some, for he had caused all the Bridges to be broken, and those that remayned to be so garded and kept, that there was no way left for the King of England to escape.

The King of England beyng thus enclosed, first caused his two Marshalles with a thousand men of armes and two thousand archers to go along the ryuer to seeke out some passage. And as they went, they entered into a towne called Founteynes, that standeth on the river of Some, and by reason it was not closed, they sone conquered, spoyled, and brent it. And from thence they went to sundrie passages, but all were so well defended, that there was no way for the king of England to passe the river of Some.

The King of England beyng verye pensife, did the next morning rise very earely and dislodged, and every man followed the Marshals Banners, and so roade into the Countrie of Vimew, approchyng to the good towne of Abbeuile, and found a towne thereby wherevinto was come many people of the Countrie, in trust of a little defence that was ther: But the English men shortly wanne it, and all that were within wereslaine taken, and many taken of the towne and of the Countrie. The King tooke his lodgyng in a great Hospitall that was there. And the same day that the King departed from Araynes, the French King the next day came thether with all his armie into the same lodgyng where the king was, and found there a great deale of the provision of the king of England, which for hast he was faine to leave behinde him.

That night the King of Englande was lodged at a towne called Oysement, And at night oysement. when his two Marshalles were returned, who had that day overrunne the Countrie to the Gates of Abbeuile, and to Saint Valery, where they had made a great skirmishe, who brought him worde that they could find no passage: Wherefore the King caused to be called before him all the prisoners that he had taken in the Countries of Ponthieu, and Vinew, and gently demaunded of them, that if there were any among them that knewe any passage beneth Abbeuile, that he and his host might passe the ryuer of Some, if any of them would shewe him thereof, he should be acquited of his raunsome, and twentie of his companie for his loue. There was at that time among the Prisoners, a verlet called Gobyn Gobyn & Grace, a Grace, who hering the kinges request, stepped forth and sayd to the King. Sir, I promise you on the icopardie of my head, that I will bring you to such a place, where as you and all your host shall passe the ryuer of Some without perill. There are certeyne places in the passage that we shall passe, xij, men on Front two times in a day and night, & that ye shall not go in the water aboue the knees: but when the flood commeth, then the river encreaseth so great, that no man can passe, but when the flood is gone, it is so low, vit may be passed without all daunger, both on horsebacke and on foote, and the passage is hard in the bottome, so that all your caryage may go safely through, and therefore the passage is called Blanchtague, and if you make readie to depart betymes, ye may be there before Blanchtague. the sonne risyng or soone after. The King beyng somewhat comforted with this tale, aunswered and sayde: if this be true that thou hast sayde, I will quite the thy raunsome and all thy company, and moreouer I will geue thee an hundreth nobles in thy purse. Then the king commaunded every man to be readie at the sound of the Trompet, and to depart.

At the breakyng of the day, the king with all his hoste departed from Oysement, and roade after the guidyng of Gobyn of Grace, so that they came by the sonne risyng to Blanche taque: but as then the flood was vp, so that they might not passe, wherefore the king ta-

The Frenche king had his currours in the Countrie, who brought him worde of the demeanor of the Englishe men, then he thought verily to have closed the king of England in betweene Abuile and the river of Some, and then to have fought with him at his pleasure. And while the French king was at Amience, he appoynted a great Baron of Normandy, called Sir Godmar du Foy, to go and keepe the passage of Blanche taque, where the English men must passe, or else in none other place: he had with him a thousand men of armes, and sixe thousand a foote with the Genowayes. And also he had with him a great number of the men of that Country, and also a great number of them of Mutterell, so that they were a. xij. thousande men one and other.

When the Englishe hoste was come thether, Sir Godmer du Foy arraunged all his companie to defende the passage. The king of Englande stayed not for all that, but when the A great skir-Tyde served, entered into the water, & so did they on the other syde, and many a man French men at drowned. There were some of the French men of Arthoys in Picardie, that were as glad the passage of to just on the water as on the drie land. The French men defended so well the passage at Blanchtaque. the issuying out of the water, that the Englishe men had much ado to recour the land, the Genowayes did them great trouble with their Crosbowes: And on the other syde the Archers of England shot so wholy together, that the Frenche men were faine to geue place to the Englishe men. There was a sore Battaile, and many a noble feate of armes done on both sides: Finally, the English men passed ouer, and assembled themselves together in the field, and the king and the Prince passed, and all the Lordes, and then the Frenche men kept none aray. When Sir Godmar saw this discomfiture, he fled and saued himselfe. Some fled to Abuyle, and some to Saint Reignyer: but those French men that were there on foote could not flee, so that there were slaine a great number of them, & the chase endured more then a great league. And as yet all the Englishe men were not passed the riuer, and certeine currours of the king of Behayne, and of Sir Iohn of Heynaultes, came vpon them VOL. I. 3 B that were behinde, and tooke horses and caryages, and slue dyuerse before they could take passage.

The Frenche king the same morning was departed from Areines, trusting to have found the Englishe men betwene him and the river of Some: But when he heard how that sir Godmar du Foy and his company were disconfited, he taryed in the field, & demaunded of his Marshals what was best to do: and they sayde, Sir ye can not passe the ryuer but at the Bridge of Abbeuile, for the flood is come in at Blanche taque, wherefore he returned and lodged at Abbeuile.

The King of England, when he was past the river, thanked God, and so roade foorth in like maner as he did before. Then the King called vnto him Gobyn a Grace, and did quite him his raunsome, and all his companie, and gave him an hundreth nobles, and a good horse. And so the king roade foorth fayre and easily, and thought to have lodged in a great towne called Norell: But when he knewe that the towne did apperteyne to the Countesse of Dammerle, sister to the Lorde Robert of Arthoys, the King assured the towne and Countrie, asmuch as apperteyned to her, and so went foorth, and his Marshalles roade to Crotoy on the See syde, and brent the towne, and found in the Hauen many Shippes laden with wynes of Ponthieu belongyng to the Marchauntes of Xaynton, and of Rochell: They brought the best thereof to the kinges hoste.

Then one of the Marshalles road to the gates of Abbeuyle, and from thence to Saint Reignyer, and after to the towne of Rue Saint Espirite. And this was on a Friday, and both the Marshalles battayles returned to the kinges hoste about noone, and so lodged all together neere vnto Cressy in Ponthieu.

The king of Englande was well informed howe the French king folowed after him to fight. And therefore he sayde vnto his company, let vs take here some place of grounde, for we will go no farther vntill we have scene our enimies: I have good cause here to abyde them, for I am on the right heritage of the Quene my mother, the which land was geuen her at her mariage: I will challenge it of mine adversarie Philip of Valoys. And because he had not the eight man that the French king had, therfore he commaunded his Marshalles to chose out a plot of ground, somewhat for his advantage, and so they did, and thether the king and his hoste went. And then he sent his Currours vnto Abbeuyle to see if the French king drewe that daye into the field or not. They went foorth and returned agayne, and sayde they sawe none apparence of his comming. Then every man tooke their lodging for that day, and to be readie in the Morning at the sounde of the Trumpet in the same place.

Thus all the Fridaye the French king taried still in Abbeuyle, abidyng for his company, and sent his two Marshalles to ryde out to see the dealing of the Englishmen: And at night they returned and sayde, howe that the Englishmen were lodged in the fieldes.

And that night the French king made a Supper to all the chiefe Lords that were there with him, and after Supper, the king desyred them to be friends eche with other: The French king looked for the Erle of Sauoye who promised to have come vnto him with a thousand Speares, for he had receaued wages for three Monethes of them at Troy in Champaigne.

The. xxvj. of August in the morning very early, being Saturday, the king of Englande arose and set forward his armie, commaunding euerye man to drawe to the field to the same place before appointed. And then the king caused a Parke to be made by the Wood syde behynde his hoste: and there was set all Cartes and cariages: and within the Parke were all their horses, for euery man was on foote. And into this Parke there was but one entrie, And then he ordeyned three battailes.

The order of king Edwards battayles.

In the first was the yong Prince of Wales, with him the Erle of Warwike and Canford, the Lorde Godfrey of Harecourt, Sir Reignald Cobham, Sir Thomas Holland, the Lorde Stafford, the Lorde Manny, the Lorde de laware, Sir Iohn Chandos, Sir Bartholomew de Bomes, Sir Robert Neuyll, the Lorde Thomas Clyfford, the Lorde Bourchier, the Lord

de la Tumier and dyuers other knightes and squires that I cannot name: They were eight hundred men of armes and two thousand Archers, and a thousand of other with the Welshmen, euery Lorde drewe to the field appointed, vnder his awne penone and Banner.

In the second battayle was the Erle of Northampton, the Erle of Arondell, the Lorde Rosse, the Lorde Lygo, The Lorde Willoughby, the Lorde Basset, the Lorde of Saint Aubyne, Sir Lewes Tueton, the Lord of Myleton, the Lorde de la Sell and dyuers other, they had event hundred men of armes and. xij. hundred Archers.

The thirde battayle had the king: he had. vij. hundred men of armes and two thousand Archers, beside Lords and knights that I cannot name. When all these battayles were set in an order, then the king lept on a Hobby with a whyte rodde in his hande, one of his Marshalles on the one hande, and another on the other hande, and he road from ranke to ranke, desyring every man to take heede that day to his right and honour. And he spake it so gently and with so good a countenaunce, that all suche as heard him tooke great courage and comfort by him.

And when he had thus ordered and visited all his battailes, it was then ix. of the clock in the forenoone. And then he caused every man to eate and drinke a little, and so they did at their leasure. And afterward they ordered against their battayles, and then every man layde him downe on the grounde and his Salet and Bowe by hym, to be the more freshe when the enimies shoulde come.

This Saturday also early in the morning the French king came forwarde, and when he was come about two leagues from Abbeuyle, some of his Lordes sayd vnto him: Sir, it were good that ye ordered your battailes, and let your footemen passe on somewhat before, that they be not troubled with the horsemen. Then the king sent foure knightes, the Moyne Bastell, the Lorde of Novers, the Lorde of Beauiewe and the Lorde Dambegny to ryde to viewe the Englishe hoste: And they roade so nere, that they might well see parte of their dealyng. For the Englishmen sawe them well, and knewe that they were come thether to vewe them, and they let them alone, and made no countenaunce toward them, but suffered them to go as they came. And when the French king sawe these foure knightes returne, he taried vntill they came vnto him, and sayde, Sirs what tydings? These foure knightes eche of them looked on other, for there was none that offered to speake: finally, the king sayde to Moyne which belonged to the king of Behayn, and had done in his dayes suche good service that he was reputed one of the valyauntest knightes in the worlde. And the French king bade hym speake. And he sayde, Sir we have ridden and seene the behauing of your enemies, and knowe ye for a truth that they are rested in three battailes abidyng for you. Sir, I would counsayle you for my part, sauing your displeasure, that you and all your company woulde rest here and lodge this night. For or they that be behinde of your company come hether, and or your battayles can be set in good order, it will be very late, and your people be werie and out of araye, and ye shall finde your enimies freshe and readie to recease you: Earely in the morning ye may order your battayles at more leasure, and aduise vpon your enimies with better deliberation, and to consyder well what waye ye will assayle them: for Sir surely, they will abide you. Then the king commaunded it should be so done. Then his two Marshalles, one roade before and another behinde, saveng to every Banner: tarie and abide here in the name of God and Saint Dionyce. They that were formost stayed a little, but they that were behinde, would not staye vntill they were come as farre as the formost. And when they before sawe them come on behinde, then they roade forward agayne, so that the king nor his Marshalles could not rule them: And so they roade without order or good array, vntill they came within the sight of their enimies. And assone as the formost sawe them, then they reculed back without all order: whereof they that were behinde had great maruaile and were amased at the matter, and thought that the formost company had bene fighting, and that then they might have had leasure to have gone forward if that they would. Some went foorth and some aboade still. The common people, of whome all the high wayes betweene Ab-3 B 2

beuile and Cressy, stood full. When they sawe that they were nere to their enemies, they drewe out their swordes and cryed out, downe with them, let vs slay them all. There was no man though he were present at this battayle that was hable to imagine or declare the euill order that was among the Frenche partie, and yet they were a maruellous great number. That I write in this thing (sayth Sir Iohn Froissart) I learned it specially of the Englishmen, who well behelde their dealyng, and also of certaine knightes of syr Iohn of Heynaultes, who was alwayes about king Philip, and they shewed me as they knewe.

The Englishmen lyeng on the ground to rest them, assone as they saw the Frenchmen approche, they roase fayre and easely, and stood vpon their feete and aranged in their battayles. The first which was the Princes battaile, the Archers therein stood in maner of a hersse and the men of armes in the bottome of the battayle. The Erle of Northampton and the Erle of Arondell, with the second battayle were on a wyng in very good order, readie to comfort the Princes battayle if neede were.

The Lordes and Knightes of Fraunce came not to the assemblie in good order, for some came before, & some came after, in such hast that one of them troubled another. When the French king sawe the English men, his countenaunce chaunged, and he sayde to his Marshalles, make the Genowayes go on before and begin the battaile in the name of God and saint Dionice. There were of the Genowayes Crosbowes about. xv. thousand: But they were so wery in goyng on foote that day a sixe leagues armed with their Crosbowes. that they sayde to their Constables, we be not well ordered to fight this day, for we be not in case to do any deedes of armes, we have more neede of rest. These wordes came to the Erle of Alanson, who sayde, a man is well at ease to be charged with such a sort of Rascalles to be faint and faile nowe at most neede. And the same season there fell a great raine and a clipse, with a terrible thunder: and before the raine there came fleving ouer both the battayles a great number of Crowes, for feare of the tempest commyng. anone the ayre began to waxe cleare, and the sonne to shine fayre and bright, the which was right in the French mennes eyen. When the Genowayes were set in order and began to approche they made a great leape and crie to have abashed the English men: but they stood still and stirred not one foote. Then the Genowayes againe the seconde time made another leape and a foule crie, and stepped forwarde a little, and the Englishe men remoued not one foote: Thirdely, against they lept and cryed vnreasonably and so went forth vntill they came within shot, and then shot off fiercely with their Crosbowes. Then the Englishe Archers stepped forwarde, and let flie their arrowes, so wholy and so thicke, that it seemed Snowe. When the Genowayes felt the Arrowes pearcyng thorough their heades, armes & breastes, many of them cast downe their Crosbowes, and cut their stringes, and return-When the French king saw them flie away, he sayd, slay these Raskalles. ed discomfited. for they will let and trouble vs without all reason. Then ye should have seene the men of armes have dashed in among them, and killed a great number of them. And ever still the Englishe men shot where as they sawe thickest preasse: The sharpe arrowes pearced the men of armes and their horsses, and many fell horse and men among the Genowayes. and when they were downe, they could not releue again, the prease was so thicke that one ouerthrew another. And also among the Englishe men there were certaine Raskalles that went a foote with great kniues, and they went in among the men of armes and slue and murdered many of them as they lay on the ground, both Erles, Barons, Knightes and Esquiers, wherewith the king of England was afterwards sore displeased, for he had rather they had bene taken prisoners.

The valiant king of Behaine, called Charles Luzenbourgh, sonne to the noble Emperor Henry of Luzenbourgh, for al that he was nere blind. When he vnderstood the order of the battaile, he sayde to them about him, where is the Lorde Charles my sonne? And his men aunswered, sir we can not tell, we thinke he be fightyng. Then he sayd, sirs ye are my men, my companions and my frendes in this iourney. I require you bring me so farre forwarde, that I may strike one stroke with my sworde, they sayde they would do his

commaundement. And to the entent y they should not leese him in the prease, they tyed all the reynes of their Bridels eche to other, and set the king before to accomplishe his desyre, and so they went on their enemyes. The Lorde Charles of Behayne his sonne, who wrote himselfe king of Behayne and bare the Armes, he came in good order to the battaile: But when he sawe the matter went awrye on their partie, he departed, I can not tell you which way. The king his father was so farre forwarde, that he strake a stroke with his sworde, ye and more then foure, and fought valiauntly.

The French king would faine have come thether when he sawe their Banners, but there was a great hedge of Archers before him. The same day the French king had geuen a great blacke Courser to Sir Iohn of Heynault, and he made the Lorde Iohn of Fusselles to ryde on him, and to beare his Banner. The same horse tooke the Brydle in the teeth, and brought him through all the Currours of the Englishe men: and as he would have returned againe, he fell into a great ditche and was sore hurt, and there had dyed if his Page had not beene.

This Battaile between Broye and Cressye was right cruell and sore foughten, and many a feate of armes there done that came not to my knowledge. And when night came, diuerse knightes and Esquiers lost their masters, and sometime or they knew, they came vpon the English men, who received them in such wise that they were slaine downe right, for there was no taking to mercie nor raunsome, for so the Englishe men were determined in the morning. At one tyme duryng this battaile, it chaunced certeine French men and Almaynes to geue such a charge and onset of the English hoste, that perforce they opened the Archers of the Princes battaile, and came & fought hand to hand with the men of armes. Then the second battaile of the English men came to succour the Princes battaile, the which was tyme: For they had as then much ado. And they that were with the Prince, sent a Mesenger to the king, who was on a little windemill hill heard by, and sayde vnto him, Sir, the Erle of Warwike, the Erle of Camfort, and sir Reignold Cobham, and other such as are aboute the Prince your sonne, are nowe fiercelye fought withall, and are sore handeled: Wherefore they desyre that you and your battaile will come and ayde Then the king sayde, is my sonne dead or hurt, or felled to the ground? No Sir quoth the knight, but he is hardly matched, and therefore hath neede of your ayde. Well sayd the King returne againe to him and them that sent you hether, and bid them that they send no more to me for any aduenture that falleth, as long as my sonne is aline; and say also to them that they suffer him this day to winne his spurres: For if God be pleased I will this journey to be his, and the honour thereof, and to them that are about him.

Then the knight returned againe, and shewed the kinges wordes, the which greatly encouraged them, and then they repented that they did send to the king as they did.

Sir Godfrey of Harecourt, would gladly that the Erle of Harecourt his brother might have bene saued, for he heard say by them that sawe his Banner, how that he was there in the fielde on the French partie: But syr Godfrey could not come to him betimes, for he was slaine before he coulde come at him, and so was also the Erle of Aumerle his Nephew. In another place the Erle of Alanson and the Erle of Flaundyrs fought valiauntly, euery Lorde vnder his awne Banner, but finally they could not resist against the puyssaunce of the Englishmen, and so there they were also slaine and dyuers other knights and Also the Erle Lewes of Bloys Nephewe vnto the French king, and the Duke of Loreyn fought vnder their Banners, but at the last they were closed in with Englishmen and Welshmen, and there were slaine for all their prowes. Also there was slaine the Erle of Ausser, the Erle of S. Paule and many other. And in the evening the French king, who had as then left about him a. lx. persons one and other, whereof Sir Iohn of Heynault was one, who had remounted once agayne, for his horse was slaine with an Then he sayde to the king, Sir departe hence, for it is time, leese not your selfe wilfully, if ye have losse at this time, ye shall recover it agayne at another season. And so he tooke the kinges horse by the bridle, and led him away, in maner perforce. Then the king roade, vntill he came to the Castell of Broy, the gate was closed, because it was at that time darke. Then the king called the Captaine, who came to the walles & sayde: who is it that calleth there at this time of night: Then the king sayde, open your gate quickly, for thys is the fortune of Fraunce. The Capitaine knew then that it was the king, and opened the gate and let downe the bridge, and then the king entred in, and had with him but fine Barones, Sir Iohn of Heynault, Sir Charles of Momorency, the Lorde of Beauiewe, the Lorde Dabegny and the Lorde of Mountford. The king woulde not tarie there, but dranke and departed thence about Midnight and so roade to Amyence and there rested. And the Englishmen kept the fielde all this Saturday at night.

The victory of the Englishe men at the battaile of Cressie. And assone as night was come, and the Englishmen perceauing that no mo Frenchmen approched, then they accompted among themselues that the victorie was theirs, for the Frenchmen were discomfited, slayne or runne away. Then they made great fyres and lighted vp Torches and Candels, for it was very darke. Then the king came downe from the little hill where as he had stande all the day long, and his Helmet neuer came of his head.

Then he went with all his battayle to his sonne the Prince, and embraced him in his armes and kissed him and sayde, good sonne, God geue you good perseueraunce, you are my good sonne, and you have done very nobly, ye are worthie to keepe a realme. The Prince bowed himselfe to the earth honouring the king his father. This night they thanked God for their good aduenture, and did neither crake nor boast therof, but wholy gaue the prayse and thankes vnto almightie God the gener of victorie.

The nexte daye in the morning, which was Sunday there was suche a Miste, that a man coulde not see the breadth of an Acre of lande from him. And then the king commaunded his Marshalles to go abroad, and to viewe whether any Frenchmen gathered agayne together in any place, and they had with them fine hundred Speares and to thousande Archers. And the same morning out of Abbeuile and Saint Reignyer in Ponthew, the commons of Roane and of Beniovs issued out of their townes, not knowyng of the discomfiture the day before, and sodainely met with the Englishe Marshalles, wenyng to them they had bene Frenchmen.

And when the Englishmen sawe them, they set on them freshly: and there was a sore fight, but at the last the Frenchmen brake their araye and fled, and there were slaine in the wayes, and in the hedges and bushes mo then. vij. thousand. And if the day had bene clere, there had not escaped a ma.

And anone after, another companye of Frenchmen were met by the Englishmen. The Archbishop of Roane, and the great Priour of Fraunce, who also knewe nothing of the discomfiture the daye before, for they were enformed that the French king should have fought the same Sonday, and they were going thetherwarde. But when they met with the Englishmen there was a great battayle, for they were a great number, but they coulde not endure against the Englishmen, for they were nigh all slayne, few scaped, the two Lordes were slayne. And this morning also the Englishmen met with divers companies that had lost their way on the Saturday, and had lyen all night in the fieldes, and wist not where the king was, nor their Capitaines: and the Englishmen slue them all as many as they met. And it was shewed me (sayth Froyssart) that of the commons and men on foote of the Cities and good Townes of Fraunce, there were slayne foure times as many on the Sunday, as there were slain on the Saturday at the great battayle. And after these sundrie great and wonderfull victories, the Marshalles of the Englishmen with their men returned to the kinges battayle, and sayde vnto the king, Sir, we thinke surely that there is nowe no more apparence of your enimies.

And then the king commaunded Sir Reignold Cobham and syr Richard Stafford with three Herauldes, to serche the field and countrie for the number of them that were slaine, and they roade in the fieldes all that daye, and made a diligent vewe, and returned agayne about Supper time, and made reporte to the king and sayde, howe there were in the field dead. xj. great Princes. lxxx. Banners, twelve hundred knightes and mo then. xxx. thousand other. The Englishmen kept still their fielde all that night, and on the Monday in A notable victhe morning the king prepared to departe. But before hys departure he caused proclama- tory at the battion in the Countrie to be made, and graunted a truce for three dayes to the entent they should come and bury the dead: And all the great Lordes he caused to be brought with him and caryed them to Mounterell, and there were buried, and his Marshalles went toward Hedyn, and brent Vambam and Seram, but they did nothing to the Castell, it was Vambam and so strong and so well kept. They lodged that night on the river of Hedyn towardes Blangye. The next day, they roade towardes Boleyn, and came to the towne of Vnysame: There the king and the Prince lodged and taried a daye to refreshe his men. And on the Wednesday, the king came before the strong towne of Calice.

At the same time in the towne of Calice was a knight called Sir Iohn Vien chiefe Captaine thereof, and with him also was Syr Andrewe Dandrehen, syr Iohn de Sury, syr Bardon de Belborne, syr Godfrey de lament, syr Pepyn de Vrmew, and diuers other knights and squiers.

When king Edwarde was come before Calice, he layde his siege therevnto, the thirde Calyce besieged. day of September, and ordeyned Bastides betweene the towne and the hauen. And he caused Carpenters to make houses and lodgynges of great timber, and set the houses like streetes, and couered them with Reede and Broome: so that it was like a little towne, & there was everything to sell, and a Market place, and Market kept every Tuesday, and euery Saturday, for fleshe and fishe, for Mercery ware, houses for cloth both linnen and wollen: Also there was bread, wine, and all other necessary thinges, which came out of England, and out of Flaundyrs, and there they might buy what they lust.

The king would not assayle the towne of Calice, for he thought it but a lost labour, and therefore he spared his people and artillarie, and sayde he would famishe them within the towne with long siege, without the Frenche King came to rayse his siege perforce.

When the Capitaine of Calice sawe the maner and order of the Englishemen, then he constreyned all meane and poore people to issue out of the towne. And on a Wednesday there issued out of the towne, of men, women, and children, mo than xvij. hundreth. And as they passed through the hoste, they were demaunded why they departed, and they aunswered and sayde, because they had nothing to live vpon. Then the king of his mere pity and mercye suffered them to passe through his hoste without daunger, and gaue them meate and drinke to dyner, and vnto enery person two pence sterlyng in almose, for the which diverse of them prayed for the kinges prosperitie.

In this meane while that the King lay at the siege of Calice, Dauid king of Scotland The Scots rebell by the styrryng of the French king, made his sommons to his people to mete him at Saint Iohns Towne, vpon the river of Taye in Scotland. Thether came Erles, Barons, and Prelates of Scotland, and there agreed that in all haste possible they should enter into England, and to ayde them in that iourney, John of the Isles, who ruled the wilde Scottes should go with them. The same Iohn came with a three thousand of the most outrageous A great army people in the whole worlde. When all the Scottes were assembled, they were one and of the Scots.

The Scots could not make their assembly so secret, but that the Quene had knowledge thereof, beyng at that time at Yorke. Then she sent all about for men, and then with as much speede as might be, the people came to the Queene from all places. But the Scottes were fully perswaded that there were no men left in England, for they were eyther with the king at the siege of Calice, or else in Gascoyne and Breteyne defendyng of the French

In this meane time the king of Scottes departed from Saint Iohns towne, and went to Domefremlyne the first day, and the next day they passed a little arme of the Sea, and so came to Estreuelyne, & then to Edenbourgh. And there they numbred their people, and they were a three thousand men of armes, Knightes and Esquiers, and a xxx. thousand of other vpon small Hacqueneyes, besyde foote men. Then they came to Rous-bourgh the first fortresse Englishe on that part, whereof Sir William Mountagew was Capitaine. The Scottes passed by without offeryng of any assault, and so went forth brennyng and destroiyng the Countrie of Northumberland, and their Currours ran to Yorke, and brent as much as was without the walles, and returned againe vnto their host, which then was within a myle of newe Castell vpon Tyne.

The Queene of England who desyred to defend her Countrie, came to newe Castell vpon Tine, and there taried for her men, who came dayly from all the partes of the Realme.

The Quene of England gathered a great power agaynst the Scottes, and gaue them battaile.

When the Scottes knewe that the Englishmen were assembled at new Castell, they drewe thetherward, and their Currours came runnyng before the towne: and at their returnyng they brent certeine small Hamlets thereaboutes, so that the smoke therof came into the towne of new Castell. Some of the Englishe men would have issued out, to have fought with them that made the fyre: But the Capitaynes would not suffer them to go out.

The next day, the King of Scottes with. xl. thousand men one and other came and lodged within three English myles of the towne of newe Castell, in the land of the Lorde Neuyll: and the king sent to them within the towne, that if they would issue out into the fielde, he would fight with them gladly, and they had answere, that they would come out & fight with him in the field. Then the Lordes and Prelates of England sayde vnto the Queene, we are content to aduenture our lyues with the right and heritage of the king of England our Maister. And then they all issued out of the Towne, and were in number. xij. hundreth men of armes, three thousande Archers, and. vij. thousand of other with the Welshemen.

Then the Scottes came and lodged agaynst them nere together: and every man was set in order of battaile. And then the Queene came among her men, and her battayles were thus ordered.

The order of the Queenes battailes. There was ordeyned foure battayles, one to ayde another. The first was in the gouern-aunce of the Bishop of Durham, and the Lorde Percy: The seconde, the Archebishop of Yorke, and the Lord Neuyll: The thirde, the Bishop of Lincolne, & the Lord Mowebray: The fourth, the Lord Edward Bailioll Capitaine of Barwike, and the Archebishop of Cauntorbury, and the Lord Rosse, every battaile had like number after their quantity: and the Quene went from battaile to battaile, praiyng them to do their deuoyre for the defence of the honour of their Lord and maister the king of England, and in the name of God every man to be of good heart and courage, promisyng them that to her power, she would remember them as well and better, as though the king her Lorde were there personally. And so the Queene departed from them, recommending them to God.

And anone after, the battayles of the Scottes began to set forward: and in likewise, so did the Englishmen. Then the Archers beganne to shote on both parties: howbeit the shot of the Scottes endured but a short space: But the shot of the Englishmen was long and fierce. So that when the battayles approched, the battayle was cruell and daungerous. They began at nyne of the clock in the morning, fought vntill it was noone. The Scottes had great Axes heard and sharpe, and gaue with them many sore and cruell strokes: howbeit in the ende the Englishmen obteyned the victorye of the fielde, but they lost many

There were slaine of the Scots, the Erle of Sys, the Erle of Ostre, the Erle of Patrys, the Erle of Surlant, the Erle of Dastre dare, the Erle Mare, the Erle Iohn Dowglas and the Lorde Alexander Ramsey, who bare the kings Banner, and divers other knightes and squiers. And there the Scottishe king was taken, who had fought valiauntly and was sore hurt: A squire of Northumberland tooke him called Iohn Copland. And assone as he had taken the king, he went with him out of the field with an eyght of his seruaunts with him, and roade all that daye vntill he was. xv. leagues from the place of the battayle, and at night he came to a Castell called Orgulus. And then he sayd that he would not deliver the king of Scots to no man nor woman lyuyng, but onely to the king of England his Lorde.

A cruell battaile.

The Scottishe king taken by a Squire of Northumberlande called John Copland.

Lorde. The same day there was also taken in the fielde the Erle Moret, the Erle of Marche, the Lord Wylliam Dowglas, the Lord Robert Vesy, the Byshop of Dadudame, Prisoners taken the Byshop of Saint Andrewes & divers other knights and Barones. And there were slaine of one and other. xv. thousand, and the other saued them selues as well as they might. This battaile was foughten besides New Castell vpon Type in the yere of our Lorde. 1346.

Now when the Quene of Englande being at New Castell vnderstood of the victorie: she then tooke her horse and roade to the place where the battayle had bene. And there it was shewed her how the king of Scottes was taken by a squier called John Copland, and he had caryed him awaye, no man knew whether. Then the Quene wrote to the squire, commaunding him to bring his prisoner the king of Scottes vnto her, and that he had not well done to depart with him without leaue. All that day the Englishmen taried in that place, and the Quene with them. And the next day they returned to New Castell.

When the Quenes letter was brought to Iohn Copland, he aunswered and sayde: That The answere of as for the king of Scottes his prisoner, he would not delyuer him to no man nor woman lyuing but onely to the king of England his souereigne Lorde. As for the king of Scottes he sayde should be safely kept, and he would geue accompt for him. Then the Queene sent letters to the king to Calice, wherby the king was informed of the state of his realme. Then the king sent incontinent to Iohn Copland, commaunding him forthwith to come ouer the sea to him to Calice. Then the sayde Iohn did put his sayde prisoner in a strong Castell in safe keeping, and so road thorow England vntill he came to Douer, and there toke the sea & arrived before Calice.

When the king of England sawe the squire, he tooke him by the hande and sayde, welcome my squire, which by your valiauntnesse haue taken mine aduersarie the king of The squire kneeled downe and sayde: syr, if God by his grace haue suffered me to take the king of Scottes by true conquest of armes, I thinke no man ought to have any enuie thereat: For as well God maye sende by his grace suche a fortune to a poore Squire, as to a great Lorde. And Sir, I require your grace not to be miscontent with me, though I did not delyuer the king of Scottes to the Queene at her commaundement. For syr I holde of you as mine othe is to you, and not of her, but in all good maner.

The king sayde to him, Iohn, the good service that ye have done and your valiauntnes is so much worth, that it must counteruayle your trespace, and to be taken for excuse, and blame have they that beare you any euill will. Therefore ye shall returne againe home to your house, and then my will and pleasure is, that ye delyuer your prisoner the king of Scottes to the Quene my wyfe. And in rewarde, I assigne you nere to your house, where as ye thinke best your selfe fiue hundreth pound starling of yerely rent to you and to your heyres for euer: and here I make you squire for my body.

Then the thirde daye he departed into Englande, and when he came home to his awne house, he assembled together his friendes and kinsmen, and so they tooke the King of Scottes and roade with him to the Citie of Yorke, and there from the King of England he presented to the Queene the King of Scottes, and excused himselfe so discretely as the Queene and the counsayle were content.

Then the Queene made good provision for the Citie of Yorke, the Castell of Rokesbourgh, the Citie of Dureham, the towne of New Castell ypon Tyne, and in all other garrisons on the marches of Scotlande: And left in those Marches the Lorde Percy and the Lorde Neuyll as Gouernoures there, and then the Quene departed from Yorke to

Then she placed the King of Scottes in the strong tower of London, and the Erle Moret and all the other prisoners with him, and set good keeping ouer them. Then she went to Douer and there tooke the Sea, and had so good winde, that within a short space she arrived before Calice, three dayes before the feast of all Saintes: For whose comming the king made a great feast and dinner to all the Lordes and Ladies that were there. The

The Frenche king vnderstanding well that his men in Calyce were charged sore, sent forth his commaundement throughout Fraunce, that every man should be with him at the towne of Amyens at Whitsontyde next following, and there was none that durst say nave. And when Whytsontyde came, the French king kept there a great feast, and thether came vnto him the Duke of Odes and of Burgoyn, and the Duke of Normandy his eldest sonne, and the Duke of Orleance his youngest sonne, the Duke of Burbon, the Erle of Fortz, the Lorde Lewes of Sauoy, Sir Iohn of Heynault, the Erle of Armanack, the Erle of Forestes, the Erle of Valentenoys, and dyuers other Erles, Barons, Lordes, and knightes.

When they were all at Amiens, they counsayled together, howe they might best enter towarde Calice, to rayse the siege. And some counsayled the French king to make meanes to the Fleminges to have the passages of Flaundyrs open, and then might be come in by Grauelyng, and not only raise the siege, but also on that syde he might easely geue them battaile. And soone after the Frenche king sent great Ambassadors into Flaundyrs, to treate in the aforesayde matter. But the king of England had made there suche fast friendship, that they would not agree to that request: And then the Frenche king sayde that he would enter on the syde towarde Burgoyn.

In this meane time the king of England saw that he could not get Calice, but by famine, and therefore he made a strong Castell, and a highe, to close vp the passage by the sea: And this Castell was set between the towne and the sea, & was well fortefied with Springaldes, Bombardes, Bowes, and other Artillery. And in this Castell were. lx. men of armes, and two hundreth Archers, and they kept the Hauen in suche wise, that nothing coulde come in nor out, but by their licence.

And in this time also the king of Englande had so laboured and solicited the Counsaile of Flaundyrs, that they came out of Flaundyrs with an hundreth thousand men, and went and layd siege to the towne of Ayre, and brent the Countrie round about, as Menyuell la Gorge, Estelles Le Ventre, and a Marshe called la Loe, and to the Gates of Turwyn, and Saint Omere. Then the French king went to the towne of Aras, & sent many men of warre to the Garrison of Arthoys, and specially he sent his Constable, sir Charles of Spaine to S. Omers: For the Erle of Ewe, and of Guynes, who was Constable of Fraunce, was then prisoner in England, as before it is shewed.

The Fleminges did the French men great trouble before they departed. And when the Fleminges were returned, then the French king and his companie departed from Arras, and went to Hedyn. His host with their cariages helde well in length three Leagues of that Countrie, and there he taried one day, and the next day he went to Blangy: And there he rested to take aduice what waye to go foorth: Then he was counsayled to go through the Country called la Belme: and that way he toke, and with him two hundreth thousand one and other, and so passed by the County of Franqueberg, and so came streight to the hill of Sangates, betwene Calice and Wyssant. They came thether in goodly order, theyr Banners displayed, that it was greate beutie to beholde theyr puyssant array. They of Calice, when they saw them lodge, it seemed to them to be a new esiege.

When the king of Englande knewe and sawe the Frenche king come with such a power to rayse the siege. Then he had made so good provision for the stoppage of the passages, that he was sure that the French king coulde not with his armie come nere to Calice, except it were in two places, the one was by the downes by the sea syde, or else aboue by the high way: and there were many ditches, rockes, and marishes, and but one way to passe over a Bridge called Newland Bridge. And all alongest the Downes, the king of England caused all his nauye to lie, and every ship wel furnished with Bombardes, Crosbowes,

Archers,

A houge armie of french men.

Archers, Springalles, and other artillary, whereby the French hoste might not passe that

And the king caused the Erle of Darby to go and keepe Newelande Bridge with a great number of men of armes, & Archers, so that the French men coulde passe no way, without they would have gone through the Marshes, the which was a thing impossible.

On the other syde towarde Calice, there was a high Tower kept with. xxx. Archers, and they kept the passage of the Downes from the Frenche men, the which was well fortefied with great and double Ditches.

When the French men were thus lodged on the hill of Sangate: The Commons of Tourney who were. xv. C. came to the Tower last aboue named, and they within shot at them: But they passed the ditches, and came to the foote of the wall with Pikes and Hookes, and there was a sore assault, and many of them of Tourney hurt: But at the last they wanne the Tower, and slue all that were therein, and the Tower beaten downe.

The French king sent his Marshalles to aduyse what way hee might approache to fight with the Englishe men: and so they went foorth, and when they had well advised the passages and streytes, they returned to the king and sayde, that by no meanes he could not come at the Englishe men without he would leese his people. So the matter rested all that day and night. The next day the French king sent to the King of England, the Lorde Godfrey of Charney, the Lorde Eustace of Rybamount, Guy of Nele, and the Lorde of Beauiewe: and as they roade that strong way, they sawe well that it was harde to passe that way. They praysed much the order that the Erle of Darby kept at Newland bridge, by the which way they passed. Then they road forth vntill they came to the king of England, who was well accompanied wyth Noble men about him.

Then they foure alighted, and came to the king, and did their reverence vnto him: Then the Lorde Eustace of Rybamount sayde, Sir, the king my Maister sendeth you worde by vs, that he is come to the hill of Sangate to do battaile with you, but he can finde no way to come at you: And therefore sir he would that ye should apoynt certeyne of your counsaile, and he will do likewise of his, and they between them to decise a place for the Battaile.

The king of Englande was readie to aunswere and sayde, Sirs, I have well understand that ye desire me on the behalfe of mine aduersary, who keepeth wrongfully from me mine heritage: Wherefore I am sory. Say vnto him from me if ye list, that I am here, and so have bene nere a whole yere; and all this he knewe right well; he might have come hether sooner if he had would, but he hath suffered me to abide here so long, the which hath beene greatly to my costes and charges. And I now could do so much if I would, soone to be Lorde of Calice. And therefore I am not determined to follow your maisters aduice, nor to depart from that which I am at a poynt to win. Wherefore if he nor his men can passe this way, let them seeke some other passage if they thinke to come hether, for I entende not to styrre my siege to come to them.

Then these Lordes departed, and were conveyed untill they were past Newelande Bridge: And then they shewed the Frenche king, the King of Englandes aunswere.

And in this tyme, while the French king studyed howe to fight with the king of England, there came into his host two Cardinalles from Pope Clement in message, who tooke Two Cardinalles great paine to ryde vp and downe between these two hostes, and they laboured and en-labored between deuoured themselves so much, that they obteyned a graunt for an entreatie of an accorde for peace. and peace, and a respite betwene the two kings, beyng the one at the siege, & the other in the field onely. And so there were foure Lordes appoynted on eyther party to counsayle together for a peace. For the French king, there was the Duke of Burgoyn, and the Duke of Burbon, Sir Lewes of Sauoy, and Sir Iohn of Heynault. And for the English partie, the Erle of Darby, the Erle of Northhampton, the Lorde Reignald Cobham, and the Lord Gualtier of Manny, and the two Cardinals were as indifferent meanes betwene both parties.

These Lordes met three dayes, and many devises put foorth, but none tooke effect: And in the meane season the king of Englande alwayes fortefied his hoste and fielde and made diches on the downes, that the Frenche men should not come sodainely vpon him. The French king These three dayes passed without any agreement, and then the two Cardinalles returned to Saint Omers. And when the French king sawe that he could doe nothing, the next daye he dislodged betymes and tooke hys waye to Amyens and gaue euerye manne leaue to departe.

When they within Calyce sawe their king departe, they made great sorowe. Some of the Englishmen followed the tayle of the Frence armie, and wanne Sommers, Cartes and cariages, horse, wine and other things, and tooke dyuers prisoners and brought them to Calvce.

After the departure of the french king from Sandgate, then they with in the towne perceauing they were vtterly without reliefe and succor, cryed vpon their Capitaine syr John of Vyen that he would entreate the king of Englande for mercie. And at the last the Capitaine graunted so to doe, and went to the walles, and made a signe to speake with some of the hoste: whereof knowledge was immediatly brought to the king. the King heard thereof, he sent thether syr Gualtier of Manny and syr Basset. Then syr Iohn of Vyen sayde vnto them: Sirs, ye be right valiant Knights in deedes of armes. and you knowe well how that the King my master hath sent me and other vnto this towne. and commaunded vs to keepe it to his behoofe, in such wise as we take no blame nor yet be to him any dammage, and we have done all that lyeth in our power to doe: And now The French men our succours hath fayled vs, and we be so sore streyned, that we have not to lyue withall, but that we must all die or perish by famine: except the noble & gentle King of yours will take vs to mercy, the which thing to doe we praye you to be a meane of entreatie for vs, that it would please him to take pitie of vs, and to let vs go and departe as we be, and let him take the towne and the Castell and all the goodes that be therein, the which is a great abundaunce.

> Then syr Gaultier of Manny sayde, Sir we knowe partly the kinges minde, for he hath shewed it vnto vs. And therefore know you for a truth, it is not his minde that you nor they that are within the towne should departe so: For it is his will that ye all shall yeelde your selves simply to hys wyll and pleasure, to raunsome or put to death whome & as he please. Then sayd the Capitaine, this is to heard a matter to vs, we are in thys towne a small sorte of knightes and squiers, who have as truely served the King our master, as you have served yours, and in lyke maner we have endured great vexation and paine, and we will endure as much paine as euer Knights did rather then to consent that the worst lad in the towne that should susteyne any more euill then the greatest or best of vs all, therfore syr we pray you of your humanitie and gentlenesse that ye will go and speake with the king of England and desire him to have pittie vpon vs, for we trust so much in his gracious goodnesse that his minde will chaunge, and that he will take pittie and com-

Sir Gualtier of Manny and syr Basset returned to the king, and declared to him all that had bene sayde. The king being in a great furie, sayde that he would none otherwise but that they should yelde themselues vp simply to his will and pleasure. And then syr Gualtyer sayde, syr sauyng your displeasure, in this ye may be in the wrong: For ye shall geue by this an euill ensample, if ye sende any of vs your seruauntes into any fortresse, we will not be very glad to go, if ye put any of the towne to death after they be yeelded, for in lyke case they will deale with vs, if the case fall lyke, the which saveng divers other Lords that were there susteyned and mainteyned. Then the King sayde: Sirs, I will not be alone against you all, therefore Syr Gualtier of Manny, ye shall go sixe Burgesses of agayne to the Capitaine and saye, that all the grace that ye nowe can finde at oure handes the towne to be is, that they let. vj. of the chiefe Burgesses of the Towne come out barehedded, barefooted and barelegged, and in their shertes with halters about their neckes, with the keyes of will, and the residew I will take to mercy.

Then Sir Gualtier returned and found Sir Iohn of Vyen still on the wall, abyding for an answere: Then sir Gualtier shewed him all the grace that he could get of the king: well sayde syr Iohn, I require you to tarie here a certaine space till I go into the towne, and shewe this vnto the commons who sent me hether.

Then syr Iohn went into the market place, and there tolled the common Bell, and then incontinent men and women assembled there.

Then the Capitaine made report of all that he had done, and sayde, Sirs, it will be none otherwise, and therefore nowe take aduise and make a short aunswere. Then all the people beganne to weepe and to make suche sorow and lamentation that there was not The maner howe so heard a hart, if they had seene them but would have had pittie vpon them. The Cap-the sixe Burgesstaine himselfe wept also and that pittifully: At the last the most riche Burgesse of all the ed and sent to towne called Eustace of Saint Peters, rose vp and sayd openly: Sirs, both great and king Edward. small, a most pittifull and horrible thing were it, to suffer such a number of people to dye as are in this Towne, eyther by famine or otherwise, so long as there is any meane to saue them: I thinke he or they shoulde have great merite of our Lorde God that would delyuer them from such mischiefe as for my parte I haue so good a trust in our Lorde God, that if I dye in the quarell to saue the residew, that God wyll pardon mee, wherefore to save them I will be the first to put my lyfe in leopardie. When he had thus sayde, euery man worshipped him, and divers kneeled downe at his feete, weeping and wringing their hands most greuously. Then another honest Burgesse stood out and sayde, I will keepe company with my Gossyp Eustace, his name was Iohn Dayre, then came Iaques of Wyssaunt who was riche both in goodes and heritage, he sayde also that he would keepe companye with his two Cosyns, and so sayde Peter of Wyssaunt his brother, and after came two other and sayde they would doe the same, and then they went and appareled them as the king desyred. Then the Captaine went with them to the gate, there was great mone and lamentation made at their departyng both of men, women and children. Then the gate was opened, and the Captaine issued out with the. vi. Burgesses, and closed the gate agayne: So that they were betweene the gate and the barryers. Then he sayde to syr Gualtier of Manny: Sir, I delyuer here to you as Captaine of Calice, by the whole consent of the people of the towne these. vj. Burgesses, & I sweare to you truely that they be and were to day the most notable, riche and worthyest Burgesses of all the towne of Calice: wherefore, gentle knight I require you to pray the King to have mercy vpon them that they die not. Then sayde syr Gualtier, I cannot tell, neyther can I say what the king will doe, but I will doe for them the best I can. Then the Barryers were opened and the. vj. Burgesses went towardes the king, and the Capitayne entered agayne into the Towne.

When Sir Gualtier presented those Burgesses vnto the king, they kneled downe and Howe the size helde vp their handes, and sayde: Gentle king, beholde here vs sixe who were Burgesses presented to the of Calice, and great merchauntes, we have brought to you the keyes of the towne and king. Then the king commaunded their heades to be stryken off: Then every man cryed and besought the king to have mercie, but he would here no man in that behalfe. Then Sir Gualter of Manny said, A noble king, for Gods sake refraine your courage, ye have the name of souereigne noblenesse, therefore nowe do not a thing that should blemishe your renowne, neither geue occasion for any to speake vilanie of you: for euery man will say it is a great tyranny to put to death suche honest personnes, who of themselves have willingly put themselves into the handes of your grace, for the safetie of their companie. Then the king turned from him, and commaunded him to send for the Hangman, and sayd: They of Calice have caused a great number of my men to be slaine, and therefore these also shall die likewise. Then the Queene beyng great with childe, kneled downe, and sore wepyng sayd, O gracious king, sithe I passed the sea in great perill, I have desired nothing of you: Therefore now I humbly require you in the honour of the virgin Mary, and for the loue of me, that ye will take mercy of these sixe Burgesses. The king behelde the Queene and stood still in a study a little while, and then sayde, A Dame, I would ye had bene as now in some other place, for I am not able to denie your request: Wherfore I geue them to you, to do your pleasure with them. Then the Queene caused them to be carved to her Chamber, and made the halters to be taken from their neckes, and caused them to be new apparayled, and gaue them their dinner at theyr leysure. And then she gaue eche of them sixe Nobles in his pursse, and made them to be brought out of the hoste in safegard, and set at their libertie.

Thus was Calice yelded and geuen vp to the king in the latter ende of September, so that he had laide siege therevnto one whole yere and more. And then the king called vnto Certaine Lordes him Sir Gualtier of Manny, and his two Marshalles, the Erle of Warwike, and the Erle of Stafforde, and sayde to them, Sirs take ye here the keyes of the Castell, and towne of Calice. Go and take possession thereof, and put in prison all the knightes that be there: And all other Souldiours that came simplie to winne their living, cause them to advoyde And in like maner advoyde the towne of all other men, women, and children, for I will repeople the towne againe wyth mere Englishe men.

So these three Lordes with an hundreth with them, went and tooke possession of Calice, and first did put in prison, Sir Iohn de Vien, sir Iohn of Surrey, Sir Iohn of Belborne and other: Then they caused all the souldiours to bring all their harnesse into a place appointed, and layde it all on an heape in the hall of Calice. Then they caused all maner of people to voide, and kept there no mo persons but one priest, and two other auncient personages, such as knewe the customes, lawes and ordinaunces of the towne, and to signe out the heritages howe they were deuided. Then they prepared the Castell to lodge the king and Queene in, and prepared other houses for the kinges companie.

Then the king mounted on his horsse, and entered into the towne, with Trumpettes, Drommes, and other Instrumentes of Musicke, and there the king laye until the Queene was brought in bed and deliuered of a faire Ladye named Margaret. The king gaue to Sir Gualtier of Manny dyuerse fayre houses within the towne, and to the Lorde of Stafford, to the Lorde of Bethene, to sir Bartholomew of Bomes, & to dyuerse other Lordes and Knightes, to repeople the towne againe. The kinges minde was when he came into England, to sende out of London. xxxvj. good Citezens to Calice to dwell there, and by that meanes to people the towne with pure Englishe men, the which the king afterward performed.

Then the newe towne and Bastide that was made without the towne was pulled downe, and the Castell that stood on the Hauen, was likewyse pulled downe, and the great timber and stones brought into the towne. Then the King ordeyned men to kepe the Gates, walles and Barriers, and amended all thinges within the towne. And sir Iohn de Vien, and his companie were sent into England, and were halfe a yere at London before they were put to raunsome.

A pitifull sight was it when the Burgesses and other men of the towne of Calice, and women, and children, were put out of the Towne, and faine to forsake houses, heritages and goodes, and to take nothing with them: Neyther had they any restitution of the French king, for whose sake they lost all. The most part of that people went to Saint Omers.

At this tyme the Cardinall called Guy de Boloyne as a Legate from Clement the sixt,

The same time was brought to London Sir Charles de Bloys, who called himselfe Duke Sir Charles de of Briteine, who was taken in Briteine by the kinges people, duryng the tyme of the siege Bloys Duke of of Calice, and was nowe committed into Curtoyse prison in the Tower of London, with the king of Scottes, and the Erle Morette: But he had not bene there long, but at the request of the Queene of England, Sir Charles, who was her Cosyn Germaine was received on his fayth and truth, and road round about London at his pleasure: But he might not lye past one night out of London, without it were in the Court where the King and Queene lay: Also the same tyme there was prisoner in England the Erle of Ewe, and Guynes, which was Constable of Fraunce, a right gentle knight, and his behauiour was suche, that he was welcome wheresoeuer he came, both with the King, Queene, Lordes, Ladyes, and

Then the Lombard kneeled downe (and sayd) Anoble king, I crye you mercy, it is true that ye have sayde: But syr, the bargayne maye well be broken, for as yet I have receyued neuer a penny. Sir Gualtier Manny. When the king knewe the certaine day appointed, he departed out of Englande with three hundred men of armes, and tooke shipping at Douer, and in the euening arryued at Calice, so secretly that no man knewe thereof, and went and layde his men in bushmentes in the Chambers and Towres within the Castell.

Then the king sayde to syr Gualtier Manny, I will that ye be chiefe of this enterprise, for I and my sonne the Prince wil fight vnder your banner.

The Lorde Geoffrey Charney, the last daye of December at night departed with all his company from Arras, and came nere to Calice about the houre of midnight, and there taried awhile abyding for his company, and in the meane time he sent two squires to the posterne gate of the Castell of Calice, and there they founde sir Amery ready. Then they demaunded of him if it were time that the Lorde Geoffrey should come, and the Lombard sayde yea. Then they returned to their master and shewed him as the Lombard had sayde: Then he made his men to passe Newland Bridge in good order of battayle. he sent. xij, knightes with an hundreth men of armes to go and take possession of the Castell of Calice: for he thought if he might have the Castell, he should soone get the Towne. And he delyuered to the Lorde Edward of Rency twentie thousand Crownes to pay the Lombard. And syr Geoffrey houed still in the fieldes priuely with his Banner before him. His intent was to enter into the towne by the gate, or else not, and the Lombard had let downe the bridge of the posterne, and suffred the hundred men of armes to passe peaceably: and syr Edward at the Posterne delivered twentie thousand Crownes in a bagge to the Lombard, who sayde, I trust here be all, for I have no leasure now to tell them, and it will be day anone. Then he cast the bagge with the Crownes into a Cofer, and sayde to the Frenchmen: come on Sirs, ye shall enter into the Dungeon, for then shall ye be sure to be Lordes of the Castell, and they went thether, and he drewe apart the barre, and the gate opened.

Within this Castell was the King of Englande wyth two hundreth speares, who issued out with their swordes and axes in their handes, cryeng Manny, Manny, to the reskewe, what? weneth the Frenchmen with so few men to wynne the Castell of Calice? Then the Frenchmen seyng well that defence coulde not auayle them: Then they yeelded themselues prisoners, and so there were but a fewe hurte, and the rest were closed up in the same

Towre in prison.

And the Englishmen issued out of the Castell into the towne, and mounted on their horses, for they had all the French prisoners horses. Then the Archers roade to Boleyn gate where syr Geoffrey was with his Banner before him of Goules, three skotcheons of Siluer. He had a great desyre to be the first that should enter into the Towne: he sayde to the knightes that were about him: without this Lombard open the gate shortely, we are lyke to dye here for colde. In the name of God sayde Sir Pepy dewere, Lombards are malicious people and subtile, he is now looking on your crownes, whether all be good or not, and to recken if he have his whole some or no.

Therewith the king of Englande and the Prince his sonne was readie at the gate vnder the Banner of Sir Gualtier of Manny, with dyuers other Banners, as the Erle of Stafford, the Erle of Suffolke, the Lorde Iohn Mountagew, brother to the Erle of Salsburie, the Lorde Beauchampe, the Lorde Barkeley, and the Lord delaware: All these were Lords and had banners, there were no mo in that iourney.

Then the great gate was set open, and all they issued out: when the Frenchmen sawe them issue, and heard them crye Manny to the reskewe, they knewe well they were betrayed. Then Sir Geoffray sayde to his company, Sirs if we flie we are cleane lost: yet were we better to fight with a good courage, in hope the journey shall be oures.

The Englishe men heard these wordes and sayde, by saint George ye say truely, shame have he that flieth. The Frenchmen alighted on foote, and put their horses from them, and ordered themselves in good aray of battaile.

fight, for our enimies will abyde vs. The king sent parte of hys company to Newlande Bridge, for he heard saye, that there were a great number of Frenchmen. Then thether went a. vi. Banners, and three hundred Archers, and there they founde the Lorde Monau of Frenes. and the Lorde of Creques keeping the Bridge. And betwene the Bridge and Calice there were manye Crosbowes of Saint Omers and Ayre: So there was a sore fraye, and there were slaine and drowned mo then. vi. hundreth Frenchmen, for they were sone discomfited and chaced into the water. This was early in the morning, and incontinent it was day. French men kept their ground awhile, and manye feates of armes were there done on both parties: But the Englishmen euer encreased by comming out of Calyce, and the Frenchmen discreased. Then the Frenchemen sawe well that they could not long kepe the Bridge, wherfore they that had their horses by them mounted vpon them, and shewed their horse heeles, and the Englishmen followed them in chace. There was many a man ouerthrowne, and many were taken of their owne courage, which might have scaped if they whereby they had both honour and profite.

Nowe let ys speake of the king of England, who was there vnknowen to his enemies, How valyauntly vnder the Banner of Sir Gualter of Manny, and was on foote among his men to seeke his the king of England quit him enemyes, who stood close together wyth their speares a fine foote long. At the first meet-selfe against ye yng, there was a sore reencountrie: and the King chaunced to light ypon the Lorde Eus-French men. tace of Rybamount, who was a strong and valiaunt knight, and there was a long fight betwene the King and him, that it was joy to behold them, but at the last they were put asunder, for a great company of both partes came the same waye, and fought there fiercely together.

The Frenche men did there right valiauntly: But specially the Lorde Eustace of Rybamount, who strake the king the same day two tymes on his knees; but finally the King himselfe tooke him prisoner: and so he yelded his sworde to the king, and sayd, Sir Knight I yeelde me vnto you as your prisoner, he knew not at that time that it was the King. And so this journey was for the king of England: and all that were there with sir Geoffrey, were eyther slaine or taken, for very fewe escaped. There was slaine Sir Henry of Boys, and Sir Pepyn de Lawarre, and Sir Geoffrey taken. Thus this journey was achieued besyde Calice, the yere of our Lorde. 1348, the last day of the moneth of December, and in the beginning of the xxiii, yere of the reigne of king Edward.

When this battaile was done, the king returned againe to the Castell of Calice, and caused all the prisoners to be brought thether. Then the french men knew well that the king of England had bene there personally himselfe, under the Banner of Sir Gualter of The king sayde he would geue them all a supper that night in the Castell of Calice: And when the houre of Supper was come, and the tables couered: The king and hys knightes were there every man in newe apparell: And the French men also were there, and made good cheere, though they were prisoners.

The king sate downe and the Lordes and Knightes about him right honourably. The Prince, Lordes and knightes of England, served the king at the first messe. And at the second they sate downe at another table: they were all well served and at great leasure.

Then when supper was done, and the Tables taken away: The king tarved still in the Hall with his knightes and with the Frenche men, and he was bare headed, sauvng a Chapelet of fine Perles that he ware on his hed. Then the king went from one to another of the French men: And when he came to Sir Geoffrey of Charney, a little he chaunged his countenaunce, and looked vpon him, and sayd, Sir Geoffrey ye have genen me occa- The wise spech sion to loue you but a little, when ye would steale by night that thing from me which I of king Edward and the street of the str have so derely bought: But yet this pleaseth me best, that I have taken you with the ma- of Charney. mer. Then the king came to Sir Eustace of Rybamount, and ioyously to him he said, Sir Eustace ye are the knight that among all other are the most valiauntest that I have seene, as well in the assaylyng of your enemie as in the defendyng of your selfe, neyther was it my chaunce to meete with any knight that euer put me to aunswere, and defende my selfe body to body as ye have done this day, wherefore I geue you the price aboue all the knightes of my Court, by right sentence. Then the king tooke the Chapelet that was vpon his head, beyng both fayre, goodly, and riche, and sayd, Sir Eustace I geue you this Chapelet for the best doer in armes in this iourney past on eyther partie, and I desyre you to beare it this yere for the loue of me. I know wel ye be freshe and amorous, and often tymes ye are among Ladyes, and Damoselles: Say wheresoeuer ye come, that I did geue it you, and I requite and discharge you of your imprisonment and raunsome, and ye shall depart to morowe if it please you.

A great plague and pestilence. And in the end of this yere, the plague of Pestilence reigned sore in England, but chiefely in the Citie of London, that besyde the bodyes that were buryed in sundrie Churches and Churchyardes in London, there were also buryed in the Charterhouse Churchyard fiftie thousand persons and aboue.

This yere and the. xxij. day of August, dyed Philip the French king at Nogent, and was buryed in Parys: And the. xxvj. day of September following, Iohn eldest sonne to king Philip was crowned French king at Reynes, and the same day also the Queene his wife was crowned with him, and at the same tyme, the King made also manye Knightes, and created Erles Marqueses, and Dukes.

This yere about the latter ende of August a noble man of Spaine called Sir Charles, to whome king Iohn of Fraunce had newely geuen the Erledome of Angolesme, entendyng to winne some honour vpon the English men, with a strong nauie of Spanyardes entered the English streames, and did much harme vnto king Edwardes friendes. So that the king about the tyme abouesayde met with the sayde nauye vpon the coast of Winchelsey, where between the king and them was a long and cruell fight, to the great losse of many people vpon both partes: But in the ende God sent vnto the king the victory, so that he chased his enemies, and wanne from them. xxij. of their Shippes, with many prisoners. An ouerthrowe geuen to the french men by

In the ende of this yere, there were solempne Messengers sent in Ambassade to Rome, for to conclude a perfite peace betwene the two Kinges of England and of Fraunce, so that King Edward should resigne and geue vp all his title and claime that he made vnto the Crowne of Fraunce: And the French king should clerely geue vnto him all the Duchy of Guyan, with all such landes as at any time before, were taken by any of his progenitors from it. And that king Edward and his heyres kinges, should freely holde and occupie the sayde Duchie, without doyng of any homage to any French king after that day. But the conclusion of this matter was so prolonged and deferred by the Pope, that the Erle of Darby, and other which were appoynted for the King of England, returned without speding of their cause. Wherfore king Edward made new prouision to warre vpon king Iohn of Frauce.

In the. xxvj. yere of the reigne of this king, the Castell of Guynes nere vnto Calice was yelden vnto the Englishe men, by the treason of a French man called Guyllam de Beauconry, for the which treason the sayde Guyllam was shortly after put to execution by † French king in the towne of Amiens.

A victory over

And the same yere Sir Guy of Neale then Marshall of Fraunce with a strong companie gaue battaile vnto the Englishe men then beyng in Briteyn, in the which the sayde Sir Guy, with the Lorde of Brikebet, and the Chasteleyn of Beauueyes, with manie other noble men were slaine, and many taken prisoners.

. And

And at this tyme was builded Trinitie hall in Cambridge, by William Bateman, Bishop Trinity hall.

At this time happened throughout Englande so hote a Sommer, that many yeres after it was called the drie Sommer, for from the later ende of Marche vntill the later ende of Iuly, then next following there fell little or no rayne, by reason whereof, many great The drie or hote inconveniences followed. And chiefely the price of Corne this yere beganne greatly to be advaunced, and the yere following it was more dere, and so lykewise were Befes and Mottons greatly advaunced by reason of the lack of pasture and feeding, which thing happened in Fraunce as well as in Englande.

This yere the king called his high Court of Parliament at Westminster, and about Whitsontyde following the king created the Erle of Darby, Duke of Lancaster, and syr Raufe Stafford, Erle of Stafford. Then thys Duke of Lancaster was sent agayne ouer the Aparliament at Westminster. Sea, where in the ende of this yere (as sayth Froyssart) he was appealed of the Duke of The Erle of Brunswike, a Duke of the Countrie of Almayne, of certaine wordes that were agaynst Darby was appeared before years. his honour: For the which he offered to wage his battayle with the sayde Duke in the Freach king by court of the French king.

Then thys Henry, which some call Henry of Bolyngbroke Duke of Lancaster, purchaced his safeconduite of the French king, and kept his daye apointed for that battaile in a field called in the French, La preux Clers, where was for them ordeyned a place listed and closed in goodly wise: king Iohn beyng there present with the greatest parte of the Nobles of Fraunce.

And there came in first into that field the aforenamed Duke of Brunswike appellaunt. and after him came the Noble Duke of Lancaster, to the great honour of all England. And soone after (dyuers observances according to the lawe of armes done) and solempne othes taken, eyther of them set hys speare in the rest to have runne the first course. But then king Iohn of his speciall grace ceassed the matter, and tooke the quarell into his awne hands, so that eyther of them departed the field without any stroke striking: and then the French king pacified the appeale to the honour of the Duke of Lancaster although he was the French kings enemie.

And shortly after this, the sayde Duke of Lancaster, with other nobles assigned vnto The French king hym by the king of Englande, went vnto Auinion with the Archebishop of Rone then matter. Chauncelour of the Realme of Fraunce, and also the Duke of Burbone, and other that were apointed for the king of Fraunce to conclude a peace betweene their two princes aforesayde, who were at the Citie aforesayd and there heard at length of the election of a new Pope, then called Innocent the. vj. which also lyke vnto his predecessor was a French man borne. In conclusion after many and great arguments made on both sides, it was there agreed that the peace betweene the two sayde kinges should be kept and holden inuiolable vntill Mydsomer then next followyng.

Now for as much as the townes of Flaundyrs did refuse to keepe the bandes of amity that before time had beene made betwene the King of Englande and them, in the tyme and lyfe of laques Dartuell afore mencioned: But that now they beganne to fauour the French King, therefore the King withdrewe from them the Martes or Markets and staples of wolles which to their great aduauntage by the procurement of the sayde Iaques de Artuell was in sundrie of their townes vsed and kept. And the King caused the same to Staple of Wolles be kept in sundrie good townes of England, as Westminster, Chichester, Lyncolne, Bris- kept in England. tow, and Cauntorburie.

And shortly after Easter the French King sent his eldest sonne Charles Dolphyn of Vyenne into Normandy for to take the rule of that country, and specially for to cease certaine lands and Castels, which at that day belonged vnto the king of Nauarre, which then was out of the french kings fauor for the death of syr Charles of Spayne late Constable of Fraunce which by his meanes was murdered in a towne called Aigle in Normady ij, yeres before.

And while the Dolphyn was thus busied in Normandy, he made such meane to the rulers thereof, that they graunted him ayde of three thousand men for three Monethes at their proper costes and charges.

Of this sone after sprang such tydings, that the King of England was informed that the French King had geuen to his sonne Charles the Duchy of Normandy, with all Gascoyne and Guyan: and how the Normans had graunted to the sayde Charles three thousande men for three moneths to warre at their costes on the Englishmen, which (as the French boke sayth) was graunted him onely to defende the king of Nauerre, which came to Constantyne shortlye after, to repossesse such landes as the Dolphyn had seased there of his, and therefore he made warre vpon the Dolphyn.

But howsoeuer it were, in October next following the Prince of Wales with a great hoste entred into Gascoyne, and passed by Tholous and the ryuer of Geround and so by Carcassion, and brent the Bulwarks of that Citie, and from thence to Narbon in brennyng and spoylyng all as he went.

And in the same yere king Edward with his power landed at his towne of Calice, where he rested him all the Winter following.

10

Wales entreth into Gascoyne.

Ye have heard in the last yere that the Prince of Wales with an army of men went ouer into Gascoigne, where he did many a noble dede and feate of armes, and tooke many townes and Castels and subdued his enemies with great courage. At the last the French king made suche great provision to encounter with him, that there was no remedy but he must fight with him. Wherfore he made all the provision he could, and sayde courageously for the comforting of his men beyng God wote but a handefull in comparison to the French armie, well syrs sayth he, although we be but fewe in regarde to the multicommonly called tude of our enimies: Let vs not be abashed therefore, for the victorie lyeth not in the the black Prince multitude of the people, but where it pleaseth almighty God to geue it. If it fortune was of great cousthat the iourney be oures, we shall be honoured thorough the whole worlde: And if we die in a right and good quarell, I have a king to my father and I have brethren, and you have good friendes and kinsmen that will reuenge oure deathes. Therefore Syrs, for Gods sake take the good heartes of Englishmen vnto you this daye, for if God will, this daye shall ye see me doe the parte of a good knight. These wordes and suche other that the Prince spake, did greatly encourage his people. The Prince had placed himselfe with his armie among the Vynes and had closed in the weakest parte thereof with the caryages.

Now that the time of battaile approched, the Prince hauving by hvm the Lorde Sir Ioha Chandos and the Lord Iames Audeley, who assisted him and neuer went from him all the his worder to the time of the battayle. But the Lorde Audeley kneeled downe (and sayde vnto the Prince) Sir I have served alwayes truely my Lorde your father and you also, and will doe as long as I lyue. I saye this because I made once a vowe that the first battaile that eyther the king your father or any of his children should be at, how that I would be one of the first setters on, or else to die in the trauaile: Therefore I beseeche your grace as in rewarde for anye seruice that euer I did to the king your father or to you, that you will give me licence to depart from you, and to set my selfe there as I may accomplishe my vowe.

The Prince agreed to his desyre, and sayde, Sir Iames, God ayde you so this day, that ye may proue the best knight of all other, and so tooke hym by the hande. And the knight departed from the Prince, and went to the formost front of all the battayles, beyng only accompanied with foure Esquiers in whom he put great trust & confidence, and they promised not to fayle him.

This Lorde Iames was a right sage and Vertuous knight, and by him was much of the hoste ordered and gouerned. Thus Sir Iames was readie to fight in the front of the Bat-A sore and cruell battail called the taile, against the battayles of the Marshalles of Fraunce. Then the battaile began of all partes, and the battayles of the Marshalles of Fraunce approched, and they set forth that were appropried to breake the array of the Archers: They entred on horsebacke into the way where the great hedges were on both sydes set full of Archers: As soone as the men of armes entered, the Archers beganne to shoote on both sydes, and did slay and hurt Knightes and horses a great number. So that the horses when they felt the sharpe Arrowes, they would in no wise go forward, but drue backe and flang, and tooke on so fiercely, that many of them fell vpon their maisters: So that for preace they could neuer rise againe. In so much that the Marshalles battaile could neuer come at the Prince: But yet certein Knightes and Esquiers that were well horsed, passed through the Archers, and thought to have approched to the Prince, but they could not. The Lord Audely with his foure Esquiers was in the front of that battaile, and there did maruelles in Armes, and by great prowes he came & fought with Sir Arnolde Dandrehen, vnder his awne Banner, and there they fought long together, and Sir Arnold was there sore handled. The battaile of the Marshalles began to disorder, by reason of the shotte of the Archers, with the ayde of the men of armes, who came in among them, and slue of them, and did what they lust. And there was the Lorde Arnold Dandrehen taken prisoner by other men, and not by the Lorde Audeley, for that day he neuer tooke prisoner, but alwayes fought and went on his enemies. Also on the French part the Lorde Iohn Cleremount fought vnder his owne Banner as long as he could endure, but there he was beaten downe, and coulde not be relieued nor raunsomed, but was slaine without mercie. So within a short space the Marshalles battailes were discomfited, for they fell one upon another, and could not go forward. And the Frenchmen that were behinde, and could not come forwarde, reculed backe, and came on the battaile of the Duke of Normandy, the which was great and thicke, and were on foote, but anone they began to open behynde. For when they knewe that the Marshalles battaill was discomfited, they tooke their horses and departed he that might best make way to be gone: Also they sawe a rowte of Englishe men commyng downe a little hill on horseback, and many Archers with them, who brake in on the one syde of the Dukes battaile. To say the truth, the Archers did their company that day great seruice, for they shot so thick, that the French men wist not on what syde to take hede, and little and little the English men wanne ground on them. And when the men of Armes of England saw that the Marshalles battaile was discomfited, and that the Dukes battaile began to disorder & open, they lept then on their horses, the which they had redy by them. Then they assembled together, & cryed Saint George. And the Lorde Chandos sayde to the Prince: Sir, take your horse and ryde forth, thys journey is yours: God is this day with you, and fighteth for you, and let vs go ynto the French Kinges battaile, for there lyeth all the sore of this matter. I thinke verely by his valyantnesse that he will not flie, I trust by the helpe of God and Saint George we shall have him, if he be well fought withall: And Sir in the beginning of the battaile I heard you say, that this day I should see you a good knight, nowe is the tyme therefore, followe it. The Prince sayd, let vs go foorth, ye shall not see me this day returne backe, A corageous and then sayd the Prince, aduaunce foorth your Banner in the name of God and Saint George: The Knight that bare it, did his commaundement. There was then a sore battaile and a daungerous, and many a man ouerthrowne, and he that was once downe could not be relieued againe without great succour & ayde. Then the Prince and his company gaue the onset of the battaile of the Duke of Athens Constable of Fraunce, and there was many a man slaine and cast to the earth. And as the Frenche men fought in companies they cryed (Moune ioye Saint Dionice) and the Englishe men, Saint George. Anone the Prince with his companie met with the battaile of the Almaynes, whereof the Erle of Salesbruce, the Erle of Nosco, and the Erle Neydo were Capitaynes: But in a short space they were put to flight. The Archers shot so wholy together, that none durst come in their daungers, they slue many a man that could not come to raunsome, and the aforesayde three Erles were slaine, and diverse other knightes and Esquiers of their company. Then the Kinges battaile came on the Englishe men, there was a sore fight, and many a harde stroke both genen and receyued: The French king and his yongest sonne mette with the battaile of the Englishe Marshalles, the Erle of Warwike, and the Erle of Suffolke, and with them of Gascoynes, the Captall of Buz, the Lorde of Pomyers, the Lorde Amery of Charre, the Lorde of Mucident, the Lorde of Langram, and the Lorde de la Strade. To the Frenche partie there came time ynough, the Lorde Iohn of Landas, and the Lorde of Poytenynes.

Woodney, they alighted on foote, and wente into the kinges battaile. And a little besyde Duke of Athens, fought the Duke of Athens, constable of Fraunce, and a little aboue him the Duke of Duke of Burbon, Burbon, and many good Knightes of Burbonoys, and of Picardie with him. And a little on the other syde, there were the Poytenynes, the Lorde de Pons, the Lorde of Partney. the Lorde of Dampmar, the Lorde of Montabaton, the Lorde of Suggers, the Lorde Iohn Sayntre, the Lorde Argenton, the Lorde of Lymyers, the Lorde of Mountandre, and dyuers other: Also the Vicount of Rocheuart, and the Erle of Daunoy. And of Burgoyn, the Lord Iames of Beauieu, the Lorde de la Castell vileyn, and other. In another part there was the Erle of Vantadowre and of Mountpencer, the Lorde Iames of Burbone. the Lorde Iohn de Arthoys, and also the Lord Iames his brother, the Lord Arnold of Cernolle called the Archepriest, armed for the yong Erle of Alanson. And of Auuergne, there was the Lord Marcuell, the Lord de la Towre, the Lorde of Chalenton, the Lorde of Mountagew, the Lorde of Rocheford, the Lorde de la Chayre, the Lorde Dachone.

Lymosyn. Picardy.

Auuergne.

And of Limosin, there was the Lorde Delmall, the Lorde of Norwell, and the Lord of Pers Buffier. And of Picardie, there was the Lorde William of Nerle, the Lord Arnolde of Reinewall, the Lorde Geoffrey of Saint Digier, the Lorde of Chamy, the Lorde of Heley, the Lorde of Mounsaunt, the Lord of Hangies, and diuers other. And also in the kinges battaile was the Erle Douglas of Scotland, who fought a season right valiauntly: But when he sawe the discomfiture, he departed and saued himselfe, for in no wise he would be taken of the English men, he had rather haue bene slaine.

Lorde James Audeley.

On the English part the Lord Iames Audeley with the ayde of his foure squiers, fought alwayes in the chiefe of the battayle: he was sore hurt in the bodye and in the visage. but yet as long as his breth serued him, he fought. At the last towarde the ende of the battayle, hys foure squiers tooke and brought him out of the field, and layed him vnder a hedge side for to refreshe hym: and they vnarmed him, and bounde vp his woundes as well as they coulde.

John the French king.

On the French part, King Iohn was that day a full right good knight, if the fourth parte of his men had done theyr deuoyres as well as he did, the journey had bene his by all lykelyhood: howbeit they were all slaine and taken that were there, except a very fewe that were with the King, which saued themselues by flyeng.

French men slaine.

There were slaine the Duke Peter of Burbone, the Lorde Guysshard of Beauiewe. the Lorde of Landas, and the Duke of Athens Conestable of Fraunce, the Bishop of Chalons in Champeyne, the Lorde Wylliam of Neele, the Lorde Eustace of Rybamount. the Lorde de la Towre, the Lorde William of Mountagew, syr Guyuenton of Chambley, syr Baudryn de la house and many other as they fought by companies. And there were taken prisoners, the Lorde of Woodney, the Lorde of Pompador, and the Archepriest sore hurt, the Erle of Vandos, syr Loys of Melwall, the Lord Piers Buffier, and the Lord of Senetache: There were at that bront slaine and taken mo then two hundreth knightes.

French men taken.

This battayle was fought nere vnto Poyetiers in the fields of Beaumount and Malpertnes, the which was great and perillous, and manye worthie deedes of armes were there done that came not at all to my knowledge, sayth Froissart. The fighters on both partes endured muche trauaile and paine: King Iohn with his owne hands did that day like a valiant Prince, he had an Axe in his hande, wherewith he fought in the breaking of prease to have come to the Prince, very courageously and manfully. And nere vnto the French king was taken the Erle of Tankeruyll, Sir Iames of Burkon Erle of Ponthieu, and the Lorde Iohn of Arthores Erle of Ewe. And a little aboue that under the Banner of § Capitol of Buz was taken syr Charles of Arthoys, & divers other knightes and squires. The chace endured to the gates of Poytiers: There were manye slaine and beaten downe horse and man, for they of Poytiers had closed their gates, & would suffer none to enter: wherefore in the streete before the gate, was a great & horrible murther, and many men hurt and beaten downe: The Frenchmen yelded themselves as farre off as they might know an Englishman. There were divers Englishe Archers that had foure, five, or sixe prisoners, the Lorde of Pons a great Baron of Poyton was there slayne, and many other Knightes and squires. And there was taken the Erle of Rocheuart, the Lord of Damnauement, the Lorde of Pertney and of Xaynton, the Lord of Motendre and the Lord Saint Iohn: But he was so sore hurt that he neuer had helth after, he was accompted for one of the best knightes in Fraunce. And there was lefte for deade among other deade men, the Lorde Richard Dangle, who fought that daye by the king right valiauntly, and so did the Lord Charney, on whom was great prayse, because he bare the sourreigne Banner of the kinges; his awne Banner was also in the fielde, the which was Goules three Scotcheons Siluer.

So manye Englishmen and Gascoynes came to that parte, that perforce they opened the Kings battayle, so that the French men were mingled among their enemies, that some time there was five men vpon one Gentleman. There was taken the Lord of Pompadour, and the Lord Bartholemew de Brunes: and there was slaine Sir Geoffrey of Charney with the This Sir Geof-Kinges Banner in his handes. Also the Lorde Reynould Cobham slue the Erle of Dam- frey was he that martyn. Then was there great preassing to take the King, and suche as knewe him cryed vnto len Calyce. him and sayde, Sir, yeelde you, or else ye are but dead. At that tyme there was a Knight of Saint Omers retayned in wages with the King of Englande called syr Thomas Morbeck, who had served the King of Englande, five yeres before, because in his youth he had forfeyted the Realme of Fraunce for a murder that he did at Saint Omers. It happened so well for this Knight, that he was next to the King when they were about to take him, and he stepped forth into the prease, and by strength he came to the French King and sayde vnto him in good French (Sir yeelde you) the king behelde the knight and sayde vnto him, to whom shall I yeelde me? where is my Cosyn the Prince of Wales, if I myght see him I would speake with him, Sir Denyce aunswered and sayde, Sir he is not here, but yeelde you to me, and I will bring you to him: who be you quoth the king? Sir sayth he, I am Denyce of Morbeck, a Knight of Arthoys: But I serue the King of England, because I am banished the realme of Fraunce, and I have forfayted all that I had there: Then the king gaue him his right Gauntlet, sayeng I yeelde me vnto you. There was a great prease about The French the king, for everye man cryed that he had taken the King, so that the King coulde not go king is taken. forwarde wyth hys young sonne Philip wyth him for the prease.

The prince of Wales, who was courageous and cruell as a Lyon, toke that day great pleasure to fight and chase his enemies: The Lorde Iohn Chandos, who was with him of all that daye and neuer left him, nor neuer tooke heede of taking anye prisoner, at the ende of the battayle sayde to the Prince, Sir, it were good that you rested here, and set your Banner a high in this Bushe, that your people may draw hether, for they be sore scattered abrode, neyther can I see any mo Banners or Pennons on the French partie: wherefore syr, rest and refreshe you, for ye are sore chafed.

Then the princes Banner was set vp high on a Bushe, and Trumpets and Clarions beganne to sounde, and then the Prince did of his Basenet, and the Knightes for his body. and they of his Chamber were readie about him, and pight a Read paullion presently, and then drinke was brought vnto hym and to suche Lordes as were about him, who still encreased as they came from the chase, and their prisoners with them.

And when the two Marshalles were come to the Prince, he demaunded of them, and if they heard any tydings of the French king: and they aunswered and sayde, Sir we heare none of certaintie, but we thinke verily that he is eyther dead or taken, for he is not gone out of the battayles. Then the prince sayde to the Erle of Warwike, and to Sir Reignold of Cobham: Sirs I requyre you to go forth and hearken and inquire a truth, & returne agayne so soone as you can. These two Lordes tooke their horses and departed from the Prince, and roade vp a little hill to looke about them. And they perceaued a flocke of men of armes comming together right werily: There was the French King on foote in:

great perill, for Englishmen and Gascons were his masters, they had taken him from Sir Denyce Morbeck perforce, and such as were the strongest sayde, I have taken him, nay quoth another I have taken him, so they straue who should have him: Then the French King, to eschewe that perill, spake vnto them and sayde, Sirs, strive not, leade me and my sonne curteously to my Cosyn the prince, and fall not out for my taking, for I am so great a Lorde as maye make you all riche: the which wordes did somewhat pacefic them: howbeit, still as they went, they made ryot and brawled for the taking of the King.

When the aforesayde Lordes sawe and heard the noyes and strife amongest them, they came vnto them and sayde, Sirs, what is the matter that ye striue for: Sir sayde one of them, it is for the French King, who is here taken prisoner, and there are mo then. x. Knights and squires that challenge the taking of him and of his sonne: Then the two Lordes entered into the prease and caused every man to drawe a back, and commaunded them in the Princes name vpon paine of their heades to make no more noyes, nor to approche to the king any neerer, without they were commaunded. Then every man gave rome to the Lordes, and they alighted, and did their reverence vnto the king, and so brought him and his sonne quietly vnto the Prince of Wales.

Assone as the two Marshalles were departed from the Prince, as before you have heard; Then the Prince demaunded of the knights that were about him, whether any of them could tell him of the Lord Iames Audeley: and aunswere was made, that he was sore hurt, and lay in a Litter, not farre off. Nowe truely sayde the Prince, I am sory for his hurtes: But go knowe if he may be brought hether, or else I will go see him where he Then two knights came to the Lord Audley, and sayd, sir, the Prince hath earnestly asked for you, and is very desyrous to see you, and sayth that if you cannot come to him, he will come to you. A syr quoth the knight, I thanke the prince that will thinke on so poore a Knight as I am. And then he called. viii, of his seruauntes to beare him in his Litter to the place where the Prince was. Then the Prince tooke him in his armes and kissed him, and made to him most louving countenaunce, and great cheere (and sayd) sir Iames I ought greatly to honour you, for by your valyantnes ye have this day obteyned the commendation and fame by all our judgements to be the most valiant knight of all other that fought at this battaile. O Sir, sayde the knight, ye say your pleasure, I would it were so, but if I have this day put foorth my selfe in your service (and for the accomplishement of the vowe that before I had made) it ought not to be reputed to my prowes or force, but to dutie. Sir Iames, sayd the Prince, I and all ours repute and declare you in this battaile to be the best doer in Armes: And to the entent to furnishe you the better in the warres, and to encourage you to follow the same, I retaine you for euer to be my knight with fiue hundreth markes of yerely reuenewes, the which I will assigne you out of myne inheritance in England. Sir sayde the knight God make me able to deserue the great goodnesse that ye shew me, and so he tooke his leaue of the Prince, for he was very weake.

The bountifull reward of a Prince.

So soone as sir Iames Lorde Audeley was brought to his lodgyng, he sent for sir Peter Audeley his brother, and for the Lorde Bartholomewe of Brunes, the Lorde Stephen of Gouseton, the Lord of Wylly, and the Lord Raufe Ferrers: All these were of his Linage. And he called before them his foure Esquiers that had served him that day so well and truly: And then he sayde to the Lordes: Where it hath pleased my Lorde the Prince to geue me this day. v. C. Markes of yerely revenewes, for the which gift I have done him small service with my body: Sirs, sayde he to the Lordes, beholde here these foure Esquiers, who have alwayes served me truly, and specially thys day, for the honour that I have, is by their valiantnesse, and therefore I am bound to reward them. Wherefore, here before you all, I geue and resigne into their handes the gift that my Lorde Prince hath geuen me of five hundreth markes of yerely revenewes, to them and to their heyres for ever, in like manner as it was geven me, and I cleerely disenherite my selfe thereof, and enherite them to hold the same, without any variannee or contradiction.

A noble & liberal knight.

The Lordes and other that were present, every of them behelde other, and sayde among themselves, this commeth of a noble and valiant courage, thus to depart with so great a gift: and they aunswered him with one voyce, Sir, be it as God will, we will beare witnesse in this behalfe, when & whersoeuer we become, and so they tooke their leave and departed.

The next day as the king departed and was going in his journey, it was tolde the king howe the Lorde Audeley had geuen to his foure Esquiers the gift of the fiue hundred Markes that he had geven vnto him. Then the Prince sent for him, and he was brought vnto the Prince in his Litter, who recevued him right curteously (and sayde) Sir Iames, we have knowledge that the revenewes that we gave you, assoone as ye came to your lodgyng, ye gaue the same to foure Esquiers: We would know why ye did so, and whether ye thought the gift sufficient and worthie for you or not? Sir sayde the knight, it is of truth that I have geven it to them, and I will ofter vnto you the cause why I did so: Those foure Esquiers have of long tyme served me well and truely in many great daungers: And Sir at this tyme, they served me in such wise, that if they had never done any thing else, I was and am bound towardes them, and before this day they never had any thing of me in rewarde. And Sir, as ye know, I was and am but a man alone, but by the courage, ayde, and comfort of them, I tooke on me to accomplishe my vowe to you before rehersed, and certeinely I had bene deade in the battayle if they had not beene. Wherefore sir, when as nature and ductye dyd binde me to consider the loue that they bare vnto me, I should have shewed my selfe to muche vnthankefull if I had not rewarded them: And God I thanke him, I have and shall have inough to mainteine my poore estate, as long as I live, and I feare nothing lesse then lacke of substance. And forasmuch as I have done this without your licence and knowledge, I humbly beseech you to pardon me, and Sir be you well assured, that both I and my Esquiers, will serue you as well and as truely as cuer we did.

Then the Prince sayd, Sir Iames, I must needes commend you very much in all your doings, chiefely for your valiantnes shewed in this battaile: and for the good service of A noble and grathese Esquiers, whome ye have so much praysed, I agree and allowe to them your gift, and cious prince. I will render againe to you sixe C. markes in the lyke maner as ye had the other graunted vnto you before.

Thus this battaile ended as you have heard, which was fought the xxij. day of September two leagues from Poytiers. And it beganne in the morning, and ended at noone: But as then the Englishmen were not returned from the chase of their enimies. Therefore, as ye haue heard, the Princes Banner stood in a bushe to drawe all his men together, but it was night before all came from the chace. And as it was reported, there were slaine al the Flowre and chiualrie of Fraunce. And there was taken with the King and the Lord Philip his sonne. xvij. Erles, beside Barons, knights, and squiers, and there were slaine. v. or. vj. thousand one and other.

When enery man was come from the chace, they had as manye prisoners as the whole armie of the Englishmen were twise in number. Wherefore it was agreed and concluded among them, because of the great charge and doubt to keepe so many prisoners, that they should put manye of them to raunsome incontinent in the fielde, and so they did. the prisoners founde the Englishmen and Gascons right curteous and gentle vnto them. And all that night the prince with his armie and prisoners laye in the fielde, and euery manne made good cheere vnto his prisoner, for that day whosoeuer tooke any prisoner, he was cleere his, and might quyte and raunsome him at his pleasure.

All suche as were at this battayle, were all made riche with honour and goodes, as well Anotable vicby raunsoming of prisoners, as by wynning of Colde, Silver, plate, and Iewels, that was tork. there found in the spoyle. There was no man that did set anye thing by riche harneys, whereof there was great plentye, for the Frenchmen came thether very richly besene, wenyug to have obteyned the glorie of that iourney.

When night came, the prince made to the French King and his sonne, and to the other Lordes that were taken prisoners, a supper. And first the Prince placed the French king and his sonne, the Lorde Iames of Burbone, the Lorde Iohn de Arthoys, the Erle of Tankeruyll, the Erle of Stampes, the Erle of Dampmartyn, the Erle of Grauyll, and the Lorde of Partenay to sit all at one borde, and other Lordes knightes and squires at other Tables. And the prince himselfe served all that supper time, neyther woulde he sit downe for no request that the French king coulde make vnto him: For he sayde, he was not meete to sit at that table with so great and high a prince as the French King was. And then he sayde to the King. Sir for Gods sake be not sad nor shewe not anye heavie countenaunce, for though God thys daye hath not consented to follow your will: yet Sir surely the King my father I dare boldely say will be are you so much honor and amitie as he maye doe, and I doubt nothing but that ye shall so reasonably accorde and agree, that ye shall be friendes for euer together. And syromee thinketh that ye ought to reioyce, though the journey be not as ye woulde haue had it, for this daye ye haue wonne the high renowne of Prowes, and haue this daye in valyauntnesse exceeded all other of your partie. Sir, I speake not this to mock you, for all that be on oure partie and sawe every mannes deedes, doe plainely agree and conclude in one sentence to geue you the Chapelet. Therewith the French men beganne to muttor, and sayde among themselves, the prince had spoken nobly, and by all conjectures he was lyke to probe a noble and worthie prince, if God did sende him lyfe.

When supper was done, every man went to his lodging with their prisoners, the next daye in the morning when every thing was readie trussed vp, then they tooke their horses and roade towardes Poytiers. The same night there was come to Poytiers the Lord of Roy with an hundred speares he was not at the battail, but he met the Duke of Normandy nere to Chauvigny, and the Duke sent him to Poytiers to keepe the towne, vntill they heard other tydinges.

When the Lorde of Roye knewe that the English men were comming so nere the Citie: he caused euerie man to be armed, and euery man to go to his defence to the walles, Towres and gates: and the Englishmen passed by without anye approchyng, for they were so laden with Golde, Siluer, plate, Iewels and prisoners that in their returning they assauted no fortes.

They thought it much if they coulde bring the French King and other prisoners with all their spoyle in safetie to Burdeaux. And they roade but small journeyes because of their prisoners and caryages, so that they roade in a whole daye not past foure or five leagues at the most, and lodged euer betimes, and roade close together in good aray, sauyng the Marshalles battayles, who roade euer before with five hundred men of armes to open the passages as the Prince should passe. But they met with no encounterers, for every man was so afrayde that they were fled to the Fortresses.

Thus the Prince and his company did so muche, that they passed thorough Poyteau and Xaynton without dammage, and came to Blay, and there passed the ryuer of Geron, & arryued in the good City of Bourdeaux.

It cannot be expressed what great feastyng and cheere they of the Citie and the Clergie made to the Prince, and how honorably they were there receased. The prince brought the French king into the Abbey of Saint Androws, and there they lodged both, the King in the one parte and the prince in the other.

And here were many chaloners of the French King to be their prisoner; But in the ende, partly by the confession of the French king, and partly by right of armes and tokens shewed by Sir Denyce Morbeck, it was thought his right: but notwithstandyng for the appeasing of all thinges the prince differred the iudgement of the matter to his father the king, when they shoulde come into Englande. And yet in the meane season, the prince secretly caused two thousande Nobles to be delyuered to Syr Denyce Morbeck to maintaine his estate.

In England when newes came of the victorie of the battaile of Poyters, and of the Great ioy made taking of the French king, there was great ioy and gladnesse, and great solemnities were in England for the taking of the made in all churches, Cities, and Townes, throughout all the Realme.

Nowe approched the tyme that the Prince of Wales had made prouision of Ships and furniture to the same, for the conveyaunce and bringing over of the French king, and his other Prisoners into England. And when he had all thynges in a redinesse, he called wales returneth the Lorde Dalbert, the Lorde Musident, the Lorde Laspare, the Lorde of Dalbert wales returneth vnto him the Lorde Dalbert, the Lorde Musident, the Lorde Laspare, the Lorde of Pu-into English with nyers, and the Lorde of Rosen, and gaue them commaundement to kepe the Countrie there and his other vntill his returne againe.

French king.

Then he tooke the Sea, and certaine Lordes of Gascoyne with him. The Frenche king was in a vessell by himselfe to be the more at his case, and was accompanyed with two hundreth men of armes, and two thousand Archers. For it was shewed the Prince that the three Estates, by whome the Realme of Fraunce was governed, had layde in Normandye, and Crotoye two great armyes, to the entent to meete with him, and to get the Frenche king out of his handes if they might. But there appeared no such matter, and yet they were on the sea. xj. dayes, and on the. xij. day they arryued at Sandwich. The French king landeth at Sand-landeth at Sand-l Then they issued out of their Ship, and landed and lay there all that night, and taryed wich. there two dayes after to refreshe them: And on the thirde day they roade to Cauntorbury.

When the king of England knewe of their commyng, he commaunded the Citezens of London to prepare themselves and their Citie, and to make the same seemely and meete to receive such a man as the French king was, which the Citezens of London did accordyngly.

And from Cauntorbury they came to Rochester, and there targed a day, and from Nochester to Dartford, and there targed a day, and from thence the next day to Lordon. where they were honourably received, and so they were in every good towns as the passed.

The French king roade through London on a white Courser well apparely Prince on a little blacke Hobby by him. Thus the French king was conveyed are... Citie vntill he came to the Sauoy, the which house apperteyned to the heritage of the Duke of Lancaster. And there the French king kept his house a long, season, and often tymes the king and Queene came thether to see him, and made him great feastyng and cheere.

Soone after by the commaundement of Pope Innocent the sixt, there came into Eng- An Ambassade lande the Lorde Taylleran, Cardinall of Piergort, and the Lorde Nicholas, Cardinall of sat from the Pope to intreate Dargell. They treated for a peace betweene the two kinges, but nothing came to effect; a peace, But yet at the last a truce betwene the two kinges & all their assistentes was concluded for to endure vnto the feast of Saint Iohn baptist. 1359, that is to say, for three yeres. And out of this truce was excepted the Lorde Philip of Nauerre and his alyes, the Countesse of Mountford, and the Duchie of Britaine.

Anone after, the French king was removed from the Sauoy vnto the Castell of Windsore, and all his householde, and went on huntyng and hawking there at his pleasure, and the Lorde Philip his sonne with him: but all the other prisoners abode stil at London, and yet went to see the king at their pleasure, and were receyued onely vpon their faythes.

In the latter ende of this yere, sayth Fabian, the king did holde a royall Iustes in A lustes holden Smithfielde in London, and many a noble feate of Armes was there done to the great honour of the king and of all the realme of England. At the which disport were present, the king of England, and the French king and the king of Scottes his prisoners, with many noble Estates of all the three prounces or Kingdomes: whereof the greater number of the straungers were then prisoners.

Ye have heard before of the taking of the king of Scottes prisoner, by the Queene in the tyme that king Edward was occupied about the siege of Calice, which now was. xj.

veres past and more. And so soone as the aforesayde Cardinalles had concluded a truce betweene the king of England and the French king, they also accompanied with the bishop French king and of Saint Andrewes in Scotland, fell to a treatie with the king of England, for the deliverance of the king of Scottes. And the same was concluded in this maner.

> That the king of Scottes should neuer after arme him selfe against the king of England in his realme, nor counsayle, nor consent to any of his subjectes to arme them, nor to grieue nor make warre against England.

Also the king of Scottes after his returne into his realme, should endeuour himselfe with all diligence that his people should agree, that the realme of Scotland should holde in fee, and do homage to the king of England. And if the realme would not agree therevnto: Yet the king of Scottes to swere solemply to keepe good peace with the king of Englande, and to binde himselfe and his Realme to paye within. x. yeres after, five hundreth thousande Nobles as Froissart sayth: But Fabian sayth one hundreth thousand And at the sommoning of the king of England, to sende good pledges and hostages for the same: as the Erle of Douglas, the Erle of Moret, the Erle of Mare, the Erle of Surlant, the Erle of Fife, the Baron of Versey, and Sir William of Caumoyse. And all these to abide in England as prisoners and hostages for the king their Lorde, vnto the tyme that the seuerall paymentes of the money aforesayd were fully contented and payde.

Of these ordinaunces and bondes, were made instrumentes publiques, and letters pa-tentes, sealed by both the kinges.

When all these thinges were ordered and done, then the Scottish king departed and went into his realme, & his wife Queene Isabell sister to king Edward, with him. he came within his realme, he was honorably receyued, and he lay at Saint Iohns towne vpon the ryuer of Trye, while his Castell of Edenbourgh was newly reedified.

Now before the day of the truce last concluded with Fraunce, were fully expired, the warre was newely begon. But anone after that, a peace was made betweene the king of Nauarre, and the Duke of Normandy.

And in this tyme the king of Englande and the Prince his sonne, the French king, and the Lord Iaques of Burbon met at London, & they foure beyng alone together in counsaile, agreed vpon a peace vpon certein articles written in a letter, and sent the same into Fraunce to the Duke of Normandie. When the Duke had received these letters, he demaunded counsaile of the king of Nauerre who then was present with him, and he counthe king of Eng. sayled him that the Prelates and Nobles of Fraunce, and the good townes should assemble themselves, and to say their mindes therein: the which thing was done. And it seemed to the king of Nauarre, and to the Duke, and to his, and to all the counsayle of the Realine, that the sayde treatie was to grieuous to be borne: Wherefore they aunswered all with one voyce, that the peace and condicions coteyned in that letter, was so prejudicial to them & to the realme, that they yet would endure greater mischiefe then they had done, rather then in such wise to minish and abace the state of Fraunce: and sayd also that they would rather suffer their king to lie still in England.

And when the French king vnderstood howe the Realme of Fraunce would not agree to his appointment he sayd. A sonne Charles: ye be counsayled by the king of Nauarre.

who deceaueth you, and will deceaue suche. xl. as you be.

A noble and courageous Prince.

And when the King of Englande knew what aunswere was brought, he sayde: Before Winter be past I will enter into Fraunce, in puyssaunt and valyaunt maner, and there will abyde so long tyll I haue an ende of thys warre, or else peace at my pleasure and to myne honour, and then he made the greatest prouision for warre, that euer he made.

The same season, about the middes of August, the Lorde Iohn of Craon Archebishop of Reynes, and they of the Citie of Paris, and of the Countrie thereabout, with certaine knightes and squires of the Countrie of Rochell and Laon, went and layde siege to the Castell of Roucy, and there laye fyue weekes. And then they within yeelded up their lyues and goodes saued, and to go whether they list.

And of this they had letters patents sealed by the Archbishop, by the Erle Porcien and the Erle of Brayne: But for all that, when they departed, the commons that were there, rose against them and slue the most parte of them, for all the Lordes, and they had much paine to save the Captaine called Hankyn Frauncoys. And thus the Erle of Roucy had agavne his awne Castell.

And in this time (sayth Fabian) Sir Robert Knolles and Sir Iames Pipe Englishmen Sir Robert warred in Briteyne, and with the helpe of one Thomlyn Fowlke, they came earely in a Knolles. Sir morning vnto a towne that was nere vnto Ancore called Kegennez, which then was in the Thomlyn rule of the Englishmen and out of that towne they tooke more strength and went streight Foulke. to Ancore being within two English myles, and scaled the walles with ladders, and quit them so manfully that they had the rule of the towne before the Sunne rysing. And in that Ancore taken. Castell was taken prisoner Sir Guyllam de Chalyn the sonne of the Erle of Ancerre, his wyfe and many other:

In taking of which towne and Castell, few were slayne, howbeit there came of armed men aboue to thousand to defend the towne, but it was taken before they came. Then the Englishmen searched so neere, that as the common report went, they founde Iewels as though they had bene privile to the hyding of them, and they were of great value: Among the which they found certaine skinnes of Furres which were valued at. v. M. Mot- Mottons of tons of Gold.

The Motton of Golde was a covne vsed in Fraunce and Briteyn, and is of the value of fine shyllings sterlyng.

When the Englishmen had pilled and spoyled the towne by the space of viii, dayes, and raunsomed such as were of substaunce: Then they shewed vnto the rulers of the towne, that they would set it on fyre, except they would geue vnto them a certayne some of money. For the which the rulers, after conference had among themselves, agreed to geue the English Capitaines, xl. thousand Mottons and. lx. pearles valued at ten thousande Mottons, the which fiftie thousand Mottons amounted neere vnto, xij, thousand and fiue hundred pounde sterling.

The king of Englande in all this time made his provision for his voyage into Fraunce, suche and so great as had not beene sene before: For he had sent into Almain to al the Lordes of the Empire that served him before, and they came at their daye appointed vnto Calice, and there came a great number mo then were required, for they came of themselves, vpon hope and gayne of the spoyle of Fraunce, and they taried for the king, from the beginning of August vntill October followyng. And to saye truth, they taried so long, that by reason victuals waxed skant and dere there were many of them that were fayne to sell the best Iewels they had. Then the king of Englande sent ouer before the Duke of Lancaster with foure hundred speares and two thousande Archers. And when the Duke came to Calice, the Lordes that were straungers made great joy and were glad of him, and demaunded tydinges of the Kinges comming. The Duke excused the king and sayde that all his provision was not full readye: and he sayde vnto them, gentle lordes to tarie here is to no purpose, I will ryde forth into Fraunce and see what we can finde there, and I pray you to ryde forth with The Duke of me, and I will delyuer you a certaine some of money to pay your costes in your lodgings, Lancaster with and ye shall have furniture of victuall to carie with you. And the Lordes graunted the gers entereth Duke, and so roade foorth and passed by Saint Omers, they were a two thousande speares. into Fraunce. beside Archers and other footemen, and at the last came to Mount Eloy a good Abbey and a riche neere to Arras, and there taried foure dayes to refreshe them and their horses. From thence they went to Cambrey and there made a great assault, but they within defended themselves valiauntly by the ayde and comfort of the Erle of Saint Paule. And when the Englishmen sawe that nothing was there to be had, they departed and went ouer the ryuer of Some, and came to a Towne called Cheresey, where they founde great plentie of Bread and Wyne. And here the Duke had knowledge that the king was arryued at Calice, who had sent him worde that he and all his companie should come back agayne to him. And then the Duke and his companie returned toward Calice & met with the king by the way, within four leagues of Calice. And with the king were a great company of Lordes both straungers and other, whose names I ouerpasse. And when the king and the Duke and all their companie were met, the company was so great, that all the Countrie was couered with them. And there the Almaynes, Mercenaries, Brabanters. Behennoys, they altogether shewed vnto the King how they had spent all their goodes. horses and harnesses solde. So that little or nothing was left them to doe him service, for which purpose they came: neyther had they wherwith to beare their charges home agayno into their countries, wherefore they desyred his noblenesse to have some consideration of them. The king aunswered and sayd, how he was not as then readie to geue them a playne aunswere: But sayde, Sirs, I thinke ye be sore trauayled, wherefore go your wayes and refreshe you two or three dayes in Calice, and this night or to morow I will take counsayle and send you such an aunswere that of reason ye will be content withall.

Then these straungers departed from the king and from the Duke, and roade towarde Calice, and they had not ryd halfe a league, but they met a great multitude of cariages. And after them came the Prince of Wales, nobly and richely besene and all his company: whereof there were such a number, that all the Countrey was couered with them. And the Prince roade a soft pace readie raunged in battaile, as though they should incontinent haue fought. Thus the prince roade ever a league or two after the kinges hoste, and ever the cariages went betweene both the hostes, the which order the straungers lyked mer-

When these straungers had well behelde this company, and had reverently saluted the prince and suche Lordes as were with him, and the prince louingly receaued them, as he coulde doe it right well. Then in taking their leave of him, they shewed him their ne-cessitie, desyring him to consyder of them, and he promised them so to doe.

So the straungers roade on vntill they came to Calice, and the second day after the king sent them their aunswere by three worthy knights, which was that the king had not brought sufficient treasure with him to pay all that they desyred, and also to performe the enterprice that he hath taken in hand: But if they would go foorth with him, and to take such fortune as shall happen, good or euill, they to have their parte: So that they demaunded no wages, neyther allowaunce for horse nor expence, nor any dammage that they may happen to have: For sayd they, the king hath brought men enough out of his realme to furnishe his enterprice.

This aunswere pleased not greatly the straunge Lordes, and the companye that were about them: Howbeit, they could have none other, but yet the king of his goodnesse gave them a somme of money to bring them home. Howbeit, some of them went agains to the king & serued at their aduenture.

The order that the king toke in England before his departure. And before the king departed Englande, he tooke this order: First he caused all the Lordes of Fraunce that were Prisoners, to be put into divers Castelles, and other sure places. And the French king was committed to the Tower of London, and his yong sonne with him, and kept close: And then placed certaine Lordes for the safe keping & good government of the realme.

The maner and order of the kinges battaile.

But to returne, the kyng passed forward, having his Constable the Erle of Marche before him, which had in his battaile five hundreth Knightes, and athousand Archers.

Then followed the king, who had in his battaile three thousand men of armes, and fine thousand Archers, well trimmed, and in good order.

Then came all the cariages, the which conteyned two leagues in length, and they caryed with them, hande Milles, Ouens to bake in, and forges for Iron, and other necessaryes.

Then

Then followed the Princes battaile and of his brethren, wherein were a thousand speares nobly horssed, and richely besene in order, ready to fight.

And in the end of the Kinges battaile, there were. v. C. Verlettes wyth Mattockes and Axes, to make even the wayes for the carvages to passe.

The king thus passed forward into Fraunce with his armie, and at the last came to Reynes besieged. Reynes, where he layde siege seuen weekes, but could not preuaile, and so passed to Paris, and from thence to Charters, sore spoylyng, brennyng, and destroiyng the Countrie as he went, & likewise did the prince his sonne with his battaile. So that the Countrie of Fraunce was so greatly wasted, spoyled and decayed, that they were glad to seeke for peace. And at the last by the speciall labour of a Frier called Symond of Langres, Symond of L and was also a Legate from the Pope, a day of entreatie was appoynted, and a place of metyng for the same.

And at the sayde day and place, there came for the king of England, the Duke of Lan- An intreatic and caster, the Erles of Warwike, and of Northhampton, with sir Iohn Chandos, sir Gual-communication ter of Manny, and sir William Cheyney knightes.

And for the Regent of Fraunce appeared there, the Lorde Fewe Constable of Fraunce, the Lorde Bociquant then Marshall of Fraunce, the Lord of Saranciers, the Lord Vigney of the Countrie of Vienne, sir Symond Bucy, sir Guichard of Anglie knightes, the which treatie came to none effect.

And there came vnto the king to a place called Dones, the Bishop of Beauuays then Chauncelor of Normandy, with other, and so behaued themselues vnto the king, that a newe day of treatie was appointed to be holden at Bretynguy within a Myle of Charters, vpon the first day of May then next ensuying.

At which day of appoyntment, the aforesayde Duke of Lancaster, with the sayd Erles of Warwike, and Northhampton, and other, appeared at the same place for king Edward.

And for the Regent there appeared the aforenamed Bishop with many other Lordes and Knightes, and Spiritual men, to the number of, xxij, personnes, whose names I ouerpasse for length of tyme.

These personnes applied them so diligently, that within the space of. viij. dayes they Apeace concluagreed vpon an vnitie and peace, the which was comprised in. xli. articles, the effect ded.

1 First the king of England and his heyres kings, with all the landes that he then had The some and in Gascoyne, and Guyan, should have to him and to his heyres for euer, the Citie and effect of the ar-Castell of Poytiers with all the appurtenaunces to that Lordship belongyng. Also the in the peace. Citie of Limoges, with all the landes of Limosyn, and all other their appurtenaunces. The Citie and Castell of Pirigort, with all the landes and revenewes to the same Lordeship belongyng. The Erledome of Bygort, with all that therevnto belongeth, the Erledome of Poytiau, with all the appurtenaunces: the Seigniory of Beluyle, the Lordeship. of Exanctes, Exauchour and Exancon, the Cities of Agen, Agencys, and of Caours, and Lordeshippe of Caoursyn. The Cities of Tharbe, of Gaure, Angolesma, of Rodes, and of Rauerne. The Lordship of Mounstrell, with all the reuenewes therevnto belongyng. The seigniory of Calice, Marguise, of Sandgate & Coligne. The Lordship of Hammes, of Wales and of Ouy. The Erledome of Guynes, with all the profites thervnto belongyng. All which Lordshippes, honoures, Castelles, Towres, Citie, and Townes, king Edward the thirde and his heyres should have and holde for evermore, in as royall wyse and like maner as have done the kings of Fraunce, without doyng for them any homage, fealtie, or other duetic.

2 And the sayd king Edward after that day, for him and his heyres kinges of England, The king here should cleerely renounce and gene ouer all his title, right, and interest that he had vnto the name of the the Crowne of Fraunce, and specially the name of the king of Fraunce.

3 Also all his right that he had to the Duchie of Normandie, of Thoraine, of Aniow, himselfe by than of Britaine, and of the souereintie of the Erledome of Flaundyrs, and of all other Lordships, Cities, Castels, honours, Townes or Towres, that anye king of Englande before that day had any right vnto within the realme of Fraunce: and to holde him content with the abouenamed Lordeshippes, without any further claime.

4 Furthermore it was agreed that the Frenche king shoulde pay for hys raunsome three Millions of Scutes of Golde, whereof two should alwaye make a noble Englishe, the which do come vnto sterlyng money, fyue hundreth thousand pound.

Of the which three Millions of Scutes, ten hundreth thousand, which is one Million, to be payed at Calice the first day of Iune next following the sayde treatie. And another Million to be payde at the sayd towns of Calice within, viij. Monethes after the French king was come to Calice. And the thirde Million, to be payde at London in two yeres and a halfe, that is to say, at Mighelmas come a yere after the agreement, four hundreth thousande Scutes: And at Mighelmasse next after ensuying, four hundreth thousande Scutes: And at Easter following two hundreth thousande Scutes, in full payment of the three Millions, or. xxx. C. thousand Scutes.

5 And further it was agreed that after the French king was come to Calice, he should rest him there foure Monethes: Whereof the first Moneth should be at the charge of king Edward, and the other three Monethes to be at the cost and charge of the sayd Freuch king, and to pay for every of the sayd three Monethes, ten thousand Royalles of Fraunce, which at that tyme were in value every Royall. xxj. pence, and so a Monethes charge after the accoumpt of our money was. viij. C. lxxv. pound.

And it was also agreed, that Iohn the French king for the tyme, nor any king of Fraunce after him should ayde or assist the Scottes against king Edward, nor against his heyres kinges of Englande. Neyther shall king Edward nor his heyres kinges, allie them with the Fleminges, nor ayde nor assist them agaynst the sayd king Iohn, nor his heyres kinges of Fraunce.

6 And for the title and right of the Duchy of Briteyn, which was in question betweene the Erles of Bloys and of Mountforde, it was agreed that both the Kinges beyng at Calice, the sayde parties should be called before them. And it a peace betweene them by the two kings might not be set, then the sayde kinges to assigne certaine indifferent persons to agree the sayde Erles, and they to have halfe a yere of respite for to quiet the matter. And if the sayde persons so by the two kinges assigned, could not agree the sayde Erles by the time aforewayde: That then eyther of the sayde Erles to make the best provision for himselfe with the helpe of his friendes or otherwise, whereby they might attayne to their right and clayme of the sayde Duchy.

7 Prouyded alwayes, that neyther of the sayd kinges, nor anye of their sonnes shall ayde or assist any of the sayde Erles, by reason whereof the peace between them agreed might be losed or broken. And it is also further prouided, that vnto whether of the sayd two Erles the sayd Duchy shall fall by sentence of man or otherwise, that the homage of it shall alwayes be done to the Frenche King.

All which ordynances and agreements, with many mo that would aske long leasure to write, were ratefied and confirmed by the instruments and seales of the prince of Wales, vpon the party of king Edward for Englands partie, and by Charles Regent of Fraunce for that partie, as by their letters patents and their seales then sealed appered, bearyng date that one at Louuers in Normandye the. xvj. day of May, and that other at Paris the tenth daye of the sayde Moneth and yere.

And moreouer, eyther of the sayd two princes, that is to saye Edward prince of Wales was sworne in the presence of. vj. French knightes vpon the Sacrament of the Aultar after the thirde Agnus was sayde in time of a low Masse, at the foresayde Louuers, song or sayde, that he to the vttermost of hys power shoulde vpholde and keepe the aforesayde peace in euery point, as farre as in him was. And in lyke maner was Charles then Regent of Fraunce sworne in the presence of. vj. English knights to performe the same.

After which treatie thus finished and ended, king Edward with hys sonnes and Nobles of Englande tooke shypping at Homflet in Normandy the twentie day of Maye, and sayled into Englande, leauying behinde hym the Erle of Warwike for to guyde the Englishmen that remayned in Guyan and other places, & to see that peace which was then proclaymed thorough France were kept & not broken by them, which for al that endured not long.

And in thys time of king Edwards being in Fraunce, John the French king and his sonne, who were in the Tower of London, did at the returne of king Edward feast him and all his Lords in the sayd Towre of London, and then peace was proclaymed, and the Peace proclayme French King set at his libertie.

The eyght day of the Moneth of Iulie next ensuying, the French King landed at Calice The French and was lodged in the Castell, and there taried the comming of King Edwarde.

The, ix, day of October king Edward arryued at Calice, and went streight vnto the King Edward Castell to visite king Iohn, which welcommed him with a louing and friendly countenaunce, arryueth at Caand when the King should departe to his lodging into the towne, the French King required him, that he with hys sonnes would dyne with him the morow following, which the king graunted. At which dynner the king was first set and kept the estate, and then secondarily the French king sate: Thirdely the prince of Wales, and fourthly the Duke of Lancaster, and no mo at that table. In the time of which dynner came to the Castle the Erle of Flaundyrs, whome the French king welcomed in most louing maner.

And when the sayde dyner with all honor was ended, two of the kings sonnes of England, and two of the French kinges sonnes, tooke leaue of their fathers, and roade toward Boleyne, where at that time the Regent of Fraunce was. The which met them in the mid waye betweene Calice and Boleyne, and so conueyghed them vnto Boleyn, and rested there with them that night. And vpon the morow the Regent himselfe came to Calice to hys father, and after his father and he came both to the kinges palace to dyner. whome king Edward receased with much love and honour, and made vnto them a sump-

And after two dayes, the Regent departed from Calice and returned vnto Boleyne, and the two sonnes of king Edward returned from Boleyne to Calice.

The. xxiiij. day of October next following, both the kinges being in two trauerses, and in one Chapel at Calice, a Masse was sayde before them, to the offering of which Masse neither of them came. But when the Paxe was borne first to the French king, and then to king Edward, and eyther of them refused to kisse it first: The French king roase vp and came toward king Edward: wherof he beyng aware, roase vp and met with him, and refused the Paxe, and eyther kissed other. At the which masse, eyther of them was solemply sworne to maintaine the articles of the sayde peace. And for more assuraunce of the same, many Lordes vpon both parties were also sworne, to maintaine the same to their powers.

The cause that the French king thus solourned at Calice, as before it was agreed, was for the discharge of the first payment of his raunsome, and also for the deliuerie of certaine townes which yet the Englishmen had not in possession.

The next day after the takyng of the aforesayd othe by the two kinges, that was the xxv. day of October, the French king was freely deliuered, and then he departed from Calice, and roade toward Boleyn: Whome king Edward conueyed a myle vpon his way, at which myles ende they departed with kissing, and other louing maner: And Prince Edward kept on his way with the French king, and so conueyed him to Boleyn, where he tarved that night. And vpon the morow the sayde Prince Edward and Charles Duke of Normandie, with the Erle of Estampes and other noble men there then beyng present, were againe sworne to mainteyne and holde the sayde peace, without fraud, colour, or deceyt. And that done, the sayde Prince takyng his leaue, returned that night to Calice. And so it may may appeare vnto you that king Iohn stood as prisoner by the space of foure yeres, and more. And after King Edwarde had dispatched all his businesse at Calice, he returned into England. But before the king came from Calice, he sent into England such hostages WOL. I.

as the French king had left for the performance of y Articles conteined in the last peace, and the names of the hostages were these, as follows.

Philip Duke of Orleaunce sometymeson to king Philip of Fraunce, and also his two Nephewes.

The Duke of Aniowe. The Duke of Berry.

The Duke of Burbon.

The Erle of Alanson.

The Lorde Iohn of Stampes.
Guy of Bloys Erle of that Countie.

Lewes of Bloys his brother.

The Erle of Saint Paule.
The Erle of Harecourt.

The Erle Daulphyn of Aluergne.

Sir Ingram Lorde Cowcy.

The Erle of Porceu.
The Erle of Breme.
The Lorde Momorency.
The Lorde Roye.
The Lorde of Peaux.
The Lorde of Stoutuyle.
The Lorde of Swenaunt.

The Lorde of Towre.

The Lorde of Auergne, and diners other Lordes and Knightes: Besydes these there were two or thre of the best Citizens of euery of the best Cities of Fraunce.

And all these the king sent ouer, and commissions also that they should be well vsed and intreated, the which was well observed: for they passed their tyme in the Citie of London, and about where they woulde, even as they would themselvs. And shortly after king Edward returned into Englande.

And in this yere the Lady Elizabeth daughter to the Erle of Gloucester reedefied Vniuersitie Hall in Cambridge, which had beene consumed with fyre, and named it Clare hall.

Sone after the returne of the Frenche king into Fraunce, there were generally throughout all Fraunce, sundrie companies went together robbyng and spoylyng the Countrie, and they were called the Companions. And the number of them so encreased, that they could be none otherwise subdued, but by a strong army: But they so preuayled against the french kings power and did so much mischiefe in Fraunce, that it was sayde and affirmed, that they did more harme then all the warres that England had with Fraunce. And truely before they were suppressed, it cost many a man his life. The number of them as sayth Froyssart, at the first were foure thousand, and after increased to ten thousand, and so to. xx. thousande, and. xxx. thousande and mo. The occasion of their beginnyng, as is alleged in the French Chronicle, was the warres of England, who made such a spoyle and destruction in Fraunce, by brennyng of Villages and otherwise, that the husbandmen and their seruauntes, and other labouryng men entered into an ydlenesse, and so flocked in companies: whereof sprang these Companions.

And in this yere (as sayth Fabian) was a great dearth in England, both of men and beastes, duryng the which tyme the noble duke Henry of Lancaster dyed. And after his death Sir Iohn of Gaunt Erle of Richemond the kinges third sonne, which had maryed the sayd Dukes daughter, was made Duke of that Duchie. And in this tyme Iohn Wiclife did read the divinitie Lecture in Oxforde.

This yere the Frenche king, bearyng great loue and fauor to king Edward and to the Queene his wife, and to their children, came into England to visite them, and to make mery with them, and the. xxiiij. day of Ianuary, he came to Eltham, where then the king and Queene was, and there dined, and after dinner the king conueyed him most honourably through the Citie of London vnto the Sauoye: where he lay vntill the begynnyng of Marche next folowyng, and then a grieuous sicknesse tooke him, of the which he dyed the viij. day of Aprill next folowyng. 1363. and after was caryed into Frauce, and was buryed at Saint Dionise besyde Paris.

And this yere king Edward created Lionell his sonne Duke of Clarence, and sir Edmond his other sonne, Erle of Cambridge.

And in this yere there were three kinges that came to visite and see king Edward. First the king of Fraunce, the king of Cipres, & the king of Scots.

About this time king Edward helde a great counsayle in Englande for the better ordering of the realme, and specially for the kinges children. For it was considered, that the prince of Wales helde a great and a noble estate (as it was right meete for him to doe) for he was valiaunt, puissaunt and riche, and had great possessions & heritage in Aquytayne, where was aboundance of al riches welth and prosperity. Wherfore it was thought most metest y the prince did remayne in those parts, for y he had sufficient in that Duchy to maintaine his estate. And also al the Barons and knights of Aquitayne did earnestly desyre to have him among them, for the which they had made their earnest request to the king. For although Sir Iohn Chandos was to them right curteous and friendly: yet they rather coueted to have their awne naturall Lorde and Souereigne.

The prince was very wylling to agree vnto this deuise, and so was the good Ladye his Wyfe, and they prepared themselves with all speede according to estates. And when every thing was readie, they tooke their leave of the King, and of the Quene, and of Edward the their brethren, and departed out of England, and with a prosperous winde came to Bur-prince did homage to his father deaux, and shortly after tooke possession of his Duchy of Guyan, and afterward did ho- for the Duchy mage to his father for the same.

About this time also dyed the Lady Isabell the kinges mother, which was wyfe to king Isabell daughter Edward the second, and daughter vnto Philip le Beau, sometime French king. And she was king and wife buried in London, at the Frier Minors, commonly called the Gray Fryers (which nowe vnto king Edis a parishe Church and is called Christes Church) right nobly and honourably, with all warde the sethe prelates and Barons of Englande, and all the Lordes of Fraunce that then lay here as the Church that

This yere on Trinitie Sunday Charles sonne and heyre to Iohn the French king, was Charles the crowned king of Fraunce in the Citie of Reyns, wyth great pompe and solempnitic, and french kings

so was the Queene his wyfe daughter to Peter Duke of Burbone.

And as Fabian sayth, in this yere, because vpon S. Stephyns day the king finished and ended all his warres with Fraunce, he therefore in the worship of S. Stephyn began the foundation of S. Stephyns Chapell at Westmynster, and Richard the second sonne of Chappell at Prince Edwarde, called the black prince, fynished the same.

In this yere was borne Edward, the first sonne of Prince Edward, the which died when gonne.

he was about eyght yeres of age.

And about this time one Barthram de Claicon a Norman with an army of Frenchmen Edward the first entered the lande of Castile, and warred vpon Peter, then king of that lande, and so be-some of Prince haued him, that in lesse then foure Moneths, he chased the sayde Peter out of his awne lande, and crowned his brother named Henrye king of Castile, at a Towne called Burges vpon Easter daye: wherefore the sayde Peter constreyned by necessitie, was compelled to come to Burdeaux to crave ayde of Prince Edward.

This Peter was rightfull heyre vnto the Crowne of Castile, and Henry his brother (as most writers affirme) was a bastard. But this Peter was of so vile conditions, that his subjectes fauoured him not. And so thys warre continued a season betweene his brother and him, in the which the Prince with his Archers tooke partie with this Peter, and the

was Richard, and was afterwarde king, by the name of Richarde the second.

This yere at the importunitie, sute and great entreatie of Done Peter King of Spaine. Edwarde prince of Wales went with him into Spayne with a strong power, and the Prince prince Edward ouercame the Spaniards and Frenchmen in a strong battayle, where the number of them Prince Edward were foure to one of the princes power, and the prince restored king Peter to his former estate as king of Spaine. But not long after the princes returning home againe to Burstoreth king Pe- deaux, the aforesayde Henry so repayred his army and gaue a new onset, that in the ende ter to his former he vtterly vanquished Peter and put him to death, and then reigned himselfe quietly. am the shorter herein because this properly doth not touch the warres and affayres of Englande, whiche is the chiefe thing that I purpose in this Collection.

Prince Edward after his comming out of Spayne where he had spent a great some of money, and yet a number of the Souldyours that went out with him, whome king Peter promised to pay, came home agayne vnpayde and lyngered and still hanged vpon the prince, wherefore he to rayse a masse or great some of money, deuysed to set great taxes and impositions upon the people of Aquitayne: which thing the Erle of Arminack, of Bret, of Berygorte, and other noble men would not in any wise consent vnto, but appealed to the French king for remedy, and in such wise perswaded him, that he contrary to the league and peace lately made, sommoned the prince to appeare at Paris: By meane whereof the peace was broken, and open warre agayne proclaymed betweene both princes to the great mortalitie and desolation of people on both parties, but the most losse and dammage fell alwayes to the king of England. In so much that in the ende, he lost the more parte of the lands which were graunted him by the composition and agreement of peace. And nowe fortune, which pleasauntly had smiled upon king Edwarde the space of. xl. yeres, in hys latter dayes frowardlye frowned and chaunged her Copie.

This yere in the moneth of May the Frenche king in his high court of parliament holden at Paris proceeded in judgement upon the appellations before made by the Erle of Arminack, the Lorde of Bret, and Erle of Berygort, agaynst prince Edward: wherevoon discord and variaunce began to take place betwene the two kings, insomuch, that by meane of the sayd three Lordes (notwithstanding that they were before sworne to be to the king of Englande true liege men) dyuers townes of the Countrie of Poyteau yelded them to the french king, as Aubeuyle, Rue and the more parte of the townes of the sayde Countrie.

Wherevpon Ambassadours were sent vppon both partes, and dyuers meanes of intreatie were commoned of, but in the ende, it came all to none effect. Thus the peace which before was so substancially made & with great solempnity and circumstaunces established, was now vtterly violate and broken, and eyther king for his parte made provision for warre.

Charles the French king went to Roan in Normandie and there in the moneth of Iuly rigged his ships, & sent them forward to war vpon England.

The Duke of Lancaster landeth in Normandy.

And while king Charles was occupied in Normandie, the Duke of Lancaster landed at Calice with a strong companie of Archers, and other warriours, and from thence passed to Thoroughne, and so to Ayre, in wasting and spoylyng the Countrie with yron and fyre as he went. Wherefore the French king in the defence of those partes sent foorth the Duke of Burgoyn with a puyssant armie to withstand the sayd Duke of Lancaster. The which Duke of Burgoyn sped him in such wise, that aboute the xxiiij. day of August he lodged his host vpon the hill of Turneham, nere vnto Arde. And the Englishe hoste was lodged betwene Gygowne, and Arde, so that the fronts of both the hostes were within a myle: Betwene whome were dayly skirmishes and small bickeryngs: And when the sayd Duke of Burgoyn had kept the foresayde hill, from the xxiiij. day of August, vnto the xij. day of September following, he removed his host, and went to Hesden: For the which deede, he was after blamed of his brother.

After which departure of the Frenchmen, the Duke of Lancaster with his host tooke the way towarde Caux, and passed the ryuer of Some, and so roade toward Harflew, entendyng to have fyred the French kinges nauve: But at their commyng thether, the towne was so strongly manned, that they did but little hurt. Wherefore the sayde Duke departed shortly thence, and sped him into the Country of Poiteau, & so came vnto the towne of Aubeuile. Where the Frenche men encountered him and gaue him battaile. In the which was taken Sir Hugh Chatellon Knight, with other Knightes, Esquiers, and Burgesses of the towne, and there were slaine of the Frenchmen mo then three hundreth, and they had taken prisoners to the number of. xlv. which they sent to Calice. And then the Duke with his companie went to Burdeaux, and brent and spoyled the Countrey as he went.

And in this time dyed at Calice the Erle of Warwike, after that he was returned from the Duke of Lancaster, which was a noble and valiant man.

And in the moneth of August following, dyed that noble woman Quene Philip, wife of the Noble Noble king Edward the thirde, the which was a great benefactor vnto the Chanons of Saint Ste-Quene Philip phens at Westmynster. And sone after died Dame Blaunche, sometime the wife of Hen- Erle of the ry Duke of Lancaster, and was buried at Paules vpon the Northsyde of the high Aultare nault and wife by her husbande. Where she ordeyned for him and her (as sayth Fabian) foure Chaun-warde the thirde. treyes for euer, and an Anniuersary yerely to be kept: At the which besyde other great thinges appoynted to the Deane and Chanons of the Church: Shee ordeyned that the Maior of London beyng present at the Masse, should offer a penny, and take vp. xx. shillynges. The Shirifes eyther of them a penny, and to receyue eyther of them a Marke. The Chamberleyn of the Citie ten shillinges, the Sworde bearer. vi. shillinges. viii, pence, and every officer of the Maiors beyng there present. xxij. pence, and to. viij. officers of the Shirifes eyther of them. viij. pence: But this obite is not nowe kept, for the landes are gone, as I thinke.

graunted vnto him three Dismes to be payd in lyke manner.

And in this yere was a thirde mortalitie or death of men: and likewise a marueylous A third mortamoreyn vpon Cattell, so that the like had not bene sene in many yeres before. And then litie of men and beastes. fell merueylous aboundaunce of raine, so that the corne was drowned in y earth, by reason whereof, the next yere after wheate was solde for three shillinges foure pence the

And in the ende of the Moneth of Iuly, Sir Robert Knolles beyng accompanied with Sir Robert divers noble men and souldiours, entered Saint Omers. And when they had done their Knolles with a pleasures there, and in the Countrie rounde about, then they road vnto Arras, in wastyng taketh his jourand spoylyng all the Countrie as they went. And when they had brent the Bulwarkes of resunce. the sayde towne of Arras, they passed by Noyen, and Vermendoys, and brent the houses of all suche as would not to them geue due raunsome. And thus holdyng their way, they passed the ryuers of Oyse, and of Syre, and so came vnto the Citie of Reynes, and passed there the ryuer, and road toward Troys, and passed the rivers of Aube, and of Seyne, and so helde their way toward Saint Florentyne, and there passed the ryuer of Ion, in holdyngtheir course towarde Ioigny, and so to Corbeuile, and Esson. And the xxii. of September they lodged themselves vpon the Mount Saint Albon, and in the Countrie there about. And within two dayes following, they embattayled themselves in a fielde, betwene the townes of Iuny, and Paris. In all which tyme, they passed without battaile through all the Countries aforesayde, in spoylyng and brennyng the townes, and in raunsomyng of the Inhabitantes thereof, without resistence or impediment. And albeit that in the Citie of Paris at that day were two hundreth men of armes waged by the French sing, beside the Souldiours and strength of the Citizens of that Citie: Yet the sayd hoste of Englishemen lay, as before is sayde, embattelled vntill it was past noone of the afore-

sayd day. At which tyme, forsomuch as they were credibly enformed, that they should there have no battaile, they brake vp their fielde, and went to a place or towne called Antoygnye, and there lodged that night, and vpon the next day, they tooke their iourney toward Normandie. But after foure dayes labour, they turned to Escamps, in pillying and dammagying the Countrie as before they had done, and so went forth vitill they came to the Erledome of Angeou, where they wanne by strength the townes of Vaas, and Ruylly, with other strong holdes thereaboutes.

Variance betweene the Lord Gradtson and Sir Robert Knolles.

But then it came infortunately to passe, for it so chaunced that the Lorde Fitzwater, and the Lorde Grauntson fell at a variaunce with Sir Robert Knolles and his companie, which encreased to such hatred and displeasure, that Sir Robert Knolles with the flower of the Archers and Souldiours departed from the sayde two Lordes, leauying them in the aforesayd townes of Vaas and Ruyllye, and then he went into Briteyn.

When the French king heard the certentie hereof, anone he commaunded sir Barthram de Glaycon, who was newly made Marshall of Fraunce, with a strong armie to enter the sayde Countrie of Angeou, and to make sharpe warre vpon the sayde Englishmen. The which vpon the xij. day of October folowing, fayd siege to the sayd towne of Vaas, and out of the same issued the sayd lordes of Fitzwater and Grauntson, and gaue vnto the Marshall battaile: But in the ende the Englishe men were discomfited, so that of them were slaine. vj. hundreth, and the rest put to flight. And there was taken the Lorde Grauntson with other.

And after this victory the French men went vnto the towne of Vaas, and wanne it by assault, where also were slaine three hundreth English men, and many taken prisoners, and the other put to flight.

And after this Sir Barthram pursued the Englishmen that were fled to a towne called Versure: where in the assaultyng of the sayde Towne he slue and toke prisoners foure hundreth Englishmen. And thus by strife and dissension among themselues, those that before by amitie & good accord were victors, now by hatred and discord, were slayne and taken prisoners.

Now the king of Englande considering with himselfe of the great and daylie losses that he susteyned, and howe the Frenchmen continually gate and wanne from him in all partes in Fraunce, but chiefely the Countie of Poyteau, wherevoon he had spent a maruellous treasure in the fortefyeng and strengthning of the same, ouer and about the yerely reuenues thereof, and also did now well perceaue that he should have warre on all parties, and also at this time it was shewed him that he should have war wyth Scotland because the Scottes were newly allyed with the French king. Wherefore he was sore vexed and troubled, for he feared more the warre of the Scottes then the warre of the Frenchmen: And therefore with all speede he sent men of warre to the Frontiers of Scotlande, as to

Barwike, Rokesborough, Newe Castell, Durcham, and into other places about the Frontiers. Also he sent a great Nauie to the Sea, about Hampton, Gernesey and the Isle of Wight, for it was shewed him howe that the French king had furnished and set foorth a great Nauie to go to the Sea, and to lande in Englande, so that he wist not well on which

At thys time the Archebishop of Winchester (as Fabian calleth him) then being Cardinall, and was present at Auignion with Pope Gregory the xj. of that name, was put in commission with the Archbishop of Beauuays, to make or treate a peace and vnitie betweene the two Realmes of Englande and Fraunce. Which sayde Cardinall of Winchester, after his departure from the Pope, came downe toward Melune, where by the Cardynall of Beauuays he was honourably met and conueyed into the Citie of Melune. And when he had arested him there foure dayes, the two Cardinalles meetyng together went to Parys, where they had communication with the French king touching the peace. And after that they had vnderstande hys pleasure, the Cardinall of England tooke his leaue and departking of Englande the Popes pleasure, and the French kinges aunswere.

And in this time was sore warre in Guyan, and many townes gotten and yeelded to the Frenchemen, and still the Englishmen had the worsse, and many of them slayne and taken The reysing of prisoners, for in a verie shorte time the Citie of Lymoges, and all the countrie of Lymosyn taskes remoueth the hartes of the was vnder the obeysaunce of the French king. And the occasion of this losse as sayth people from the sundrie authoures, was for that prince Edward a little before had reysed a great taxe vpon prince. the inhabitauntes of that Countrie, whereby he lost all their hearts.

When the french king had thus obteyned the rule of the Countrie of Lymosyn, he immediatly after sent syr Berthram de Glaicon into the Erledome of Poyteau, and wanne there many townes and Castelles, and lastly layde his siege to Rochell.

In this yere king Edward kept his high Court of parliament at Westminster, in the which toward the furniture and ayde of his warres he demaunded of the spiritualtie fiftic thousand pounde, and as muche of the laye Fee. The which by the Temporaltie was The clergie regraunted, but the Clergie kept them of with pleasaunt aunswers: So that the king and his fuse to ayde the counsayle was with them discontented, in so much that to their displeasures, dyuerse officers, as the Chauncelour, the privie seale, the Treasorer and other officers who then were possessed by spiritual men, were taken from them, and temporal Lordes set in their

And shortly after, the aforesayde Cardynall of Beauuays came into Englande, to treate of the peace betweene the two realmes, but all his labour tooke none effect.

In the Month of Iulie, the french king sent into the Country of Poyteau the aforenamed Sir Barthram de Claycon with a strong army, where he wanne dyuers holdes and fortresses from the Englishmen.

In the which time king Edward for strengthening of the countrie, and specially to defende the towne of Rochell, which as aboue in the other yere is shewed, was this yere besieged by the sayd Sir Barthram, sent the Erle of Pembrooke, with other noble men to for-Pembrooke sent tefie the sayde towne, and to remoue the siege. Also in the begynning of September next following a Gascoyne borne, a man of good fame, whom the king of England had admytted for his Lieutenaunt and Gouernour of the countrie of Poyteau, named le Captall de Bueff, fought with an army of Frenchmen before a towne named Sonbise, where in conclusion his men were slaine and chased, and he with. lxx. of his parte taken prisoners.

Then the Dukes of Berrey and Burgoyne vpon the. vj. daye of September came before Rochell, and had certaine communications with the rulers of the sayde towne for the de-liverie thereof.

King Edward nowe heryng of the taking of the Erle of Pembrooke, and of the losse that he daylie had of his men in dyuers partes of Fraunce, with also the ieopardie that the towne of Rochell and other stoode in, made hastie provision and entended to have passed the sea: But the winde was so contrarious that he could have no passage, wherfore saith Reynulph Monke of Chester, he returned agayne into Englande.

The. viij. daye of September following the Captaine of Rochell having no comfort to Rochell is yelden hauc any quick reskues, yeelded vpon certaine appoyntments the sayd towne vnto the to the French aforenamed Dukes, to the vse of the French King. Of the which two daughters, Sir Iohn of Gaunt maryed the eldest, named Constance, and his brother, the yonger named Isabell, so that by these mariages, these two brethren claymed to be enheritours of the kingdome of Castyle, or Spayne.

Also this yere, After the Duke of Briteyne had receyued many exhortations and requestes from the French King, to have him vpon his partie: he sent for certeyne Souldiours of English men, and fortefied with them some of his Castels and holdes. Of the which when king Charles heard, he sent thether with a strong power the aforenamed Sir Berthram de Claycon, warning them to make war vpon them as enemies to the house of Fraunce. The which according to their commission entered the lande of Briteyne, in wastyng the same with yron and fyre, and in a little time there was yelden to him the most part of the chiefe townes, except Brest, Aulroy, and Daruall.

And in the ende of Iune, the sayd Barthram layde siege vnto Brest, and the Lorde of Craon with other, lay before Daruall. And in all this tyme the Duke of Britein was in England: for so soone as he had bestowed the aforesaid English souldiors, he sailed into

And after passed by Dourlons, by Benquesne, and so vnto Corby, where they passed the Ryuer of Some, and road vnto Roye in Vermendoys, where they abode the space of. vij. dayes. And then they set the towne on fyre, and tooke their way toward Lamoys, and burned and spovled the Countrie as they went. And in processe of tyme, passed the ryuers of Osne, Marne, and of Aube, and roade through Champaigne, and by the Erledome of Brame, streight vnto Guy, and passed the ryuer of Seyn, and so toward the ryuer of Leyr, & vnto Marcigny the Nonnery. And when they were passed the sayde Nonnery, they kept their way toward the ryuer of Ancherre, and so vnto Burdeaux. In all which iourney they passed without battaile.

In this tyme dyed at Burdeaux Edward the eldest sonne of Prince Edward, to the great griefe and sorowe both of the Prince his father, and of the good Ladie his mother. And soone after the death of his sonne, he himselfe beyng very sickly, was aduised and counsayled, that he should returne into England, and the rather that he might obteyne his health. The Prince did agree therevnto right gladly, and therevpon made his provision. And when the Prince should depart from Acquitaine, he first caused a special summons to be made at Burdeaux, of all Barons and knightes of Gascoyn, and Poyeteau, and in all other places where he was Lorde, and they vnder his obeysance. And when they were all come together in a Chamber before the prince: Then he spake vnto them and sayd, it is well knowen to you all, that I am your true and the right Lorde and inheritour of your countrie, and how that I have governed, and kept you in peace asmuch as in my power hath lyen. I have been so faythful a Protector over you, that I have not spared neither the aduenture of my life against your enemyes and mine, neyther the expences of my treasure, for your defence: and God be praysed, though now ye are a little afflicted, yet hitherto ye haue bene mainteyned in great wealth and puyssaunce agaynst your ene-And nowe at this tyme, I beyng vexed with a great and grieuous sicknesse, am counsayled by my Phisitions and other, that for the better recourry of my health, I should returne into England to my naturall Countrie, which God willyng I purpose shortly to do. And therefore I most hartely besech you, even as earnestly as a Prince may require his subjectes, that ye will yeelde in mine absence, to my dere and naturall brother here present, the Duke of Lancaster, whome I leave here as my Lieutenant to gouerne you, the same honour, reuerence and obeysaunce, and faythfulnesse of heart, that ye beare or should beare vnto me: and doubt you nothing but that ye shall finde him a right good Lorde

Lorde, valiaunt and curteous, and therefore I beseeche you to ayde and assist him in all his affayres and attemptes, with your good aduice and counsaile.

And foorthwith the Barons of Aquitaine, Gascoyne, Poyteau, and of Xaynton promised, and sware on their faythes, that there should neuer be default found in any of them. And therevoon immediately they did their fealtie and homage to the Duke of Lancaster, and promysed him their loues, services and obeysaunce, and in the presence of the Prince they sware to vpholde and keepe the same, and therevpon kissed his mouth.

And when this was ended, within short tyme after, the Prince and princes his wife, with The Prince retheir yong sonne Richard, accompanied with the Erle of Cambridge, and the Erle of wife into England to king Ed-land to king Ed-land to king Ed-ward his father. and so long sayled with a good and prosperous winde, that at the last they came vnto Southhampton, and there they tooke lande and refreshed them two dayes, and then they toke their horses, and the Prince went in a horse Litter, and at the last came to Windesore. where then the king was, who received right sweetly his children, & so there the king was enformed by the prince of all the state of Guien.

After the departure of the Prince from Burdeaux, the Duke of Lancaster kept the obsequy of his Cosyn Edward sonne to the Prince his brother, the which was honourably done in the Citie of Burdeaux.

This yere (as sayth Froyssart) came into England sent from the Pope, who then was An Ambassade Gregorie the. xi. the Archebishop of Rauenne, and the Bishop of Carentes, for to treate Pope to king of a peace betweene the two kinges of Englande and of Fraunce, the which met together Edward. at Bruges in Flaundyrs. And thether came certeine Lordes, aswell from the king of Englande, as also from the French king. And the Commissioners of the Frenche partie, after they had spent a tyme in disputations, they then prayed licence of the Legate, that they might go to Paris, and shewe vnto the king the offers of the Englishe partie, and so to returne with his pleasure, wherevpon it was agreed, that a certeine should ryde vnto the French king. And the Englishmen abode stiffely vpon the souereintie, that was that the king of Englande, and hys heyres kinges, shall enjoy all the former landes, comprised in the peace lately made with John King of Fraunce, without homage, or other duetic for And for this the Frenche King assembled a counsaile at Paris, and the same doyng there it was fully concluded, that the Frenche king might not gene ouer the souereintie.

A parliamet. denieth the king any further ayde.

At this time there arose a great murmure among the people of Englande agaynst certaine persons that bare aucthoritie about the king, as the Lorde Latymer then the kinges Chamberleyne and other: By whose sinister counsayle as they sayde, the king in his age was misled, and hys treasure mispended, to the great dishonor of the king, and to the great losse, hurt, and dammage of all the kinges subjects.

The king being thus troubled on all sydes with warres, called his high Court of parliament, in the which he required a subsidie for the defense of his enemies. The Parliament it was aunswered by the common house, that they could no lenger beare suche charges, considering the manifold and most grieuous burdens that they had from time to time And further they sayd, that they knew full well that the king was riche borne before. enough to defende him and his lande, if the land and his treasure were well guyded and gouerned: But it had beene long cuill ruled by cuill officiers, so that the lande could not be plenteous, neyther with Chaffre, marchandise, nor riches. By reason wheref, & by their importune charges the commonaltie was greatly empourished.

Moreover, the sayde commons complayned them vpon divers officers, that were the causers of this misorder, whereof the Lorde Latymer was noted for principall, with also dame Alice Piers, the which the king had long time kept for his Concubyne, and also one named Sir Richard Scurry knight, by whose counsayles and sinister meanes, the king was misguyded and the gouernement of the lande disordered.

Wherefore the sayde commons prayed by the mouth of their speaker, which was then Sir Piers de la mere, that the sayde persons with other might be remoued from the king, and other to be set in aucthoritie about his person, as should serue for his honour and for the weale of his realme.

Which request of the commons, by the meanes of the Noble Prince Edward, was accepted, so that the sayde persons were removed from the king, and other Lordes of the realme were put in their places.

And shortly after, the commons graunted the king his pleasure, so that he had of every man and woma that were about the age of. xiiij, yeres, foure pence, Beggers onely except.

And by the Clergie was graunted that the king should have of everye beneficed man. xii, pence, and of Priestes not beneficed, foure pence, the foure orders of Fryers onely

But before this money was gathered, the king was fayne to borowe sundrie summes of money in divers places: Among the which the Citie of London was sent vnto for foure thousande pounde: And for that the Major then beyng, was not quick in the furthering of that matter, he was by the kings commaundement discharged, and another put in his place.

RICHARDE THE SECONDE.

R Ichard the seconde of that name, borne in Burdeaux, & sonne of Edward prince of Wales, who was called the blacke Prince, which was the eldest sonne of King Edward the thirde, of the age of. xj. yeres, began hys reigne ouer the realme of England the. xxij. day of Iune. 1377. and was crowned at Westminster the. xv. day of Iuly next following. In bountie and liberalitie he farre passed all his progenitors: But he was ouermuch geuen to rest and quietnesse, and loued little dedes of armes and Martiall prowes: And for that he was yong, he was most ruled by yong counsayle, and regarded nothing the aduertisement of the sage and wise men of his realme. For the chiefe about him was of no wisedome nor estimation, which turned his lande to great trouble, and himselfe in the ende to extreme miserye.

Ye have heard before in the tyme of king Edwarde, that the peace was continued betweene Fraunce and Englande vntill Midsommer following, which tyme was now expired. And the French king in the tyme of peace had made great provision for warre, aswell of Shippes and Galeys, as of men and munition, insomuch that the king of Spaine had sent .him his admirall, called sir Ferrand Sawse, who with sir Iohn of Vien Admirall of The French men Fraunce, so soone as the truce or peace was expired, went and brent the towne of Ryc in Kent, the xxviij. day, or xxix. day of Iune, which was within sixe dayes after the

brenne the towne of Rye.

And shortly after newes hereof came to London: Then the Erle of Cambridge and The French men of Buckyngham went to Douer with a great power. And the Erle of Salsburie and landed in divers the Lorde Mountague went to Southampton: But in the meane time, the French-lande, and brent men had landed in the Isle of Wight, and had brent therein dyuers townes: And dyuers townes. also they landed in the West partes of Englande, and brent Dartmouth, Plymmouth, Portesmouth and dyners other townes. And then they came to Southampton, and - there would have landed, but there they founde Sir Iohn of Arondell with a great number of men of warre, and Archers, who defended the towne right valiauntly, or else it had beene spoyled and taken. Then the frenchmen departed, and went toward Douer, and one daye they landed beside a little Abbey, called Lyons. There were manye men of the Countrie assembled, and they had made the Priour of the place, and Syr Thomas Cheyny, and Iohn Fusell their chiefe Captaines, and had put themselves in good araye to defende the passage: So that the Frenchmen had but small aduauntage there, for they lost many of their people before they could lande: notwithstandyng, at the last, by force they did lande, and there was a sore skirmishe, and the Englishmen were put back, and two hundred of them slaine, and the two knights and the Priour were taken prisoners. Then the Frenchmen entred agayne into their shippes, and lay still all that night at Anker before the Abbey. And here the frenchmen knewe first of the death of king Edward the thirde, by the prisoners that they had taken, and of the coronation of King Richarde, and of the order that was taken for the government of the realme. Then Sir Iohn of Vyen caused a Barke to departe and to cary those newes with other of his awne enterprises, vnto the french king.

After the Barke was sent awaye, the frenchmen and the Spanyards hoyssed vp their Sayles, and had winde at will, and came with the same tyde to Douer, about three of the clock in the after noone.

And there was readie to receive them, Sir Edmonde Erle of Cambridge, and syr Thomas his brother Erle of Buckyngham, with ten thousand, with Banners displayed, and the frenchmen were sixe score Vesselles shippes and Galeys. The Frenchmen came heard by the towne, but taried not, but streight passed by and tooke the deepe of the Sea. For then the Sea began to ebbe: Howbeit the Englishmen taried there still all that day and the next night, and the Frenchmen by the nexte tyde, came before the Hauen of Calice, and there entred.

At this time also the French king sent vnto Robert King of Scotland, praying him to The French king make earnest and effectuall warre vpon the Englishmen and to follow them so hard that sendeth to the Scotstostirthem they should have no puissaunce to passe the Sea. Wherevoon king Robert assembled hys against the Engcounsayle at Edenborough, where as were the most parte of all the knightes and Barons lish men. in Scotlande, and other suche as he thought were hable to doe him seruyce. And when they were thus assembled together, King Robert sayde vnto them, ye know how that the Englishmen in time past haue done vnto vs many great hurtes and harmes in spoylyng and brennyng of our countrie, beating downe of oure Castelles and in sleyng and raunsomyng of our men. And Sirs, nowe is the time come, that we maye be well reuenged of them: For now is there but a yong king in Englande, for king Edward is dead, who was wont to haue so good fortune. And when the Barons and yong knights that were there heard this, and they also being desyrous to be reuenged, aunswered and sayd, all with one vovce that they were readic and full appointed and furnished to ryde into England, and it were the same day or the next following, or when it pleased him. The spie entred downe the diches, wherein there was no water, nor none could abide there, for it was all a quick sande. And so the spie looked and hearkened all about, but he could neyther here nor see anye creature, and so he returned and shewed his master.

Then Alexander Ramsey and audiced forth and brought all his company princly vnto the diches, and they brought with them ladders, and so dressed them vp to the walles. And Alexander was one of the first that went vp the ladder with his sworde in his hande. Berwike Castell and entered into the Castell, and all his companie followed him, for there was none that is taken by the withstood them. And when they were all within, they went to the chiefe Towre, where the Captaine lay a sleepe. And there sodainely with great Axes they brake open the doore. The Captaine sodainely awooke, and had slept all night, for he had kept but small watch, the which he deerely bought, and so opened his chamber doore, wenyng to him the noyse had been emade by some of his awne Souldiours that would have robbed or murdered him in his bed, because he had displeased them the weke before, and so lept out at a wyndow into the great diches in great feare, and there brake his neck.

> The watchmen were halfe asleepe, and heard the noves, and awooke, and perceyued well howe that the Castell was scaled and betrayed, and so sowned in a Trumpet Trahev.

Iohn Biset Captaine of the Towne hearing the voyce of a Trompet, armed himselfe immediatly, & caused all the towne to arme themselves, and foorthwith they drewe together all before the Castell, and heard well the noves that the Scottes made within: But they could not enter into them, for the gate was shut and the bridge drawen. Then Iohn Biset remembred him selfe of a good deuise, and sayde to them of the towne that were about him. Let vs breake downe the stayes of the bridge on this side, and then they that are within cannot issue out wythout oure daunger. And incontinent wyth Axes they bet downe the steves of the bridge. And then Iohn Biset sent a messenger to Anwike a. xij. myles of to the Lorde Percy, certefying him of all the matter, desyryng him without delay to come to the rescue of § Castell.

Alexander Ramsey and his company, when they had slayne in the Castell whome it pleased them, and had taken the rest prisoners, and shut them vp into a towre, then sayde Alexander, now let vs go downe to the towne, for it is oures, and let vs take all the goods that are therein, and let vs bring all the riche men into thys Castell, and then set fyre on the Towne. for it is not to be kept by vs. And within three or foure dayes we shall have rescue out of Scotlande, so that we shall saue all oure pillage: and at oure departing let vs set fire in the Castell, and so pay our hoste. To the which purpose they all agreed, for they all

And then they toke eche of them a glayue in their handes, for they found enough in the Castell, and so opened the gate and let downe the bridge: And when the bridge was downe, the ropes that helde it brake, for the restyng place of the bridge was broken awaye as aforesayde.

And when Iohn Biset sawe the maner of them, he and all his company beganne to shoote and crye, and sayde: A Sirs, keepe you there, ye shall not departe thence without our leave.

And when Alexander Ramsey sawe the maner of them without, he knew well that they were ware of his being in the Castell: and so with much a do closed in agayne the gate for feare of shot: and then they fortefyed the Castel thinking to have kept it. And they cast out into the diches all the deade men that they had slaine, and locked the rest that were prisoners into a Towre. They thought that the place was strong enough to be kept for a long tyme, or at the least vntill some reskewe came to them out of Scotland, which they thought woulde not be long.

So soone as the Messenger had declared the whole matter vnto the Lorde Percy, he immediatly sent knowledge into the countrie, & made hast himselfe to come to the reskewe, and the Barons, knightes and Esquiers of the countrie and good men of warre came vnto him from all places. And the first that came thether was the Erle of Northumberland, and then dailye came great companyes, so that at the last they mustered themselues, and they were about ten thousand men.

Then they besieged the Castell so neere that a Birde could not come out without know-ledge. And after they beganne to mine vnder the Castell, the sooner to meete with the Scottes that were wythin, and so to recouer agayne the Castell.

Then tydinges came to the Barons of Scotland, howe the Erle, Barons, knightes, and Esquiers of Northumberland had besieged their companie in the Castell of Barwike. And they were all determined to go and rayse vp the siege, and to vitaile the Castell, for they sayde that Alexander Ramseys enterprice was valiaunt. And to confirme the same, Sir Archibald Dowglas Constable of Scotlande sayde: Alexander is my Cosyn, and it commeth of a noble courage, and valiaunt heart, to enterprice suche a feate, and we ought to comfort and helpe him in his deede: Wherefore, if we may, let vs go raise the siege, it will redounde to our great noblenesse, and therefore let vs go thether. And then they tooke order who shoulde go with him, and who should abyde, and so he toke with him flue hundreth Speares, the best of all the hoste, and so roade on toward Barwike.

Tidynges came to the Englishe Lordes, that the Scottes were commyng to raise the siege, and to victuall the Castell. Then they went to counsaile, and so determined to take a place, & to abyde their enemies and to fight with them. And the Lorde Percye caused all his companie to be readic armed and furnished to fight, and to make their Musters, and they found them selves to be the number of three thousand men of armes, and. vij. thousande Archers. And when the Erle sawe that he had so great a number, he sayde: Let vs keepe our place, we are men enowe to fight with all the puissaunce of Scotland, and so they rested in a fayre playne without Barwike in two battayles in good order.

And they had not bene there the space of an houre, but they sawe certein Currours of the Scottes well horssed, which came to viewe the Englishe hoste. And when these Currours had well aduised the number of the English men, then they returned to their maisters, and shewed them all that they had seene, and sayde: Sirs we have ridden so nere to the English men, that we have well aduised and considered all their doyng: And we saye vnto you, they are ready abidyng for you in two fayre battailes, in a goodly plaine, and in every battaile a fine thousande men. Therefore nowe take good aduice, for we approched so neere them, that they perceyued well that we were Currours of Scotland, but they would not stirre nor sende out one man to runne at vs.

When sir Archibalde Douglas and his Captaines heard these tidyngs, they were pensife, and sayde: we cannot see that it should be for our profite to ryde as nowe against the Englishe men, for they are tenne agaynst one of vs, wherefore we may lose more than we can winne, and of a foolishe enterprice commeth no good, as we maye nowe see by Alexander Ramsey: and there was present an vncle of Alexanders, called Sir William Lindsey, who tooke great paine to come to comfort his Nephewe. And he sayde vnto the companie: Sirs, on the trust of you, my nephew hath made this enterprice, and taken the Castell of Barwike: It will turne you all to great blame if ye lose him thus, and peraduenture hereafter, there will be none so hastie to shewe somuch good will to our Countrie. And they aunswered and sayde, they could not amend it, neither was it mete that so many noble men as were there, should put themselues in aduenture of life or vndoyng, for the sauyng of one Esquier. Wherefore they determined to returne againe to their awne Countrie, and so withdrewe themselves.

The Scots fie.

Nowe when the Erle of Northumberland, and the Erle of Nottyngham, and the other Barons of England perceived that the Scottes came not forwarde, they sente foorth their Currours, to knowe where they were become, and they brought worde how they were gone toward Morlan beyond the Castell of Rosbourgh.

Against night, the Englishe men drewe againe to their lodgynges, and made good watch that night, and in the mornyng euery man was readie to go and assaile the Castell, and there was a fierce assault, and endured almost a whole day. There bath not been seene more hardier men of so fewe, then those Scottes were, nor that better defended a place then they did. For the English men had ladders, which they rered up to the Walles, and they went vp vpon them with Targettes over their heades, and before them and so came and fought with the Scottes hande to hande, and some of them came downe againe into the Ditches: But the thing that troubled the Scottes most, was the Archers, who shot so wholy together, that they durst not come to the defense of the wall. So long this assault Betwike Castell continued, that at the last the Englishe men entered by force, and there slue as many as they found, not one of them that were within that scaped, but were slaine, except Alexander Ramsey, whome they tooke prisoner. And thus the Castell of Barwike was againe recovered from the Scottes, and the Erle of Northumberland made Iohn Biset Capitaine there, and he newly repayred the Castel & the bridge.

Englishe men.

In the second yere of this kinges reigne (as sayth Reynulph:) By reason of a variaunce that chaunced betwene the Lord Latymer, and sir Raufe Ferrers on the one partie, and sir Robert Hall, and Shakerley Esquier on the other part, for a prisoner that was taken beyond the Sea in Spaine, called the Erle of Dean, whome the sayde Esquier kept in his possession, contrary to the mindes and willes of the aforesayd knightes. And herevpon the sayde knightes beyng in Choler, entered into the Church of Saint Peters at Westmin-Sir Robert Hall ster, and there findyng the sayde Sir Robert Hall kneelvng at Masse before the high Aultar, drewe out their swordes, and slue him: And afterward by their meanes and labour. caused the sayde Shakerley to be arested, and committed to the Towre of London, where he was kept as prisoner a great while after, for he would not deliuer the Eile of Deane his prisoner vnto those two knightes: But Caxton calleth them Lordes.

slaine in Westminster Church.

> About this tyme the French king sent a great number of Shippes and Galeyes into England, and they landed in dyuers places, as at Rye, at Winchelsey, at Hastinges, at Portesmouth, and in dyuers other places, and did great harme, but chiefely at Graues ende, where they landed, and spoyled the towne, & brent a great part thereof, and so returned againe into Fraunce with much spoyle.

3 Graues ende brent and spoyled by the Frenchmen.

The people greatly murmured for the paym n of foure pence the polle.

And in this yere a Parliament was called, and therein was graunted to the king foure pence of every man and woman beyng of the age of. xiiii, yeres and vpward, that were within the realme, at the which Subsidy the people did greatly murmure, and much mischiefe came thereof, as in the yere following shall appere. But yet with that money, an armie was prepared and sent ouer, whereof Sir Thomas of Woodstock Erle of Cambridge, and Vucle to the King was chiefe Capitaine: The which beyng accompanied with. vij. or. viij. thousand men, passed the water of Some, and came vnto Soysones, and passed also the Ryuers of Oyse, and Marne, and other, and came before Troys, and wanne it, and after lodged them betwene the newe Towne and Sens.

And euer as they passed the Countries they tooke great raunsomes of the people, or else set fyre on their townes. And although y the french King had sent an armie of frenchmen to resist them, yet they hindered them nothing at all of their purpose. For euer, if they chaunced to skirmishe, the Frenchmen were put vnto the worse. And thus they continued foorth their iourney, and passed by the Countrie of Gastynoyes, and so into Briteyne, where they were inyously received of sir Iohn de Mountfort, Duke of that Pro-aynce who then was but newlye come thether.

To

To the entent to have a stay and quyetnesse with Scotland there was sent vnto them in Ambassade Iohn of Gaunt Duke of Lancaster, and he came to the towne of Berwike. And from thence, he sent an Herault of Armes into Scotlande to the king and Barons there, shewing them that he was come to speake with them. And if they would, he would come and treate with them, and thereof he wylled them to send him worde, or else he knewe right well what he had to doe. The Herauld departed and roade to Edenborough, where king Robert of Scotlande, the Erle Douglas, the Erle de la Mare, the Erle Moret, and other the Lordes of Scotland were assembled together. For they had knowledge how that the Duke of Lancaster was comming thether to treate with them. Wherfore they were assembled in the chiefe towne of Scotland that ioyneth vpon the borders of England. And there the Herault did his message, and was well heard at length. and he had aunswere that they were well content to here the Duke speake. And so the Herault brought a safeconduyt for the Duke and his company, to endure as long as he was in the Marches & that they commoned together.

Thus the Herault returned to Barwike, and shewed how he had sped. And so the Duke departed from Barwike and left all his provision in the towne behinde him, and so came to Rosebourgh and there lodged. And the next daye he lodged at the Abbey of Maros which is on the ryuer, that departeth Englande and Scotlande a sunder. There the Duke and his companie taried, vntill the Scots were come to Monbanne, thre mile thence, & when they were come thether, they sent word to the Duke. Thus the treaty began be-twene the Scots and the Englishmen, and it endured fiftene daies.

And in this meane whyle y commons of England rebelled, by the which the whole The comons of England rebellstate of the realme was in great perill to be vtterly destroyed and lost: and because ye ed. shall viderstande the truth thereof, & that the rulers of the realine may preuent and foresee suche lyke mischiefes as maye hereafter ensue, therefore I have purposed fully to set foorth at length, the truth and whole discourse thereof vnto you, as Froissart doth at large write the same.

And first, consider how strauge a thing it is, that of so pore and simple a foundatio, Of small oceaso great a mischiefe should grow and insurge, as this y followeth. There was and is an chifes growe and vsage in England in many places, that the noble men and Lords of Manoures having encrease. Fraunchises ought to have services of the commons, that is to say, that their tenaunts ought by custome to plow their landes, to gather and bring home their corne, and some to threshe and fanne, and to carie wood, and water, and dyuers suche other things, which they ought to doe by their tenure and service that they owe to their Lordes. And lykewise there are another sort that holde their lands by villenage, and those are commonly called bondmen, of the which kinde of people there were then many in England, and specially in the County of Kent, Sussex and Bedford.

At this time there were a certaine of suche kinde of people as is aforesayde, that beganne to stirre in England and namely in Kent, and sayde they were in great seruitude and bondage: But sayd they, in the beginning of the worlde, there were no bond men: neyther ought there to be any nowe, except it were such a one as had committed treason agaynst his Lorde, as Lucifer did to God. But sayde they we can have no suche battayle. for we are neyther Angelles nor spirites, but men framed and formed to the similitude of our Lordes, and therefore sayde they, why should we then be so kept vnder lyke beastes and slaues? And they playnely sayde they would no lenger suffer it, for they would be all one with their Lordes, and if they labored or did anye thing for their Lordes, they woulde have wages for the same as well as other.

And of this imagination was a foolishe priest in the Countie of Kent called John Wall, John Walla for the which lyke foolishe words he had bene three times in the Bishop of Cauntorburies priest the setter forth, and the prison. This priest vsed oftentimes on the Sundayes, when the people were going out of very aucthous of the Church after seruice, to call them back into the Cloyster or Churchyard, and to talke rebellion. to them as followeth: A good people, matters go not wel to passe in England in these VOL. I.

dayes, nor shall not do vntill every thing be common, and that there be no Villeynes nor gentlemen, but that we be all as one, and that the Lordes be no greater then we be. What have we deserved, or why should we be thus kept in servitude and bondager We be all come from one father and one mother, Adam and Eue. Wherefore can they save or shewe that they are greater Lordes then we be? sauving in that which we get and labour for, that doe they spend. They are clothed in Veluet and Chamlet furred richly. and we be clad with the poorest sorte of cloth. They have their Wines, Spices, and fyne bread: and we have the drawyng out of the Chaffe, and drinke water. They dwell in fayre houses, and we in homely cotages, and lye in the fieldes in winde and rayne. And with that which they have by oure laboures, they keepe and maintaine their estates. We be called their bondmen, and without we doe them readie service, we must be beaten. punished or put out of our lyuings. And we have no souereigne to whome we maye complayne, nor none that will here vs, nor doe vs right. Let vs go to the king, he is young, and shew him in what daunger we be in: and let vs shewe him plainely that we wyll have it otherwise, or else we wyll prouvde a remedy for our selues: And if we set forward, all maner of people that are now in bondage will follow vs, to the entent they may be made free. And when the king seeth vs, he will prouved some remedy for vs, eyther by favrenesse or otherwise.

Thus Iohn Wall vsed to talke on Sundayes, when the people went out of the Churches to go into the Villages, wherefore, many of the meane people loued him: and those that meant no goodnesse, sayde he sayde truth: and so they muttered together one with another in the Fieldes and wayes as they went.

The Archebishop of Cauntorbury, who was agayne informed of thys Iohn Wall, caused him to be taken and committed to prison, where he remained two or thre moneths, as a matter somewhat to correct his foly: howbeit, it had been much better in the beginning that he had bene condempned to perpetuall prison, or else to have dyed, rather then to have suffered him agayne to be delywered out of prison, for the great mischiefe that did ensue: But the Bishop had conscience to put him to death.

And when this Iohn Wall was againe come out of Prison, he returned againe to his olde trade. Of his wordes and deedes there were many people in London enformed, namely suche as had great enuy at them that were riche. And at the last they began to speake among themselves, and sayd: that the realme of England was evill governed, and how that Golde and Silver was taken from them, by such as were named noble men. And thus a sort of vnhappy people gathered together about London, began to rebell, and sent worde into dyverse Countries to such as they knewe, that they should come to London, and bring their people with them, promising that they shoulde finde London open to receive them, and the Commons of the Citie to be of the same mynde, and sayde, that they would worke so much with the king, that there should not be one bond man in all England.

This promise so moued them of Kent, Essex, Sussex, Bedford, and other Countries about, that they arose and came towardes London in great numbers. And they had made to themselves certeine Capitaines, named Watte Tyler, Iacke Strawe, and Iohn Wall and other, of the which companye, Watte* Tyler was the chiefe, and he was a Tyler in deede, and an vngracious Patrone.

When these vnhappie men began thus to styrre, they of London, namely the honest Citizens were greatly afrayed. Then the Maior of London, and the substanciall of the Citie toke counsaile together: and when they saw the people come in on enery syde, they caused the Gates of the Citie to bee closed, and would suffer no man to enter into the Citie: But when they had better aduised themselves, they thought it not best so to do, least they might chaunce thereby to gene an occasion that their Suburbes might be brent. And so they opened againe the Gates of the Citie. And there entered in by xx. and xxx. together, in some places an hundreth, and in other places two hundreth, and tooke their * Fabian sayeth lacke straw was chiefe. lodgyng within the Citie, but to say truely, the third parte of these people coulde not tell what to aske or demande, or wherefore they came, but that one followed another for company, as brute Beastes.

The same day that these vnhappie people of Kent were commyng to London, there The kings mother the Prinreturned from Cauntorbury the kinges mother Princesse of Wales, comming from her pil-cesse of Wales, grimage. She was in great icopardy to have beene lost: For these people came to her of the Kentishe Chayre, and dealt rudely with her, whereof the good Lady was in great doubt, least they rebels. would have done some vilany to hir, or her Damoselles: howbeit God kept her, and she roade in one day from Cauntorbury to London, for shee neuer durst tary by the way. And the same tyme king Richard her sonne, was at the Tower of London, and there his mother found him, and with him there was the Erle of Sarisbury, the Archebishop of Cauntorbury, Sir Robert of Namure, the Lorde of Gomegines, and dyuers other, who were in doubt of this people that thus were gathered together, and wist not what they demaunded.

This rebellion was well knowen in the kinges Court, before anye of these people began to styrre out of any of their houses: But the king nor hys counsayle prouided not reme-die therefore in due tyme.

But here to begin and shew foorth the story in order. First on the Monday in the yere The first entrie of our Lorde. 1331. certeine of the aforesayd people issued out of London, and came of the rebels was first to Cauntorbury, and there Iohn Ball or Iohn Wall had thought to have found the Bishop, but he was at London with the king. When Watte Tyler, and Iacke Strawe entered into Cauntorbury, all the Common people made greatioy, for all the towne was of their mind. And there they tooke counsaile to go to London to the King, and to send some of their companie ouer the Thames into Essex, and likewise to send another company into Sussex, and into the Counties of Stafford, and Bedford, to speake to the people, that they should all come to the farther syde of London, and thereby to close London rounde about, so that the King should not stop their passages, and that they should all mete together on Corpus Christi day.

They that were at Cauntorbury did much harme, for they entered into Saint Thomas Church, and robbed, and brake vp the Bishops Chamber. And in robbyng and bearyng out their pillage, sayde, A, this Chauncelor of England hath had a good Market to bring together all this riches: he shall geue vs nowe an accompt of the revenues of England, and of the great profites that he hath gathered sithen the Coronation.

Then this Monday they came from Cauntorbury, and tooke their way to Rochester. And in their passage they spoyled the houses of all men of lawe that stood in their way, The rebels were whether they were Spirituall or Temporall. And when they were come to Rochester, men of lawe, there they had good cheere, for the people of that towne were of that minde. And then whether they they went to the Castel there, and tooke the knight that had the rule thereof, who was temporall. called Sir Iohn Motton: and they sayde vnto him, Sir Iohn, you must go with vs, and ye shalbe our souereigne Capteyne, and doe that we will have you doe. The Knight made many excuses very honestly and discretely, but it analled him nothing, for they sayde vnto him, Sir John, if ye do not as we will have you do ye are but dead. The Knight perceyuyng those people in that furye, and readie to slay him: He then fearyng death, agreed vnto them, and so he went with them, though against his will. And in like maner did they in other countries in England, as Essex, Sussex, Stafford, Bedford, and Warwike, euen to Lincolne. For they brought the knightes and Gentlemen into such a feare, that they caused them to go with the whether socuer they would have them, as the Lorde Mo-- lin a great Baron, sir Stephen of Hales, and sir Thomas of Gisighen, and other.

Then on the Tuesday these people lodged at Rochester, and from thence departed and came ouer the ryuer there, and so kept on their way towarde London, vntill they came to Datford, spoylyng and brennyng as they went, all the houses that belonged to any man of lawe, what soeuer they were, and they stroke of the heades of dyuers personnes: And so long they came forwarde, that at the last they came to Blackheth, which is within foure myle of London, and euer as they went, they sayde they were the Kings men, and the scruauntes of the noble Commons of England.

But when they of the Citie of London knewe that they were so neere vnto them: The Maior closed the Gates, and stopped the passages.

And whyle the lewde company lay on Blackheth, they agreed the next day, which was Wednesday, to sende syr Iohn Motton (whome they called their knight) to the king, to shewe him that all that they had done and doe, is for him and his honour: and howe the realme of Englande hath not bene well gouerned of a great space, neyther for the honour nor common profite of the same, by his Vncles, nor yet by the clergie, and specially by the Archbishop of Cauntorburie his Chauncelour, of whome they would have accompt: But when they had well bethought themselves, they wylled Syr Iohn Motton to let these things alone, and to say to the king that they desyred to speake with him, because that to him, and to none other they woulde open their griefes. The aforesayde knight durst doe none other, but passed over the Thames and came to the Towre, praising to speake with the king. The king and they that were with him in the towre, desirous to here newes,wylled that the knight should come vnto them. And at that tyme there were present with the king, first the princesse his mother, and hys two brethren, the Erle of Kent, and the Lorde Iohn Holland, the Erle of Salsburie, the Erle of Warwike, the Erle of Oxford, the Archebishop of Cauntorbury, the Lord of Saint Iohns, Sir Robert of Namure, the Lord of Vertaigne, the Lorde of Gomegines, the Majour of London, and dyuers other notable Citizens.

Thys Knight syr Iohn Motton, who was well knowen among them, for he was one of the kinges officers. He kneeled downe before the king, and sayde. My redouted Lorde, let it not displease your grace, the message that I must shew vnto you, for deare syr, it is by force and agaynst my will, Sir Iohn, sayde the king, saye what ye will, I holde you excused, Sir the commons of your realme hath sent me vnto you, for to desyre you to come and speake with them on Blackheth, for they desyre to speake with you and none other. And syr ye neede not to have any doubt of your person, for they will doe you no hurte, for they holde and will holde you for their king: But Sir, they say they will shew you divers things the which shall be right necessary for you to take heede of, when they speake with you, of the which thinges I have no charge to shewe you: But I humbly beseeche you, to geue me your aunswere, suche as may appease them, and that they maye knowe for truth that I have spoken with you, for they have my children in hostage vntill I returne agayne vnto them: and if I returne not agayne, they will sley my children incontynent. Then sayde the king, ye shall have aunswere foorthwith.

Then the king toke counsayle what was best for him to doe, and it was anone determined that the nexte morning the king would go downe by water, and without fayle speake with them, by the Thames side, whether he wylled that a certaine of them should come vnto him.

And when syr Iohn Motton had that aunswer, he desyred nothing else, and so he tooke his leaue of the king and of his Lords, and returned agayne to Blackheth, where he had left mo then. lx. thousande men: And there he declared his aunswere, which was, that the next morning they should sende some of their counsayle vnto the Thames, and the king would come and speake with them. This aunswere greatly pleased them, and so passed away that night, and the fourth parte of them fasted for lack of victuall, which greued them muche.

In the morning being thursday, the king being accompanied wyth the Erle of Salsburie, the Erle of Warwike, the Erle of Suffolk and certaine Knightes, tooke his Barge and rowed downe along the Thames to Detforde, and there were come downe the hill about ten thousand of the aforesayde persons, to see and speake with the king.

And when they sawe the kings Barge comming, they began to showte, and made suche

a criq

-a crie as if all the Deuills in hell had bene among them. And they had brought with them Sir Iohn Motton, to the entent that if the King had not come, they would have hewen hym all to pieces, and so they promysed hym.

And when the king and his Lords sawe the demeanour of the people, the stowtest hearted of them that were with the king were afrayed. And the Lordes counsayled the king not to take any landyng there, but to rowe vp and downe the ryuer. And the king demaunded of them what they would, for sayde he, I am come hether to speake with you. And they all with one voyce sayde: we woulde that ye shoulde come a lande, and then we will shewe you what we lack. Then the Erle of Salsbury aunswered for the king, and sayde, Sirs, ye be not in suche good order nor araye that the king ought to speake with you. And with those wordes, they were somewhat stayed. Then the King was counsayled to return agayne to the Towre of London, and so he did. And when they sawe that, they were enflamed with wrath and returned to the hill where the great bande was. And there they shewed them what aunswere they had, and howe the king was returned to the Towre of London. Then they cryed all with one voyce, let vs go to London, and so they tooke their wave thether, and in their goyng they bet downe the Lawyers houses without all mercie, and many other houses of suche as had offices vnder the King. And specially they brake vp the Kinges prisons, as the Marshalsey, and kinges Benche, and delyuered freely all the prisoners that were within. And at the bridge foote, because the Gates were closed, they threatened sore the Citezens of London, saying how they would brenne all the suburbes, and also sley all the commons of the Citie, and set the Citie on fyre. And within the Citie were a great number of their affinitie, and they sayde: why doe not we let these good felowes into the Citie? they are oure felowes, and that that they doe, is for vs: And shortly after the gates were opened, and they entred into the Citie, and went into houses, and sate downe to eate and drinke. And they could call for nothing but it was brought vnto them, for every man was readie to make them good cheere, and to please them with meate and drinke.

Then their Capteynes Watte Tyler, Iacke Straw, Iacke Shepard, and other, to the Watte Tyler number of. xx. thousand, went through London, and came to the Sauoy, which then was lack Shepheard, a goodly place, and perteyned to the Duke of Lancaster. And when they were entered lohn Wall, therein, they first slue the kepers thereof, and then spoyled and robbed the house. And when they had so done, they set fyre on it, and cleane consumed and destroyed it: And Sauoy brent. then came vnto the Temple and other Innes of Court, and spoyled the Bookes of law, and the recordes of the Counter, and set all the prisoners of Newegate and the Counters at large. And when they had this done, then they went streight to the goodly Hospitall of the Rhodes, called Saint Iohns beyond Smithfielde, and spoyled that likewyse, and then consumed it with fyre. Then they went from streete to streete in London, and slue all the Flemynges that they could meete withall, eyther in Church or in any other place. and they brake up divers houses of the Lombardes, and robbed them, and toke their goodes at their pleasure. And the same tyme they slue in the Citie a riche Citizen called Richard Lion Richard Lion, for that Watte Tyler once dwelled with him, and on a tyme did beate him, wherefore he was nowe reuenged vpon him, and caused his head to be striken off, and put ypon the point of a Speare, and made it to be borne before him throughout London. Thus these vngracious people demeaned themselves, like mad and outrageous beastes. And toward night they went to Saint Katherines before the Tower of London: saiving howe they would neuer departe thence vntill they had the king at their pleasure, and vntill that he had graunted vuto them all that they would aske, and have speciall accomptes of the Chauncelor of England to know where all the treasure was become that he had leuyed through the realme: & without he made a good accompt thereof, it should not be for his profite. And so after they had spent all this day, beyng Thursday, and then called-Corpus Christi day, and was then a highe and festivall daye, in doyng of mischiefes and murders, they rested at night before the Towre, as aforesayde.

But here maye ye well thinke, that this was a heavy and troublous night vnto the king, and those that were with him in the Tower, for such was the behaviour of these vileynes, that dyuerse and sondry tymes in the night they showted and cryed as all the deuilles in hell had roared.

And in this Euenyng the King was counsayled by his brethren and Lordes, and by sir Nicholas Walworth Maior of London, and divers other worshipfull Citizens, that in the night tyme they should have issued out of the Tower, and have entred into the Citie, & there to have had ayde, & so to have slaine al those vnhappy people that then were at their rest, for it was thought that many of them were dronken, by reason whereof they might have beene slaine like flees, and among.xx. of them there was scant one in harnesse. And surely the good men of London might have done this at their ease, for they had secretly in their houses a great number of they friendes, and servauntes readie harnessed.

And also sir Robert Canolle was in his lodgyng, keepyng the kinges treasure, with sixe score readie at his commaundement. And in lyke maner was sir Perducas Dalbert, who was as then at London. In somuche as there might have bene assembled, viij, thousand men well harnessed and appoynted: Howbeit, there was nothing done, for they were in feare of the rest of the Commons of the Citie, and against the number of the Commons of the Countrie were. lx. thousand and mo.

Then the Erle of Sarisbury, and the wyse men about the king sayd, sir if ye can appease them with faire wordes, it were best and most profitable so to do, and to graunt them every thing that they desyre. So this counsaile was accepted and followed, and the Maior countermaunded not to stirre that night. And in the Citie with the Maior, there were xij. Aldermen, wherof. ix. of them helde with the king, & the other three toke part with the vngracious people, as it was after well knowen, the which they ful derely bought.

On the Friday in the morning the people that were lodged at Saint Katherins, began to apparell themselves, and to cry and showte, and sayde: Without the king would come out and speake with them, they would assault the Tower, and take it perforce, and sley all them that were therein.

Then the king doubted those wordes, and he was counsayled to go out and speake with them. And then the king sent vnto them that they should all draw to a fayre plaine place called Myle ende, where as the people of the Citie did vse to shote, and thether the king promised to come to them, and to graunt them whatsoeuer they desyred.

Then the people began to depart, specially the Commons of the Villages, and went to the same place, but all went not thether, for they were not all of one condicion, nor of one minde. For there were some that desyred nothing but spoyle, and the vtter destruction of noble men, and to rob and sacke London: And that was the principal matter of their beginning, the which they well shewed. For assone as the Tower Gate opened, and that the king issued out with his two brethren, and the Erle of Sarisbury, the Erle of War wike, the Erle of Oxford, Sir Robert of Namure, the Lord of Briteyne, the Lord Gomegines, and dyuerse other. Then Watte Tyler, Iacke Strawe, and Iohn Bal, alias Wall, and mo then foure hundreth entered into the Tower, and brake vp Chamber after Chamber, and at the last found the Archbishop of Cauntorbury called Simon, a valiaunt man & a wise, and high Chauncelor of England, and him they brought out, and stroke off his heade, and also beheaded the Lorde of Saint Iohns, and a gray Frier, which was a Phisition belonging to the Duke of Lancaster, for hatred that they had to his mayster, and a Sergeaunt at armes called John Laige. And these foure heades they put vpon the endes of foure long Speares, and they made them to be borne before them through the streetes of the Citie. And at the last set them on high at London bridge, as though they had -beene Traytors to the king and to the realme. Also these wretches entred into the Princesse Chamber, and brake her head, with the which she was so sore afrayde, that she sowned, and so was taken up and borne to the water syde, and put in a Barge, & concred, and so conveyed to a place called the Royall, which then was the Queenes Wardrobe, and there she was all that day and night, as a woman halfe deade, vntill shee was comforted with the king her sonne, as ye shall after here.

Now when the king was come to Myle ende without London, he put out of his company his two brethren the Erle of Kent, and syr Iohn Hollande and the Lorde of Gomegines, for they durst not appere before the people. And when the King and his other Lords were there, he founde there a. lx. thousand men of dyuers Villages and of sundrie Countries in Englande.

And the King entered in among them, and spake vnto them gently and sayde. A good people, I am your king, what lacke ye? what doe ye saye? Then such as heard him sayd, that ye will make vs tree for euer, our selues, our heyres, and oure landes, and that we be called no more bondmen, nor from henceforth so to be reputed or taken. Sirs, sayde the king, I doe gladly graunt your request: withdrawe you home to your awne houses, and into suche Villages as ye came from, and leave behind you of every Village two or three, and I will cause writinges to be made and seale them with my seale, the which they shall have with them, conteining every thing that ve demaund. And to the entent that ye shall be the better assured, I will cause my Banners to be delyuered vnto euery Baylywike, Shire and Countie.

These wordes quieted well the common people, and suche as were simple and good plaine men that were come thether, and wist not wel wherfore: They aunswered the king, it was well sayde, they desyred no better. And so they beganne to withdrawe themselues. and came into the Citie of London. And the king sayde also one worde, the which greatly contented them, and that was: syrs, among you good men of Kent, ye shall have one of my banners, and ye of Essex another, of Bedford, of Cambridge, of Stafford, of Lyncolne, and of Lyn, eche of you shall have one. And also I pardon every thing that ye have done hetherto, so that ye followe my Banners, and returne home to your houses. They all aunswered they would so doe. Thus these people departed and went to London.

Then the king appointed mo then, xxx. Clerkes the same Fridaye to write with all diligence letters patents, to be sealed with the kinges seale, and to be delvuered to these people: and as they receaued their wrytings, so they departed into their Countries.

But yet the great venome remayned behinde, for Watte Tyler, Iack Strawe, and other of their Captaines sayde, they would not so depart, and there agreed vnto them mo then. xxx, thousand: And thus they abode stil, and made no haste, neyther to have the Kings wryting nor Seale, for their ententes was to have spoyled the Citie. The which thing all the honest Citezens of London greatly feared, and therefore had prively in their houses their friends in a readynesse.

When it drewe somewhat toward night, the king came to the Towre in the Royall, where the Princesse his mother beyng in great feare had remayned all that daye, to comfort her and taried there with her all that night.

And here (sayth Froissart) I will tell you what happened among these vnhappie people And here (sayth Proissart) I will tell you what happened among these villappie people william Lister before the Citie of Norwiche by a Capitaine among them named Wylliam Lyster of Stafforde. The aforenamed daye of Corpus Christi that the aforesayde lewde people enter- rebels. ed into London, the verye same tyme they assembled together of Stafford, of Lynne, of Cambridge, of Bedford. And as they were comming towardes London they had a Captaine among them called Lyster, and as they came they stayed before Norwiche, and all the wave as they passed, they caused every man to arise with them, so that they left fewe lewde people behinde them. And the cause why they stayed before Norwich was this. There was a knight, and a Captaine of the Towne called Sir Robert Sale, he was no gentleman Sir Robert Sale borne, but he was sage and valiaunt in armes, and for his valiauntnesse king Edwarde a valyaunt Knight. made him knight, & he was of his body one of the mightiest men in Englad.

Lyster the lewde Captayne of this route, thought that this man was meete to be a Captaine among them to the entent they might be the more dradde and feared of the people: wherfore wherfore they sent vnto him that he shoulde come and speake with them in the fielde. The knight considered that it were better for him to go and speake with them, rather then by his not goyng he should prouoke them to doe any outrage to the towne, and therefore he toke his horse, and ryd vnto them all alone, hauyng no company with him. And when they sawe him, they shewed him most ioyfull and louing countenaunce and honored him very much, and prayed him to alight of his horse, for they were desyrous to common with him, and he so did, wherein he did very fondly. And assone as he was alighted, they came rounde about him, and began to speake very fayre vnto him, and sayde. Sir Robert, ye are a Knight and a man greatly betoued in thys Countrie, and counted for a valiaunt man. And though you be so, yet we knowe you well, ye are no gentleman borne, but sonne to a Villeyne, suche as we be: Therfore we will that ye shall go with vs, and we will make you so great a Lorde that one quarter of Englande shall be vnder your obeysaunce.

When the knight had heard them thus speake, it offended him not a little, wherefore beholding them with a cruell looke, he sayde vnto them: Aduoyde ye false trayterous and vngracious people: wene you that I will forsake the obedience and duety that I owe vnto my souereigne Lorde for such a company of knaues as ye be, which should be to my dishonour for euer? I had rather ye were all hanged, as I doubt not but ye shall be, for that wyll be your ende. And with those wordes he had thought to have lept agayne to his horse, but he fayled of the Styrop and the horse sterted awaye.

Then they cryed all with voyce, at him, and sley him without mercy. And when he heard those wordes he let his horse go, and drewe out his sworde, and beganne to skirmishe with them, and he made suche rome about him that it was pleasure to beholde him, for there was none that durst come nere him. Howbeit, some there were that did approche neere vnto him, but at every stroke that he gaue, he cut of eyther legge, head, or arme, and there was none so hardie but that they feared him. He did there suche deedes of armes, that it was maruell to beholde, but the number of these lewde people were mo then. xl. thousande, and they shot sore at him and wounded him to death. But yet before he dyed he slue. xij. of them out of hande, beside many other that he hurte: and finally he was stryken to the earth, and they cut of his armes and legges, and then hewed his body all to peeces. And thys was the end of Syr Robert Sale, which did not a little offend all the knights and squires of Englande: But now to returne where we left.

Sir Robert Sale slayne.

On Saturday, the next day in the forenoone, the king had bene at Westminster, and came from thence on the backsyde through Holborne into London, and thought to have ridden to the Tower, and as he came over Smithfielde, he sawe there Watte Tyler, Iacke Strawe, and their companie assembled together, which caused him a little to stay, and considering them wel, they semed to be nere vnto the number of. xx. thousand, and all this company had the kings Banners, for they were delyuered vnto them the day before. And these vileynes sayde among themselves, let vs overrunne and spoyle this Citie wherein we may have great rychesse, before that they of Essex, Sussex, Cambridge, Bedford, Arundell, Warwike, Redyng, Oxenford, Guylford, Lynne, Stafforde, Lyncolne, Yorke, and Duram do come hether, For Wallior and Lister will bring them hether, and they will be Lordes of London if we be not, and therefore nowe seeying we be first here, why should we not geue the attempt: and to this they were all agreed, and even therewithall the king came.

And when Watte Tyler sawe the king, he sayd to his company, yonder is the king, I will go speake with him, stirre not you quoth he to his people, from hence, except I make you a signe, and when I make you a signe, come on together, and slay them all (except-the king.) But do the king no hurt, for he is yong, and we shall rule him as we list, and leade him with vs round about England, and so without doubt we may be Lordes of the realme. And therewith he spurred his horse, and came to the king, so nere him that hys horse touched the kinges horses heade as they roade, and the first worde that he sayde vnto

An arrogant and the king was this, Sir king, seest thou all yonder people? ye truely sayd the king, whereprowde villeyn.

fore askest thou that? Because sayde he, they be all at my commaundement, and have sworne to me fayth and trouth, to do all that I will have them. In a good tyme sayde the king, be it so. Then sayde Watte Tyler, as he that sought nothing but ryot. What, beleuest thou king, that these people and as many mo that are in London, which are at my commaundement, that they will depart from thee thus, without hauyng thy letters? No sayd the King, ye shall have them, they are appoynted for you, and shall be delivered eche of you one after another: Wherefore good felowes withdrawe your selues to your people, and cause them to depart out of London, for it is our entent that eche of you by Villages and Towneships shall have letters Patentz as I have promised you. With those wordes Watte Tyler cast his eyen on a Squier that was ther with the king, and bare the kinges sworde. And Watte Tyler hated greatly the same Squier, for wordes that had passed the day before betwene them, and sayde vnto him, what, sayth he, art thou there? Geue me thy dagger. Nay sayd the Squier, that will I not do, wherefore should I geue it thee? The king behelde the squier and sayd, geue it him, let him haue it, and he gaue it him. And when Watte Tyler had it, he began to play wyth it in his hand, turning of it: And then he sayde againe to the Squier, geue me that sworde, nay sayd he, it is the kings sworde, thou art not worthie to haue it, for thou art but a knaue. And there were no mo here but thou and I, thou durst not demaund any such things of me, neyther to speake as thou hast spoken, for as much Golde as would lye in yonder Abbey: By my fayth sayd Watte Tyler, I will neuer eate meate vntill I haue thy head.

And with those wordes the Maior of London came to the king, with xij. horses well armed vnder their coates, and so he brake the prease, and saw and heard the demeanor of Watte Tyler in the presence of the king, and he sayde vnto him, Ha thou knaue, howe darest thou be so bolde in the kinges presence to speake suche wordes, it is to much to suffer thee so to do. Then the king began to chafe, and sayde to the Maior, set handes on him. And when the king had sayd so, Watte Tyler sayde to the Maior, a Gods name, what haue I sayde to displease thee? Yes truely quoth the Maior, thou false stinking knaue, shalt thou speake thus in the presence of the king my naturall Lorde? I wishe neuer to liue, except thou dearely by it. And with those wordes the Maior drewe out his sworde, and stroke Watte Tyler suche a stroke on the heade, that he fell downe at the And for this the feete of his horse. And assone as he was fallen, he was compassed round about, so that Citie geneth a he was not seene of his company. Then a Squier alighted called Iohn Standishe, and sworde in their thrust his sworde into Watte Tylers belly, and so he dyed.

Then the vnhappy people there assembled, perceyuyng their Capteyne slaine, began to murmure among themselues, and sayd: A, our Capteine is slaine, let vs go and slay them all. And therewith they raunged themselues in the place in maner of battaile, and their Bowes bent before them.

Thus the king began a great outrage, howbeit all happened to the best: for as soone as Watte Tyler was on the earth, the king departed from all his company, and all alone he roade to the naughtie companie, but before his goyng, he sayde to his awne people, sirs, followe not me, let me alone. And when he came to the vngracious people, who had put themselves in order of warre, to be revenged of the death of their Captaine: The king sayde vnto them, Sirs what ayleth you, you shall have no Capteine but me, I am and will be your king and Captaine, be you therefore quiet. And a great number that heard him speake, and seeying him in presence, quieted them selues, and departed. But such as were wicked and maliciously mynded, would not depart, but made a shewe as though they would do somewhat.

Then the king returned to his awne company, and demaunded of them what was best to doe. Then he was counsayled to drawe into the field, for to flie away was no boote. Then sayde the Maior, it is good that we do so, for I thinke surely we shall have some comfort of them of London, and of suche good men as be of our parte, who are prouided and have their friends and men armed in their houses.

And in this meane time, a crye and noyes went through the Citie, how the king and the Maiour were lyke to be slayne by these naughtie people: By reason of which noyes, a great number of good men issued out of their houses, and came into Smithfield where the king was. And they were anone to the number of seauen or eyght thousand men well armed.

Sir Robert Canoll. Sir Perducas Dalbret. And first, thether came Sir Robert Canol and Sir Perducas Dalbret well accompanied, and dyners of the Aldermen of London, and with them sixe hundreth men in harneys. And a worthie and puissaunt man of the City which was the kinges Draper, called Nicholas Brembre, and he brought wyth him a great companie, and euer as they came, they raunged themselues on foote in order of battayle.

And on the other part these vnhappie people were readie raunged, makyng countenaunce as though they would presently fight: and they had with them dyuers of the kings Banners.

There the King made foure Knightes. The one the Majour of London, Syr Nycholas Walwoorth, Sir Iohn Standishe and Syr Nycholas Brembre. Then the Lords sayde among themselves, what shall we doe? we see our enimies who would gladly sley vs, if they might have the better hande of vs. Syr Robert Canoll counsayled to go and fight with them and sley them all. But the king would not consent therevnto, but sayde: Naye, I will not so, I will sende to them commaunding them to sende me agayne my Baners, and thereby we shall see what they wyll doe: Howbeit, eyther by fayre meanes or otherwise, I will have them. That is well sayde, quoth the Erle of Salsbury. Then these newe knightes were sent to them, and these knightes made token to them that they should not shoote at them. And when they came so nere them that their speeche might be heard, they sayde: Sirs, the king commaundeth you to sende him agayne his Banners. And incontinent they delyuered the Banners, & sent them to the King, and then they were commaunded vpon payne of their heads, that all suche as had letters of the king, to bring them foorth, and to sende them agayne to the king, and many of them delyuered their letters, but not all. Then the king commaunded them to be all torne in their pre-And assoone as the kinges Banners were taken from them, they kept none array, but the most parte of them threwe downe their bowes, and so brake their array, and returned into London. Sir Robert Canoll was sore displeased that he might not set on them, but the King would not, but sayde he would be reuenged on them well enough, and so he was after.

Thus these beastly people departed, some one waye and some another. And the king and his Lordes, and all his company right comely and orderly entred into London with great ioye, and foorthwith his grace went to the Lady Princesse his mother, beyng in the Tower of the Roiall, where she had taried two dayes, and two nightes, in great feare (as she had good cause) And when she sawe the king her sonne, she greatly reioyced and sayde: A fayre sonne, what paine and sorow haue I suffred for you this daye. Then the king spake and sayde, Madame, I know it right well, but now I pray you reioyce and thanke God, for it is high time. I haue this daye recourred mine heritage and the realme of England, which I had almost lost. And thus the king taried that day with his mother, and euery Lord went peaceably to their awne lodgings. And foorthwith a proclamation was made in euery streete in the kings name, that all maner of men, not being of the Citie of London, neyther hath dwelt there the space of one yere, to departe. And if any suche be founde there, the next day, which was Sunday, by the Sunne rysing that they should be taken as Traytors to the king, and to lose their heades. Assone as this proclamation was made, they sparkled abroade, euery man to their awne homes.

And here is to be noted that in the tellyng of all this storye, Sir Iohn Froyssart nameth one Iohn Ball to be a chiefe Captaine, and I finde none other Aucthour that nameth any such, but Iack straw, and Iack Shepard. But I thinke it is some fault in the print, and that it shoulde be Iohn Wall, for in the beginning of the storie is set foorth that a simple priest called Iohn Wall was the first mouer, and special authour, and setter foorth of thys rebellion, and therefore lyke enough that he was one of their Capitaines. And it should the rather appere so to be, for that in the beginning of theyr enterprices, they went first to the Byshop of Cauntorburie, and spoyled hys house, and bare suche malice vnto him that after they slue him in the tower of London. And the same Byshop of Cauntorbury had three or foure times emprisoned the sayde Iohn Wall for his lewde communication that tended to rebellion, & therfore most lyke it should be Iohn Wall, y sought

In like maner the aforesayde author Sir Iohn Froyssart doth in thys story acompt Watte Tyler to be the chiefe of this rowte, whom he saith was a Tyler in dede, and an vngracious patrone. But Fabian, Caxton, Rastell, Cowper, Polidore and many other Aucthours doe impute Iack Straw to be chiefe, and more Froyssart sayeth it was Watte Tyler that bragged with the king, and toke vp the Maior of London in the kinges presence, and also that it was Watte Tyler whome the Maior of London did ouerthrow: But all other say it was Iack Strawe, and it should seeme rather Watte Tyler, for that in all this discourse he was the busiest bragger of all the Captaines. But which of them so euer it.

was, they were naught all.

But nowe sayth Froyssart, Iohn Ball, and Iack Strawe were founde hidden in an olde tohn Ball and house, where they had thought to have stollen awaye, but they could not, for they were lacke Strawe accused by their awne company. Of the taking of them, the king and his Lordes were hidden in an glad, he caused their heades to be striken of, and Watte Tylers also, and commaunded olde house, them to be set vpon Lodon bridge, and those valiaunt mens heads to be taken downe, which they had set on before. These tydings spreade abroade so, that the people of The ende of the strauge Countries which were comming towardes London, returned back agayne to their rebels of Kent. houses, and durst come no further.

And here we must returne to the Duke of Lancaster who all the time of this rebellio was in Scotland in v treatie of a peace as ye have heard before. And so long they continued this treatie, that at the last a truce was concluded to remain for thre yeres, & when this truce was cocluded then the Lordes of eche part made good chere to other. Then sayd the Erle of Douglas to the Duke of Lancaster: sir we know right well of the rebellion of the common people in England, & the peril that the realme is in at this present, and sir we take you for a right sage & valiaunt man, that in all the tyme of his communication of the treatie ye would not seme to vnderstand any thing therof: but syr, we say now vnto you, & we offer ourselues to be redy to aide you with. v. or. vj. C. speares, and to do you seruice. By my fayth saide the Duke, gentle Lords I thanke you, I will not refuse your friendly offer: howbeit I thinke verily that the king my lord hath so good counsail, y it shall be pacefied right well: howbeit, I desyre you to have a saufe conduyt for me & mine to returne into your Coutrie if nede be, vntill the matter be appeased. The Erle Douglas, and the Erle Moret who had the kinges aucthoritie, graunted him hys desyre, and so they departed, the Scottes went to Edenbourg.

The Duke of Lancaster and his people wente to Barwike, wenyng to the Duke to have entered into the towne, for when he passed that way, he left all his provision behinde him: But the Capteyne of the towne called Sir Mathew Redmayn denyed him to sir Mathew enter, and closed in the gates against him and his, saiying he was so commaunded by the Redmayn Cap-Erle of Northumberland. And when the Duke heard these words, he was sore displeased wick denied the and sayde: Howe commeth this to passe, Mathew Redmayn? is there in Northumber-Duke of Lancaster to enter lande a greater souereigne then I am, which should let me to passe this way where all my into the towner. provision is with you? what meaneth these newes? By my fayth sir, sayde the Knight, this is true that I say, and by the commaundement of the King: and sir, this that I do to you is right sore agaynst my will, but I must nedes do it, and therefore for Goddes sake holde me excused, for I am thus commaunded vpon paine of my life, that I shall not suffer you,

Then the Duke not saiying all that he thought, brake out of this matter, and sayde. Sir Redmayn, what tydynges out of England? and he sayde, he knewe none, but that the Countries were sore moued, and the king had sent to all this Country to be in a redinesse whensoeuer he should send. Then the Duke mused a little, and sodeinly turned his horse, and bid the Knight farewell, and so went to the Castell of Rosebourgh, and the Constable received him. Then the Duke of Lancaster was counsayled, that because he was not sure howe the matters went in Englande, neyther knewe not of whome he was beloued, or hated, that therfore he should send vnto the Lordes of Scotland, desiryng them to sende a quantitie of men of warre to conuey him into Scotland: And then he sent to the Erle Douglas, who was as then at Alquest. And when the Erle sawe the letter, he was right glad thereof, and made the Messenger great cheere, and sent worde thereof to the Erle Moret, and to the Erle de la Mare his brother, praising them incontinent without any delay to meete with him at Morlane the thirde day after, with a certeine number well horsed and appointed. Assoone as these Lordes knewe this, they sent for men and friendes, and so came to Morlane, and there they found the Erle Douglas, and so they roade altogether, to the number of fine hundreth Speares, and came to the Abbey of Mauros, which was ix, little myle frome Rosebourgh. And on the way they met the Duke, and there the one embraced the other right louingly, and then kept foorth their iourney vntill they came to Edenbourgh, where the king of Scottes of late had beene, but as then he was in the wilde Scottishe. There the Duke of Lancaster was greatly honoured of the Erle Douglas, and of the Barons of Scotland and the Castell was deliuered to the Duke to lie in, and there he lay vntill other newes came out of England, which was not so soone as the Duke had wisshed. And in the mean season, many naughtie reportes and rumors were raysed and bruted by the rebellious people, of the Duke of Lancaster, affirmyng that he was become Scottish, and a traytour to England: and Lyster, Watte Tyler, Tacke Strawe, John Ball, and other Capteynes of the rebelles affirmed at the present hours of their death, the same to be true. The which caused many shamefull and slaunderous tales to be reported of the Duke in every parte of England. And no doubt these villeynes bare great hatred to the Duke of Lancaster, as appered by the brennyng of his house, and spoylyng of the same, and by the murderyng of his Phisition.

Slanderous and lewde reports made of the Duke of Laneaster.

And soone after the death of these lewde Capteynes, the king visited his realme and sate in sundrie places, and made inquirie of the aforesayde rebels, and he persecuted them in very quiet maner, from one village to another, and from one towne and Countie to another, so long vntill at the last, he had executed aboue. xv. hundreth of them, and the rest he pardoned, and so all the realme was quieted.

Then the king sent for his vncle the Duke of Lancaster out of Scotland, whereof he was glad, and at his departing he thanked the Lordes of Scotland of their great friendship. And the Erle Douglas, the Erle Moret, and other Lordes of Scotland would nedes bring him as farre as Mauros and there eche tooke leaue of other. And thus the Duke came to Rosebourgh, to Newcastel vpon Tyne, and so to Durham, & Yorke, & at the last to Lōdon.

And when he had shewed to the king and his Counsaile how he had done with the Scottes: Then he forgate not to shewe howe Sir Mathew Redmayn shutte him out of Barwike. And the Duke inquired of the king if he would allow that deede, and it seemed that the king did but faintly allowe it. So the Duke sayde no more at that tyme.

And shortly after on the day of the Assumption of our Ladie in August, the king helde a solempne feast at Westminster, vnto the which came many Nobles and Lordes of England, and there was the Erle of Northumberland, and the Erle of Nottyngham, and dyners other Lordes of the North. And the King made Knightes the same day the young Erle of Pembrooke, Sir Robert Maubre, sir Nicholas Twyford, and sir Adam Fraunces.

And at this feast there were great wordes betweene the Duke of Lancaster, and the Erle of Northumberland. The Duke sayd vnto him, Henrie Percye, I knewe not that ye were so great a man in England, as to close the Gates of any towne, Citie, or Castell, against the Duke of Lancaster. The Erle vinderstood whereof the Duke meant, and he tempered his speech, and sayde, Sir I denie not that the knight did, for I can not. For the king here present commaunded me streyghtly, that on mine honour, and on my lyfe, I should not suffer any maner of person, Lord, or other, to enter into any Citie, towne, or Castell in Northumberland, without he were heyre of the place. And sir the king and his Counsaile may well excuse me, for they knewe that ye were in Scotland, and therefore they should have excepted you. What quoth the Duke, say you that there ought a exceptation to have beene made for me, who am vncle to the king, and have kept mine heritage as well or better then any other have done, next to the king, and knowing that I was gone for the businesse of the realme into Scotlande? This excuse can not excuse you, but that you have done euill, and greatly agaynst mine honour: and you have geven therby an occasion to bring me in suspition that I had done some treason in Scotland, when at my returning the kinges townes are closed against me, and specially there where my provision was: Wherefore I say, ye have acquited yourselfe right evill. And for the blame and slaunder that ye have brought me into, I nowe to purge my selfe, here in the presence of the King do cast you here my gage: reyse it and ye dare.

Then the King stepped foorth and sayde: Right louyng Vncle, all that was done, I must take it vpon me. And I must excuse the Erle of Northumberland, and speake for him. For we commaunded him on paine of his life that he should kepe close all the townes of the Marches, and ye knowe well howe our realme was then in great trouble and perill. The fault was in the Clerke that wrote the letters, and in the negligence of our Counsaile: For of truth we should have excepted you: Wherefore I will and also desire you, to put apart this end opinion that ye have of the Erle of Northumberland, and I take the charge on me, and discharge the Erle in that behalfe. Then kneled downe before the Duke, the Erle of Arondell, the Erle of Sarisbury, the Erle of Suffolke, the Erle of Stafford, and the Erle of Leycester, and sayde vnto him: Sir you here howe louingly and how truely the King speaketh, wherefore we besech you to agree to his pleasure. Wel quoth the Duke, who was inflamed with yre, I will hold my peace, and as it pleaseth the King to have it, it is reason that I be content therwith, & so departed.

In this time as sayth Polidore in his boke De Inventoribus rerum, Gonnes were first in The first inventoribus vse, which were invented by one of Germany. But sayth he, least he should be curssed tion of Gonnes. for ever that was the Authour of thys invention, therefore his name is hidden, & not knowne. But dyuers say that a Monke was the inventer, though they name him not.

In the Moneth of Aprill next following, there landed in Kent Dame Anne the daughter of Charles the fourth, late Emperour deceased, and she was Sister vnto Wenceslaus who then was Emperour, the which of the Maior, and Citizens of London was honorably met Anne the daughvpon Blackheth, and conueyed with great triumph vnto Westmynster the eyght day of the the fourth late month of Maye, and shortly after was there solemply maried vnto king Richard.

And the sayde yere was a terrible, and a horrible earthquake throughout the vniuersall A terrible earth worlde as many Authours write, but namely in England, that threwe downe Castelles, quake. This yere by the commaundement of Pope Vrbane, Henry Spencer Byshop of Norwiche, with a great number of Spirituall men and other, went to warre vpon the King of-Spaine. And for the maintenance of thys warre, the Pope, as sayth Froissart, had sent vnto the said Bishop more then. xxx. Bulles, and also graunted to the King and to his Vincles, to further this enterprise a Disme of the Clergie. And then the preachers aduaunced and set foorth this voyage to be so acceptable before God, and that the benefite of the Popes Bulles, were of such value for the remission of sinne, that the people of Englande, who soone gaue credite therevnto, beleued verily that if they dyed that yere, they could not come into heaven, except they had geven somewhat in almose toward this warre. And in Londo (sayth Froissart) and in the Diocesse thereof there was gathered a Tonne full of Gold and silver, and according to the Popes Bulles, he that most gaue, obteyned most pardon. And whosoeuer dyed in that time, and gaue his goodes to further that voyage, he was cleane absolued from paine and from sinne, and he accompted himselfe most happie that dyed in that season to obtaine so noble an absolution. And thus was gathered a great Masse of money.

This Pope (as Fabian writeth) gaue aucthoritie to the savde Bishop to make warre vpon the king of Spaine, for that he contrarie to the Popes commaundement withhelde certaine possessions, belonging of right vnto syr Iohn of Gaunt Duke of Lancaster, in the right of his wife dame Constance.

But to say more truely, as divers Authours saye, it was for the malice that this Pope Vrbane bare vnto Pope Clement, to whome the Duches of Aniow had geuen the kingdomes of Naples, Cicilia, Apulia, and Calabria, of the which she wrote her selfe Queene.

In performance of which act, the sayde Byshop entring into the countrie of Flaundyrs, founde there the Flemyngs with divers miscreaunts, such as the king of Spaine had sent thether, making resistence against hym: wherefore he made upon them sharp warre, and wanne from them certaine townes, as Grauelyng, Burbourgh, and Dunkirke, and wanne great and riche pillage, so that he and his Souldiours stuffed and freight with it (as sayth Reynulph) xlj. shippes. But shortly after the Flemynges assembled with such power and strength, and gaue vnto the Englishmen such an assault about Dunkirke, tlat they were constreyned to geue back. And because the sayde shippes and goodes should not come agayne into the possession of his enimies, therfore he the sayde Bishop caused them to be set fyre within the Hauen, and so were spoyled both shippes and goodes. And although that after this mishap he recourred his strength, and layde siege vnto the towne of Ipre, and wrought the Flemynges much care and trouble, yet shortly after, such sicknesses fell among his people, as the Flux and other, that his souldiours dyed in great number: For the which he was compelled to leave his journey, and to return agayne into England.

A Combate.

A warlike Byshop.

> In thys yere also was a battaile or Combate done and holden in the Kings Palayce at Westminster, betwene one called Garcon Appellaunt, and Sir Iohn Anslyc Knight Defendaunt, of the which fight the knight was at length the Victour and forced his enemie to yeelde vnto him. For the which the sayde Garcon was immediatly from that place drawen to Tiborne, and there hanged for his false accusation.

And at this time, being the. vij. yere of the reigne of King Richarde, a truce or peace was concluded betwene him the french king, and the king of Scottes for one whole yere next ensuying, so that the french men should geue knowledge thereof vinto the Scottes.

After the conclusion of the aforesayde peace, certaine Lordes of Englande returning out of Fraunce, and vnderstandyng that the Frenche king had not yet geuen knowledge vnto the king of Scotlande of the truce, they now thinking to do a feate, assembled themselues with their powers, namely the Erle of Northumberland, the Erle of Nottingham, and the Barones of the borders and Marches of Scotland, and made a road into Scotland, and beganne to brenne the countrie and lande of the Erle of Douglas, and of the Lorde Lyndsey, and left nothing vnbrent to Edenbourgh.

But shortly after that the Englishmen had done this feate, and were returned agayne into Englande, the Scottes, although then they had knowledge of the peace, that was concluded in Fraunce, yet they would not take knowledge thereof: But the Erle Douglas to be reuenged, entered into Northumberland, and so into the land of the Lorde Percye, and there beganne to brenne, robbe, spoyle and destroy, and then returned by the lande of the Erle of Nottyngham and the Lord Mowbray, and there did much hurt, and so passed by Rosebourgh, but they taried not there, because they were so laden with pillage, prisoners and Cattell, and so returned into their Countrie againe without any daunger.

And thus one michiefe was requyted with another lyke michiefe.

Also, thys yere there came vnto king Richarde the king of Ermony, which was driven The king of out of his lande by the Infidelles and Turkes, and he prayed aide of the king to be restored to his dominion. The king feasted and comforted him according to his honour, and after counsayle taken with hys Lords concerning that matter, he gaue vnto him great somes of money, and other riche giftes: with the which (after he had taried in Englande about two Moneths) he departed with glad countenaunce.

And in this time a variaunce chaunced betweene Iohn Holland brother to the Erle of Avariaunce be-Kent, and the Erles sonne of Stafford: By reason of which variaunce in conclusion the Holland, and sonne of the Erle was slayne by the hande of Sir Iohn Holland: For the which dede the the Erles sonne of Stafford.

This yere the king assembled his high Court of parliament at Westminster, during the which he created two Dukes, a Marques & five Erles, The first was syr Edmond of Langley the kinges vncle, and Erle of Cambridge, who was created Duke of Yorke, syr Thomas of Woodstock Erle of Buckyngham was created Duke of Gloucester, Sir Robert Vere, who before was created Erle of Oxford, was now made Marques of Dublyn, Sir Henry Bolyngbrook sonne and heyre of Iohn of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster, was nowe afterwarde king made Erle of Darby, Sir Edward sonne and heyre to the Duke of Yorke was made Erle Henry the of Rutlande, Sir Iohn of Holland brother to the Erle of Kent was made Erle of Huntyngdon, Sir Thomas Mowbray was made Erle of Nottyngham, and Marshall of Englande, and syr Mighell de la Poole was made Erle of Suffolk, and Chauncelor of Eng-Mighel de la lande, who was hated and judged to be an euill man, both of the Lords and commons of Poole Chauncelor of England. this realme, as in the yere following shall be shewed. And by aucthoritie of the same Parliament, Sir Roger Mortimer Erle of March, and sonne and heyre vnto Sir Edmond Mortimer, and of Dame Philip eldest daughter and heyre vnto Sir Lyonell the second sonne tymer proclaymof Edward the thirde, was sone after proclaymed heyre apparaunt to the Crowne of Eng- ed heyre appalande. The which Sir Roger shortly after sayled into Ireland, to suppresse the rebellion & vnquietnesse of the people of his Lordship of Wolster, which he was Lorde of by his aforesayd mother. But while he was there occupied about the same, the wylde Irishe came vpon him in a great number, and slue him and many of his company.

This Sir Roger had issue, Edmond, and Roger, Anne, Alice, and Alianor that was made The issue of Sir a Nonne. The two aforesayde sonnes dyed without issue, and Anne the eldest daughter mer. was maryed to Richarde Erle of Cambridge, which Richard had issue by the sayde Anne, Isabell Ladie Bourcher, and Richard that was after Duke of Yorke, and father to King Edward the fourth, which sayde Richard Erle of Cambridge was put to death by Henrie the fift at Southhamton, as after shall appere.

Also this yere Sir Henry Bolyngbrooke Erle of Darbye, maryed the Countesse daughter Henry Bolyngof Harford, by whome he was lorde of that Countrie. And by her he had issue, Henry brooke Eric of Darby. that after him was King, Blaunche Duches of Barre, and Philip that was wedded to the King of Denmark: Also Thomas Duke of Clarence, John Duke of Bedford, and Humfrey Duke of Gloucester.

And where a litle before mencion is made, that sir Robert Vere was made made Marques of Dublyn, ye shall vnderstand, that now the same man was created Duke of Ireland, created duke of & that the King purposed to have made him King of Ireland if he might, such an affection the  $^{- { m Ireland.}}$ King had vnto him, albeit that all the Noble men disdeyned his high and sodeyne exaltyng, seeying that many of as good qualities and condicions as he was, and of as good blood, remayned still in their olde estate. This Robert was maryed to a fayre yong Ladie of King Edwardes blood, which he forsooke and put from him, and toke vnto him one of a bace blood, a Sadlers daughter, which was borne in the realme of Beame, named Lancicron, which came ouer with King Rychardes wife. The puttyng away of the former Lady, was the occasion of many great murmures and displeasures agaynst this Robert Vere, specially by the Duke of Gloncester Vncle vnto her, which determined vtterly when he sawe tyme, to revenge the injuryes done vnto his Neece. This grudge borne by the Duke of Gloucester, was not vnknowen to the Duke of Irelande, which cast in his minde by what meanes he might destroy the sayde Duke, and all those which toke his part. The tyme of Easter came, at which season it was before appoynted, that the Duke of Ireland should have taken his voyage into Ireland: But small preparation was made for his goyng ouer: But yet because it should be thought none otherwise but y the purpose should hold, the King tooke his iourney into Wales, vnder pretence to bring him to Ship: and yet meant nothing lesse, for his speciall purpose was to deuyse howe he might bring to passe to set holde vpon the Duke of Gloucester, the Erles of Arondell, Warwike, and Darbie, with many other noble men: And to this vngracious purpose was of counsaile Mighell de la Poole Chauncelor of Englande, Sir Robert Tresilian one of the Kinges chiefe Iustices, and Alexander Neuell Archebishop of Yorke, with dyuerse other, as after in this story shall more at large appere. And after that the king had continued a certeine of tyme in Wales, he put off the journey of the Duke into Ireland, and the King and the Duke returned to London, and thether had sommoned a parliament to be holden at Westminster. And these thinges thus wrought betwene the king and the other persons aforenamed, were not kept so secrete, but that the Duke of Gloucester, and the other Lordes had thereof knowledge. Wherefore when the tyme of the Parliament came, they came vp euery of them with great power and strength.

And soone after the beginning of the sayde Parliament, the aforesayde Mighell de la Poole Chauncelor (as I finde written in an olde Chronicle, which beareth the name of the Chronicle of Leycester) demaunded of the Commons in the Kinges name, foure fiftenes, for with lesse he savd that the king could not mainteine his estate, and his outward warres. The whole body of the Parliament made aunswere againe, that without the king were present, they would make therin none aunswere. And they said further that if the king did not remoue this Mighel de la Poole from his office of Chaucelorship, they would no twene the King and the Parliament.

This message beyng done to the King, the King sent agayne to the Commons that they A dissention be- should sende to Eltham (for there he lay then) xl. of the wisest and best learned of the common house, the which in the name of the whole house should declare vnto him their minde. And then the house were in more feare then they were in before, for a talke there went that the King entended to betrappe dynerse of them which followed not his mynde, eyther by that way or else at a banquet, which was appoynted to be made purposely at London, if Nicholas Exton then Major of London would have consented therevnto, at which tyme the Duke of Gloucester should have beene taken. Wherefore the Lordes of the vpper house, and the common house assembled together, and agreed with one assent, that Thomas of Wodstocke Duke of Gloucester and Thomas Arondell Bishop of Ely, should in the name of the whole Parliament be sent vnto the king to Eltham, which was done, and the king well pleased that they should come.

Lordes sent. by the parliament to the king.

The saing of the Lordes vnto the king.

Once in the yere the king may call a Parliament.

And first when they came into his presence, they most humbly saluted him, and savd: Most high and our redoubted souereigne Lorde, the Lordes and Commons at this your Parliament assembled, with most humble subjection vnto your most royall Maiesty, in likewise desyre your most gracious fauor: So that they may liue in tranquillity and peace vnder you, to the pleasure of God, and wealth of your realme: On whose behalfe we also shewe vnto you, that one olde statute and laudable custome is approued, which no man can denie, that the king our souereigne Lorde may once in the yere lawfully summon his high Court of Parliament, and call the Lords & commons therevnto, as to that which is the highest Courte of his Realme. In which Court all equitie and justice must shine, even as the Sunne when he is at the highest, whereof poore and riche maye take refreshyng: Whereas also must be reformed all the oppressions, wronges, extorcions, and enormityes within the realme, and there to counsaile with the wise men for the maintenaunce of the kinges estate, and conseruation of the same. And if it might be knowen that any persons within the realme or without entended the contrary, there must also be deuised howe such euill wedes may be destroyed. There also must be studied and foreseene, that if any charge do come vpon the king and his realme, howe it may be well and honourably supported and susteyed. Hetherto it is thought to the whole realme, that your subjectes have louyngly demeaned themselves vnto you, in ayding you with their substaunce to the best of their powers, and they desyre to have knowledge how and by whome these goodes be spent. One thing resteth yet to declare on their behalfe vnto you, howe that by an olde ordenance, they The king should haue an acte, if the king absent himselfe. xl. dayes, not beyng sicke, but of his awne Parliament once minde (not heedyng the charges of the people, nor their great paynes) will not resort to in. xl. dayes. his Parliament, they then may lawfully returne home to their houses. And nowe sir, you have bene absent a lenger tyme, and yet refuse to come amongest vs, which greatly is our discomfort.

To this the king aunswered by these wordes: Well, we do consider that our people and The kinges aun-Commons go about to rise against vs: wherefore we thinke we can do no better then to swere to the Lordes. aske ayde of our Cosyn the French king and rather submit vs vnto him, then vnto our awne subjectes.

The Lordes aunswered, Sir that counsaile is not best, but a way rather to bring you The motions into daunger: For it is well knowen that the French king is your auncient enemie, and agayne of the Lords to the your greatest aduers arie. And if he set foote once within your realme, he will rather king. dispoyle you, and inuade you, and depose you from your estate royall, then put any hande to helpe you. You may call to your remembrance, how your noble progenitors Edward the thirde, and Edward the Prince your father, toke great laboures vpon them, in heat and colde with great anguishe and troubles, and laboured without rest, to conquere the realme of Fraunce, the which rightfully did apperteyne vnto them, and nowe vnto you. Pleaseth you also to remember how many Lords noble men, & good commons of both realmes died in those warres, and what great goodes the realmes exposed & consumed in susteyning of the warres. And nowe great pitie it is to here, that more burthens be dayly layde vpon your subjectes neekes, for mainteynyng of your charges, who are brought vnto such vncredible pouertie, that they have not to pay their house rents, nor to ayde theyr Prince, nor yet to have sufficient for their necessarie sustenance: For so is your power depour ished, and Lordes and great men brought to infelicitie, and all your people to great debilitie. And as that king can not be poore that hath riche people; so can not be be riche that hath poore Comons. And as the King taketh hurt in this, so doth the Lordes and Noble men, every one after his haviour. And all these inconveniences be commonly by euill counsail which are about you. And if you put not the soner your helpyng hands for the redresse of $\forall \text{ premisses, this realme of England shalbe brought to naught and vtter ruyne, which cleerely should be layde vnto your default, and in your euill counsail: Seyng that in the time of your father, this realine throughout all the worlde was highly eesteemed, and nothing ordered after these wayes: Wherefore we be sent vnto you, to exhort you, to sequester all such persons as might be the occasion of ruyne, eyther of you, or of your Realme.

By these good perswasions the king was appeased, and promised within three dayes after, The king is apto come to the parliament, and to condiscend to their peticions. And according to his peased, and appointment he came. And sone after his comming Iohn Fortham Bishop of Durham was come to the Pardischarged of the Treasorership, and in his place was set the Bishop of Herdford. Also liament. The Treasorer there was then discharged and put downe Mighell de la Poole Chauncelour of Englande and Chaunceller to his great shame and rebuke: And in his rome was placed Thomas Arundell Byshop of are deposed. Elve, by the whole consent of the parliament. After thys Mighell de la Poole was charged with manye and great enorme crymes, fraudes, falsities and treasons by him done and committed, to the great prejudice of the King and of his realme, and therepon was committed to ward: Notwithstandyng, they would not adjudge him to death, nor disgrade him from the honor of Knighthood; But as some write, they deemed him to pay a fyne of VOL: L

And if any manner of person attempted to move the King to infringe any parte of thys ordynaunce, and that being knowne, for the first time, he should be deprived of his goodes and possessions, and for the second time, to be drawen thorough the Citie, and so put to execution as an arrant traytor. And for that the king should the rather shew his beneuolent fauour in confirming these actes deuysed by the parliament. These determinations notwithstanding, the king suffred Mighell de la Poole Erle of Poole prisoner at Suffolke which was prisoner at Wyndsore, to go at large, and not long after came Robert Tresilian, chiefe Iustice of the common benche to Couentrie, and endited there two thousand persons. And the king and the Queene came vnto Grobye, and thether came vnto him by his commaundement the Iustices of the Realme, and there were present all these euill Counsaylors, that is to say, Alexander Archebishop of Yorke, Robert Veere Duke of Irelande, Mighell de la Poole, Robert Tresilian and their felowes. And they made aunswere that the king might well reuoke and make frustrate all their actes at his pleasure, for they were actes aboue the lawes.

Then were these Iustices commaunded to come agayne to Nottyngham, where the at Nottyngham, King appointed to meete them. And thether came the King out of the North parties, and helde a solempne counsayle in the Castell of Nottyngham the morowe after Saint Bartholomewes day. In the which counsayle was syr Alexander Archebishop of Yorke, Robert Veer Duke of Irelande, Mighell de la Poole Erle of Suffolk, Robert Tresilian Iustice.

And al these Iustices were commaunded to set to their handes to the questions under written, that by the meanes thereof, these seducers, which were about the king, thought they might have good occasion to put the Duke of Gloucester and all the other Lords to death, which were the last Parliament, as aforesayde, ordeyned to have the governaunce of the realme, and all other that were consenting to the same. Dyuers there were of the Iustices which refused to set to their hands, but they were constreyned thereto, among the which was Iohn Belknap, who vtterly refused it, vntill such time as the Duke of Ireland and the Erle of Suffolk compelled him thervnto, which if he had still refused, he had not escaped their hands. And when he had set to his seale: Nowe sayth he, here lacketh nothing but a rope, that I maye receyue the worthy death for my rewarde, and I knowe that if I had not done thys, I could not have escaped your handes, and nowe it is done for the kings pleasure and youres, I have deserved death of the Lordes, which shortly followed, for in the next parliament he was condempned and put to execution. And for that thys should be in remembrance, an act of counsaile was made therof, in maner as followeth.

Memorandum that the xxv. daye of August in the. xj. yere of the reigne of King An act of counchered the second at the Cartell of New years of the reigne of King sayle an. Ric. ij. Richarde the second, at the Castell of Nottyngham afore the sayde King, Robert Tresi-xj. lian chiefe Iustice of England, Robert Belknap chiefe Iustice of the common benche, a company of Iohn Holte, Roger Fulthorp, and Wylliam Brough knightes, and felowes of the sayde Ro-cuil Iustices and bert Belknen and John Lockton and of the biggs of the sayde Ro-counseylours. bert Belknap, and John Lockton, one of the kings Sergeaunts at the law, being personally required in the presence of the Lordes, and other witnesses vnder written, by our sayde souereigne Lorde the king, in the fayth and allegeaunce, by the which they are firmely bounden to the sayde king, that they should truely aunswer to certayne questions vnder written, and before them recited, and vpon the same by their discretions to saye

1 First, it was asked of them whether the newe statute and ordynaunce and commis- Articles proposion made in the last parliament holden at Westminster, be hurtfull to the kings royall made vnto them. prerogative?

Wherevnto all of one minde aunswered, that they be hurtfull, and specially because they were agaynst the kings will.

2 Item it was required of them, howe they ought to be punished which procured the sayde statute, ordynaunce and commission to be made?

Whervnto of one assent they answered, that they deserved to be punished by the Capitall payne, that is to say of death, onlesse the king of his grace will pardon them.

3 Item, it was inquired how they ought to be punished which excited the king to consent to the making of the said statute, ordynance and commissio?

Wherevnto of one minde they sayde, that onelesse the king would geue them his pardon, they ought to be punished by the Capitall paine.

4 Item, it was enquired of them, what paine they deserved that copelled the king to consent to the making of the said statute, ordinance & commission?

Wherevnto of one assent they gaue aunswere, that as Traytors they ought to be punished.

5 Item, how they ought to be punished that interrupted the king, so that he might not exercise those thinges that apperteyned to hys regality and prerogative? Wherevnto of one assent it was aunswered, that they ought to be punished as Trav-

6 Item, it was enquired of them, whether that after the businesse of the realme, and the cause of that assembly of the parliament were by the kinges commaundement disclosed and declared in the parliament, and other articles lymyted by the king, vpon which the Lordes and commons of the Realme ought to procede in the same parliament: If the Lords and commons would in any wise proceede vpon other articles, and in no wise vpon the articles lymyted by the king, till the king had answered the Articles expressed by them, 3 K 2 notwithstandyng notwithstandyng that they were by the king eniouned to the contrary: whether the king in this case ought to have the rule of the Parlyament, and in deede to rule, to the intent that vpon the articles lymyted by the king, they ought first to proceede or not, before they proceeded any further?

To which question, of one mynde they aunswered, that the king in this parte should have the rule in order one after another, in all other articles touching, vntill the ende of the parliament. And if any doe contrarie to thys rule of the king, he ought to be punished as a Traytor.

7 Whether the King whensoeuer it pleased hym, myght not dissolue the Parliament, and commaunde hys Lordes and Commons to departe from thence or not?

Wherevnto it was of one mind answered, y he may. And if any would procede in the parliament against § kings wil, he is to be punished as a traytor.

8 Item, it was inquired that for as much as it is in the king to remooue suche of the Iustices and officers as doe offende, and to iustefie and punishe them for their offenses, whether the Lordes and commons might without the kings will empeche the same officers and iustices vpon their offenses in the parliament or not?

To thys aunswere was made, that they might not: And he that did contrarie, was to be punished as a Traytor.

9 Item, it was inquired, howe he is to be punished that mooued in the Parliament that the statute whereby Edward, the sonne of king Edward, great Graundfather to the king that nowe is, was indited in the parliament might be sent for, by the inspection of which statute, the sayde newe statute or ordynaunce and commission were conceaued in the parliament.

To the which question of one accorde they aunswered, that as well he that so somoned, as the other which by force of the same motion brought the sayde statute into the parliament house, be as cryminous and Traytours to be punished.

10 Item, it was enquyred of them, whether the iudgement geuen in our parliament, holden at Westminster agaynst Mighell de la Poole, late Erle of Suffolk, were erronyous and reuocable or not?

To the which question, of one assent, they sayde, that if the same iudgement were now to be geuen, the same Iustices and Sergeaunt aforesayde would not geue the same, because it seemed to them that the same iudgement is reuocable and is erronyous in energy parte. In witnesse whereof the Iustices & Sergeaunt aforesayde to these presents have set to their seales, these men being wytnesses. Alexander Archebishop of Yorke, Robert Archebishop of Dowblynd, Iohn Bishop of Durham, Thomas Bishop of Chester, Iohn Bishop of Bangor, Robert Duke of Ireland, Mighell Erle of Suffolke, Iohn Rypon

Clarke, and Iohn Blake.

But here a little to returne backe: Ye heard before in the. viij. yere of the reigne of this king, that a peace was concluded with Englande, Fraunce and Scotland for one yere next to come. And that the Frenche men shoulde geue knowledge thereof to the Scottish king, and so it was that the French king sent his Ambassadors into Scotland, and they passed through England to geue the Scottishe king knowledge of the peace. In the meane time that the French Ambassadors lay in Scotlande, among other thinges, the Erle Douglas sayd vnto them, ye see our Coutry, but ye consider not the strength thereof, for we are so lodged vpon England, that we may at our pleasure enter which way we lust, and brenne and spoyle foure dayes iourney into the realme, and returne againe at our pleasure, we lacke nothing but men, had we a thousand Speare men of Fraunce to ioyne with the power that we can make, we might geue England such an ouerthrow as England neuer had, and this my Lordes were good for you to kepe in remembrance, and to shew the Lordes of Fraunce at your returne, that the next and redyest way to persecute and conquere England is to enter with vs into their land. The aforesayde Ambassadors did lightly credit this tale, and at their returne forgat not to make report thereof vnto the counsaile of Fraunce,

of the which dyuers of them also thought it a right good way: Wherefore against the sayde peace should expire, they made prouision toward Scotland, mindyng to enter that way vpon England.

And at this time, there were bruted abroad in England divers thinges, namely that the French The French king king entended to assaile England with a mighty puissaunce, and that three maner of wayes. & vexe England The one out of Briteyn, for that the Duke of Briteyne was become Frenche. The other three maner of by Normandie, for the which as it was sayd, the Constable of Fraunce made his provision wayes. at Harflew, and Deepe. And the thirde by Scotland.

In the beginning of May, Sir Iohn de Vien Admirall of Fraunce, accompanied with a The French king thousande Speares of chosen knightes and Esquiers, and fine hundreth Crosbowes, with sent a power into harnesse to arme a thousande Scottes, landed in Scotland, & at the last arrived at Eden-posing that way bourgh, which is the chefest towne in Scotland. And assone as the Erle Douglas, and to ouerthrowe the Erle Moret knewe of their comming, they went to the Hauen and met them, and receyued them right louingly: saiying that they were right welcom into that Coutrie. And at that time the king of Scottes was in the wilde Scottishe. But it was shewed these knightes, that the King would be there shortly, wherewith they were content, and so they were lodged thereaboutes in the Villages. For Edenbourgh though the King kept therein his chiefe residence, yet it is not like Paris, not yet like Turney, nor Valenciens. For in Paris. al the towne there is not foure thousand houses. Therefore these Lordes and Knightes Valenciers.

were lodged in Villages about, as well as they might be in that Countrie.

When knowledge came into the Realme of Scotlande, that a greate number of men of armes of Fraunce were come into their Countrie: some thereat did murmure and grudge and sayde: who the deuill hath sente for them? what do they here? Cannot we mainteine our warre with England without their helpe? we shall do no good as long as they be with vs, and so let them be tolde that they may returne againe. And say vnto them, that we be strong inough in Scotlande to mainteine our warre without them, and therefore we will none of their companie, they understand not vs, nor we them: They will quickly rifle and eate vp all that ever we have in this Coutrie: They will do vs more despight and dammage then though the Englishemen fought with vs. For if the Englishemen brenne our houses, we care little therefore, for we may soone make them againe cheape inough, for in three dayes we will make them againe, if we may get foure or fine stakes, and a fewe Bowes to couer them.

This was the communication of the Scottes at the commyng of the Frenche men, for The French men they set nothing by them, but hated and spake shamefully, and vilanously of them, like are euill welto rude people without all humanitie. And all thinges considered (sayth Froyssart) it was to land. great an armie of so many noble men to come into Scotland. For. xx. or. xxx. Knightes of Fraunce had bene better then all that number of a thousand, and the cause is, that in Scotland ye shall find lightly no man of honour or nobilitie, neyther that knoweth what belongeth to a Gentleman. They are like wilde and sauage people, they couet to be ac- A description of quainted with no straunger, and they are full of enuy at the prosperous estate of others, Scotland and their maners. and they are euer in feare to lose that they have, for it is a poore Countrie. And when the Englishe men make any roade or voyage into the land, they are euer compelled to haue their victualles followe them: for in Scotland they shall finde nothing. Neyther is there in Scotland yron to shoe their horses, nor leather to make harnesse for their horse, as Saddels, Bridels. &c. But they have all these thinges readie made out of Flaundyrs. And when that provision fayleth, then is there none to get in that Countrie.

When the Barons and Knightes of Fraunce, who were went to finde fayre hosteryes, Halles hanged, and goodly Castelles, and soft beddes to rest in, sawe themselves in that necessitie: They began to smile, and sayde to the Lorde Admirall, Sir this is a pleasaunt iourney, we neuer knewe what beggery was vntill now, and now we finde it true, that our old fathers were wont to say: go your way, and ye liue long ye shall finde hard beddes.

The Admirall pacifyed them as well as he might, and sayde: It behoueth vs to suffer a little, and to speake fayre, for we be here in daunger, we have a great long way to go, and by England we can not returne, therefore let vs quietly take in good worth that we finde.

Yet there was another thing that was greatly grieuous to the Frenche men: For when they were in Scotland, and would ryde, they found horses vnreasonably deare, for that which was not worth. x. Floreyns, they would not sell vnder an hundreth, and muche paine to have them for their money. And when they had a horse, then had they neyther Brydle nor Saddell, except they brought them with them. In this trouble and daunger were the French men: Yea, and moreover, when their Verlets went forth a foraging, and had laden their horses with such as they could get for money, in theyr returne home, the Scottes themselves which had taken their money for the forage, did lie in wayte of them, and tooke all that they had from them, and slue them, so that there was none that durst go a foragyng, for in a moneth the French men lost of their varlettes mo then an hundreth, for if they went foorth three or foure together, they never returned againe, and thus the Frenche men were handeled in Scotland.

The miserie of Scotland.

The deceipt & crueltie of the Scottes.

Also now the French men desired that the king of Scottes would come forward, and likewise the Lordes and Knightes of Scotland, for the tyme passed away. And they aunswered and sayd, that they would make no warre on England at that tyme: and this they sayde, because they would make the Frenche men pay well for their commyng: For before the King would come out of the wilde Scottish to Edenbourgh, he demaunded of the Admirall of Fraunce to have a great somme of money, for him and his people. And the Admirall of Fraunce was faine to promise, and to seale that the king should have a certeine some of money before that he and his company departed his Realme. And if he had not done this, he shoulde have had none ayde of the Scottes. And yet when he had made the best agreement with them that he could, he gate but little by them, as in the endewill appears will appere.

A description of Robert King of Scottes.

At the last, King Robert of Scotland came to Edenbourgh, with a paire of blered eyen and it semed they were lyned with scarlet. And it appeared by him, that he was no valiaunt man of armes, but that he loued rather to lye still, then to ryde: He had. ix. sonnes, and they loued well armes. So when the king was come, the Lorde and knightes of Fraunce drewe vnto him and did their duetie. And there was present with the king the Erle Douglas, the Erle Moret, the Erle de la Mare, the Erle of Surlant, and dyuerse other. There the Admirall required the king that the cause of their commyng might be accomplished, which was to make a journey into England.

The Barons, knightes, and Esquiers of Scotland aunswered and said, that if God pleased they would make such a voyage that should be to theyr honour and profite.

The king then sent out his commaundement to assemble his power, & at a day appoynted, there were redy. xxx. thousand men all on horsebacke.

Sir Iohn Vien Admirall of Fraunce thought the tyme long, and faine would have bene doyng of some great feate in Englande: when he sawe the Scottes were come together, he made haste and sayde, Sirs, it is now time to ride, we have lyen still a great while. So then they set forwarde to Rosebourgh.

The king himselfe went not in this journey, for he abode still in Edenbourgh, but all his sonnes were in the armie. The thousand complete harnesse which the Frenche men brought with them, were deliuered to the knightes of Scotland, who were before but euill harnessed, and had neede of that harnesse.

Then they rode toward Northumberland, and so long they roade, that they came to the Abbey of Mannes, and there they lodged all about the river of Tyne, and the next day they came to Morlan, and so before Rosebourgh.

The keper of the Castell of Rosebourgh vnder the Lord Mountagew, was a knight called Sir Edward Clifford. The Admirall of Fraunce, and the Scottes targed and behelde well the Castell. And when they had well considered it, they thought to assail it should not be profitable for them, wherfore they passed by, and drewe along the ryuer syde approchyng to Barwike, and so long they road, that they came to two towers right strong, the which were kept by two knightes, the father and the sonne, both were called Syr Iohn Strand. About these Towers were faire Laundes, and a faire place, the which incontinent were brent, and the two Towers assayled, and there were many feates of armes shewed, and diverse Scottes hurt with shot and throwyng of stones: But finally the Towers were wonne by plaine assault, and the knightes taken, the which manfully defended the same as long as they might.

And after the conquest of these two Towers, they went to another Castell called Verley, Verley Castel is belonging to Sir Iohn Mountagew, and under him was Capteine thereof Sir Iohn of Lush-assaulted by the borne, who had there with him, his wife, and his children, and all his goodes. And he Scottes. knewe well before that the Scottes would come thether: and therefore he had furnished this Castel to the best of his power to abide the assault. So about this Castell tarved all the armie. This Castell stoode in a fayre Countrie, by a fayre Ryuer that commeth out of Tymbre, and ronneth into the sea. And one day there was a great assault geuen to the sayd Castell, and the Frenche men bare themselves right well that day, much better then did the Scottes, for they entered into the ditches, and passed through with muche paine: There were manye feates of armes done, what by them aboue and them beneath. The Frenche men mounted vp by Ladders, and fought hande to hande with Daggers on the Walles.

Sir Iohn Lushborne did quite himselfe as a valiaunt knight, & fought with the French men hande to hande on the Ladders. At this assault, there was slaine a knight of Almaine called sir Bleres Gastelain, which was great pitie. There were many hurt that day: But at the last the number of Scots and French men were so great, that the Castell was wonne, and the knight and his wife, and children taken, and. xl. other prisoners. And then the verley Castel Castell was brent, and rased downe, for they saw well that it was not to be kept, seeying it taken and rased downe. stood so farre within England as it did.

Then the Admirall and the Scottes roade towarde Anwike, and there they had knowledge that the Duke of Lancaster, the Erle of Northumberland, the Erle of Nottyngham, with a great number mo, were commyng vpon them with a great power.

When the Admirall of Fraunce heard these tydinges, he seemed to be very joyfull, and in like maner were all the Barons of Fraunce, and all the Scottes: But they were counsailed to return againe toward Barwike, because of their provision that followed them, and to be nere to their awne Coutrie, and there to abyde their enemies. And so they returned towarde Barwike, and so to their awne Countrie.

Tydings was brought into England how the Frenchmen and Scottes were in Northumberland, and had destroyed and brent the Countrey. The King of England knowyng before of the comming of the Frenchmen, made great provision for Scotland, both by sea and lande. And by sea, the king had. xxvj. shippes laden with victuall and provision coast-yng the Frontiers of Englande, and readie to enter into euery hauen of Scotland.

The King himselfe came accompanied with his Vncles, the Erle of Cambridge, and The king of syr Thomas Holland, the Erle of Salsburie, the Erle of Arondell, the Erle of Pembrook, England entreth as Scotland with a the Erle of Stafford, the Erle of Muzien, the Lord Spencer, and so many other Barons great power. and knightes, that they were foure thousand speares, beside them that went before with the Duke of Lancaster, the Erle of Northumberland. &c. Which were two thousand speares, and. xv. hundred Archers, beside verlets.

And it was tolde the king that the Scottes and French men were lyke to fight with the Englishmen that went before, and therefore the king made suche haste, that he came to the Marches of Duresme, and there he heard that the Scottes were returned into Scotland.

The king passed still forwarde, beyng accompanyed with eyght thousand men of armes, The Abbey of and. lx. thousand Archers, and passed Berwike, and so into Scotland to the Abbey of lande spoyled Maros. The which Abbey, in all the warres that had bene betwene Englande and Scot- and brent. lande, lande, was neuer hurte, vntill this time, and nowe was it vtterly spoyled and brent, for it was the entent of the king neuer to returne into Englande, vntill he had destroyed a great peece of Scotlande, because they brought in Frenchmen to the destruction of Englande.

When the Admirall of Fraunce knewe that the king of Englande was passed the ryger of Twede, and was entred into Morland in Scotlande, Then he sayde to the Barons of Scotland, Sirs, why doe we lye here still? Let vs go foorth and looke on our enemies, and fight with them.

It was shewed vs before we came hether, that if ye had out of Fraunce but one thousand of good men of armes, ye should be strong enough to fight with all the Englishmen, and I assure you, ye haue mo here then. xv. C. of good knights and squiers, and suche as will stande by it, and take that fortune that God doth sende.

The Scottes aunswered and sayde, Sir we beleue well that ye and your company are chosen men and valiaunt. But syr we have knowledge that all the power of England is here at this present, and there were never so many Englishmen assembled together in these partes as are nowe, and if ye will, we will bring you into place where ye shal wel see and aduise them. And then if ye thinke them meete to be foughten withall, we wyll not refuse Then sayde the Admirall, I pray you let me see them. And they brought him to a Mountaine, where vnder the hill was a passage that the Englishmen must nedes passe, and they sawe them and viewed them to be to the number of sixe thousand men of armes, and lx. thousand Archers and other.

Then sayde the Admyrall to the Erle Douglas, and the Erle Moret, in dede here is no egall number to fight with them, for ye are not aboue. xxx. thousand, and yet many euill armed. But now aduise yourselves best what is to be done, they are now entred into your Country, and they are enough to ouerrunne al your Country, and to destroy it: & ye are not minded to encounter with them, what will ye then do? ye sayd ye could enter out of your countrie dyuers wayes into dyuers places of England: And I thinke it best that we make them some warre there as they doe vs here. And herevnto all the Barones of Scotlande agreed and sayde, we are well contented so to doe, and we knowe dyuers wayes. And they agreed to go into Wales, which is otherwise called Winsland, and so to go to the Citic of Carlisle, and there to be reuenged. And so they left the Englishmen in Scotlande and they went vp the Forestes and Mountaynes. And the Scottishe king was gone to the wylde Scottishe, and there remayned.

The king of Englande, with his Vncles, Barons, Knights and army went to Edenborough, the chiefest towne in all Scotland, and there laye. v. dayes, and at his departing set fyre on it, and brent it downe to the ground. And lykewise he brent Estreuelyn, and the Abbay therevnto adjoyning. Also they brent Saint Iohns towne, and the towne of Streuelyn, the towne of Dondee, and to be short, they spared nothing that stood in their waye, neyther Towne, Village, Abbey, nor Church, for they might doe in Scotland what they would, for there was no people left to resist them. For all the people were gone with the Frenchmen & Scots toward Carlisle, as aforesayd.

Now when the king had thus spoyled, destroyed, and brent Scotland, the Duke of Lancaster aduised bym to follow the Scottes and Frenchmen to Carlisle. And there were other considered that Winter approched, and that the passage ouer the Mountaynes and foany Scotte that rests would be long and daungerous, and that it would be no small thing to victual still that great army. Wherefore at the last, by the meane of the Erle of Oxford, the king was fully perswaded to returne into Englande as he came, and so he did.

> The French Lordes and the Scottes lykewise, as aforesayd, made a roade into Northumberlande betweene the Mountaynes, brennyng Manoures and Townes, and all that stood in their waye, and did much hurte, and besieged the Citie of Carleisle, but they gaue it ouer, & returned againe in Scotland the same waye they went, but the Frenchmen sayde, they neuer entended to go that way any more.

Scotland is sore spoyled and plagued.

The king reinto England, durst encounter him.

The French men returne into Scotlad as men weerie of that journey.

When

When the Admyrall of Fraunce and hys companye, were returned to Edenborough, then they tasted of some paine, for they founde the Towne cleane brent, and destroyed, so that there was nothing to be had for money, Wynes there were none, so that for drinke, they had none but small Ale or Beere, and their Bread was made of Barley and of Otes. Also their horses were dead for hunger, and foundred for pouertie. And when they woulde have soulde them, they wist not to whome, nor there was none that woulde geue them one penny, neyther for horse, nor for harneys. The Souldyours tolde their Capitaines Howe the how they were delt withall, and they knewe it to be true by their awne experience, and opened then their servaunts sayde that they could not endure with that miserie: They sayde that the griefes one to Realme of Scotlande was such a coutrie as no host were hable to endure there a Wynter, another. for if they did they should eyther dye for cold, or starue for hunger, or both. And also if they should departe asunder, and searche for their lyuyng abroad in the Countrie, they doubted that the Scottes would slay them in their beddes. The Admyrall considered well all these things, and saw all was lyke to be true that they sayde: Howbeit he was in purpose to have bidden there all the Wynter, and to have sent vnto the French king, and to the Duke of Burgoyne, and to haue had newe provision of money and victualles, and to have made a new freshe warre agayne the next Sommer. Howbeit he sawe well the euill nature and maner of the Scottes, and consydered well the perill of his people, and therforce he gaue leave vnto all suche as would, to departe. But at their departing, then was the mischiefe: For the Lordes coulde finde no passage for themselves, nor yet for their men. The Scottes would that such knights and squiers as were but poore, should departe, to the entent that they might rule the remnaunt at more ease. And they sayde to the Ad-Howe the Scots myrall, Sir, let your men departe when you will: But as for your selfe, ye shall not departe handled the out of this Countrey, vntill we be fully satisfied of all such charges and dammages as we frenchmen. haue borne and susteyned all this season with your army. This communication seemed harde to the Admirall and to the other Barons of Fraunce. And the Admyrall shewed all this matter to the Erle Douglas, and to the Erle Moret, who seemed to be sore displeased, that they were so hardly delt withall. And so these two Erles spake to the other Erles, and Barons of Scotlande, who sayde howe they had lost as well as they. But they aunswered, saveng, although you dissemble with them, we will be recompensed. these two Erles sayde to the Admyrall and to the other Lordes of Fraunce, that they could not rule the other Lords nor commons: wherefore it behoued them, if they purposed to go out of the realme, to satisfie the commons, and to restore vnto them all their dammages. And when the Admyrall sawe that it woulde be none otherwise, he thought he would The Admirall of not leese the more for the lesse, and he considered well how that he was without comfort, frauce is driven & closed in with the Sea, and saw how that the Scottes were of a wylde opynion, and therefore agreed to the Scottes request, and caused a proclamation to be made, that all maner of persons that could prove that anye of his people had done them any dammage, let them come to the Admyrall, and he would recompense them the value thereof, the which proclamation appeared the Scottes. And so the Admyrall became debter to them all, and sayd how he would not depart out of Scotland vntill all the complayntes were fully satisfied and payde. Then dyuers Knightes and Squyres had passage, and so returned without either horse or harnels, curssing the day that ever they came into Scotlande, saiving that there were neuer men that had so harde a voyage, wyshing that the French king had The reported peace with Englande one yere or two, and so both kings together to go into Scotlande, vt- the french men howe they lyke? terly to destroy that Realme for euer, for they sayde they neuer sawe so euyll people, nor Scotlands. so false, nor more foolishe people in feates of warre. The Admyrall of Fraunce by them that first departed, wrote his letters to the French king, and to the Duke of Burgoyn, certefying them what case he was in, and howe the Scots dealt with hym, and that if they would have hym to come home, they must send thether such summes of money as he was become debtor for, to be payde to the knightes, Squires and commons of Scotland. For the Scottes sayd playnely that the warre that they made into England, at that tyme, was for Fraunce, and not for themselues. And therefore all suche dammages as they had taken by that journey, they would be fully recompensed agayne before he went out of Scotland. to the which he had sworne and agreed.

The departure of Fraunce out of Scotland.

The French king and his counsayle were bounde to redeeme agayne the Admiral, for the Admirall of they sent him thether. Then the sommes of money were ordeyned for, and payde by exchaunge in the towne of Bridges, and so the Scottes were satisfied, and the Admyrall tooke his leave in Scotland and departed into Fraunce.

The report made by the Admirall vinto the french of the estate and maners of Scot-

Nowe when the Admirall was returned into Fraunce to the yong king Charles, and to the Duke of Burgoyn, and they demaunded of him the condicion of the king and the Lordes of Scotland: He answered, that the Scottes somewhat resembled the English men, because they are envious to straugers. And moreover he sayd, that he had rather be Erle of Sauoy, or Erle of Arthoys, then to be king of Scottes, and sayd also that he had seenc all the power of the Scottes in one day together, as the Scottes sayd themselves, and yet he neuer sawe together, not past. v. C. Speares, and. xxx. thousande men of warre, the which number against the Englishe Archers, or against a thousand of other good men of armes, could not long endure.

Then the Admyrall was demaunded if he had seene the puyssaunce of England: He aunswered, yea, for on a day quoth he, when I saw the Scots flie away for feare of the Englishemen, I desyred them to bring me where as I might see and aduise the Englishe hoste, and so they did. I was set at a streight passage, where as they must nedes passe, and to my judgement, they were, lx, thousand Archers, and sixe or seven thousand men of armes. And the Scottes sayde, that it was all the power of England, and that there were none abydyng behynde.

Then the king and his Counsaile studied a little, and at the last sayd, it is a great thing of lx. thousand Archers, and. vi. or. vij. thousande men of armes. It may well be, quoth the Constable, that they may make that number: But I had rather fight with them at home in their awne Marches with that number, then here with halfe the number: And so I have heard my father say often tymes when I was yong. By my fayth, sir quoth the Admirall, if ye had bene there with a great number of men of Armes, as I supposed ye should haue bene, I thinke we had famished all in Scotland. And thus an ende of the French mens voyage into Scotland.

Nowe'ye have heard of the journey that the Frenche men made into Scotland against England, and ye have also heard before, that the Frenche king entended to enter into England, and made provision for the same three maner of wayes. First by Scotland, as ye have alreadie heard, the second by Briteyn, because the Duke of Briteyn was nowe reconciled to the Frenche king, and thirdely by Normandie, in the which two places he made provision of a huge armie, and navie, as after shall appere.

And while the aforesayd French men were busic in Scotland agaynst the Englishe men, as abouesayde, the yong French king Charles, and his Vncle the Duke of Burgoyn and Constable of Fraunce, had great desyre and affection to go with an army into England, and all knights and squires of Fraunce did very well agree therevnto, saiyng why should not we once go into Englande to see the Countrie, and to learne the pathes of the same, as they have done in Fraunce. So that foorthwith great provision and furnyture for that voyage was made in Fraunce on all sydes, and taxes and tallages set and assessed vpon the Cities, townes, and Burgesses of the same, and in the plaine Countrie, that in an hundreth yere before there had beene none such seene nor heard of. And also great prouision made by sea all the Sommer tyme untill the moneth of September, they did nothing else, but grinde Corne, and bake Bisket. And at Tornay, Lisle, Doway, Arras, Amiens, Bethine, saint Omers, and in all the Townes about Scluse, they were occupied to lyke purpose. For the Frenche king by the aduise of his counsaile purposed to take the sea at Scluce, and so to enter England, and to destroy the same. They that were riche men in the Realme of Fraunce to the ayde and furniture of this voyage, were taxed and seassed at the thirde penny, and fourth part of their goodes, & many payd more then they were worth besides.

And from Spaine, and from the porte of Civile to Pruce there was no great ship on the Sea that the French men could lay theyr handes vpon, neyther any ship that was under their obeysance, but they were reteyned for the French king. And his men, and his other prouision came from all partes, and arryued in Flaundyrs, both wyne, salt, fleshe, fishe, otes, hay, Onyons, Bisket, flower, egges in Pipes, and all maner of thinges that could be deuysed, so that the provision was so great as it could not be beleved of any, but of such as sawe it. Besydes this, Lordes, Knightes, Esquiers, and men of warre were written vnto and desyred to come and serue the Frenche king in this journey out of Sauoy, Almaine, and from the Sonne goyng downe, to the lande of the Erle of Arminack. And so these Lordes of farre Countries, as the Erle of Sauoye was reteyned with five hundreth speares. Also the Erle of Arminack, & the Dolphyn of Annerency, though they were of farre Countries, yet they made their prouisions so great and costly, that it was a great marueyle to thinke thereof: And it was a wonder to consider from whence such provision came, what by land, and what by sea into Flaundyrs, as to Bruges, to Dan, and to Scluse. Also there was sent for into Holland, Zeland, Middlebourgh, Zirickzee, Dordright, Stonehoue, and to all other townes on the sea coast, and to the rivers entering into the sea, for all maner of shippes that could do any service, and all were brought to Scluce. But the Hollanders, and Zelanders sayd to them that reteyned them, if ye will have our service, pay vs our wages cleerely, or else we will not go to any Porte, and so they were payde. wherein they did wisely. And (sayth Froyssart) I thinke that sithen the creation of the worlde, there was neuer sene together so many great ships as were at y tyme at Scluse, and at Blanquerge: For in the moneth of September in the sayde yere, they were numbred to be. xij. hundreth, lxxxvij. shippes at Scluse: And their Mastes seemed in the sea lyke a great A great Nauy of Wood or Forest. And the Constable of Fraunce his ship, was apparauled and furnished shippes. at Lenterginer in Briteyn. Also the Constable of Fraunce caused to be made in Briteyn of Tymber, a Closure for a Towne, made like a Parke, that when they had taken lande A Closure made in Englande, to close in their fielde to lodge therein with more ease and safetie. And of timber like a closure of a park whensoeuer they should remoue their fielde, the Closure was so made, that they might for the enclosyng take it a sunder in pieces, and a great number of Carpenters and other were retayned in of the french wages to attend thervoon. And whosoeuer at that tyme had beene at Bruges, at Dan, or should lie in the at Scluse, and had seene the businesse that there was in chargyng and ladyng of shippes Great and wonwith have, sackyng of Bisket, and ladyng of Onyons, Peason, Beanes, Barley, Candelles, derfullprouision. hosen, shoes, spurres, knyues, daggers, swordes, Targettes, Axes, Mattockes, Nayles of all sortes, Wymbles, Hammers, Beddes, Cowches, Horse shoes, Pottes, Pannes, Candlestickes, Candles, Torches, Piche, Tarre, Rosen, Ropes, Gables, Ankers, shot Powder. Ordinaunce, Armor, and of all other thinges necessarye that might be thought youn. as Bootes, Clokes, Saddelles, Brydles, Bittes, Stirops, and Stirop leathers, scalyng Ladders, and a number of thinges mo that I can not reherce. Whosoeuer (sayth Froissart) that had beene there and had seene it, although he had bene right sore sicke, yet it woulde haue made him to haue forgotten both hys disease and paine. The lustie yonkers of Fraunce talkyng among themselues, had almost none other talke nor made none other account. but that the Realme of England should have beene vtterly spoyled and destroyed for ever and euer, without all mercie and recouerie.

Of this great preparation and prouision the king of England and his counsayle were The king of well informed, and the king was certainely assured that the French king would come into Englad was cer-England, for so had he & his Nobles sworne. And although at the first heryng of thys usion that ye wonderfull great provision, it dyd somewhat abashe the Englishmen, which was no great french king maruayle. For as the matter of it self was very great, so the same was reported to be ten the realme of times much more then it was. And agayne, although the Englishmen vnderstood of this Englande. great prouision, yet were they not in certaintie, whether the same was wholy purposed to lande in England, or else to laye siege to Calice both by land and sea. For the Englishmere knewe well that of all the Townes of the worlde, the Frenchmen most coueted to have Calice: Wherefore the king of England sent to Calice great provision of Wheat and other grayne, Salt, Fleshe, Fishe, Wyne, Beere, and other thinges. And thether was sent Sir Thomas Holland Erle of kent, Sir Hugh Canrell, Sir Wylliam Helman, Sir Dangoses, syr Walter of Vrnes, Sir Water Paulle, syr Wylliam Toncet, syr Lewes of Mountaibon, syr Colers of Dambrichecourt, and five hundred men of armes, and five hundred Archers, and the Erle Richard of Arondell, and syr Henry Spencer were ordeyned to keepe the Sea, with. xl. great shippes well furnished and trimmed with the number of three hundred men of armes, and sixe hundred Archers.

Sundrye brutes and reports were made of the intention of this great Nauie and armie of Fraunce.

Fraunces Atre-

Agayne an other report was bruted abroad that this army of the French being so furnished and appoynted, was not meant to go neyther to Calice, neyther yet into Englande, but rather was altogether purposed against the towne of Gaunt. And (sayth Froissart) as I was informed, the towne of Gaunt the same season doubted greatlye that all that prouision was to come vpon them: But they were in a wrong beliefe, for the Duke of Burgoyne their Lorde meant towards them nothing but rest and quiet, although that Fraunces Atreman were shortly after the making of the peace at Torney slayne, which happened rather by his awne folye, then by anye displeasure that the Duke ought vnto him: but because that matter doth not properly touche this our discourse for Englande, I therefore passe it ouer.

And now agayne to returne to the provisions that were made at thys season at Dan, and at Sluce, it is not had in remembrance of man, neyther in wryting was ever the lyke seene or read of the charges of thys provision, for, sayth Froissart, Gold and silver was as fast spent by the French king, as though it had reigned out of the Clowds, or that it had come out of the fome and skomme of the sea.

The young French king was courageous.

The French king himselfe, as yong as he was, had more minde and desyre to this iourney into England, then any other, and so he shewed himselfe alwayes to the ende thereof. And nowe to go forward, every man helped to make provision for other, and to garnishe and bewtifie their shippes, and to paynt them with their armes, and to advance and make them a glorious shewe to the whole worlde. Painters at that time were well set on worke, and the time was to them very profitable, for they had whatsoever they desyred, and yet there could not enow of them be gotten for money. They made Banners, Penons, Standards of silke, so sumptuous and comely that it was a marvell to beholde.

Great cost vainly spent. Also they peynted the Mastes of their shippes from the one ende to the other, glittering with Golde, and deuises and armes that was maruelous ryche; and specially (sayth Froissart) as it was tolde me, the Lorde Guy of Tremoyll so decked, garnished, and bewtified his ship with peynting and colours, that it cost him two thousande Frankes of french money, that is more then. CCxxij. pound of the curraunt money of Englande. And in lyke maner did euery Lorde of Fraunce set foorth his deuise and shew.

And as it is before sayde, all that hath beene rehersed, and whatsoeuer else was done in Fraunce concerning the aduauncement of this iorney, was well knowen in Englande, which brought some feare among them, and therefore they caused dyners generall processions to be made in enery good Towne and Citie three times in the weeke, wherein prayer was made with feruent spirite and denocion vnto almightie God to be their Protectour and shield agaynst their enimies, and the perill that the realme was then in. And yet notwythstanding, there were in Englande at that tyme more then a hundreth thousand that hartely wished and desyred that the Frenchmen myght arryne in Englande. And those lustic young laddes, as triumphyng among themselves and their companions would say, let these frenchmen come, there shall not one tayle of them returne agayne into Fraunce. And suche as were in debt and cared not for the payment thereof, they reioysing greatly at the comming of the frenchmen would saye to their creditors when they demanded their debt of them, Sirs, be you pacient a little and beare with vs, for they forge in Fraunce newe Floreyns

Floreyns wherewith ye shall be payde. And in trust thereof they lyued and spent very largely. And when they coulde not be credited, they woulde saye, what woulde ye hauc of vs, it were better for you that we shoulde spend freely the goodes of this Realme, rather then the Frenchmen comming hether should finde and consume the same.

At thys time the king of Englande was in the Marches of Wales, and wyth him the Erle of Oxford, by whose aduise the greatest thinges in Englad were gouerned, & without whose aduise nothing in effect was done. Also there was with the king as chiefe of hys Counsayle, syr Symond Burle, syr Nicholas Braule, syr Robert Tauilion, syr Robert Beauchamp, syr Iohn Saluen, and syr Mighell de la Poole. Also there was named Syr Wylliam Neuell, brother to the Lorde Neuell. All these as the talke went, did wyth the King what they would. And as for the kings Vncles, the Erle of Cambridge, and the Erle of Buckyngham could doe nothing wythout it were agreable to the other aforesayd. And this trouble and difference among themselues was well knowne in Fraunce, which greatly advaunced the enterprice of the French king.

Now when the king and the Lordes of Englande were truelye informed that the French king was ready with his power to enter into England and to destroy it, then they drewe together in counsayle. And the king at that tyme beyng in Wales, as aforesayde, was written vnto by his Vncles and other of the counsayle, that it was meete and necessary for hym to come to London where his Lords, and he might best consult for the weale and defence

The king forthwith returned towarde London with the Queene hys wyfe, and came to The king of Englad with his Wynsore, but shortly after, he came to Westmynster, and thether came vnto him all the counsule taketh Lordes of his counsayle, and there tooke aduice what things were to be done agaynst this aduice for the defece of Engiorney, and enterprice of the Frenche King.

Then § Erle of Sarisbury, who was a right valiant and prudent knight sayde before The worthy and the king and hys Vncles, and before all the Lords and prelates of England that were godlye counsayle there present. Sir, my souereigne Lord, and all ye my Lords and other, it ought not to of Salsbury. be marueyled at if our adversary the french king doe come and runne vpon vs, for sithen the death of our late sourreigne Lorde and noble king Edward, one of the puyssauntest Princes that euer reigned, this noble realme of Englande hath beene in great hazard and aduenture to have beene lost and destroyed even with the lewde and naughtie people brought vp and nourished in the same, which thing is not hidden from Fraunce, and that which is worse, it is well knowne that we among oure selues are not in perfite love and vnitie, and that maketh our enimy so bolde. And herevnto I wyll specyally direct my speeche, to moue and exhort that peace, vnitie, and loue may be had amongest our selues, and that beyng first had, and faythfully and louyngly graunted of every of vs, we shall the better deuyse the resistaunce and withstandyng of our forreyn enimies. And nowe to beginne with that matter. First it is meete that we ordevne a sufficient power for the defence of all oure enimies at every Porte, Hauen and Creke, within this realme, that our Country receaue no dishonour blame nor dammage. And then let vs with all diligence see well to the defence of all oure good Fortes, holdes, Cities and good townes, and endeuour our selues to the good consideration and defence of the same.

Nowe when the Erle of Sarisbury had ended his tale, his wordes and saiying was very well noted, as the wordes of a sage and valeant knight, and there was no replie made, but with one voice they consented to enter into decises for defence. And first they thought The order of defence made it most meetest to prouide for the defence of those Hauens where they thought the Frenche for ye realme of king was most lykest to lande. And for that the Erle of Sarisburies possession in parte stand the power marched nere vnto the Isle of Wight, which is right oner agaynst Normandie, and the of Fraunce. Countrie of Caulx, therefore he with his Archers and power was there placed for the defence of that frontire. The Erle of Deuonshire was appointed to be at Hampton, with two hundreth men of Armes, and. vj. hundreth Archers, to defende the Hauen and towne. The Erle of Northumberland was placed at Rye, with two hundreth men of Armes, and.

vj. hundreth Archers. The Erle of Cambridge was assigned to Douer, with. v. hundreth mē of Armes, and. xij. hundreth Archers. And his brother the Erle of Buckingham, at Sandwich with. vj. hundreth men of Armes, and. xij. hundreth Archers. The Erle of Stafford and the Erle of Pembrooke were assigned to Orwell hauen, with. v. hundreth men of armes, and. xij. hundreth Archers. And sir Henry Percey, & Foulx Percey, were appoynted to Yarmouth, with three hundreth men of armes, and. vj. hundreth Archers. And sir Symond Burle was appoynted Capteyne of Douer Castell. All the Hauens and Portes betwene the riuer of Humbre, and Cornewall, were relieued wyth men of armes and archers.

And on the Mounteines and hilles all along the sea coast, vpon the frontiers, living agaynst Flaundyrs and Fraunce, were placed certeine numbers of watchmen, but in such maner (sayth Froissart) as I can not well describe: But as I heard, they had empty Pypes filled with sande, one set vpon another, and on the height of them was place made where the watch men might both stand and sit, and there they continued their watche both night and daye, hauving alwayes speciall eye and regarde towarde the sea, hauving in speciall charge that when they espyed any nauve of Frenchmen drawing towardes them, that then they should cause certeine Beacons beyng nere vnto them, to be set on fyre, that by reason thereof the people might be drawen the sooner to that place, to awayte for the enemie. It was also ordered, that if it fortuned that the French nauie came, that they should suffer the French king peaceably to take lande, and all his, and to enter into the land three or foure dayes iourney, and that then they shoulde first go betweene the sea and them, and to fight with his shippes if they could, and to destroy them, and to take theyr provision from them, and then to followe the Frenche men, but not immediately to fight with them, and to harry them and keepe them wakyng, and to kepe them from goyng a foragyng, and from the destruction of the Country, and so also by diligent following of them, they should be brought to great lack and scarcetie. This was the opinion and order of this counsaile of England. And at that time also it was agreed, that Rochester bridge should be broken downe, where there is a great Ryuer ronnyng from Arondell, in the County of Sussex, and entereth into the Thames, and so into the sea agaynst the Isle of Tenet: and this bridge they of Londo, to be the more sure, did beat downe.

Great taxes set vpon the people both in Fraunce and in England.

Here the French men courageously make a show to set forward against England.

And where as the taxes and tallages were great in Fraunce: In likewise at that tyme they were great in England, so that the realme felt great griefe thereof. There were at that tyme ready in England for defense, of good fighting men, a hundreth thousand Archers, and. x.M. men of armes.

Nowe the time approched, that every man beganne in Fraunce to set forwarde, criyng, and saiying, Now let vs go on these curssed Englishe men, who have done so many mischiefes and wickednesse in Fraunce, the tyme is at hande, that we shall be reuenged vpon them for the death of our fathers, brethren, and kinsmen, whome they have cruelly slaine and discomfited. Then the French king tooke his leave of the Queene his wife, and of the Queene his mother, and of the Duches of Orleaunce, and of all the other Ladies of Fraunce, and the same daye hearde a most solempne Masse in our Ladie Churche in Paris, and he sayde that he purposed neuer to returne againe to Paris, vntill he had bene first in England. And the next day early he road to Senlise: But all this while the Duke of Berry was still in his Countrie of Berrye, although great provision were made for him, both in Flaundrys and at Scluse. And likewise the Duke of Burgoyne was then in his Countrie, but he forthwith toke his leaue of the Duchesse, and of his children, and determined to take his leaue of his great aunt the Duchesse of Brabant, and so he departed out of Burgoyne, and so roade in great estate, and the Admyrall of Fraunce in his company, and sir Guy of Tremoyll, & so they came to Bruxselles, and there found the Duches of Brabant and other Ladyes, who receyued him with great honour. And two dayes he taryed there with them, and then tooke his leaue, and from thence he road to Mouns in Henault, and there he found his daughter the Ladie of Ostreuant, and Duke Aubert, and his sonne, sir William of Henault Erle of Ostreuant, who receiued the Duke with great ioy, and so brought him to Valenciens. And the Duke was lodged in the Eries Palace, and Duke Albert in the lodgyng of Vicongnet, and the Ladie of Ostreuant. And from thence the Duke roade to Doway, and so to Arras, and there he founde the Duchesse his wife tariyng for him. Then the Frenche king came to Compaigne, and so to Noyon, and from thence to Peron, and so to Bapalmes, and so to Arras, and dayly there came downe people from all partes, in such great numbers that the Countrie was almost eaten vp. And to say truth, nothing remayned in the Countrie, but it was taken from them, without making any payment for the same. So that the poore Commons that had gathered together their cornes, had nothing left them but strawe, and that also was taken from them, and if they made any complaint thereof, they were eyther beaten or slaine. There Pondes were fished, there houses beaten downer for fyre wood: So that if the Englishe men had arrived in that Countrie, they could have done them no more hurt, neyther was it likely that they would have done so much hurt vnto them as the Frenche men did. And when the poore pitifully called vpon them for some amendes, they aunswered, as nowe we have no silver to pay, but when we returne we will bring inough, and then every thing shall be fully aunswered and payde. But when the poore people sawe their goodes thus taken away and spent, and that they durst not complaine thereof, they curssed them betwene their teeth, saiying: Get ye into England, or to the devill, and God graunt that ye neuer returne againe.

The French king came nowe to Lisle in Flaundyrs, and his two Vncles with him, the Duke of Burgoyn, and the Duke of Burbon, for as yet the Duke of Berrey was behinde in his awne Country, and made provision for his journey. And with the king at Lisle was the Duke of Barre, the Duke of Loreyn, the Erle of Arminack, the Erle of Sauov, the Erle Dalphyn of Anneringe, the Erle of Geneue, the Erle of Saint Paule, the Erle of Ewe, the Erle of Longueuile, and other great Lordes of Fraunce, in such number as I am not able (sayth Froissart) to name them. The report was, that there should passe into England, xx. thousand knights, and squiers, which certeinely were a goodly company, also, xx. thousand Crosbowes, and. xx. thousand of other men of warre, which were persons that should enter into England, & remaine in the fielde, besyde all the full furniture of the whole nauie vpon the sea. And at this tyme sir Oliuer Clisson was in Briteyn, and prouided there for his businesse and nauie, and was appointed to bring with him the Closure of the fielde made of Tymber, whereof mencion is made before. And with the sayde sir Oliver Clisson Counstable of Fraunce, shoulde come out of Briteyn the best knightes and Esquiers therein, as the Vicount of Rhoan, the Lorde of Rays, the Lord of Beawmanour, the Lorde of de la Vale, the Lorde of Rochefort, the Lorde of Malestroyt, sir John of Malestroyt, and five hundreth Speares Britons chosen men of warre. For it was the Constables purpose and entent, that no man should enter into England, without he were a man of armes chosen. And he gaue charge to the Admirall, saiying: take hede that ve charge not our Shippes with Verlettes and boies, for they shall do more hurt then profite. So that two or thre knightes, without they were great maisters & Capitaynes, although they hyred ships for their money, yet should they have but one horse over, & one Verlet. And to say the truth, they ordeyned all theyr businesse in so good order, that dynerse were of that opinion, that if they might arrive altogether in England, where as they entended to lande (and that was at Orwell Hauen) howe that they should have put the Countrie in great feare, and so they should have done without all doubt. For the great Lordes both spirituall and temporall, & the people of the good townes of England were in great doubt: But the Commons and poore people made small accompt thereof, no more did the poore Gentlemen, for they desyred the warre, eyther to lease, or to winne all. And they sayde one to another, I trust God hath sent vs a good tyme, for that the Frenche king will come into this Countrie, he sheweth himselfe to be of a valiaunt courage, and we have not heard of three hundreth yeres past, of a French king of like courage, but he doth it to make his souldiours souldiours good men of warre: And we thanke him that he will thus visite vs, for nowe we shall attaine to some riches, or else shortly make an ende of our lyues.

Nowe the Frenche king came downe to Lisle, to shewe that the iorney pleased him, and to come the necrer to his passage. And it was commonly spoken in Flaundyrs, and Arthoys, that the french king and his armie taketh Sea on Saturday, on Mondaye, one Tewesday, so that every daye in the weeke it was sayde, he departeth to morowe. And the kinges brother, the Duke of Thourayn, and the Bishop of Beauoys Chauncelour of Fraunce, and dyuers other great Lordes tooke their leaue of the king at Lisle, and they returned to Paris, and it was sayde, how that the king had geuen and committed the gouernaunce of the Realme of Fraunce to his sayde brother the Duke of Thorayne, and to dyuers other Lordes, as the Erle of Bloys and other. And yet all this time the Duke of Berry was behinde, and came fayre and softly, for he had no great appetite to this iourney of going into England: But his long taryeng was very displeasaunt vnto the king, and to the Duke of Burgoyn and to the other Lords, for they would fayne have bene gone. Still great prouision was made, which was very costly and dere vnto them, for that which was not woorth two shyllings, they payde. x. shyllings, and yet they would nedes haue it, for every man desired to be well furnished, in maner of an enuie that euerie man desyred to be better appointed then other. And though the great Lordes were well payde their wages, other poore felowes bought the bargayne full dere, for some had owyng vnto them for a Moneths wages, and yet could get nothing. The Treasorer of the warres and Clerkes of the Chamber of accompts sayde. Sirs, content you vntill the next weeke, and then ye shall be payde, and so they were aunswered weekely. And if any payment were made vnto them, it was but for eyeht dayes, when they were owyng eyght weekes. So that some of the wiser sorte, when they sawe thys maner of dealyng, and howe they were so euill payde, they were much offended and sayde, this voyage will be of small effect: For it is most lykely, or at the least to be greatly suspected, that so sone as the money is collected and gathered of suche taxes as were set, that then they will breake this iorney and returne home agayne into their awne countreyes, and those which cast these doubts, and provided for themselves, were wise. But the poore Gentlemen and common souldyours, who had spent all that ever they had, and every thing was so deere in Flaundyrs, that hard it was to get eyther bread or drinke, and specially if any were in suche neede (as there were a great number) to sell his armour to make money of, there was no person to buy it, neyther was there anye money to geue him for it. There was suche and so great a number of people about Dan, Bruges, and Ardenburgh, and specially at Scluse, that when the king came thether, they wist not where to lodge him. The Erle of saint Paule, the Lorde of Cowcy, the Lorde of Auuergne, the Lorde de Antoigne, and dyuers other other Lordes of Fraunce: and to lye the more at their ease, they were lodged at Bruges, and dyuers times they resorted to the king at Scluse, to knowe when they should departe. And euer it was sayde vnto them that within three or foure dayes, or when the Duke of Berry doth come, and also that we have winde to serue vs. And thus euer the time passed, and the dayes shortened, and the yere beganne to waxe foule, and colde, and the nightes long, the which expence and losse of time muche greeued and offended the Lordes, not onely for that their charges were great, but also most chiefly for that by their long taryaunce, their victualles much diminished.

And in this meane time Lyon King of Armony: who being in Fraunce, and had assigned vnto him by the French king sixe thousande Frankes by the yere, which is one thousand Marke of the curraunt money of England, toward the maintenaunce of hys estate. And at this time he tooke on him for a good entent to go into England to speake with the king there, and his counsayle, to see if he might perswade anye maner of peace to be had between the two realmes of Englande and Fraunce. And so he departed from his lodging of Saint Aulbyn beside saint Dionise, onely with his awne company and without any great furniture: and so he roade to Bolleigne, and there he tooke shypping, and landed at Doner, where he founde the Erle of Cambridge, and the Erle of Buckyngham, and mo then an. C. men of armes, and two thousand Archers, who laye there to keepe that passage. For the brute went that the French king would lande there, or else at Sandwich. And at this time the king of Englande laye at London, and parte of his counsayle with him, and daylie heard tydinges from all the portes of England.

When the king of Armony was arryued at Douer, he had there good cheere, because he The arrivall of was a straunger, and so he came to the kinges Vncles, who receaued him right honorably. Lyon king of And at tyme convenient they demaunded of him from whence he came, and whether he Douer. The savde King of Armony sayde, that in trust of goodnesse he was come thether to see the king of Englande and his counsayle, to treate for peace between Englande and Fraunce, for he sayde he thought that the warre was not meete, for he sayde by reason of the warre betwene these two Realmes, which hath endured so long: 'The Sarazens, Iewes and Turckes are waxen proude, for there is none that maketh them any warre, by reaso whereof I (saith he) have lost my lande and realme, and am not lyke to recouer it agayne without there were firme peace in all christendome. And I would gladly shew this matter which in effect toucheth all christendome, vnto the king of Englande and to his counsayle, as I have done vnto the French king. Then the kings Vncles demaunded of him if the french king had sent him bether or no? he answered and sayde, nay there is no man that sent me, but I am come hether by mine awne motion, to see if the king of England and his counsayle would any thing bende to the intreatie of peace. Then it was demaunded of hym where the french king was? he answered I beleue he be at Scluse. saw him not since I toke my leave of him at Scluse. The he was demauded how he could make anye entreatie of peace, having no power so to do? And they sayde moreover vuto him, if ye be conueyed to the king our Nephew, and to his counsayle, and the French king in the meane season should fortune with his puyssaunce to enter into England, ye may hap thereby to receaue great blame, and your person to be in great icopardic with them of the Countrie. Then the king aunswered, I am in suretie of the french king, for I have sent vnto hym, desyring that vntill I returne agayne, not to remove from Scluse. And I repute him so noble, and so well aduised, that he will graunt my desyre, and that he will not enter into the Sea vntill I returne agayne vnto him. Wherefore, right honorable and valiant gentlemen, I pray you in the instance of love and peace, to convey me to speake with the king, for I desyre greatly to see him: Or else ye that be his Vncles, if ye haue aucthority to geve me aunswere to all my demaundes. Then the Erle of Buckyngham sayde, Syr king of Armony, we be here ordeyned to keepe and defend thys passage and Frontier of Englande, and we have no charge to meddle anye further with the businesse of the realme, without we be otherwise commaunded by the king: But syr ye be come for a good entent into this countrie, and ye are right hartely welcome. But syr, for any certaintie of aunswere ye can have none of vs, for as now we be not of the counsayle. But we will cause you to be conveyed to the king without perill or dammage. The king thanked them and sayd, I desire nothing else but to se the king & speake with him.

The next day the king of Armony was conveyed with a good conduct that the Lordes appointed vnto him for feare of any reencountries. And at the last he came to London, and ryding thorough London, he was well receased because he was a straunger. And when time was convenient, he was brought to § king, who lay then at the Royall, which was then the Quenes Wardrobe, neere vnto Watlyngstreete in London.

When the comming of the king of Armony was knowne, the kinges counsayle drewe to the king, to here what tydings the king brought in that troubleous season. When the king of Armony was come into the kings presence, he made his due salutations, and then began to shew the present estate of Fraunce, and how he was come from thence, specially -to see the king of Englande, whome he had never sene before, and sayde, howe that he was right ioyous to be in his presence, trusting that some goodnesse should grow thereby. And then he vttered with many wordes, that to withstand the great dannger of the present mischiefe that was lykely to happen to England, therfore he was come of his awne good will to do some good therin if he might: not sent from the french king, but wylling to set some accorde and peace betwene the two realmes of Englande and Fraunce, if he might.

And the Lorde Chauncelour shortly aunswered him and sayde, syr king ye are welcome into this realme, for the king our souereigne Lorde and all we are glad to see you here: But syr, we saye that the king hath not here all his counsayle, but shortly they shall be here, and then ye shall be aunswered, and so for that time the king of Armony departed. And within foure dayes after the king removed to his Palayce of Westmynster, and thether came to him all his counsayle, and also the king of Armony.

And when he was come into the presence of the king of Englande, and his counsayle. the king caused the King of Armony to sit by him. And there the king of Armony rehersed agayne the requestes that he made, and also shewed wisely howe that all Christendome was decayed and weakened by occasion of the warres betweene Englande and Fraunce, and how that all the Knightes and squiers of both the realmes entended and prepared themselves to nothing, but alwayes to be of the one parte or the other, whereby the Empire of Constantinople leeseth, and daylie is lyke more to And then he shewed, by reason of thys warre he hymselfe had lost all his realme of Armonye, and therefore desyred for Gods sake that there might be some treatie of peace had betwene the two realmes of Englande and Fraunce.

The answere

The Archebishop of Cauntorbury, who was appoynted to aunswere him, said: sir king of made to the king Armonie, it is not the maner nor neuer was seene, between two such enemies as the king of England, and the Frenche king are, that the king our souereigne Lord should be requyred of peace with his enemie, and he hauving in readinesse an huge armie to enter his land. Wherefore sir, for aunswere vnto you, if it will please you to returne to the Frenche king, and to cause him and all his puyssaunce to withdraw themselves backe againe into their awne Countryes, and when everye man is at home, if it please you to returne againe hether, then we will gladly entend to your treatie. And this was the aunswere that the king of Armonie had, and so he dyned with the king of England, and had as great honour done vnto him as could be deuised. And the king offered him many riche giftes of Golde, and silver, but he would take none, although he had neede thereof, but onelye a Ryng to the value of a. C. Frankes, which was in English money. xi. pound or thereaboutes.

And after dinner he departed, and toke his way to Douer, and there toke leave of such Lordes as were there, and so toke his passage and came to the french king, and shewed him how he had bene in England, and what answer he had there. But the french king & his Vncles toke no regard to any thing that he sayde, and therefore sent him back againe immediately into Fraunce.

Shortly after, the Duke of Berry toke his leave at Paris, & sayd that he would never enter there again vntill he had bene in England, although it appered that he thought nothing lesse. And all the way as he came, he had letters from the king, & from the Duke of Burgoyn to hast him away: But yet notwithstading he hasted fayre & easely, and came by small journeyes. And in this tyme the Constable of Fraunce departed from Lentringer, standyng on the sea side in Briteine, with a great number of men of armes and prouision. He had. Ixxij. great Shippes, and he had with him the Closure of the fielde made of Tymber. And the Constable and his companie had good winde at the begynnyng: But when they approched neere to England, the winderose so fiercely and was so tempestuous about the entrie of Mergate, & the Thamys mouth, that whether they would or not, their shippes were scattered, so that. xx. kept not together, and some were driven perforce into Thannys, and there were taken by the Englishe men, and specially there was taken two or three shippes laden with part of the Closure of Tymber that was ordeyned to close in the fielde, and certeine maister Carpenters and Artificers with them, & so they were brought to London, wherat the king had great ioy, & so had all the Londoners. But the Constable and other Lords with much paine came to Scluse to the french king. Of the Constables commyng & his companie, the french king was right joyfull, and the king sayd vnto him: sir Constable, when shall we depart, certeinly I have great desyre to see England, & therfore I pray you set forth all things with spede, for mine Vncle the Duke of Berry will be The courage of here within these two dayes. Sir, quoth the Constable, we cannot depart vntil the wind the French king. serue vs, & againe the tempest is sore and great: Then said the king, I have beene in my vessell vpon the sea, & the ayre therof pleaseth me right wel, & I beleue I shal be a good mariner, for the sea did me no hurt. In the name of God, quoth the Constable, it hath done hurt to me, for sir we were in great perill coming from Briteyn hether. The king demaided how so? Then the Constable sayd, by fortune of the sea, and great windes that rose against vs vpon v frontiers of England. And sir, we have lost both of our ships & men, for the which I am right sory, but now there is no remedy. Thus the king and the Constable devised in words: But still the tyme passed away and Winter approched, and the Lords lay there in great cold and perill. The Flemyngs also were very loth that they should return againe through their Countrie, and said among themselves: why the deuil doth not the french king passe into England? what meaneth he to tary so long in this country? Are we not pore enough, though the French king make vs no porer? And to be short, all the whole Country of Flaundyrs began to mutter and cry out vpon them.

At the last the Duke of Berry came to Scluse to the king, and the king sayd vnto him. The comyng of A good Vncle, I have bene greatly desyrous to see you, why have you taried so long? the Duke of Berrye. We had bene as nowe in England, and had fought with our enemyes if ye had bene come. The Duke began to smile and excuse himselfe, but did not vtter what was in his minde. But there they rested. vij. dayes, and every day it was sayde, that they should depart to morowe. Howbeit, truely the wind was so contrary, that they could not sayle into Enggland. And winter was farre on, for it was past Saint Andrewes tyde: and it was no good season for the Noble men to take the Sea, although diverse of theyr Shippes were redy crossed to depart. But then the kinges counsaile drewe together, and the Duke of Berry brake all this purpose, and sayde flatly that it was not meete to counsaile the French king beyng but a childe, to take the sea at that season of the yere, and also that the voyage was hindered of much of their prouision that was taken into England, that went with the Constable of Fraunce. And moreover he sayde, call all the Mariners together, and looke if all they will not say that my counsaile is good. For though we be now. xv. C. good saile of Shippes, yet before we come there, we shall not be three hundreth in companie, and therfore consider what perill we shall put our selues in, and namely in a straunge Countrie, wherein before we have not trauayled. And in the ende they concluded to differre that The breaking up voyage vntill Aprill, or May next following, and their prouisions of Bisquet, Salt, Befe, of the meet on-& Wine, should be safely kept vntill then. And so brake up this most wonderfull voyage for this tyme, which cost the realme of Fraunce a hundreth thousande Frankes, thirtie tymes tolde (sayth Froissart) which of English money was. CCC. xxxiij. thousand. CCC. xxxiij. pounde. vj. shillinges viij. pence, after. ix. Frankes to the pound.

And in this yere, as sayth Fabian, the Erle of Arondell was sent into the Duchy of Guvan, for to strength such souldours as the king at that tyme had in those partes, or as some wrote, to kepe the Seas from Rouers, & enemies. The which Erle in keeping his course and passage, met with a great fleete of Flemyngs, laden with Rochell Winc, and set vpon them, and distressed them and their shippes, and so brought them into dyuerse Portes of England. By reason whereof, the sayde Wine was so plentifull in England, that a Tonne thereof was solde for. xiij. shillinges, foure pence, and for. xx. shillinges to take the choyse. And in that fleete was taken the Admirall of Flaudyrs, which remayned

Ye have heard before in the beginning of the. x. yere of this kings reigne that a great counsayle was holden at Nottyngham, and vnto the same were called the chiefe Justices and Sergeaunts at lawe, and that there was proponed certaine articles against the Lordes Nottingham of the realme that were admitted by Parliament to have the examination of suche as had counsayle. beene lewde rulers, and such as had the gouernment of the kings treasure, and that the same articles, as before may at large appere, did specially touch the lyues of the sayd honorable personages, & that by the sentence and judgement of the lawyers they were all condempned as Traytors. The which when the sayde Lordes vnderstood, they assembled themselves together and agreed for the safetie of themselves, and for the better governement of the realme to gather suche power as they might, and to resort vnto the king, and to admonishe hym to remoue and advoyde from him al such lewde counsaylors as before had bene complayed upon in Parliament, as aforesayde, and also in all humble maner to beseech his highnesse to hearken to their complaynts agaynst the sayd euill counsaylors. which not onely sought the vtter destruction of the realme, but also of his royall person.

The king hering of thys assembly, came to London in Nouember, being accompanyed with all the aforesayde lewde counsaylors, and there purposed to have holden a parliament, and to have attaynted the aforesayde Lordes, which in the last parliament were appointed and aucthorised to have the examination of suche as had consumed and made awaye the kings treasure, as aforesayde: But the king hering of the Lords approching with a great puyssance, steyed in such sorte as that parliament went no farther. Notwithstandyng the king caused to be made, that no Citezene of London should be so hardie to sell to the Duke of Gloucester, the Erle of Arondell, or anye other the Lords, any harnesse, Bowes, Arrowes, nor any other municion or matter that should tende to the furniture of the warre, vpon a great paine.

But this notwithstanding, the Lords with a goodly company well furnished, came to London: and before they approched neere to the Citie, they sent vnto the King the Archbishop of Cauntorbury, the Lord Iohn Louell, the Lord Cobham, and the Lorde Iohn Euerox requiring to have delivered vnto them such as were about him, Traytors and seducers both of him and the realme, and troublers both of pore men and riche, and such as sowed discordes and variaunces betwene the king and his nobles: And they farther declared that their comming was for the honour and wealth both of the king and the realme. But the king ruled by his fyue euill counsaylors, was perswaded that the Lordes intended Euill counsailors to bring him vnder: Therefore they gave him cousayle to make the king of Fraunce sure friend vnto him in these great necessities, and for to be more in quiet, to give him the Towne and Marches of Calice, and whatsoever he had else beyond the Seas, and so to call in the french king to chastise his enimies, and those Lordes that neuer would be tamed. And immediatly the king sent for the Maior of London, and demaunded of him how many hable men he supposed that the Citie coulde make? And he aunswered that he thought surely within an howre to have fiftie thousand, well then sayd the king, go and prove what will be done. And after the Major beganne to attempt the matter, the Citezens aunswered with one voyce, that they would neuer fight agaynst the kings friendes and defenders of the realme: But agaynst the kings enemies, and the enemies of the realme they would alway be readie, which answere the Maior reported to the king. At this time also was about the king the Lord Raufe Basset, which sayde franckly to the king, syr I have bene and shall be your true liege man, and my bodye and goods shall alway be yours in all iustice and truth: But of thys I assure you, if it fortune me to come into the field, vndoubtedly I will alway folow the true part, and it is not I that intend to adventure the breakyng of my head for the Duke of Ireland. Also at the same tyme was the Erle of Northumberland with the king, which sayd vnto him, syr no doubts therof, but these Lords which now be in the field, alway have bene your true and faithfull subjects and yet be, and entend not to do or attempt any thing against your estate, wealth and honor: But they feele themselves sorowfully greeued by the wicked imagination and false oppression of certayne persons which are about you. And syr, without fayle all your realme is sore mooved therewith, and that both great and small, as well your nobles as your commons. And I see none other but they entend to aduenture their lyues with the Lords specially in this case, which they doe recon yours & your realmes. And syr, now ye be in the chiefe place of your realme, and in the place of your coronation, nowe order your selfe wisely and like a king, and send vnto them to come into your presence in some open place, and there will them to declare vnto you the entent of their comming with so great a number to these parts, and I doubt not, but they will shewe suche reasons, that you shall have them excused.

The Archebishop of Cauntorbury and Bishop of Ely Chauncelor, and other Bishops there present, affirmed the Erles aduise to be good, and the king considering wisely the case as it stoode, appeased himselfe, and accorded to their aduise, and desyred the Arch-The kings anbishop of Cauntorbury and the Bishop of Ely to aduertise them of his pleasure, which swere sent vnto was: that he willed them to come vnto him to Westmynster the Sunday folowyng, and so they tooke their leaue of him and returned vnto the Lordes, and made vnto them relacion of all the kings minde. The Duke of Gloucester and the other Lordes were so stiffe in their matter that they swore all wholy that they woulde neuer leave of as long as they had The great couone penny to maintaine their cause. And if any of them happened to die, the ouer Lordes. lyuers should doe the same vntill the time that this matter were brought to good effect: And because they were in doubt that the king by his sinister counsayle should stirre the The Lordes companyle should stirre the The Lor City of London agaynst them, they first determined to certefie the Maior and the Citie tefie the Citie of London of the that their comming was for reformations of great and enorme causes, which they declared cause of their vnto the sayd Maior and Citezens in writing, and desired their fauours and counsayle assemblie. therein. And this done, they farther determined to kepe their days on the Sundays following to come to the kinges presence. And according to the same appointment the sayde Lordes came into the Hall at Westmynster. But before their comming thether, they sent Wisedome precertaine persons to serche both the Mewes, and also the Archebishop of Yorkes place, if percase any man had bene layde there to betrap them. For it was shewed vnto them that in those places there should be some treason wrought against them. And when they perceyued that all was cleere, they went forth on their way. And when they entred into Westminster hall, and had sight of the king, they made vnto him humble obeysaunce, and The behavior of so went they foorth vntill they came to the nether step going vp to the kinges seat of estate, ye lordes when they came into where they made their second obeysaunce, and then the king made them a countenaunce the kings preto come nere vnto him, and they so did, kneeling downe before hym. And he foorthwith sece. arose from his place, and louingly welcommed them, and tooke ech of them by the hand, and that done set him downe againe. There they declared vnto him that their comming The cause of the Lordes assemwas for none enil to his person that ever they imagined or thought: But the cause of their blie. griefe was against the five Traytors which were about his person, and suche matters as they had to charge them was there ready in writing, which they delivered vnto the king. There The kinges aunthe king openly promised them that they should appere personally at the parliament, and swere to the that none of them shoulde have of him pardon without the assent of the Lordes, if they had offended according to their accusations, And then foorthwith the king arose from his place, and led them to his chamber, and after that he had dronken with them, they departed. And for as much as it should be well knowne throughout all the Citie that these of the Lordes. Lordes had nothing offended him with their comming, the king caused a proclamation to be made, the effect whereof was as followeth.

Richard by the grace of God. &c. We will that it be known to all our liege people A proclamation in the fauour of throughout our Realme of England: That where as Thomas Duke of Gloucester, the Lordes. Richard Erle of Arondell, and Thomas Erle of Warwike haue bene defamed of Treason by certeyne of our counsaylors: We, as it apperteneth, diligently searching the cause and ground of this defamation, finde no such thing in them, nor any suspicion thereof. Wherefore we declare the same defamation to be false and vntrue, and do receyue the same Duke and Erles into our speciall protection. And because their accusers shall be notoriously knowen, their names are Alexader Archbishop of Yorke, sir Lionel Vere The names of (but in the boke of statutes he is call sir Robert Vere) Duke of Ireland, Mighell de la the lordes accusers. Poole Erle of Suffolke, Robert Tresilian chiefe Iustice of Englande, and Nicholas Brimbre of London Knight: Who in likewise shall remaine vnto the next Parliament, and there shall stande to their aunswere, but in the meane time we take them into our protection,

The accusers are in great feare.

Then came the wicked counsaylours to the king, shewing to him that they were dayly in daunger of their lyues by the great Lordes of the realme, and saw none other but dayly they should be in more, for y the king had promised that they should apere at the next Parliament, which was at hand, and sayde also that all the displeasure that they had, was onelye for the Kinges sake, and not for any matter of their awne, and that it was not his honour to see them so entreated: And further, they sayde, that they neyther durst nor would put their bodies to so manifest a daunger as to appere in Parliament.

The king considering this, withdrew himselfe from the counsaile of hys Lordes, which then were assigned to sit at London for matters of the Parliament: So that Counsaile

Yet Mighell de la Poole, fearing still the displeasure of the great Lordes would not tary, but toke his leave of the King and departed from him. Thomas Molyners, which was a man of great power in the Counties of Lancashire and Chesshire, and by him the king sent to the Shirife of Chester a Commission under a secrete seale, commaunding him that he shoulde arreyse a great power, and that they should see the Kinges kinsman and especiall friend the Duke of Ireland conveyed in safetie to his Moliners raiseth presence, not lettyng for any labour or expenses. Then this Molyners revsed a great an armye to helpe the Duke power, and suche as for the love they bare vnto the Duke of Gloucester, and to the other Lordes, would not go with him, he did emprison them in dyuerse prisons, commanding the Iaylours to kepe them strevt in Irons, and to geue them bread and water, and some day water onely, vntill his returne againc. The King also commaunded Sir Raufe Vernon, and sir Raufe Ratcliffe to assist them: And so they set foorth toward the King, and they were in number aboue five thousand men. The Duke of Irelande hauyng in his company Molyners, Vernon, and Ratcliffe, with a power of fine thousand men, as aforesayde, came still forward vntill he came to Radcocke Bridge, not passyng foure myles from Chepyng Norton: and if he had passed the same bridge, he had bene sure out of the daunger of his enemyes. But when he came thether, he founde it kept by the Erle of Darbyes folkes, which had broken the bridge, and so stopt his passage: And within a little way therof lay the Erle of Darby himselfe with a great company. But after the Duke of Irelande had knowledge of the Erles beyng there, he stayed and caused the Kinges Banner to be displayed, and with a mery countenaunce he exhorted his company to quite themselves valiauntly, and he caused his Trompettes Trompettes to sound: howbeit, there apeared vnto him, that as some were willyng to fight on his part, so there were other that clerely forsooke him, and sayde they woulde not fight agaynst so manye Noble men, nor in so vaiust a cause. The Duke of Irelande The Duke of espiying this, gane his horse the spurres, and roade forwarde, thinking to have passed the Irelande flyeth. Bridge: But when he came thether and sawe the Bridge broken, he sayde with open voyce, we are deceyved, and turned his horse and alighted, and gate him vpon another Courser, myndyng to haue fled ouer the Thamys: But there met him the Duke of Gloucester, with his companie. And when he sawe that he was enclosed amongest his enemies on the one syde, and the Riuer of Thamys on the other syde, and also the Erle of Darby to prease on him so fast for to haue taken him, he thought to haue put all to hazard, and cast away his Gauntlets, and his sworde to make him the lighter, and gaue hys horse the spurres, Ireland escapeth and tooke the river, and so escaped all his enemyes. And the Lext newes that was heard hardly. of him, was, that he was slaine in Louaine in huntyng of a wilde Boare, in the yere of our Lorde. 1393, and in the xvi, yere of the reigne of King Richarde the seconde. when king Richarde heard of his death, he tooke it merueylous heavily, and to shewe the great affection that he bare vnto him, he commaunded that his dead carkasse should be brought from Loueyn into England, and to be conucied with all solempne funerall pompe to the Priorie of Colney in Essex, and caused him to be layde in a Coffin of Cypresse, and to be adourned with princely garmentes, and his face vncouered, and garnished with a Chaine of Golde, and riche ringes put on his fingers. And the King himselfe was at his buryall accompanied with the Dukes mother, and with one Archebishop, and sundrie other Bishops: But of Noble men, there were verye fewe, for they had conceyued suche hatred agaynst him, that they vtterly contemned him. But to returne where we left: After the Duke was fled, as aforesayde, Thomas Molyners woulde have followed him also, but the Lorde Mortimer drewe him backe and there killed him. Then the Lordes armye set vpon the people that came with the Duke out of Chesshire, Lancashire, and Wales, and toke them as cnemies, and spoyled them of their horse, harnesse, Bowe, and Arowes, and so sent them home without doyng of them any more harme.

After this the Duke of Gloucester, and the other lordes went to Oxenforde, beyng sory The Lordes that their fortune was not to have taken the Duke of Ireland. And there they tooke their Oxenford. counsaile what was best for them further to do, to bring their purpose to good ende. And from thence they removed to saint Albons, and came thether on Christmas Euen, and there taried that day and the next, and on Saint Stephens day they tooke their way to London, & there mustered themselves besydes Clerkenwell, with a goodly army, which they divided into three battayles, and their harnesse was so cleane and bright, that it was a goodly sight to beholde: And they sent two Knightes, and two Esquiers vnto the Maior The Lordes send of London, and Aldermen, and chiefe Citizens of the same, that they should come and to the Maior and Citezens of declare vnto the sayde Lords, whether they were minded to take their partes, and the London. partes of the Commons, or else with the Duke of Irelande and his Adherentes, Traytors vnto the King and the Realme. So came the Maior of London, whose name was Nicholas Exton, and certeine of the chiefe of the City with him, and brought the Keyes of the Citie with them, and submitted themselues to the Lordes, and offered them entrie into the Citie at their pleasures with all their people. And then the Lordes sent certeine per- The Lordes sonnes before, to searche if there were any bushmentes, or personnes lye in wayte, for to spect. trap or destroy them. But before their commyng into the Lordes to the Tower, they had the Keyes of the Gates sent vnto them, and of all the strong holdes the king. within the Tower. And so soone as they came into the kinges presence, after their humble salutations done, they requested the King, that all those of his Court which were knowne or suspected of treason to his person or realme, might be taken and committed to several holdes, the which the King graunted. And duryng the tyme of this communication, the Erle of Darby desyred the king vpon the Wall of the Tower to beholde the people that were there assembled for the preservation of him and his realme, which he did, and marueyled much to see such a goodly armie and strength. Then sayde the Duke of Gloucester vnto him, sir this is not the tenth part of your willyng subjectes that would haue risen to haue destroyed these false Traytors. And after they had such comunication with the King, they would have taken their leave of him: Eut the king desyred them to tary all night there with the Quene. The Duke thinkyng to make all sure, made his excuse that he durst not be absent from all those folkes which they had brought with them, for feare that some businesse might arise, either in the armie, or in the Citie. But at the kinges instance, the Erles of Nottyngham, and Darby targed there all night.

And the next daye king Richard, at the instaunce of the Lordes, caused to be taken all suspect folkes of his courte, and to be sent into dyners prisons to be kept against the parliament, and then to come to their aunswere. The persons that were apprehended, were Sir Symond Burley, Sir Wylliam Elman, Sir Nicholas Dagwoorth, syr Iohn Goloford, Clifford and Slake priests, Sir Iohn Beaushamp, syr Thomas Treuet, syr Iohn were apprehend-Salsburie, and one called Lyncoln, and Iames Barners a priest. There should also have bene apprehended Alexander Neuell Archbishop of Yorke, Mighell de la Poole Erle of Suffolk, and Robert Tresilian chiefe Iustice of England, but these would not be found. And there was also taken Syr Robert Brember of London knight, but he found suretie for his foorth comming. Other Lords and Ladies there were that were put out of the Court, as Iohn Fortham Bishop of Deuclyn, Lord Bewmond, Lorde Sowche, Lorde Louell, Lorde Thomas Canweyes, the Lord Cliffords sonne, Lord Bawdewyn, the Bishop of Chichester the kings Confessor, the Lady Monoy, the Lady Poynings, the Lady Mo-

The Iudges arested and committed to the Tower.

Shortly after, that is to say the morow after Candlemas daye the parliament began, the which was named the parliament that wrought wonders. And the first daye of the parliament were arested sytting in their places all the Iustices except Sir Wylliam Skipwoorth, that is to saye, Sir Roger Fulthorpe, syr Robert Belknap, Sir Iohn Carey, syr Iohn Holt, syr William Brooke, and Iohn Alocton the kings Sergeaunt at lawe, all which were committed to the Towre, and there kept in seuerall places. The cause of their apprehension was, for that at the last parliament the Lordes and Nobles were made gouernors of the realme, by the assent of the sayde parliament, and also by the assent and counsayle of all the Iustices then beyng, and therefore Indentures tripartited were made, wherof the one part remayned with the king, and the second parte with the Lords that were chosen to gouerne the realme, and the thirde parte with the Iustices. And foras much as the sayde Iustices at a counsayle holden at Nottyngham, as aforesayde, did afterward contrary to the sayde agreement, it was determined that they should make aunswer thervnto.

Iudgement geuen against lours.

In the beginning of the parliament was called Robert Veer Duke of Irelande, Alexanthe euill cousay- der Neuell Archebishop of Yorke, Mighell de la Poole Erle of Suffolk, Sir Robert Tresilian chiefe Iustice of Englande, to answere Thomas of Woodstock Duke of Gloucester, Richard Erle of Arondell Thomas Erle of Darby, and Thomas Erle of Nottyngham vpon certaine articles of high treason, which these Lordes did charge them with. And for as much as none of these appered, it was ordered by the whole assent of the parliament that they shoulde be banished for ever: And their landes and goodes, moveable and vnmouable, to be forfeit and seased into the kinges hand, the landes entayled onely except.

Robert Tresilian chiefe lusexecuted.

Shortly after this, was founde Robert Tresilian chiefe Iustice lurkyng in a Poticaries tice of England house at Westmynster, and there founde the meanes to have spyes daylie vpon the Lordes what was done in the parliament: For all the dayes of his lyfe he was craftie, but at the last his craft turned to hys destruction: for he was discouered by his awne seruant, and so taken and brought to the Duke of Gloucester, and the same daye had to the Towre, and from thence drawen to Tyborne, and there hanged.

The morow after, Syr Nicholas Brembre which afore had bene Maior of the Citie of Sir Nicholas London against the Citezens will, was brought foorth. This man had done in the Citie Brembre executed with his many great oppressions, and in his Mairaltie had made great and monstreous stockes to awar Axe. emprison men in, and also he caused to be made a common Axe, to stryke of the heades of them which did resist his will and pleasure, for so highly was he in fauour with the king, that he might do what he would. And the report went that he had caused. viii. thousand and mo to be endited, which before had taken part with § Lordes, which he entended to haue put to execution, if God had not shortened hys dayes. And in the ende, being called to his aunswer, he was found giltie, and had judgement neyther to be hanged nor drawen, but to be hedded with his awne Axe, which before he had deuised.

The next day after, there were condempned these following, Thomas Vske, Iohn Blagg, Dyuers con-Sir Symon Burly, syr Iohn Beaushamp, Sir Iohn Barners, Iohn Erle of Salsburie, and cuted.

euerie of them were executed.

As touching the Iustices, they were also condempned to death by the Parliament: But Iustices condemned to persuche meanes was made for them vnto the Quene, that she obteyned of the king pardon petuall exile. for their liues, but they forfeyted their lands and goodes, and were judged to perpetuall exile, and places appointed vnto them where they should remayne.

And of that sorte were. xxiiij. knightes, with xxiiij. Ladyes also appareled, as aboue-whitehartes with savde, and their horses were led with xxiiij. To this disporte came many straungers, among the which the Erle of Saint Paule, the Lorde Ostreuaunt, sonne and heyre vnto the Duke of Holland, and a yong sonne of the Erle of Ostrich, were greatly commended.

And when these lustes had cotinued by sundry times the space of. xxiiij. dayes, to the great iove and comforte of the young lustic Bachelers, and to the kings great honor, who all that tyme kept open houshold for all honest comers: I say, when the same was finished, the straungers returned to their Countries with many riche giftes. And for reformation of that euill, certaine persons, as well English as Portingales that were founde giltie of suche robberie, were put to death: By meane whereof, the other feared so, that where by the former lewdenesse the Duke and the king were put to after deale, by the reformation of that euill, they gate againe daylie voon their enimies: So that in processe of time the king of Spayne was driven of necessitie to treat with the Duke of a peace and concord.

Of the which peace, as sayth Reynulph in his last boke, and. vij. Chapter, the conditions were these.

First, for a finall concord, the king of Spaine should mary the Dakes eldest daughter. weene the king named Constance.

Also, that he should geue vnto the Duke in recompense of costes so many wedges of Golde as shoulde lade eyght Charets. And that yerely during the lyues of the sayde Duke and his wyfe, he should at his proper coste and charge, delyuer to the Dukes assignes ten thousand Marke of Gold, within the towne of Bayon.

And after this peace was stablished, and sureties taken for the performance of the same: The Duke departed with the king of Portyngale, to whome shortly after he maried his second daughter, named Anne.

And in this yere the Turks made cruell warre agaynst the Genowayes or men of Geane. & they sought ayde of the king of England, and of the king of Fraunce. And for their helpe there was sent out of England a noble warryour called the Erle of Alby, with two thousande Archers. And out of Fraunce went the Duke of Burbon, and the Erle of Ewe, with xv. hundred speares. The which kept their journey vntill they came vnto a City in Barbary, named Thunys, sometyme belonging to the sayde Genowayes, where the sayde English and Frenchmen bare themselves so manfully, with the ayde of the Genowayes, that in processe they wanne the sayde Citie from the Turkes, and put the Genowayes agayne in possession thereof, and toke of them many prisoners, the which were exchaunged for christen prisoners before taken. And more, they forced they sayde Sarazens to paye vnto the Genowayes ten thousande Ducates of Golde, for confirmation of a peace for a But some other write, that this towne was not recoursed, but only a truce taken for a time. And Froissart sayth, that the Christians departed sodainely from the Citie of Thunes, without any league or truce making, fearying dyners perilles and incidents that might else haue chaunced vnto them.

The determination of yo iuristhoritie of the Bishop of Rome.

And here Cooper (in his Chronicle) sayth: That in this time in Englande it was dedietion and auc. creed that the aucthoritie of the Bishop of Rome should be ended with the Occean Sea. and it should be lawfull thenceforth to no man to appeale to the Bishop of Rome, nor make sute that any Englishma should be curssed by his aucthority, neyther y any man should execute such commandement, though it were obteyed of the Bishop, on payne to leese and forfeyt all his goodes, and his body to perpetual prison.

The death of king Robert of Scotland

And in this yere dyed king Robert of Scotland, and John Erle of Carreck his eldest sonne succeded and reigned after him, whome the Scottes called Robert after his father, because they thought Iohn an vnluckie name in a King. He was maymed with the stroke of an horse in his youth, and so made vnhable for the governaunce of the Realme, and Duke Robert of Albanye continued as governoure all the tyme of hys reigne, and he reigned, xvj. yeres.

King Richard living at his Manor of Woodstock, and kepyng there his Christmasse: The Erle of Pembrooke beyng yong of age, was desyrous to learne to just, and required a Knight named Sir Iohn Saint Iohn to run with him certeine courses. In the which, were it with stroke or other mishap, the sayde Erle receyued there his deathes wound, and dyed shortly after.

Then roase the streete, namely the youth, and they woulde have had him out of the Bishoppes house, and there was great heaving and shouving, and many people vp. And at the last came the Maior of London, and the Shirifes, and they pacified this businesse as soone and as well as they could, and shortly after all was in quiet.

In this meane tyme, the Bishop of Sarisbury beyng at the Court with the King, and himselfe also being then high treasurer of England, such worde was brought him of this ryot, and the tale so euill tolde agaynst the Citizens and rulers of the Citie, that the sayd Bishop informed maister Arondell then Archebishop of Cauntorbury, and Chauncelor of Arundel Bishop Englande thereof, and in fine they two made so grieuous a tale and complaint to the was Chauncelour king agaynst the Rulers of the Citie, and Citizens, that the Maior and Shirifes were sent of England. for in all hast: And when they came, they were shaken vp to grieuously, and their honest and reasonable excuses could not be heard: But foorthwith the liberties of the Citie were seazed into the Kinges handes, and the Maior and Shirites discharged of their offices, and a knight named sir Edwarde Dalingrige made gouernour of the Citie.

And the king beyng thus in displeasure with the Citie, caused Mighelmasse Terme to be kept at Yorke, and so continued vntill Christmasse next following.

The Citizens perceyuyng the king to continue in displeasure with them, made daily Doctor Graueslabour vnto such friendes as they could make, to pacify the kings wrath agaynst them, London restored and to obteyne his most gracious pardon. The which at length, specially by the meane the liberties of of the Queene, and Doctor Grauesende then Bishop of London, they obteyned. first the Citizens were tolde that the King entended to come from his Manor of Shene, to the Citie of London, and then it was lyke they should obtain fauour: Wherefore in all goodly hast the Citizens trymmed and bewtefyed their Citie most sumptuously with Pageauntes and riche hangyngs, and at the day appoynted, foure hundreth of them in one Livery road and met the King on the Hethe on this side Shene, and in their most humble maner submitting themselves, and praiving his grace to pardon their follyes past, besought him to take his way to hys Palayce of Westmynster through the Citie of London. The which the King tooke in good part, and graunted them so to do: And when he came at London Bridge, they presented to him two favre steedes, trapped in riche cloth of Golde, parted of red and white. The which present he thankfully received. And so the King King Richard kept on his way vntill he came to the Standard in Cheepe, the Citizens of London in their London. Liveryes standyng vpon eyther syde of the street as the King went, criyng, King Richard, King Richard. And at the sayde Standard in Cheepe was ordeyned a sumptuous stage, in the whiche were set dyuers personages in rich apparell. Among the which, one Angell was ordeyned, which with a vice came downe, and set a riche crowne of gold garnished with stone and pearle vpon the Kinges heade as he passed by, and another on the Queenes, and so they roade foorth vntill they came at Westminster, where the Maior and his companie, takyng theyr leave of him, returned to London.

The next day following, the Maior and his brethren went to Westminster, and presented there vnto the King two Basons of Siluer and gylt, and in them two thousand nobles of Golde, beseching him in most humbly wise, to be good and gracious Lord vnto the The which he accepted thankfully, and gaue vnto them very comfortable wordes. theyr gift vnto the King, which was verye well accepted and taken.

The cause why y' Maior and the Citizens of London do come diuerse dayes in lempn'y to Paules Church.

And here Fabian sayth, that for the great zeale and love that the aforesayde Bishop of London bare vnto the Citie and Citizens in this their sute to the King for their liberties. they of theyr awne good willes to this day, yerely vpon the feastfull dayes, as the day y the Major taketh his othe, which is the morowe after Simon and Iude, and Alhalowen day, Christmasse day, the Twelfe day, and Candlemasse day, when they go to Paules in theyr Livereys, they visite the place of his buryall, beyng in the middle Isle in the West ende of the Church, where the sayde Bishop is pictured and drawen foorth in Brasse, holdyng the Charter of the Citie of London, and the great seale of England in his hand. But it semeth to me that this is not true, for the place of buriall in Paules, to the which the Major doth resorte, is the graue where William, sometyme Bishop of London is buryed, of whom we have made mention in the first yere of William the Conqueror, who first obteyined the privileges for the Citic, and so it appereth by the inscription upon the same Grauestone.

The terme againe remoued to Westmynster.

This yere king Richard (as sayth Reynulph) went ouer to Calice, and there met with the French king about the conclusion of a maryage, which was with the Ladie Isabell daughter vnto the French king, whome the sayd French king did offer to the king of England to take in mariage as his wife. At the last this mariage was agreed vpon, and the day of the solempnitie therof appoynted. And the xviij. day of the french kings Nouember, the sayde King Richard maryed the sayd Lady Isabell in Calice, beyng within the age of. viij. yeres, as saith Fabian. > And here a little to note the giftes geuen of the Kinges one to another, whereof Froissart maketh a great & long discourse. But to be short, first king Richard gaue vnto the French king, a Bason of Golde, with an Ewer. Then the French King gaue him three standing Cups of Gold with couers garnished with pearle and stone, and a ship of Gold richely garnished with pearle and stone. At another metyng king Richard gaue him an Owche, Owche, set with so fine stones, that it was valued at fine hundreth Marke. Then the Frenche king gaue him two Flagons of Golde, a Tablet of Golde, and therein an Image of Saint Mighell richely garnished. Also a Tablet of Golde wyth a Crucifix, richely appoynted. And a Tablet of Golde with the Image of the Trinitie, set with pearle and stone, and a Tablet of Golde with an Image of Saint George, richely set with pearle and stone, which all were valued at. xv. hundreth Marke. Then king Richard seeying the bountie of the French king, gaue to him a Bawderick or Coller of Gold, set with great Diamods, Rubyes, and Balesses, beyng valued at five thousand Marke, the which for the richenesse thereof, and for the excellency and finenesse of the workemanship, the Frenche king ware it about his necke, as often as the king and he met together. Then the Frenche king gaue to him an Owche and a spice Plate of Golde of a great weight, valued at two thousand Marke. Also many were the riche giftes that were geuen and receyued of Lordes and Ladies of both Princes. Among the which are specially noted four giftes, which king Richard gaue vnto the Duke of Orleaunce, for the which he received againe of the Duke treble the value. For where his were valued at a thousand Marke: The Dukes were valued at three thousand Marke.

Now after that these two Kinges had thus solaced themselues, the one with the other, and all matters concerning the mariage fully concluded and ended. The French King, taking his leave of King Richard, delyvered hys young daughter vnto him, and sayde as followeth.

Right louyng sonne, I delyuer here to you the creature that I most loue in this worlde next my wife and my sonne, beseeching the father of heaven, that it may be to his pleasure, & to the weale of you rrealme, and that the amitie betweene these two realmes, in aduoydyng of the effusion of christian bloud, may be kept inuiolably for the terme betweenc vs concluded, which terme was. xxx. yere, as sayth Froissart. The latter ende of thys yere the King by sinister counsayle delyuered vp by appoyntment the towne of Brest in Briteyne to the Duke, which was occasion of displeasure be-twene the King and the Duke of Gloucester his Vncle, as after ye shall here.

In Februarij next folowyng, the King holding a sumptuous feast in Westminster Hall, manye of the Souldiours which were newly come from the towne of Brest aforesayde, preassed into the hall, and kept a rome together. Which companie the Duke of Glou- Agreat feast cester did earnestly beholde, and asked what men they were: and when he knew they made by king came from Brest, which towne was genen vp without his knowledge, he was vexed in his Westminster. minde. In somuch as when the King was entred into his Chamber, and fewe nere vnto Hell. him, he sayde to the King: Sir, sawe ye not the felowes that sate in so great a number to daye in your hall at suche a table? And the king aunswered yes, and asked the Duke what companie it was? To whome the Duke aunswered and savde, syr these are the Souldiours come from Brest, and as nowe have nothing to take to, nor know not how to shift for their lyuing, and the rather for that I am informed, they have bene before time euil paid. Then sayd the king, it is not my will, but that they should be well payd: And if any haue cause to complayne, let them shewe it vnto oure Treasorer, and they shall be reasonably aunswered.

In reasoning of this matter further, the Duke sayde to the king, syr you ought to put your bodye to paine for to wynne a strong hold or towne by feate of warre, before ye take vpon you to sell or delyuer any towne or strong holde that is gotten with great difficulty, and by the manhood of your noble progenitors. To this the king with chaunged countenaunce aunswered and sayde: Vncle, how saye you those wordes? Then the Duke boldly recited the aforesayde wordes. Wherevnto the King being then more discontented, sayde: wene you that I am a Marchaunt, or a foole, to sell my land? by saint Iohn Baptist nay: But truth it is, that our Cosyn the Duke of Briteyne hath rendred vnto vs all suche sommes of money as our progenitors lent vnto him or his auncestours, vpon the sayde towne of Brest: for the which, reason & good conscience will, y he have his towne restored vnto him agayne. By meane of which words thus vttered by the Duke, such rancour and malice kindled betweene the King and him, that it ceassed not vntill the sayde Duke was put to death by murder vnlawfully, as shall appere in the next yere following.

This present yere the King bearing still malice in his minde agaynst the Duke of Gloucester, as aforesayde, and chiefly for that he and the Erles of Arondell, and of Warwike and other had forced him to renounce his most trustie friends and counsaylors, as he thought, as is before at large declared in the. xj. yere of this Kings reigne, and nowe partlye to be reuenged on their outrage, as he sayde: And partly also for that all princes subjects should take example, not to presse their souereigne Lorde after that maner, he sommoned a parliament A parliament at to be holden at Westminster. And there, not regarding the othe that he had made before to the Lordes in open parliament, he called out of exile certaine of the Iustices, which by the former sentence given, should never have returned. And because he would be certainely certefied, he sent ouer his Ambassadors, which at their returne againe into Englande made reporte vnto the King, that the most parte of the Electors had consented to his election, onely two or three withstood it, for this cause, as they sayd, that he that could not keepe in due obeysaunce his awne subjectes, in his awne realme, it was not lyke that he should gouerne well other A malicious re- lyeng farre of and wide a sunder: Wherefore his Ambassadors aduised him to wynne pert made by the the fauour of them that so did stick. Nowe whether the messengers did fayne this, to > renewe the kings displeasure against the Duke of Gloucester and the Erle of Arundell and other, for that percase they bare them no good will, or that they brought true reporte agayne, it is not knowen: But now when it was thought that this realme of England was most quiet, and that prosperitie was lyke daylie to encrease, what for that the king had maried the French Kings daughter, and had by her great riches: And also for that truce was taken betwene both the princes for. xxx. yeres: And also considering the goodly garnishment of this realme by the great and wise number of noble Lordes, and valiaunt knightes, which were suche, as no christian realme for the number of them coulde then shewe the lyke. All these things considered, even contrary to all mens expectation, sodainely the kinges maiestie bearing in his heart great wrath and displeasure against the true Lords of his counsayle as aforesayd, whome he nowe purposed to be reuenged of, practised their destructions, which put the realme to great trouble, and in the ende it turned to the ouerthrowe and confusion of the king himselfe, as ye shall here. For the. vj. daye of Iulij next after, the king appointed to keepe a great feast in London, where he pur-

But the Duke of Gloucester excused him by sicknesse: The Erle of Arondell fearing the kinges displeasure kept him at home in his Castell, and so there came to this feast none but onely the Erle of Warwike. and louing countenaunce, and gaue him very comfortable wordes saying vnto him, be of good cheere and take no thought, for losing of Goers lande, swearing vnto him that he woulde prouyde other for him, that should amount to as good a valure. But neuerthelesse, after that dynner was done, the king caused him to be arrested of treason, and delivered The Erle of Warwike is him to be kept in safe custody untill the next parliament, which he had orderned to be kept arested of tres for

for the destruction of him and manye other. The same night also the king spake vnto the Archbishop of Cauntorbury, that he should perswade his brother the Erle of Arondell frankly to submit himselfe, swearing his olde othe by Saint Ihon Baptist, that hurte should he have none thereby, if he would so do. The Archbishop trusting the kings faire promise, moued this matter to the Erle his brother: But he knowing the kings great malice, and that he purposed nothing more then to apprehend and destroye him, would in no wise agree to his brothers counsaile: howbeit the Archebishop would not so leave him, but daylie was importune on him to submit himselfe: Saiyng vnto him that all which he mistrusted should passe awaye lyke a clowde. And if he would not submit himselfe when he might, it might fortune to turne to the dishenerityng both of him and his: For it was sayde than, and the same was the opinion of manye, that for none other purpose would be keepe these Lordes vnder a rest, but for to shewe the Lordes of Almayne that he coulde rule the greatest of them. And after that he had so holden his Lordes a season, that it was knowne in Almayne and in outward parties, that then his purpose was to restore them againe to their liberties and dignities. So at the last, by these perswasions & other vsed by the Archbishop of Cauntorburie, his brother the Erle in an vnhappy houre submytted himselfe to the king. And foorthwith he was taken and sent to be kept in the Isle of Wyght. The Erle of And the same night that he was taken, the king sent secretly to the Maiour of London, and committed. commaunding hym that he should make ready as many harnessed men as he could, and that they should be in a redinesse within two or three houres to attend vpon the king, whether his pleasure was to go. The king also commaunded the Erles of Rutland, Kent, Huntyngdon and Nottyngham to arme themselves, and to conduct the Londoners. And so they tooke waye to Plasshy in Essex, where then was the Duke of Gloucester in his Castell. Notwithstandyng fewe there were that knew, when the king set foorth, whether he would go. And when they came nye the place, the king vewed his people following him, which were numbred by the Heraultes to be. xv. thousand. Then the king sayde vnto them, whatsoeuer ye see me doe, lykewise studie you to doe the same. If I prepare me to fight, doe ye lykewise. If ye see me in peace, rest you also in quyet, doyng hurte to no man. The king sent afore the Erle of Rutlande to the Dukes Castel, that they should see what number of defensible men the Duke had within the Castell: For he was afeard both of the valiauntnesse and wisedome of the Duke. But it happened at that time that the most parte of the Dukes houshold seruaunts, by licence were departed to their friendes and wyfes. When the king was certefied that the Duke had so small a number aboute him, he maruelled muche, for it had bene tolde him before by such as bare the Duke no good will, that he had fortified and manned his Castell. So then the King approched therevnto, his men of armes goyng before him and behinde him: And albeit that the Duke was somewhat accrased, yet he met him with a solempne procession of the Colledge, and receaued him with all the reuerence and humilitie that he could doe, as it became him best to do, being his souereigne Lorde. And the King as he sawe the Duke comming vnto him, and that he made him lowe curtesie: The King clapped his hande The king arest vpon his shoulder, and arested him. To whome the Duke aunswered, that he not onely of the Duke of Gloucester. was content to obey his arest, but the arest of the least of his court. And the King sayde vnto him, and will you so, good Vncle? And the Duke aunswered, ye surely syr: then the king followed the procession, and the Duke followed the King a farre of. And when the king was somewhat set foorth, he looked back, and called the Duke vnto him, and sayde, By Saint Iohn Baptist, good Vncle, this that is done, shall be for the best both for you and vs, and so entered into the Chapell, where were a great number of reliques and Iewels of great valure: which when the king sawe, he sayde vnto his Vncle, I see you are a good husbande: But nowe go your waye, and take some sustenaunce, and after you have dyned, ye shall go to the place that I have appointed, for here you may not tary. Then the Duke prayed the king to shewe him howe many servauntes he should have to wayte vpon him: The king aunswered that he should be aduertised thereof before he rose from.

The Duke then went to his lodging, which was nigh vnto the Chapell. And the King went to his lodging, where was prepared for him and those that came with him great and honorable fare, both of Fishe and Fleshe, and it was no great maruaile, for the Duke was advertised privily of the kinges comming. After that the king was set at dyner, he sent to the Duke his minde, what number of persons should wayte vpon him, and wylled.

him to make shorte worke and come away.

After dyner the king departed, and left to conucy the Duke the Erle of Kent, and the Lorde Thomas Percye Steward of his house. And when the Duke had dyned, he caused suche stuffe to be trussed vp, and carved wyth him, as was necessarie for him. And then bade his wyfe farewell, who was a Lady both honorable, wise and vertuous: and at his departing he desyred her to make humble sute to the king, to have him his good and gracious Lorde, and that she should boldly offer to sweare that he was neuer Traytor to his person, nor he that willed him any hurt. And when he was a horsback, with a mery cheere, he sayde vnto the Lordes that abode for him. Nowe, whether shall we go? And who shall be our guide? I or one of you? They aunswered with reuerence. Nay syr, it becommeth you to leade, and we to folow. Then sayde he, let vs set forth a Gods name, wheresocuer your pleasure is that I shall go, and so was he conueyed to Calice, and thus taken and arested at that time, when he thought that he was most in the kings fauour. For not long before the king had genen him so great giftes, honours and Lordships, that every man thought there was no man more acceptable in the kings fauour then he.

Now after the taking of these Lordes was blowen abroade, there was made great moane for them throughout all England, as though the Realme had bene delivered into the enemies handes: so great hope had the Commos vniuersally in them, but most specially in the Duke of Gloucester, whome the Realme beleued, that by his prosperitie the same was :

safe from all inward and outward enemies.

The king perceiuing the great affection that the people bare to the duke and the sayd Lordes, and fearyng insurrection of the Commons, which were not all clere of their Melancholy, caused to be proclaymed, that this takyng of the Lordes was not done for their offenses committed of olde, but for new matters, wherin they had offended sithens the obteyning of their pardons, as they should understand plainly at the next Parliament.

Duryng the tyme (sayth mine Aucthour) that these Lordes were in prison, so sory was the people for them, that prayers and Processions were vsed throughout all the realme, that it might please God of his goodnes to inspire into the Kinges minde, to be good and mercifull vnto these Lordes, and to conuert his heart from hatred vnto loue. heering of these prayers, forbad streightly all Bishoppes and Prelates that such Processions shoulde be no more vsed.

A Counsaile holden at Nottingham.

The names of the Appealers.

And shortly after, the king helde a great counsaile at Nottyngham, and there he hauving his Iudges, and other of his learned Counsaile, caused inditementes to be drawen of the Duke of Gloucester, and of the Erles aforesayde. And he framed there also an Appellation, and there it was ordered that certeine Appellers should lay vnto them highe treason in open Parliament, whose names were Edward Erle of Rutland, Thomas Lord Mowbrey Erle Marshall, Thomas Holland Erle of Kent, Iohn Holland Erle of Huntyngdon, Lorde Beneforde Erle of Somerset, Lorde Iohn Mountagew Erle of Sarisburie, Thomas Lorde Spencer, William Lorde Scrope, Chamberleyn to the king. The which matters beyng deuised, the King caused proclamation openly to be made, declaring vnto the people that these Lordes were arested and imprisoned for high treason. And those Chesshire men were very rude and beastly people, and fell into such great pryde of the Kinges fauour, that they accompted the king to be as their felowe, and they set the Lordes at

And after these rusticall people had a while Courted, they entered into so great a boldenesse, that they would not let, neyther within the Court, nor without, to beate and slay the kinges good Subjectes, and to take from them their victuals, and to pay for them little or nothing at their pleasure, and to rauish their wives and daughters. And if any man fortuned to complaine vnto the king of them, he was soone ryd out of the way, no man knewe howe, nor by whome, so that in effect they dyd what them lusted.

Against this Parliament, the King had commaunded a great house to be made in the Anew house Palace at Westminster, which was so great, that scarcely the roome of the Palace suf-made for the Parliament. fixed to set it in. In this house was made a highe trone for the King, and a large place for all estates besydes, to syt in. And also there were places made for certeine Appealers. which are mencioned before, and they to be on the one syde, and the aunswerours on the other, and a lyke roome was made behynde for the knightes and Burgesses of the Parliament. And a place also made for the speaker of the Parliament, who at that time was sir John Bushe one named sir Iohn Bushe, which was called a cruel, ambicious, and couetous man with- speaker of the Parliament. out all measure. And immediately after, all men in their degrees were placed, and the cause of the callyng of that Parliament beyng declared, which was that the king had ordevned it for reformation of dyuerse transgressions and oppressions, done against the peace of our souereigne Lorde the kinges Maiestie, by the Duke of Gloucester, the Erles of Arondell, and of Warwike, and other. Then foorthwith came Sir John Bushe, and made request on the behalfe of the commonaltie, that it might please the kinges highnesse and excellencie, that for the enorme actes done agaynst hys lawes and Maiestie, they might haue condigne punishement according to theyr desertes, and chiefely the Archebishop of The Archebishop Cauntorbury, which then sate next vnto the king, whom he called the highest traytor, for shop of Catorwhere for many causes he should have bene to the king a most faythfull Counsaylor, he by of high treason his euill counsaile and prodigious suggestions, craftilye circumuented the king, inducyng him to graunt his letters of pardon to a great traytour the Erle of Arondell his brother. To this when the Archebishop arose and would have aunswered, the king would gove him none audience, but commaunded him to sytte downe againe in his place, and not to make any further aunswere, for it should be well inough if he helde his peace for that tyme, Then Sir Iohn Bushe required that the Archbishop should not be taken to his aunswere, for he sayde that his wit was so great, and did so farre excell all other, and his craft so great, that I feare he shall circumuent vs : So at that tyme the Archebishop had no further heering. The said Sir Iohn Bushe in all his prepositions to the king, did not onely attri- sir Iohn Bushe bute to him worldly honours, but diuyne names, inuentyng flatteryng wordes, and vnused a flatterer. termes, and to a mortall man not convenient, for as oft as he spake vnto the king in his Throne, he cast his handes abrode, as he had adoured and worshipped God, beseching his excelse, high, and adorant Maiestie, that he woulde witsafe to graunt him this or that. And the Prince beyng ambicious of honours, did not represse this insolencie, but tooke great pleasure in his wordes, whereof came more inconvenience, as shall appere.

Thus after, as ye have heard, that the king had excluded the Archebishop from his aunswere: Sir Iohn Bushe, keping his olde flattering way, requyred on the behalfe of the Commons, that the Charters of pardon grauted vnto the traytors, as to the Duke of Gloucester, the Erles of Arondell, and of Warwike, shoulde by the assent and con- The kinges parsent of all the whole Parliament be reuoked. The spirituall men began first, being afrayde to displease the king, and sayd that such pardons were reuocable, and at the kinges pleasure, and ought not to be allowed: and lykewyse sayde euerie of the spiritualtie, man by man, vntill it came to the Archebishop of Cauntorbury: For the custome is, when suche questions be asked, the yongest both of the spiritualtie and temporaltie say their opinions first, and so passe foorth in order vntill it come to the highest. And when this question was asked of the Acchbishop of Cauntorbury, he aunswered that the kinges person is so high from whom the pardon came, that he durst not say, that any suche Charters were reuocable: Howbeit, in the ende it was determined that such pardons were to be reuoked.

After that Sir Iohn Bushe had obteyned this revocation, he declared further, that the Erle of Arondell had yet another speciall Charter of pardon for his awne person, which he obteyned after the first, and in that also the said Sir Iohn Bushe requyred importunately ayde, in the name of the Commonaltie, that the same also might be reuoked. question was also asked of the Prelates, which were of lyke opinion as they were of the first, that is to say, that it was reuocable. At this tyme the Archebishop of Cauntorbury absented himselfe from the Parliament, trustyng in the kinges promise, and lyke also as he had sworne vnto him, that nothing should be attempted against him in his absence, but the contrary folowed. For still this sir Iohn Bushe pursued him, and at his instant sute, which seemed to be the Kinges will, he was condempned to perpetuall exile, and The Archbishop that he should not make any further abydyng within this realme then sixe dayes. Shortly after this, was brought forth Richard Erle of Arondel, on the day of Saint Mathewe the Euangelist, to aunswere before the King, and the whole Parliament, to such thinges as should be objected and deposed agaynst him. And as he stood at the Barre, the Lorde Neuel was commaunded by the Duke of Lancaster, which sate that day as high steward of England, to take the Whoode from his necke, and to vngyrde him. Then the Duke of Lancaster, to whom by his office it apperteyned, notefyed vnto him, that for his manifolde rebellions and treasons against the kinges Maiestie, he was arested, and hetherto kept in Warde, and nowe at the peticion of the Lordes and Commonaltie, he was called to aunswere to suche crymes as should be there objected agaynst him, and there eyther to purge him of them, or else to abyde condigne punishment. And first he did charge and the Erle of Warwike, perturbyng of the peace and realme.

To the which he aunswered, that he neuer did that as a traytor, nor for any hurt meant or intended against the kinges person, but for the kinges profite, and the realme, if that act might be well interpreted as it ought.

Also it was demaunded of him, why that he procured letters of pardon of the king for himselfe, if he knewe that he was not faultie therein? To this he aunswered that he did it not for any feare of any thyng that he had misdone, but for stoppyng of euyll tongues, which neyther bare the king, nor him good wyll.

Also he was demaunded, whether he would denie that he made any such roade with the personnes aforenamed, and that he entred not armed into the kinges presence, agaynst hys pleasure and will? To this he aunswered that he could not say nay.

Then Sir Iohn Bushe cryed importunately and called for judgement to be geuen against the traytor, & sayd: your faythfull commons aske, and require that it may so be. The Erle soberly turned his head, and sayd mildely vuto him: Not the kinges faythfull Commons require this, but thou, and what thou art I knowe well inough. Then the. viij. Appealantes before named, standyng on the other syde, cast their gloues vnto him, and folowed their appeale which before was read, and offered to fight with him man for man, in iustefiyng of their appeale. Then sayd the Erle, if I were at my libertie, & that it might please my souereigne Lord the king, I would not refuse to proue you lyeres in your appeale. And then spake the Duke of Lancaster high Steward, and sayde vnto him, what haue you further to say to the poyntes before alleaged agaynst you? He aunswered that of the kinges grace he had his letters of generall pardon, which he required might be allowed. Then the Duke aunswered that the Pardon was reuoked by the Prelates and Noble men in the Parliament, and therefore willed him to make some other aunswere. The Erle sayde againe, that he had another pardon vnder the kinges great seale, which was graunted him long after of the kinges awne mocion, which also he required to be allowed. The Duke sayde againe, that that pardon was in likewyse reuoked. And after this, when the Erle had nothing to saye for him selfe: Then the king with his Scepter made countenaunce to the Duke to geue iudgement. Then the Duke vsed these wordes vnto him: Forasmuch as thou art couicted of high treason. &c. Thou shalt be drawen to the Galowes, The Erle of and there hanged, and after taken downe, and thy Bowelles to be taken out of thy body, Arondell condempned and and burned, and after to be behedded, and quartered. And this judgement genen in this judged. maner, the Duke pawsed a while, and then sayd: The King our souereigne Lord of his grace, because thou art of his blood, and one of the Peeres of the realme, hath remitted all the other paines vnto the last, so that onely thou shalt lose thy head. And anone he was taken from the place, and without delaye had to the Tower hill, and there went before him, and behinde him the aforesayde furious Chesshire men, which onely in this Parliament had lycence to beare weapon. There went with him also to his death the Erle of Nottyngham, that had maried his daughter: The Erle of Kent his Nephewe, the Erle of Huntyngdon, Iohn Holland, which were all vpon great horsses, and had with them a great company of harnessed men. And when he should departe the Palaice, he desyred his hands might be let loose, and that he might geue suche money as he had in his Pursse with his awne hands, betwixt that and Charing crosse. And so he gaue his almose, but his armes were bound behinde him. The Londoners seyng him thus -passe thorough the City, bewayled sore his fortune, who not long before, among all the noble men was most famous, for he was so noble and valyaunt, that all the worlde spake honor of him. And when he came to the Towre hill, the noble men that were about him, moued him verie earnestly to acknowledge and confesse that he had offended the king in high treason: But he in no wise would agree so to do, but sayd that he was neuer Traytor in worde nor deede. Then he turned to him that was the executioner and kyssed him, and said: do thy duetic, and as thou art commaunded, but torment me not, but with one stroke strike of my head, and he assayed himselfe with his fingers, whether the sworde was sharpe enough, and sayde it is very well. Then sayde he to his kinsmen that stood there, -it had bene more meeter for you to have bene awaye then at this acte. I have bene he that hath brought you vp, and have enriched you, & brought you to honor, and ye lyke vakinde persons rewarde me with this, to bring me to shame: But the time will come and that shortly, when there shall as many maruaile at your misfortune, as doth now of my fall. And then kneeled he downe, and the Executioner with one stroke strake off his The Erle of head, and his bodye was honorably buried in the Augustine Fryers.

Richard erle of Arondell 2r. reigned of treason.

The Duke of Lancaster high steward of Eng

Then returned they that were at the execution, and shewed the king merily of the death of the Erle: But though the king was then mery and glad that the dede was done, yet after, as mine Aucthor sayth, he was exceedingly vexed in his dreames, imagening that the Erle appered vnto him. &c.

After the judgement and death of the Erle of Arundell, as aforesayde, then was Thomas The Erle of Becham Erle of Warwik brought foorth to abyde the judgement of the Parliament. And Warwike is when his accusers charged hym, as a Traytor, with divers articles of treason, such as were Treason. before alleged against the Erle of Arundell, he aunswered that his minde was neuer to be Traytor vnto the king, nor he thought neuer that those rydinges and assemblyes that he made, could be accompted as treason. And when the Iudges had shewed vnto him that it was treason, he humbly asked of the king mercy and grace. The king then asked him whether that he had so rydden with the Duke of Gloucester, and the Erle of Arundell: he aunswered that he could not denie it, and wished that he had neuer sene them: then sayde the king, doe you not knowe that ye are giltie of treason? he aunswered againe I knowledge it, and with great weeping and sobbyng required al those that were present, to 302 make intercession to the kinges Maiestie for pardon for him. Then the king and the Duke of Lancaster commoned, & after the king had pawsed awhile, he sayde to the Erle, by saint Iohn Baptist Thomas of Warwike, this confession that thou hast made, is vnto me more acceptable then all the landes of the Duke of Gloucester, and the Erle of Arundell. Then the Erle making still intercession for pardon, the Lordes humbly besought the king to graunt it him. The king then was contented to graunt hym his lyfe, but he banished him into the Isle of Man, which then was the Lorde Scropes, and he promised the Erle, that he and his wyfe and children should have honorable enterteynment: But that promise was slenderly kept, for both the Erle and the Countesse led their lyues in great penurie.

The king not yet quieted, sent one of his Iustices called Wylliam Rykyll, borne in Ireland, to Calice, which was commaunded to enquire of the Duke of Gloucester, whether he had committed any such treasons as before were alleged agaynst the Erle of Arundell, and the Erle of Warwike, and that he should write what he sayde, and what the Duke did confesse; which after the sayde Iustice had speedely done, he returned vnto the King, and shewed him such things of his awne deuise, as he thought would best please the King, affirming that those things the Duke had franckly confessed. The king after the sight therof. purposed the death of the Duke, and yet not willing to have him brought vnto open judgement, for he feared the people, who bare him great loue and fauour, and therefore he sent the Erle of Nottyngham vnto Thomas Mowbrey Erle Marshall, which then had the keeping of the Duke in Calice, and commaunded him that privily the Duke should be killed. But he fearing to commit such an enorme deede, deferred the matter, though the king would have had it done with all speede. For the which the King was sore moved agaynst the Erle, and sware that it shoulde coste him his lyfe, if he obeyed not quickly his commaundement. And beyng thus constreyned he called out the Duke at midnight, as though he should have taken shypping to go into Englande, and there in his lodgyng with his seruaunts, casting on Fetherbeds vpon him, he was smowthered. And so was this honorable. and good man miserable put to death, which for the honor of the King and wealth of the

After that the king in thys vnhappye Parliament had brought all these matters to passe: yet woulde he not dissolue the same, but proroged it, because it was night he feast of Christmasse, and ordeyned that it should begin againe immediatly after the feast at Shrewesbury. And after that the king & Lords were come together, the king obteyned that the whole power of both the houses was graunted vnto sixe or eyght persons which had aucthoritie to determine suche causes as yet hanged in the parliament. By vertue of which graunt, the number aforesayde did proceede in derogation of the state of the house, and to the great disaduauntage of the king, and perillous example in time to come. And for that the king had spent much money at these Parliaments, he required to have one disme and a halfe of the Clergie, and a fiftene of the temporaltie, and then he tooke vpon him the name of the Prince of Chester, for love that he bare to the Chesshire men.

Then was the Erle of Darbie made Duke of Hertfoord: The Erle Marshall Duke of Norffolk, the Erle of Rutland Duke of Aubemarle: the Erle of Kent Duke of Surrey, and the Erle of Huntyngdon Duke of Excester: The Countesse of Norffolk Duches of Norffolk, the Erle of Somerset Marques of Dorset: The Lorde Spencer Erle of Gloucester, the Lorde Neuyll Erle of Westmerland, the Lorde Scrope the kings Chamberleyn, the Erle of Wiltshire, the Lord Percy Steward of the kings house Erle of Worcester.

The king after this triumphed not a little as one, that had conquered and ouerthrowne his enimies, and he waxed so hawtie, that he had all estates in contempt, and thought himselfe more noble then any prince lyuing. And then he chaunged his armes that his Graundfather had given, and ioyned Saint Edwardes armes and his together. And to rewarde the persons about named, whome he had advanced to honor, he gave vnto them a great parte of the Duke of Gloucester, the Erle of Warwike, and the Erle of Arondels lands. And whatsoeuer the king did, no man durst speake a worde, or aduise hym in any thing, but must so he him in whatsoeuer he sayd, or did. And such as were then chiefe of hys Counsayle, the commons judged to be the woorst of all other, the which were The Duke of Aumarle, the Duke of Norffolk, the Duke of Excester, the Duke of Wiltshire, Sir Iohn Bushe, Sir Wylliam Bagot, syr Thomas Grene knight, to whom as is aforesayd, the Commons bare great and privile hatred.

Sone after this, the king caused to be arreigned and atteinted the Lord Cobham, vpon The Lorde Cobham is arreigned those articles that the Duke of Gloucester, the Erle of Arondell, and the Erle of War- and atteinted. wike were condempned for: But the Lorde Cobham was pardoned of his lyfe, and put to exile into the Isle of Gernesey, and there was assigned vnto him a small and poore lyuyng. And for an ende of thys parliament the king graunted a generall pardon to all persons, and Agenerall parfor all maner of offences, except onely fiftie persons, whose names he would not declare, nor no man so privy about hym that could vinderstand them. And it was sayde, that he kept that secret, that when any great man offended, he woulde then declare that he was one of the fiftie that was excepted, and by that meanes he had alwayes his subjectes in his

Thys yere being the. xxij. yere of hys reigne, it chaunced Henry Erle of Darby a little before created Duke of Hersford, a prudent and wyse man, and welbeloued of all, calling to his minde, and well considering with himselfe howe king Richarde his Cossyn Germaine was nowe come to that trade, that he little or nothyng regarded the counsayle of hys Vncles, nor other grave and sad persons, but did all thing at his pleasure, vsyng -his wyll in steede of lawe and reason. Wherefore on a daye beyng in the company of Thomas Mowbray Duke of Norffolk, and Erle Marshall, he beganne to breake his minde vnto him, rather for sorrow and griefe, then for malice or displeasure, rehersing how king Richard little esteemed the Nobles of hys Realme and as muche as laye in him, sought daylie occasions to destroy the more part of them, dispatching some by death, and other by banishment. And this his cruell and seuere gouernement (sayde he) is not onely regreeuous to the Nobilitie, but to the Commons also, who greatly murmured thereat, therefore for as much as I knowe he loueth you, and, I am sure, so do you him, when time oportune will serue, ye shall doe well to aduertise him therof, and to beseche his grace to turne the lefe, and vse a better way. When the Duke of Norffolk had heard fully his deuice, he tooke it not in good parte, but recoped that he had gotten a pray, by the which he should obteyn greater fauour of the king then euer he had, and for that time dissembled the matter and so departed. And after, when he had oportunitie and sawe his tyme, he declared to the king what he had heard; and to aggrauate, and to make the offense the greater, he added much therevnto, but left out nothing.

When the king had heard him, and had pawsed a little with himselfe, he beganne to be in a great chafe, but after a whyle he tempered his melancholy, and was content to here both parties together, and therefore called vnto him the Duke of Lancaster, who waschiefe of his counsayle, and both the Dukes of Hersford & Norsfolke, and caused the accuser openly to declare what he had heard the Duke of Herfford speake. The Duke of Norffolke rehearsed agayne the tale that he had tolde to the king but not in such order as the Duke of Herfford had tolde it to him, but had added therevnto, and altered very much thereof. When the Duke of Herfford heard the tale so tolde, he was somewhat troubled therewith and pawsed awhyle, and after turning him to the Duke of Norffolk, he declared worde by worde what he had sayde, and shewed the cause why he so spake, denyeng all the other matters that the Duke of Norffolk had added therevnto, and sayde further vnto the king, that if it would please hys grace to suffer hym, he would prooue his accuser vntrue, and a false forger of lyes by the stroke of a speare and dent of a sworde. The Duke of Norffolk affirmed constantly hys tale to be true, and refused not the Combate. The king demaunded of them if they woulde not agree among themselues? which they both denyed, and threwe downe their gages. By saint Iohn Baptist: quod the king, if you of your selues will not agree, I will not studie how to agree you. and then he graunted them the battayle, and assigned the place to be at Couentrie, in the moneth of August next ensuying.

A Combate betwene the duke of Herford and the duke of Norfolke.

Then was great preparation made, as to such a matter apperteyned, and when all things were in readynesse, and the daye come, thether came the king being accompanied with all his nobles. And thether came also the two Dukes aforesayde, that is to say, the Duke of Herfford Appellant, & the duke of Norffolk Defendat, & they beyong armed. entred on horsback the one after the other into the Listes, & the people cryed vpon God to saue and prosper the Duke of Herfford, for they loued not the Duke of Norffolke, because it was said that he murdered the Duke of Glocester at Calice, as aforesayd. Now the time beyng come, these two noble men, eche hauyng his Speare in rest, and readie to joyne the battaile, the king cast downe his warder, and commaunded them to stay, and then the king and the Lordes went to counsaile, and they toke vp the matter: And after great deliberation, the king by the mouth of the king of Heraults pronounced sentence in this sort, first that Henry of Lancaster Duke of Herfford Appellant, and Thomas Mowbray Duke of Norffolke Defendant, have honorably and valiantly appered here within the listes this day, and have bene redy to darreyne the battayle, lyke two valiant knightes, and hardie Champions: But because the matter is great and weightie betweene these two great Princes, this is the order of the king and his counsaile. That Henry Herfordebanish - Duke of Herfford for dynerse considerations, and because it hath pleased the king, shall within xv. dayes depart out of the realme, for the terme of ten yeres, without returning, except by the king he be repealed againe, and that vpon paine of death.

The Duke of ed for ten yeres.

The Duke of Norffolke ba-

The Herault cryed againe and sayde, that Thomas Mowbray Duke of Northffolke by the ordenaunce of the King and his Counsaile, because that he had sowen sedicion in the realme by his wordes, whereof he can make no proofe, shall aduoyde the realme of England and dwell where he lust out of the Kinges dominions, and neuer to returne againe into the same vpon paine of death, and that the king woulde stay the profites and nished for euer. reuenewes of hyslandes vntill he had receiued such sommes of money as the Duke had taken vp of the Kinges treasurer, for the wages of the Garrison of Calice, which were still vnpayd. And then they called before him the two banished persons, and made them swere, that vone should never come into the place where the other was (willyngly) nor kepe companie together in any other forein region.

The Duke of Norfelke, which supposed to have bene borne out by the king, was sore repentant of his enterprise, and departed sorowfully out of the realme into Almain, & at the last came to Venice, where for thought he died.

The Duke of Herfford tooke his leave of the king at Eltham, and there the king released vnto him foure yeres of his banishment. And so he toke his journey, and came to Calice, and so into Fraunce, where he cotinued a while.

When he was arrived in Fraunce, king Charles heering the cause of his banishment, which he esteemed very small and light, received him gently and honorably enterteyined him: Insomuch, y he had by fauour obteined the mariage of the only daughter of Iohn Duke of Berry, Vncle to the French king, if king Richard had not cast a stop in his way: For he well considered how the Commonaltie loued the Duke, and howe desyrous they were of his returne into Englande: and then foreseeving that if he should be joyned wyth so great an affinitie as the blood of the house of Berry was in Fraunce, and afterward sodeinly to returne into Englande, it might fortune to turne to hys more displeasure then pleasure, wherefore he letted that mariage.

John Duke of

Duryng the first yere of the exile of this Duke, his father Iohn of Gaunt Duke of Lancaster dyeth. Lancaster dyed, and is buryed on the North syde of the Quier of the Church of Saint-Paules in London. The death of this Duke shortened the life of king Rychard, for he notwithstandyng, that the Duchie of Lancaster was to this Duke Henrye lawfully discend-

ed, not onely seased without right or title all the goodes of the sayde Duke Iohn his parent, but also defrauded his heyre of his laufull inheritaunce, receyuyng the rentes and revenues of all his patrimonie, and geuyng to other that which was not his, and distributed the Dukes landes to his Parisites, and flatteryng followers. This act was judged of all the nobilitie to be vnlawfull, vniust, and vngodly, to depriue a man beyng banished out of the realme without desart, of his inheritaunce. But Edmond Duke of Yorke, Vncle to Henrie nowe lawfully Duke of Lancaster, was sore moued with this chaunce, to see the king breake and violate all lawes: And after the murther of hys brother the Duke of Gloucester, to spoyle and robbe the sonne of his other brother. For he before this tyme, as much as his pacience could beare, dyd tolerate and suffer the death of his brother, the banishment of his Nephew, and many mo injuryes, which for the lightnesse and youth of the king he passed ouer: But nowe that he sawe there was no hope of amendment of the kinges gouernement, and that he had no man nere him that durst boldely admonishe him of his office, and dutie, he therefore as a wise man, thought it meete in tyme to get him to a restyng place, and to leave the following of so doubtfull and wilfull a Captaine: Wherefore he with the Duke of Aumerle his sonne, departed from the Court, and went to his house at Langley.

In this meane tyme, king Richard had made great preparation to go into Ireland, and gathered together great summes of money by sundrie deuises and practises: as first, he caused an inquirie to be made in every shyre, of those that had beene in armes with New exactions. the Duke of Gloucester, the Erle of Arondell, and the Erle of Warwike, and caused dyuerse Bishoppes and men of honour in euery shyre, to aduise such as had offended, to confesse their treasons by writing, and put them in the kinges mercie, promising that they should have no hurt thereby. Wherefore many were constreyned, as well of the Clergie, as of the Commonaltie, to make great fynes. And also manye Noble men were compelled to pay vnto the king great sommes of money, which was called Pleasaunce, to please the king withall. Also at thys tyme the king caused many blacke Chartres to be made, and forced men to signe and seale the same, by the which he might whe

he would vido any of his subjectes. But some write that it was for that he purposed to delyuer Calice, and all his landes beyonde the Sea, to the French king, and to shewe that al his subjectes had assented therevnto.

When all these thinges were done, as is mencioned before, the king set forward with a Theking setteth great nauie & power of men towards Ireland, in the moneth of Aprill, to suppresse and land. taine the wilde heddes of the Irishe men, and he had with him his garde of Chesshire men, in whome hee put his speciall trust. Also he caried with him the greatest of the noble mens sonnes of England, as the Duke of Gloucesters sonne and heyre, the Erle of Herford son and heire to Henry Duke of Herfford and Lancaster. Also he was accompanied with the Duke of Aumerle, and the Duke of Exeter, and many other: And at his departure he left for his Lieutenant in England, Sir Edmond of Langley his Vncle, Duke of Yorke. And so the king entered into Ireland, and set fiercely vpon the Irishe men, and compelled them shortly to submit them selues. The saiying also was, that before his goyng into I-eland, he had let the realme to ferme to Sir William Scrope The King had Erle of Wiltshire, and ther Treasurer of England, to Sir Iohn Bushe, Sir Iohn Bagot let the Realme to and syr Henry Grene, knightes, for the terme of xiiij. yeres: By reason whereof they procured many men to be accused, and such as were accused, there was no remedye to deliuer him, or them, but were her pore or riche, he must compounde and make his fine with those Tyrannes, at their will and pleasure. Nowe the King beyng in Irelande, as aforesayde, he so subdued the Irishemen, and that in short space, that he brought the greatest part of that realme into very good order, and set them very quiet.

But while the king was thus occupyed in Irelande, the Duke of Herford by the proud-cation of Thomas Arondell, Archebishop of Cauntorbury, who, as you before haue the Duke of heard, was banished by king Richard, and was in Fraunce with the said Duke of Herfford, Lancaster and years and years and years are the said Duke of Herfford, Archebishop of returned nowe both into England, and landed at Rauenspurre in the North Countrie, in Cautorbury.

the moneth of August, and by reason of his title to the Duchie of Lancaster, he raysed and assembled the people ever as he went, so that he had gathered together a great number of people. And, as sayth Hall, there resorted vnto him, the Erles of Northumberland and Westmerland, and the Lordes Percey, Rose, Willoughby, and other, and takyng an othe of him, that he should not do to king Rychard any bodily harme, they made to him homage. & became his liege men, and so tooke theyr iourney towardes London, where they were receyued with all joy and gladnesse. Then the Duke consulted there dyuerse dayes with his friendes. And thether came vnto him, Thomas Arondell, sonne to Richard Erle of Arondell, by king Richard a little before put to death, which had late escaped out of pri-When the Duke had well perceyued and considered the great loue and fauor that was borne him, as well of the nobilitie, as also of the commonaltie, and how they came dayly vnto his reliefe, he not onely yelded thankes vnto God therefore, but shewed himselfe most thankefull vnto them for the same, and then set forwarde into the West Countrie, and still as he passed, his people encreased without number, and beyng nowe so well and strongly accompanied, he then proclaymed open warre agaynst King Richard, and all his partakers and friendes.

Kinge Richard returneth to England.

King Richard beyng in Ireland, and nowe heeryng of the Dukes arryuall in England, hastened not a little to set all thinges there in order, and returned into England, and landed at Mylforde Hauen, in the beginning of September, and from thence passed vinto the Castell of Flynt in Wales ten Myles distant from Chester, and there rested him and his people, entendyng there to have gathered a great power, and to have set vpon the Duke. But in this meane time, the aforesaid Duke, who had proclaymed himselfe Duke of Lancaster, in the right of his father Iohn of Gaunt, was come to Bristow and there without William Scrope resistance tooke Sir William Scrope Erle of Wiltshyre, and high Treasurer of England, Sir Iohn Bushe, and Sir Henry Grene, who foorthwith were adjudged, and were beheaded. There was also taken Sir Iohn Bagot, but he escaped, and fled into Ireland.

and Grene put to death.

Now king Richard was not so diligent to gather his power together, but they were as hastie to flie from him, and to ayde the Duke, which amased the King much, and in the A speciall note. ende the king determined to kepe that Castell, and to abyde fortune. And this (sayth Hall) is to be noted of all Princes, rulers, and persons set in Aucthoritie, that this Duke Henry of Lancaster should be thus called to the Kingdome, and haue the helpe and assistaunce almost of all the whole realme (which perchaunce neuer thereof once thought or dremed) and that King Richard should thus be left desolate, voyde and desperate of all hope and comfort, in whome if there were any offence, it ought rather to have bene imputed to the frayltie of his youth, then to the malice of his hart.

Thomas Percie Lord stuard breaketh his staff.

When the Duke of Lancaster knew that king Richard was come to the Castell of Flint. he came forward with speede with a great armie, and drewe nere Chester: When Thomas Percey Erle of Worcester, and Lord Steward of the Kinges houshold, and brother to the Erle of Northumberland, heard tell of the Dukes approchyng, and bearyng displeasure to the king, because a little before he had proclaimed his brother a Traytor, he calling together the Kinges housholde, did before them all breake his white staffe, and bid euery man go where he would, and shift for himselfe. And when the Kinges seruauntes The King is for. sawe this, they dispersed themselves, some one way, and some another, and left the king saken of all and alone, sauvng two or three Lordes, and a fewe men. left alone.

The Duke approchyng very nere to the Castell of Flint, whereof king Richard beyng aduertised by John Pallet, and Richard Seymer (his assured seruauntes) departed out of the Castell, and fled to Conway, and there he sent for the Duke of Exeter his brother, the Erle of Northumberland, and Thomas Archebishop of Cauntorbury, and desyred yeldethhim selfe them to come to the Castell vnto him, to whome he shewed his purpose, and that he was well content to geue vp the Crowne, and to be discharged of that great Burthen, and shortly after, he yelded himselfe vnto the Duke, who secretly sent him to the Tower of London.

The Kinge to the Duke of Lancaster.

When

When the Duke had thus possessed his pray, he returned to London, and shortly after A parliament at called a Parliament the. xiij. of September, in the kinges name, at the which many of the Westminster. Kinges friendes, but more of his, appeared. There was declared how unprofitable king Richard had bene to the realme duryng his reigne, howe he subuerted the lawes, polled the people, ministred iustice to no man, but to such as pleased him. And to the entent that the Commons might be perswaded that he was an uniust and unprofitable Prince, and a tyraunt ouer his subjectes, and therefore worthie to be deposed, there were set foorth certeine articles very heynous to the eares of many, and to some incredible, the effect of which articles hereafter follows.

- I First that King Richard wastefully spent the treasure of the realme, and had geuen the possessions of the Crowne to men vnworthie, by reason wherof dayly newe charges more and more were layde in the neckes of the poore Commonaltie. And where divers Lordes, aswell spirituall as temporall, were appoynted by the high Court of Parliament, to common and treate of dyuerse matters concerning the common wealth of the same, which beyng busy about those commissions, he with other of his affinity went about to empeche them of treason, and by force and threatning, compelled the Iustices of the realment Shrewesbury to condiscend to his opinion, for the destruction of the sayd Lords: insomuch that he began to rayse warre against Iohn Duke of Lancaster, Thomas Erle of Arondell, Richard Erle of Warwike, and other Lordes, contrary to his honour and promise.
- 2 Item, that he caused his Vncle the Duke of Gloucester to be arrested without law, & sent him to Calice, and there wout judgement murdered him. And although the Erle of Arundell vpon his arreignment pleaded his Charter of pardon, he could not be heard, but was in most vile and shamefull maner sodeinly put to death.

3 Item, he assembled certeine Lancashire and Chesshyre men, to the entent to make warre on the foreseyde Lordes, and suffered them to robbe and pill, without correction or

4 Item, although the King flatterynglye, and with great dissimulation made Proclamation throughout the realme, that the Lordes before named were not attached for any cryine of treason, but onely for extorcions and oppressions done in this realme, yet he layde to them in the Parliament, rebellion and manifest treason.

5 Item, he hath compelled dinerse of the sayde Lordes servauntes and friendes, by menace and extreme paymentes, to make great fines to their vtter vndoyng. And notwith-standyng his pardon to them graunted, yet hee made them fine of newe.

6 Item, where divers were appointed to common of the estate of the realme, and the common wealth of the same. The same king caused all the rolles and recordes to be kept from them, contrary to his promise made in the Parliament to his open dishonour.

7 Item, that he vncharitably commaunded, that no man vpon paine of losse of lyfe and goodes, should once entreate him for the returne of Henry, nowe Duke of Lancaster.

- 8 Item, where this realme is holden of God, and not of the Pope or other Prince, the sayde king Richard, after he had obteyned diuerse actes of Parliament for his awne peculiar profite and pleasure, then he obteyned Bulles and extreme censures from Rome, to copel all men streightly to kepe the same, contrary to the honor and auncient principles of this realme.
- 9 Item, although the Duke of Lancaster had done his deuoyre agaynst Thomas Duke of Norffolke, in proofe of his quarell, yet the sayde Kyng without reason or ground, banished him the Realme for ten yeres, contrary to all equitie.
- 10 Item, before the Dukes departure, he vnder his broade seale licenced him to make attourney to prosecute and defende his causes: The sayde king after his departure would suffer none attourney to appear for him, but dyd with his at his pleasure.
  - 11 Item, the same king put out diverse Shirifes lawfully elected, and put in their vol. 1. 3 P rownes, diuerse other of his awne minions, subuertyng the lawe, contrary to his othe and honour.

12 Item, he borowed great sommes of money, and bound him vnder hys letters patents for the repayment of the same, and yet not one penny payde.

13 Item, he taxed men at the will of him and his vnhappy counsail, and the same treasure spent in folie, not paiyng poore men for their vitail and viande.

14 Item, he sayd that the lawes of the realme were in his head, and sometyme in his brest, by reason of which fantasticall opinion, he destroyed Noble men, and impouerished the poore Commons.

- 15 Item, the Parliament sittyng and enactyng diverse notable statutes for the profite and advancement of the common wealth, he by his prive friendes and soliciters, caused to be enacted, that no acte then enacted should be more prejudiciall to him, then it was to any of his predecessors, through which proviso he did often as he list, and not as the lawe ment.
- 16 Item, for to serue his purpose, he would suffer the Shirifes of the shire to remaine aboue one yere or two.

17 Item, at the sommons of the Parliament, when Knightes and Burgesses should be elected, and that the election had full proceded, he put out divers persons elected, & put in other in their places, to serve his wil & appetite.

18 Item, he had privile Espials in every shyre, to here who had of him any communication, and if he commoned of his lascivious living, or outragious doyng, he streight wayes was apprehended, and made a grieuous fine.

19 Item, the Spiritualtie alleaged against him, that he at his goyng into Ireland exacted many notable summes of money, besyde plate, and iewels, without lawe or custome, contrary to his othe taken at his coronation.

20 Item, when diverse Lordes and Iustices were sworne to say the truth of diverse thinges to them committed in charge, both for the honour of the Realme, and profite of the king, the sayde king so menaced them with sore threatnynges, that no man would or durst say the right.

21 Item, that without the assent of the Nobilitie, he carryed the Iewelles, and Plate, and Treasure ouer the sea into Ireland, to the great empouerishing of the realme. And all the good recordes for the common welth, and against his extortions, he caused principly to be embesiled, and conveyed away.

22 Item, in al leages & letters to be concluded or sent to the See of Rome or other Regions: His writing was so subtill and so darke, that no other prince durst once believe him, nor yet his owne subjectes.

23 Item, he most tirannously and unprincely sayde, that the lyues and goodes of all hys subjectes were in the princes hands, and at his dispositio.

24 Item, that he contrarie to the great Charter of England caused divers lustic men to appeale divers olde men, vpon matters determinable at the common lawe, in the Court martiall, because that in that court is no triall but onely by battayle: Wherevpon the sayde aged persons fearing the sequele of the matter, submitted themselves to his mercy, whome he fined and raunsomed vnreasonably at his pleasure.

25 Item, he craftily deuised certaine prime othes, contrarye to the lawe, and caused diuers of his subjectes, first to be sworne to observe the same, and after bounde them in bondes for the former keping of the same, to the great vindoying of many honest men.

26 Item, where the Chauncellour according to the lawe, woulde in no wise graunt a prohibicion to a certaine person: the king graunted it vnto the same person vnder his priuie seale, with great threatnings, if it should be disobeyed.

27 Item, he banished the bishop of Cauntorbury wythout cause or iudgement, and kept him in the Parliament Chamber with men of Armes. Item, the Byshoppes goodes he

graunted to his successour, vpon condition that he should maintayne all his statutes made at Shrewesburie. Anno. xxj. and the statutes made. Anno. xxij. at Couentrie.

28 Item, vpon the accusation of the Archbishop, the king craftily perswaded the sayde Bishop to make no aunswere, for he would be his warrant, and aduised him not to come to the parliament. And so without answere he was condemned and exiled, and his goodes seased.

After that king Richarde was charged with the aforesayde articles, there was an instrument made, declarying his aunswers, & how he consented wyllingly to be deposed, the tenor of which instrument was as followeth.

THis present instrument made the Monday the. xxix. daye of September 1389, and in The copy of an the. xxiij. yere of king Richard the second, witnesseth: that where by the aucthoritie of Instrumente. the Lordes spiritual and temporal of this present parliament, and commons of the same, the right honourable and discreete persons, here vnder named, were by the sayde aucthoritie assigned to go vnto the tower of London, there to here and testifie suche questions and aunswers as then and there should be by the sayde honourable and discreete persons heard: know all men to whome these present letters shall come, that we Sir Richard Scrope Archebishop of Yorke, Iohn Bishop of Hertford, Henry Erle of Northumberland, Raufe Erle of Westmerland, Thomas Lorde of Barkeley, William Abbot of Westmynster, John Priour of Cauntorburie, Wylliam Thirnyng, and Hugh Burnell knights, and Iohn Markam Iustice, Thomas Stowe, and Iohn Burbage Doctours of the lawe Civille: Thomas Fereby and Dionyse Lopham Notaries publique, the daye and yere abouesayd, betwene the houres of eight and nine of the clock in the fore noone, were present in the chiefe chamber of the kings lodging within the sayde place of the towre, where was rehersed vnto the king, by the mouth of the foresayde Erle of Northumberlande, that before tyme at Conwaye in Northwales, the king being there at his pleasure and libertie promised vnto the Archebishop of Cauntorbury, then Thomas Arundell, and vnto the sayde Erle of Northumberlande, that he for the insufficiency which he knewe himselfe to be of, to occupy so great a charge as to governe this Realme of Englande, would gladly leave of, and renounce the right and title, as well of that, as of the title of the crowne of Fraunce and his maiestie, vnto Henry Duke of Herfford, and that to doe in such convenient wise as by the learned men of this lande it should most sufficiently be by them deuised and ordeyned.

To the which rehersall, the king in our presence aunswered beningly and sayde, that such promise he made, and so to the same he was at that houre in full purpose to perfourme and fulfill, sauving that he desyred first to have personall speeche with the sayde Duke, and with the Archebishop of Cauntorbury his Cossyns. And furthermore, he desyred to have a bill drawen of the sayde Resignation, that he might be perfite in the rehersall thereof. After which Copie by me the sayde Erle of Northumberlande delyuered. we the sayde Lordes and other departed. And vpon the same after noone, the king desyring much of the comming of the Duke of Lancaster, at the last the sayd Duke with the Archebishop of Cauntorbury entered the aforesayde Chamber, bringing with them the Lorde Roos, the Lorde Burgeyny, and Lorde Willoughby with dynerse other.

Where after due obeysaunce done by them vnto the king, he familierly and with a glad countenance (to vs apperyng) talked with the saide Archbishop & Duke a good sea-And that communication finished, the King with a glad countenaunce, in presence of vs and the other aboue rehersed, sayde openly, that he was readie to renounce and resigne all his kingly maiestie in maner and forme as he before had promised. And although he had and might sufficiently have declared his renouncement by the reading of another meane person, yet he for the more suretie of the matter, and for that the savde resignation should have his full force and strength, he therefore red the scrole of resignation himselfe, in maner, and forme as followeth.

In the name of God, amen. I Richard by the grace of God, king of Englande and King Rychard of Fraunce, and Lorde of Irelande, acquyte and assoyle all Archebishops, Bishops, and resigneth years and crowne and other prelates secular & religious, of what dignitie, state or condition that they be of: And also all Dukes, Erles, Barons, Lords, and all mine other liege men, both spirituall and secular, of what maner of name or degree they be, from their othe of fealtie and homage, and all other deedes and privileges made vnto me, and from all maner of bandes of allegeaunce and regaly and Lordship, in the which they were or be bound vnto me, or in any otherwise constreyned: And them their heyres and successors for euermore from the sayde bandes and other I release, delyuer, acquite and set them for free, dissolued and acquited. and to be harmelesse, for somuch as longeth to my person by any maner of wave, title or right, that to me might follow of the aforesayde things, or of any of them. And also I resigne all my kingly dignitie, maiestie and crowne, with all the Lordships, power and priuileges to the aforesayd kingly dignity and crowne belonging, and all other Lordships and possessions to me in any maner of wise apperteyning, what name and condition soeuer they be of, except those lands and possessions for me & mine Obite purchased and And I renounce all right and all colour of right, and all maner of title of possession, and Lordship, which I euer had or haue in the same Lordshippes, and possessions, or any of them, or to them, with any maner of rights belonging or appertaying vnto any parte of them.

And also the rule and gouernaunce of the same kingdome and Lordships, with all ministrations of the same, and all things and everye of them that to the whole Empire and iurisdictions of the same belongeth of right, or in any wise may belong.

And also I renounce the name of worship & regaly and kingly highnesse, cleerely, freely, singularly and wholy, in the most best maner and forme that I may, and with deede and word I leaue of and resigne them, and go from them for euermore, sauvng alwayes to my successors kings of Englande, all the rightes, privileges and appurtenaunces to the sayde kingdome & Lordships aboue sayd belonging and apperteyning: For well I wote and knowlege, and deme my selfe to be, and have bene, insufficient and vnhable and also vnprofitable, and for mine open desertes not vnworthy to be put downe. And I sware upon the holy Euangelistes, here presently with my handes touched, that I shall neuer repugne to thys resignation, dimission, or yeelding vp, nor neuer impugne them in any maner, by worde or by deede, by my selfe nor by none other: Nor I shall not suffer it to be impugned, in as much as in me is, privily or aparte. But I shall have holde and kepe thys pronouncyng, dimission and leauyng vp for fyrme and stable for euermore, in all and in euery part thereof, so God help me and all Saints, and by thys holye Euangelist by me bodely touched and kyssed. And for more record of the same, here openly I subscribe and signe thys present resignation with myne awne hande. And foorthwith in oure presences and other he subscribed the same, and after delyuered it vnto the Archebyshop of Cauntorbury, saiying that if it were in his power or at his assignement, he would that the Duke of Lancaster, there present, should be his successor and king after him. And in token thereof, he toke a ryng of Golde from his finger, being his signet, and put it vpon the said dukes finger, desyring & requiring the Archbishop of Yorke, to shewe and make reporte to the Lordes of the Parliament of his voluntarie resignation, and also of his entent and good minde that he bare towarde his Cossyn the Duke of Lancaster, to have him hys successor & king after hym. And thys done, every man toke their leave and returned to their home.

On the morowe following, being on the Tewesday, and the last day of September, all the Lordes spirituall and temporall, with also the commons of the sayde parliament, assembled at Westmynster: where in the presence of them, the Archbishop of Yorke, according to the kings desyre shewed vnto them seriously the voluntary renouncing of the king, with also the fauour that he ought vnto his Cossyn the Duke of Lancaster, for to have him his successor. And moreover he shewed vnto them the Schedule or bill of renouncement, signed with King Richardes hand.

And when the things aforesayde were by the sayde Bishop fynished, the question was asked asked first of the Lordes, if they would admit and allow that renouncement: The which when it was of the Lordes graunted and confirmed, the lyke question was asked of the Commons, and of them in lyke maner affirmed.

After which admission, it was then declared, that notwithstanding the foresayde renouncing so by the Lords and commons admitted, it were needfull vnto the realme, in the aduoyding of all suspicions and surmises of euill disposed persons to haue in wryting and regestred the manifolde crymes and defautes before done by the sayd Richard, late king of England, to the ende that they might first be openly shewed vnto the people, and after to remaine of record among the kings records. The which articles are before expressed.

Now when the Lordes of the parliament had consydered this voluntarie renouncement of King Richarde, and that it was behouefull and necessary for the weale of the realme to proceede vnto the sentence of his deposall, they there appointed by the aucthoritie of the states of the sayde parliament, that is to saye the Byshop of Saint Asse, the Abbot of Glascenbury, the Erle of Gloucester, the Lorde Barkeley, Wylliam Thyrning justice, and Thomas Erpyngham, and Thomas Gray knightes, that they should geue open sentence to the kings deposition. Wherevpon the sayde commissioners laying their heades together, by good counsaile and aduisement and of one assent agreed among them, that the Bishop of Saint Asse should publishe the sentence for them and in their names, as followeth.

In the name of God, amen. We Iohn Bishop of Saint Asse or Assenence, Iohn The deposition of king Richard Abbot of Glascenbury, Richard Erle of Gloucester (and so the names of the other as the seconde. they are aboue rehersed) chosen and deputed speciall commissioners by the three estates of this present parliament, representing the whole body of the realme, for all such matters by the said estates to vs comitted: we well understanding & considering the manifolde crymes, hurtes and harmes done by Richarde King of Englande, and the misgouernaunce of the same by a long time, to the great decay of the sayd land, and vtter ruine of the same shortly to have bene, ne had the speciall grace of our Lorde God thervnto put the soner remedy: And also furthermore consydering by the sayd king knowing his awne insufficiency, hath of his awne meere mocion and free will renounced and geuen vp the rule and gouernaunce of this lande, with all rightes and honours to the same belongyng, and vtterly for his merites hath judged himselfe not vnworthely to be deposed of all kingly maiesty and estate royall. We the premisses well consydering, by good and diligent deliberation, by the power, name and aucthoritie to vs, as abouesayde, committed pronounce, decerne and declare the same king Richard, before thys to have bene and to be vnprofitable, vnhable, vnsufficient, and vnworthy to the rule and gouernaunce of the aforesayde realmes and Lordships, and all other the appurtenaunces to the same belongyng. And for the same causes we depriue him of all kingly dignitie and worship, and of any kingly worship in himselfe. And we depose him by our sentence definitiue, forbydding expresly to all Archebishops, Bishops, and all other Prelates, Dukes, Marquesses, Erles, Barons and Knightes, and to all other men of the aforesayd kingdome and Lordships, or of other places belonging to the same realmes and Lordships, subjectes and lieges whatsoeuer they be, that none of them from this time forward, to the aforesayde Richard as king and Lorde of the aforesayde Realmes and Lordships, be neyther obedient nor attendaunt.

And immediately after this sentence, the Duke of Lancaster rysyng from the place where he then sate, and standing where all might behold him, spake these wordes. I Henrie of Henry Duke of Lancaster clayme the realme of England, and the crowne, with all the appurtenaunces, as Lancaster maketh clayme I that am discended by ryght lyne of the blood commyng from that good Lorde king Henry to the crowne the thirde, and through the right that God of his grace hath sent vnto me, with the helpe of Englande. my kinne, and of my friendes to recouer the same, which was in poynt to be vndone for default of good governaunce and due iustice.

After which words, thus by him vttered, he returned & sate him downe in the place where he before had sitten. Then the Lordes heryng this claime, commoned secretly

Duke Henry placed in the regall seate. among themselues, and then was it demaunded of them what they thought: and they all agreed to the sayde clayme, and that he was worthie to reigne as king ouer them. Then the Archbishop of Cauntorbury hauyng knowledge of the Lordes mindes, stoode vp, and asked the Cōmons if they would assent to the Lordes, to the which also they assented. After which aunswere the Archbishop went to the Duke, and after low & solemne obeysaunce, kneelyng vpon his knee, did afterwarde arise, and tooke the Duke by the right hande, and led him vnto the kinges seate, and there wyth great reuerence placed him.

After the Duke was thus placed as king, then he stood vp and sayde to the Lordes and Commons present: I thanke you my Lordes spirituall and temporall, and all the states of this lande, and I geue you to vnderstand, that it is not my wil that any man thinke that by the way of Cōquest I would disenherite any man of his heritage, franchise or other rightes, that of right to him belongeth, nor to put him out of that which he now enjoyeth, & hath had before tyme by custome of good lawe of this realme, except such private persons as haue bene against the good purpose & the como profit of the realme.

When the king had thus spoken, he sate downe, and then it was agreed that the Procurator aforenamed should go vnto the Tower, and resigne vnto the late king Richard all their homages and fealties in the name of the whole realme, and to shewe vnto him, not onely the maner of his deposition, but also howe Henry Duke of Lancaster was placed in the Kingdome, which was done accordyngly, and the next day after, the Duke was openly proclaymed Kyng by the name of King Henry the fourth.

HENRYE THE FOURTH.

OW after King Richard was deposed, as you have heard, then Henry Plantagenet, borne at Bolyngbrooke in the Coūtie of Lincolne, Duke of Lancaster and Herford, Erle of Darbie, Leycester, and Lyncolne, sonne to Iohn of Gaunt Duke of Lancaster, tooke vpon him the government of this realme, and was by sounde of Trompet proclaymed king of Englande, and of Fraunce, and Lorde of Irelande, the. xxix. day of September, in the yere of our Lorde 1399. by the name of King Henry the fourth, and was crowned at Westminster the. xj. day of October then next following, which was the day of the Translation of Edward the Confessor, with all tryumph and solemnitie.

The Coronatio of king Henrie the fourth.

And at the day of his coronation (as sayth Hall) because he would not have it thought that he tooke vpon him the Crowne without good title and right therevnto had, therefore he caused it to be proclaymed and published, that he chalenged the realme not only by coquest, but also for that he was by king Richard adopted as heyre, and declared successor of hym, and by resignation, had accepted the Crowne and Scepter, & also that he was next heire Male of the blood royall to king Rycharde.

Henry prince of Wales. Shortly after his coronation, he created his eldest sonne Henry, Prince of Wales, Duke of Cornewall, and Erle of Chester beyng then of the age of. xij. yeres, and caused him to be proclaymed heyre apparant to the Crowne of this realme. And soone after he called his high Court of Parliament, in the which was demaunded by king Henryes friendes, what should be done with king Richard. And as the aforesayde Hall sayth, whome I chiefely folowe in this history, for that he hath diligently traueyled therein. The Bishop of Carlisle which was a man well learned, and of a good courage, stood vp and sayde: My Lordes, I require you to take hede what aunswere you make vnto this question: For I thinke there is none of you worthie or mete to geue iudgement on so noble a Prince as

King.

The bishop of Carlisle a stout bishop.

King Richard is, whom we have taken and honoured for our souereigne and liege Lorde. by the space of xxij, yeres, & I assure you, there is not so ranke a traytor, nor so arrant a thefe, nor yet so cruel a murderer, apprehended or deteyned in prison for his offence. but he shall be brought before the Iustice to heere his judgement: And yet ye will proceede to the judgement of an annoynted king, and here neyther hys aunswere nor excuse. And I say, that the Duke of Lancaster, whom you call king, hath more offended and more trespassed to king Richard & this realme, then the king hath eyther done to him or For it is manifest and well knowen, that the Duke was banished the Realme by king Richard and hys counsaile, and by the judgement of his awne father (for the space of. x. yeres) for what cause all you knowe, and yet without licence of king Richarde he is returned againe into the realme, yea and that is worsse, hath taken vpon him the name. title, & preheminence of a king. And therfore I say, that you have done manifest wrong, A bishop comitto proceede in any thing against king Richard, without callyng him openly to his aunswere talking to broad and defence. Assoone as the Bishop had ended his tale, he was attached by the Erle Mar- in the parliashall, and committed to ward in the Abbey of Saint Albones.

And in the sayde Parliament it was concluded, that King Richarde should continue in a large prison, and should have all thinges honourably ministred vnto him, as well for his Anorder take dyet as also apparell. And that if any person or persons would presume to styrre and charde should rere warre on the behalfe of king Richard for his delyueraunce out of prison, that then be intreated. King Richard himselfe should be the first that should die for that commotion.

In this Parliament, the Lorde Fitzwater appealed the Duke of Aumarle of high treason, and offered to fight with him in Listes royall: Likewyse the Lorde Morley appealed Sundrie apthe Erle of Sarisbury, and there were mo then. xx. Appealants which waged battail in Peales. this Parliament: But the king pardoned all their offences, sauving the faultes of the Lorde Morley, and the Erle of Sarisbury, whom he committed to ward, and after at the request of their friendes, they were againe set at libertie. The king also punished extremely all suche as were privie and doers of the murder of Thomas hys Vncle, late Duke of Gloucester, which was shamefully murthered, as is before, in the Towne of Calice. Also he A revengement greatly advaunced sundrie of hys friendes, and called out of banishment Richard Erle of Gloucesters Warwike, and restored the Erle of Arondelles sonne to his awne possession and dignitic, death. and manie other. He tooke into his speciall fauour Iohn Holland Duke of Exeter, and Iohn Holland Erle of Huntyngton, halfe brother vnto King Richard which had espoused the Ladie Eli-Duke of Excezabeth his awne sister: And he beyng before Captaine of Calice, was greatly moued and ter. inwardly grieued, that hing Rychard his brother was removed out of the seate royall, and therefore began to styrre vp newe motions and factions within the Realme: the which the king much feared, and therefore he reconciled him to his fauour, and made him as he supposed, his perfect friende, where in deede he was his deadly enemye.

Also in the ende of this Parliament were repealed all the statutes that were made in the xxj. yere of the reigne of King Richard. And then King Henry supposyng that he had wonne the heartes and fauoures, aswell of the Nobilitie both spirituall and temporall, as of the Commons of his realme, prayed that for the aduoydyng of all claymes, tytles and doubtes that might be made vnto the Crowne, that he might have his dignitie, lyne and succe-sio enacted, confirmed, and entayled, by the assent of the high Court of Parliament, the which was done in maner and forme following. AT the request and peticion, aswell of the nobilitie, as of the Commons, in this pre- An act entitlyage sent Parliament assembled, it is ordeyned and established, that the inheritaunce of the King Henryethe Crowne and Realmes of Englande, and of Fraunce, and of all other Lordships to § king Crowne of the realme. our souereigne Lord, aswell on this side the seas, as beyond, apperteining, with their appurtenaunces, shall be vnited and remain in the person of our souereigne Lord the King, and in the heyres of his bodie lawfully begotten. And especially at the request and assent aforesayde it is ordeyned, established, pronounced, enacted, written and declared, that my Lorde Prince, Henry, eldest sonne to our souereigne Lorde the king, shall be heyre apparant, and successor to our souereigne Lorde in the sayde Crowne, Realmes, and Seigniories, to have and enjoy them with all their appurtenaunces, after the decrease of our sayd souereigne, to him and the heyres of his bodie begotten. And if he die without heyres of his bodie begotten, that then the sayde Crownes, Realmes, and Seigniories, with their appurtenaunces shal remaine to the Lord Thomas, second sonne to our sayd souereigne Lorde, and to the heyres of his bodie begotten. And if he depart without issue of his bodie begotten, all the premisses to remain to Lord Iohn his thirde sonne and to the heyres of his bodie begotten. And if he die without issue, then the Crownes, Realmes, and Seigniories aforesayd with their appurtenaunces shall remaine to the Lord Homfrey, the fourth sonne to our sayd souereigne Lord, and to the heyres of his bodie lawfully begotten.

Now when King Henry had thus mortised himselfe and his issue so sure and fast, as he thought, that the same was not possible to be remooued, then was he neerer an ytter ouerthrow and destruction than euer he was, for suche is the nature of dissimulation, that when fortune with her flattering seemeth most to joy and laugh, then (so fickle is she of condition) is most perill and daunger at hand: For now dyners of those Lords which were king Richardes friendes, outwardly dissimuled that which they inwardly conspired, which was the finall confusion and destruction of King Henry, and to restore agayne their olde Lorde and mayster king Richarde. And the better to bring thys matter about, they practised with the Abbot of Westminster that then was, who had no good opinion of king Henry, for that he heard him once saye, when he was Duke of Lancaster, that Princes had to little, and the religious had to much, and therefore he supposed that he would not be a friend vnto the Church, if he contynued long in that dignitie. Vnto the house of thys Abbot resorted one day as bidden gestes of the sayde Abbot, John Holland Duke of Exceter and Erle of Huntyngdon, Thomas Holland Duke of Surrey, and Erle of Kent. Edward Duke of Aumarle and Erle of Rutlande, sonne to the Duke of Yorke, John Mountagew Erle of Salsbury, Hugh Spencer Erle of Gloucester, John the Bishop of Carleill, Sir Thomas Blunt, and one Magdalen, one of king Richards Chapell, a man as lyke vnto him in stature and proporcion, as vnlike in birth and dignitie. This Abbot highly feasted these great Lordes, and when dyner was done, they withdrew themselves into a secret Chamber, and when they were set, Iohn Holland Duke of Exceter, who bare great grudge agaynst king Henry, declared to them their allegeaunce promised, and by othe confirmed to king Richarde his brother, forgetting not the highe promocions and dignities, which he and all they present had receyued of the liberalitie of his sayde brother. by the which they were not onely bound to take part with him and his friendes, but also to be reuenged for him and his cause on hys mortall enemies and deadly foes: In the doyng whereof he thought pollicy more meeter to be vsed then force. And the better to bring this matter about, he decised a Justes to be kept betwene him and. xx. on his part, & the Erle of Salsbury & xx. of his part, at Oxforde: To the which Iustes King Henry should be desyred to be present, and when he were most earnestly beholding the pastyme, he should sodainely haue beene slayne and destroyed, and by this meanes king Richard, which was then alvue should be restored to his libertie and to his crowne and kingdome.

A justes to be holden at Oxforde.

This deuise seemed to please well all that were present, wherfore they made an Indenture sextipartite sealed with their seales, & signed with their handes, in the which eche bounde himselfe to other to endeuour themselves for the destruction of king Henry, and the erection and restoring of king Richard, and sware on the Euangelistes the one to be true to the other, even to the houre and poynt of death.

The king is requested by the Lords to come to the Iustes.

Nowe all things beyng thus appoynted and concluded, the Duke of Exceter came to the King to Wynsore, humbly beseeching him for the loue that he bare to the noble actes of Chiualrie, that he would vouchsafe not only to repaire to Oxford, to see and beholde their enterprises and attemptes, but also to be the discouerer and indifferent Iudge (if any ambiguitie should arise) of their courageous actes and royall triumph. The king seing himselfe so earnestly desyred, and that of his brother in lawe, and suspecting nothing

lesse then that which was purposed, did gently graunt vnto his request. And so sone as the Duke had his aunswere, he returned home to his house and prepared all things necessarie for the exployt of his pretensed purpose. And when the time drue neere, he came to Oxforde with a great companye of Archers and horsemen, and when he came thether, he found there all his confederates well appointed for the purpose, except the Duke of Aumarle Erle of Rutlande, for whome they sent messengers in great haste. Thys Duke of Aumarle went before from Westminster to see his father the Duke of Yorke. and sittyng at dynner, he had his Counterpane of the indenture of confederacie (whereof is mencion made afore) in his bosome. The father espyed it, and demaunded what it was. His sonne lowely aunswered, that it touched not him: By Saint George, quod the Treason with father, but I will see it, and by force tooke it out of his bosome, and when he perceyued the content thereof, and the sixe seales set and fixed to the same, whereof the scale of his sonne was one, he sodeynely roase from the Table, commaunding his horses to be saddeled, and in a great fury sayd to his sonne: thou Traytor theefe, thou hast bene a Traytor to king Richard, and wilt thou nowe be false to thy Cosyn King Henry? Thou knowest well inough, that I am thy pledge, Borow, and Maine perne bodie for bodie, and for lande and goodes in open Parliament: and goest thou about to seeke my death and destruction? By the holy Roode I had rather see thee strangled on a Gybbet. And so the Duke of Yorke mounted on horsebacke, to ride to Windsore to the king, and to declare the whole matter vnto him. The Duke of Aumerle considering in what case he stoode in, tooke his horse and roade another way to Windsore, ridyng all the way in post (which his father beyng an olde man, could not do) and when he was alighted at the Castell gate. he caused the gates to be shut, saiying that he must nedes deliver the keyes to the king. And when he came before the kinges presence, he kneeled on his knees, beseeching him of mercie and forgeuenesse. The King demaunded the cause, and he declared vnto him plainly the whole confederacie. Well sayd the king, if this be true, we pardon you: if it be feyned, at your extreme perill be it.

While the king and the Duke talked together, the Duke of Yorke knocked at the Castell Gate, whom the king caused to be let in, and there he delivered the Indenture which before he had taken from his sonne. Which wrytyng when the King had red and seene, perceiving the signes and seales of the Confederates, he chaunged his former purpose: For the day before he heard that the Chaloners and defenders were all in a redinesse, and thought the same day to have gone thether, but now he stayed, and wrote his letters foorthwith vnto the Erle of Northumberland his high Constable, and to the Erle of Westmerland, his high Marshall, and to dyuers other his friendes, of his doubtfull daunger and perelous ieopardie.

The Confederators perceiving the lacke of the Duke of Aumerle, and also seying no preparation made there for the Kinges commyng, imagined that their purpose was disclosed to the King, wherefore, that thing which they purposed preuily to have done, they determined now openly with speare and shielde to set foorth and aduaunce. And so they adourned Magdalene a man resemblyng much King Richard, in royall and Princely ves- Magdalene a ture, calling him King Richard, and affyrmyng that he by fauour of his kepers was dely-man that much resembleth king uered out of Prison and set at libertie. Nowe while the Confederates with theyr newe Richard the sedeuised King, accompanied wyth a puyssaunt armie of men, toke the direct way to Wind-conde. sore: King Henry beyng admonished of their commyng, with a fewe horse in the night went from Windsore, and came to the Tower of London aboute midnight, where he in the Mornyng caused the Maior of the Citie to bring vnto him three thousand Archers, and thre thousand Billmen well armed and appoynted.

The Lordes of the Confederacie came to Windsore, and entered the Castell, where they fyndyng not theyr pray, determined with all speede to passe foorth towardes London: But when they were well onwarde of theyr iourney, they then chaunged theyr purpose, and returned backe to Colbroke, and there stayed. These Lordes had many people fo-VOL. I. 3 Q

lowing them, what for feare, and what for entreaty, and specially for that they beleved

certeinly king Richard was there present with them. When King Henrie heard of theyr commyng toward London, he issued out of the sayd Citie with twentie thousand men, and came to Hounslow hethe, and there pitched his campe, myndyng there to abyde the commyng of his enemyes. But when the Lordes were advertised of the kinges commyng. and of hys great puyssaunce, beyng eyther amased with feare, or else repenting their enterpryce, or mistrustyng theyr awne companie, they departed from Colbroke to Barkhamsted, and so to Ancester, and there the Lordes tooke theyr lodgyng: The Duke of Surrey, Erle of Kent, and the Erle of Sarisbury in one Inne, and the Duke of Exeter, and the Erle of Gloucester in another, and all the armie lay in the fieldes. In the night tyme the Baylife of the Towne with lxxx. Archers set on the house where the Duke of Surrey and the other lay: The house was manfully assaulted, and strongly defended a great space. The Duke of Exeter beyng in another Inne, with the Eric of Gloucester, set fyre on dvucrse houses in the towne, thynkyng that the assaylantes would leave the assault and rescue theyr goodes, which they nothing regarded. The army living without, herving novse, and seeing five in the towne, thinking that the King was come thether with his puyssaunce, fled without measure to saue themselves. The Duke of Exceter & his companie seeying the force of the townes men more and more to encrease, fled out on the backe syde, entendyng to repayre to the armie, which they found dispersed and re-Then the Duke seeving no hope of comfort, fled into Essex: And the Erle of Gloucester goyng towarde Wales, was taken and behedded at Bristowe: Magdalene fliyng into Scotland, was apprehended and brought to the Tower of London. And the Lordes which were still fighting in the towne of Cicester, were wounded to death and taken, and their heades stricken off and sent to London: And there were taken Sir Bennet Shelly, and Sir Barnard Brokas, and. xxix. other Lordes, Knightes, and Esquiers. and sent to Oxforde, where the King then solourned, and where Sir Thomas Blunt and all the other prisoners were executed.

The ouerthrow and discomfiture of the Lords.

When the Duke of Exceter heard that his complices were taken, and his counsaylors apprehended, and his friendes put in execution, he lamented his awne chaunce, and bewayled the misfortune of his friends: But most of all he was troubled to thinke vpon the wretched ende that should happen to King Rycharde hys brother, whose death he sawe as in a Glasse, to be at hand by reason of this his vnhappie enterprise, and thus beyng succourlesse, and wandering vp & downe, at the last he was taken in a towne called Plashey in Essex, and there made shorter by the head, and in that place specially (sayth Hall) for that he in the same Lordship, betrayed Thomas Duke of Gloucester, and was the very cause of hys death and destruction, and so the common prouerbe was verified, as you have done, so shall you feele.

After this, Magdalene that represented the person of king Richarde amongest the reocls, and dyners other were put to execution, and all the heads of the chiefe conspirators were set on poles oner London bridge, to the feare of other which were disposed to commit lyke offense. The Abbot of Westmynster in whose house this confederacy was conspired, heeryng that the Chiefeteynes of his Felowship were taken and executed, he goyng betwene the monasterie and his mansion house, for thought fell into a sodaine palsey, andshortly after without any speeche ended his lyfe: After whom the Bishop of Carlisle, more for feare then sicknesse yeelded his spirite to God, as one desyring to die by deathes darte, rather then by the temporall sworde.

But now drewe on the time, the Innocent must perishe with the Nocent, and the vn-giltie with the giltie: For king Richard being ignoraunt of this conspiracie and kept in miserable captiuitie, was by king Henry adjudged to die, for y he would delyuer himself of al inward feare of his enemies, wherfore some write that he commanded him to be slaine, & others say that he was agreeable therevnto, and some others affirme that he knewe not of it, vntill it was done: But howsoeuer it was, Kyng Rychard dyed of a violent death: And one wryter sayth that king Henry sitting at hys table, and sore sighing sayde, The death of haue I no faythfull friende that will delyuer me from him whose lyfe will be my death, and king Richard the whose death will be the preservation of my life? Thys saiving was noted of them that were present, and specially of one called Sir Piers of Exton. This knight incontinently departed the Court with eight talle persons with him, and came to Poinfret, commaunding that the Esquire which was accustomed to sewe, and take the assaye before king Richard, should no more vse that maner of seruice, saiving: let him eate well nowe. for he shall not long eate. King Richard sate downe to dyner, and was served without curtesie or assaye, he much marueylyng of the sodaine mutation of the thing, demaunded of the Esquyre why he did not his duetie? Sir sayde he, I am otherwise commaunded by sir Piers of Exton, which is newly come from King Henry. When he heard that word, he toke the caruyng knyfe in his hande, and strake the Esquire on the head, saiyng, the Denill take Henry of Lancaster and thee together: and with that word Sir Piers entered into the Chamber well armed, with eight talle men in harneys, euery man having a byll in his hande. King Richarde perceyuing them armed, knew well that they came to his confusion, and putting the table from him, valiauntly tooke the byll out of the first mans hande, and manfully defended himselfe, and slewe foure of them in a short space. Sir Piers being somewhat dismayed with his resisting, lept into the Chayre where king Richard was wont to sit, while the other foure persons chased him about the Chamber, which being vnarmed defended himselfe against his enemies that were armed (which was a valiaunt acte) but in conclusion he came by the Chayre where Sir Piers stoode, who with a stroke of his Pollax felled him to the ground, and soone after was rid out of his lyfe in this worlde. When this knight perceyued that he was dead, he lamented and sayde: O Lorde, what have we done? we have murdered him whome by the space of xxii, yeres we obeyed and honoured as our souereigne Lorde, nowe will all Noble men abhorre vs, and all good men hate vs, and poynt at vs as the murderers of a noble Prince. Thus have you heard the death and ende of King Richard the second as the best aucthours report of it.

When King kichaid had thus ended his lyfe, he was then enhaulmed, and seared, and couered with lead, all saue his face (to the entent that all men might perceyue that he was departed out of this lyte) and was conveyed to London, and so to the Tower, and from thence through London to the Cathedrall Church of Saint Paule, and there remayned three dayes, that all the people might see him, and from thence he was conveyed to Lang-King Rychard ley in Buckyngham shire, where he was buryed: And afterwarde by king Henry the fift, Langley, and was removed to Westminster, and there honourably entombed wyth Queene Anne his after removed to Westminster,

Now newes were first brought to the French King, how King Richard was deposed of his Kingdome, at the which the sayde French king wondered not a little, and cryed out of the shamefull doyng thereof, that an annointed king, and crowned Prince should be so vilve vsed: But the French king was not so much agreeued, but Walleram Erle of Saint Paule, which had maryed king Richardes halfe sister, was muche more grieued, who beying moued with highe disdeine against king Henrie, ceased not to prouoke the Frenche king and his counsaile, to make sharpe warre vpon England, to reuenge the in-The French king iury and dishonour committed and done to his sonne in law king Richard, and he him-ters of defiance selfe sent letters of defiance into England: Which thing was soone agreed vnto, and an vnto the king: armie royall appoynted with all speede to inuade England. This armie was come downe into Picardie, readie to bee transported into Englande: But when it was certeinly certefyed that king Richard was dead, and that theyr enterprice for his deliuerance was vaine, the armie was discharged, and every man returned to his home. But shortly after, the French king gathered another great power, & entred the Duchy of Aquitaine and Gascoyn, and thought there to have greatly prevayled. But king Henry beyng advertised of all the Frenche attemptes, sent the Lorde Thomas Percey Erle of Worcester with a goodly crewe of Souldiours into Acquitaine to ayde and assist Sir Thomas Knolles his Lieu-3 Q 2

tenant there, and to perswade and exhort the people to continue in their auncient libertie, and due obeysance. When the Erle was there arryued, he so wisely entreated the noble men, and perswaded the Magistrates of Cities and Townes, and so gently and familiarly vsed himselfe to the common people, that he not onely appeared theyr furie and malice, which they had conceyued agaynst King Henry, for the death & destruction of king Richard, but also he brought them to an uniforme obeysance, receiving of them othes of obedience, which done, he returned againe into England with great mankes.

When king Charles of Fraunce perceyued that his purpose and attempt came to no good conclusion in Acquitain, and that king Richard beyng dead, his enterprice into England would be to no purpose, he determined with him selfe howe to have the Ladie Isabell his daughter, which was espoused to king Richard, to be restored home to him againe: And for that purpose he sent a solempne Ambassade into England to king Henry, which gently received them, and gaue aunswere that he would shortly send his Commissioners the king of Eng- to Calice, which should further common and conclude with them, not onelye your that request, but also of dynerse other matters of great importance.

And shortly after their departing, he sent Edward Duke of Yorke before called Duke of Aumerle, which succeded in the sayde Duchie his father Edmond Duke of Yorke, a little before deceased, and Henry Erle of Northumberlande into the Countie of Guysnes, and there they mette with the Frenche Commissioners, who assembled together dynerse tymes and in dyuerse places.

The Duke of Burbon aboue all thinges, required in the name of the French King his maister, to have Queene Isabell to him delivered: But the English men denyed that, and required to have her to be maryed to Henrie Prince of Wales, a man both in blood and age to her in all thinges equall: But the French King vtterly refused that maryage, saiving that he would never joyne affinitie againe with the Englishe Nation, because that the allyaunce had such infortunate successe.

Then they beganne to entreate a continuall peace, which request the French men refused, and in conclusion they agreed that the truce which was taken between them and King Richard for the terme of xxx. yeres, was renued and confirmed: But some write that a new league was then concluded to continue the liues of both the Princes, which should appere to be true. For the king of England sent shortly after the aforesayd Ladie Isabell (vnder the conduct of the Lorde Thomas Percey Erle of Worcester, besent home to her yng associate with many noble and honourable personages, aswell women, as men, hauyng wyth her all the Iewelles, Ornamentes, and Plate, with a great surplusage geuen to her by the king, which she brought into Englad) in solemne estate vnto Calice, and there shee was delivered to Waleran Erle of saint Paule Lieutenant for the French king in Picardie, and so conueied to her father, which gaue her in maryage to Charles, sonne to Lewes Duke of Orliaunce. The French men often tymes required king Henry to assigne vnto her a dower, but all was in vaine, for the Englishe men aunswered, that the matrimony was neuer consummate, by reason wherof, she was not dowable by the very treaty of the mariage concluded, and so this matter cessed and was no more moued.

Nowe as the olde prouerbe sayth, after winde commeth raine, and after one euill commonly ensueth another: So duryng this tyme that king Henry was vexed and vnquieted, both within the Realme and without, Owen Glendor a squier of Wales, perceyuyng the realme to be viquieted, and the king not very well setled in his kingdome, purposed to take vpon him the principalitie of Wales, and the name & preheminence of the same: and what with faire flatteryng wordes, and large promises, he inuegled and allured an vndiscrete number of Welshe men, who tooke him for theyr Prince, and made to him an othe of allegeance and subjection. And beyng thus advanced and supported, he made sharpe and cruell warre vpon Reignold Lorde Gray of Rithen, and tooke him prisoner, promisyng him libertie, and that he would discharge his raunsome if he would take his daughter in mariage, thinkyng by that affinitie to have great ayde, and to be of a great power in

Owen Glendor rabelleth.

The Lord Gray being not very riche, neither of substaunce nor of friendes, considering this offer to be the onely way of his reliefe and deliueraunce, assented to his pleasure, and mayed the Damosell: But this false father in lawe kept him with his wife still in prison vatil he dyed: And not content with this heynous offence, he also made warre voon the Lorde Edmond Mortimer, Erle of Marcle, and in his awne Lordship of Wigmore, where in a conflict he slue many of the Erles men, and toke him prisoner, and Edmond Morfettered him in Cheynes, and cast him in a deepe and miserable Dungeon. The king was timer taken and required to purchase his deliveraunce, by dynerse of the Nobilitie, but he would not here imprisoned. on that syde, but rather desyred and wished all his linage in heaven, for then his title had beene out of all doubt & question.

Owen Glendor glorifiyng in himself for these two victories, inuaded the Marches of Wales on the west syde of Seuerne, robbed Villages, brent townes, and slue the people, and beyng laden with prayes and bloody hands returned againe into Wales, neuer ceassyne to doe mischiefe vntill the next yere that the king raysed a great armie and puyssaunce.

to resist and defende his malicious attemptes, as after shall be declared.

And in this first yere also this realme was not only troubled with Civile sedition, and the Civile sedicion, craftie practises of the Frenchmen, and great trouble of the Welshmen, but also of the Scottes with all their power armed themselves agaynst thys king Henry, the occasion whereof was, that George of Dunbare Erle of the Marches of the realme, made meanes vnto king Robert of Scotland that Dauid hys eldest sonne might marie the Erles daughter called Elizabeth, and delyuered for the same mariage into the kings handes a great some of money. When Archibald Erle Douglas heard of thys conclusion, he disdeyning the Erle of Marches blood to be aduaunced before hys stock, did eyther by fayre wordes or else by disbursing a greater some of money, so enuegle king Robert of Scotlande, that Dauid his heyre refusyng the first damosel, maried the Erle of Douglas daughter: The Erle of March desyred restitution of his money, to whome the king gaue many trifelyng answers, the which he tooke in so euill parte, that he with his wyfe fled into Englande vnto Henry Erle of Northumberlande, entending to be reuenged vpon the king of Scotlande, and with the helpe of the borderers, brent dyuers townes, and slue many persons within the realme of Scotland.

Kyng Robert beyng hereof aduertised, first deprived the Erle George of all his dignities and possessions, and caused his goodes to be confiscate, and then wrote to the king of England earnestly beseeching him, if he would have the truce any lenger to continue, evther to delyuer into his possession the Erle of March, and other Travtors and rebels to his person and realme or else to banish and exile them out of his realme and dominions. King Henry aunswered discretely the Herault of Scotland, that the worde of a prince ought to be kept, and hys wryting and seale ought to be inviolate: And consydering that he had graunted a saufe conduct vnto the Erle and hys company, he would neyther without cause reasonable breake his promise, nor yet deface his honour, which aunswere beyng declared to the king of Scottes, he incontinent did proclayme open warre against the king of Eng-Warproclaymed by the Scottes land, with bloud, fyre and sworde.

King Henry forthwith gathering together a great puyssance & army, entered into Scotland brennyng and spoyling townes, Villages and Castels, sparyng nothing but Religious houses and Churches, and brent a great parte of the townes of Edenborough and Lyth, and besieged the Castell of Maydens in Endenborough in the ende of September, whereof was Captain Dauid Duke of Rothsay, and Prince of the realme, and Archibald Erle Douglas wyth Robert Duke of many hardy men. Robert Duke of Albany beyng appoynted Gouernour of the Realme, be- Albany promiscause the king was sick and vnapt to rule, sent vnto king Henry an herauld, assurying hym King Henryes on hys honour that if he would abyde and tary hys commyng, which should be wythin sixe power. dayes at the most, he would geue hym battayle, and remove the siege, or else die for it.

The king beyng glad of these newes, rewarded the Herault with a Gowne of Silke, and a chayne of Golde, promising him in the worde of a Prince, not to depart thence, but to, abyde there the comming of the Gouernour. The sixt daye passed, ye sixe and sixtene to, the Gouernour neyther appered nor sent worde, the Wynter waxed colde, victuall fayled, men dyed of the Fluxe, and it rayned eucry day so abundauntly, that hunger and colde caused the king to breake vp his siege, and to depart out of Scotland without battayle or skirmishe offered: duryng which time both the Wardeynes of the Marches beyng with the king, the Scottes made a roade into Northumberland, and burned diverse townes in Bainborough shyre, and shortly returned againe, or else they had bene trapped and come to late home.

When the king of Englande had dismyssed his souldyours and discharged his armie, the Scottes entending to be reuenged of their great dammages to them by the English nation of Northumberlands Vice Wardeyn, and other gentlemen of the borders, at a towne in Northumberland called Nesbit, and there the Englishemen sore assayled, and the Scottes valiauntly resisted, but after a long fight the victoric fell on the Englishe part, and as Iohn Maior the Scot wryteth, there were slaine the Flowre of all Lowdian, and specially syr Patrike Hebburne with many of hys lynage. There were apprehended Syr Iohn, and Wylliam Cockborne, syr Robert of Bas, Iohn and Thomas Hablincton Esquiers, and great gayne of beastes and captives: But by the waye he was encountered with the Erle

a great number of the common people. The Erle Douglas beyng sore greued with the losse of his Nation and friendes, and entending to requite the same if it were possible, did by the consent of the gouernour of Scotland gather together an armie of twentie thousand talle men and mo. In the which armie the Lorde Mordack Erle of Fiffe, sonne to the Gouernour of Scotlande, the Erle of Angus, and many other Erles and Barons of the Nobilitie of Scotland. These valyaunt Captaines and courageous Souldyours entered into Northumberland, with baners displayed lyke men that thought themselves hable to spoyle the whole Countrie of Northumberland. Now when they were entred into Eng-lande, thinking no puyssaunce hable to encounter with their force, sodainely there issued out of a Valey beside a towne called Homelden, The Lorde Henry Percey, whom the Sir Henry Hot- Scottes for his haut and valyaunt courage, called Sir Henry Hotspurre, and in his companie the Lorde George of Dunbarre Erle of Marche before banished Scotlande, as you have heard, with all the Gentlemen of Northumberlande, and eyght thousand men on horsback and on foote: The encounter was sharpe, the fight was daungerous and doubtfull, but in the ende the victorie chaunced to the Englishe nation, and there were slaine. of the Scottes of men of great renoune and estimation, Sir Iohn Swynton, Sir Adam

Gordon, Sir Iohn Leuyston, Sir Alexander Ramsey of Dalehouse, and. xxiij. knightes. mo, beside ten thousand of the common people. And there were taken prisoners, Mordack Erle of Fiffe, Archibald Erle Douglas, Thomas Erle of Murrey, Robert Erle of Angus, and as some writers affirme, the Erle of Athell, and Menteth with five hundreth other.

When the Lorde Percy had obteyned this great victorie, he sent his prisoners into dyuers Fortresses, and determined to subdue or destroy all the Countries of Lowdian and Marche, whose heades and Gouernours eyther he had slaine, or by force taken Captines. And so with a great power entered into Tiuedale, wastyng and destroyeng the whole Countrie, and there besieged the Castell of Coclaues, whereof was Captaine Sir Iohn Grenelow, who seyng that his Castell was not long hable to be defended, fell to composition with the Englishmen, that if the Castell were not succored within three Moneths, that then he would delyuer it into the Englishmens handes.

The Captaine thereof wrote vnto the Gouernour, which callyng a great counsayle, the

the most part aduised hym rather frankly and freely to yeelde the Castell, then to put in icopardie the remnaunt of the Nobilitie of Scotlande: So muche was their courages abated and cooled with the remembraunce of the last conflict and battayle: But the Governour rebuking their feyut and cowardly hearts, sware that if no man would follow of the Nobilitie, he would doe his deuoyre to reskew the Castell at that daye. But this othe was neyther kept nor broken, for he little preparing and lesse entendyng the othe which he solemply made, neuer set foote forward duryng the first two Moneths, for the revsing of the siege, or rescuying of the Castell. But the Englishmen beying sent for to with the king into Wales, raysed their siege and departed, leauyng the noble men prisoners still with the Erle of Northumberland, and the Lorde Percy his sonne, which by the king were commaunded to keepe them to his vse, and not to delyuer them without his assent.

The king now purposing his journey and enterprise into Wales, made great provision both for men, municion and artillery meete for suche a businesse, whereof the Frenche king beyng aducrtised, sent primitye the Lorde Iames of Burbone Erle of Marche, & his maketh premised two brethren, Iohn and Lewes with. xij. hundred knightes and Esquiers, to avde Owen sion to enter Glendor against King Henry, and the sayde lames of Burbone with his companye tooke into Wales. shipping wyth. xxx. sayle at the mouth of Seyn, and the winde not beyng fauourable to his The French king purpose, could not approche to the coast of Wales, but came before the towne of Plym- Glendormouth in Deconshire, and there leaving his great shippes lyeng at Anker, in the night tooke lande, and brent, spoyled and destroyed dyners small Villages and poore cottages, and robbed five or sixe little Crayers and fisher boates laden with Fishe and corne. But while he and his companye lyke greedy Wolues were seeking after their praye, the winde arose high, and a great tempestuous rage and furious storme sodainly flushed and drowned, xij. of his great shippes, which laye in the mouth of the hauen for his safegarde and defense. Whereof when the Erle was advertised, and perceauing by the fyring of the Becons that the people beganne to assemble in plumpes to encounter with him, and also seyng his power sore diminished, as well by the slaughter of suche as raunged abroade in hope of spoyle and praye, as by the furious rage of the vnmercifull sea, and hydeous tempest, with muche paine and great labour tooke his shippes againe, and was not without great icopardic of his lyfe driven on the Coast of Briteyn, and landed at Saint Malos. The French king perceaugng that this journey had cuill successe, appoint-aydeth the ed one of his Marshalles called Memorancy, and the Master of his Crosbowes, with xij. And from thence they departed towards Owen Glendor, whome they named Prince of Wales, and founde him at the towne of Denbigh abyding their comming with ten thousand men. They were of him louyngly receaued and gently enterteyned: And when all thinges were prepared, they passed by Glamorgan shire toward Worcester, and there brent the Suburbes: But hering of the kings approchyng, they sodainely returned into Wales. The king with a great poyssaunce followed and found them enbattailed on a high Mountayne, and a great valey between both the armies, so that eche army playnely perceaued other, and every hoste looked to be assaulted of hys adversary, and of the grounde to take the most advauntage: Thus they contynued eyglit dayes together from morning to night readie to abide, but not to geue battayle. There were many fierce skirmishes, and many proper feates of armes daylie skirmishes with done, which the French Chronicles more then the Englishe can reporte. For there the French. were slayne the Lorde Patrioles of Tries, brother to the Marshall of Fraunce, the Lorde Mattelone, and the Lorde Vale, and the Bastard of Burbone with fine hundreth gentlemen.

The Frenchmen and Welshmen were sore troubled and afflicted wyth famine, that their hartes and courages were sore abated, for the king had so stopped the passages, that is The French men neyther victuall nor succour could by any waye be conveyed vnto them: wherefore of very necessitie they were compelled eyther to fight or flee, and so by the aduisement and returne againe with littlegayne, counsayle of the Marshall of Fraunce, which put not to much confidence in the wayering Welshmen, the whole host departed the eyght day, in the secretest maner that they and lesse worcould deuyse. The Frenchmen with little rewardes and small gayne returned into Briteyn. making small boast of their painefull journey.

> When the king perceaued them thus departed, he followed them and chaced them from hill to dale, and from one place to another, but all in vaine, and perceyuing then the time of the yere to be passed, and sevng that as then he coulde doe no good, he returned agayne to Worcester, and there dispersed his armie, and returned agayne to

While the king was occupyed in Wales, as aforesayde, certaine lewde and sedicious persons had blased abroade & noysed that king Richard (which openly was seene dead) chard was alyue, was yet living, and desyred ayde of the common people, to repossesse his realme and royal dignitie: And for the better blasing of this false rumor abroade, they set up upon postes, and cast about the stretes, sundrie most slaunderous and sedicious billes and rymes, agaynst king Henrie, and his proceedyngs. The King beyng not a little offended with these malicious doynges, caused diligent searche to be made for the aucthors thereof, and amongest other, there was found out, Sir Roger Claringdon knight, and. viii. gray Friers, which according to theyr desertes were put to execution at Tyborne.

And here is to be showed that king Henry nowe seekyng friendship and affinitie in Germanic, sent this yere his eldest daughter Blaunche, accompanied with the Erle of Somerset, the Bishop of Worcester, and the Lorde Clifford, and other Noble personages into Almaine: which brought her to Coleyn, and there with great tryumph she was maryed to eldest daughter William Duke of Bauier, sonne and heyre to Lewes of Bauier the Emperour, in the of king Henry, which yere also dyed Ladie Katheryn Swynsford, the third wife of John of Gaunt

Duke of Bauler. Duke of Lancaster, father to this king Henrie, and was buried at Lincolne.

In the sayde yere king Henrie maried Iane Duches of Briteyne, late wife to Iohn maried to Iane Duke of Briteyne, at the Citie of Winchester, and with all tryumphant pompe conucyed her through the Citie of London to Westminster, and there she was crowned Quene.

While these thinges were thus in doving in England, Waleram Erle of Saint Paule, which had maryed the halfe sister of king Richard, hauving a deadly hatred to king Henrie, tand with a pow- assembled a great armie, wherein (as sayth maister Hall) were, xvj. thousand men, and a great number of the same were Noble men, and after he toke shippyng at Harflet, and landed in the Isle of Wight: And when he sawe no appearance of defence, he burned two poore Villages, and foure simple Cottages, and for great tryumph of thys noble acte, he made foure knightes: But sodeynly, when he was aduertised by his Espyalles, that the people of the Isle were assembled and approched to fight with him, he with all possible hast tooke his ships and returned home againe, wherewith the noble men of his companie was much discontent and displeased, considering that his provision was great, and his gaine small or none. And at this present tyme, Iohn Erle of Cleremont, sonne to the Duke of Burbon, wonne in Gascoyne, the Castelles of Saint Peter, Saint Marie, and the newe Castell: And the Lorde Delabreth wonne the Castel of Carlaffin, which was no small losse to the English Nacion: Duryng which time dyed Philip Duke of Burgoyn, & Duke Albert of Bauier Erle of Henault.

And the same yere also dyed that excellent Poet Iohn Gowre, who lyeth buryed in Saint Audries Church in Southwarke, and he buylded a great part of the same Church.

This

This yere appered a Comete or blasing starre of a great and huge quatitie, which some expounded to signifye great effusion of mans blood, and the same proued true, as after ye shal here. For Henry Erle of Northumberland, and Thomas Erle of Worcester his A blasyog starce, brother, and his sonne Lorde Henrye Percye, called Hottespurre, which were to king Henrie in the beginning of his reigne both friendes and ayders, perceyuyng now that the king had pacifyed all civile sedition, and repressed his enemies, & had brought his realme to a convenient quietnesse, they began nowe somewhat to enuy his glorye, and grudged at his wealth and felicitie: And specially grieved, because the King demaunded Henry Erle of

of the Erle and his sonne, such Scottishe prisoners as they had taken at the Conflictes & the Erle of fought at Homeldon and Nesbit, as you before have heard. For of all the Captives Worcester, &c. which were then taken, there was deliuered to the Kinges possession, onely Mordake Erle begin to rebell. of Fiffe, sonne to the Duke of Albany, Gouernour of Scotland: For the king diverse and sundry tymes required them of the Erle and his sonne, but the Percyes affyrming them to be theyr awne proper prysoners, and theyr peculiar prayes, did vtterly denie to deliuer them, insomuch, that the king openly sayd, that if they would not deliuer them, he would take them without deliueraunce. Wherewith they beyng sore discontent, by the counsaile of Lorde Thomas Percey Erle of Worcester, whose studie was ever to procure malice, and to set all thinges in broyle and vncerteintie, faynyng a cause to proue and tempt the king, came to him to Windsore, requyryng him by raunsome or otherwise, to cause to be delivered out of prison, Edmond Mortimer Erle of March their Cossyn Germaine, whome (as they reported) Owen Glendor kept in fylthie prison, shakeled with Irons, onely for that he tooke the kinges part, and was to him faythfull and true. The king beganne not a little to muse on thys request, and not without cause, for in dede it touched him as nere as his shirt, for that he was so neere of the blood of king Richard, and had good cause to make clayme to the Crowne. For this Edmond was sonne to Erle Roger, which was sonne to Ladie Philip, daughter to Lionell Duke of Clarence, the third sonne to king Edward the third, which Edmond at King Richardes goyng into Ireland was proclaymed heyre apparant to the Crowne of the realme, whose Aunt called Elianor this Lord Percey had maryed. And therfore the King little forced although that lynage were clerely subuerted, and vtterly extinct.

When the king had well aduised vpon and considered thys matter, hee made aunswere and sayde, that the Erle of Marche was not taken prisoner neyther for his cause, nor in his seruice, but willyngly suffered himselfe to be taken, the which fraude the king caused to be openly published, and thys answere pleased nothing the Erle of Worcester, but put him in a great Choler and chafe, and departed in a great rage and fume, insomuch y syr Henry Hottespurre sayde afterwardes openly: Beholde the heyre of the realine is robbed of his right, and the robber with hys awne will not redeeme him. And nowe the Percies disposed and bent themselves in all that they mught vtterly to depose king Henry, and to restore theyr Cossyn Edmond Erle of Marche vnto the Crowne and Diademe of the The Lorde Perrealme, whome they shortly after not onely deliuered out of the Captiuitie of Owen cey& his brother redeme Edmond Glendor, but also entred into a league and amitie with the sayde Owen agaynst King Mortimer Erle Henrie and all his friendes, to the great displeasure and long vnquietyng of Kyng Henry of March and pay his rausome.

And here sayth Hall, that the aforesayd Owen Glendor, and the Erle of Marche, and the Percyes were greatly abused and deceyued by a Welshe Prophecier, who made them to beleve, that king Henrye was the Moldewarpe curssed of Gods awne mouth, and that they three were the Dragon, the Lyon, and the Wolfe, which should deuide this realme betwene them by the prophecie of Mawmet Marlyn: But in the ende all turned to their confusion and destruction, and specially of Owen Glendor, and the Lord Percey: For the Erle of March was euer kept in the Court vnder such a keper, that he could neyther do, nor attempt any thing agaynst the king, without his knowledge, and dyed without Edmonde Morissue, leauyng his right title and interest to Anne his sister and heyre, maryed to Rychard timer Erle of March dyed against king Henry. Erle of Cambridge father to the Duke of Yorke, whose ofspring in continuance of tyme obteyned the game, and gat the garland.

King Henrye nowe knowyng of this Confederacie, and nothing lesse mindyng then that which hapned after, gathered a great armie to go againe into Wales, whereof the Erle of Northumberland and his sonne were aduertised by Lord Thomas Erle of Worcester, and with all the diligence that they could, raysed all the power that they could make, and sent to the Scots which before were taken prisoners for ayde of men, and promisyng the Erle Douglas the towne of Barwike, and a parte of Northumberland, and to other Scottishe Lordes great Lordships and Seigniories, if they obteyned the vpper hand and superioritie. The Scottes allored with desyre of gaine, and for no malice that they bare to king Henry, but yet somewhat desirous to be reuenged of theyr olde griefes, came to the Erle with a great companie: And to make their cause to seeme good and just, they deuysed certeyne Articles by the aduyse of Richarde Scrope Archebishoppe of Yorke, brother to the Lord Scrope, whome King Henry caused to be behedded at Bristow, as you have heard before: which Articles they shewed to dyuerse noble men and Prelates of the realme, which fauouring and consentyng to the purpose, promised them ayde, not onely by wordes, but also by writing. Howbeit, whether it were for feare, either for that they would be lookers on, and no deede doers, neyther promise by worde nor by writyng was performed: For at the day of conflict all the confederates absented them selues, and left the Erle of Stafford alone, which beyng of a haute courage and hie stomacke kept his promise, and iovned with the Percies to his destruction.

The Lord Percey, with the Erle Douglas, & other the Erles of Scotland, with a great armie departed out of the North partes, leauyng hys father sicke (which promised vpon his amendment and recouerie, without delay to followe) and came to Stafford, where his Vncle the Erle of Worcester and he met, and there began to consult vpon their great affayres, and there also they exhorted theyr Souldiours to spare no trauaile for the libertie of theyr Countrie, protestyng openly that they made warre onely to restore the noble realme of England to his accustomed glory and freedome, which was gouerned by a tyraunt, and not by his lawfull and right king. The Capteynes sware, and the Souldiours promised to fight, yea and to dye for the libertie of their Countrie.

When all thinges were prepared, they set forward towarde Wales, lokyng every house for new ayde and succours. The king heryng of the Erles approchyng, thought it pollecy to encounter with them before that the Welsh men should ioyne with their armie, and therefore returned sodeinlye to the towne of Shrewesburie. He was scantly entred into the towne, but he was by hys Postes advertised that the Erles with Baners displayed, and battails raunged, were commyng towarde him, and were so hote and courageous, that they with light horses began to skirmish with his hoste. The King perceiving theyr doynges, issued out and encamped himselfe without the East gate of the towne. The Erles nothing abashed, although their succors them deceyved, embattayled themselves not farre from the Kinges armie. And the same night they sent the Articles, whereof is mencion made before, by Thomas Kayton, and Thomas Saluayn Esquiers, to the king, the true Copve whereof, as sayth Hall, doth followe.

I We Henry Percie Erle of Northumberlande, high Constable of England, and Warden of the west Marches of the same toward Scotland, Henry Percie oure eldest sonne Wardeyn of the East Marches of Englande towarde Scotland, and Thomas Percie Erle of Worcester beyng Proctours and protectours of the common weale, before our Lorde Iesus Christ oure supreme iudge, doe allege, say, and entend to proue with our handes personally this daye, agaynst thee Henry Duke of Lancaster, thy complices and fauourers, vniustly presuming, and named king of Englande, without title of right, but onely of thy guyle and by force of thy helpers: That when thou after thine exile diddest enter into Englande, thou madest an othe to vs vpon the holy Gospelles, bodely touched and kyssed by thee at Dankaster, that thou wouldest neuer claime the crowne, kingdome, nor state

Thou hast imprisoned the same thy souereigne Lorde, and our king within the Tower of London vntill he had for feare of death resigned his kingdomes of Englande and Fraunce, and had renounced all his right, in the aforesayde kingdomes, and other his dominions and landes of beyond the sea. Vnder colour of which resignation and renunciation by the counsayle of thy friends and complices, and by the open noysing of the raskall people, by thee and thine adherents assembled at Westmynster, thou hast crowned thy selfe of the realmes aforesayde, and hast seazed and entered into all the Castels and Lordships perteyning to the kings crowne, contrarie to thine othe, wherfore thou art forsworne & false.

2 Also we doe allege, saye and entend to prooue, that where thou sworest vpon the same Gospels in the same place and time to vs, that thou wouldest not suffer any dismes to be leuyed of the clergie, nor fiftenes on the people, nor any other tallages nor taxes to be leuyed in the realme of Englande, to the behofe of the realme during thy lyfe, but by the consideration of the three estates of the realme, except for great neede in causes of importaunce or for the resistaunce of our enemies, onely, and none otherwise. Thou contrary to thine othe so made, hast done to be leuied right many dismes and fiftenes and other impositions and tallages, as well of the Clergie, as of the commonaltie of the realme of England, and of the Marchaunts, for feare of thy Maiestie royall, wherefore thou art periured and false.

3 Also we doe allege, saye and entend to proue, that where thou sworest to vs vpon the same Gospels in the aforesayde place and time, that our souereigne Lorde and thine, king Richard should reigne during the terme of his lyfe in his royall prerogative and dignitie: Thou hast caused the same our souereigne Lorde and thine, traytorously wythin the Castell of Pomffret, without the consent or judgement of the Lordes of the Realme, by the space of xv. dayes, and so many nightes (which is horrible among christian people to be heard) with hunger, thirst and colde to perishe, to be murdered, wherfore thou art periured and false.

4 Also we doe allege, saye and entende to prooue, that thou at that tyme when our sourceigne Lord and thine, King Richard was so by that horrible murder dead as aboue-sayde, thou by extorte power diddest vsurpe, and take the kingdome of Englande, and the name, and the honour of the kingdome of Fraunce vniustly and wrongfully, contrary to thine othe from Edmonde Mortymer Erle of Marche, and of Vister, then nexte and direct heyre of Englande and of Fraunce, immediately by due course of inheritaunce after the decease of the aforesayde Richarde, wherefore thou art periured & false.

5 Also we doe allege, saye and entend to proue, as aforesayde, that where thou madest an othe in the same place and time to support and maintayne the lawes and good customes of the realme of Englande: And also afterward at the time of thy coronation, thou madest an othe, the sayd lawes and good customes to keepe, and conserve inviolate. Thou fraudulently and contrarie to the lawe of England and thy fautours, have written almost thorough every shyre in Englande to chose such knightes for to holde a parliament, as shall be for thy pleasure and purpose, so that in thy parliamentes no iustice should be ministred against thy minde in these our complaynts now moved & shewed by vs, whereby at any time we might have perfite redresse: Notwithstanding that we according to our conscience (as we trust ruled by God) have oftentimes thereof complayned, as well can testifie and beare witnesse the right reverend fathers in God, Thomas Arondell Archbishop of Cauntorbury, and Richard Scrope Archebishop of Yorke: wherefore nowe by force and strength of hand before our Lorde Iesu Christ, we must aske our remedy and helpe.

en fielde, and cast into prison, and laden with Yron fetters for thy matter and causes whom falsely thou hast proclaymed willingly to yeelde himselfe prisoner to the sayd Owen Glendor, and neyther wouldest delyuer him thy selfe, nor yet suffer vs his kinsmen to raunsome and delyuer him: yet notwithstanding, we have not onely concluded and agreed with the same Owen for his raunsome at our proper charges and expenses, but also for a peace betweene thee, and the sayde Owen. Why hast thou then not onely published and declared vs as traytors, but also craftely and deceitfully imagined, purposed and conspired the vtter destruction and confusion of our persons? For the which cause we defie thee, thy ayders and helpers as common Traitors and destroyers of the realme, and the Inuadours, oppressours and confounders of the very true and right heyres to the crowne of Englande, which thing we entende with our handes to proue thys daye, almightic God helping vs.

The kinges nunswere to the Lordes articles. When king Henry had read their articles and defiaunce, he aunswered the Esquiers, that he was readie with dent of sworde and fierce battayle, to proue their quarell false and feyned, and not with wryting and slaunderous bylles, and so in his righteous cause and iust quarel, he doubted not but God would both ayde and assist him agaynst vntrue persons, and false forsworne traytors, with which aunswere the messengers departed.

The battaile of Shrewsburye.

The next daye in the morning early, which was the Euen of Marye Magdalen, the king perceaued that the battayle was neerer then he eyther thought or loked for, therefore least long taryeng might minish or hinder his strength, he did with all speede set his battayles in good order: and lykewise did his enimies, which both in puissaunce and courage was nothing to hym inferior. Then sodainely the Trumpets blewe, and foorthwith the battayles ioyned. The Scottes which had the forward on the Lordes syde, entending to be reuenged of their olde displeasures, done to them by the Englishe nation, set fiercely on the kings foreward, that they made them draw back, and had almost put them out of their araye. The Welshmen also, which sith the kings departure out of Wales, had lurcked and lyen in woodes and Mountaynes, hearyng of thys battayle toward, came to the ayde of the Erles, and refreshed the werie people with newe succours. When a fearefull messenger had declared to the king that his people were beaten downe on euerye syde, it was no neede to bidde him sturre, for sodainely he approched with his freshe battayle, and comforted, hartened and encouraged his parte so, that they toke their hartes to them, and manfully fought with their enimies. The Prince that daye holpe much his father, for although he were that daye sore wounded in the face with an arrow, yet he never ceassed cither to fight wher the battayle was most strongest, or to encourage them who seemed to him to faynt. Thys sore and fierce battayle continued three long houres with indifferent fortune on both parts: but at the last the king cryeng victory, brake the array, and entered into the battayle of his enemies, and fought fiercely, and entered so farre into the battayle, that the Lorde Douglas strake him downe, and slue Syr Walter Blunt, and three other apparelled in the kings sute and clothing, saying: I maruell to see so many kings to arise so sodainely agayne, but sone after the king was reysed agayne, and that daye he did many a Noble feate of armes. For the Scottes write, and Frenche men also, though the Englishmen keepe sylence, that he himselfe slue with his awne handes that daye. xxxvj. of his enimies, and the other of his parte encouraged by his doings fought valyauntly, and slue the Lorde Percy called Sir Henry Hotspurre, the best Captaine on the parte aduerse, and when his death was knowne, they fled and happie was he that was formost. And in that flight the Erle Douglas fallyng from the cragge of a Mountayne brake one of his stones, and so was taken, and for his valyauntnesse was of the king freely and frankely deliuered. There was taken also Sir Thomas Percy Erle of Worcester and dyuers other. On the kings parte were slaine Sir Walter Blont, and. xvj. hundreth other persons: But on the parte of the rebels were slayne the Erle of Stafford, the Lorde Percy, and aboue. v. thousand other, and as for the Scottes fewe or none escaped alvue.

Sir Henry Hotspurze is slayne.

The king obtayneth a great victory of his

After this great victory by the king obtained, he first rendred his humble and harty thanks

thanks to God almightie, & caused the Erle of Worcester the next morow after to be drawne hanged and quartered in the towne of Shrewsbury, and his head to be sent to London, and there set vpon a pole vpon London bridge, and the same time also were many moe Captaynes executed in the sayde place. And this being done, the king lyke a valyaunt Conquerour returned to London with great pompe, where he was by the Magistrates of the Citie most solemply receased, and joyfully welcommed. But here a little to returne, before his departure from Shrewesburie he not forgetting his enterprise agaynst Owen Glendor, sent into Wales with a great armie Prince Henry his eldest sonne agaynst the sayde Owen, and hys sedicious complices, which being dismayed and in a manner desperate of all comfort, by the reason of the kings late victorie, fled into desert places and solitarie Caues, where he receyued a finall rewarde, meete and prepared by Gods prouydence for such a rebell and sedicious seducer. For being destitute of all comfort, and dreading to shewe his face to any creature, lacking meate to sustaine nature, for pure hun- owen Glendor ger and lack of foode, miserably ended his wretched lyfe. Nowe after that the death of being forsaken of all people, Owen was knowne to the Prince, and that the Prince with little labour, and lesse losse dyed by hunger had tamed and brideled the furious rage of the wylde Welshmen, and had left Gouer- and famine. nours to rule and gouerne the countrie, he returned to his father with great honor and no small prayse.

The Erle of Northumberland heeryng of the ouerthrowe of hys brother and sonne, came of his awne free will to the kyng, excusyng himselfe as one neyther partie nor knowyng of theyr doyng nor enterpryse: The king neyther accused him, nor helde him excused, but dissembled the matter for two causes, one was, he had Barwike in his possession, which the king rather desyred to have by pollicy, then by force: The other was, that the Erle had his Castelles of Alnewyke, Warckworth, and other, fortefyed with Scottes, so that if the Erle were apprehended, all Northumberlande were in ieopardve to become Scottishe: For these causes the king gaue him fayre wordes, and let him depart home, where he continued in peace a while, but after rebelled as ye shall here.

And in this tyme, at the charges of the Citie of London, where before there was a The buylding of certeine prison in Cornehill called the Tonne, they nowe buylded in the same place a fayre the Conduit in Cornehill.

Conduyt, which at this day is called the Conduyt in Cornehyll.

This yere Walteram Erle of Saint Paule, considering that he had defied king Henrye, and also that he had made dynerse voyages, and done little dammage to the Englishe Nation, but had susteyned much losse, and yet continuyng in hys olde malice agaynst the Waleram Erle of king of England, by the assent of the French King, assembled a great number of men againe assayleth of warre, as fine hundred men of armes, fine hundred Genowayes with Crosbowes, and king Henry the a thousande Flemynges on foote, and layde siege to the Castell of Marke, three Leagues from Calice, within the territorie of the king of England, the. xvj. day of July, whereof was Capteine Sir Philip Hall, with. lxxx. Archers, and. xxiiij. other Souldiours. The Erle raysed agaynst the Castell dyuers engynes, but they preuayled not, for they within shotte so fiercely, and cast stones so incessantly, and defended the same so manfullye. that they preuayled not at that tyme. And the Erle perceining that his enterprise had not such successe as he looked for, retyred with his men lodged in the towne, forteflyng the same for feare of rescues that might issue from Calice. The next day he gave a sore assault again, & with great force entered the vtter Court, of the Castell & toke therein a great number of horse, Kyne and Cattaile, at the which assault sir Robert Barynguile, cossyn to the Erle, was slain. The same day an hundreth Archers on horsebacke came out of Calice, and perceived the doynges and demeanour of the Erle and his companie, and toward night they sent an Herauld vnto him, certefiyng that they would dyne with him the nexte daye: To whome he proudly aunswered, that he would gladly receyue them, and theyr dinner agaynst theyr commyng shoulde bee ready prepared.

The next day ensuying issued out of Calice two hundreth men of armes, two hundreth Archers, three hundreth men on foote, with, x, or. xij. Chariots laden with victuall and Artillery,

Artillery, conducted by Sir Richard Aston knight, Lieutenant of the Englishe pale for the Erle of Somerset, Captaine generall of those Marches, which in good order of battaile marched toward their enemies, which before by their espialles were advertised of their commyng: But that notwithstandyng, they issued not out of their lodgynges to encounter with them, but kept themselves within their Closure.

The French fited.

The Englishe men shot so closely and so sharpely together, that the Flemvinges and footemen began to flie: The men of Armes fearyng the slaughter of theyr horses, ran away with a light galolp: The Genowayes which had spent the most part of their shot at the assault, made little defence, and small resistance, and so were all slaine and put to flight. The hastie and rashe Erle of Saint Paule, and dyuerse other without stroke geuen to their enemies, fled to Saint Omers: And there were taken of the best of the armie, as sayth the Frenche and Duche Chronicles, lx. or. lxxx. persons, amongest whome the Capteyn of Bulleyn was one, and many Lordes and knightes slaine. After that the Englishe men had taken all the Cartes, Munitions, and victualles that their enemyes had brought thether, they returned to Calice in great triumph: And within fine dayes after, there issued out of the English pale about the number of fine hundreth men, toward Arde by night tyme, thinkyng to have found the towne vnprouided: But Sir Mansard de Boys, and the Lord Kygnie defended it, and disappointed the Englishe men, who with the losse of fortie men, returned to Calice: Which dead persons were brent in an olde house, because their enemies should be ignorant of the dammage that the Englishe men had by them susteyned.

The Erle of Saint Paule beyng at Turwyn, and yet imaginyng in some part, or by some way to be reuenged of the Englishe men, and to recouer some part of his losse, but more of his honour, sent for a great companie of Noble men, and valiaunt personages, and concluded to inuade the Marches of his enemyes. But the French king considering the Erles euill fortune, commaunded him to leaue off his enterprice, with the which he was sore displeased. Yet to aduoyde perilles, the French king layde in Garrison at Bulleyn and other places, the Marques of Pount, sonne to the Duke of Barre, and the Erle of Dampney, and Sir Iohn Harpadane, a knight of great renowne and high estimation.

The king of England circumspectly fore seeying thinges to come, and imaging that the Frenche men attempted some newe enterprice agaynst him, or his Dominions beyond the Sea, sent foure thousand men to Calice, and to the Sea, whereof three thousand landed at Scluse, which besieged a Castell standyng in the mouth of the Hauen, and made dyuerse assaultes, and lost diverse of their companie: But newes were brought to them, that the Duke of Burgoyne had desyred lycence of the Frenchc king to besiege the Towne of Calice, for which cause they raysed their siege, and went to the defence of Calice.

And this yere also sayth Reynulph, the Emperour of Constantinople, whose name, as some wryters call him, was Robert, came into Englande, onely to see the Countrie, and maners of the people thereof.

Plimmoth is spoiled by the French men.

And this yere the Lorde of Castell in Briteyn landed within a myle of Plymmoth, with a great companie, and lodged in the towne all that day and night, and the next day spoyled and robbed the sayde towne, and caryed away all that was therein, and returned againe into their Shippes.

Sone after this, Lewes Duke of Orleance, brother to the French king, a man of no lesse pride then of great courage, wrote his letters to king Hery, advertising him that he for the perfect loue which he bare to the noble feates of Chiualrie and Martiall actes, could inuent nothing more honourable nor laudable to them both, then to meete in the fielde, eche part with an hundred Knightes and Esquiers, all beyng Gentlemen, both of name and armes, armed and weaponed at all poyntes, to fight and combate to the yeldyng, and A Frenche brig euery person to whome God should send victorye, to have his prisoner, and him to raunsome at his pleasure, offering himselfe & his companie to come to his City of Angulesme, so that the king of England would come to the lands and borders of Burdeaux, and there defende his chalenge.

The

The King of England, which was as graue and wittie, as the Duke was hautie and The wise and courageous, wrote to him againe, that he not a little mused and more maruayled, that the graue aunswere Duke beyng sworne aswell to him, as to King Richard, to mainteyn the peace betweene his brother the Frenche king, and them concluded, and to that had set his signe and great seale, would nowe for vaineglorie, and vnder the colour of doyng of deedes of Armes, not onely violate the peace, and breake the amitie betwene them before concluded, but also geue an occasio of displeasure and ingratitude, by the which in conclusion might rise mortall warre, and deadly enemitie: affirming farther, that no king annoynted, of very dutie was euer bound to answere any chalenge, but to his pere of egall estate, & equiuolent dignitie. And that no Christian prince ought or should consent to warre or effusion of Christian blood, but onely for the defence of his realme, or for conquest of his right. or for the amplifying of Christes fayth, and Christian religion, and not for pride, worldly fame, and vaineglorie: And saiying further, that when oportunitie of tyme, and conuenient leysure serued, he would transfrete and passe the sea himselfe, with such companie as he thought most convenient, into his Countrie of Gascoyne, at which tyme the Duke, might set forward with his band, for the atteyning of honour, and accomplishing of his couragious desyre, promisyng in the word of a Prince, that he would not thence depart, vntill the Duke eyther by fulfillyng his awne desyre, or by singuler Combate betwene them two, onely for the aduoidyng of the effusion of Christian blood, should thinke himselfe satisfied and fully aunswered. Howbeit, at that time he beyng busied with weightie affayres, concerning the publike weale of his realme, could neyther appoint tyme nor place, protestyng that the deferryng of tyme was neither for disdeyne, nor yet for cowardnesse, but onely to abate the pride of him, which knowing not himselfe, nor fearing reproche. regarded not his othe, wrytyng nor seale.

To this aunswere the Duke of Orliaunce replyed, and king Henry rejoyned, the which doynges for the vnprincely tauntes conteyned in them, I thought mete to omit and passe

The Duke of Orleaunce not content with the king of England, assembled an army of The Duke of sixe thousand men, and entered into Guyan, and besieged the Towne of Vergie, whereof siegeth Vergie in was Capteyne Sir Robert Antelfielde a valyant knight, and an hardie Capteyne, hauyng Guyan. with him onely three hundreth Englishe men. The Duke almost every day assaulted the towne very fiercely, but they within the Towne couragiously defended the same. Insomuche that when they had lien there three monothes, and had lost many of his men, and gotten nothing, without honour or spoyle returned into Fraunce. After this, the Admirall of Briteyn, which was greatly enflamed and encouraged, because the last yere he had entered the Hauen of Plymmoth, and robbed and spoyled the towne, and afterward had taken certayne ships with Wine. And he being now accompanied with the Lorde Castell a valyaunt Baron of Briteyn, and having. xxx. sayle of shippes well furnished with artillerie, municion, and victualles, and. xij. hundreth men of armes, sayled from Saint Malos, and came before the towne of Dartmouth, and would haue landed, but by the force of the townes men, and men of the countrie, they were The Admiralt repulsed and put back: In which conflict the Lord of Castell with his two brethren, with discomfitted. foure hundreth other were slayne, and aboue two hundreth prisoners taken and raunsomed, whereof the Lord of Baqueuile high Marshall of Briteyn was one, which was brought to the king, and was afterward redeemed.

The Admirall being sory of thye infortunate enterprise, with much losse and no The Lorde Thomas Duke gavne returned hastely into his Countrey. King Henry being aduertised of this attempt, of Clarence. sent the Lorde Thomas his sonne, which after was Duke of Clarence, to the sea, with a great naule of Shippes, to the entent that eyther with battayle or spoyling or destroyeng of the Sea costes, both of Briteyn and of Fraunce, he might reuenge this injurie and invasion. And he sayling by the sea costes landed divers times, and brent townes and destroyed people without any pittie or mercie: And when he thought his quarell well reuenged, he sayled sayled toward England, and in his returning he encountred with two great Caricks of Geane, laden with riche merchaundise, betwene whome was a great conflict, and a bloudy battayle: But after long fighting the Englishmen preuayled, and brought both the Carickes into Camber before Rye, where one of them by misaduenture of fyre perished, to the losse and no gayne of both the parties.

Iohn Duke of Burgoyn would have besieved Calice, but he was forbidde by the french King. About this time, Iohn Duke of Burgoyn, which had long laboured, and nowe obteyned lycence to besiege the towne of Calice, preparyng Engynes, and all other Instruments necessarie for that purpose, assembled at Saint Omers sixe thousand men of armes. xv. hundred Crosbowes, and xij. thousande footemen. And now when all things were in a readinesse, and the whole armie assembled, he was by the Frenche king and his counsayle (who had some mistrust in hym) countermaunded and forbidden any further to proceede in that enterprise: For the which cause he conceaued such an hatred and deadly malice against the Duke of Orleaunce (whome he thought was the onely let and stop of his glorie and renowne) that he euer after, not onely stomaked and grudged agaynst him, but in the ende (as you shall here) brought him to death and finall destruction.

Wylliam Seile one of the murderers of the Duke of Glocester, taken and executed. And it so happened, that this vere one Wylliam Serle, whome some call Iohn Serle, beyng one of the murderers at Calice of the Duke of Glocester, was taken lurking in the Marches of Scotlande, and drawen on an Herdle from that place vp to London, and committed to the Tower, and then brought to Westmynster, and there he was also charged that he had bruted abroad that king Richard was alyue, and for these things was there arreigned, condempned, iudged, hanged, drawen, and quartered at Tyborne.

Iohn Erle of Northumberland
conspyreth against king Henry.

The Erle of Northumberland, of whome before is spoken, bearing no little hatred vnto King Henrie, for the death of his sonne Sir Henrie Hotspurre, and his brother the Erle of Worcester, as aforesayde, did daylie practise some meane to be reuenged therof, and now secretly he began to breake his minde to Richard Scrope Archebishop of Yorke, brother to Wylliam Lorde Scrope, high Treasorer of Englande, whome king Henry (as you have heard) behedded at Bristow, & with Thomas Mowbray Erle Marshall, sonne to Thomas Duke of Norffolke, for king Henryes cause before banished the realme of England, and with the Lordes, Hastynges, Fauconbridge, Bardolfe and dyuers other, which he knew to beare deadly hatred vnto King Henry. And after many meetings, and long consultations had, they finally did conclude and determine: that all they, their friends and Alies, wyth all their power should meete at Yorkeswolde at a daye appointed, and that the Erle of Northumberland should be Chiefetayne of the armie, who promised to bring with him a great number of Scottes.

The king hath knowledge of the conspiracie.

Thys conspiracie was not so secretly kept, nor so closely couered, but that the king had knowledge thereof, and was fully informed of the same: wherefore to preuent the time of their assembly, he with suche power as he could sodainely call together, marched with all speede into the North partes, and was there with all his hoste and power, before the Confederats heard any thing of his comming forward, and sodaynely he caused to be apprehended the Archebishoppe, the Erle Marshall, Syr John Lampley, and Sir Robert Plumpton. These persons were arreigned and atteinted of highe treason, and adiudged to die, and so on the Monday in the Whitson weke, all they without the Citie of Yorke were beheaded.

Diuers Lordes appreheded and executed.

And here I finde written in an auncyent historie, that after the taking of the Archebishop of Yorke, that the Archebishop of Cauntorbury, called Thomas Arondell came vnto the king and sayd, Sir if the Bishop of Yorke haue so greatly offended you as it is sayd, yet I pray you consider that I am your ghostly father, and the second person in your realme, & that you ought not to hearken to anye mans voyce before me: wherefore I counsayle you reserve the payne and punishment of the sayde Bishop to the Popes iudgement, and he will take suche order as ye shall be pleased. And if you will not so doe, yet let him be referred to the parliament, and keepe your handes vndefiled from his bloud. The king answered: I may not staye him for the rumour of the people. Then were behedded at Durham.

Beside the persons aforenamed, dyuers other of the sayde conspiracie, as the Lorde Hastyngs, the Lorde Fauconbridge, Sir Iohn Coluile of the Dale, and Sir Iohn Griffith

The Erle of Northumberland perceauing his counsayle to be reveled, and his confede-The Este of rates put to shamefull execution, fled into Scotland to hys olde friend George of Dun-Morthüberland barre Erle of Marche, which the yere before was reuoked out of exile, and restored to land. his possessions, name, and dignitie, where he taried vntill the next Sommer, and then sayled into Fraunce, and after into Flaunders, desyring ayde and assistaunce agaynst king Henry: But when he sawe little hope of comfort, and that fewe hearkened to his request, he accompanied with the Lorde Bardolph much dismayed, and more desperate, returned againe to his true friends into Scotland, and there made his abode the whole yere, abyding the favour of fortune: Duryng which tyme, the king without any difficultie tooke into his possession the towne of Berwike, the Castels of Alnewike, and all other Fortresses apperteyning to the Erle. And lyeng at Berwike, he caused to be put to death the Barons sonne of Greystock, Sir Henry Beynton, and Iohn Blenkensop, and fyue other, as offenders in this conspiracie.

Nowe when king Henry had thus appeased this late conspiracy, he sent his sonne the The Prince of Wales entreth prince of Wales, accompanied with Edward Duke of Yorke, and a great armie with him, with a power to encounter with the Scottes, which by promise were bounde to ayde and assist the afore-into Scotland sayde Conspirators: But they hearyng that the founders of the warre were apprehended and put to death, made no haste forward, but taried peaceably at home. So that the Prince entring into Scotlande, and fynding no resistence, brent Townes, spoyled Villages. and wasted the Countrey euery where as he passed: which thing so much amased the king of Scots and his counsaile, y notwithstanding that he had gathered & appoynted a great host vnder the Conductes of the Erles of Douglas, and Bowhan to resist the prince and his inuasions: yet they sent Ambassadors vnto him, requyring him of peace and finall concord: which request he vtterly denayed, but at their humble peticion a truce for certaine Moneths was taken, of the which they were both glad and joyous, and so the prince laden with pray & spoyle, returned with great gaine to his father.

Whyle the prince persecuted thus the country of Scotland on the land, Sir Robert Vmfreuyle Vice Admirall of England vexed the Countries of Fiffe, and Loghdian on the Sea. coast, for he lyeng in the Scottishe Sea xiiii. dayes, and every day landed on the one side or other and tooke prayes, spoyles and prisoners maugre the great powers of the Duke of Albany, and the Erle of Douglas: in so much that he brent and tooke the towne of Peples on their fayre day; and with great gaine returning to his shippes, brent the Galiot of Scotlande with many other Vessels, and sent cloth, victuall and dyuers marchaundizes to to every towne in Northumberlande, setting thereon no great price, wherfore the Scots Robyn Mend-called him Robin Mendmarket.

The king about this time was newly vexed and vnquieted, for notwithstanding the fortunate successe that he had obteyned in all his outwarde warres and inward affayres, yet some of his people bare vnto him such cancard heartes, that still they practised his destruction: For nowe was a newe rumour spread abroade that king Richard was alvue once A newe rumour agayne, and that he was in Scotland: To the which fable, suche credite was geuen, chard was alyue. that if prudent pollicie had not foreseene the daunger thereof, it had kindled a greater flame then would have bene eyther easely or quickly quenched.

This Sommer the plague of pestilence reigned so sore in the Citie of London, and in the countrie also rounde about the Citie, that the king durst not repayre thether. Wherefore he departing from the Castell of Ledes in Kent, determined to take shipping at Agreat pesti-Quynborough, and to sayle ouer to Lye in Essex, and so to Plasshy, there to passe hys in London. time vntill the plague were cessed: And because certayne Pirates of Fraunce were lurck-

ing at the Thames mouth wayting for their praye: Thomas Lorde Camoys with certaine shippes of warre was appoynted to waft ouer the Kyng. When the Kyng was on the Sea, and in the middest of his iourney, whether the winde turned, or that the Lorde Camovs kept not a direct coursse, or that his shippe was but a slugge. The French men, which by all similitude had knowledge of the kings passage, entered amongest the kings Nauie, and tooke foure Vessels next vnto the kings ship, and in one of them, Sir Thomas Rampston Knight the kings Vice Chamberleyn, with all his Chamber stuffe and apparell, and followed the king so neere, that if his Ship had not beene swift, he had landed sooner in Fraunce, then in Essex. The king being sore moued with the Lorde Camoys, caused him to be attached and endited, that he condiscended and agreed with the French men, that the king in his journey should be intercepted and taken. On this poynt be was arreigned the last day of October, before Edmond Erle of Kent that daye high Stuarde of the Realme, on which daye he was adjudged by his Peeres not giltie, and was dismissed at the barre, and restored to all his lands, goods & offices.

In this yere king Henrye, not onely desirying newe affinitie with foreyn Princes, but also the preferment of his lyne and progenie, sente the Ladie Philip his yonger daughter to Erick king of Denmarke, Norway, & Swethen, which was conveyed thether with great pompe, and there with muche tryumph was solemply maryed to the sayde king, where shee tasted both of welth and wo, ioy and paine.

This yere Rochester Bridge was begon to be buylded of stone, and the same together with the Chapell standyng at the ende of the same, was finished by Sir Robert Knolles knight, who also newly reedefyed the bodie of the Church of the white Friers in Fletestrete in Lodon, & there was buried.

The Ambicious minde of the Duke of Albanie.

The Duke of Albanie cruelly murdered the Prince of Scotland.

You heard before howe king Robert of Scotland, beyng very aged and impotent, was not able to gouerne and rule his realme, and howe Walter his brother, beyng by him created Duke of Albanie (which was the fyrst Duke that euer was in Scotlande) was made Gouernour of his brothers Countrie and Dominion. After which office and preheminence by him obteyned, he so sore thirsted after the Crowne and Scepter royall, that he cared little though the king his brother & his two sonnes had beene at Christes fote in heaven. And somewhat to further his purpose, it vnfortunately chaunced, that Dauy of Rothsay Prince of the realme, and eldest sonne to the king was accused to his father of diverse and sundry crimes, and especially of wanton and dissolute liuyng, as rauishyng of wyues, deflowryng of Virgines, and defilyng of maydens: wherefore the king delivered him to his brother the gouernour, trustyng that by his good counsaile, and discrete advertisement. he would not onely amend his lyfe, but also waxe graue, prudent, and wise. the Duke had possessed part of his desyred pray, he sent his Nephewe from Castell to Castell, from prison to prison, from place to place, and in conclusion lodged him in a Towre within the Castell of Franklande, where with famine he caused him miserably to ende his lyfe, puttyng a poore woman to painefull death, which gaue to the Prince the milke of her brestes by a Rede into the prison. His death was long hidden from the king his father: But in conclusion the Gouernour shewed vnto the king, how dyuerse persons trayterously had murdered him, which were apprehended and judged to die, and yet in their lyues they neuer knewe nor sawe him. The King notwithstandyng his brothers excuse, doubted much of the ende of his other sonne named Iames, wherfore he privily prouided a ship, in the which he put the childe, beyng then of the age of. ix. yeres, vnder the tuition of the Lord Henry Seintclere, Erle of Orkeney, willyng him to conuey the prince into Fraunce, if by any possibilitie he could thether atteyne. And if fortune should drive him vpon the coast of England, he wrote his most gentle and louving letters vnto king Henry, the effect whereof were, that forasmuch as a truce was taken betwene them, and that in the same was conteyned, that all men conuciplying letters from the one of the kinges to the other shoulde surely and safely passe and repasse without any contradiction, and that therefore it would please him not to breake nor denie the sayde libertie to the bearer of his letter which was his only sonne, and to suffer him not onely to liue safely and surely under his protection and defence, but also to vouchesafe to preserue and defende him, beyng now the onely heyre of the kingdome of Scotland, from the malicious attemptes of his ambicious & cruel kindred.

Now all thinges beyng in a redynesse, the Mariners set forwarde and departed from Bas lames prince of Castle with this yong Prince, and Henry Percey, sonne to the Lord Percey, called Hotte- scotland by temspurre before slaine at Shrewsbury, and by force of tempest were driven vpon the coast of land in England. England in Holdernesse, at a place called Flamborough hed, the xxx. day of March, where the yong prince for to refreshe himselfe tooke land, and soone after he and all his companie were taken, and brought to the king at Windsore, where he with all due reuerence deliuered his fathers letter. When the letter was read and vnderstand, the king assembled his counsaile, to knowe what should be done with this noble infant. Some to whome the continual warres was odious and hatefull, affirmed that there could not happen a more surer or better occasion of peace between both the realmes, which beyng so offered, they would in no wise should be rejected but taken, considering that this Prince was sent thether in trust of safegarde, in hope of refuge, and in request of ayde and comfort against his enemyes and euill willers: But other (whose opinion tooke place) affirmed him to be a prisoner, and so to be ordered, forasmuche as he was taken, the warre beying open, and that his father did not onely maintein the Erle of Northumberland and other rebelles within his Countrie, and gaue them great honoures, but also sent a great number of his Nobilitie agaynst the king at the battail of Shrewsbury: Wherfore it was agreed that he Iames prince of Scotland is taken should be deteyned as a prisoner lawfully taken, and duely apprehended.

When newes of this definitive sentence was shewed to his father, he tooke suche an inward conceipt, that it cost him his life within a fewe Monethes after. And although the takyng of this Prince was at the first tyme displeasant vnto the realme of Scotland: yet surely, after, he and all his region had great cause to reioyce, and thanke God of that fortunate chaunce. For where before that tyme the people of Scotland were rude and without good maners, and hauving little learning, and lesse good qualities, this Prince being. xviij. yeres prisoner within this realme, was so trayned and taught by his Schoolemaisters, which were appoynted to him onely by the kinges elemencie, that he not onely flourished in good learnyng and knoweledge, but also excelled in Martiall feates, Musicall instrumentes, Poeticall Artes, and liberall sciences. Insomuch that at his returne from Captiuitie, he furnished his realme both with good learning, and Ciuile pollicie, which before was barbarous, rude, and without all good maner.

This yere a worthie Citizen of London named Rychard Whittyngton Mercer and Al- Richarde Whitderman, was elected Maior of the sayde Citie, and bare that office three tymes: This tington Maior of London. worshipfull man so bestowed his goodes and substaunce to the honor of God, to the reliefe of the pore, and to the benefite of the comon weale, that he hath right well deserved to be regestred in the boke of fame. First he erected one house or Church in London, to be a house of prayer, and he named the same after his awne name Whittyngtons Col- whittington ledge, and so it remayneth to this day. And in the same Church, besyde certeine Priestes Colledge. and Clerkes, he placed a number of poore aged men and women, and buylded for them houses and lodgynges, and allowed vnto them Wood, Cole, Cloth, and weekly money, to their great reliefe and comfort. This man also at his awne costes, builded the Gate of London called Newgate, in the yere of our Lord. 1422 which before was a most vgly & Newgate. lothsome prison. Also he buylded more then the halfe of saint Bartholomewes Hospitall Saint Bartholoin west Smithfielde in London. Also he buylded of hard stone, the bewtifull Librarie in the gray Friers in London, now called Christes Hospitall, standyng in the North part of the Cloyster thereof, where in the wall his armes is grauen in stone. He also buylded for the ease of the Maior of London and his brethren, & of the worshipfull Citizens, at the solempne dayes of their assemblie, a Chapell adioining to the Guyldhall, to the entent Guyldehall Chathey should euer before they entred into any of theyr affayres, first to go into the Chapell, pell. and by prayer to call vpon God for his assistaunce. And in the ende joynyng on the South part of the sayde Chapell, he buylded for the Citie a Library of stone, for the custodie of their recordes and other bookes. He also buylded a great part of the East ende of the Guyldhall, besyde many other good workes that I knowe not. But among all other, I wil shewe vnto you one very notable, which I receiued credibly, by a writing of his awne hande, which also he willed to be fixed as a Scedule to his last will and testament, the contentes whereof was, that he willed and commaunded his Executors as they would aunswere before God at the day of the Resurrection of all fleshe, that if they found any debtor of his, that ought to him any money, that if he were not in their consciences well woorth three A glorious glasse tymes asmuch, and also out of the debt of other men, and well able to pay, that then they shoulde neuer demaund it, for he cleerely forgaue it, and that they should put no manin sute for any debt due to hym. Looke vpon thys ye Aldermen, for it is a glorious Glasse.

The Erle of Northumberland with a great power of the Scots returneth into England.

But nowe to returne to the story where we left. The Erle of Northumberland, which had bene in Fraunce and other Countries, to have gotten ayde agaynst king Henry, and missed of his purpose, did nowe put his whole confidence in the Scottes, and in especially in his olde friend George Erle of Marche, and so assembled a great power of the Scottishe Nation to inuade Northumberland, and recouered diverse of his awne Castelles and Seigniories to whome people without number dayly resorted. And he entending to be revenged of his olde griefes accompanied with the Lord Bardolfe, and dyuerse other Scottes, and Englishe men, entred into Yorkeshire, and there began to destroy and spoyle the Countrie.

The Erle of Northüberland taken & executed.

Whereof the king beyng aduertised, caused foorthwith a great army to be assembled: and marched toward his enemyes, but before the king came to Nottyngham, Raufe Rokesby Shirife of Yorkeshire, in the middest of February, with the power of the Country, sodeinly set on the Erle and his companie, at a place called Bramham Moore, where afterlong fight, the Erle, and the Lorde Bardolfe, and many other were taken and brought to-Yorke, and there executed, and their heddes sent to London.

Pirates.

After this, the king hauyng knowledge that dynerse Pirates were about the coast of England, prepared certeine Shippes well furnished wyth men, victuall, and municion, and in the beginning of Marche sent to the sea, Lord Edmond Holland Erle of Kent, as-Chefetaine of that Crewe. And when the Erle had searched all the coast of Fraunce, and had not founde one Pirate or Sea robber, he was advertised by his espialles, that they heryng of his army were gone back into the partes of Briteyne. Wherfore the sayd Erleentendyng to be revenged on them, made his course thether, and before his arrivall they had conveyed theyr shippes into the Hauens, so that he could not fight with them on the sea, wherfore he launched out his Boates, & with his lustie & hardie Souldiours toke land, The Citizens and hercely assaulted the towne of Briake standing upon the Sea syde. threwe out Dartes, cast stones, shot quarelles, and manfully defended their Walles. In the which conflict, the Erle receyued such a wounde in his head, that he departed out of this worlde the fift day after. The assaylantes nothing dismayde, but rather kindeled and set on fire with the death of their Capteyn, like men desperate, still continued and followed? Briske take and the assault of the towne, and by fine force entered into the same and set it on fyre, and slue all that made any resistance: And for lacke of a Capteyne, the men of warre laden with prayes and prisoners, returned againe into England.

The Erle of Kent slain at the siege of Briake.

Edmend Erle of Kent was well belowed of king Heary.

This Edmond Erle of Kent was in such fauour with King Henry, that he not alonely: advanced and promoted him to highe offices and dignities: But also by his meane, and no small cost, obteyned for him Lucie the eldest daughter, and one of the heyres of the Lorde Barnaby of Milleyn (brother to Lorde Galeace, whose sonne also called Galeace, murdering his Vncle Barnaby made himselfe first Duke of Milleyn:) For which mariage the Lorde Barnaby payde to the sayde Erle of Kent, an hundred thousand Duccates in the Church of saint Mary Ouereyes in Southwarke, at the day of the solemnitie of the sayde mariage, by Done Alphons of Caniola.

This Lucye, after the death of her husbande, by whome she had none issue, was moued by the king to mary hys bastard brother the Erle of Dorcet, a man very aged and euill visaged, whose person neyther satisfied her phantasie, nor whose face pleased her appeate, wherfore she preferring her awne minde more then the kinges desyre, delyghting in him which shoulde more satisfie her wanton desire, then gayne her any profite, for verye love tooke to husbande Henry Mortimer a goodly yong Esquire, and bewtifull Bacheler. For which cause the king was not onely with her displeased, but also for maryeng without his licence, he seassed and fined her at a great some of mony, which fine king Henry the fift both released and pardoned, and also made him knight and promoted him to great offices both in England and in Normandy, which Sir Henry had issue by this Ladye, Anne maryed to Sir Iohn Awbemond, mother to Elizabeth Candos, mother to Phillis maried to Sir Dauy Hall Captayne of Cane: She had also issue, Mary maried to Iohn Cheddur, and Lucy espoused to syr Iohn Cressy.

This yere happened a long and great frost, which continued. xv. wekes, and by reason A great frost, thereof dyed great numbers of sheepe and birdes.

About this time Iohn Duke of Burgoyn, a man of a quick wit, and of a haute courage, and desyrous of rule, beyng of great aucthoritie among the French nation, to whome civile discorde was more pleasant, then brotherly loue and friendship, beganne sore to murmour Variaunce beand grudge against Lewes Duke of Orleaunce, because that he was chiefe of the kings Duke of Burcounsayle, and ordred all things by his discretion for that the king his brother was (as you goyn and Lewes Duke of Orlehave heard) fallen into a Frensie, and therefore meddled in nothing. The Duke of Or-aunce. leaunce on the other side, being highly set up in pride, beganne to disdeyne and froune at the Duke of Burgoyn, because he perceaued that he aspired and gaped to have the supreme regiment in the publique affaires and weighty causes, thus the one would have no superiour, and the other would have no peere. This cankard disdeyne in short space grewe to suche a hate, that all the Realme of Fraunce was deuyded into Factions, the one parte fauouring the Duke of Orleaunce, & the other enclyning to the Duke of Burgoyn, which division had almost brought the realme of Fraunce to vtter ruine and confusion.

The French king being somewhat amended of his disease, heryng of the controuersiebetweene these two princes, sent for them both to Paris, where he openly and largely rebuked their pride and malice, in so much that the Nobilitie there present judged the displeasure between them was clerely forgeuen and forgotten. But high courages are not so sone abated, nor rooted malice will not so sone be plucked vp. For the Duke of Burgoyn still compassing the destruction of the Duke of Orleaunce, appointed a secrete friend called Raufe Actouile to bring his purpose to passe. This Raufe forgetting not his enterprise, assembled together a companye of suche persons as he most trusted, and as a Wolfe greedy of his praye, when the Duke of Orleaunce was comming from the courte, in the Lewes duke of night season, he fiercely set vpon him, and shamefully slue him.

When this murder was published, all people cryed vnto God for vengeaunce. The Duke of Burgoyn iustified this acte, by the mouth of Iohn Petit Doctour in divinitie, who wrested Scriptures and Doctors so farre out of course, that his iustification within fewe yeres after was by the whole Vniuersitie of Paris adjudged Heresie.

The French king least greater mischiefe might ensue, was inforced to cloake his inward affection, and to dissemble the matter, doubtyng least the Duke of Burgoyn, whose heart and haute courage he had good experience of before (if he should proceede agaynst him for his estill acte) woulde is yne and take part with the English nation against the realme of Fraunce. Wherefore after long consultation had by the entreatie of the king, and other Princes of the blood Royall, Charles Duke of Orleaunce, sonne to Duke Lewes lately murdered, and Iohn Duke of Burgoyn were reconciled, and brought to a feyned concorde and a faynt agreement, eche of them taking a corporall othe vpon the holy Euangelists, neuer after to disagree or renewe any displeasure for any thing before passed, but all this prevayled nothing.

For nowe the Duke of Orleannce perceaning the king his Vncle to beare with the Duke of Burgoyn, and to let the detestable murther of hys father so lightly passe ouer without payne or punishment, allyed and confederated himselfe with the Duke of Berry

Orleance is mur-

The Duke of Burgoyne sendeth to the king of England for myde.

The Duke of Burgoyn fearing the ende hereof (because there was a mocion of a mariage to be had betwene the prince of Wales and his daughter) was somewhat the bolder to sende to the king of England for ayde and succours against his enimies. King Henry no lesse foreseying then that which after ensued, which was that the discorde of these two great princes might turne his realme to great profite and honour, sent to the Duke of Burgoyn Thomas Erle of Arundell, Sir Gilbert Vmfreuyle Lorde of Kyne, Sir Robert Vinfreuyle, and syr Iohn Grey, with fine hundreth Archers, which toke shipping at Douer and landed at Sluce. When the Englishmen were arryued in Flaundyrs, the Duke of Burgoyn with the Englishmen and all his power roade daye and night vntill he came neere to Paris, and there the next daye after with harde fighting and courageous shooting, the Englishe men gate the bridge of Saint Clow, and so passed ouer the river of Sayne, and tooke and slue all the Souldyours, which the Duke of Orleaunce had there left in garrison to defend the bridge. Amongest whome Sir Mausard de Boyes a valyaunt Captayne was taken prisoner by the Englishmen, and highly raunsomed. But the Duke of Orleaunce and his companie, which were lyke to have bene compassed with their enimies, so that almost all their wayes of refuge were stopped and enclosed, in the night time made a bridge ouer the ryuer on the parte of saint Denyce streete, and so escaped and fled into the high Countries. And after this conflict the Duke of Burgoyn being nowe in his ruffe, and thinking no man eyther in aucthoritie or bloud equyualent to himselfe, and blynded with a Kall before his eyes, tooke vpon him the whole rule and gouernaunce of the realme, and ordered the king as pleased him, and not to the kings wyll, and thinking also that in so troublous a time he had vnknyt the knot of all ambiguities and doubtes, and therefore dismyssed the Englishmen genyng to them both heartie thanks and great rewardes, which doing king Henry much disalowed, consydering that he had sent awaye his defence before the great brunt of the warre were ouer passed and should have taken heede before what pollecie his enimies practised.

A parliamet at Westminster. Thomas Duke of Clarence. Iohn Duke of Bedford. Homffrey Duke of Gloucester. Thomas Duke of Exceter.

A bill preferred wnto the Parliament agaynst the possessions of the Clergie.

Thys yere sayth Reynulph, the King kept, and helde a great Iustes in Smithfielde in London, which contynued eyght dayes, and vnto the same came certayne Henowayes Gentlemen, and ranne with the Gentlemen of Englande, but the honor of that pastyme was genen to the Englishmen, although some of the strangers did very well.

King Henrie being nowe at quiet, and not troubled with ciuile dissension, nor warres in his realme, called his high Courte of Parliament, in the which after he had concluded dyuers actes meete and expedient for the publique wealth of his realme and people, he exalted and promoted his three younger sonnes to high honors, as Lorde Thomas to the Duchye of Clarence, Lorde Iohn to the Duchy of Bedfoord, and Lorde Homffrey to the Duchy of Gloucester, and Lorde Thomas his halfe brother Erle of Dorcet, he made Duke of Exceter: Howbeit some wryters saye that he was erected to that estate and dignitie by king Henry the fift, in the first yere of his reigne, which thing is not greatly materiall, considering he had none issue.

And this yere the commons of the realme put vp a Byll into the parliament house vnto the Lordes agaynst the clergie for the taking away of their temporalties, of the which Bill more shall be sayde in the seconde yere of King Henry the fift.

And thys yere the market house in the neyther ende of the poultrie in London, now called the Stockes, was buylded for the free sale of the foreyn Boocher, and of the foreyn Fishmonger.

In this meane while Iohn Duke of Burgoyn, which ruled the roste, and gouerned both king Charles the French king, and the whole realme, so much stomacked and enuyed the Duke of Orleaunce and his helpers, that he caused the Frenche king in person to arme himselfe against them and theyr adherentes, as traytors to him, and apparant enemies to the common weale, and sente dyuerse Capteynes to inuade theyr landes and territories in the Countryes of Poyters, and Angulesme, and other Seigniories apperteynyng and belongyng to the homage and obeysaunce of the Duchie of Acquiteyn and Guyan: Wherefore the Dukes of Orliaunce, and Berry, & Burbon, with theyr friendes and alves, seyng The Duke of that now theyr hope consisted in the king of Englande, sent to him Albert Awbemond, a Orleaunce seekman of no lesse learning than audacitie, who in the name of the Confederates offered cer-king of Eng-

teyne conditions, as ye shall heere. 1 First, the sayd Lordes offered that from thencefoorth they should expose and set forth their awne persons, finaunces and landes, to serue the king of England, his heyres and successors, whensoeuer they were requyred or called, in all just quarelles: which just quarelles, the king of England shal take to appertague to the Duchie of Guyan with the appurtenaunces, affyrmyng howe the sayd Duchie perteyneth, and ought to apperteyne, to him of right by lyneall heritage, and lawfull succession, manifesting from thenceforth. that they should not blemish nor spot their truth nor fidelitie to assist and ayde him, in the recoueryng the same Duchie.

2 Also the sayd Lordes offered theyr sonnes, daughters, nephewes, and neces, parentes and all their subjectes, to contract mariage according to the discretion of the king of England.

3 And they offered townes, Castelles, treasures, and generally all theyr goodes to avde the king, his heyres and successours for the defence of theyr rightes and quarelles, so that the bond of their allegiance might be saued, the which in an other secret appoyntment, they before had declared.

4 Also they offered to the king of England generally, all theyr friends, allyes, and well willers, to serue him in his quarell for the recourry of hys whole Duchie of Guyan.

5 Also to ceasse all fraude, the sayde Lordes recognised that they were redie to affirme the sayd Duchie of Guyan to belong to the king of England, in like and semblable wise, in libertie, and fraunchises, as euer any of the sayde kings predecessors helde or possessed the same.

6 Also the sayde Lordes knowledged, that all the townes, Castelles, and fortresses, that they had within the Duchie of Guyan, to holde them of the king of England, as of the very true Duke of Guyan, promising all service and homages after the best maner, that in such case might be.

7 Also they promised to deliuer vnto the king as muche as lay in them, all townes and Castelles apperteining to the royaltie and Seigniorie of England, which are in number. xx, townes and Castelles, and as to the regarde of other townes and fortresses which were not in their puyssaunce and seigniorie, they would helpe the king of England, his beyres and deputies to win them, with men in sufficient number at their proper expences and charges.

8 Also the king of England was agreed, that the Duke of Berry his true Vncle and Vassall, and the Duke of Orliaunce his subject and Vassall, and the Erle of Arminacke should holde of him by homage and fealtie, the landes and Seigniories hereafter following: that is to say, the Duke of Berry to holde onely the Countie of Pontiew, duryng his lyfe, and the Duke of Orliaunce to holde the Countie of Angulesme, duryng his life, and the Countie of Perigot for euer, and the Erle of Arminake to holde foure Castelles vpon certeine sureties and conditions, as by Indenture should be appoynted.

9 For the which offers, couenauntes, and agreementes, they affirmed that the king of England as Duke of Guyan, ought to defende and succour them agayest all men, as their very Lorde and souereigne, and not to conclude any treatie of league with the Duke of Burgoyn, his brethren, children, friendes or allyes.

10 Furthermore, the king of England ought to ayde the Lordes, as his true Vassals in all theyr just quarelles for recourryng of dammages, for injuryes to them wrongfully done.

11 Also

11 Also they required the king of England to send vnto them. viii. thousand men to ayde them agaynst the Duke of Burgoyn, which dayly provoked the French king to make open warre on them, theyr landes and seigniories, promisyng further to disbursse and pay all the costes and charges which the sayde armie of Englishe men should expend duryng their warre, which letter was written the, viij. day of May, in the yere of our Lorde afore mencioned.

The king graunteth to Orleaumcc.

¶ King Henrie louingly receyued, and gently entertayned this Messenger Albert, and avde ye Duke of when he had well debated and considered the case, he first detesting the abhominable murder of the late Duke of Orleaunce, and seing no justice ministered, nor no punishment done for so shamefull an act, hauving also an approued experience y the Duke of Burgoyn would kepe no lenger promise then he himselfe lusted. And secondarily, consideryng what large promises and offers these Princes had made vnto him, both greatly to his honour, and to the high profite and commoditie of his realme and subjectes, thought that he was bound by the office of a king to ayde and succour them, which cryed for iustice and could have none, and in especiall because they in that poynt beyng his subjectes and vassalles, ought to be defended in maintenaunce of his superioritie and seigniorie: Wherefore he louyngly promised them ayde and reliefe.

> The returne of the Messenger with this message was to them as pleasant, as is the deliueraunce of a Captiue from his sore imprisonment, or of a Marchant passing by the way, & beset with theues, when he is rescued by his friendes or companions. And not without cause, for the french king, not of his awne courage animated, but maliciously incensed by the Duke of Burgoyn, persecuted the faction of the Orliaunces from Citie to Citie, and from towne to towne, wich such power and extremitie, that they were both of force and necessitie compelled to repayre to the Citie of Bourges in Berry, and there to appoynt themselves eyther to render or defend.

Ye must vinderstand that Princes have sometyme Argus eyes, and Midas eares, for this feate was not so secretly wrought in Englande, but it was as apparantly spyed in Fraunce: Wherefore the Frenche kinges Counsaile sent the Erle of saint Paule, the olde cankard enemy to the English men, into the partes of Picardie, with xv. hundreth horsemen, and a great number of footemen, and he ordeyned certeyne of his men to geue assault to the towne of Guynes, while he lay in stale to waite for the reliefe that might come from Calice. The furious Frenche men brake a fewe olde Pales aboute poore mens Gardeynes of Guisnes: But the men of warrein the Castell shotte so fiercely, and cast out wildefyre in such aboundaunce, that the assaylants were faine to retyre. And so the Erle of Saint Paule which neuer wonne gaine, but lost honour at the Englishe mens handes, returned, not onely with the losse of his people, but defrauded of his desyred pray, and went to the towne of Saint Quintines.

The Englishmen

But to returne to the former historie, the French king in this meane while besieged the Citie of Bourges in Berry, wherein the Duke of Orleaunce and his company had fortefyed themselves. When the king of Englande was thereof advertised, he sent foorth his sonne Thomas Duke of Clarence, and Edward Duke of Yorke, with eight hundred horsemen, and nine thousand footemen, which landed in the Bay of Hogges in Normandy by saint Wast, in the territorie of Constantyne. The Englishmen swarmed lyke Bees rounde about the countrie, robbyng Marchaunts, spoyling husbandmen, and brennyng townes, and were ioyously receyued of the Erles of Alaunson and Richemond ayders of the Orlienciall parte.

The counsayle of Fraunce not wylling that the Englishmen shoulde joyne with the A French prace Dukes of Orleaunce and Berry or their complices, caused a common fame (although it were not true) to be spreade abroade, that there was a final peace concluded between the French French king and his Lords, which late were to him aduersaries. When this fable was noted to the Englishmen, which were by hastie iourneyes passed the ryuer of Leyre, they spoyled the towne and Monasterie of Beauliew, and wasted with fyre & sword the Countries of Tourayn and Mayne. Agaynst whom the Duke of Burgoyn sent the Lorde Rambures, with a great armie, which in shorte tyme was vanquished. The Dolphyn of Fraunce fearing the doings of the Englishmen, concluded a feyned peace between the A feyned peace Duke of Orleaunce and Burgoyn, and their adherents, so that the Duke of Orleaunce concluded. should without delaye dispatche out of the dominions of Fraunce all the Englishe armie. The Duke was not riche to pay, and the Englishmen were greedy to haue, insomuch as they marching toward Guyan in good order, what by sacking of townes, and what with raunsomming of riche persons gate great treasure and many good prayes. Besides this, to the ayde of the Duke of Orleaunce king Henry sent to Calice the Erles of Kent and Warwike with two thousand fighting men, which spoyled and defaced the Countie of Bullenoys, and brent the towne of Samer de boys, and tooke with assault the Fortresse of Russalt with dyners other.

The Duke of Orleaunce, which was daylie called vpon to dispatche the Englishmen out of Fraunce, came to the Duke of Clarence and his armie, rendring to them a thousande Gramercyes, and disburssed to them as much money as eyther he or his friendes might easely spare, and for nine thousand Frankes, which remayned vnpayde, he delyuered in gage his second brother Iohn Erle of Angulesme, which was Graundfather to Frauces, afterward Frenche king, and Sir Marcell of Bourgh, Sir Iohn of Samours, Sir Archibald of Villiers and dyuers other, which Erle long contynued in Englande as after

When this agreement was taken, the Dukes of Clarence and Yorke with great praye (riche prisoners and welthy hostages) came to Burdeaux, making warre on the Frontiers of Fraunce to their great gaine and profit. So by the onely commyng in of the English- The Englishe men into Fraunce, the Duke of Orleaunce was restored, not onely vnto peace and quiet- of Fraunce with nesse with all persons, sauyng the Duke of Burgoyn: But also fell into suche fauour with riche prayer. the king and the realme, that he was of all men welbeloued, much honored and highly esteemed, and so continued, vntill wauering fortune turned her variable wheele. For after this, he being enemic to the Englishe nation, was vanquished and taken prisoner, and so remayned in Englande aboue. xxiiij. yeres, vntill the flowre of his age was passed or sore blemished.

And thys yere the king abaced the coynes of Golde and Syluer, and caused the same The coyne to be curraunt in his realme at such value as before they had gone, where in deede the Noble was worse by foure pence, then the other was, and lykewise was the coynes of Siluer curraunt after the same rate.

And here I finde noted by certaine wryters, that thys yere the Thamys did flowe three Ebbyng and times in one daye, as though the same were matter worthye of a note, for the straungenesse flowyng why thereof: But if you consider the causes therof, then is it worthy of no note at all, for the sometimes. causes thereof are naturall, as great windes and tempestes that rise on the sea costes, which by violence drive the sea into the freshe Ryuers, more aboundauntly then the common course would, or else by lyke violence keepeth out the sea from the freshe ryuers, that it can not flowe at one houre so high and abundantly as the common course thereof is accustomed to doe, and it happeneth also many times by reason of abundaunce of rayne, which falleth of the lande, and filleth the ryuers, and so encreaseth the freshe waters, that the same meeting with the sea water entering into the ryuer, causeth the same to swell, and rise farre aboue the common course, and altereth the houres both of flowing and ebbyng. In lyke maner the tydes alter by reason of great and long frostes and Snowe that freeseth the ryuers and dyches in the land, which causeth short and mo tydes in fewer houres then hath bene accustomed, by reason the water is turned to Ise. And in lyke maner vpon a sodaine thawe, the floodes agayne encrease farre aboue the accustomed VOL. L.

Now after that these great and fortunate chaunces had happened to King Henry, he thinking that there could not a greater prayse be given to a king, then for the execution of his office, and the administration of justice, and entendyng to lyue in quietnesse, being nowe delyuered of all civile division, with the which almost all christendome was troubled, not onely to the decaye of Christes religion, and christian creatures, but to the greater aduauncement of Paynym princes, by the publishing and setting foorth of that counterfeat and false prophet Mahomet. And that the king would shew himselfe mindefull hereof, he called a great counsayle of the three estates of his Realme, in the which he deliberately consulted and concluded, as well for the politique gouernaunce of his realme. as also for the warre to be made agaynst the Infidels, and specially for the recourry of the Citie of Ierusalem, in the which warres he entended to ende his transitory life, and for that cause he prepared a great armie, and gathered much treasure, entendyng to set forwarde in the same spring time. But see the chaunce, whatsoeuer man intendeth, God sodainely reuerseth, what princes will, God will not, what we'thinke stable, God maketh mutable, whereby Salomons saying is found true: That the wisedome of men is but foolishnesse. before God. When this prince was thus furnished with treasure sufficient, with valiaunt Captaines and hardie Souldiours, with tall shippes furnished with victualles, municions and all things necessary for such a journey royall, he was taken with a sore and sodaine disease called an Apoplexie, of the which he languished untill his appounted houre. During which sicknesse, as some aucthors wryte, he caused the crowne to be set on the pillowe at his beddes head, and sodaynly his pangue so sore troubled hym, that he lay as though his breth and soule were departed from him, wherefore hys Chamberleynes couered his face with a lynnen cloth.

"The" description of king Henry the fourth.

The Prince his sonne being thereof aduertised, entered into the chamber, and tooke away the crowne and departed: The father being sodainely reuyued out of his traunce, quickly perceaued the lacke of his crowne, and having knowledge that the prince his sonne had possessed it, caused him to repayre to his presence, requyring of him to shew for what cause he had so misused himselfe. The prince with a good audacitie aunswered: syr, to mine and all mens judgements you seemed dead in this worlde, wherefore I as your next and apparaunt heyre tooke that as mine awne, and not as yours: Well fayre sonne sayde the king (with a great sigh) what right I had to it, & how I enjoyed it God knoweth. Well quod the prince, if you die king, I will have the Garlande, and trust to keepe it with the sworde against all mine enimies as you have done, well sayde the king, I commit all to God, and remember you to doc well, and with that turned himselfe in his bed. and shortly after departed vnto God in a Chamber of the Abbotes of Westminster called Ierusalem, the twentie daye of Marche. 1413. and in the yere of his age. xlvj. when he had reigned. xiij. yeres. v. moneths and odde dayes, in much trouble and little pleasure, whose body with all funerall pompe was conveyed to Cauntorbury and there solemply buryed, leauyng behinde him by the Lady Mary daughter to Lorde Homffrey Erle of Hereford king Henrie the and Northampton, Henry prince of Wales, Thomas Duke of Clarence, John Duke of Bedford, Homffrey Duke of Gloucester, Blanche Duchesse of Barre, and Phylip Queene. of Denmarke, for by hys last wyfe, Queene Iane, he had no children.

The king was of a meane stature, well proporcioned and formally compact, quick and delyuer, and of a stoute course. After that he had appeased all civill dissentions, he shewed himselfe so gently to bi men that he gat him more loue of the nobles in his later: dayes, then he had euill will of them in the beginning.

When tydings of hys death was brought vnto the Duke of Clarence, being then in Aquitayne, he then with all diligence toke ship with the Erle of Angulesme, and other his hostages and returned into England, to the great comfort of hys brethren.

HENRYE THE FIFT.

Enry Prince of Wales, sonne and heyre vnto king Henrie the fourth, borne at Monmouth on the River of Wye, after the death and buriall of his Noble father king Henry aforesayde, tooke vpon him the highe power and regiment of this realme of England the. xx. day of Marche. 1412, and was proclaymed king, by the name of king Henry the fift, and crowned at Westminster the. ix. day of Aprill next ensuying. And before the possession of the Crowne, dyuerse honorable and noble personages did to him homage, & fealtie (which before that time had not beene vsed) as vnto him of whom they had conceyued great hope and worthynesse of Gouernment.

This king, this man was he (which according to the olde prouerbe) declared and shewed that honourcs ought to chaunge maners, for incontinent after that he was placed in the siege royall, and had receyued the crowne and Scepter of this Noble Realme, he determined with himselfe to put on the shape of a newe man, and to vse a nother sort of liuyng, A Godly and turnyng insolencie and wildenesse into grauitie and sobernesse. And because he would wise Prince. so continue, and not be allured to the contrary by his olde familiars, who in the lyfe of his father, by their wantonnesse and entisyng caused him at one tyme to strike the Lorde chiefe Iustice in the face, for the which he was imprisoned, and also had the displeasure of his father, who removed him from being president of his counsaile, & placed therein his brother Thomas, Duke of Clarence, to his great griefe: he therefore, I say, detestyng a wanton and disorderly life, first banished from him all his olde wanton familiars & flatterers, (not vnrewarded, nor yet vnpreferred) forbiddyng them vpon a great paine, not once to approach nor come neere his speche or presence, by the space of ten myles. And in their places he elected and chose men of grauitie, of wisedom, and of high pollicie, by whose wisedome, and prudent counsaile he might at all tymes rule to his honour, and gouerne to the profite both of himselfe and of his common weale. This prince among all other, did very well remember and consider, that a king ought to be a ruler with wisedome and grauity, and to be both diligent and constant: Wherefore callyng his counsaylors together, first of all (as Hall sayth) he commaunded the Clergie sincerely and truely to preach the worde of God, and to live after the same. The laye men he willed to serue God, and obey their Prince, forbiddyng them aboue all thinges the brech of Matrimonie, the vse of swearyng and wilfull periurie. Besyde this he elected the best learned men in the lawes of the Realme, to the offices of iustice, and men of good liuyng he preferred to high degrees and aucthoritie. And callyng to remembraunce the madnesse of the Welshe men, and the falsehood and inconstancie of the Scottes (whose often incursions and robberyes he well had in his fathers dayes experimented and assayed) he studied to asswage and represse, to the entent that he beyng quyet in his awne regions, might eyther make outwarde warre without doubt or daunger, or else for the common weale of his realme studie howe to encrease the glorie of his seigniorie, and so to kepe and con-

When all thinges were thus setled and framed to his purpose, he caused the bodie of King Rychard in king Richard the seconde to be remoued, with all funerall pompes convenient for his estate, from Langley to Westminster, where he was honourably enterred with Queene Anne Westminster.

his first wife, in a solempne Tombe, erected and set vp at the costes and charges of this

Noble Prince King Henrie.

And although this noble prince had set and established all thinges beyng in difference and variaunce within his awne peculiar realmes and dominions: Yet the same tyme, beyng called to the counsaile of Constance, which is a Citie situate vpon the goodly ryuer of Rhyne, he sent thether Richard Erle of Warwike, and three Bishops, with other famous Prelates and Doctors besydes Knightes and Esquiers to the number of. viii, hundreth horse, At this Synode were assembled (as Hall saith) three hundreth, xlvj. Bishoppes, Abbottes, and Doctors. And of noble men five hundreth, lxiiij. And of Knightes and Esquiers. xvj. thousand, besydes seruauntes, which (not accomptying the townes men) were ac-compted. lxv. thousand persons.

These persons were highly received of the Emperour Sigismond, and of the Bishop of Rome called Iohn the. xxiij. which in the same counsaile as the sayde aucthor affirmeth, for great and abhominable crymes, and detestable offences by him committed (of the which he could not pourge himselfe, nor make any defence) was by the same Synode deposed. and of his estate depriued. Gregorie the. xij. beyng one of the Schismatical number, fearying shame more than regarding his worldly affection, deposed himselfe both from his name and Papall dignitie. But Benedict the. xiij. still and stifly affirmyng himselfe to be the Vicar of God, so much desyred honour, and somuche was wrapped in his awne lewde opinion, that neyther friend nor good counsaile could do any good with him, wherefore at the last, he was also deposed, and lost both his name and honestie. And within three yere after, Otho Columbe a noble Romaine borne, was elected Bishop of Rome, and named Martyn the fifth. And in this counsaile, Iohn Wicliffe English man, and therom of Prage. John Husse, and Therom of Prage Bohemians, were condempned of heresie, of whome ve may read more in the booke of Monuments of the Church.

And in this first yere, Sir Iohn Oldecastell, which by his wife was called Lorde Cobham, a valiaunt Captaine and an hardie Gentelman, was accused vnto the Archebishop of Cauntorbury of certeine poyntes of heresie: But for that I have not purposed in this Ilistoric to write of any matter that specially concerneth religion, I will therefore referre you to the booke of Monumentes of the Church, where the whole Historie of this Gentelman and many others is at large described and setfoorth. And in lyke maner followeth in the sayde booke, the whole historie of Sir Robert Actone, Browne, Beuerley, and dy-uerse other.

The King, for the honour of himselfe, and the advauncement of hys people, called this yere and the last day of Aprill, in the towne of Leycester his high Court of Parliament, in the which many good and profitable lawes were concluded, and many peticions moued, were for that tyme deferred. Among which petitions one was, that a bill exhibited in the. xi. yere of King Henry (as is mencioned before) which by reason that the King was then troubled with Civill dissention, came to none effect, might nowe be considered and regarded: the effect of which petition was, that the temporall lands deuoutly geuen, & disordinately spent by the religious, and other of the clergie, might suffice to mainteyne to the honour of the king, and defence of the realme, xv. Erles, xv. C. Knightes, vi. thousande, two hundreth Esquiers, and one hundreth almose houses, for the reliefe of the impotent and nedy persons, and the King to have cleerely into his Coffers, xx. thousand poundes, with many other prouisions and values of sundrie religious houses.

This before remembred bill (sayth Hall) much feared the religious, insomuch that fat Abbottes swet, the proude Priors frowned, the poore Friers cursed, the siely Nonnes wept, and all together were nothing pleased nor yet content: But to finde a remedie for a mischiefe, and a tent to stop a wounde, the Clergie practised to put into the kinges heade, the title that he had to the Crowne and Kingdome of Fraunce, and howe honourable it should be for him to trauaile for the recouerie thereof, and howe willyng all the good people of the realme woulde be to ayde him in that honourable enterprice. A bill moued in the Parliamet house against the Clergie.

day after in most solempne and learned maner, the Archebishop of Cantorbury, whose name then was Henry Chichley, made such an excellent Oration to moue, encourage, and perswade the king to take that voyage in hand, that nothing could be eyther more or better spoken. And when the Bishop had done, then the Nobilitie in like maner sayd to and fro their mindes, so that nowe there was vsed none other talke in every mannes mouth in the Parliament house, but for the conqueryng of Fraunce, and the bill against the Clergie was lulled a sleepe, and nothing came thereof. And so soone as this voyage was agreed vpon, the parliament brake vp.

The aforesayde parliament being nowe ended, the king sendeth a solempne Ambassade An Ambassade vnto the French king, to make his clayme vnto the crowne and kingdome of Fraunce, as sont fro the king his right and inheritaunce, or else to bid hym battayle, and to declare vnto him, that if the french king. he would not delyuer the same vnto him, that then he would trie his right by dent of sworde: The Ambassadors were these, the Duke of Excester and Erle of Dorcet the kings Vncle. The Lorde Grey Admirall of England, the Archebishop of Deuelyn, the Bishop of Norwiche, and they had attending upon them aboue five hundreth Horsse.

The French king receaued them very honorably, and sumpteously banqueted them, shewing to them goodly justes, and martiall pastimes, by the space of three dayes together, in the which Iustes the king himselfe to shew hys courage and activitie to the Eng-lishe men, brake Speares, and lustelye turneyed.

After this great triumph, the Englishe Ambassadours had accesse vnto the Frenche king The king of Englande clayme and declared their commission, which was to require of him to deliuer vnto the king of eth the crowne England the realme and crowne of Fraunce with the entier Duchies of Aquitaine, Nor- and realme of Fraunce, mandy and Aniowe, with the Countries of Poyteu and Mayne, and dyuerse other requestes, and offering also that if the French king would without warre or effusion of Christian bloud, render to the king their master his verye right and lawfull inheritaunce, that then he would be content to take in mariage the Lady Katheryn daughter vuto the French king, and to endue her with all the Duchye and countryes before rehersed. if he entended not so to doe, then the king of Englande did expresse and signific vnto him, that with the ayde of God, and helpe of his people he would recour his right and inheritaunce wrongfully withholden with mortall warre and dent of sworde.

The French king and his counsayle much amased at these demaundes, thinking them very vnreasonable, and yet not wylling to make any hastye aunswere in so great and weightie a matter, prayed the Englishe Ambassadours to say to the King their Master, by they having nowe no oportunitie to conclude in so highe a matter, would shortly sende Ambassadors into England, which should certifie and declare to the king their whole minde, purpose and answere.

The Englishe Ambassadours receyuing this for aunswere, tooke their leave of the French king, and returned into Englande, declarying vnto the king in order all that had benedone.

And at this time, as some writers reporte, the Dolphyn, who heering this message sent to the French king his father, and disdeyning the youth of King Henry, and thinking it The pride and disdainefulnesse was an enterprise farre vnmete for him to take in hande, did therefore in mockage sende of the Dolphyn to him a Tonne of Tennys balles to play with all, meaning that he had better skill in a of Fraunce. Tennys courte, and handling of a Ball, then in the martiall affayres of warre. But the King after he had receyued from the Dolphyn his former present, aunswered: that before he had ended with him and his father, he purposed by Gods ayde to tosse as many Balles of Yron with him, which y best racket he had should not be hable to resist nor returne. And forthwith, for that many French men were promoted within this realme to Ecclesiasticall dignities, and by reason thereof conueighed dyners sommes of money over into Fraunce, for the reliefe of their friends and Countrie men, the king therefore for the common weale of his realme and subjectes, ordeyned that no straunger hereafter should be. promoted to any spiritual degree or dignitic within this realme, without his speciall lycence and royall consent, and that all they that should so be admitted, should finde sufficient suretie not to disclose the secretes of this realme to any foreyn or straunge person. nor also to minister vnto them any ayde or succour with money, or by any other meane.

The king maketh a great prouision agaynst Fraunce.

And nowe with all speede he assembled a great puyssaunce and armie thorough all his dominions: And for the better furniture of his Nauie, he sent into Holand, Zelande, and Friselande to procure and hire Shippes for the conductyng and transporting ouer of his men and municions of warre: And finally, prouvded for armour, victuall, money, Artillery, cariages, Tentes, and other things necessarie for so high an enterprice, the which prouisions were soone blowen ouer and knowne in Fraunce. Wherefore the Dolphin, who had taken on him the gouernaunce of the realine, because his father was fallen again into his olde infirmitie, sent for the Dukes of Berry and Alaunson, and all the counsayle of Fraunce, to determine what should be done in so weightie a cause. And after long consultation it was agreed to assemble people thorough the whole realme of Fraunce to resist and repulse the king of England and his power whensouer he would arryue or set foote in Fraunce.

An Ambassade sent out of Fraunce to the

The charge of this Ambassade was committed vnto the Erle of Vandosme, to Mayster Wylliam Bouratier Archbyshop of Bourgues, and to the Bishop of Lyseux, to the Lorde of Yury and Braquemount, and to Master Gualtier Cole the kings Secretary and dyuers other. These Ambassadors accompanied with. CCCl. horse passed the sea at Calice, and landed at Douer, before whose arryuall the king was departed from Wyndsore to Winchester, entending to have gone to Southhampton, and there to have vewed his Nauie, but heering of the Ambassadors comming, targed still at Wynchester, where the sayde Frenche Lordes shewed themselves very honorably before the king and the No-And the king sitting under his cloth of estate in the Bishops hall, the sayde Ambassadours had accesse vnto him, where the Archebishop of Bourges made vnto him an eloquent Oration dissuading warre and praysing peace, offeryng to the king of Englande a great some of money, with dyners base and pore Coutries with the Lady Katheryn in mariage, so that he would dissolue his army, & dismisse his Souldiours which he had gathered and made ready.

> The oration being ended, the king caused the Ambassadors to be highly feasted, and set them at his awne table. And at a daye appoynted in the aforesayde hall, the Archebishop of Cauntorbury made to their oration a notable and learned aunswere: the effect whereof was, that if the French king would not geue with his daughter in mariage, the Duchies of Aquiteyn, Normandy, Aniowe and all other seigniories and dominions, sometime apperteyning to the Noble progenitors of the king of England, he would in no wise retire his armie nor breake his journey, but would with all diligence enter into the realme of Fraunce, with sworde and fyre, and not leave vntill he had recovered his auncient right and lawfull patrimony. The king auowed the Archebyshops saiyng, and in the worde of a prince promised to performe it to the vttermost.

A stowte and prowd bishop.

The Byshop of Bourges beyng in a chafe that his purpose tooke no better effect, prayed lycence and pardon of the king that he might speake, which being graunted vnto him, he very rudely and vnreuerently sayde vnto the king as followeth. Thinkest thou to put downe and destroy wrongfully the most christian king our most redoubted souereigne Lorde, and the most excellentest prince of all Christianitie, of bloud and preheminence? O king, sauving thine honor, thinkest thou that he hath offered or caused to be offered to thee lands, goodes, or other possessions with his awne daughter for feare of thee or thy English Nation, or of thy friendes or well willers? No, no, but of truth, he moued with pittie, as a louer of peace, to the intent that innocent bloud should not be dispersed abroade, hath made to thee these reasonable offers, putting his whole affiaunce in God most puyssaunt, according to right and reason, trustyng in hys quarell to be avded and supported supported by his faythfull and good subjects and his well wyllers. And syth we be subiectes and servaunts, we require thee to cause vs safely and surely without dammage to passe out of thy realme and dominions, and that thou wilte write thine aunswere wholy as thou hast genen it, and to seale the same wyth thy Seale.

The king of England nothing vexed nor vnquieted with the sayengs and proude bragges of the vnnurtered Archebishop, but well remembering the prouerbe of Salomon, that warres are to be taken in hande with discretion, and where many can geue counsayle there is victorie, therefore coldely and soberly he aunswered the Byshop, saying: My Lorde, The kinges discrete aunswere I little esteeme your French bragges, and lesse set by your power and strength, I knowe made to the biperfitely my right to your region, and except you will denie the apparaunt truth, so doe shop. you, and if you neyther doe nor will knowe, yet God and the worlde knoweth it. The power of your Master, you see daylie, but of my power ye haue not yet tasted, if your Master have louing friends and faythfull subjectes, God I thanke him I am not vnprouyded of the same: But this I saye vnto you, that before one yere passe, I trust to make the highest crowne in your Country to stoope, and the proudest Myter to knele downe: And saye this to the vsurper your Master, that within three Moneths I will enter into Fraunce, not as into his lande, but as into mine awne true and lawfull patrimonie, entendyng to conquer it, not with bragging words, nor flattering Orations, but by power and dent of sword by the ayde of God in whome is my whole confidence, and I assure you I will not speake that worde, the which I would not both write and subscribe, nevther would I subscribe to that which I would not wyllingly set to my seale, therefore your safe conduyt shall be to you delyuered with mine answere, and then you may departe surely and safely into your Countrie, where I trust sooner to visite you then that you shall haue cause to bid me welcome. With this aunswere the Ambassadors not a little greeued did shortly after departe, but not vnrewarded, and that very bountifully and liberally.

Nowe after the Frenche Ambassadors were departed, the king, as I sayde before, hauyng a great foresight and disposing all thinges in order, did not forget the olde condicions of the variable and inconstant Scottishe Nation, and therefore appoynted the Erle of Westmerland, the Lorde Scrope, the Baron of Greystroke, and Sir Robert Vmfreuile, with dyuerse other valiant Capteynes, to kepe the Marches ioynyng to Scotland. The which sir Robert Vmfreuile, on the day of Saint Mary Magdalene, entered vpon the Scottes at the towne of Gederyng, hauyng in his companie onely foure hundreth Englishe A skirmishe were after a long conflict and skirmishe he slue of his companies by and odds and withthe Scottes. men, where after a long conflict and skirmishe, he slue of his enemies. lx. and odde, and tooke prisoners. CCClx. and discomfited and put to flight a thousand and mo, whome he followed in chase. xij. myles, and so laden with prayes and prisoners, returned to the Castel of Rokesborough vnhurt, of the which Castell he was then Capteyne.

When the king had prepared all thinges mete for his journey, he then for the safegarde of the realme, leavyng behinde him the Queene his mother as Gouernour of the realme, departed to the towne of Southampton, and there purposed to take his shippyng. because he would not steale on the French king, but that he should have knowledge of his commyng, he therefore dispatched with speede Antelop his pursuyuant at armes, with Letters of defiance sent to letters of defyance: The which letters, when the French king and his counsaile had read, the freach king. and well considered, he made aunswere to the officer of armes, that he woulde prouide for his defence, and so lycenced the Messenger to departe at his pleasure.

Shortly after, the king beyng in a readinesse to advaunce forwarde, sodeinly, he was Certaine Lordes credibly informed, that Richard Erle of Cambridge, brother to Edward Duke of Yorke, treason. and Henry Lorde Scrope, and Sir Thomas Gray had conspired his death and vtter destruction, wherfore he caused them forthwith to be apprehended. And after these prisoners were examined, they not onely confessed the conspiracie, but also declared that for a great somme of money which they had receyued of the French king, they entended eyther to delyuer the king aliue into the handes of his enemyes, or else to murther him before that he should arrive in Normandie. When king Henry had all the truth opened vnto him, of the which he was not onely very desyrous, but also was most hartely sorie, and inwardly grieued that he should lose such valiaunt Capteynes, by whose ayde he might have been made the more dreadfull to his enemies: but nowe the matter beyng thus fallen out, the king assembled together all his nobilitie, and before them caused to be brought forth the aforcsayd three great offenders, and vnto them sayde as foloweth. I can not a little meruayle what should move you to devise or conspire my death, who hath loved you most derely, and to say truly vnto you, ye could not conspyre my death which am your heade and governour, but ye must also purpose the destruction of all that be here, and of all the people in this realme. And although some private Scorpion possessed your heartes, and heades to this great wickednesse, yet ye should nowe have forborne to have practised the same, so long as I was with mine armie, whome ye knowe can not continue without a Captein. But forasmuch as ye have purposed so great a mischiefe, and so abhominable a fact, and confessed the same, and also to the entent that your ayders beyng in the armie may abhorre so horrible an offence, ye shall receive the punishement and paine that the lawe hath appoynted for your demerites.

And the next day following, when these noble men were executed, the king sayde to his Lordes, se you not the mad imagination of men, which persecute me that dayly studie & vse my great trauayle to do good to them and to all men, and hurt to none, which I knowe is my duetie, and therevnto was I borne. I pray God that there remaine none among you that is infected with so much vntruth, as had liefer to see mee destroyed and brought to confusion, then to see his native Countrie flourish and encreased with honour, and Empire. But I assure you, I have conceyued a right good opinion of you, and therefore by Goddes sufferaunce we will set forward, and for my selfe I will forget all paine & perill, and be your Lodesman and guyde. Now when the king had thus sayde, all the Noble men kneled downe, and promised faythfully to serve, and duly to obey him, and rather to die then suffer him to fall into the handes of his enemies.

This done, the King thought surely that all conspiracie and sedition had bene quenched: But he was deceyued, for he sawe not a fyre that was newly kindeled, which afterward drue to so great a flame, that it burned and consumed the Walles of his awne house and family, which fyre at that tyme if he had espyed, he might peraduenture easilie haue quenched and put out: For certeine write that Richarde Erle of Cambridge did not conspyre with the Lorde Scrope, and Sir Thomas Gray, to murther king Henry, to please the Frenche king withall, but onely to the entent to exalt to the Crowne his brother in laws Edmond Erle of Marche, as heyre to Duke Lyonell the thirde begotten sonne of king Edward the third. After whose death, considering that the Erle of Marche for dyuerse secrete impedimentes, was not able to haue generation, he was sure that the Crowne should come to hym, or to his children. And therefore it is to be thought, that he rather confessed himselfe for neede of money to bee corrupted by the Frenche king, then hee would declare his inwarde minde, and open his very entent: For surely he sawe that if his purpose were espyed, the Erle of Marche should have dronken of the same Cuppe that he did, and what should have come to his awne children he much doubted, therfore beyng destitute of comfort, and in dispaire of lyfe, to saue his children he feyned that tale, desyryng rather to saue his succession, then himselfe, which he did in deede. For Richard Duke of Yorke his sonne, not privily, but openly claymed the Crowne, and Edward his son both claymed it, and gayned it, as hereafter ye shall here, which thing at this time if king Henry had foreseene, I doubt (sayth Hall) whether euer that lyne should have claymed the garland, or gotten the game.

The king setteth forward into Fraunce. Harflewe besieged.

Nowe assoone as the winde came about, the king set forward with hys Nauie, beyng in number an. Cxl. shippes, and shortly after landed at Caux in Normandie without resistance. And the next day after, the king marched toward the towne of Harflew, standyng vpon the Riuer of Seyne, betwene two hilles, and besieged it on euery part. The Capteyne of the towne was the Lord Escouteuyle, accompanyed with the Lorde Blaynuyle of Hacqueuile,

Hacqueuile, the Lordes of Harmanuyle, of Galard Boyes, of Clere de Barton, of Ad-

sanches, of Brian, of Gaucort, of Lisleadam, and many other.

The Frenche king beyng aduertised of the Kinges arryuall, sent in all the hast the Lord Delabreth Constable of Frauce, and the Lord Bonciqualt Marshall of Frauce, the Senescall of Henawde, the Lorde Ligny, and dynerse other Capteynes, which fortefyed townes with men, victuall and artillery, vpon all the Sea coast. And heeryng that the king of England had besieged Harflew at his first landyng, came to the Castel of Cawdebeck beyng not farre from Harflewe, to the entent to succour their friendes whiche were besieged, if they might by any pollicie: And if not, then they imagined howe to sley and hurt the Englishe men, when they went into the Countrie of foragyng for beastes and victual, and so to trap and destroy them. But they were deceyued, for notwithstandyng the provision and pollicie of the French men, the Englishe men forrayed the Countrie and spoyled the Villages and returned againe to the Campe with many a riche pray. The Englishe men dayly assaulted the towne, and the Duke of Gloucester to whome the order of the assault was committed, made three mynes vnder the ground, and approched the Walles with ordinaunce and engines, and would not suffer them within to rest at any time. The king living on the hill side with his battail, did not onely keepe the Frenche men from succorying of the towne, but also toke away from the townes men all the hope and trust of their succour, ayde, and reliefe, and also all the Goonpowder that was sent by the Frenche king vnto them that were besieged, was taken by the English men. The Captaines of the French men within the towne, perceyued that they were not able to endure the fierce assaultes of the Englishe men, and fearyng to be ouercome and taken by force, desired of the king of England only truce for three dayes, promising that if they were not rescued within y tyme, that then they would yeelde themselves and the towne, theyr liues beyng saued. And for performance hereof, they deliuered vnto the king. xxx. of the best Marchauntes and Capteynes that were within the towne.

The king of England accepted this offer. And so soone as this composition was agreed vpon, foorthwith the Lorde Hacqueuyle was sent vnto the French king to declare the necessitie of the towne, and the short tyme of the truce. To whome the Dolphyn aunswerd, that the kinges power was not yet assembled in such a nuber, as was convenient to raise so great a siege.

When this aunswere was reported to the Capteynes, they seyng no hope of comfort or reliefe, after the thirde day rendered to the king of England the towne, beyng the. xxxvij. Hardlew is yelded day after it was besieged, and the xxij. day of the moneth of September, to the great England. abashement of all Normandie, for it was the chiefest port of all that Countrie. Souldiours were rannsomed, and the towne was sacked, to the great gaine of the Englishe The king of Englande made Capteyne of that towne his Vncle Thomas Duke of Exceter, which established his Lieutenaut there Iohn Fastolffe, with xv. hundreth men, and. xxxv. good knightes, whereof the Baron of Carew, and Sir Hugh Lutterell were two counsaylors. And because dyuerse of his Nobles living before Harflew were sicke of the Fluxe, and many were dead, amongest whome the Erle of Stafforde, the Bishop of Norwiche, the Lordes, Molyns, and Burnell, were foure besyde other. The king licenced the Duke of Clarence, his brother, Iohn Erle Marshall, and Iohn Erle of Arondell beyng infected with that disease, to returne into England.

King Henry not a little reloysing of this victory at his beginning determined with all diligence to set forward, and to performe his entended purpose and warlye enterprise, but by reason that the sharpnesse of Winter weather approched more sooner at that time, then before it had beene accustomed he was therewithall sore troubled and vexed. Wherfore he callyng together all his Cheueteynes, and conferryng with them what was best to be done: After long consultation, in the ende it was agreed on all sides, that it was a thing both necessarie and convenient to set forward with all diligence before the dead time of Wynter approched, toward the towne of Calyee. And because their going forward might VOL. I. 3 U might be called of slaunderous tongs a running or fleyng awave, it was therefore agreed. that the whole armie should passe the next way by lande thorough the middest of their enimies: And yet that iourney was judged perillous, by reason that the number was much minished by the Fluxe and other Feuers which sore vexed, and brought to death about fiftene hundred persons, which was the very cause that the returne was the soner concluded and agreed upon: But yet before his departing he entred into the towne of Harflew. And all the men of warre that had not paide their raunsome, he sware them on the holy Euangelistes to yeeld them selves prisoners at Calice, by the feast of saint Martyn in Nouember next following: Dyuers of the Burgesses he highly raunsomed, and a great part of the women and children he put out of the towne, geuyng to every poore creature. v. Sowse. The priestes had lycence to departe, leaving behinde them their substaunce. The goodes in the towne were innumerable, which were all praye to the Englishmen, which sent the best into England as a token of good luck. There were two strong Towers standyng on the Hauen syde, which looking for ayde did not yeelde tenne dayes after the towne was rendered.

When the king had repayred the towne, and fortefied and furnished the same with men, municion, and victuall, he remoued from Harflew to Pounthoyse, entending to passe the ryuer of Some with his army, before the bridges were eyther withdrawen or broken.

The French king heering that the towne of Harflewwas taken by the king of Englande, and that he was marchyng forward into the Bowelles of the realme, sent out his proclamations, and assembled his people in every quarter, committing the whole charge of his armic to his sonne the Dolphin and the Duke of Aquiteyn, which incontinent caused the Bridges to be broken, and all the passages to be defended: besyde that, they caused all corne and other victuall to be destroyed in all places, where they conjectured that the Englishmen would repayre or passe thorough, to the intent that they might eyther keepe them in a place certayne without any passage or departure, and so to destroye them at their pleasures, or else to keepe them in a strayte without victualles or comfort, and so by famine eyther cause them to dye or yeelde.

The king of Englande afflicted with all these incommodities at one tyme was neyther dismayed nor discouraged, but keeping foorth his journey approched to the ryuer of Some, where he perceaued that all the Bridges were by his enimies broken and vnframed: wherefore he came to the passage called Blanchetaque, where king Edwards great graudfather passed the Ryuer of Some before the battayle of Cressy: But the passage was so kept that he could not passe without great daunger, consydering that his enimies were both before his face, and hard behinde his backe: But yet he passed forward burnyng Villages and taking great booties, and every day he sent his light horsemen abroad to spie and seke what perilles there were at hande, and what embushments were layde on the one syde or the other, and where he might most safely passe the river. The Espialles returned and declared for a truth that the countrie swarmed with men of warre, whereof he being aduertised, set foorth in good order, keeping still his way forward, and so ordered his armie and placed his cariage, that having his enimies on both sides of him, he passed so terribly that his enimies were afrayde once to offer him battayle: And yet the Lorde Delabreth Constable of Fraunce, the Marshall Boncequalt, the Erle of Vandosme great Master of Fraunce and the Lorde Dampier Admirall of Fraunce, the Duke of Alanson, and the Erle of Richmond with all the puyssaunce of the Dolphyn lay at Abuyle, and durst not once touche his battayles, but euer kept the passages, and coasted aloofe lyke a Hawke that lyketh not her praye.

The king of Englande still kept on his journey vntill he came to the Bridge of saint Maxence, where he found aboue xxx. thousand Frenchmen, and there pitched his fielde, looking surely to be set on and foughten withall: wherefore to encourage his Captaynes the more, he dubbed certaine of his valyaunt and hardy gentlemen knightes, as:

Blanchetaque a passage ouer the syner of Some.

But after the king sawe that the Frenchmen made no semblaunce to fight, he departed in good order of battayle by the towne of Amyence, to a towne neere to a Castell called Bowes, and there laye two dayes, looking every houre for battayle. And from thence he came neere to Corby, where he was steved that night by reason that the common people and Pesaunts of the country assembled in great number, and the men of armes of the Garrison of Corby skirmished with his armie in the morning, which taryeng was to him both joyous and profitable, for there he discomfited the crewe of horsenen, and draue the rusticall people euen to their gates, and found there the same day a shalow foorde betwene Corby and Peron, which neuer was espied before. At the which he, his armie and cariages the night ensuying passed the ryuer of Some without let or dauger, and then determined with all diligence to passe forward to Calice, and not to seeke for battayle, except he were therevnto constreyned, for his armie by sicknesse was sore minished, for he had onely two thousand horsemen, and. xiij, thousand Archers, bill men and of all sortes: The Englishmen were afflicted in this journey with an hundred discommodities, for The Englishmen their victuall was in maner all spent, and newe they coulde get none, for the enemies were sore afflict-had destroyed all before their comming: Rest they could take none, for their enemies were ever at hand: daylie it rayned, and nightly it freesed, of Fuell was scarcenesse, and of Fluxes was plenty, money they had ynough, but comfort they had none.

The French king being at Roan, and hering that the king of Englande was passed the water of Some, was not a little discontent (and as Hall sayth) assembled his counsayle to the number of. xxxv. to consult what should be done, the chiefe wherof, were the Dolphyn his sonne, whose name was Lewes, callyng himselfe king of Cicile, the Dukes of Berry and Briteyn, the Erle of Pontieu the kings youngest sonne, and dyuers other, whereof. xxx. agreed that the Englishmen should not departe vnfoughten withall, and fyue were of the contrary opinio, but the greater number ruled the matter. And so Mountion king at Armes was sent to the king of Englande to defye him as the enemye of The French Fraunce, and to tell him that he should shortly have battayle. King Henry soberly aunswered: Sir my entent and desyre is none other, but to do as pleaseth almightie God, king of England. and as it becommeth me, for surely I will not seeke your mayster at this time: But if he or his seeke me, I will willingly fight with hym. And if any of your nation attempt once to stop me in my iourney toward Caleys, at their ieopardie be it, and yet my desyre is that none of you be so vinaduised or harebreyned, as to be the occasion that I in mine awne defence should be the effusion of Christian bloud, and thus he rewarded the Herault. and lycenced him to depart.

When the Lordes of Fraunce heard the king of Englandes aunswere, it was incontinent proclaymed, that all men of warre should resorte to the Conestable of Fraunce, to fight with the king of Englande, and his puyssaunce: wherevpon all men accustomed to beare armour, and desyrous to wynne honour thorough the realme of Fraunce, drewe toward the field. The Dolphyn sore desyred to be at that battayle, but he was prohibited by the king his father: Lykewise Philip Erle of Charolous sonne to the Duke of Burgoyn would gladly have beene at that noble assembly, if the Duke his father would have suffred him, but many of his men stale awaye, and went to the Frenchmen.

The king of England being informed by his Espialles that the daye of battayle was neerer then he looked for, dislodged from Bomyers, and went in good aray thorough the fayre playne, beside the towne of Blangy, where to the intent that his armie should not be included in a streight, or driven to a corner, he chose a place meete and convenient for two armies to darrayne battayle betweene the townes of Blangy and Agincourte, where he pight hys fielde.

The Conestable of Fraunce, the Admirall, the Lorde Rambures master of the Crosbowes, and dyuers Lordes and knightes pitched their Banners neere to the Banner royall of the Constable, in the Countie of Saint Paule within the territorie of Agincourt, by the which waye the Englishe men must needes passe towarde Caleys. The frenchmen made great fyres about their Banners, and they were in number. lx. thousand horsemen as their awne historians and writers affirme, besyde footemen, pages and Wagoners, and all that night they made great cheere and were mery. The Englishmen also that night sounded their trumpets, and dyuers Instruments musicall with great melodie, and yet they were both hungrie, werie, sore trauayled and muche vexed with colde diseases: Howbeit they The courage of made peace with God and their consciences, every man encouraging other rather manfully to dye, then eyther to yeelde or flie.

the Englishmen.

The battayle of Agincourt.

Nowe approched the fortunate and fayre day to the English men, and a blacke and vnluckie day to the French men, which was the. xxv. day of October. 1415. beyng then Friday. On the which day in the mornyng, the French men made three battayles. In the Vaward were, viij, thousande healmes of knightes & Esquiers, and foure thousand Archers, and. xv. C. Crosbowes, which were guyded by the Lorde Delabreth Constable of Fraunce, hauyng with him the Dukes of Orleaunce, and Burbon, the Erles of Ewe, & Richemond, the Marshal Bonciqualt, and the maister of the Crosbowes, the Lord Dampier Admirall of Fraunce, and other Capteynes, and the Erle of Vandosme, and other the kinges officers, with xvj. hundreth men of Armes, and they were ordered for a wing to that battaile. And the other wing was guyded by Sir Guyshard Dolphin, and sir Clugnet of Brabant, and sir Lewes of Burbon, with. viij. hundreth men of Armes of chosen per-And to breake the shot of the Englishe men, were appointed sir Guylliam de Sauensens, with Hector and Philip his brethren, Ferrey of Maylley, and Alein of Gaspanes. with other. viii. C. men of Armes. In the middle ward were assigned as many persons and mo as were assigned in the Vaward, and therof was the charge committed to the Dukes of Barre, and Alenson, the Erles of Neuers, Vawdemount Blamount, Salings, Graunt pree, & of Russy. And in the rerewarde were all the other men of armes, guyded by the Erles of Marle, Dampmartyne, Fauconberge, and the Lorde Lurrey, Capteyne of Arde, who had with him men of the Frontiers of Bolynoys.

When these Battayles were thus ordered, it was a glorious sight to beholde them, and. surely they were esteemed to be in number six tymes as many or more then was the whole companie of Englishe men with Wagones, Pages and all. And now both the Armies beyng in a redinesse, the Constable of Fraunce with an eloquent and earnest Oration, encouraged hys souldiours manfully that day to stande to it for the honour of Fraunce: The King of England did no lesse prudently and valiauntly styrre vp the heartes of his people. And these exhortations ended, the king of England had placed privally two hundreth Archers in a lowe medowe nere to the forwarde of his enemies, but yet separate with a great: diche, and they were commaunded to kepe themselves close vntill they had a token geuen them to shote. Besyde this he appoynted a Vawarde, of the which he made Capteyne Edwarde Duke of Yorke, which of a haute courage obteyned of the king by peticion that office, and with him were the Lordes Beamond, Willoughby and Fanhope, and this battaile The middle ward was guyded by the king himselfe, with his brother the Duke of Gloucester, and the Erles Marshall, Oxford, and Suffolke, in the which were all the strong bill men. The Duke of Exceter, Vncle vnto the king, had the rereward which was myxed both with Archares and Bill men. The horsemen like winges went on euery side of the battaile. When the king had thus ordered his battaile, yet fearyng least the French men would compasse and beset him about, lyke a wise and politike prince, he caused stakes bound with yron sharpe at both the endes, of the length of v. or. vj. foote, to be pitched before the Archers, to the entent that if the barde horses ranne rashely vpon them, they might shortly be gored and destroyed, and appoynted certeine personnes to remoue the stakes when the Archers moued, as tyme requyred: so that the footemen were hedged about with the stakes, & the horsemen stoode lyke a Bulwarke betwene them and their enemyes, without the stakes. This deuice of forteflyng of an armie with stakes, was at this tyme first A good innerdeuised and practised, but since that tyme they have deuysed, Caltroppes, Harrowes, and tion, other newe trickes. All thinges beyng thus set in order, nowe approched the battaile. But. here Hall sheweth at large, howe that the French men the night before had made themselues assured of the victorie, and had divided the prisoners and spoyles among them, and had cast lottes for them, but it is an olde prouerbe that he that maketh his reconyng without his hoste, must be faine to recon twise, and also it is a true saiying, that man purposeth, but God disposeth, for victory is the gift of God, as may appere by the sequele of this battaile. which happened to the Englishe men rather miraculously then otherwise. Therefore to God the king very well gaue the praise thereof, as in the ende of the same ye shall heere.

Nowe the armies approchyng somewhat nere, an olde knight called Sir Thomas Harpyngton, a man of great experience in warre, with a Warder in his hande. And when he east vp the Warder, all the armie showted, at the which the Frenchmen much marueyled: But that was a signe to the Archers in the Medowe, which knowing the token shot wholy altogether at the Vaward of the French men. When they perceyued the Archers in the Medowe, whome they sawe not before, and sawe they could not come to them for a ditche. they with al hast set on king Henries Foreward: But ere they joyned, the Archers in the forefront, and the Archers on the syde, which stoode in the Medowe, so wounded the fotemen, so galled the horsses, and so combred the men of Armes, that the footemen durst not go forward, the horsemen ranne in plompes without order, some ouerthrewe his felowe, and horses ouerthrewe their maisters: So at the first ioynyng, as the Frenche men were clerely discouraged, so the Englishe men were muche chered and comforted. When the Frenche Vaward was thus discomfited, the Englishe Archers cast away theyr Bowes, and toke into their handes, Axes, Malles, Swordes and Billes, and therewith slue the French men, vntill they came to the middle warde. Then the king approched, and so encouraged his souldiours, that shortly the seconde battaile was overthrowne, and dispersed, but not without great slaughter of men, for the French men strongly withstood the fiercenesse of the English men, when they came to handie strokes, so that the fight was very doubtfull and perillous. And when one part of the french horsemen thought to have entered into the kinges battaile, they were with the stakes ouerthrowne and slaine, or taken.

Thus the battaile continued three long houres. The king y day shewed himselfe a va- A valyaune Prince. liaunt Prince, for notwithstanding that he was almost felled by the Duke of Alanson, yet with plain strength he slue two of the Dukes companie, and felled the Duke: But when the Duke woulde have yelded vnto him, the kinges garde, contrary to the kinges minde, outragiously slue him. And in conclusion, minding to make an ende of that dayes journey, caused his horsemen to fetch a compasse about, and to joyne with him against the rerewarde of Fraunce, in the which battaile were the greatest number of people. When the French men perceyued his entent, they were sodeinly amased, and ranne away lyke sheepe, without array or order. When the king perceyued the Banners cast downe, and the array cleerely broken, he encouraged by Souldiors, and followed so quickly, that the French men turnyng to flight, ran hether and thether, not knowyng which way to take, castyng away their armour, and on their knees desyred to have their lives saved.

In this meane tyme, while the battaile continued, and that the Englishe men had: taken a great number of prisoners, certeine Frenche men on horsebacke, whereof were Capteynes, Robinet of Borneuile, Rifflarde of Clamas, and Isambert of Agincourt, and other men of armes, to the number of vi. hundreth horsemen, which fled first from the field at their first commyng, and heeryng that the Englishe Tentes and Pauillions were farre from the armie, and without any great number of keepers or persons mete and convenient for defence, partly moued with conetousnesse of spoyle and pray, and partly entendyng by some notable act to reuenge the dammage and displeasure done to them and theirs in the battaile the same day, entered into the kinges Campe, beyng voyde of men, and fortefyed with Verlettes and Lackeyes, and there spoyled Hales, robbed Tentes, brake vp Chestes, and caried away Caskettes, and slue suche seruauntes, as they there found: For the which act they were long imprisoned and sore punished, and lyke to have lost their lyues if the Dolphyn had lenger lyued.

But when the king of Englande by a fearefull messenger was sodenly aduertised of thys newe onset, and also heard the outcrie of the Lackeyes, he fearing least his enemies were gathered together agayne, and doubtyng that the great number of prisoners that were taken, would rather take parte with the enemies then with him, did therefore by proclamation commaund throughout the armie that euery man should kyll his prisoner, vpon paine of death. When this dolorous commaundement was pronounced, pittie it was to see, and more lothsome to beholde how some french men were sodainely sticked with daggers, some brayned with Polaxes, some beaten downe with Malles, some their throtes cut, and some their bellies cut, and their paunches hanged out, so that in effect, having respect to the great number of prisoners, fewe or none was saued.

When this lamentable manslaughter was fynished, the Englishe men forgetting their woundes, and not remembring what paine they had susteyned all that daye in fighting with their enimies, as men that were freshe and lustie, raunged themselues agayne in araye, both prest and ready to abide a newe fielde, and also to inuade a fresh their enemies, and there withall courageously set vpon the Erle of Marle and Fawconbridge, and the Lords of Lonray and of Thyne, which with vi. C. men of armes had all daye kept together, and slue them out of hande.

After this last conflict, the king of Englande passed thorough the fielde, and sawe neyther resistaunce nor the apparaunce of any french men sauing the dead Corsses, wherefore he caused a retrayte to be blowen, and brought all his armie together, about foure of the clock at after noone, and first (as Hall sayth) callyng his prelates together, caused them to geue thankes to God, by whose almightic power he had receaued that victorie, and to sing the Psalme of In evitu Israel. &c. Commaunding every man to kneele downe, when they came at this verse, Non nobis domine, non nobis, sed nomini tuo da gloriam. Which is in Englishe, Not vnto vs O Lorde, not vnto vs, but vnto thy name be geuen the prayse and glory, & then caused the psalme of Te deum to be song, so that it might evidently appere that this noble prince had a perfite fayth and trust in the ayde of God, which heard his prayer, and regarded his fayth, and therefore gaue him the victorie.

That night he was refreshed with suche as he founde in the Frenche campe, and in the morning Mountioy king at Armes, and foure Heraultes came vnto him to knowe the number of prisoners, and to desyre buriall for them which were slayne. But before he aunswered the Heraults, he calling to remembraunce, that it was more honorable to be praysed of his enemies then extolled of his friendes, did therefore demaunde of them why they made to him that request, for that he was not certaine whether the prayse of that victorie ought to be attributed to him or to their Nation? O Lorde good Mountioy, thinke you vs officers of Armes to be rude and bestiall? If we for the affection that we beare to our naturall Countrie, would eyther for fauour or meede hyde or denie your glorious victorie: The Foules of the ayre and wormes of the ground will beare witnesse agaynst vs, and so wyll the Captiues that are yet in your possession. Wherefore according to the dutie of our office, which is or should be alwayes indifferently to write, and truly to judge, and therefore we saye and affirme, that the victorie is youres, the honor is youres, and youres is the glorie, advising you as you have manfully gotten it, so polletiquely to vse it. Well sayde the king, seing this is your determination, I wyllingly accept it, desyring you to shewe me the name of the Castell neere adjoyning, and they aunswered it was called Agincourt: Then sayde the king, this conflict shall be called the battaile of Agincourt, which victorie hath not bene obteyned by vs nor our power, but by the ayde and sufferaunce of

almightie God, for the iniurie and vntruth that we have received at the handes of your prince and his nation. And that daye he feasted the French officers of armes, and graunted to them their request, which busily sought thorough the fielde for such as were slayne: But the Englishmen suffred them not to go alone, for they searched with them, and found manye hurte, but not in icopardy of their lyfe, whome they tooke prisoners, and brought them into their tents.

When the king of Englande had well refreshed himselfe and hys souldyours, and had taken the spoyle of such as were slayne, he with his prisoners in good order returned toward his towne of Calice.

When tydings of this notable victorie was perfitely knowne in Englande, there was no small iove and reioving with praysing of God, and making of Bonefyres with all the triumph that might be made.

On the Sundaye, after the king was departed toward Caleys, divers Frenchmen repayred to the playne where the battayle was, and removed agayne the dead bodyes, some to finde out their Masters, and to bury them, and some to take the reliques which the Englishmen had left. For the Englishe men tooke nothing but Golde, Silver, Iewelles, riche apparell, and costly armour: But the ploughmen and Peysaunts spoyled the deade Carcasses, leaving them neyther shyrte nor clowte, and so they laye starke naked vntill Wednesday. On the which day divers of the noble men were conveyed into their countries, and the remnaunt were by Philip Erle of Charoloys (sore lamenting the chaunce, and moved with pittie) at his coste and charge buried in a square plot of fiftene hundred yardes, in the which he caused to be made three pittes, wherin was buried by accompt five thousand and. viij. hundred persons beside them which were caryed away, and other that were wounded to the death, and were caryed to Hospitalles and there dyed.

And certainely by the relation of Heraultes, and declaration of other noble persons worthy of credite, as Enguerrant wryteth, there were slaine at this battayle on the French parte, about ten thousand persons, whereof were princes and nobles bearing banners. Cxxvj. and all the remnaunt sauing. xvj. C. were knightes, Esquires and Gentlemen: So of noble men and Gentlemen were slayne eyght thousand, and foure hundred, of the which fine hundred were dubbed knightes, the night before the battayle. From the fielde escaped alyue the Erle Dampmartyn, Clunet of Brabant, Sir Lewes of Burbon, Sir Galliot of Gaulles, Sir Iohn Dengearmes, and fewe other men of name.

English men slaine. Of Englishemen were slaine at this battaile, Edward Duke of Yorke, The Erle of Suffolke, Sir Richard Kikeley, and Dauigam Esquier, and of all other not aboue five or sixe hundreth persons.

After that the king had refreshed himselfe in the Towne of Calice, and that such prisoners as he had left at Harflew, as you have heard, were come vnto him to Calice: Then he the sixt day of Nouember with all his prisoners tooke shippyng at Calice, and the same day landed at Douer, hauyng with him the deade bodyes of the Duke of Yorke, and the Erle of Suffolke, and caused the Duke to be buryed at his Colledge of Foder-ynghey, and the Erle at Ewhelme. And by soft journeyes he came to London, and was met and receyued at Blackheth by the Major and Aldermen of London, clothed in scarlet, and three hundreth Commoners clothed in murrey, with all joy and solemnitie, praisyng God for the high honour & victorie that he had obteyned.

Heavy newes to the french king.

But now to returne to the french king, when § heavy newes of the losse of the afore-sayde battaile came vnto him, he then liyng at Roan, and wyth him the Dolphyn, the Dukes of Berrey, and Briteyn, and his second sonne the Erle of Ponthewe, though the same were most grieuous vnto him, no man ought to merueyle. Wherefore the Frenche king perceyuyng that the warre was nowe but newely begon, determined to prouide for chaunces to come before they should sodeinly happen. And first he elected his chiefe officer for the warres called the Constable, which was the Erle of Arminacke, a wise and pollitique Capteine, and an auncient enemie to the English men, and Sir Iohn of Corsey was made maister of the Crosbowes, and then they fortefyed townes, and furnished garisons. While these thinges were thus in working, eyther for Melaucholy that he had for the losse susteyned at Agyncourt aforesayde, or else by some sodeine disease, Iohn Dolphyn of Vyennoys, heyre apparant to Charles the French king, departed out of this naturall lyfe without issue, which was an happie chaunce for Robynet of Borneuile and his companions, as you have hearde before, for his death was theyr lyfe, and his lyfe woulde have bene their death.

The death of the Dolphyn of Fraunce.

After this notable victorie obteyned by the Englishe men, and that king Henry was departed into England, and the French king had made his new officers, as aforesayd. Thomas Duke of Exceter Captein of Harflew, accopanied with three thousand Englishmen, made a great road into Normandy, almost to the Citie of Roan: In which iourney he gate great aboundaunce both of riches and prisoners. But in his returne the Erle of Arminack newly made Constable of Fraunce, entendyng in this his first iourney to winne his spurres, and in his companie aboue flue thousand horsemen, encountered with him. The skirmishe was sore, and the fight fierce, but because the Englishe men were not able to resist the force of the French horsemen, the Duke to saue his men, was compelled to retyre as politikely as he could deuyse: But for all that he could do, he lost three hundreth A sore skirof his men. The Frenche men not content with this good lucke, followed them almost to mishe. the Barryers of Harflew. When the Englishe men within the towne espied the chase, they issued out in good order, and met with their enemies, and not onely slue and tooke a great number of them, but also chased them aboue. viii. And about this season, Sigismond Emperour of Almaine, which had maryed Barbara Sigismond Emdaughter to the Erle of Zilie, Cossyn Germain remoued to king Henry, a man of great perour. vertue, & fidelitie, which had not only long labored to set an vnitie and concorde in Christes Church, and Christian religion, but also he sent dyuerse Ambassadors, aswell to the Frenche king as to the king of England, because he was farre distant from their countries and regions to encrease perfect peace and vnitie. Wherefore he perceyuyng that his Ambassade brought nothing to such conclusion as he wished, did therefore in his awne person come from the furthermost part of Hungary into Fraunce, and after into England, entendyng to knit together all Christian Princes in one amitie and friendship, and so beyng friendes together, to make warre and reuenge their quarelles agaynst the Turke, the persecutor of Christes fayth, and enemy to all Christendom. And with this noble Prince came the Archebishop of Reynes, and dyuerse other noble men, as Ambassadors from the French king, into England. The king of England for olde amitie between the house of England and Beame, accompanied with all his Nobilitie, him receyued vpon Blacke heth the vij. day of May, and brought him through London to Westminster with great triumph, where Iustes, Tourneyes, and other martiall feates were to him with all joy and pleasure shewed, and set forth.

Duryng which tyme, there came into Englande Albert Duke of Holland, who also Albert duke of was friendly enterteyned. And these two Princes were by the king conueyed to Windsore Holland. to saint Georges feast, and there were elected companions of the noble order of the Garter, and had the Coler and Habite of the same to them delivered, and sate in their stalles all the solemnitie of the feast, by the which order they knowledged themselues to be highly honoured, and much exalted. After this solempne feast finished, the Duke of Holland well feasted, and greatly rewarded, returned into his Country. But the Emperour tarved styll neuer ceasing to declare and perswade, what vtilitie, what goodnesse, and what ioy might ensue, if both the realmes of England and Fraunce were brought to a finall concord, and perfect vnitie. But the euill chaunce of the French Nation was to his purpose a barre, and a let, because they were predestinate to suffer yet mo plagues and detrimentes at the handes of the English men. For when concorde was at hande, and peace was enteryng into the Gates, a new cause of more discorde and dissension sodeinly brake out, and came to the kinges knowledge: For he beyng informed of the losse of his men in the territorie of Roan (as you have heard) was so sore displeased, that he would heere of no treatie, nor have once this worde (peace) named.

The Emperour like a wise prince, perceiuging that the tyme would not serue to bring to passe that he came for, ceassed any further to trauaile therein. And leauyng all The Emperour treatic and perswasion for Fraunce, he entered into a league and amitic himselfe with the entereth into a king of England. Which confederacye least it should be broken, they studyed and de-king of Englanduised all waves and meanes possible, for the preservation and observation of the same: Which plaine meanyng, and true dealyng was afterwarde to them both, not onely much honour, but great commoditie. Nowe when the Emperour had thus concluded a league with the king of England, he tooke his journey homeward into Germanie: and the king of England, partly to shewe him pleasure, and partly because of his awne affayres, associated him to his towne of Calice: during which time the Duke of Burgoyn offered to come to Calice to speake with the Emperour and the king, because he hearde talke of the league and confederacie that was concluded betwene them. The king sent to the water of Grauelyng, the Duke of Gloucester his brother, and the VOL. I.

A peace concluded betwene the king of England and the Duke of Burgoyn.

Erle of Marche, to be hostages for the Duke of Burgoyn, and sent also the Erle of Warwike with a noble companie to conduct him to his presence. At Grauelyng foorde the Dukes met, and after salutations done, the duke of Burgoyn was conveyed to Calice, where of the Emperor, and of the King he was highly welcomed and feasted: Duryng which tyme, a peace was concluded betweene the king of England, and the Duke of Burgon, for a certein space, concerning onely the Counties of Flaundyrs, and Arthoys. for the which cause the French king and his sonne was highly displeased. The Duke of Gloucester was receyued at Grauelyng by the Erle of Caroloys, sonne to the Duke of Burgoyn, and by him honourably conueyed to Saint Omers and there lodged that night. The next day the Erle Caroloys came with divers noble men to visite the Duke of Gloucester in his lodgyng. And when he entered into his Chamber, the Dukes backe was toward him, talkyng with some of his servantes, and did not see nor welcome the Erle Charoloys at the first entrie: But after he sayde shortly, without any great reuerence or comming towardes him: ye are welcome fayre Cossyn, and so passed forth his tale with his seruauntes. The Erle Charoloys for all his youth was not well content, but suffered for that tyme.

When the Duke of Burgoyn had done all thinges at Calice that he came for, he after the. ix. day returned to Grauelyng, where the Duke of Gloucester and he met againe, and louyngly departed, the one to Calice, and the other to Saint Omers: For the which voyage the Duke of Burgoyn was suspected to be enemie to the Crowne of Fraunce. After the Dukes departure, the Emperour was highly feasted and rewarded, and at hispleasure sayled into Holland, and so road into Beame. The king likewise tooke Ship and

In this meane tyme, the Erle of Arminack puffed vp with his last victorie, although the honour were small, and the gaine lesse, determined clerely to get againe the towne of Harflew. Wherefore as closely as he could, he gathered together men in euery place, and appoynted them all to mete him at Harflew at a day assigned. The appoyntment was kept, and the towne was besieged both by water and land, before the Capteynes of the towne knewe perfectlye the first motion. For Iohn Vicont Narbon, Viceadmirall of Fraunce had brought the whole nauie to the ryuage and shore adioinyng to the towne, entendyng privily to have entered the towne before he had been perceyved. But this subtile imagination tooke no place, for they which kept the watche tower, sodeinly perceyuyng their enemies to approche, rang the Larom Bell: And the Duke of Exceter incontinently caused all men to repayre to the walles, and fortefyed the Gates, and dispatched a swift Barke to the king of England with letters, requirying him of ayde and succour. And although the French men perceyued that their wily enterprise was knowne, and that the towne could not so sodeinly be stolen and taken as they had deuised, yet they continued their siege both by water and by land, and made dyuerse assaultes, at the which if they nothyng gayned, yet euer somewhat they lost.

When these newes were come to the eares of king Henrie, and that he knewe that his people were in great icopardie, except that great diligence were vsed for their reliefe and deliueraunce, he without delay apparelled a great nauie, and made Chiefteine thereof the Duke of Bedford, who beyng accompanied with the Erles of Marche, Oxenford, Huntyngdon, Warwike, Arondell, Sarisbury, Deuonshire, and dyuerse Barons, wyth two hundreth sayle of good Shippes, well furnished with men, municion, and victualles, did with all spede set forwarde, and beyng shipped at Rye, they with good expedition came to the mouth of the River of Seyne. And when the Vicont of Narbon, who with his nauie kept the mouth of the Riuer of Seyn, perceyued the Englishe nauie to approche, he geuyng a token to all his companie, couragiously set foorth towarde his enemies. The Duke in likewise valiauntly encountered with them, the fight was long, but not so long as perillous, for battailes of the sea be euer desperate. But after long fight the victorie fell to the Eng-The Frenchmen were many Ships, Hulkes, and Carickes, to the number of fine hundreth. Of the which three great Careckes were sent into England. And in the same conflict were slaine of the Frenche men no small number, as it appeared by their dead bodyes, which swarmed every day about the Englishe shippes.

After this victorie fortunately obteyned, the Duke of Bedford sayled by water vp to the very towne of Harflew, and without let or impediment landed and refreshed it both with Harflewe is resvictuall and money: which succours if they were welcome to the Duke of Excester his cued by the Englishe men. Vncle, I report me to them that have bene in necessitie, and would have gladly bene reof Harflewe, for the which he so sore thirsted.

After thys discomfiture and great losse, the fortitude and strength of the Frenchmen beganne to decaye, and their bragging bewtie beganne to fade. For nowe the Princes the noble in and Nobles of the realme fell into division and discorde among themselves, as who say, Frauce. that the Nobility studyeng how to reuenge their olde injuries and displeasures, refused to take payne for the advauncement of the publique wealth, and savegarde of their awne countrie. And for privile displeasure, covert malice or hatred, their power began to waxe so slender, and their libertie was brought into suche a malicious diuersitie and doubtfull difference, that, as here after shall be shewed, it was merueyle their countrie was not brought to a perpetuall bondage: Which thing no doubt had followed, if this king Henry of Englande had lenger lyued in this transitorie worlde. For notwithstanding that the Duke of Orleaunce, the Captaine and head of the one faction, was at that tyme captiue and prisoner in England, yet there grew so much privic displeasure and cancard hatered between Charles the Dolphyn and Iohn Duke of Burgoyn, that whyle the one studied and compassed howe to ouercome the other, with armour or with pollicie, with dissimulation or craftie conveyaunce, everye Iourneyman of their faction, and every noble man partaker with the one or the other, put all their whole studie and diligence to aduaunce forward their sect and parte, and not one of them would take heede how to resist or refell the present ieopardie which was comming out of Englande. And as one inconvenience suffereth many to follow, so was it in Fraunce at this time: For the french king was not of good memorie: The warre that was towarde seemed both doubtfull and perillous: The princes were vntrusty, and at discord, and an hundreth mo things, which might bring the realme to extreme miserie and vtter destruction, as after you shall here.

Shortly after this, the king assembled his high courte of Parliament, and there in open audience made to them a shorte and pithie Oration, declaring to them the injuries lately done and committed by the French Nation, and shewed also the just and lawfull occasion A parliamet. of his warres, and signified also what discorde and ciuile dissention reigned amongst the Nobilitie of Fraunce, and rehearsed many things for the which it were now very necessarie and needefull for his grace and the realme, to represse and overcome them with all their power and puyssaunce, and that without deferring or prolonging of time, and therefore in all gentle maner desyred them to prouide for money and treasure out of hande for the conduct and wages of souldiours, to the intent that nothing should lacke when they should be ready to set on their enimies.

The whole parliament hearing his causes so just, and his request so reasonable, did immediately geue their generall assent to ayde him, and caused such somes as they agreed vpon to be foorthwith collected and payed, so glad was all men of these warres, and as king, and profitable to the subjectes.

laques Bastard of Burbon.

In this parliament also Iohn Duke of Bedford was made Gouernor or Regent of the realme, and head of the publique wealth, which office he should eniove as long as the Realme of Eng- king was making warre on the French nation. The king before he would take his voyage. sent the Erle of Huntyngdon to serche and scowie the Seas, least any Frenchmen lyeng in wayte for him might attrap him sodeinly, or he had any knowledge of their setting forward. This lustic Erle called Iohn Holland, sonne to the Duke of Excester, which was behedded at Circiter in the time of King Henry the fourth, and Cossyn to the king, with a great number of shippes searched the sea from the one coast to the other. And in conclusion he encounted with ix. Caricks of Ieane (which Lorde Iaques the Bastard of Burbon had reteyned to scrue the french king) and set vpon them sharply, the conflict was great, and the fight long: But in conclusion the Frenchmen were our come and fled, and three of the greatest Caricks with their patrones, and Monsire Iaques de Burbon their Admirall were taken with asmuch money as should have payd the Souldiours of the whole fleete for halfe a yere: And three other Carickes were bowged and sent to the bottome of the sea.

The king of Englande sayleth with a power into Fraunce.

The king heering of this good chaunce, about the ende of Iulii tooke his Ship at Portesmouth, accompanyed with the Dukes of Clarence and Gloucester, brethren to the sayde king, the Erles of Huntyngdon, Mershall, Warwike, Deuonshire, Salsburie, Suffolke and Somerset, the Lords Rosse, Willoughby, Fitz Hugh, Clynton, Scrope, Matriuers, Bourchier, Ferrers of Groby & Ferrers of Chartley, Fanhope and Gray of Codnore, Sir Gilbert Vmfreuyle, Sir Gilbert Talbot, and dyuers other: And so having winde and wether to his desyre, he landed in Normandie neere vnto a Castell called Touque, where he consulted with his Captaines what wave was best to be taken concerning their high enterprise.

When the Normans heard of the kings arryuall, they were sodainely striken with a deadly feare, and as men amased, and halfe out of their wittes, and forsoke their houses and bagge and baggage, and ranne into the strong and walled townes. And likewise the men of warre, which were left in every place to scowre the Country, fled into the walled townes, among the rude Commonaltie.

Touque castell besieged and taken.

When king Henry had taken counsayle, he layed siege to the Castell of Touque, being very well fortefied both with nature and mans arte, and began to assault it: And although that they within valiauntly defended it, yet by fine force the king ouercame it and tooke it, and all the men that were therein, whome also he tooke to mercy, and made Captaine thereof Sir Robert Kirkeley knight.

Cane besieged and assaulted.

From thence he passed foorth to the strong towne of Cane, which standeth in a playne fertile countrey, no stronger walled then depe diched, which was well victualled and replenished with people: For the Citezens fearing the kinges comming, had prouyded for all things necessary for defense. And as sone as the king was come he cast a depe trench with a high mount to prohibite them within the towne to have any egresse or outward passage: and that done, beganne fiercely to assault the towne: But the men of the towne were nothing abashed, and stood manly to their defence. The fight was fierce and enery man tooke heede to his charge. The Englishmen studied all the wayes possible to dammage their enimies, some shot arrowes, some cast stones, and other shot Gonnes: Some brake the walles with engines, some set scaling ladders to the walles, and other cast in Wildfyre, euery man labored to come to hande strokes, which was their desyre. On the other syde, the Normans threwe downe great stones, Barres of yron, dartes, hot Pitche, and brennyng Brimstone and boyling lead. Dyuers dayes this assault continued to the great losse & hurt of the Englishmen. When king Henry perceyued this, he absteyned from the assault, & determined vnderminyng to overthrow the walles & towres of the towne, & the Pioners wrought so fast that within fewe dayes, the walles stood onely vpon

Postes

Postes ready to fall, when fyre should be put vnto them. The king caused his people to approche the walles, and to keepe the Citezens occupied, least they should make a countermine, or to be an impediment to his workemen and laborers, wherefore he caused the assault to be cried agayne: Then every man ran to the walles, some with scaling ladders, some with hookes, and some with coardes and plommets, every man desyring to get vp on the walles, and hande to hande to graple with his enemie, the Citizens manfully defended. While the fight was quick and fierce on both sydes: The Englishmen in divers places persed and brake thorough the walles, and dyuers ouertures and holes were made ynder the foundation by the Pioners, by the which the Englishmen might easely enter into the towne. The king having compassio of the townes men, desyring rather to have them saued then destroyed, sent them worde by an Herault, that yet was time of mercie and clemencie, if they would submit themselves to his grace: But they obstinately hoping of succour, aunswered that they would stand at their defense. Then the Englishmen againe skaled the walles, and entred thorow the trenches into the towne: The fight was sore by the space of an houre, but in conclusio the Englishmen obteyned.

Nowe when the king was possessed of the towne of Cane, he first of all commaunded all harneys and weapons to be brought into one place, which was done with diligence without any resistence. Then the miserable people kneeling on their knees cryed for mercie: To whom the king gaue certaine comfortable wordes and bade them stande vp, and then he resorted to the Church and gaue thanks to God, & after he caused a good and great watch that night to garde the towne. And the next day in the morning he called the Magistrates and gouernours of the towne into the Senate house, where some for their stony stubbernesse, and mad obstinacie were adjudged to die, and other were sore fyned and highly raunsomed. Then he callyng together hys souldyours and men of warre, both gaue to them high laudes and prayses for their manly doings, and also distributed to every man according to his desert the spoyle and gayne, taken of the towne and townes men, chiefely because he had tried at that assaulte their valiaunt courages, and vnfearefull heartes.

Nowe though the towne were wonne, as aforesayde, yet the Castell which was strong and well fortefied, both with men & al things necessary for defence, was still in the Frenchmens possession, the captayne whereof, to the entent to shew himselfe valiaunt and not wylling to breake his othe, boasted that he would rather dye in defense, then freely to yeelde the Castell. King Henry was not minded to ouerthrow the Castell (without which it was not easie to be won) because it was bewtifull & necessary both to kepe the towne from goyng backe, & also to defend the same when oportunitie should serue: Wherefore he sent worde to the Lorde Mountainy being captaine, that if he would yeelde the Castell by a dave, he should departe without dammage: And if he would be obstinate, he should Castell of Came finde no fauour. When the Captaine and his companions had well considered vpon the king. condition offered, he rendred the Castell and yelded themselves. And so the king was possessed both of the towne and Castell of Cane.

While the king of England was besiegyng this towne, the French men had neyther a convenient armie to resist their power, nor were redy or able to relieue their friendes in this miserable necessitie, because they had such division & dissension among themselves, and a good cause why: For king Charles was of so small wit by reason of his sicknesse, that he could not rule, and so was spoyled both of his treasure and kingdome, and every man spent and wasted the common treasure.

Charles the Dolphyn beyng of the age of. xvj. or. xvij. yeres, onely lamented and be-Charles the wayled the ruyne and decay of hys countrie: He onely studyed the aduauncement of the Fraunce. common welth, and he onely deuysed how to resist his enimies: But hauving neyther men nor money, was greatly troubled and vnquieted. And in conclusion, by the counsaile of the Erle of Arminack Constable of Fraunce, he founde a meane to get all the treasure and riches which Quene Isabell his mother had gotten and horded vp in dyuerse secret places: and for the common vtilitie of his Countrie, he spent it wisely in wagyng of his Souldiours, in preparyng of thinges necessarie for the warre. The Queene forgettyng the great perill the realme stoode in, but remembryng the displeasure to her by this act done, declared her sonne and the Constable to be her mortall enemies, and promised that they should be persecuted to the vttermost. And even for very womanly malice, shee set in the highest aucthoritie about the king her husband, Iohn Duke of Burgoyn, geuyng him the regiment and direction of the king and his Realme, with all prehemynence and sovuereigntie.

The Duke of Burgoyn hauyng nowe the sworde of aucthoritie, for the which he had so sore longed, and glad to be reuenged of his olde iniuries, began to make warre on the Dolphyn. And purposyng that when he had once tamed and framed to his purpose this yong vnbrideled Gentleman, then he determined, as he might to refell and withstand the common enemies of the realme. The same or like reason moued the Dolphyn, for he mindyng first to represse and extinct the Ciuile dissension at home, before he would inuade forein enemies, prepared warre to subdue and destroy Iohn Duke of Burgoyn, as the chiefe heade & leader of that wicked and great mischiefe, whereby the realme was much vnquieted. & more decayed, and in a maner brought to a finall ruyne and vtter destruction. Thus Fraunce was inflamed, and in every part troubled with warre and division, and yet no man would eyther provide in so great a daunger, nor once put foorth their fynger to remove the mischiefe.

King Henry not mindyng to lye still in Normandie, nor yet to leaue his enterprise vnperfourmed, sent the Duke of Clarence to the Sea coast, which with great difficultie gate the towne of Bayeux. The Duke of Gloucester also with small assault, and lesse defence tooke the towne of Liseaux. In the meane season, King Henrie taryed still at Cane, fortefiyng the Towne and Castell, and put out of the towne. xv. hundreth women and impotent persons, and replenished the towne with Englishe people. And while the King soiourned at Cane, he kept a solempne feast, and made there many knightes: And besydes that, he shewed there an example of great charitie & mercy. For in searching the Castell, he found there innumerable substance of plate & money, belonging to the Citizens: wherof he would not suffer one penny to be touched or conueyed away, but restored the goodes to the owners, and delyuered to euery man his awne.

When the fame of the gettyng of Cane was blowen through Normandie, the Normanes were so sore afrayed, and so much abashed, that you should not onely haue sene men, women, and children ronnyng in euery way by great plompes from towne to towne, not knowyng whether to flie: But also the rurall persons and husband men draue the Beastes out of the Villages into suche places where they hoped of refuge or defence: So that a man would haue thought that Normandy had sodeinly bene left desolate and voyd of people and Cattaile. But when the rumor was spread abroade of his clemencie shewed to Captiues, and of his mercie graunted to suche as submitted themselues to his grace, all the Capteines of the townes adioynyng came willyngly to his presence, offering to him themselues, their townes, and their goodes. Wherevpon he made proclaymation, that all men which had or would become his Subiectes, and sweare to him allegeaunce, should enioy theyr goodes and liberties in as large or more ample maner then they did before, which gentle enterteynyng, and fauourable handelyng of the stubborne Normanes, was the very cause why they were not onely content, but also glad to remoue and turne from the French parte, and become subiects to the Crowne of Englande.

When the king had set Cane in good order, he left there for Capteynes, the one of the towne and the other of the Castell, Sir Gilbert Vmfreuile, and Sir Gilbert Talbot, and made Bailife there Sir Iohn Popham, and so departed from Cane to Argenton, which was shortly rendered vnto him. Then all these townes following, without stroke striken, yelded to him, in whom he placed dyuerse Capteynes.

A noble and charitable prince.

Pontorson Chiergurg And while the king wanne thus in Normandie, his nauie lost nothing on the Sea, for they so scoured the streames, that neyther Frenchman nor Britein durst appere: Howbeit one day there arose so hideous and so terrible a storme, that neyther Cable helde, nor Anker A sore tempest. preuayled, so that if the Erles of March and Huntyngdon had not taken the Hauen of Southampton, the whole Nauie had perished, and the people had bene destroyed, and yet the sauegarde was straunge: For in the same Hauen two Balyngers, and two great Carickes laden with marchandice were drowned, and the broken mast of another Caricke was blowen ouer the wall of Hampton (as divers wryters affirme) such is the power of the winde, and such is the rygour of a tempest. When the fury of the winde was asswaged, and the Sea waxed calme, the Erles of March, and Huntyngton passed ouer the sea with all their companie, and landed in Normandie, marchyng toward the King, before whom the Normanes fled, as fast as the fearefull hare doth before the gredie Greyhound. And so they passed through the Countrie, destroying of Villages, and takying of prayes, vitill they came to the king who then was goving toward Rhoan.

And duryng this tyme Sir Iohn Oldecastell Lord Cobham, of whome mencion is made sir John Oldbefore, was taken, and after condemned and hanged, and brent, the whole Historie where- castell.

of you may reade in the booke of the Monumentes of the Church.

As the king passed to Rhoan, he was skirmished with, in sundry places, but in the ende the victorie still happened vnto him, so that nothing that stood in his way could stop him, for he tooke by force Pountlarch, Louvers and Eureux, and at the last came before the Citie of Rhoan, the which was wonderfully fortefyed, for the while he had lyen at the siege of Cane, and was in other places of Normandy, the inhabitants of Rhoan had walled it round about, and made dyuers Bulwarkes for the defense thereof, they had also great store of victuals, for the whole countrie about had brought thether such as they had: And thether also they had brought their plate, Iewels, and money, so that the towne was filled with great ryches & treasure, which caused the king to be the more desyrous thereof, wherefore the last daye of Iulij he compassed the same rounde about with a strong siege, and Roanis besiegeds. gaue therevnto a terrible assault. And to the intent that no ayde should passe by the ryuer toward the Citie, a great chayne of Yron was deuised at Pountlarche, and set on piles from the one side of the water to the other: and beside that chaine he set vp a newe forced bridge, sufficient both for cariage and passage. And at this time the Erle of Warwike was sent to the towne of Cawdebeck standing on the ryuer side betwene the Sea and the Citie of Rhoan, which towne he so hardly assaulted, that the Captaines offered to suffor the English Nauie to passe by their towne without hurte or detriment, to the Citie of Rhoan, and also that of Rhoan yeelded, they promised to render their towne without anye fayle or farther delaye: And this composition they sealed, and for performance of the same they delivered pledges. And immediately after this agreement the Englishe Nauie, to the number of one hundreth Sailes, passed by Cawdebeck and came before Rhoan, and besieged it on the water syde. To this siege came the Duke of Gloucester with the Erle of Suffolke and the Lorde of Burgayny, which had taken the towne of Chierburgh, and were lodged before the port of Saint Hilarij, neerer their enemies then any other persons

Frishe men-

During this siege, arryued at Harflewe the Lorde of Kylmay in Ireland with a band of xvj. hundreth Irishmen, armed in Mayle with Dartes and scaynes, after the maner of their countrey, all talle, quick, and delyuer persons, which came and presented themselues before the king, lyeng still at the siege: Of whome they were not onely gently enterteyned, but also (because the king was informed that the French king and the Duke of Burgoyne would shortly come, and eyther rayse the siege, or victuall the towne at the Northgate) they were appointed to keepe the Northsyde of the army, and in especiall the way that came from the Forest of Lyons. Which charge the Lord of Kylmayn and his company joyfully accepted, and did so theyr deuoyre, that no men were more praysed. nor did more dammage to their enimies then they did, for surely their quicknesse and swiftnesse did more prejudice to their enimies, then their great barbed horsses did hurte or dammage to the nymble Irishmen.

Thus the Citie of Rhoan being compassed aboute with enimies, both by water and lande, having neyther comfort nor ayde of king nor Dolphyn. And although the armie were strong without, yet within there lacked neyther hardy Captaynes nor manfull Souldiours. And as for people, they had more then ynough: For it was written by him that knewe the number, there were at the time of the siege within the Citie of Christian people. CC. and x, thousand persons. The king and his people assaulted the towne fiercely; The frenchmen defended it courageously and valiauntly: long was the siege, and terrible were the assaultes, to the losse and no gayne of neyther partie: wherefore after the king of England had well considered with him selfe that by the manifold assaultes many of his people perished, therefore at the last he determined to conquere them by famine. Wherefore he stopped all the passages both by water and lande that no victuall should be conveyed to the Citie, and he cast trenches round about, & set them full of stakes, and defended them with Archers, so that they within could have no waye out, eyther to inuade their enemies, nor departe out of their fortresse.

And sodainly a fayned tydings was brought, that the french king approched with all his power to rayse the siege and rescue the Citie: wherefore king Henry commaunded all men to lye in their harneys, least they might by some subtile cautele be surprised vnware, and taken vnprouyded. But the French king neyther came nor sent, to the great wonder of the Englishe men.

This siege thus contynuyng from Lammas to Christmas, dyuers enterprises were attempted and divers pollecies were devised, how every part might dammage and hurte his aduersary and enemie, but no parte much reioysed of their gayne. During which time, victuall began sore to fayle with in the towne, so that onely Vinegar and water serued for drinke, yea and at the length dogges, Rattes, and Myse serued for their meat, and the scarcety of victualles was so great, that daylie great numbers of people within the Citie dyed for hunger. And the riche men within the towne put out of the gates great numbers of poore people and children, which were by the Englishmen that kept the trenches, beaten and driven back agayne to the gates of the towne, which agaynst them were closed and barred. So that this miserable people vncomfortably forsaken, and vnnaturally dispised of their awne nation and houshold felowes, between the walles of their Citie, and the trenches of their enimies lay still cryeng for helpe and reliefe, for lacke whereof innumerable soules daylie died and hourely starued. Yet king Henrie moued with pittie and compassion, did in the honour of Christes birth on Christmas day refreshe all the pore people with victuall, to their great comfort, for the which act they not onely thanked him, but also prayed to God for his preservation and furtheraunce, and for the hinderaunce and euill successe of their vnkinde Citezens and vncharitable countrie men.

This miserable famine daylie more and more encreasing, so daunted the heartes of the

bolde Captaines, and so abated the courages of the riche Burgesses, and so tormented the bodyes of the poore Citezens, that the stowte Souldiour for faintnesse could scase welde his weapon, nor the riche Marchaunt for money coulde not buye a shyuer of bread: So that the commonaltie cryed to the Captaines, and the needie people besought the Lords to have compassion vpon them, and to invent some wave for their succour and comfort.

The gouernours of the towne, after long consultation had, consydering the great necessitie that they were in, and seing none apparence of succour or reliefe, determined it both necessary and convenient to treate with the king of Englande. And vpon newe veres even, there came to the walles at the gate of the bridge dyvers commissioners, appoynted by the Captaines, which made a signe to the Englishe men lyeng without, to speake with some gentleman or other person of aucthoritie. The Erle of Huntingdon, which kept that part, sent to them Syr Gilbert Vinfreuyle, to whome they declared, that if they might have a guyde and a safe conduyt, they woulde gladly speake with the king. Syr Gilbert not onely promised to doe their message, but also to certefie them of the kings pleasure and purpose, which communication ended, he repayred to the Duke of Clarence, and other of the kings Counsayle, aduertising them of the request of the Citezens, which incontinent assembled themselues in the kings lodging, where Syr Gilbert Vmfreuyle wisely and discreetely declared to the king, the mindes and entents of the Citezens. The king lyke a graue prince consydering that a thing gotten without effusion of bloude is both honorable and profitable, and sawe that the haute courages of the bragging French men were sore abated and almost tamed, thought it convenient to here their lowly peticion and humble request, and therefore willed Sir Gilbert to aduertise them that he was content to here twelve of them, which should be safely conveyed to hys presence: And with this aunswere Sir Gilbert departed, and made relation thereof to the Capitaynes standing at the gate: who on the next daye in the morning appoynted foure knightes, foure learned men, and foure Burgesses all clothed in Black, to go to the king of England. These twelve persons were received at the porte Saint Hilari, by Sir Gilbert Vmfreuyle accompanied with divers gentlemen and yeomen of the kings housholde, commonly called yeomen of the Crowne, and they were conneyed to the Kinges lodging. And shortly after, they were brought into the kings presence, who behelde them with a fierce and princely countenaunce. And one of them beyng of a stowte courage spake vnto the king as followeth: Right high A proude and and mightie prince, if you will consyder wherein the glorie of victorie doth consist, you French man. shall playnely perceaue that the same is in the taming of prowde men and ouercomming of valiaunt souldyours, and subduying of strong Cities, and not in slayeng of christen people by hunger and famine, wherein resteth neyther manhood, wyt nor pollecie. What glorie shall you obtayne in kylling of wretches by famine, which death of all deathes is to be dispised? If you will shew yourselfe charitable before God, or mercifull before men, let all oure poore people which will depart out of our Citie passe thorough your campe to get their lyuing in other places, and then manfully assault our Citie, and by force (if you dare) subdue and conquere it. And in this doyng if your enterprise succeede well, then shall ye not onely obteyne worldly fame and glory, but also merite much of God, in having pitie and compassion of the poore and needy people.

When this bragger had sayde, the king which no request lesse suspected then that which they desyred, began a while to muse. And when he had well considered the subtile & craftie invention of the Messengers, he with a fierce countenaunce, and a bolde spirite made to them this aunswere. Thinke you O fantasticall Frenchemen, that I am so ignoraunt, that I can not perceyue your double dealyng and craftie conueyaunce? Iudge you me so symple, that I knowe not wherein the glory of a Conquerour consisteth? Esteeme you me so ignoraunt, that I perceyue not what crafts and warlike pollicies by strong enemies are to be subdued and brought to subjection? Yes, I am not so loytering a truand as to forget so good a lesson. And if these things be to you blind and obscure, I will declare and open them voto you. The Goddesse of warre called Bellona (which is the Cor- Bellona the rectrice of Princes for right withholdyng, or iniury doyng, and the plague of God for euill living) hath these three handmaydes, euer of necessitie to attend vpon her, that is, blood, fyre, and famine, which three Damoselles be of that force and strength that every of them alone is able to torment and afflict a proude Prince: But they all beyng joyned together, are of puyssaunce able to destroy the most populous Countrie and richest region of the worlde. If I by assaultyng of your towne shoulde seeke your blood, although I gayned (as I doubt not but I should) yet my gaine were not clere without some losse of my people, If I set your Citie on fyre, and so consume it and you also, then have I lost that precious Iewell which I have so long laboured for. Therefore to save mine awne people (which is one poynt of glorie in a Captein) and to preserve the towne, which is my just and lawfull inheritaunce: And to saue as many of you as will not willyngly be destroyed, I have appoynted the mekest of the three Damosels to afflict and plague you. vntill you be brideled and brought to reason, which shall be when it shall please me, and not at your appoyntment: And therfore I say and affirme, that the gaine of a Capteine by any of these three handmaides is both honorable and triumphant: But of all three, the yongest mayd is in all thing most profitable and commodious. And nowe to aunswere to your demaundes, as touchyng the poore people liyng in the ditches, I assure you, I more lament your lacke of charitie toward your Christian brethren, yea, and your awne nacion, your awne blood, and your awne Countrie men, then I reioyce at the vndoyng of so many creatures, and castyng away of so many enemyes. You like Tirauntes put them out of the towne, to the entent that I should slay them, and yet I have saved their lyues. woulde give them neyther meate nor drinke, and yet I beyng their mortall enemie haue succoured and relieued them: So that if any vncharitie be, it is in you: If any shame or reproch be taken, receyue it your selfe, for you be the doers. If I have done them good, let God reward me, for I look of them to haue no thankes, if you haue done them euill. so shall you be done to. And as to suffer your people to passe out of the Citie through my campe, no, no, I will not so accomplishe your cloked request, but you shall kepe them still to spend your victualles: And as to assault your towne, I will you knowe it, that I am thereto both able and willyng as I see tyme and occasion: But seyng the choyse is in my hande to tame you eyther with blood, fyre, or famin, or wyth all, I will take the chovse at my pleasure and not at yours. And with that the king with a frowning countenaunce departed from them into his Chamber, and commaunded them to dyne with his officers.

When he was departed, the French men meruayled at his excellent wit, and mused at the hautinesse of his courage, and after they had dyned and consulted together, they required once again to haue accesse vato his royall presence, which when it was to them graunted, they humbly on their knees besought him to take a truce for. viij. dayes, in the which they might by theyr Commissioners take some ende and good conclusion betwene him and hys counsaile. The king like a piteous Prince, rather couetyng the preservation of the people, then their destruction, after good deliberation taken, graunted to them their askyng, with the which aunswere they ioyously returned.

After their departure, there were appoynted and set vp three rich tents, the one for the Lordes of Englande to consult together: The seconde for the Commissioners of the Citie, and the thirde for both partes to argue and debate the matter in. The Commissioners for the Englishe part were, the Erles of Warwike, and Sarisburie, the Lorde Fitzhugh, Sir Water Hungerforde, Sir Gilbert Vmfreuile, Sir Iohn Robsert, and Iohn de Vasques de Almada. And for the Frenche part were appoynted Sir Guy de Butteller, and sixe other.

Duryng this truce, every day the Commissioners met, the Englishmen accused, and the Frenchmen excused. The Englishemen demaunded muche, and the Frenchmen proffered little. Thus with arguyng and reasonyng the. viij. day came, and nothing was done, nor one article concluded. Wherefore the Englishe men toke downe their Tentes, and the French men toke their leaue: But at their departing, they remembrying themselves, required the Englishe Lordes for the love of God that the truce might continue vntill the Sonne settyng the next day, to the which the Lordes assented.

When the Frenchmen were returned to Roan, sodeinly in all the towne sprong a rumor that the truce was expired, and nothing determined. Then the poore people ranne about the streetes lyke Frantike persons, showtyng, criving, and callying their Capteynes and Gouernours murderers, and manquellers, saiving that for their pryde and stiffe stomacke, all this miserie was happened vnto the towne, threatnyng to slay them if they woulde not agree vnto the king of Englandes demaund and request.

The Magistrates beyng amased with the furie of the people, called all the towne together, to knowe their mindes and opinions. The whole voyce of the commons was to yeelde, yelde rather than starue. Then the French men in the Euening came to the Tent of Sir Iohn Robsert, requiryng him of gentlenesse to moue the king that the Truce might be prolonged for foure dayes. The King therevnto agreed, and appoynted the Archbishop of Cantorbury, and the other seuen before named for his partie, and the Citizens appoynted an egall number for them. So the Tentes were againe set vp, and dayly were assemblies, and much treatie on both partes. And on the fourth day the treatie was concluded, to the great reioysyng of the poore Citizens of Roan, and the same treatie The Citie of was conteyned in. xxij. Articles, which for that they are long, I do omit them: But the Roam is yelded somme and effect of them were, that they yeelded the towne of Roan, themselves and their goodes vnto the king of England, the. xix. day of Ianuary, in the yere aforesayde.

When the rendryng of the Citie of Roan was blowen through Normadie, and the Kinges proclamation published through the Countrie, it is in a maner incredible to here what a number of townes yelded vnto the king, not beyng once desyred, which to recite I purpose not, because at this day England possesseth not one of them.

Nowe when the gettyng of Roan, and the delivery of all the townes aforesayde were blowen through the Realme of Fraunce, the heartes of the Frenchmen were sodeinly heavie, and their courages soone cooled. But who soeuer kicked and winched at this matter, Iohn Duke of Burgoyn raged & swelled, yea, and so muche freated, that he wist not what to say, and lesse to do: And no marueyle, for he was at one time vexed with a double disease. For he ruled both king Charles and his, and did all thinges at his will, whether reason agreed or no, and for that cause he knewe that he was neyther free from disdeyn, nor yet deliuered from the scope of malice. And therefore he imagined y all mischiefes and calamities which channeed in the common wealth should be imputed and assigned to his vnpolitique doyng, or to hys negligent permission. Wherefore he imagined it profitable to the realme, and to him selfe most available, if by any meanes possible he could devise any way or meane, by the which he might reconcile and joyne in amitye the two great and mightie kinges of England and of Fraunce. Which thing once obteyned, and beyng delivered from all feare of exterior hostilitie, he determined first to revenge his quarell agaynst Charles the Dolphyn, & after to represse all causes of grudge or disdeyne, and to recouer againe both the fauour of the Commonaltie, and also to put away all causes of suspicion or imagined infamie against him and his procedyngs. And intending to buyld spon this fraile foundation, he sent letters and Ambassadors to the king of England, advertising him that if he would personally come to a communication, to be had. between him and Charles the French king, he doubted nothing but by hys onely meanes. peace should be induced, and bloodie battaile excluded.

King Henry heard gently the Ambassadors, and agreed to their request and desyre, and so came to Maunt, where at the feast of Penthecost he kept a liberall house to all commers, and sate himselfe in great estate. On which daye eyther for good seruice before by them done, or for good hope of things to come, he created Gascon de Foyes a valyaunt Gascoyne, Erle of Longeuyle, and Syr Iohn Gray he made Erle of Tankeruyle, and syr Iohn Bourshier Erle/of Ewe. After this solempne feast ended, the place of enterniew and meeting was appointed, to be beside Melaus on the ryuer of Seyne in a fayre playne, enery parte was by the Commissioners appointed to their grounde. The frenchmen diched, trenched and paled their lodgings for feare of after clappes: But the English men had their parte onely barred and ported. The king of Englande had a large Tent of blewe Veluet and greene, richely embrodered with two decises, the one was an Antlop drawing in an horse Mill: the other was an Antlop sitting in an high stage, with a braunch of Olife in his mouth. And the tent was garnished and decked with this poesy. After busic labour, commeth victorious rest. And on the top and height of the same was set a great Egle of Golde, whose eyes were of suche Orient Diamondes, that they glistered and shone over the whole field.

The French king likewise had in his Parke a fayre Pauilion of blewe Veluet, richely embrodered with flowre deluces, and on the top of the same was set a Hart flyeng made all of fyne Siluer winges enameled. Betwene these two Campes or enclosures was appointed a Tent of purple Veluet, for the counsaylours to meete in, and every parte had an egall number to watch on the night, and to see good order on the daye.

A meeting betwene the king of Englande and the Frenche Quene. &c. When the day of appointment approched, the king of England accompanied with the Dukes of Clarence and Gloucester his brethren, and the Duke of Excester his Vncle, and Henry Bewford Clerck, his other Vncle, which after was Bishop of Winchester and Cardinall, and the Erles of March and Salsburie, and other to the number of a thousand men of warre entered into his parke, and tooke his lodging. Likewise for the french part, thether came Isabell the French Queene, because the king her husbande was fallen into his old freneticall disease, having in her company the Duke of Burgoyn, and the Erle of saint Paule: And she had attending upon her the fayre Lady Katheryn her daughter, and. xxvj. Ladyes & Damosels, and had also for her furniture a thousand men of warre.

After these estates had reposed themselves one night in their Tents, the next daye all suche as were appointed, repayred toward the paulion ordeyned for the consultation. Where the king of Englande lyke a prince of great stomack, and no lesse good behaulour, receyued humbly the Frenche Queene and her daughter, and them honorably embraced, and familierly kissed. The Duke of Burgoyn made lowe curtesie, and bowed to the king, whome the king louingly tooke by the hande, and honorably enterteyned him. salutations and embracings finished, they fell to counsayle within the Pauilion assigned, which was kept with a garde appointed by both the parties, that none but commissioners should once attempt to enter. After the kings request made, and his demaunds declared: The French Queene and her company tooke leave louingly of the king of England, and returned vnto Ponthoyse, to certefie her husband. And king Henry returned to Maunt. The next day after they assembled agayne, and the French parte brought with them the Lady Katheryn, onely to the entent that the king of England seing and beholding so fayre a Lady, and so minion a Damosell, should so be inflamed and rapt in loue, that he to obteyne so bewtifull an espouse, should the sooner agree to a gentle peace and louing composition. This company met together eyght seuerall times, sometime the one: parte was more, and sometime the other. And notwithstanding that the Englishe menand french men were lodged no great distaunce a sunder, yet was their neuer fray nor occasion of tumult or ryot prouoked or stirred of any of both the partes.

In this assemble many wordes were spent and no deedes done, many things required and fewe offered, many arguments made, and nothing concluded. Some write that the Dolphyn to let this treatie, sent to the Duke of Burgoyn Sir Trauagny du Chastell, declaring to him, that if he would let this agreement, he would common with him, and take such an order, that not onely they but the whole realme of Fraunce should thereof be glad and reioyce: But what was the very cause of the breache, no man certainely declareth. When none effect ensued of this long consultation, both parties after a Princely maner departed, the Englishe men to Nantes, and the french men to Pounthoyse.

The king of Englande was nothing pleased that this communication came to no better ende: wherefore he mistrustyng the Duke of Burgoyn, to be the very let and stop of his desyres and requestes, sayde vnto him before his departing: Fayre Cossyn, we will have your kinges daughter, and all things that we demaunde with her, or we will drive your king and you out of his realme. Well sayde the Duke of Burgoyn, before you drive the king and mee out of hys Realme, ye shall be well wearied, and thereof we doubt

After this departure the Duke of Burgoyn being nobly accompanied, roade to the A treaty concluded betweene towne of Melune, where the Dolphyn then soiourneyed, and in the playne fieldes they the Duke of two lyke friendes commoned together, and concluded apparantly an open amitie and sure the Dolphyn of friendship, which was written by Notaries, and signed with their handes, and sealed with Fraunce. their great seales of armes: But as the sequele sheweth, heart thought not that tongue talked, nor minde meant not, that hande wroate. This treatie was concluded the sixt daye of Iulie. 1419. and was proclaymed in Parys, Amyence and Ponthoyse.

When this new alyaunce was declared vnto the king of England, then lyeng at Maunt, he was therewith sore displeased, and not without cause, for he perceaued that the force of these two princes were much stronger now being vnited in one, then they were before when they were separated and diuyded. Yet for all this great sworne amitie he went forward with his entended enterprise. Wherefore he sent Captaine Bueffe brother to the Erle of Foys newly created the Erle of Longewyle, with. xv. hundreth men secretly to the towne of Ponthoyse, which on Trinitie Sunday early in the morning came into the towne, and so sodainely and quickly had set up their scaling ladders to the wall, that they were entred into the towne, or the watch perceaued them, cryeng, Saint George, Saint

The Lorde Lisleadam Captaine of the towne perceauing the walles scaled, and the market place gayned, opened the gate towarde Paris, at the which, he with all his retinue and dyuerse of the townes men, to the number of eyght thousand, fled. For the Englishe men durst not, because their number was small, once divide themselves or fall to pilfring, till about nine of the clock, at which time the Duke of Clarence came to their ayde with five thousand men, and by the way he encountred divers Burgesses of the towne flyeng with all their substaunce toward Beauuoys, whome he tooke prisoners, and brought them to their olde dwellyng place.

When the Duke was come to Ponthoyse, he much praysed the valyauntnesse of the assaylants, and gaue to them the chiefe spoyle of the towne and Merchaunts, of the which they had a great and riche praye. Then the Duke passed forwarde and came before Paris, and lay before the Citie two dayes, and two nightes without any proffer, eyther of issue by his enimies or of defence if he had the same assaulted, which he could not well do because it was long and ample, and his number small, and for so great an enterprise not furnished, wherefore seing that his enimies durst not once looke vpon him, he returned agayne to Ponthoyse: For the taking of which towne the countrie of Fraunce and especially the Parisians were sore dismayed and astonied, for now there was no Fortresse left hable to resist or withstande the Englishmen, but that they might come to Paris whensoeuer they would: In so much that the Irishe men ouercame all the Isle of Fraunce, and did to the french men innumerable dammages (as their awne writers affirme) and. brought daylie prayes to the English army. And beside that, they would robbe houses, and lay beddes vpon the backs of the kyne and Oxen, and ride vpon them, and carie yong children before them, and sell them to the English men for slaues: which straunge doyngs so feared the french men within the territorie of Paris, and the countrie about, that the rude persons fied out of the Villages with all their stuffe, to the Citie of Paris.

The French king and the Duke of Burgoyn liuyng at Saint Dionyse, heeryng of all these doynges, departed in all the hast with the Queene & her daughter to Troys in Champaigne, there takyng great deliberation what was best to be done, leauyng at Paris.

the Erle of saint Paule, and the Lord Lisleadam with a great puissaunce to defende the At the same tyme the Duke of Clarence tooke the strong towne of Gysors, and the towne of Gayllard, and all the townes of Normandie were shortly after eyther taken by force or rendred, except Mount Saint Michell, which because the gaine thereof was very little, and the losse in assaultyng of it semed to be very much, and also it could do small harme or none vnto the Countrie, therfore the same was neyther assaulted nor besieged.

And thus, as you have heard, was the Duchie of Normandy reduced againe to the right line, which had bene from the tyme of king Edwarde the thirde in the yere of our Lorde.

1255, wrongfully deteyned from the kinges of England.

The wise men of Fraunce sore lamenting the chaunce of their Country, and the miserie of their people, sawe and perceyued that they had puissaunce inough to defende their enemies, if they were at a perfect concorde among themselves. And they sawe also that although there were a peace betweene the Dolphyn and the Duke of Burgoyn, yet they espied no good fruit to come therof: For the Duke eyther for secret displeasure y he bare to the Dolphyn, or for the doubt that he had of the Englishemen, neuer assayled by himselfe the armie of king Henry, nor neuer sent ayde nor succours to the Dolphyn. Wherefore by meanes of Frendes a newe communication was appointed, to the entent that the corrupt dregges of their olde malice and inwarde grudges might clerely be expulsed and cast out. The place of this metyng was appointed at the Towne of Monstrell Faultyou, so called because a small brooke called You runneth there to the ryuer of Seyne. Ouer which river was made a Bridge with dyuerse Barres ouerthwart, so that the princes opening the Barres might embrace eche other, and kepying the barres shut, eche might see and common with other at their pleasure. The day was appoynted when these two great Princes should meete, to the entent that all Civile discorde shoulde by this communication be cleere forgotten, or at the least should be suspended vntill the enemies were vanquished and driven out of their Countries. But this mocion succeded worse then the entreators deuysed: For whilest every man was fulfilled with hope of peace and concorde, craftie imagination crept out of cankerd displeasure, and had almost confounded altogether.

A meeting apof Burgoyn, and the Dolphyn.

When the day and place of the solempne Enteruieu was agreed and assigned, Tauagny pointed be-twene the Duke du Chastell, a man prompt and prone to all mischiese, calling to his remembrance ŷ shamefull murder of Lewes Duke of Orleance, (vnder whome he had long bene a Capteine) done and committed by this Duke of Burgoyn, as before as you have heard, determined with himselfe to reuenge the death of his olde maister and Lorde. Some wryte that he was therevnto styrred and prouoked by the Dolphyn (and not vnlike) for the Dolphyn which bare a continual hatred to the Duke of Burgoyne, imagined paraduenture by this meanes to represse and subdue the whole power and high pride of this Duke, without any suspicion of fraude or reproche of vntruth and villanie. The day came, which was the. xij. day of August, and euery Prince with his number appoynted came to this Bridge. The Duke of Burgoyne beyng warned by his friendes to keepe his Closure, and the Barres on his syde shut, little regarding his friendes monition, as a man that could not advoyde the stroke for him provided, opened the Barres and Closure, and came to the Dolphyns presence, which was cleane armed, and kneled downe on the one knee, shewyng to him great reuerence and humilitie. The Dolphyn shewed to him no louyng countenance, but reproued him, laiying to his charge much vntruth, and great dishonour: The Duke againe boldely defended his cause, and kneeled still, and his sworde was at his back, which with often turnyng and mouing was shaken very backwarde, wherefore the Duke chaunced to put his hand backe to plucke his sworde forward. What, quod Sir Robert de Loyr, will you drawe your sworde agaynst my Lorde the Dolphyn? When Tauagny du Chastell apperceyued that an occasion was geuen to performe his enterprice, he incontinent strake him with a Hatchet on the head, so that he coulde not speake, and other

standyng by shortly dispatched him of his lyfe. Diverse of his part not, thinkyng him to be dead, beganne to drawe weapon, amongest whome the Lorde Nouale was slaine, and the other taken. For this murther were condemned (but not apprehended) by Parliament. the President of Prouynce, the Vicont of Narbone, Guilliam Battailier, Tauagny du Chastell, Robert Loyr, and foure other. This was the ende of Iohn called the proude Duke of Burgoyne, which more regarded civile warre then his awne life and welfare. And this sodeyn death, as I thinke, came not to him without desert, for shamefullye murtheryng of Lewes Duke of Orleaunce, the French kinges brother: such is the judgement of God, that blood is recompensed with blood, and vanatural murther is requited with shamefull death, or sodeine destruction.

After this heynous murther thus committed, the Dolphyns seruaunts spoyled the Duke of all his garmentes, even to his shirt, and covered his face with his hosen: But forasmuch as yet this is no part of the Historie of England, I will return againe where I left.

When Philip Erle of Caroloys, sonne and heyre to this Duke Iohn, and nowe by the murther and death of his father was made Duke of Burgoyne, and Erle of Flaundyrs, was informed of this misfortune, he toke the matter very grieuously and heavily, insomuch that none of his counsail durst once speake vnto him, and inespeciall the Ladie Michell his wife, who was sister to the Dolphin, and daughter vnto the French king, was in great feare to be forsaken, and cast out of his house and fauour: But as all thinges end, so sorrow asswageth. When his grieuous sorowe was somewhat mitigated, he first by the aduice of his counsaile, tooke into his fauour the favre Duches his wife, and after sent diverse notable Ambassadors to the king of England, who lay then at Roan, to treat and conclude a peace betweene them both for a certeyn space: To which request, in hope A peace conof a better chaunce, king Henry agreed. And after that, he kept a solempne Obsequie cluded betwene for his father at Saint Vaas in Arras. Duryng which tyme the Erle of Saint Paule, and Burgoyn and the king of Engthe Parisiens sent to the Duke of Burgoin Ambassadors, to know what they should do, land. and howe they should defende themselves agaynst the Englishe men. He gently aunswered, that he trusted shortly by the ayde of God to conclude a peace between England and

When these Ambassadors were departed, the Duke after long consultation had with his counsaile and nobilitie, sent the Bishop of Arras and two notable persons to the king of England, with certeine Articles which the Duke of Burgoyn offered to him of loue, as he sayde. The king of England considering with himselfe that the Duke of Burgoyne was a convenient instrument to bring his purpose to passe, did therefore louyngly receyue and honourably enterteyn his Ambassadors, saiyng vnto them, that very shortly he would send his Ambassadors vnto him, that should declare vnto him hys lawfull and reasonable requestes and desyres.

With this message the Dukes Ambassadors departed toward Arras: and incotinent after their departure, king Henry sent the Erle of Warwike, & the Bishop of Rochester with many knightes and squiers, to the Duke of Burgoyn, who when they came to the Duke, declared the effect of their Ambassade. He gently heard their requestes, and some he allowed, and some he augmented, and some he altered and disalowed: But in conclusion the Duke of Burgoyn, and the king of England agreed vpon certeyne Articles, so that the French king and his Commons would assent vnto the same. And shortly after it was agreed that the king of Englande shoulde sende in the companie of the Duke of Burgoyn, his Ambassadors to Troy in Champein, sufficiently aucthorised to conclude so great a matter. The king of Englande beyng in good hope that all his affayres should prosperously succeede and go forwarde, sent to the Duke of Burgoyn, his Vncle the Duke of Exceter, the Erle of Sarisbury, the Bishop of Ely, the Lorde Fanhope, & Lord Fitz Hugh sir Iohn Robsart and sir Philip Hall, with divers Doctors, and they were in number fiue hundreth horse, which in the companie of the Duke of Burgoyn came to the Ci-tie of Troys the. xxi. day of March. The Frenche king, the Queene, and the Ladie Katheryn, them receyued and hartely welcommed, shewing great tokens and signes of loue and amitie. And after a fewe dayes they fell to counsaile, in the which it was concluded, that king Henry of England should come to Troys, and marry the Ladie Katheryn, and the king should make him heyre of his Realme, Crowne, and dignitie, after his departure out of this natural lyfe, with many other articles which hereafter shall be rehersed.

When all these things were done and concluded, the Ambassadors of England depart-A peace conclu- ed toward their king, leaving behind them Sir Iohn Robsart, to geue his attendannce on ded betweenethe the Lady Katheryn. When king Henry had heard his Ambassadors rehearse the articles the king of Eng- of the treatie and amity concluded, he condiscended and agreed with all diligence to set forward to Troys, longyng for the sight of the Lady Katheryn his newe spouse. And being admonished by the late mischaunce of Iohn Duke of Burgoyn, he did not rashly presume to aduenture himselfe among his newe reconciled enemies: But when he sawe all things safe and in good order, he being accompanied with the Dukes of Clarence and Glocester his brethren, the Erles of Warwike, Sarisburie, Huntyngdon, Ewe, Tankeruyle and Longuyle, and. xv. thousand men of warre, departed from Rhoan to Ponthoyse, and from thence to Saint Dionyce, which is two leagues from Paris, and from thence to Pontcharenton, where he left a garrison of men to keepe the passage, and from thence by Prouynce he came to Troys, where the Duke of Burgoyn accompanied with many noble men receased him two leagues without the towne, and conveyed him to his lodging and his princes with him, and all his armie was lodged in villages there aboutes. And after he had awhyle reposed himselfe, he went to visite the king, the Quene and the Ladye Katheryn, whome he found in Saint Peters Church, where was an honorable meeting and a louing embracing on both sydes, which was the twentie daye of Maye, and there at the same time were the Lady Katheryn and the king of Englande made sure together, and the King Henry ma- thirde daye of Iune next following, they were with all solempnitie maried in the same Church. At which mariage the Englishmen made such triumphs & reioysing, as though ter to the French nothing in the worlde coulde have chaunced more happie and honorable.

And when this honourable mariage was solempnized, and the feastes and triumphes of the same finished, then the two kings and their counsayle assembled together dyuers dayes, wherin the former league and treaty was in dyuers pointes altered and brought to a certainetie, by the deuise of the king of England and his brethren, when this great matter was finished, the kings for their parte sware to observe the same in all pointes. Lykewise sware the Duke of Burgoyn, and a great number of Princes and nobles, which were present, and they were the better perswaded therevnto, for that they maruelled before at the noble actes done by King Henry, of whom they had knowledge onely by reporte, and nowe they more maruayled when they sawe and beheld the honour and wisedome of his person. And immediatly vpon this agreement, King Henry was proclaymed heyre and Regent of Fraunce. And as the french king sent the copie of this treaty to euery towne in rent of Fraunce. Fraunce: So the king of Englande sent the same in Englishe to every Citie and market towne of Englande, to be published and made knowne, the Copie of which articles here after ensue, worde for worde.

King Henry is proclaimed heyre and Re-

> 1 First, it is accorded betwixt our father and vs, that for as much as by the bond of Matrimonie made for the good of the peace between vs, and oure most dere beloued Katheryn, daughter of our sayde father, and of our most dere mother, Isabell his wife, the same Charles and Isabell bene made father and mother, therfore them as our father and mother we shall have and worship, as it sitteth and seemeth so a worthy prince and princesse to be worshipped, principally before all other temporall persons of the worlde.

> 2 Also, we shall not distrouble, disseason or letten our father aforesayde, but that he holde and possesse as long as he lyueth, as he holdeth and possesseth at this time the crowne and the dignitie royall of Fraunce, and rentes and proffites for the same, of the sustenaunce of his estate, and charges of the realme. And our foresayde mother also hold as long as shee lyueth the state and dignitie of the Quene, after the maner of the same realine, with conuenable conuenience parte of the sayed rents and profites.

3 Also, that the foresayde Ladye Katheryn shall take and haue dower in our Realme of England as Quenes of Englande here afore were wont for to take and haue, that is to say, to the some of. xl.M. Scutes, of the which two algate shall be worth a noble Englishe.

4 Also, that by § waies maners and meanes that we may without transgressio or offence of other made by vs, for to kepe § lawes, customes, vsages and rights of our said realme of England, shal doen our labor & pursute, that the said Katherin also sone as it may be doen, be made sure to take and for to have in our sayd realme of England from the tyme of our death § said dower of. xl.M. Scutes yerely, of § which twaine algate be worth a noble English.

5 Also if it hap the sayde Katheryn to ouerline vs, she shall take and have the realme of Fraunce immediatly, from the time of our death, dower to the somme of xx. M. Franks yerely of and vpon the lands, places and Lordshippes that helde, and had Blaunch sometime wyfe of Philip Boseele to our sayde father.

6 Also, that after the death of our father aforesayde, and from thence forwarde, the crowne and the realme of Fraunce with all the rightes and appurtenances shall remaine and abide to vs, and been of vs and of our heires for euermore.

7 Also, for as muche as oure sayde father is witholden with divers sicknesse, in suche maner as he may not intende in hys owne person, for to dispose for the needes of the foresayde realme of Fraunce: therefore during the life of our sayde father, the faculties and exercise of the governaunce and disposition of the publique and common proffite of the sayde realme of Fraunce with counsayle and nobles and wise men of the same realme of Fraunce, shall be and abide to vs: So that from henceforth we may governe the same realme by vs. And also to admit to our counsayle and assistence of the sayde nobles, suche as we shall thinke meete, the which faculties and exercise of governaunce thus being toward vs, we shall labor and purpose vs speedely, diligently and truely to that that maye be and ought for to be to the worship of God and our sayde father and mother, and also to the common good of the sayde realme, and that realme with the counsayle and helpe of the worthy and great nobles of the same realme for to be defended, peased and governed after right and equitie.

8 Also, that we of our owne power shall doe the courte of the parliament of Fraunce to be kept and observed in his aucthortic and soueraigntie, and in all that is doen to it in all maner of places, that nowe or in time comming is or shall be subject to our sayed

father.

9 Also, we to our power shall defend and help all and enery of the Peres, Nobles, Cities, Townes, commonalties and singular persons, nowe or in tyme comming, subjects to our father in their rightes, customes, privileges, fredome and fraunchises longing or due to them in all maner of places, now or in time comming subject to our father.

10 Also, we diligently and truely shall trauayle to our power, and doe that iustice be administred and done in the same Realme of Fraunce after the lawes, customes and rightes of the same realme, without personalx exception. And that we shall keepe and holde the subjectes of the same realme in tranquillitie and peace, and to our power we shall defende them agaynst all maner of violence and oppression.

11 Also, we to our power shall prouide, and to doe our power that able persons and profitable bene taken to the offices, as well of Iustices and other offices longing to the gournaunce of the demaynes and of other offices of the sayde realme of Fraunce for the good, right and peaceable Iustice of the same, and for the administration that shall be committed vnto them, and that they be suche persons that after the lawes and rightes of the same realme, and for the vilitie and profite of our sayde father shall minister, and that the foresayde Realme shall be taken and deputed to the same offices.

12 Also, that we of our power so soone as it may commodiously be done, shall trauaile for to put into the obedience of our sayde father, all maner of Cities, Townes and Castels, places, Countries and persons within the realme of Fraunce, disobedient and rebels to our sayde father, holding with them which bene called the Dolphyn or Arminack.

- 13 Also, that we might the more commodiously, surely and freely doen, exercise and fulfill these things aforesayde, It is accorded that all worthy nobles and estates of the same realme of Fraunce, as well spirituals as temporals, and also Cities, notables and commonalties, and citezens, Burgeis of townes of the realme of Fraunce, that bene obeysaunt at this time to our sayde father shall make these othes that followen.
- 14 First, to vs hauyng the facultie, exercise, disposition and gouernaunce of the fore-sayde common profite to our hestes and commaundementes they shall meekely and obediently obey and intende in all maner of thing concerning the exercise of gouernaunce of the same realme.

15 Also, that the worthy great Nobles and estates of the sayde realme, as well Spirituals as Temporals, and also Cities and notable commonalties and Citezens and Burgesses of the same realme in all maner of things well and truely shall kepe and to their power shall doe to be kept, of so much as to them belongeth or to any of them all, those things that bene appointed and accorded between our aforesayde father and mother and vs, with the counsayle of them whome vs lust to call to vs.

16 Also, that continually from the death and after the death of our sayde father Charles, they shall be our true liege men and our heires, and they shall receyue and admit vs for their liege and souereigne and verie King of Fraunce, and for suche to obey vs without opposition, contradiction or difficultie, as they been to our foresayde father during his lyfe, neuer after this realme of Fraunce shall obey to man as king or Regent of Fraunce, but to vs and our heires. Also they shall not be in counsayle, helpe or assent that we leese life or limme, or be take with euill taking, or that we suffer harme or diminition in person, estate, worship or goodes, but if they know any suche thing for to be cast or imagined agaynst vs, they shall let it to their power, and they shall doen vs to weten thereof as hastely as they may by them selfe, by message or by letters.

17 Also, that all maner of conquest that should be made by vs in Fraunce, vpon the sayde inobedients out of the Duchie of Normandie, shall be doen to the profite of our sayde father, and that to our power we shall doe that all maner of landes and Lordships that beene in the places so for to be conquered longyng to persons obeyong to oure sayed father, which shall sweare for to keepe this present accorde, shall be restored to the same-persons to whom they long to.

18 Also, that all maner of persons, of holy Church beneficed in the Duchye of Normandie or any other places in the realme of Fraunce subject to our father and fauoring the partie of the Dukes of Burgoyne which shall sweare to keepe this present accord, shall enjoy peaceably their benefices of holy church in § Duchy of Normandy, or in any other places next aforesaid:

19 Also likewise all maner persons of holy Church obedient to vs and beneficed in the realme of Fraunce, and places subject to our father that shall swere to keepe this present accorde, shall injoy peaceably their benefices of holy Church in places next about-sayde.

20 Also that all maner of Churches, Vniuersityes, and studies generall, and all Colleges of studies, and other Colleges of holy Church, beyng in places nowe or in tyme commyng subject to our father, or in the Duchie of Normandie, or other places in the Realme of Fraunce subject to vs, shall enjoy their rightes and possessions, rentes, prerogatives, liberties, and franchises, longyng or dewe to them in any maner of wise in the sayde

Realme

Realme of Fraunce, sauyng the right of the Crowne of Fraunce, & euery other person.

21 Also by Gods helpe, when it happeneth vs to come to the Crowne of Fraunce, the Duchie of Normandie, and all other places conquered by vs in the realme of Fraunce, shall bowe vnder the commaundement, obeysaunce and Monarchie of the Crowne of Fraunce.

22 Also that we shall enforce vs, and do to our power that recompence be made by our sayde father, without diminution of the Crowne of Fraunce, to persons obeing to him, and fauouryng to that partie that is sayd Burgoyn, to whome longeth landes, Lordshippes, rentes, or possessions in the sayde Duchie of Normandie, or other places in the realme of Fraunce conquered by vs hethertowarde, geuen by vs in places, and landes gotten, or to be gotten and ouercome, in the name of our sayd father vpon rebelles, and inobedientes to him. And if it so be, that such maner of recompence be not made to the sayd persons by the lyfe of our sayde father, we shall make that recompence, in such maner of places and goodes, when it hapneth by Gods grace to the Crowne of Fraunce. And it so be that the landes, Lordships, rentes, or possessions, the which longeth to such maner of persons in the said Duchie, and places be not genen by vs, the same personnes shall be restored to them without any delay.

23 Also duryng the life of our sayde father, in all places nowe, or in tyme commyng subject to him, letters of common justice, and also grauntes of offices and giftes, pardones or remissions and privileges shall be written and proceede under the name and seale of our sayde father. And forasmuch as some singular case may fall, that may not be foreseene by mannes witte, in the which it might be necessary and behouefull that we do write our letters, in such maner case if any hap, for the good and suretie of our sayd father, and for the gouernaunce that longeth to vs, as is before said, and for to eschewen perilles that otherwise might fall to the prejudice of our sayde father, to write our letters, by the which we shall commaund, charge, and defende after the nature and qualitie of the neede in our fathers behalfe, and ours as Regent of Fraunce.

24 Also that duryng our fathers lyfe, we shall not call ne write vs king of Fraunce, but vtterlye we shall abstayne vs from that name as long as our father liueth.

25 Also that our sayd father duryng his lyfe shall nempne, call, and write vs in French in this maner. Nostre trechier filz Henry Roy Dengleterre, heretere de Fraunce, and in Latin in this maner. Preclarissimus filius noster Henricus Rex Anglie, & heres Frauncie.

26 Also that we shall put none impositions or exactions, or do charge the subjectes of our sayd father without cause reasonable and necessary, ne otherwise then for common good of the realme of Fraunce, and after the saiying & askying of the laws and customes of the three estates of eyther of the realmes of Fraunce and England, that all maner of obstacles may be done away, and in this partie that it be ordeyned and prouided, that from the time that we or any of our heyres come to the crowne of Fraunce, both the Crownes, that is to say of Fraunce and England, perpetually be together in one, and in the same person, that is to say, from our fathers lyfe, to vs, and from the terme of our life thenceforwarde, in the persons of our heyres, that shall be one after an other. And that both realmes shall be gouerned, fro that we or any of our heires come to the same, not severally under divers kinges in one time, but under the same person, which for the tyme shall be king of both the realmes, and sowereigne Lord as aforesaid, kepyng neverthelesse in all maner of other thinges to eyther of the same realmes their rightes, liberties, customes, vsages, and lawes, not makyng subject in any maner of wise one of the same realmes to the rightes, lawes, or vsages, of that other.

28 Also that henceforwarde, perpetually shall be still rest, and that in all maner of wise, 3 Z 2 dissensions, dissensions, hates, rancors, enuies, and warres, betwene the same realmes of Fraunce and England, and the people of the same realmes, drawyng to accorde of the same peace, may cease and be broken.

29 Also that there shall be from henceforward for euermore, peace and tranquillitie, and good accorde, and common affection, and stable frendship, betwene the same realmes, and their subjectes beforesaye: the same realmes shall keepe themselves with their Counsaile, helpes, and common assistance, against all maner of men that enforce them for to done, or to imagin wrongs, harmes, displeasures, or grieuaunce to them, or to eyther of them. And they shall be conversant, and Marchandisen freely and surely together, paiying the custome due and accustomed. And they shall be conversant also, that all the confederates and alves of our sayd father, and the realme of Fraunce aforesayde, and also our confederates of the realme of England aforesayde, shall in viij. Monethes from the tyme of this accorde of peace, as it is notefyed to them, declare by their letters, that they wyll drawe to this accord, and will be comprehended under the treaties and accorde of this peace, sauying neverthelesse eyther of the same Crownes, & also all maner actions, rightes, and revenues that longen to our sayd father and his subjectes and to vs, and to our subjectes, again such maner of allies and confederacies.

30 Also neyther our father, neyther our brother the Duke of Burgoyn shall begyn ne make with Charles, clepyng himselfe the Dolphyn of Vyennes any treatie or peace or accorde, but by counsaile and assent of all and eche of vs thre, or of other thre estates of either of the sayd realmes aboue named.

21 Also that we with assent of our sayde brother of Burgoyn and other of the nobles of the realme of Fraunce, the which therto ought to be called, shall ordeyne for the gouernaunce of our sayd father sekerly, louyngly and honestly after the askyng of his royall estate and dignitie by the maner that shall bee to the worship of God and of our father and of the realme of Fraunce.

32 Also all maner of persons that shall be about our father to do him personall service, not onely in office but in all other services, aswell the nobles and gentles as other shall be suche as hath bene borne in the realme of Fraunce or in places longyng to Fraunce, good, wise, true and able to that foresayde service. And our sayde father shall dwell in places notable of his obedience and no where else. Wherefore we charge and commaunde our sayde liege subjectes and other beyng vnder our obedience that they keepe and do to be kept in all that longeth to them this accorde and peace after the forme and maner as it is accorded. And that they attempt in no maner wise any thing that may be prejudice or contrary to the same accord and peace vpon paine of life and lymme, and all that they may forsevt against vs. Youen at Troys the. xxx. day of May. 1420. and proclaymed in London the. xx. day of Iune.

33 Also that we for the thinges aforesayde and euerye one of them shall geue our assent by our letters patentes, sealed with our seale vnto our said father with all approbation and confirmation of vs and all other of our blood roiall and of all the cities and townes to vs obedient sealed with their seales accustomed. And further our sayde father besyde his letters patentes sealed vnder his great seale shall make or cause to be made letters approbatory and confirmacions of the Peeres of his realme and of the Lords, Citezens, and Burgesses of the same vnder his obedience, all which articles we have sworne to kepe vpon the holy Euangelistes.

So soone as these articles were made and concluded, as aforesayde, the king of England having in his company the French king, and the Duke of Burgoyn came before the towne of Sene in Burgoyn, which toke part with the Dolphyn. And after that he had destroyed the Countrie about it, within xv. dayes the towne was yeelded. And from thence he removued to Mounstrell Falt Yowe, where the former Duke of Burgoyn was slayne, as is before mencioned, which towne was taken by assault, and many of the Dolphyns part apprehended before they could get to the Castell. And after the getting of the towne, the Castell which was newly replenished with men and victuall, denyed to render, and therefore it was strongly besieged.

The king of Englande sent certaine of the prisoners that he had taken in this towne to aduise the captain of the Castell to yeeld the same: But they obstinately denyed the request, genyng enill speech to the kinges Herault. Wherfore the king of Englande caused a Gibbet to be set up before the Castell, on the which were hanged. xij. prisoners, all Gentlemen and friends to the Captaine. When the Lorde of Guytry Lieutenant of the Castell perceived that by no meanes he could be releeved nor succored, and fearing to be taken by force, he began to treate with the king of England, which in eyght dayes would take none of his offers. But in conclusion he and his rendred themselves simply, their lyues onely saved: And after sixe weekes siege, the Castell was delyvered, and the Erle of Warwike was made Capitaine of the towne and Castell, which fortefyed the same with men, ordinaunce and artillarie. From thence the king of Englande departed to Molyn Molyn upon vppon Seyn, and besieged it rounde about, in whose company were the French king, the Seyn besieged.

Sir Lewes Mohewe. with many other knightes, Esquiers and Gentlemen, that I can not reherse by name.

These valyaunt Princes and Noble men besieged the strong towne of Molyn vpon Seyn, as aforesaide, with all their force and army, by the space almost of. vij. Moneths. They without made Mynes, cast trenches and shot Gonnes at the walles. And they within, whereof the Lorde Barbason was chiefe, manfully defended the same, during the which siege, the Frenche Queene, and the Quene of Englande and the Duches of Burgoyn came dyuers times to visite their husbandes, and to see their friends. This siege so long continued, that victualles within the towne beganne to fayle, and pestilence beganne to encrease, so that the Capitayne beganne to treate: And in conclusion the towne was delyuered vpon certaine conditions, whereof one was, that all that were consenting to the death of the Duke of Burgoyn should be deliuered to the king of England, whereof the Lorde Barbason was one, and so they were delyuered to the king, and he sent them vnder the conduyt of the Duke of Clarence vnto Paris, and there they were executed. And foorthwith the sayde Duke of Clarence was by the French king made Captayne of Paris, and had in possession the Bastill of Saint Anthony, the Louure, the house of Neele, and the place of Boys de

After the towne of Molyn was yelded, as aforesayde, the king made Capteyne there the Erle of Huntyngdon. From thence he departed with his armie to Corbell, where the French king and the two Queenes then solourned. And from thence the two kinges accompanied with the Dukes of Burgoyn, Bedford, Gloucester, and Exceter, and the Erles of Warwike, Sarisbury, and a great number of other noble men, set forth toward Paris, whom the Citizens received ioyfully, in most honourable maner. The next day the two Queenes made their entry into Paris, where also they were received with all solempnitie, as was the two kings. Duryng the time that these two kinges lay in Paris, there was a great assembly called, aswell of the Clergie as of the Nobility, in y which the two kings sate as iudges, before whom the Duches of Burgoyn by her advocate appealed the Dolphyn and. vij. other for the death and murder of Iohn Duke of Burgoyn her husbande. To the which apeale, the counsaile on the other part made dyuers offers of amends: But this matter was put of vntill an other day. To the Citie of Paris at this tyme resorted the three estates of the Realme, where every person severally sware upon the holy Euangelistes, to kepe, support, mainteyn, and defend the treatie & peace final which was cocluded betwene the two Princes and their counsayles, & thervnto every noble man spirituall, gouernour, and temporall ruler set to their seales, which instrumentes were sent to the kinges treasury of his Eschequer at Westminster, sauely to be kept, where they yet remayne. These two kinges soiorned in Paris at the feast of Christmasse. The French king living at the house of S. Paule, kept no estate nor open court to no man, except to his houshold servauntes. But the king of England and his Quene, kept such solempne estate, so plentifull a house, so princely pastyme, and gaue so many giftes, that all the noble men of Fraunce spake honourably of him.

Sone after this feast of Christmasse, the king of England tooke vpon him as Regent of Fraunce to redresse causes, to remoue officers, to reforme thinges that were amisse, and caused a newe coyne to be made called a Salute, wherein were grauen the Armes of Fraunce, and the Armes of England quartered. And to set all thinges in a quietnesse, he ordeyned sir Gilbert Vmfreuile Capteine of Melun furnished with a good number of valyant And the Erle of Huntingdon his Cossin Germain he appointed Capteyne at Boys de Vincens. And the Duke of Excester with fine hundreth men of armes, was assigned to kepe the Citie and towne of Parys.

When the king had thus ordered his affayres according to his deuíse, he with the Quene his wife, his Princes and Nobles, departed from Paris, and came to the Citie of Roan.

The king of England taketh vppon him as Regent of Fraunce.

But before his remouving, he caused processe to be made agaynst Charles called the Dolphyn, commaundyng him to appere at the Table of Marble in Parys: Where for lacke of Fraunce co-appearaunce, he was with all solempnitie in suche a cause requisite, denounced giltie of demned for the the murder and homicide of Iohn late Duke of Burgoyn: And by the sentence of the Duke of Burgoyn: Court of Parliament he was banished the realme and territories of Fraunce, and depriued of all honours, names, dignities and preheminences which he then had or hereafter might haue. Wherefore the Dolphyn went into Languedock, and after to Poyters, gettyng to him such friendes as he could, and especially he obteyned so highly the fauour of the Erle of Arminack, that he not onely tooke his part, but also relieved him with money, ayded him with men, and in his awne person continually served him agaynst his foes and While king Henry soiourned in the City of Roan, he received homage of all the Nobles of Normandie: Amongest whome the Erle of Stafford did homage for the Countie of Perche: And Arthure of Briteyn did homage for the Countrie of Iury, which the king before had geuen vnto them. He also ordeyned his Lieutenant generall both of Fraunce and Normandie, his brother Thomas Duke of Clarence: and his deputie in Normandie was the Erle of Sarisburie. And thus all thinges beyng set in order, the King and Quene King Henry of England departed from Roan to Amiens, and so to Calice, where he tooke shippyng, hys wife returnand hauyng a fayre passage landed at Douer, and came to Eltham, and through London thinto England. to Westminster: But by the way he was receiued most joyfully and honourably, namely by the Citezens of London.

And shortly after, great provision and preparation was made for the coronation of the The Coronation

Queene, who was crowned the xxiiij. day of February with all solempnitie.

Now while the king was thus occupyed in England, the Duke of Clarence brother to the king, and his Lieutenaunt generall in Fraunce & Normandie, as is aforesayd, assembled together all the garrisons of Normandie at the towne of Berney, & from thence departed into the Countrie of Mayn. And at Pount de Gene, he passed the riner of Youe, and roade through all the Countrie to Lucie, where he passed the ryuer of Loyre, and entred into Aniowe, and came before the Citie of Angiers, where he made many knightes, that is to say, Sir William Rosse, Sir Henry Godard, Sir Rowland Rider, and Sir Thomas Beaufoord called the Bastarde of Clarence and dyuerse other. And shortly after that he had forayed, brent, and spoyled the Countrie, he returned with pray and pillage to the Towne of Beufoorde in the Valley, where he was aduertised that a great number of his enemies were assembled together at a place called Bangie, that is to say, the Duke of Alanson callyng him selfe Lieutenaunt generall for the Dolphyn, who was accompanied with a great number of Erles and other the Nobles of Fraunce.

At this tyme the Duke of Clarence had a Lombard resorting vinto him called Andrew Andrew Forgus Forgusa, which was reteined with the part aduerse, of whom the Duke required the num- a false and trayber of his enemies: To whome he reported that theyr number was but small, and of no strength, and farre vnmeete to encounter with halfe the power of his puyssant armie, entisyng and prouokyng him to set on the French men, warrantyng him a famous victorie, and a faire day. The Duke geuyng to much credite to this Traytor, lyke a valyant and conrageous Prince, assembled together all the horsemen of his armie, and left the Arch. ers behinde him under the order of the Bastard of Clarence, saying that he onelve, and the nobles would have the honour of that journey. When the Duke was passed a streight and a narrow passage, he espyed his enemies raunged in verye good order of battaile: And the saide adversaries had layd such Bushementes at the streytes, that the Duke by no waves without battaile could eyther retyre or flie. The Englishmen seeying no remedy, valiauntly set on their enemies, which were foure to one: The battaile was ficree, and the fight deadly. The Englishemen that day did valiauntly, yet it analed not, for they were oppressed with the number of Frenchmen. There were slaine the Duke of Clarence, the The Duke of Erle of Tankeruyle, the Lord Rosse, Sir Gilbert Vmfreuile, Erle of Kent, Sir Iohn Lum-Clarence shakes lev, and Sir Robert Venred, and almost two. M. Englishmen. And the Erles of Somerset, Suffolke, and Perch, the Lorde Fitzwater, Sir Iohn Barkley, sir Raufe Neuile, Sir Henry Inglos, Sir William Bowes, Sir William Longton, and Sir Thomas a Borow, and diuers other taken prisoners. And of the Frenchmen there were slaine aboue. xij. hundreth of their best men. The Bastard Clarence which targed at Beaufoord was informed of the number of the Frenchmen, wherefore he with all the Archers made hast to succor the duke: But they came to late: for the Frenchmen heeryng of the approchyng of the Archers, fled with their prisoners with all the hast they could, leaving behinde them the bodie of the aforesayd Duke, and the dead carions. When the Archers came and sawe their enemies gone, they lamented not a little the euill chaunce of the deceyued Duke: But seyng no remedie, they tooke the dead bodies and buried them all, sauyng the Dukes corps. which with great solempnitie was sent into England, and buryed at Cauntorbury besyde his father. After this, the English men brent & spoyled the Countrie of Maine, and so returned to Alaunson, and there departed euery man to his garrison. This battaile was fought at Bawgy in Aniow on Easter Euen in the yere of our Lorde. 1421.

The battayle of Bawgye.

King Henry beyng aduertised of this infortunate ouerthrowe, and deceivable downg of the Lombard, and losse of his brother, sent without delay, Edmond Erle of Mortaigne. & brother to the Erle of Somerset into Normandy, geuyng to him like Aucthoritie and preheminence, as his brother the late deceased Duke of Clarence had or enjoyed. After this, he called hys high Court of Parliament, in the which he declared so wisely the actes that were done in the Realme of Fraunce, the estate of the tyme present and what thinges were necessarve for the tyme to come, (if they would looke to have that Iewell and high kingdome, for the which they had so long laboured and sought for) that the Commonaltie graunted a fiftene, and the Clergie a double fiftene. And because no delay should be in the kinges affayres for lacke of payment, the Bishop of Winchester his Vncle lent to him.

xx. thousande pounde, to be receyued of the same dismes or fiftenes.

John Duke of Bedford arry armie.

When all thinges necessarye for this voyage were redie and prepared, he sent his brother Iohn Duke of Bedford with all his armie (which the French men write to be foure thouwith a puyssaunt sand men of armes, and xx. thousand Archers, and other) before him to Calice. And he himselfe shortly after in the middle of May passed the Seas, and arryued there in great triumph, where to him was shewed, that the Dolphyn with vij. M. men had besieged the towne of Chartiers which was manfully defended by the Bastard of Thyan and other, set and appoynted there by the Duke of Excester.

King Henry arryueth in Fraunce.

King Henry not minding to lose so fayre a towne, departed in good order with all his armie towarde Paris. And at Mounstrell there receaued him the Duke of Burgoyn, which from that place attended vpon the king to Dowaste in Ponthiewe, and so came to Abbeuyle, and from thence to Boys de Vyncens, where he found the French king and Quene, whome he louingly saluted, and they him agayne honorably receased. And there the king of England and the Duke of Burgoyn determined without delaye to fight with the Dolphyn and to raise the siege before Chartres. The king of Englad with all his power came to the towne of Naunt, & thether repayred the Duke of Burgoin with foure M. men: of whose coming the king reloysed not a little. But before they departed from thence, they had knowledge & true instruction that the Dolphyn heryng of the puyssaunt army of the king, was reculed with his people vnto Towres in Towrain. Wherefore the king of England incontynent, not onely sent the Duke of Burgoyn into Picardy to resist the malice of syr Iaques Harcourte, which daylie inferred warre, and caused wast and destruction in the same Countrie: But also appointed Iames king of Scottes to lay siege to the towne of Direx, which so fiersly assaulted the same, that after sixe weekes, they rendred the same to the king of Scottes to the behoofe of king Henry his souereigne Lorde, who appointed Captayne there the Erle of Worcester.

The king himselfe removed from Naunt, and passed over the Ryuer of Leyr, folowyng the Dolphyn toward Towers; But the Dolphyn mistrusting his power fled to Burges in Berry, and there determined to tarie vutill fortune would looke more fauourably vpon

The king of England with all his puyssaunce so fast followed the flyeng Dolphyn, that victuall beganne to fayle: wherfore he consydering the daunger and hurte of his awne people, and sawe none advantage to followe the Dolphyn, did for the safetie of his people returne ouer the ryuer of Leyr, and gate Gasconeyes vpon Youe, and a towne called the kings new towne, and dyuers other whose names were to tedious here to reherse.

The aforesaide towne was no lesse victualled then manned, and as well fortefyed, so that the king of Englande could neyther haue it delyuered vnto him, nor yet gayne it by assault without great losse and detriment. But yet he determined not to departe vntill he had eyther gayned or ouerthrowne the same: And duryng the time of this siege was borne The birth of at Wyndsore the kings sonne called Henry, whose Godfathers were Iohn Duke of Bed-King Henry the ford, and Henry Bishop of Winchester, and Iaquet Duches of Holland was Godmother, wherof the king was certefyed lyeng at this siege of Meaux, at the which he much rejoysed, but when he heard of the place of his nativity, whether he fantaysed some olde blind prophecie, or else judged of his sonnes fortune, he sayde to the Lorde Fitz Hugh his Chamberleyn these wordes. My Lorde, I Henry borne at Monmouth shall small time reigne and get much: And Henry borne at Wyndsore shall long reigne and loose all: But as God wyll, so be it.

After the Quene of England was thus delyuered of her fayre sonne, she returned into Fraunce, first to her husbande, and after to her father and mother, where she was on all partes so honorably receaued and so louingly enterteyned and highly feasted, that she appered to be no lesse beloued nor welcommed vnto her noble husbande, then vnto her naturall parents.

During the time of the siege last aboue mencioned, Sir Olyuer Manny a valiaunt man of warre of the Dolphyns parte, which before was captaine of the Castell of Falovs, and yeelding it by composition, sware neuer to beare armour agaynst the king of Englande, assembled a great number of men of warre, as well of Britons as French men, that is to saye the Lorde Mountburchier, the Lorde Coyuon, the Lorde of Chastelgiron, the Lorde of Tyntignace, the Lorde de la Howssaye, and dyuers other which entred into the Country, of Constantyne in Normandy and robbed and killed the Englishe men where they might eyther espie or take them at their advauntage: But the erle of Suffolk keeper of those marches hering of their doyngs, sent for the Lorde Scales, Sir Iohn Aston Bailife of Constantyne, Sir Wylliam Hall, Sir Iohn Banester and manye other out of the Garrisons within that territorie, which encountered with their enimies at a place called Le Parke de oeuecque, in English the Bishops Parke. There was a sore and a long fight, and many a proper feate of armes was done that day and many a man was in that place ouerthrowen: The Englishe men onely desyred victorie, and the French men desyred a safe returne: But in conclusion the french men being not hable to resist, began to flie, in the which conflict and fight, there were slayne, the Lorde Coynon, the Lorde of Castell Giron and three hundreth other: And there were taken prisoners, the Lord de la Howssay, and syr Olyuer Manny and. 1x. other. The king being aduertised of this good chaunce and happy iourney sent for syr Olyuer Manny to be brought vnto him, he then lyeng at Olyuer Many Meaux. And when he sawe him he sayde: Fayre father you have sworne, & promised taken and sent rnto vs that you would neuer make warre nor beare armour against vs nor our subjectes: ye are an auncient knight, and ought to have kept your fayth and promise, which you have vntruly and also vnhonestly broken, and yet we will not (although by the law of armes we might lawfully so doe) put you to death, but graunt to you your lyfe: But we will send you into England to learne you to speake Englishe. And shortly after he was sent to London, where he dyed, and was buried in the white Fryers.

The Scottes write (beleue them if ye will) that the king of Englande hering that the Dolphyn had sent for ayde into Scotlande, and that he had reteyned them in wages (for of their awne habilitie, they be neyther able to send an army ouer the sea, nor yet of sub-VOL. I.

staunce to beare a continuall warre, for this all their awne Histories declare, and their Chronicles make mencion, and yet the countrie is not so pore, but the people be as prowde) sent one day for Iames the Scottishe king, and in the presence of his counsayle declared vnto him, what humanitie, what fauour and singuler affection king Henry his Father bare during his naturall lyfe, towarde the sayde king of Scottes: Putting him in remembraunce of the great love and friendship which he himselfe sith beginning of his reigne had shewed vnto him, and that neyther he nor his father had negligently omitted any thing that might apperteyn to the office of a friend or the duetie of a Tutour, which should love and cherish his Orphane or Pupile, promising him liberty with a great rewarde if he would cause the Scottes which were adherents to the Dolphyn to returne againe into their countrie and native region. To the which request the king of Scottes with a wise and good courage aunswered, saying: what your noble father hath done to me, and what fauour or benefite I have received at your handes, I shall not nor will not when I maye (I assure you,) forget: And when my power shall serue, I shall not fayle to recompence your doings with lyke kindnesse. But of your request I meruaile not a little, first considering that I am a prisoner, and have no possession of my realme: Secondarily that I am as yet neyther sworne to my subjectes, nor they by othe of allegeaunce are bounde to obey my commaundementes. Wherefore I desyre you no more to move me in this thing, which nowe I cannot doe: And yet if I might, I would first foresee whether it were for me honorable, or to my realme honest, to leave our olde friend in his extreme neede and necessitie without ayde or comfort. With this aunswere the king of England was not content (as the Scottes say) but after that king Iames was departed from his presence, king Henry sayde, happie shall they be who shall be subjected to such a king that is indued with suche wit and wisedome at these young yeres. The king of Englande lyeng still before the towne of Meux in Brye (as you have heard) and had sore oppressed them within the towne. Wherof hering the Lorde of Offmond with a company of chosen persons, sent by the Dolphyn, came priuely in the night to the walles, and set vp a ladder, and dyners of his company went vp and entred the towne: But as he himselfe passed ouer a planke to have come to the walles, he fell into a deepe diche. The Englishe men hering this noves, ranne to the diche, where they tooke the The Lorde off- Lorde of Offinound, and slue dyuers of his company which stood at defence, The Captaine within the towne perceauing that their succours were taken, playnely judged that the towne could not long continue: wherfore they caused all the goodes of the towne to be brought into the market place, which was strong and well fortefyed, The king of Englande being hereof aduertised, commaunded in all haste to geue an assault to the towne, which was quickly done, so that the towne by fine force was within three houres taken and > the Mill adiovning to the same. The Captaynes perceauing in what case they were, fearing to be taken by assault, began to treate with the king of Englande, which appointed the Erle of Warwike and the Lorde Hungerforde to common with them: And in conclu> sion a treatie was taken, and so the towne and Market place with all the goodes were delivered into the king of Englandes handes, the tenth daye of Maye, the yere of our Lorde.

And the same daye the king besieged rounde about the market place, and tooke

The towne of Market place taken.

> 1422. When the delivery of the strong towne of Meux was published through the Countrie, all the townes and fortresses in the Isle of Fraunce, in Lannoys, in Brie, and in Campeigne yelded themselves to the king of England, which appoynted in them valiaunt Capteynes and hartie Souldiours.

> After that king Henry had thus taken and possessed the towne of Meux and other fortresses. at his pleasure, he returned againe to Boys de Vyncennes, where he found the Frenche king, and the Queene, and his wife, who with all joy receyued him: And so the. xxx. day of May being Whitsoneuen, the two kinges and the Queenes returned to Parys, where the king of England lodged in the Castell of Loure, and the French king in the house of Saint Paule. These two kinges kept great estate with their Queenes at this feast of Pentecost: But the king of England (as Enguerant both confesseth, and dyuerse other sayth) kept such glorious an estate, and so costly a Court, that he with his Queene sate at dinner in Parys richely appoynted with most riche vestures, adourned with Diademes of Golde, garnished and beset with precious stones, and decked with Iewelles both bewtifull and pleasaunt. Besydes this his Princes and estates, Barons and chiefe Capteynes were set in solempne estate, plenteously served and aboundantly feasted, so that the people of Paris which thether resorted to beholde this estate, judged him to be more lyke an Emperour, then their awne king (which sate solitarily alone) to be like a Duke or a poore Marques: But now againe to returne to our Historye.

The Dolphyn knowing by his Espyals where the King of Englande and his power lay, came with all his puyssaunce ouer the ryuer of Leyre and besieged the towne of Cosney, or Conny, and sent part of his armie to waste and destroy the confines of the Duchie of Burgoyn. And as he purposed, so it happened, for the Duke of Burgoyne with his power set forwarde to defend his awne lande and dominion, and wrote to the king of England to send ayde to them of Cosney or Conny, which had promised to render their towne to the Dolphyn if they were not reskued by the king of England within ten dayes. King Henry heer, ng these newes, aunswered that he would not send one creature, but he would go before himselfe. And so with all diligence came to the towne of Corbell, and so to Senlys, where, whether it were with the heate of the ayre, or that he with his dayly labour was febled or The king of weakened, he began to waxe sicke, yea and so sicke that he was constrayned to tary and Englande is to send his brother the Duke of Bedford to performe his journey & enterprise.

The Duke lyke a valiaunt Capteyne set forwarde to reskue the towne besieged, whereof heeryng the Dolphyn with all his Captaynes and hardie souldiours departed thence into Barry to his great dishonor and lesse gaine: And so was the Citie of Cosney, or Conny reskued, to the great honour of the Englishe Nation. But in this meane while, king Henry waxed sicker and sicker, and beyng layd on a Horselitter, was conveyed to Boys de Vyncennes, to whome shortly after repayred the Dukes of Bedford and Gloucester his Vncles, and the Erles of Sarisbury and Warwike, whome the king most louyngly entertevned and embraced: But when they behelde him (sayth Polidore) living in such an extremitie and daunger, they could not refrayne from mourning and bewayling of him. Howbeit the king with a Princely and courageous heart, without any outward shew either of sad countenaunce or sorow, comforted them, and encouraged them to be mery and But when he perceyued his sicknesse so sore to encrease, that there was no hope of health or recourry, he rendred to God his most hartie thankes, and chiefely that he called him out of this miserable life, at such tyme as when he was of most perfite remembraunce, both toward God and the world, and also in the tyme of his flourishing conquest, in the which he neuer receyued one spot of dishonour. And turnyng himselfe The wordes of to his brethren and other noble personages there present, he sayde vnto them: My na- the king in his turall brethren and trustie friendes, I see you lament and bewaile my death approchyng death bed spoken to hys brethren at hand, of the which death I am both glad and rejoyce, for this short tyme of any mor- and others. tall lyfe shall be a testimonie of my strength, a declaration of my justice, and a settyng forth of all mine actes and trauayles, and finally shall be the cause that I by death shall obtevne fame, glory, and renowne, and escape the reprehension of cowardnesse, and the mote of all infamie, which I might have chaunced to have fallen into, if nature had lenger prolonged my lyfe and dayes: for it is commonly sayd, that as tyme chaungeth, so maners and condicions alter, and in long time, all thinges continue not in one state. But as eternitie is the tryumpher vpon tyme, so do I trust that after this short life to have eternall beyng: And after this miserable pilgrimage, mine hope is to enjoy the celestiall Kingdome, and to come to the Palace of rest, & place of quietnesse.

Nowe as touchyng you (no doubt but this my sodeyne chaunce molesteth you) and not without a cause: You lament the calamitie and mischaunce that is like to fall on your Countrie, because that I in this troubleous time leave you destitute of a Governour and

Ruler, which chaunce is the lesse to be moned and regarded, because in all worldly thinges. somethyng euer lacketh, and nothing long endureth: Wherefore, because the olde saiving is. that in the time of necessitie, wit and wisedome is to be experimented, therefore I require you to consult, and to studie and take paine to come to the ende of the journey, which I in my time have begon and entered in, and chiefely because I have ever loved and trusted you about all other persons: And therefore I desire you nowe to shewe like loue, and to be as trustie to my sonne that shall be your souereigne Lorde: So that whatsoeuer dutie, allegiaunce, or fauor for my liberalitie or kindenesse to you shewed, was to me eyther of honestie or civilitie due or owyng: Let the same for my sake, be extended, shewed and recompensed to mine heyre and successor little Prince Henry. Some persons have hated the father, and yet loued the childe, and some haue loued the father, and yet murthered the childe, of which sort I neyther recon nor accompt you: But this I say, if you loue me, ye ought to loue my childe, not for hys desert, but for myne. And sith nowe I shall. be taken from you before satisfaction or recompence be made vnto me for my manifolde goodnesse and ample benefites to you shewed in my lyfe: I say and affirme, that after my death (except you will be noted with the blot of ingratitude, I will not say vntruth) you ought to render the same to my childe your Nephewe and kinsman: I pray God that ye do not defraude me of the good expectation that I have ever had of you. And because I will not charge you, I will therefore friendly exhort you, to bring vp my little infant in vertuous liuyng, morall doctrine, and prudent pollecie, to the entent that by your painehe may proue wise, by your instruction he may proue pollitique, and made able to ruleand gouerne a kingdome, and not to be ruled of other: By the which deuoire you shall. not onely do your duetie to your Prince and souereigne Lorde, but also deserue thankes of your native Countrie, to the which ye are most specially bounde. Besides this, my peticion is not onely to comfort my most deerest and welbeloued wife the Queene,. nowe beyng (as I thinke, the most dolorous and sorowfullest woman liuyng) but also to: love her and honour her, as I have both loved and honoured you.

Humfrey Duke of Gloucester protector of England. John Duke of Bedford Regent of Fraunce.

And as touching the estate of my realmes: First I commaund you to love and ioyne together in one league or concord, and in one vnfayned amitie, keepyng continuall peace and amitie with Philip Duke of Burgoyn. And neuer make treatie with Charles that calleth himselfe Dolphyn of Vien, by the which any part of the crowne of Fraunce, or of the Duchie of Normandie and Guyan may be appayred or diminished. Let the Duke of Orleaunce and the other princes still remaine prisoners, vntill my sonne come to his lawfull age, least they returning home againe, may kindle more fire in one day, then may well be quenched in three. If you thinke it necessarie, I would my brother Homfrey should be Protector of England, during the minority of my childe, prohibityng him once to passe out of the realme. And my brother of Bedford with the helpe of the Duke of Burgoyne, I will shall rule and be Regent of the realme of Fraunce, comaundyng him with fire & sword to persecute Charles callyng himselfe Dolphin, to the entent either to bryng him to reason & obeysaunce, or to drive and expell him out of the realme of Fraunce, admonishing you to lose no tyme, nor to spare no cost in recourryng of that which to you now is offered. And finally whatsoeuer I have gotten or you shall obteyne, I charge you kepe it, I commaund you to defend it, and I desire you to nourishe it: For experience teacheth, that there is no lesse prayse to be geuen to the keper, then to the getter, for verely gettyng is a chaunce, but kepyng is wisedome.

The description of king Henry the fift.

This Prince was the noblest king that ever reigned over the realme of England, his famous prowes and martial actes were suche, as bewtifyed and glorified all this region: But when his death was knowen to the common people, no estate from the highest to the lowest,

est, but cryed out and lamented that most infortunate and vntimely death. For he was beloued of all, and disdeyned nor hated of none, no not of his very enemies, who also spake most honourably of him. But nowe as his death put great feare in the heartes of Englishe men for the atchiuving of the enterprice of the conquest of Fraunce: So the same did encourage the French enemies that they ensured themselues to gaine, and get againe whatsoeuer before they had lost, as in deede in the sequele of this Historie it will to plainly appere. And the decease and sodeine death of this noble Prince is by divers writers, dyuersly reported: some say he was poysoned, and to say truth, that might be so, for vindoubtedly the French men, namely the Dolphyn, feared the viter overthrow and losse of his inheritance of the realme of Fraunce, as it was most like if God had geuen this Prince longer life, and therefore whatsoeuer the sayde Dolphyn could by any French practise do or attempt for his destruction, it was not left vndone. Some other write it was of a Palsey and a crampe: But other that seemeth herein to write most neere the truth, say that it was of a Plurisis, which at that time was so rare a sicknesse and so straunge a disease, that the same to the most part of men was vnknowen, and Phisitians beyng little acquainted therewith, knewe no present remedy for the same. This king reigned. ix. yeres. v. monethes, and. xxiiij. dayes, & lived not, saith Hall, ful. xxxviij. yeres, and Polidore sayth he lived but. xxxvi. yeres. Of stature he was somewhat tall, more than the common sort. Of bodie he was slender, and somewhat leane, well membred, and strongly made, a goodly countenaunce, but somewhat long necked, blacke heared, stoute of stomacke, and eloquent of tongue, and in Martiall affayres so valiaunt, as neuer was there any worthy of more prayse for his traueyles and victories in so short tyme.

His bodie beyng enbawmed was conneighed with all funerall pompe from Boys de Vyncennes to Paris, and so to Rhoan, to Abbeuile, to Calice, to Douer, and so through Lon- The buriall of

And shortly after this solempne buriall, his sorrowfull Queene returned into England, and kept her estate with the yong king her sonne.

HENRYE THE SIXT.

[7HEN certaine knowledge of the death of king Henry the fift, was brought into Englande, then Thomas Duke of Excester, and Henry Byshop of Wynchester, brethren vnto the king deceassed, and Vncles vnto the young Prince, callyng together the other Lordes of the counsayle, did cause their young Nephewe Prince Henry beyng then about the age of. ix. Shortly after the Duke of Gloucester returned into Englande, and first of all he called all the Lordes of the counsayle and nobles of the realme, and declared vnto them the last will and Testament of king Henry his brother, and what was his commaundement: By reason whereof he was chosen and named Protectour of the Realme of Englande. grauest, noblest, and wisest in the realme, and first tooke order for the stay of all things within this realme of England, and then with all speede prouvded for all things necessarie for the warre for the conquest of Fraunce, and appointed valiaunt and expert Captaynes that should be in a readynesse when oportunitie of time required. And besides thys, he by all polletique meanes, gathered great sommes of money, and left nothing vindone that should advaunce his pretended purpose.

Whyle these things were thus deuysed within the realme of England, the Duke of Bedford Regent of Fraunce, no lesse studied and tooke paine, to keepe and order the countries and regions by king Henry late conquered and gayned, and also determined not to leave of from daylie warre and continual travayle tyll the time that Charles the Dolphyn (which was nowe a flote, because king Charles his father in the Moneth of October this present yere, was departed to God,) were eyther subdued or brought to due obeysaunce. And surely the death of this king Charles caused many alterations and chaunges in the realme of Fraunce, for a great parte of the nobilitie which then eyther for feare of the puissaunce of the Englishe men, or for to please and followe the minde and appetite of Charles the Frenche king, toke parte with king Henry against the Dolphin: Hering now of the french kings death, returned from the Englishe parte and adjoyined themselves to the company of the Dolphyn, and diligently studied howe to vanquishe and driue awaye the Englishe nation out of the territorie of Fraunce.

An exhortacion made by the Duke of Bedford vnto the French men that were vnder king Henries obeysaunce.

French king de-

The Duke of Bedford beyng greatly moued with these sodaine chaunges, fortefyed his townes both with Garrisons and municions, and assembled together a great armie both of Englishe men and Normans, to whom he made a long Oration, admonishing them to obserue and keepe their othe and faith (which they had made to the late king Henry and his heires) inniolate and vnbroken, wylling them in no wise to be the occasioners or counsaylers that youg king Henry should be deprived from his fathers lawfull inheritaunce, by the hatred of certayne Traytors Frenchmen, which had renued the olde hatred being of late extinct betwene the realmes of England and of Fraunce, and studied to set all things agayne in a broyle: requiring them also to call to their memorie how that the realmes of England & of Fraunce, the two most famous regions of all Europe, by the benefite of almightie God were of late so vnited, connexed & joyned together in an eternall league and composition, & so strongly established, that no worldly power were able or of puyssaunce sufficient, to resist or withstande the malice of the same: And although sometimes by chaunce of warre the losse might turne on their parte, yet in conclusion the detriment should be recovered, and a surplusage gayned. And if (according to their bounden duties) they would honor, serue and loue young king Henry their souereigne Lorde, and woulde diligently persecute and set on his enimies, they should not onely shew themselves true and faythfull subjects to their true and vndoubted king: But also should for their fidelitie and good seruice receive of him condigue rewardes, over and besydes immortall fame and renowne.

This exhortation stayed the heartes of many of the french Capitaynes, which wyllingly sware to king Henry feaultie and obedience, by whose example the commonaltie did the Thus all the people set in an order in the realme of Fraunce, nothing was minded but warre, and nothing was spoken of but conquest.

The Dolphyn which lay at this time in the Citie of Poytiers heering of the death of his parent, had his heart mixed both with joye and sorrowe: for notwithstanding that he was sorrowfull, as a naturall childe which lamented the death of his father, yet he was ioyous that power and princely estate was nowe to him happened, by the which he judged that he should be the more able to defende his enemies and recouer more friends: and so callyng together the princes of his faction, caused himselfe to be proclaymed king of Fraunce, by the name of Charles the. vij. And then being in good hope of recoueryng his patrimony and expelling his enemies, with a haute courage prepared warre, and assembled together a great armie, and first the warre beganne by light skirmishes, but after it proceeded into mayne battayles. The Dolphyn thinking not to make long delayes in so great a cause, lest the power of his enimies might daylie be augmented, sent the Lorde Granuile to the towne of Pount Melance standing on the riner of Seyne, which so sodainely came to the Pount Melance same, that he was on the walles or the souldiours within heard of his approche, and so he taken by the tooke the towne, and slue a great number of the Englishe souldiours.

When the Regent of Fraunce was advertised of theys sodayne enterprise, he appointed Thomas Monthe Lorde Thomas Montacute Erle of Salisburie, a man both for his great politice and tacute Erle of Salisburie. haute courage, more to be compared to the olde valyaunt Romaynes, then to men of his dayes, accompanied with the Erle of Suffolke, the Lorde Scales, the young Lorde Pounynges, Sir Iohn Fastolffe Mayster of the houshold with the sayde Lorde Regent, and dyuers other to besiege the towne of Pont Melance, which after two Moneths was rendred Pount Melance to the sayde Erle: and the Lorde of Granuile sware to be true to the king of Englande gayne by the euer after that day, but shortly after he forgetting his othe, returned to his olde Mayster Englishe men. agayne. The Erle of Salisburie appointed Sir Henry Mortimer, and syr Richard Vernon to be Capitaines of that towne. And from thence departed into Champaigne, and there besieged the towne of Sens, and tooke syr Guillam Maryn the Captayne and slue all the Souldiours within the towne, and made there Capitaynes Sir Hugh Geddyng, and Sir Richard Awbemond.

The Parisians, which euer like the Wethercocke be variable and inconstant, perceyuing that the Dolphyn daylie beganne to have more ayde and power, then he was before accustomed, trustyng to returne againe vnder his obeysance and subjection (which they both wished and desired) to the entent that it should not appere to come of their desire, and that their fayth and fidelitie should not be put in the Balaunce of diffidence with the English nation, sent divers Senators of their Citie as Ambassadors to the king of England, desyring him of aide and succour, to whom not onely great thanks were rendred for doying their duetie of subjection, but also high feastes were made, and promises declared, that if they still continued in due obeysaunce, and were not adherent to the kings enimies, that that neyther succour shoulde want, nor cost should be spared for their common comfort, and publike vtilitie. With which aunswere the company outwardly pleased (whatsoeuer they inwardly imagined) departed to Paris. In this season Homfrey Duke of Gloucester Humfrey Duke eyther blynded with ambicion or doting for loue, maried the Lady Iaquet or Iacomin of Gloucester daughter and sole heire to Wylliam of Bauier Duke of Holland, which was lawfull wyfe the wyfe of to Iohn Duke of Brabant then lyuing, which mariage chaunced much to his dishonor. Brabant. For surely the sweete tast of this pleasaunt mariage, brought after a sower sauce, both to the amorous husbande, and to the wanton wyfe. For Iohn Duke of Brabant, what with force, and what with spirituall compulsaries, neuer left of, till he had recovered his Lady out of the Duke of Gloucesters possession, as after you shall here.

And in this present yere the West gate of London, nowe called Newgate, which before was an vgly and filthy Dongeon, was now newly builded at the charges and expences of Richard Whytingdon, late Alderman and Maiour of London, by the handes of his Executors.

These chaunces thus happening as you have heard, Iohn Duke of Bedford, Philip Duke of Burgoyn, and John Duke of Britaine, made an assemble and friendly enterniewe in the Citic of Amias, where they renued the old league and auncient amitie made betwene the noble prince king Henry the fift, and them before concluded: addyng thereto these condicions and agreements, eche of them to be to other both friend and ayder, and the enemie of the one to be enemie to the other, and all they to be both friendes and ayders to the king of England, and well wylling to hys well wyllers, and auengers of his aduersaries. And because that affinitie is an embracer of amitie, there was concluded a mariage betweene the Duke of Bedford, and the Ladie Anne sister to the Duke of Burgoyn. John Duke of When these agreements were finished, the Duke of Bedford departed to Troys in Cham-Bedford marieth Anne the Syster pain, whether with high pompe was conueyed the Lady Anne of Burgoyn, which in the of the Duke of presence of her brother and her Vucle Duke of Brabant, and of the Erles of Salisburic and Suffolke, and of nine hundred Lordes, knightes and Esquires, she was maried to John Duke of Bedford, with such solempnitie, feast and triumph, as before that time had not bene sene of the Burgonions.

During this triumph, the Parisians thinking to blinde the eyes of the Duke of Bedford wrote to hym, howe divers Castelles and fortresses lyeng round about their territorie, were replenished with his enemies dayly stoppyng their passages, and robbing their marchantes, to their vtter vndoyng, if they by his helpe were not relieued: fraudulently meaning, and falsely entising him to absent himselfe from them, till their craftie conveyed purpose were compassed and atchived. For divers of them stubbernly bearing the voke and subjection of the Englishe nation, perceyuing the Duke of Bedford and the principall Capitaines of the Englishe men to be farre from Paris, employeng themselues to ioy and solace, for the honor of this high mariage, conspired to bring into the Citie, Charles the Dolphyn, callyng himselfe French king. And to the entent that their invented purpose should succeede, they thereof aduertised the Dolphyn and his counsayle, appoynting the day of his comming, and the time of his entrie. But the Duke of Bedford was informed of all their secret confederacie and sedicious faction, wherefore he meaning not to lose in short time that which in no small space was gayned, put spurres to the horse, and with a great power entered into Paris one day before the fayre was appointed, and two nightes before the looking for of his enimies, who being vnprouided, he sodainely caused to be apprehended and taken, and openly put to execution. After this ieopardie thus escaped, he put diffidence in all the Parisians, trusting little the Nobles, and geuing lesse credite to the comons, determined to fortefie the garrisons of his awne nation, and all the Castels neere and adjoying to the Citie, which within small time were abundauntly furnished. And to auoyde all night watchers adjoyning to Paris, and the confines of the same, he first tooke into his possession, eyther by assaulte or composition the towne of Trayneil and Bray vpon Seyne, and because two Castels the one called Pacy, and the other called Cursay were also euill neighbors to the Parisians, he sent Sir Iohn Fastolffe great master of his housholde, with a notable armie to besiege the Castell of Pacy, which takyng vpon him that enterprise, so handeled his enimies, that the Capitayne named Guyllam Reymon Esquire, and all the garrison yeelded them simply to his mercy and discretion, whome he sent as prisoners to the City of Paris, and after besieged the Castell of Coursay, which to him was shortly rendered vpon like appointment, and so with praye and prisoners he returned to the Lorde of Bedford his Master. In this verie season the Dolphyn sent Lorde Wylliam Stuard, Constable of Scotland, and the Erle of Ventadore in Auergne, and many other nobles of his parte, to lay siege to the towne of Crauant, in the Countie of Auxerre within the partes of Burgoyn, whereof hering the Lorde Regent, and the Duke of Burgoyn, they assembled a great armie, to the number of. xv. thousand, whereof the Erle of Salisburie was ordeyned Captaine, which came in good array to geue bat-The battaile of tayle to the besiegers of the towne of Crauant, and because the ryuer of Youne which runneth by the sayde towne, was betwene the Englishe armie and their aduersaries, they coulde not well assaile their enemies, which defended the bankes and passages very strongly, yet notwithstanding both horsemen and footemen of the Englishe parte, courageously put themselves into the ryuer, and wyth fyne force recovered the banke, whome the Burgonions incontinent folowed. When they were all gotten into the playne, the Archers shot, and the Bilmen strake, and long was the fight in indifferent judgement, but in conclusion the French men not able to resist the force nor puyssaunce of the Englishe Nation, were taken, eyther slayne or discomfited, for in that mortall battayle were slayne and taken to the number of eyght thousand men, whereof was slayne of English men. xxi. Crauant.

After this fortunate victorie obteyned, the English men entered into the towne of Crauant, much praysing the doynges of the Capteynes, and the fidelitie of the Citizens, and when they had set all thinges in an order, they returned to Paris, where of the Regent they were ioyously receyued, which there constituted the Erle of Sarisbury (as he was wel worthy) Vicegerent and Lieutenant for the king and him in the Countries of Fraunce, Bry, and Champaine, and Sir Iohn Fastolfe he substituted Deputie vnder him in the Duchie of Normandie on this side the river of Seyne, and with that he deputed him governor of the Countries of Aniow and Mayne, and assigned able Capteines in euery holde and fortresse. The Erle of Sarisbury which could not sleepe in his great office of trust, layde siege to the towne and Castell of Mountaguilon in Brie, whereof were Capteynes, Pregent of Cotyny, and Guille Bourgoys Britons, which valiauntly defended the Castell by the space of five monethes, but in conclusion the assaylantes were so fierce that they within for sauegarde of their lyues rendred the holde, and the Capteynes sware neuer to bere armure agaynst the Englishe men on this syde the river of Levre; duryng which siege, the Erle of Suffolke toke by force the Castell of Coucy: and the strong Castell de la Roche he gat by appoyntment in Mosconovs.

Nowe must I go backe to put you in memorie howe Iames king of Scottes, beyng both lames king of prisoner in the time of king Henry the fourth, and also as subject to king Henrye the fift his Scots beyng prisoner in the time of king Henry the fourth, and also as subject to king Henrye the fift his soner was resonne, seruyng him in his warres in Fraunce till he departed out of this transitorie life at leased & sent Boys de Vincens, and so as chiefe Mourner attended on the Corps of the sayd deceased king, vnto his buriall, and after at Westminster was released of his Captiuitie, and restored to his realme and possession. For the true knowlege thereof, you shall understand that England demaunded a smal raunsome for so great a prince, as the Scottes accompt their king (and the Scottes were neither able, nor offered no somme convenient) wherefore the counsaile of the realme of England grauously pondered, and wisely considered, that if by conjunction of mariage, England and Scotland were perfectly knit in one, that the indissoluble bande of amitie betweene the Frenche and Scottishe Nations should be shortly broken and dissolved. Wherefore the protector of the realme of England by the consent of the whole Baronage of the same, gaue to him in mariage the Ladie Iane, daughter to Iohn Erle of Sommer- lames king of set deceased, not onely sister to Iohn then Duke of Sommerset, but also Cossin Ger- lane the daughter to Iohn then Duke of Sommerset, but also Cossin Ger- lane the daughter to Iohn then Duke of Sommerset, but also Cossin Ger- lane the daughter to Iohn Erle of Sommerset, but also Cossin Ger- lane the daughter to Iohn Erle of Sommerset, but also Cossin Ger- lane the daughter to Iohn Erle of Sommerset, but also Cossin Ger- lane the daughter to Iohn Erle of Sommerset, but also Cossin Ger- lane the daughter to Iohn Erle of Sommerset, but also Cossin Ger- lane the daughter to Iohn Erle of Sommerset, but also Cossin Ger- lane the daughter to Iohn Erle of Sommerset, but also Cossin Ger- lane the daughter to Iohn Erle of Sommerset, but also Cossin Ger- lane the daughter to Iohn Erle of Sommerset, but also Cossin Ger- lane the daughter to Iohn Erle of Sommerset, but also Cossin Ger- lane the daughter to Iohn Erle of Sommerset, but also Cossin Ger- lane the daughter to Iohn Erle of Sommerset, but also Cossin Ger- lane the daughter to Iohn Erle of Sommerset, but also Cossin Ger- lane the daughter to Iohn Erle of Sommerset to Iohn Erle main remoued to the King, and Nece to the Cardinall of Winchester, and the Duke of ter of Iohn Erle Exceter.

The King of Scottes hauving a great affection to this favre Ladie, but much more desiryng his deliueraunce and libertie, put in hostages for the residue of his raunsome, because a great part thereof was diminished and abated for the money allowed to him for his mariage, and so was deliuered to depart at his pleasure. Alack, the olde prouerbes be to true: an Ape although she be clothed in purple, will be but an Ape, and a Scot neuer so gently enterteyned of an Englishe prince, will be but a dissemblyng Scot. What kindnesse could be more shewed to a prisoner then to bring him vp in good literature? what loue may be more declared to a captiue, then to instruct him in martiall feates, and warlike affayres? what fauour can be more ascribed to a highe and renoumed prince, then to geue in mariage to his viderlyng and vassall, his Cossyn and kinswoman of his royall parentage lawfully discended. All these kindnesses sufficed not, nor all these gratuities anayled not to make this king Iames friendly to the realme of Englande. For he notwithstandyng his homage done to the yong Henry king of England, and of Fraunce, at his Castell of Windsore this present yere, before three Dukes, two Archbishops. xij. Erles. x. Bishops. xx. Barons, and two. C. knightes and Esquiers and mo, according to the tenor hereafter following.

shall do to you seruice due to the kingdome of Scotland aforesayde. So God helpe me and these holy Euangelistes.

Neither regardyng his othe, nor esteemyng the great abundaunce of plate and riches. to him by the mother and vocles of his wife liberally geuen, and friendly delivered (of which sort of richesse fewe or none before that day were ever seene in the Countrie of Scotlande) like a dogge which hath cast vp his stomacke and returneth to his vomyt, or like a snake which after hys engendring with a Lampray, taketh againe his olde poyson: After he had once taken the ayre, and smelled the sent of the Scottishe soyle, became like his fraudulent forefathers, an vntrue Prince, and like his proude progenitors toke the vinage of a braggyng and boastyng Scot, newly alied himselfe with the French Nacion. And yet whatsoever he did, his Nation both write and testifie, that by the learning which he by the great benefite of the kinges of England duryng his Captiuitie in this realme had obteyned, replenished his Countrie with good litterature, and by the nurture the which he was brought vp in Englande, he brought his people to civilitie: So that his captivitie was to his Nacion the greatest libertie that euer they could have, delivering them from blinde ignoraunce, to excellent knowledge, reducing them from bestiall maners, to honest behaujour, and in conclusion causyng them to knowe vertue from vice, pollicie from rudenesse, and humane honestie from wilde and beastly living. This was the deliveraunce and the doynges of Iames the first of that name king of Scottes, which neither reigned verye quietly, nor yet euer fauoured Englishe men before the French people: sauyng that he hauving with him into his countrie a yong Gentleman of Northumberland called Andrew Gray (which duryng his captiuitie was his copanion) promoted him to the mariage of the heyre of the Lorde of Foules in Anguis, of the which the Lord Grayes of Scotland at this day do discende.

Nowe to returne to the affayres of England. The Duke of Gloucester beyng Protector and Gouernour of the realme, called to him the peeres and nobility of the realme, and by their agreementes & decises sent into Fraunce to the Regent his brother ten thousad men of warre, which were of the same Regent in the Countrie of Paris louyngly receyned, and according to their degrees honestly enterteyned. During their living in Paris, divers chaunces happened in Fraunce, for even as Englishmen valiauntly wonne, and victoriously conquered townes and Castels with open warre and apparant conquest: so the Frenchemen fraudulently stale, and couertly obteyined diverse fortresses and holdes, apperteining to the Englishe faction, and in especiall the fayre towne of Champaigne, and the pretie towne of Crotoy.

When the Duke of Bedford was advertised of these craftie trickes and sodeine invented. traynes, he sent foorth an armie, first to Compaigne, wherof was Capteine the Erle of Suffolk, accompanied with the Erle of Liguy, and diverse other Capteines of the English men, which lay on the one side of the riuer of Somme, and on the othersyde lay the Lord Lisleadam, Sir Thomas Raupstone, and the prouost of Paris. The Frenchmen being strongly furnished and well victualed, couragiously defended the towne agaynst the The Englishemen perceiung that Guillam Remond otherwise called Mariolayn, had beene the leader of the Souldiours within the towne, which before at Paris was taken prisoner by sir Iohn Fastolfe, caused him to be sent for to Paris, and so brought him to the siege, and set him in a Chariot with a Halter about his necke, and conveyed him to the Gibbet without the towne, sendyng worde to the garrison within the towne, that if they would not without delay render the towne and for tresse, they would incontinent strangle their olde Capteine and chiefe conductor. The Souldiours within the towne perceyuyng that if Guillam Raymond the onely trust of their reliefe, and the auncient friend in their necessitie should suffer death, that then their hope of all ayde were extinguished: and therefore for deliveraunce of him and savegarde of themselves, they yelded the towne: so that be the he and they might depart with horse and harnesse onely, in sure conduite and safetie: yet long or the towne of Compaigne was deliuered, Sir Philip Hall, which was sent to Crotoy by the Lord Regent, with viii, hundreth men to besiege the towne, gat it by assault sodeinly, or the Frenchmen had eyther disposed their garrison, or appoynted their lodgynges, and tooke all the men of warre, & put them to raunsom. And so these two townes cowardly stolen, were mafully recourred, but yet the writers of French fables that do deface the glory of the Englishme, write & say that these townes were yelded to the Burgonians, which neither had the kepyng of them, nor were souldiours to any other person but to the king of England. While these thinges were thus doyng in Fraunce, Sir Iohn de la Pole, brother to the Erle of Suffolke, Capteine of Auranches in Normandie, assembled all the garrisons of the base Marches of the Countrie of Aniow, and came before the Citie of Angiers, and brent the suburbes, spoyled and destroyed the whole Countrie, and having as many prayes and prisoners as his men might carve, he was encountred by the Erle of Aubmerle, the Vicont Nerbone, and sixe thousand Frenchmen: which findyng the Englishemen out of array because of the cariage of their great spoyle, sodeinly set on them, and slue three hundreth persons, and tooke prisoners the saide Sir Iohn delapoole, Sir Iohn Basset, Iohn Auford Lieutenant of Faloys, Iohn Clifton, Henry Mortimer, and sixe hundreth other. Although the Frenche men gate this day in one place, yet they went not victors away in another, for the Bastard de la Baulme, and the Lorde Craignar Capteines of Courtallon with a great band, made a roade into Masconnoys, with whome by chaunce met Mathew Gough, and other Englishmen which were scourying the Countrie, to see and here newes of their enemies, there was a sore conflict, and an hard encounter, the partes in maner beyng of courage and number egal, but after long fight, the French men almost all were slaine and taken, and the Bastard beyng well horsed fled, after whome followed with the fiercenesse of his spurres Mathewe Gough, and chased him to his Castell gate, and there tooke him as he would have hid him in the ditch, and presented him to the Erle of Sarisbury, returning from Compaigne to Paris, which not only gaue to him the rightes belonging to the prisoner, but also rewarded him with a goodly Courser, and highly exalted his name and manhoode.

About this season, Arthur brother to Iohn Duke of Briteyn commonly called the Erle of Richemond, hauyng neither profite of the name nor of the Countrie, notwithstandyng that king Henry the fift had created him Erle of Yury in Normandie, and gaue him not onely a great pension, but the same towne of Yury: yet because his brother the Duke of Briteyne fearyng the Englishemen nowe hauyng Normandie, would smell and desyre to taste the sweete soyle of Briteyn, was late (contrary to his league and othe) returned to the part of Charles the Dolphyn, he likewise returned and craftely without cause fied into Flaūdyrs, and so came to the Dolphyn to Poytiers, which was more glad of his commyng then if he had gayned a C.M. crownes, for the Britons which kept the towne and Castell of Yury, heavyng that their maister was ioyned with the Dolphyn, both kept the Castell agaynst the Duke of Bedford, furnishyng it dayly with newe people and munitions, and also vexed, spoyled, and robbed the Countrie adioynyng, doyng to the Englishemen the most hurt and Dammage that could be decised or imagined.

The Lorde Regent being aduertised of all these troubles and calamities, assembled a great armie both of Englishe men and Normans, entendyng to serch the Dolphin in energy part, to the entent to gene him battaile in a pitched field, and so to make a finall ende of his intended conquest. So having in his company of Erles, knightes and Esquiers to the number (as the Frenche writers testifie) of xviij. hundred men of armes, and eyght thousand Archers and other, came before the towne of Yury, which was well defended: but the Englishe men beganne to vndermine the walles, so that they within were glad to render the towne vpon condition, which was taken. Howbeit the Capitaynes of the Castell promised to yeelde, if their fortresse were not rescued at a daye assigned by the Dolphyn, with a number sufficient to rayse the siege, and vpon this promise hostages were delivered into the possession of the Lorde Regent. By his lycence an Herault was sent to the Dolphyn, to advertise him of the time determined, the which heryng of the distresse that his people and friendes were in, sent incontinent Iohn Duke of Alanson his Lieutenant generall, the Erle Douglas whome at that setting forth he made Duke of Torayne, and the Erle Boughan, whom then in hope of good speede, he made Constable of Fraunce (which office he enioyed not fully an hundred houres,) and the Erles of Aumarle, Vantadoure, Tonnerre, Maulieurier, Forest, the Vicountes of Narbon and Thouars, the Lordes of Grannyle, Gaules, Malycorne, Manny, Ballay, Fountaynes, Mountfort, and many other noble knightes and Esquiers, to the number of xv.M. French men and Britons, and v.M. Scottes, whom the Erles of Douglas had transported late out of Scotland, more for meede then for love.

Thys armie royall approched within two Miles of Yury, and sent. xl. light horsemento view and espie both the number and conduit of the English men. These spies came very nere to the siege, and were espied and chased to their companions agayne, and declared all what they had seene and perceyued. The Duke of Alanson seing that he could not get any auantage of the English men, (although the Dolphyn had geuen him in straight commaundement to fight with the Regent) whether his heart fayled or he thought to wayte a more fortunate season for his purpose and enterprise, retired back with his whole army to the towne of Vernoyle in Perche, which belonged to the king of Englande, and sent worde to the garrison of that towne, that they had discomfited and slayne all the Englishe armie, and that the Regent with a small number, by swiftnesse of his horse had saued himselfe. The inhabitaunts of Vernoyle geuing to light credence to the Frenche fablers, received the Duke of Alanson with all his armie into the towne, and submitted themselves to him, which towne he desyred to have of the gift of the Dolphyn as his owne inheritaunce and lawfull patrimony. Now approched the day of rescous of Yury, which was the day of our Lady the Assumption, at which day, no rescous appered to syr Gerrard de la Pallier Captaine of the Castell, which beyng in dispayre of all ayde and comfort, presented the keyes to the Duke of Bedford, and shewed him a letter signed and sealed with the handes of. xviii. great Lordes, which the daye before promised to geue the Duke battayle, and to dissolue the siege and raise the assaulte: well sayde the Duke, if their hartes woulde have served, their puyssaunce was sufficient once to have profered, or to have performed thys faythfull promise. But sithe they disdaine to seeke me, God and saint George wylling I shall not desist to followe the tractes of their horses tyll one parte of vs be by battayle ouerthrowne; and so he gaue a safeconduyt to the Capitayne and other which would departe, but many of the Britons within the Castell of Yury, seing the faint hartes, and the false promises of the flattering French men, submitted themselues to the Lorde Regent, and sware to be true to the king and him, whome he gently accepted, and put them in wages,

Then he furnished the Castell and towne with a newe garrison, and incontinent he sent the Erle of Suffolke with sixe hundred horses, to espie where the French men were lodged, which passed by Dampeuile, and came to Bretnel, where he heard newes that the French men had taken Vernoile in Perche, and were there yet abyding, whereof with all diligent celeritie, he sent worde to the Duke of Bedford, which not minding to leese his long desired pray, set forward in great haste toward their enimies. The French men hering of his comming, set their people in array, & made all one maine battayle wythout forward or rereward, and appointed certayne Lumbards and horsemen to breake the array of the Englishe men eyther behinde, or at the sides, whereof was Capitayne Syr Stephyn Venoyles, called the hier. The Duke of Bedford, not ignoraunt howe to order his men, made likewise an entier battayle, and suffered no man to be on horseback, and set the archers (every one hauving a sharpe stake) both in the front of the battayle, and on the sides lyke wings, and behinde the battayle were the pages with the Chariottes and cariages, and all the horses were tyed together eyther with the reines of their bridles or by the tayles, to the entent that their enimies should not sodainely surprise or disturbe them on the back behinde: and for to defend the cariages were appointed two thousand arch-

The battaile of Vernoyle. ers. The french men at the first sight remembring howe often times in pitched fieldes they had bene ouercome and vanquished of the Englishe nation, beganne somewhat to feare, but when they sawe no remedy but to fight, they tooke good courage to them, and set softely forward. In which marchyng the Duke of Alaunson, sytting on horseback, did with many good wordes encourage his Capitaynes and Souldiours to the battayle.

And in lyke maner the Duke of Bedford encouraged his people, and foorthwith they gaue the onset vpon their enimies, cryeng, Saint George, Bedford. And the French men likewise cryed, Mount ioy, saint Denise. Then the arrowes flewe out of the long bowes on the one parte, the quarrels out of the Crosse bowes on the other parte. After they came to hande strokes: great was the fight, and terrible was the battayle, with so indifferent judgement of victorie, that no Herauld could determine to which parte Fortune most shewed her louing countenaunce. For on both sides men were slayne and wounded, and on both partes some were felled and recourred, thus stil in a doubtfull judgement the battaile continued about three houres. The Duke of Alaunson in the meane season neuer ceased to exhort and pray his people manly to fight, and not to suffer their enimies, (which were at the verie point to be ouercome) by their faint hartes to be victors, and ouercom-Lykewise the Duke of Bedford rode about his armie, refreshing the weake with freshe men, and encoraging hys people with most pleasaunt wordes: But at the laste, when he perceived the Frenchmen, what with heate, and with travayle, to waxe wearie and faint, and not to be so freshe as they were before (for surely the nature of the Frenchmen is not to labor long in fightyng, and much more braggeth then fighteth) he with all hys strength set incontinent on them with suche a violence, that they bare them downe to the grounde by fine force. The french horsemen that daye did little seruice: for the archers so galled their horses, that they desyred not muche to approch their presence. This battayle was fought the. xxvij. day of August, in the yere of our Lorde. 1425. in the which battayle were slaine.

After

After that the Duke of Bedford had thus obtained the vpper hande of his enemies, and discomfited the onely strength of the Dolphyn. Then he commaunded all the Frenchmen within the towne of Vernoyle, to go out and depart, or else to abide their aduanture. They percevuing the cuill successe of their bosting enterprise, and seing no meane, whereby in so lowe an ebbe they might be ayded, delyuered vp the towne, and went forth out of the same, their lyues saued. Of which towne the Lord Regent constituted Captayne syr Philip Hall, and so departed from thence to the Citie of Roan, where with triumph (and not vnworthy) he was ioyously receyued and honourably feasted. And after all thinges there set all & Countries apperteyning to the crowne of Fraunce, and might resort to no Countries except to Burbonoys, Aluerne, Berry, Poyctou, Towrain, a part of Aniow, and Barrain, and Languedoc. And because diverse of his friendes, which were advocates in Paris, exiled themselves from the Parliament of Paris, which was with all rightes, and jurisdictions therevnto belonging, kept, and holden in the name of king Henry the sixt, as lawfull heyre, and very king of the realme of Fraunce: he therefore to shewe himselfe as a king, erected his court of parliament, his Chauncery, and all other Courts in the Citie of Poytiers, and there established his great seale, with all due circumstaunces therento apperteining, which were continued by the space of. xiiij. yeres, as you shall after here declared. The Duke of Bedford living at Paris, entending there to bring to obeysaunce Charles the Dolphin, or else to drive him out of his little Conie holes, and small countries, sent the Lorde Scales, Sir Iohn Montgomery, Sir Iohn Fastolf, with two thousand men, to conquere the Countries of Aniow and Mayne, which without assault had rendred to them the strong Castelles of Beamout le Vicont, Teune, Silly, Osle, Courceriers, Roussy, Vasse, Couetemenant and twentie other, which for prolixitie of time, I thinke necessary to be omitted. For surely the Englishe physsaunce was so tryed, proued, assayed, and spred abroad throughout all Fraunce, that the Frenchemen thought that in conclusion the Englishemen would have, or should have all thinges, whiche they either wished or enterprised. Duke of Bedford yet thirstyng after more good fortune, sent the Erle of Sarisbury, with a great armie accompanied with the Lord Scales, and other approued Capteynes, (whose names you have heard before) into the Countrie of Aniow and Mayne, which were evill neighbours to the Duchie of Normandie: In which armie were ten thousand men of warre, or there about. These lustic Capteynes entered first into the Countrie of Maine, and be-Mauns besieged sieged the riche and strong Citic of Mauns, the chiefe towne and empery of all that Countrie and region. And although the Citezens, aswell for the sodaine accesse of their enemies, as for the feare of the name of the Erle of Sarisbury (which was both dread of his enemies, and honoured of his friends) were somewhat amased and astonied: Yet-their Capteynes named sir Baldwyn of Champaigne Lorde of Toisse, Sir Guilliam de Marignie, and Sir Hughe de Goos, studied and invented all wayes possible howe to defende themselues, and to do damage and harme to their enemies: and surely, they had within the towne a crewe and a companie of warlike and practised souldiours. The Englishemen approched as nighe to the walles as they might without their losse and detriment, and shot agaynst their walles great stones out of great Goonnes (whiche kinde of enginnes before that tyme, was very little seene or hearde of in Fraunce,) the strokes whereof so shaked, crushed and rived the walles, that within fewe dayes, the Citie was dispoyled of all her towres and outward defences. The Citizens of Mauns much maruellyng at these newe orgaynes, both seeying their destruction imminent, and desperate of all ayde and succour, offered the towne vpon this condicion: that all persons which would tary within the towne might abyde, and all that would depart with horse and harnesse onely, should be permitted. which offers were accepted, and the towne rendred, whereof the Erle made Capteyne the Erle of Suffolke, and his Lieutenant Sir Iohn Fastolfe. After this the sayd Erle of Sarisbury besieged the faire towne of Saint Susan, whereof was Capteyne, Ambrose de Lore,

a man of no lesse audacitie then pollecie, accompanied with a great number of hardy men of warre. When the Erle of Sarisburie had both viewed and seene the situation and nature of the place, he determined to assault it in that place which was most weake and worne: and so the trumpets blewe to the assault and scalying Ladders were raysed to the Walles, and the Englishe men with great noyse began to clume and ascende. The Souldiours which durst not come out of the towne to encounter with the Englishe armie, manfully ran to the walles to resist and defend the assaylants. And so all that day the assault with many adventures still continued, and although the inhabitauntes and Citizens were sore wounded, they never left off both to defende themselves, and to annoy and hurt their enemies. When the Erle perceyued that by this light assault and sleight skirmishe he lost somewhat, and gayned nothing, he made a wall, and cast a trenche round about the towne; and caused his great ordenaunce to be shot at that part of the wal which was most feeble and slender, and so daily and nightly he neuer ceassed to beate, and breake downe the Wall and Towres: so that within two dayes the most part of the wall was persed and cast downe to the ground. When the Capteine perceyued these newe feates, he began to intreate, and offered for himselfe and his souldiors, two thousand crownes, so that they might depart in their doblets onely, so their lyues were saued (which somme of money) because Winter approched: was taken, and the towne yelded. Of the which towne he made Capteine Sir Iohn Popham, a valiaunt and a circumspect knight. After that, the said Erle besieged the towne and Castell of Mayon le Iuehez, wherein was Captaine the Lord of Mayon and the Escotaiz: Which towne after the space of fine weekes was yelded (the lines of the de- Castell yelded. fenders onely saued.) To the kepyng whereof he appoynted Sir Iohn Montgomery knight. And after the feast of the Purification of our Ladie, he besieged the Castell de lafort Barnard: Duryng which Siege, a sale was made of the towne of Alanson beyng in the Engglishe mens possession by a Gascoyne and one of the Garrison there, for foure hundreth crownes, to Charles de Villiers, Peter le Beuffe, and other french Capteynes. When the day was appointed of the deliveraunce both of the towne and the money, the Gascoyne opened and discouered the whole agreement to the Erle of Sarisbury: which ordeyned the Lorde Willoughby, and Sir Iohn Fastolffe with two thousand Englishemen to encounter with the byers of the kinges towne of Alanson. At the day appoynted and time assigned, Charles de Villiers chiefe Marchant of this riche enterprise, early in the morning with two hundreth horsemen, and three hundreth footemen approched neere the towne, and abidyng for the Gascoyne, he there displayed his banner, thinkyng triumphantly to enter into the towne: but it happened otherwise. For or they were ware, or suspected any rescues, they were enuironed with the Englishe armie, and slaine and taken every creature, saue Peter Danthenazy, and. xxv. other, which by the swiftnesse of their horses saued themselues.

After this conflict ended, the Lorde Willoughby with his companie returned to the Erle of Sarisbury, before the towne le fort Barnard: the Capteines whereof considering that there was no hope of succour to be sente to them, and that their vitaile diminished, and that they were not long able to abyde the harde assaultes of the Englishe Nation, rendered The towns of the towne and Castell, reserving to them their horsse and harnesse onely, which towne the fort Barnard yelded. Erle receyued to the vse of the king: But the Regent for the valiaunt service done by the Erie, gaue the same Towne to him and to his heyres for euer. Besides this, the Erie partly by assault, partly by composition, toke dyuers other townes, as Saint Kales, where he made Captaine Richard Gethyne Esquier, Thanceaux Lermitage, where he made gouernour Mathew Gough, Guerland, of the which he assigned ruler, Iohn Banaster, Malicorne, whereof he made Capteyne, William Glasdale Esquier, Lisle Soubz Boulton, wherof he made Capteine sir Lancelot Lisle knight, Lowpelland, whereof was made Capteyne, A maruellous Henry Braunche, Mountseur, of the which was made Constable, sir William Oldehall conquest soknight, la Susze, was assigned to the keepyng of Iohn Suffolke squier, and beside this, aboue ed and as soxl. Castels and Pyles were overthrowne and destroyed. When the fame and report of these vainely lose, newes were blowen through Fraunce, some freated, some feared, and some raged for anger: But the veritie of all thinges beyng by the Duke of Bedford declared into England, all men rejoysed and were verye glad: not onely for the conquest of so manie townes, but also that God had sent them victorie in a pitched fielde, and in a mortall battaile. Wherefore generall processions were commaunded, to render to God almightie humble and hartie thankes. by whose onely gift, and not by the power of man, these notable victories were gotten and

Edmonde Mortimer Erle of Marche deceassed wythout

Sir Roger Mortymer put to death.

It is not convenient that I should talke so muche of Fraunce, and omit all thinges done in England: Wherefore, you shall understand, that about Easter this yere, the king called his high Court of Parliament, at his towne of Westminster, and commyng to the Parliament house, he was conveyed through the Citie vpon a great Courser with great triumph, which childe was judged of all men, not onely to have the very Image, the lively portrature, and louely countenaunce of his noble parent and famous father, but also lyke to succede, and be his heyre in all morall vertues, marciall pollicyes, and Princely feates, as he was vindoubted inheritor to hys realmes, seigniories and dominious. In which Parliament was graunted to the king a subsidie of, xij, pence of the pounde, towardes the mainteinaunce of the warres, of all marchandise commyng into this realme, or goyng out of the ed Tonnage and same, and three shyllyngs of every tonne of wine, besides other sommes set on other liquor, for the terme of thre yeres, & likewise was taxed every sack of wooll, aswell of English men, as of straungers. During which parliament, came to London Peter Duke of Quimber, sonne to the king of Portingale, & Cossin Germaine removed to the king, which of the Duke of Exceter and the bishop of Winchester his Vncles, was highly feasted, and liberally rewarded, and was elected into the noble order of the Garter. Duryng which season, Edmond Mortimer, the last Erle of Marche of that name (which long time had bene restrained from his libertie, and finally waxed lame) deceased without issue, whose inheritaunce descended to Lord Richard Plantagenet, sonne and heyre to Richard Erle of Cambridge, behedded, as you have heard before, at the towne of Southhampton. Which Richard within lesse then, xxx, yeres, as heyre to this Erle Edmond, in open Parliament claymed y crowne and scepter of this Realme, as hereafter shall more manifestly appere. In the tyme of which Parliament also, whether it were, either for desert or malice, or to anoyde thinges that might channee, according to a pronerbe, which sayeth, a dead man doth no harme. Sir Roger Mortimer, cossyn to the sayde Eile, was attainted of treason and put to execution: of whose death no small slaunder arose among the common people.

> After all these actes done in England, and in Fraunce, Humfrey Duke of Gloucester, with the Lady laquet his supposed wife, passed the sea, and came to Mons in Henawde, and there by force tooke all suche landes, as John Duke of Brabant her first husbande had in possession of the sayde Lady Iaquet, which doing Phylip Duke of Burgoyn, beyng great friend to the Duke of Brabant, muche disdayned, and more frowned at, and thought for the olde love and familiaritie, that he bare to the Duke of Gloucester, that he woulde by friendly monicion, turne hym from hys vnhonest and vngodly lyfe, to a reasonable reformation, and brotherly conformitie. Wherfore he wrote louvingly vito hym, that he should viterly leave of any further to followe the newe attempted enterprise, advertising him and protesting openly, that the vsurping and wrongfull witholding of an other mans possession, was not so vyle and slaunderous, as the defyling of a pure and cleane bed, and adulterously keping the wife of his Christian brother. The Duke of Gloucester being in this case very wilfull, eyther blinded with dotage, or inflamed with couetousnesse of his. wyses possessions, regarding neyther the admonishment of the Duke of Brabant, nor yet the godly advertisement of the Duke of Burgoyne, sware that he would not leve of to make farther warre, till he had expulsed the Duke of Brabant, out of hys wyfes segniories, territories and dominions. Wherefore the Duke of Burgoyn assembled together a great armie to make warre on the Duke of Gloucester, in the cause and quarell of the Duke of Brabant his friend and Cosyn. The Duke of Gloucester, partely for great affayres, that then were imminent in the realme of Englande, and partely to assemble more people. to resist and withstand the power of the Dukes of Burgoyn and Brabant, left hys wyfe at Mons in Henaude, with the Lordes of the towne, which sware to hym, to defende and keepe her agaynst all men, till the time of his returne. Wherfore he leaving with her two thousand English men, departed to Calice, and so into Englande.

When he was gone, the Duke of Burgoyne so threatened, so vexed, yea, and almost so famished them within the towne of Mons, that they delivered into his possession the Lady laquet or lacomyne: which incontinent sent her to Gaunt, where she disguised her selfe in a mans apparell, and so escaped into a towne of her awne in Zeland, called Zirice, and from thence she was conueyed to a towne in Holland, called Tergowe, where she was honorably receiued, and there made herselfe strong to withstande her enemies: And for her succour the Duke of Gloucester sent to her fine hundred men. The Dukes of Burgoyn and Brabant left her not all in quiet, but brent her townes in Holland, and slue her people in Zelande, to her great detriment and displeasure. But in conclusion, this matter was brought before Martyn the fift Byshop of Rome: which adjudged the first matrimonie with Duke Iohn of Brabant, to be good and effectuall, and the second Espousall celebrated with Duke Humfrey of Gloucester, to be of no value, force or effect, and that if the Duke of Brabant dyed, it should not be lawfull to the Duke of Gloucester, to mary againe with the Lady Iaquet. The Duke of Gloucester obeyong to this sentence. beganne to waxe lothe of his supposed wyfe, by whome he neuer had profite but losse: for whose cause his friends became his enimies, and for whose sake he was openly slaundered. Wherefore he, by wanton affection blinded, toke to hys wyfe Elianor Cobham daughter to the Lorde Cobham, of Sterberow, which before (as the fame went) was his sourraigne Lady and paramour, to his great slaunder and reproche. And if he were vnquieted wyth his other pretenced wyfe, truely he was ten tymes more vexed, by occasion of this woman, as you shall hereafter playnely perceyue: So that he beganne his mariage with euill, and ended it with worse. The Lady Iaquet after the death of John Duke of Brabant, maried a gentleman of meane estate, called Franke of Bursellen, for the whych cause the Duke of Burgoyne imprysoned her husbande, and lefte her in great trouble: suche was the ende of these two mariages.

A little before this time, Sir Thomas Rampstone, syr Philip Branch, Sir Nicholas Burdet, and other Englishe men, to the number of fine hundred, repaired and fortified the towne of Saint Iames de Leitron, on the frontiers of Normandy, adioyning to Britain. Arthur Erle of Richemond and Yury brother to the Duke of Britayne, which like an vntrue Gentlema, sworne and forsworne to the king of England, sodainely fled to Charles the Dolphyn: which much rejoysing of his fauou: and amitie, gaue to hym the Constableship of Fraunce, which the Erle of Boughan slayne before at Vernoyl, a small time occupied, and lesse space enjoyed. This new constable not a little joyfull of his high office, thought to doe some pleasure to the Dolphyn hys Master, and to advaunce his name at the first entry into his aucthoritie, he imagined no enterprise to be to him more honorable, nor to his prince more acceptable, then to advoyde and drive out of the towne of Saint Iames de Beueon, all the Englishe nation. So in hope of victorie he gathered together aboue. xl. M. men, of Britons, Frenchmen and Scottes, and environed the towne of Saint Iames, or saint Iaques de Beuron, with a strong siege. The Englishe men within, which in number passed not sixe hundred men, manfully defended the daylie assaultes of the fierce french men. The Englishe men consulted together what way was best to be taken; and after long debating, they determined to issue out of the towne, and to fight with their enimies. So on a day, when the Britons were weried with a long assault, towards the cuening the Englishe men came out of the towne one part by the posterne of the Castell, and another parte by the gate of the towne, cryeng saint George Salisburie: and set on their enemies both before and behinde. The French men seyng the courage of the Englishe 4 C

The French men (neving mas vanquished) fell in chaision amongest themseness the one layeng to the charge of the other the losse of their men, and the charge of their freng. Such is ever the change of the warre, it when victorie is obtevied, the most of varie and faint hearths boy will boste and bragge, and when the nature is lost, the faint is assigned to the best, and not to the worste. The new Constitute was sore dismand and managed of this discomitture and shameful fight, but there was no rement but the hearth to the entent to blot out and deface this snameful fight with a notable victorie, he with a great armie entered into the Countrie of Answer, and breat, spowed and destroyed two or three at the most, little poore thetened Villages; which small act done, his mallor was quenched, and his olde griefe (as he thought) victoriously revenged.

her weens the Dune of June of June of Wincesser, and the Bylamp of Winchester. In this season fen a great diamsion in the realme of England, which of a sparale was like to growe to a great flame: For whether the Dishop of Winchester chiled Henry Beaution, some to Ioan Duke of Lancaster, by his thirde wyle, entired the authorities of Humfrey Duke of Globbester protector of the realme, or whether the Duke had them distance at the ryches and pompous estate of the Bishop, sure it is that the whole realme was troubled with the hand their parte takers; so that the Citizens of London formy that which might have a hande to besiege and destroy them. In so much that all the shoppes within the Citie of London were shut in for feare of the finducers of these two great personages, for each parte had assombled no small a miner of people. It belongeth to see the gopermanence of the and is person, informed of the same vidue purpose of my save Lord of Windhester, declared in the article nexte above savde. And in leving merevil determy rang to have good to Eliham voto the king, to have provided as the cause required. My savie Lord of Winchester, votruely and against the kinges peace, to the entent to trouble my savde Lorde of Gloudesner goving to the king purposing his death in case that he had gode that way, set men of armes and Archers at the ende of London bridge next Surfaverie: and in forbarring of the sings high way, let drawe the chevne of the Son pes there; and set up Pupes and Harriels, in maner and forme of Bulwarses; and set men in Chambers, Sellers, and Windowes, with Bowes and arrowes and other weapons, to the entent to bring to final, destruction my sayde Lorde of Gloucesters person, as well as of more mantilen should come with him.
- 4 Item are saude Lorde of Gioucester sayth and anyometh, that our someraigne Lorde his brother, that was king Heary the fift, tolde him on a time, when our sayde souerargue Lorde beyng Prince, was lodged in the Palaice of Westminster in the great Chanber, by the noves of a Spantell there was on a night a man spied and taken behinde a taget of the save chamber, the which man was delivered to the Erle of Arunded to be examined vippon the cause of his nevng there at that time. the which so examined, at that twine, confessed that he was there by the starring up and procuring of my savde Lorde of Winchester, ordevned to have same the sayd prince there in his bed : Wherefore the sayde Erie of Arundell let sacke him foorthwith, and drowned him in the Thames.
- 5 hem, our source me Lorde that was, king Henry the fift, sayde voto my sayde Lorde of G., ucester that his father king Henry the fourth lyuing, and visited then greatly with sic lesse of the hande of God, my sayde Lorde of Winchester sayd vinto the king (Heary the lift then being prince) that the king his father, so visited with sicknesse was not personable; and therefore not disposed to come in conversation and governance of the peocle. It for so much, counsayled hym to take the governaunce and crowne of thys land spea him.

celour of England, vnto the causes and matters of heauinesse, declared in articles agaynst him by my Lorde of Gloucester.

1 First, as of the refuse made vnto my Lorde of Gloucester, of opening the tower to him, of his lodgyng therein, by the commaundement of my sayde Lorde of Wynchester. he aunswereth: that in the presence of my sayde Lorde of Gloucester, before his commyng out of his Countie of Henaulde, for causes such as were thought reasonable, it semeth lefull that the tower should have bene notablie stored and kept with vitaile, howbeit, it was not foorthwith executed, and that in likewise after that my sayde Lorde of Gloucester was gone into his sayde Countie of Henawd for sedicious and odious billes and language, cast and vsed in the Citie of London, sounyng of insurrection and rebellion agaynst the kinges peace, and destruction aswell of diverse estates of this land. as straungers being vider the defence, in somuche that in doubt thereof, straungers in great number fled the land: and for the more sure kepyng of the sayd Tower, Richard Wooduile Esquier, so trusted with the king our souereigne Lorde that dead is (as well ye knowe) and also Chamberlain and Counsailor vnto my Lorde of Bedford, with a certeine number of defensible persons assigned vnto him, was made deputie there, by the assent of the kinges counsayle, beyng that tyme at London, for to abyde therein for safegarde thereof, and straightly charged by the sayde counsayle, that duryng that tyme of his sayde charge, he should not suffer any man to be in the Tower stronger then him selfe, without especiall charge or commaundement of the king by the aduice of his counsaile.

2 Item, that after, some vpon the commyng of my sayd Lord of Gloucester into this lande from his Countrie of Henawld, the sayde Lords of the kings counsaile were informed, that my sayde Lorde of Gloucester, grudged with the sayd maner of enforcyng the Tower, and let say to them of London, that he had well vnderstand, that they had beene heavily threatned for the tyme of hys absence, and otherwise then they should have bene if he had bene in thys land, Wherefore he was right euill contented, and especiall of the sayde forsyng of the Tower, set vpon them in maner of a chast vilaine. Consideryng the good equitie and truth that they had alwayes kept vnto the king, offring them therepon remedie if they would.

3 Item that after this, Richard Scot Lieutenant of the Tower, by the commaundement Frier Randolph. of my sayd Lorde of Gloucester, brought vnto him Frier Randolffe, the which had long before confessed treason, done by him agaynst the kings person that dead is, for the which knowlege he was put to be kept in the sayde Tower, and straightly commaunded vnder great paine geven vnto the sayd Scot, to kepe him straightly and surely, and not to let him out of the sayd Tower without commaundement of the king, by the aduice of his coun-The which sayd Frier Randolfe, my sayde Lorde of Gloucester kept then with himselfe (not wittyng to the sayd Scot) as he declared vnto my sayd Lord of Winchester. Sone after that he had brought the sayd Frier Randolfe vnto my Lord of Gloucester, saiyng vnto my Lord of Winchester, that he was vndone but he helped hym, and expressed as for cause of the sayd withholdyng of Frier Randolfe: And saiyng moreouer, that when he desired of my sayd Lorde of Gloucester, the deliueraunce of the sayd Frier Randolfe, to leade him againe vnto the Tower, or sufficient warrant for his discharge, my sayd Lord of Gloucester aunswered him, that his commaundement was sufficient warrat and discharge for him. In the which thing aboue sayde, it was thought to my Lord of Winchester that my sayd Lord of Gloucester, tooke vpon him further then his Aucthoritie stretched vnto, and caused him to doubt and dread, least that he would have proceeded further. And at such time as the said Woodeville came vnto him to aske his advice and cousaile, of lodgyng of my sayde Lorde of Gloucester in the tower: he aduised and charged him, that before he suffered my sayd Lorde of Gloucester or any person lodge therein stronger then himselfe, he should puruey him a sufficient warrant thereof, of the king by the aduise of his counsaile.

> 4 Item, as to the sayd article of the aforesayd causes of heavinesse, my said Lord the Chauncelor aunswereth, that he neuer purposed to set hand on the kinges person, nor to

remoue him, or that he should be remoued, or put in any maner of gouernaunce, but by the aduice of the kinges counsaile. For he could not conceiue any maner of goodnesse or of aduauntage that might have growen vnto him thereof: But rather great perill and charge, and hereof my sayd Lord of Winchester is redy to make profe in time & place counient.

5 Item, as to the third article of the foresayd causes and heuinesse, my said Lorde Chauncelor aunswereth, that he was oft and dyuers times warned, by dyuers credible persons, aswell at the tyme of the kinges last Parliament, holden at Westminster, as before and sithe, that my sayd Lord of Gloucester, purposed him bodily harme, and was warned thereof, and counsayled by the sayd persons, and that diverse times to abstaine him from commyng to Westminster, as my sayde Lorde of Winchester declared vnto my sayde Lorde of Gloucester.

6 Item, that in the tyme of the sayd Parliament, diverse persons of lowe estate of the Citie of London in great number, assembled on a day vpon the Wharffe, at the Crane of the Vintrie, and wished and desyred that they had there the person of my Lorde of Winchester, saiyng: that they would have throwen him into the Thamise, to have taught him to swim with winges. Whereof billes and language of slaunder, and threatnynges were cast and spoken in the sayde Citie, by my sayde Lorde the Chauncelor, which caused him to suppose, that they that so sayd and did, willed and desyred his destruction, although they had no cause.

7 Item, that after the commyng to London of Sir Raufe Bottiller, and maister Lewes, sent fro my Lord of Bedford, to the rest of the Lordes of the counsaile, they beyng informed that my sayd Lorde of Gloucester did beare displeasure to my sayd Lord of Winchester: They came to my sayd Lorde of Gloucester to his Inne, the second Sonday next before Alhallowen day, and there opened vnto him, that they had knowledge and vnderstandyng of the sayde displeasure, praiyng him to let them knowe if he bare suche displeasure agaynst my sayd Lorde of Winchester, and also the causes thereof. At the whiche time (as my sayd Lorde of Winchester was afterward informed) that my sayde Lord of Gloucester affirmed that he was heavie toward him, and not withouten causes that peraduenture he would put in writyng.

8 Item, that after the Monday next before Alhallowen day last past in the night, the people of the sayd Citie of London, by the commaundement of my sayde Lorde of Gloucester, as it was saide: For what cause my Lorde the Chauncelor wist not, assembled in the Citie, armed and arrayed, and so continued all that night. Amongest divers of the which (the same night by what excitation, my sayde Lorde the Chauncelour wist not) sedicious and heavie language was vsed, and in especiall against the person of my sayde Lorde the Chauncelor. And so the same Monday at night, my sayd Lord of Gloucester, sent vnto the Innes of Court at London, charging them of the Court dwellyng in the same, to be with him vpon the Morow, at eyght of the Clocke in their best array.

9 Item, that on the morowe, beyng Tewesday next following earely my sayd Lorde of Gloucester, sent vnto the Maior and Aldermen of the sayd Citie of Londo, to ordein him vnto the number of thre. C. persons on horsback, to accompanie him to such place as he disposed him to ride, which (as it was sayd) was vnto the king, to the entent to have his person, and to remove him from the place that he was in, without assent or advise of the kinges counsail, the which thing was thought vnto my sayde Lorde the Chauncelor, that he ought in no wise to have done, nor had not bene seene so before.

10 Item, that my sayde Lorde the Chauncelor, considering the thinges abouesayde, and doubting therefore of perilles that might have ensued therof, intending to puruey thereagainst, and namely for his awne suretie and defence, according to the law of nature, ordeyned to let that no force of people should come on the Bridge of London toward him, by the which he or his might have bene indaungered or noved, not intending in any wise bodilye bodilye harme vnto my sayd Lord of Gloucester, nor to any other person, but onely his awne defence in eschewyng the perill abouesayde.

11 Item, as toward the fourth and fift of the sayde articles, my Lorde the Chauncelor aunswereth, that he was euer true, to all those that were his souereigne Lordes, and reigned vpon him, and that he neuer purposed treason or vntruth agaynst any of their persons, and in especiall agaynst the person of our sayd souereigne Lorde King Henry the fift. The which considering the great wisedome, truth and manhoode, that all men knewe in him, he would not for the tyme that he was king, haue set on my sayd Lord the Chauncelor so great trust as he did, if he had found, or thought in him such vntruth. The which thing my sayde Lorde the Chauncelor offered to declare and shewe, as it belongeth to a man of his estate to do, requiring therevoon my Lord of Bedford, and all the Lordes spirituall and temporall in this Parliament, that it might be seene, that there were Indges convenient in this case, that they would do him right, or else that he might have leave of the king by their aduise, to go sue his right, before him that ought to be his indge.

12 And as towarde the letter sent by my Lord of Winchester, vnto my lord of Bedford, of the which the tenor is before rehersed, of the which my lorde of Gloucester complained him of the malicious and vntrue purpose of my said lorde of Winchester, as towarde the assembling of the people, and gatheryng of a field in the kings land, in troublyng therof, and agaynst the kings peace: My sayde lorde of Winchester aunswereth, that if his sayde letters duly vnderstand, and in such wise as he vnderstood and meant in the writyng of them it may not reasonably be gathered and taken, that my sayde lorde of Winchester, entended to gather any field or assemble people, in troubling of the kings land, and agaynst the kinges peace, but rather he purposed to acquite him to the king in his truth, and to kepe the rest and peace in the kinges land, and to eschew rebellion, disobedience and all trouble: For by that that in the begynnyng of the sayd letter, he calleth my sayde Lorde of Bedford, his leuest lord, after one, that is the king, whome he ought to accept of dutie of his truth, the which he hath euer kept and will keepe.

13 Moreover in the sayde letter, he desireth the commyng home of my lord of Bedford, for the welfare of the king, and of his realmes of England and of Fraunce, the which stande principally in his keepyng of rest and peace, and prayeth my sayd Lorde of Bedford to speede his commyng into England, in eschewyng of ieopardie of the lande, and of a fielde the which he dread him, might have followed if he had long taryed: As toward those wordes, and ye tary we shall put this land in aduenture with a field, such a brother ye haue here. &c. My sayde Lorde of Winchester sayeth, the sooth is: before or he wrote the sayd letter, by occasion of certeine ordinaunces, made by the Maior and Aldermen of London, against the excessive takyng of Masons, Carpenters, Tilers, Plasterers, and other laborers, for their daily iourneyes, and approued by the Kynges aduise and his counsaile, there were cast many heuinesses and sedicious billes, vnder the names of such labourers, threatning risyng with many thousandes, and manassyng of estates of the lande, and likewise sedicious and euill language sowen, and so continued and likely to have ensued of purpose and intent of disobedience and rebellion. To the redressyng of the which, it seemed to my lorde the Chauncelor, that my sayd lord of Gloucester, did not his endeuor nor diligence that he might have shewed, for lacke of which diligence, they that were disposed to do disobeysance, were incouraged and inboldened. So that it was like that they should have made a gatheryng, and that the King and his true subjectes, should haue bene compelled to haue made a field, to haue withstand them, the which field making had bene aduenturyng of this lande: And in tokenyng that it was neuer my sayde lorde Chauncelors intent to gather no field, but as truth most stirred him agaynst such as riotously would make suche assemble agaynst our souereigne Lorde, and the weale of this land. He desired so hastely, the commyng of my sayde lorde of Bedford, the which he would in no wise haue so greatly desired, if he would haue purposed him vnto any vnlawful makyng making of a field, for he wist well that my sayde lorde of Bedford would most sharpely have chastised and punished, all those that so woulde any riotous assemble make. When this aunswere was made, the Duke caused this writing following openly to be proclaymed.

14 Be it knowen to all folkes, that it is the intent of my lorde of Bedford, and all the An order taken lordes spirituall and temporall, assembled in this present Parliament, to acquite him and that an othe should be mithem, and to procede truly, justly, and indifferently, without any parcialitie, in any maner nistred. of matters or quarelles, moued or to be moued, betwene my lorde of Gloucester, on that one partie, and my lorde of Winchester, Chauncelor of England on that other partie. And for sure kepyng of the kinges peace, it is accorded by my sayd lorde of Bedford, and by my sayde lordes spirituall and temporall, an othe to be made, in forme as followeth, that is to say.

The Othe of the Lordes.

THat my sayde Lorde of Bedford, and my sayde Lords spirituall and temporall, and The othe of the eche of them shall as farre forth as their cunnings and discretions suffisen, truely, justly and indifferently, counsayle and aduise the king, and also proceede and acquite themselves, in all the sayde matters and quarrels, without that they, or any of them, shall priuely and apertly, make or shewe himselfe to be party or parciall therein, not leauing or eschewyng so to doe, for affection, loue, meede, doubt, or drede of any person or persons. And that they shall in all wise, keepe secrete all that shall be commoned by way of counsayle in the matters and quarrels aboue sayde, in the sayde Parliament, without that they or any of them shall, by worde, wryting of the king, or in any wise open, or discouer it to any of the sayde parties, or to any other person, that is not of the saide counsayle: But if he have a speciali commaundement or leave thereto of the king, or of my sayde Lorde of Bedford. And that eche of them shall, with all his might and power, assist by waye of counsayle, or else shewe it vnto the king, my Lorde of Bedford, and to the rest of my sayd Lords, to put the sayd parties to reason, and not to suffer that any of the sayde parties, by them or by their assistents, proceede or attempt by way of fight agaynst the kings peace: nor helpe, assist, or comfort any of them thereto, but let them with al! their might and power, and withstande them, and assist vnto the king, and my sayde Lorde of Bedford, in keeping of the kings peace, and redressing all such maner of proceeding by waye of fight or force.

The Arbitrement.

IN the name of God, we Henry Archebyshop of Cauntorburie, Thomas Duke of Excester, John Duke of Norffolke, Thomas Byshop of Duresme, Phillip Byshop of Worcester, John Byshop of Bathe, Humfrey Erle of Stafford, Wylliam Alnewik keper of the kings privie seale, Rauffe Lorde Cromewell, Arbitratoures in all manner of causes, matters and quarrels of heavinesses and greevances, with all incidents, circumstaunces, dependents, or connexes, beyng and hangyng betwene the high and worthy Prince Humfrey Duke of Gloucester, on the one partie, and the worshipfull father in God, Henry Byshop of Wynchester and Chauncellour of England, on the other partie, by eyther of them for the peasing of the sayde quarels and debates, taken and chosen in maner and forme, as it is conteyned more plainly in a comprimise made therevpon, of the which the tenour sheweth in thys forme.

Memorandum, the vij. day of March, in the fourth yere of our soueraine Lord the king, Henry the sixt. The high and mighty prince Humfrey Duke of Gloucester, at the reuerence of God, and for the good of the king our soueraigne Lorde in this lande, and pamely at the reuerence, and specially at the request and prayer of the mightie and high Prince, my Lorde of Bedford his brother, agreed him to put and putteth all maner matters and quarels in deede, with all their incidents, circumstaunces, dependentes and connexes, that touchen him and his person, that he hath in any wise, doe, or feeleth him greeued, or heavie agaynst my Lorde his Vncle, my Lorde of Winchester. Or else that my Lorde of Wynchester findeth him greeued agaynst him, in as much as they touch him or his person, fro the beginning of the worlde vnto this day: In the aduise, ordinaunce and arbitrament of the worthy father in God, Henry Archebishop of Cauntorbury, the high and noble prince Thomas Duke of Excester, and John Duke of Norffolke, the worshipfull father in God Thomas Byshop of Duresme, Philip Byshop of Worcester, Iohn Bishop of Bathe, The noble Lorde Humfrey Erle of Stafford, the worshipfull persons, Mayster Wylliam Alnewike keeper of the kings privic Seale, and Raufe Lorde Cromewell, promising and behighting, by the fayth of his body, and worde of his princehood and kings sonne, to doe, kepe, observe and fulfill, for him and his behalfe, all that shall be declared, ordevned and arbitred, by the foresayde Archebishop, Dukes, Bishops, Earle, keeper of the privile seale, and Lorde Cromwell, in all matters and quarrels above sayde: Grauntyng also and promysing ouer that, to be comprehended in the foresayde arbitrement, as towarde putting awaye all heavynesse or displeasures in any wise, conteyn. ed by my Lorde of Gloucester, agaynst all those that have in any wise assisted, counsayled, or fauoured vnto his sayde Vncle of Wynchester, and as towarde any matters, that be touching my Lorde of Gloucester, remitteth it and the gouernaunce thereof vnto the king and his counsayle, they to deme it by the aduise of his counsayle, as him thinketh it to be done. In witnesse of the which thing, to this present compromise, my sayde Lorde of Gloucester, hath subscribed his name with his awne hande Humfrey Glouces-And in like forme, my Lorde of Winchester in an other compromise, hath subscrider taken by the bed with his awne hande, vnder the worde of Priesthood, to stande at the aduise, ordifor the pacesyng naunce and arbitrement of the persons aboue sayde, Mutatis Mutandis.

The causes beforesayde and quarels by vs sene, heard, and diligently examined tweene the Duke and decreed, by the assent of the sayde parties, ordevne and awarde, that my lords of Gloucester and of Winchester, for any thing done or spoken, by that one partie against of the quarrels and variannces that were beof Gloucester, and the Byshop of Winchester.

against that other, or by any of theirs, or any other person or persons, afore the. vij. day of this present moneth of Marche, never hereafter take causes, quarrels, displeasures or heavinesses, that one against the other, ne neyther agaynst the counsaylers, adherents or fauourers of that other, for any thing or things that are past. And that my sayde lorde of Gloucester, be good lorde to my sayd lorde of Winchester, and haue him in love and affection as his kinseman and Vncle. And that my sayde lorde of Winchester, have to my sayde lorde of Gloucester, true and sadde loue and affection, doe and be readic to doe to him suche service, as appertayneth of honesty to my sayde lorde of Winchester and hys estate to doe. And that eche of them be good Lorde vnto all those adherents, counsaylers and fauourers of that other, and shewe them at all times fauourable love and affection, as for any thing done by them, or sayde afore the seventh day of

And we decree, ordayne and awarde, that my sayde Lorde of Winchester, in the presence of the king our soueraigne Lorde, my Lord of Bedford, and my Lorde of Glou-The saieng of cester, and the residue of the lordes spiritual and temporall, and commons beyng in thys winchester vato present Parliament, say and declare in maner and forme that followeth.

My soueraigne lorde, I have well vnderstande, that I am noysed among the states of your lande, howe that the king our soueraigne lorde that was that time, being prince and lodged in the great chamber at Westminster, by the bayeng of a spanyell, there was on a night taken, behinde a tapet in the same chamber, a man, that should have confessed that he was there by mine excitation and procuring to have slaine the foresayd Prince there in his bed, wherevpon he was sacked, and foorthwith drowned in the Thames. And furthermore I am accused, how that I should have stirred the king that last died, the time also that he was prince, to have taken the governaunce of this realme, and the crowne vpon him, lyuing his father the same tyme beyng king: Thorough which language and noysing I feele my name and fame greatly enblemished, in divers mens opinions. Wherevpon I take first God to my witnesse, and afterwarde all the worlde, that I have bene at all times, and am true louer and true man, to you my Soueraigne lorde, and shall be all my lyfe. And also I have bene to my soueraigne lorde, that was your father, all time of his reigne, true man: and for such he tooke me, trusted me, and cherished me to his lives ende, and as I trust no man will affirme the contrary, nor never in my lyfe procuring, nor imagining death nor destruction of his person, ne assenting to any such thing, or lyke thereto, the tyme that he was king or prince, or else in other estate. And in likewise, I was true man to king Henry the fourth, all the time that he was my soueraigne lorde, and reigned vpon me: In which matters, in all maner of wise, that it liketh to you my soueraigne lorde for to commaunde me, I am ready for to declare me: And furthermore, where, how and when, it shall like you by the aduise of your counsayle to assigne me. Wherfore, I beseech you my soueraigne lorde, as humbly as I can, consydering that there is no grounded processe, by the which I might lawfully in these matters aboue sayde be conuict, blessed be God, to holde me and declare me, by the aduise of all the lordes, spirituall and temporall, being in this present Parliament, true man to you my soueraigne lorde, and so to have bene vnto my soueraigne lordes that were your father and Graundfather, and true man also, to have bene at all times vnto your sayde father, whilest he was prince, or else in any other estate, the sayde slaunder and noysing notwithstanding. And this same declaration to be enacted, in this your sayde present parliament.

The which words declared in maner as it is aboue sayd, by my said lord of Winchester, it seemeth to my sayde lords the Arbitratours, that it is meete that my sayde lorde of Winchester draw him aparte, and in the meane tyme, the lordes being present, be singulerly examined thervpon, and say their aduise: And if it be assented by them, in maner as my sayde lorde of Winchester desireth, let him be called agayne, and that then my lorde of Bedford haue these wordes in effect that follow.

Fayre Vncle, the king my lord, by the aduise of his counsayle, hath commaunded me to say to you, that he hath well vnderstande, and considered all the matters which ye have here openly declared in his presence, and thervpon ye desire a peticion that he will declare you, and by the aduise and assent of the Lordes spirituall and temporall, beyng in this present Parliament, he declareth you a true man to hym, and that ye have so be to my Lorde his father, and Graundfather, also true man to my Lorde his father whiles he was Prince or else in any other estate, the sayde dislaunder and noysing notwithstanding: And wil that the said declaration be so enacted in this present parliament. After the which wordes thus sayde, as before is declared, by the sayd Lordes Arbitratours, that my sayde lorde of Winchester shoulde have these words that followeth, to my sayd Lord of Glocester.

My Lorde of Gloucester, I have conceyued to my great heavinesse, that ye should have receyued by divers reportes, that I should have purposed and imagined agaynst your person, honor and estate, in divers maners, for the which ye have taken agaynst me great displeasure, Sir I take God to my witnesse, that what reportes so ever have beene to you of me, peraduenture of such as have had no great affection to me, God forgeve it them, I never imagined, ne purposed any thing that might be hindering or prejudice to your person, honor, or estate. And therefore, I pray you that ye be vnto me good lord from this time forth, for by my will I gave never other occasion, nor purpose not to doe hereafter thorough Gods grace.

The which wordes so by him sayde, it was decreed by the sayde Arbitratours, that my lorde of Gloucester should aunswere and say.

Faire Vncle, sithe ye declare you suche a man as ye saye, I am right glad that it is so, and for such a man I take you. And when this was done, it was decreed by the sayd Arbitratours that every eche of my lordes of Gloucester and Winchester should take eyther other by the hande, in the presence of the king and al the parliament, in signe and token of good love and accord, the which was done and the parliament was adjourned till after Easter.

When the great fyre of thys discention, betweene these two Noble personages, was thus by the arbitratours to their knowlege and iudgement vtterly quenched out, and layde vnder boorde all other controuersies between other Lordes, taking parte with the one partie or the other, were sone appeased and brought to concord. For ioy whereof the king caused a solempne feast, to be kept on whitson Sonday, on the which daye he created Richard Plantagenet, sonne and heire to the Erle of Cambridge (whom his father at Hampton, had put to execution, as you before have heard) Duke of Yorke, not foreseing before, that this preferment shoulde be his destruction, nor that his seede should be of hys generation, be the extreme ende and finall confusion. He the same day also promoted John Lorde Mowbrey and Erle Marshall, sonne and heire to Thomas Duke of Norffolke, by king Richarde the second exiled this Realme and dominion, to the tytle, name, and stile of the Duke of Norffolke, during which feast, the Duke of Bedford adourned the king with the high order of Knighthood, which on the same day dubbed with the sworde these knights, whose names ensue.

Sir Iohn Iune chiefe Baron, and diuers

After this solempne feast ended, a great ayde and subsidie was graunted, for the con- A subsidie. tinuance of the conquest in Fraunce, and so money was gathered, and men were prepared in euery Citie, towne and Countrie: Duryng which businesse, Thomas Duke of Ex-The death of ceter the sad, wise, and well learned Counsailer, great Vncle to the King, departed out of Thomas Duke this mortall lyfe, at the mannor of Greenewiche, and was with all funerall pompe conueyed of Exceter. through London to Bury, and there buried. In which yere also dyed the Ladie Elizabeth his halfe sister, and of the whole blood with King Henry the fourth maried to Lorde Iohn Holland Duke of Exceter, and after to the Lorde Fanhope, burved at the Blacke Friers of London.

While these thinges were thus appointing and concluding in England: The Erle of Warwike Lieutenant for the Regent in the realme of Fraunce, entered into the Countrie of Mayne, and besieged the towne of Chasteau de Loyre, the which shortly to him was rendered, whereof he made Capteyne Mathew Gough Esquier. After that, he toke by assault & Castell of Mayet, and gaue it for his valiantnesse to John Winter Esquier, & after that he conquered the Castell of Lund, and made there gouernour William Gladdisdale gentelman. At which place he was informed, y the French men were assembled together, in the countrie of Beausse, wherfore like a valiant Capteine, he with all his power marched thetherward, to encounter with his enemies, and to fight with his aduersaries, which having knowledge of his approching, fled, and durst not abide the triall, nor icopard the aduenture, and in his returning, he besieged the Castell of Montdublean, wherof was Capteine sir Roberton des Croix, which siege cotinued thre wekes, but in conclusion v English men so sore charged them within, y the capteine with his whole company were content to yelde the Castell, their liues, horse, and harnesse, onely reserved: Which to them was after long consultation had, & many agreements made, frankely graunted. And the sayd Erle of Warwike, leauving there the valiant Lord Willoughby, returned againe to Duryng which season, he was ordeyned by the assent of the thre estates of the The Lorde realme of England, to be gouernour of the yong king, in like maner as the noble Duke Willoughby of Exceter before his death was appoynted & assigned, but yet he taried still in Fraunce, of the yong king. and did there no small service as you shall hereafter perceyue.

The Regent of Fraunce thus beyng in England, meanes was made by the Duke of Burgoyn, for the deliuerie of the Duke of Alanson, which was taken prisoner at the battaile of Vernoyle the last yere. So he for the somme of two hundreth thousand crownes, was delinered and set at large; but neither for the release of all, or abatement of part of his raunsome, he would in no wise acknowlege the king of Englad, to be his liege and souereigne lord: Such affection bare he to the Dolphyn, and such truth shewed he to his na- A great praise turall Countrie. take: meaning & Cardinals Hats should not presume to be egal with princes. But now the king beyng yong, and the Regent his friend, he obteyned that dignitie, to his great profite, and to the impourrishing of the spiritualtie. For by a Bull Legantine, which he purchased at Rome, he gathered so much treasure, that no man in maner had money but he and so was he surnamed the rich Cardinall of Winchester, and neyther called learned Bishop, nor vertuous Priest.

After that, the Duke of Bedford was returned into Fraunce, the Lord of Rustian Marshall of Briteyn, assembled a great companie of the Britishe nation, which fortefyed and repayred the towne of Pontorson, and after the saide Marshall, with a thousand men entered into the Countrie of Constantyne in Normandie, and came before the towne of Auranches. The English men within the garrison, issued out, and boldely fought with their enemyes: But after long conflict & many strokes geuen, the Britons were ouercome, and the Lorde Rustian taken, and the most part of his people slaine.

The Duke of Bedford heering that the towne of Pontorson was newly fortefyed, and strongly defended, sent thether the Erle of Warwike, accompanied with the Lorde Scales, and diverse other valiaunt Capteynes and Souldiers, to the number of. vij. thousand men to besiege the Towne, which so enuironed it on euery part, that neyther man could steale out, nor beast could passe in. The siege long continuyng, vitaile began to waxe scant in the Englishe armie, wherefore the Lord Scales hauyng in his company, sir Iohn Harpeley Baily of Constantyne, Sir William Brearton Baily of Cane, Sir Raufe Tession, Sir Iohn Carbonell, and three thousand good men of warre, departed from the siege to get vitail, powder, and other things necessary for their purpose and enterprise. And as they were returning with their cariages on the sea coast, nere to Saint Michaels Mount, they sodeinly were encountered with their enemies, whereof the chiefe were the Baron of Coloses, the Lorde Dausebost Capteine of the the sayde Mount, the Lorde Mountabon, the Lorde Mount bourchier, the lorde of Chasteau Giron, the lord of Tyntygnat, the lorde Chasteau Brian, with, vi. thousande men of warre. The lorde Scales and his companie (seying that they were compassed on euery syde with deadly daungers, for the sea was on the one syde, and their enemyes on the other, & no meane way to escape or flie) discended from their horses, and like gredie Lions together in an unpeaceable fury, set on their enemies. The skirmishe was strong, and the fight was fierce, the Englishe men kept themselves so close, that their enemies coulde have no advauntage of them. At the last the lorde Scales cryed misheat the siege Saint George, they flie, with that the Englishemen tooke suche a courage, and the Frenchemen that fought before, were so dismayde that they began to flie. The Englishe men leaped againe on horseback, and followed them, and slue and tooke aboue. xj. hundreth persons, amongest whome were taken, the Baron of Coloses, and the Lorde of Chasteau Brian, and. xxx. knightes.

of Pontoison.

After this victorie, the lorde Scales with his vitayles, prouision, and prisoners, returned to the siege, where he was of the Erle and other noble men joyously received, and for this noble fact, highly magnified and praysed. While the siege thus continued before Pountorson, Christopher Hanson and other souldiours of the garrison of Saint Susan, made a road into the Countrie of Aniow, and came to a Castell named Ramfort, which Castell was so priuily scaled, that the Capteyne within and his company, were taken or slaine before they knewe of their enemies approchyng. When knowlege of this feate was made open to the Frenchemen, which were assembled to the number of. xx. thousand to rayse the siege, and to breake vp the Campe, living before the towne of Pountorson, they left that iourney for a tyme, and returned to the Castell of Ramfort, and besieged the same by the space of ten dayes.

The Englishemen considering the multitude of the enemies, and the farre absence of their friendes, began to treate with the French men, and so vpon condicion to depart with bagge and baggage, horse and harnesse, they rendered up the Castell, and departed with more riches then they brought, which Castell thus possessed by the Frenchemen, they for-gat the reskue at Pountorson, and brake up their armie. But soone after, the lorde of Raix, callyng himselfe Lieutenant generall for the Dolphyn, accompanied with the Lorde Mount Iehan, the lorde Beaumanoyre, and the lorde Tussie, and other to the number of three thousand persons, entered into the Countrie of Mayn, and layde siege to the Castell of Malicorne, whereof was Capteyne an Englishe man, called Oliver Osbatersby, which Castell with the Captein was by force taken and obteyned; in like maner they toke the little Castell of Lude, and therein William Blackeborne, Lieutenant for William Glasdale Esquire, and put him to raunsome, and slue all his souldiors. After this victorie in the which they muche gloried, the Frenchmen perceyuyng that the Erle of Warwike continued still his siege before the towne of Pountorson, and knowing by their espialls, that the Engglishmen were determined to geue them battaile, if they once attempted to rayse the siege, and therefore fearing to fight in an open battaile, reculed backe againe to the Dolphyn with little gaine, and small honour. The Frenchmen and Britons beyong strayghtly besieged within the towne of Pountorson, perceiving no likelihood of succors to come, and seving the Englishe armye dailye did encrease, fearyng the sequele thereof, if they by violence should be taken and vanquished, they offered the towne, so that they might depart with horse and harnesse only: which request (after long sute and peticion) to them was hardely Pountorson regraunted. The Erle lyke a valyaunt Capteyn, entered into the towne, and there appoynted covered by the for gouernours, the Lord Roos, and the Lorde Talbot, and leaving there a convenient garrison, returned to the Lorde Regent.

After the takyng of this towne, there was a league, and a treatie concluded betwene the A league co-Regent and the Duke of Briteyn, by the which agreement both the townes of Pountorson, cluded betweene the Duke of and Saint Iames de Beuron were beaten downe to the ground, and clerely defaced. After Briteyn and the the Lorde of Rais was departed out of the territorie of Mayn as you have heard, Chris-Regent. topher Hanson, Philip Gough, Martyn Godfrey called the scaler, and diverse other of the garrison of Saint Susan, to the number of. xxx. Archers, went out in a Mornyng to seeke their aduentures, and came neere to the Castell of Saint Laurence de Mortiers (at the same very season) when Sir Iames de Sepeaulx Captevne of the same, was gone out of hys Castell with the greatest number of his retinewe, to a Churche directly against the Castell. In the Masse tyme, the Englishemen entered by subtiltic into the gate, and so gat the Dongeon. And when sir Iames returned from Masse, as he entered into the gate he was taken, and his men fled, and so was the Castell furnished with Englishe men, and Capteine thereof was appoynted, Sir William Oldehaule.

The same season, Sir Iohn Fastolfe, gouernor of the Countries of Aniow and Maine, assembled a great puyssaunce of men of warre, and layd a siege before the Castell of Saint Owen Destays, besyde the towne of Lauall, whereof was Capteine Sir Guillam Orenge, which, after ten dayes besiegyng, rendered the Castell, their liues and armure onely except: howbeit, one railyng and slaunderous person was put to terrible execution. And from thence, the sayd sir Iohn removed to the strong Castell of Gravile, and after. xij. dayes, they within offered to yelde the Castell by a day, if they were not succored by the Dolphyn or his power. The offer was taken, and pledges deliuered, which were Gullam Cordouen, and Iohn de Maisiery Esquiers. After these pledges deliuered, sir Iohn Fastolfe returned in post to the Regent, aduertisyng him of this composition and agreemnt: wherefore the said Lorde raysed a great power, to fight with the Frenchmen at the day appointed, and in his companie were the Erles of Mortaigne, and Warwike, and the Lordes Roos and Talbot, Sir Iohn Fastolfe, Sir Iohn Awbemond, Sir Iohn Ratclife, and dyuerse other, to the number of. xx. thousand men, and so marched forwarde in hope to meete and joyne Battaile with their enimies. But their aduersaries which were not farre of, durst not approche, wherefore the Regent sent sir Iohn Fastolfe incontinent to receyue the Castell: but they within (contrary to their promise and appoyntment) had newly vitailed and manned the place, and so forsakyng their pledges and felowes in armes, refused to render the fortresse according to the appointmet: wherfore the pledges were brought before the bot a valyaunt captayne.

sight of them within the Castell, and there openly put to death. After this, the Lord Talbot was made gouernor of Aniow and Mayn. And Sir Iohn Fastolfe was as-The Lorde Tal- signed to another place: which Lord Talbot, beyng both of noble birth, and haute courage, after his commyng into Fraunce, obteyined so many glorious victories of hys enemies that his onely name was, and yet is dreadfull to the French nacion, and much renoumed amongest all other people. This ioly Capteyn, & sonne of the valiant Mars, entered into Mayne, and slue men, destroyed Castels, and brent townes, and in conclusion, sodeinly tooke the towne of Lauall: but the Lorde Loghac, and dynerse other, retrayted themselves into the Castell, and there remayned eight dayes. Duryng which tyme, it was agreed, that all Capteynes, Burgesses, and men of warre, which were within the Castell, should depart with bagge and baggages, paiving the Lorde Talbot for all thinges, one hundreth thousand Crownes. And the Castell so beyng delivered, was committed to the kepyng of Gilbert Halsall, which after, was slaine at the siege of Orleaunce, for whom was made Capteine Mathewe Gough, which beyng at the journey before Senlies, by treason of a Miller that kept a Mill adjoining to the wall, & Frenchmen entered into the towne, and brought it into their subjection and obeysaunce.

The Duke of Alaunson, which, as you have heard, was late delivered out of Englande. reuliued agayne the dull spirites of the Dolphyn, and the faint hartes of his Capitaynes, promising to them great victorie with little trauayle, and much gaine with small labour, wherfore in hope of good luck, he determined to doe some notable feate agaynst the Englishe men. Then happend a chaunce vnlooked for, or vnthought of, even as they would have wished or desired, for not onely the Magistrates, but chiefly the spiritual persons of the Citie of Mouns, knowing that the Duke of Britaine and his brother, were reuerted and turned to the French partie, beganne sore to mourne and lament, that they were subiectes and Vassals to the yoke and power of the Englishe men. Wherfore they determined and fully concluded, to aduertise of their mindes and determinations, the Capitaynesof Charles the Dolphyn, (of them called the French king) and so by certain false Friers, thereof wrote humble and louing letters. These newes pleased muche the French Capitaynes, but no lesse you may be sure the Dolphyn himselfe, as a thing discended from heaven, of them vnsought, vnimagined and not devised. Wherefore to take oportunitie when time serued, and not to leese so great a benefite so honestly offered, the Lordes Delabreth and Fayet, Marshals of Fraunce, accompanied with the Lordes of Monte Iohn, of Buel Doruall, Torsye and Beaumamoyre the heire, and Guyllyam his brother, and. v. C. other hardie Capitaynes and valiaunt Souldiours, tooke vpon them this enterprise, sending great thankes and laudes to the Clergie and Citezens, for their assured fidelitie to their soueraigne lord, promising them to be there at the day appointed, not doubting to finde them readye according to their promise, gladly to receive them.

When the daye assigned and the night appointed was come, the French Capitaines priuely approched the towne, making a little fire on an hill in the sight of the towne, to signifie their comming and approching. The Citezens which by the great Church were looking for their approche, shewed a burning Cresset out of the Steeple, which sodainly was put out and quenched. What should I saye, the Captaines on horseback came to the gate, and the Traytors within slue the porters and watchemen, and let in their friendes, the footemen entered first, and the men of armes wayted at the barriers, to the intent that if much neede required, or necessitie compelled, they might fight in the open field. And in the meane season, many Englishe men were slayne, and a great clamour and a houge noise was harde through the towne, as is wont and accustomed to be in a towne, by treason sodainly surprised and taken: but what was the cause of the crie, or beginning of the noyse, few except the confederates, eyther knew or perceyued. For the remnaunt of the Citezens beyng no partakers in this faction, imagined that the English men had made hauock in the towne and put all to the sword. The Englishmen on the other side, judged that the Citezens had begonne some newe rebellion agaynst them, or else had striuen amongs

The Citie of Mouns lost by reason.

The Erle of Suffolk, which was Gouerneur of the towne, heryng the clamour and noyse of the people, having perfite knowledge of suche as escaped from the walles, in what case the Citie stood in, without any taryeng or prolongyng of time, entered into the Castell which standeth at the gate of Saint Vincent, whereof was Constable Thomas Gower Esquire: whether also fled so manye English men, that the place was pestured, & there if they were not rescued, likely to be famished: but surely they were sore assaulted and marueylously hurte, with the shot of the Arblasters and Crossebowes, but they defended themselves so manfully, that their enemies gat small advauntage at their handes. But all their hardinesse had not serued, nor all their pollicy had not defended them, if they had not prively sent a Messenger to the Lorde Talbot, which then lay at Alanson, certefiyng him in what case they stood, for vitaile had they none, municions fayled, and the Castell was almost vndermined, so that yelding must followe, and resistaunce could not preuayle. The Lorde Talbot hering these newes, neyther slept nor banquetted, but with all hast assembled together his valiaunt Capitaynes, to the number of. vij. hundred men of warre, and in the euening departed from Alanson, and in the morning came to a Castell called Guyerche two Myles from Mauns, and from thence sent as an espiall Mathew Gough, to espie the gouernaunce of the enemies, and if he might, to shewe to his countreymen that he was at hande, to be their ayde and rescues. Mathew Gough so well sped, that prively in the night he came into the Castell, where he knewe howe that the French men being lordes of the Citie, and now casting no perilles, nor fearing any creature, beganne to waxe wanton and fell to ryot, as though their enemies could doe them no dammage: thinking that the English men which were shut vp in the Castel, studied nothing but how to escape & be deliuered. When Mathew Gough had known all the certainty, he prively returned agayne, and within a mile of the Citie met with the Lorde Talbot, and the lorde Scales, and made open to them all thinges according to his credence, which to speede the matter, because the day approched, with all haste possible came to the posterne gate, and alighted from their horses, and about sixe of the clock in the morning they issued out of the castell, cryeng Saint George, Talbot. The Frenchmen which were scarce vp, and thought of nothing lesse then of this sodaine approchment, some rose out of their beds in their shirts, and lept ouer the walles, other ranne naked out of the gates for sauing of their liues, leaving behinde them all their apparell, horses, armour and ryches, none was hurte but such, which eyther resisted, or would not yeelde, whereof some were slaine and cast in prison. There were slaine and taken foure hundred gentlemen, and the villaines frankely let go. After this, inquisition was made of the authors of this vngracious coniuration, and there were accused thirtie Citezens, twentie priestes, and fiftene Traytours justly Friers, which according to their desertes were put to execution. In thys yere, as sayth Caxton, the Vniuersitie of Loueyne in Brabant was founded by The foundation of Loueyne.

Iohn Duke of Burgondy.

And here to encourage and moue the worshipfull and good Citezens of London to be thankefull to God, and beneficiall to their poore neighbours, and to the common weale, I thought it good to note vnto you the charitable deede of a worthie Citezen and Alderman of London named Iohn Raynewell, who about this time gaue certayne landes and tenements lyeng in the sayd Citie, to the Chamber of London, for the which the sayde Chamber is bound for euer to discharge the inhabitauntes of the wardes of Dowgate, Billingsgate and Algate, of all suche fiftenes as from time to time shall be graunted vnto the king (so that it passe not three fiftenes in one yere.)

The Citie of Mouns thus being reduced into the English mens hands, the lorde Talbot departed to the towne of Alanson. After which marciall feate manfully acheeued, the Erle of Warwike departed into Englande, to be governour of the yong king, in stead of Mous again re-Thomas duke of Excester, late departed to God. In whose steede was sent into Fraunce, the lord Thomas Mountacute Erle of Salisburie, with five thousand men, which landed Englishe men. at Calice, and so came to the Duke of Bedford in Paris. Where he consulting with the

Duke of Bedford, cocerning the affayres of the realme of Fraunce: seing all thing so prosperously succeede on the English parte, beganne meruaylously to phantesie the Citie and countrey of Orliance, standing on the River of Loyre. But because the Citie was well fortefied both by the nature of the situation of the place, and by the pollicie of man. he imagined it not the worke of one day, nor the studie of one houre. Wherefore he remitted it to a farther deliberation, yet he was the man at that time, by whose wyt, strength and pollicie, the Englishe name was much fearefull and terrible to the French nation, which of himselfe might both appoint, commaund and doe all things in maner at his pleasure, in whose power, (as it appered after his death) a great parte of the conquest consisted and was esteemed, because he was a man both painefull and diligent, redy to withstande things perillous and imminent, and prompt in counsayle, and with no labour would be weeried, nor yet his courage at any time abated or appalled, so that all men put no more trust in any one man, nor no singular person gat more the hartes of all men. After this great enterprise had long bene debated and argued, in the privile counsayle, the Erle of Salisburies denise, (although it seemed hard and straunge to al other, and to him as it were a thing predestinate very easie) was graunted and allowed, which enterprise was the finall conclusion of his naturall destiny, as you shall shortly perceyue. Thus he replenished with good hope of victorie, and furnished with artilery, and municions apperteyning to so great a siege, accompanied with the Erle of Suffolke and the Lorde Talbot, and with a valiaunt company to the number of ten thousand men, departed from Paris, and passed through the countrey of Beause: he toke by assault the towne of Yainuile, but the Frenchmen fled into the Castell, and there continued five dayes, at the end wherof they rendered themselues simply: of the sayde number, some were put to death for certaine causes, and some were taken to mercie: he toke also the towne of Bawgency, suffering every man, which would become vassayle and subject to the king of Englande, to inherite their landes and enjoy their goodes. The townes of Meum vpon* Loyre and Iargenan, hering of these treatise, presented to him the keyes of the towne, vpon lyke agreement and equall condicions.

After this in the Moneth of September, he layde his siege on the one side of the water of Loyre, and besieged the towne of Orleaunce, before whose comming, the Bastard of Orleaunce, and the Byshop of the Citie and a great number of Scottes hering of the Erles intent, made divers fortifications about the towne, and destroyed the suburbes, in the which were xij. Parishe Churches, and foure orders of Friers. They cut also downe all the Vines, trees and bushes within five leagues of the towne, so that the Englishe men should have neyther comfort, refuge, nor succour.

Bastard of Or-

Here muste I a little digresse, and declare to you, what was this Bastard of Orleaunce, which was not onely now Capitayne of the Citie, but also after by Charles the sixt made Erle of Dunoys, and in great aucthoritie in Fraunce, and extreme enemie to the Englishe nation, as by this storie you shall apparantly perceyue, of whose line and stem discended the Dukes of Longuile, and the Marques of Rutylon. Lewes Duke of Orleaunce murthered in Paris, by Iohn Duke of Burgoyn, as you before haue heard, was owner of the Castell of Concy, on the Frontiers of Fraunce towarde Arthoys, whereof he made Constable the lord of Cawny, a man not so wise as his wife was faire, & yet she was not so faire, but she was as well beloued of the Duke of Orleaunce as of her husband, betwene the Duke & her husband (I cannot tel who was father) she conceyued a child, & brought forth a pretie boy called Iohn, which child being of the age of one yere, the Duke disceased and not long after the mother & the Lorde of Cawny ended their lyues. The next of the kinne to my Lorde Cawny, chalenged the enheritaunce, which was worth foure thousand crownes a yere, alleging that the boy was a bastard: and the kindred of the mothers side, for to saue her honesty, it plainely denied. In conclusion, this matter was in contention before the Presidents of the Parliament of Paris, and there hanged in controuersie till the chylde came to the age of eyght yeres olde. At which time it was demaunded maunded of him openly whose sonne he was: his friendes of his mothers side advertised him to require a daye, to be aduised of so great an aunswere, which he asked, and to him it was graunted. In the meane season his sayde friendes perswaded him to claime his inheritaunce, as sonne to the Lorde of Cawny, which was an honorable lyuing, and an auncient patrimony, affirming that if he sayde contrarie, he not onely slaundered his mother, shamed himselfe, and steyned his blood, but also should have no lyving nor any thing to take to. The scholemaster thinking that his Disciple had well learned his lesson, and would reherse it according to his instruction, brought him before the Iudges at the day assigned. and when this question was repeted to him agayne, he boldly answered, my hart geueth me, and my noble courage telleth me, that I am the sonne of the noble Duke of Orleaunce. more glad to be his Bastard with a meane lyuing, then the lawfull sonne of that coward Cuckold Cawny, with his foure thousand crownes. The Iustices much marueyled at his bold answere, and his mothers cosyns detested him for shaming of his mother, and his fathers supposed kinne reioysed, in gayning the patrimonie and possessions. Charles Duke of Orleaunce hering of this judgement, tooke him into his family, and gaue him great offices and fees, which he well descrued, for (during his captiuitie) he defended his landes, expulsed the English men, and in conclusion procured his deliueraunce.

This couragious Bastard, after the siege had continued three weekes full, issued out Orleannee beof the gate of the bridge, and fought with the Englishmen, but they received him with so fierce and terrible strokes, that he was with all his company compelled to retire and flie back into the Citie: but the Englishe men followed them so fast, in kylling and taking of their enemies, that they entered with them the Bulwarke of the bridge: which with a great Towre standing at the ende of the same, was taken incontinent by the English men. which conflict many French men were taken, but mo were slaine, and the keeping of the Towre and Bulwarke was committed to Wylliam Glasdale Esquire. When he had gotten this Bulwarke, he was sure that, by that way neither man nor vitaile could passe or come. After that, he made certain Bulwarkes round about the Citie, casting frenches betwene the one and the other, layeng ordinaunce in euery part, where he sawe that any battery might be deuised. When they within perceyued that they were enuironed with fortresses and ordinance, they laied Gonne against Gonne, and fortefied towres agaynst Bulwarkes, and within made new Rampires, and buylded newe Mudwalles, to auoyde crackes and breches, which might by violent shot sodainly insue. They appointed the Bastard of Or leance, and Stephyn Veignold called the heire, to see the walles and watches kept, and the bishop saw the inhabitants within the Citie were put in good order, and that vittailes were not wantonly consumed, nor vainely spent.

In the Tower that was taken at the bridge ende, as you before haue heard, there was a high Chamber, hauyng a Grate full of barres of yron by the which a man might loke all the length of the bridge into the City, at which grate, many of the chiefe Capteynes stoode dyuerse times, viewyng the Citie, and deuisyng in what place it was best assaut-They within the Citie perceyued well this totyng hole, and layde a piece of ordinaunce directly agaynst the Windowe. It so chaunced that the lix, day after the siege layd before the Citie, the Erle of Sarisbury, Sir Thomas Gargraue, and William Glasdale, and diverse other, went into the sayde Tower, and so into the high Chamber, and looked out at the grate, and within a short space, the sonne of the maister Goonner, perceyuyng men looke out at the Chamber windowe, tooke his matche, as his father had taught him, which was gone downe to dinner, and fired the Goon, which brake and shewered the yron barres of the grate, wherof, one strake the Erle so strongly on the hed, The Erle of Sathat it stroke away one of his eyes and the side of his cheeke, Sir Thomas Gargraue was risbury slaine. likewise stricken, so that he died within two dayes. The Erle was conneyed to Meum vpon Loyre, where he lay beyng wounded. viij. dayes, and then died, whose bodie was conveyed into England, with all funerall pompe, and buried at Bissam by his progenitors, leauyng behinde him an onely daughter named Alice, maryed to Richard Neuill, sonne to Raufe Erle of Westmerland, of whom hereafter shall be made mencion. What detriment, what damage, and what losse succeded to the Englishe publike wealth, by the sodeine death of this valiaunt Capteyne, not long after his departure, manifestly appered. For the high prosperitie, and great glorie of the English nacion in the partes beyond the sea, began shortly to fall, and little and little to vanishe awaye: which thing, although the Englishe people like a valiaunt and strong bodie, at the first tyme did not perceyue, Yet shortly after, they felt it growe like a pestilent humor, which successively a little and little corrupteth all the members, and destroyeth the bodie. For, after the death of this noble man, fortune of warre beganne to chaunge, and triumphaunt victorie beganne to be darkned. Although the death of the Erle were dolorous to all Englishmen, yet surely it was most dolorous to the Duke of Bedford, Regent of Fraunce, as he which had lost his right hande, or lacked his weapon, when he shoulde fight with his enemie. seeving that dead men cannot with sorowe be called againe, nor lamentation for dead bodies cannot remedie the chaunces of men liuyng: He (like a prudent gouernor and a politike patrone) appoynted the Erle of Suffolk to be his Lieutenant, and Capteyn of the siege, & joyned with him the Lord Scales, the Lord Talbot, sir John Fastolfe, and dinerse other valiant knightes & squiers. These Lordes caused Bastiles to be made round about the Citie, with the which they troubled their enimies, and assaulted the walles, and left nothing vnattempted, which might be to them any advauntage, or hurtfull to their ene-

In the tyme of Lent, vitaile and artillerie began to waxe scant in the Englishe armie, wherefore the Erle of Suffolke appoynted Sir Iohn Fastolfe, Sir Thomas Rampstone, and Sir Philip Hall, with their retinues, to ride to Parys to the Lord Regent, to enforme him of their scarcenesse and necessitie. Which beyng therof informed, without any delay, or prolongyng, prouided vitaile, artillery and municions, necessary & convenient for so great an enterprice, and laded therewith manie Chariots, Cartes, and horses: and for the sure conduite, and sauegarde of the same, he appoynted Sir Simon Morhier, Prouost of Paris, with the garde of the Citie and diverse of hys awne housholde servaunts, to accompanie Sir Iohn Fastolfe, and his Coplices, to the armie living at the siege of Orleaunce. The which departed in good order, to the number of five hundred men of warre, besyde wagoners, out of Parys, and came to Yaynuile in Beausse, and in a mornyng earely in a great frost they departed, from the place towarde the siege, and when they came to a towne called Ronuray, in the laundes of Beausse, they perceyued their enemies commyng agaynst them, to the number of. ix. or. x. thousande French men and Scottes: The Capteines whereof was Charles of Cleremont, sonne to the Duke of Burbon, then beyng prisoner in Englande, Sir William Stewarde Constable of Scotland, a little before deliuered out of Captiuitie, the Erle of Pardriacke, the Lorde Iohn Vandosme, Vidame of Charters, the Lord of Touars, the Lord of Lohat, the lorde of Eglere, the lorde of Beauiew, the Bastarde Tremorle, and many other valiaunt Capteynes. Wherefore Sir Iohn Fastolfe and his Companions set all their copanie in good order of Battaile, and pitched stakes before every Archer, to breake the force of the horsemen. At their backes they set all their wagons, and cariages, and within them they tied all their horses, so that their enemies could neither assaile them on the backsyde, nor yet spoyle them of their horses, and in this maner they stood still, abiding the assault of their aduersaries. The Frenchmen (by reason of their great number) thinkyng the victorie to be in their handes, egerly lyke Lyons set on the Englishemen, which with great force them receyued, and manfully defended: for it stood them upon, considering the unequalitie of the number. And after long and cruell fight, the Englishemen droue backe and vanquish-The victorie of ed the proude Frenchmen, and compelled them to flie. In this conflict were slaine, Lorde the English men William Stewarde Constable of Scotland, and his brother, the Lorde Doruall, the Lord Delabret, the Lorde Chasteanbrian, Sir Iohn Basgot, and other Frenche men and Scottes, to the number of xxv. hundreth, and aboue. xj. hundreth taken prisoners, although a French writer affirme the number lesse.

After this fortunate victorie, sir Iohn Fastolfe and his companie (of the which no man of any reputation was eyther slaine or taken) came with all their cariages, vitaile, and prisoners, to the siege before Orleaunce, where they were ioyously receyued and welcomed of all the Souldiours. This conflict (because the most part of the cariage was Heryng The battayle of and Lenten stuffe) the Frenche men call the vnfortunate battaile of Herynges.

The Erle of Suffolke, beyng thus vitayled, continued his siege, and enery day almost skirmished with his enemies, which, being in dispayre of all succours, began to common amongest themselves, howe they might render the towne, to their most honour and profite. After much reasonyng, and long debatyng amongest the Capteines, and the Magistrates of the towne, what way was best to be followed: Some affirmed it not only to be shamefull and dishonourable, but also vnnaturall and vnreasonable, to yelde the towne to the Englishemen, beyng neither friendes nor fauourers of the Frenche nacion: other. fearyng the victory of the Englishemen, imagined, that if they by force possessed the Citie. they would do to them as tyrantes be accustomed to serue wilfull and obstinate people. and therefore they thought it a great folly and a notable lightnesse, as well not to beware of the one, as to denie or refuse the other. But when they saw, that their glorie must nedes decline to a shame and reproche, they thought to find a meane way to saue themselves, and their Citie from the captivitie of their enemies, and devised to submit their Citye, themselves, and all theirs vnder the obeysance of Philip Duke of Burgoyn, because he was brought out of the stocke & blood royall of the auncient house of Fraunce; thinkyng by this meanes (as they did in deede) to breake or minishe the great amitie betwene the Englishe men and him.

After this poynt concluded, they made open and sent to the Duke al their deuises and intentes, which certefied them that he would gladly receyue their offer, so that the Regent of Fraunce would thereto agree and consent. And thervpon dispatched certeyn Ambassadors to the Duke of Bedford, to whom these newes were straunge and not very pleasant, vpon which poynt, he assembled a great counsaile. Some thought that maner of yeeldyng to be both honorable and profitable to the king of England, by reason whereof, so great a Citie, and so rich a Countrie, should be brought out of the possession of their enemyes, into the handes of their trustie friendes, without further coste or bloodshed. The Duke of Bedford and other were of a contrary opinion, thinkyng it both dishonour able, and vnprofitable to the realme of England, to see a Citie so long besieged at the costes and expenses of the king of England, & almost brought to the point of yeldyng, to be yelded to any other forein Prince or Potestate, and not to him or his Regent, the example whereof might prouoke other townes hereafter to do the same. This reason tooke place, and the Regent aunswered the Dukes Ambassadors, that it was not honorable nor vet consonant to reason, that the king of England should beate the Bushe, and the Duke of Burgoyne should have the birdes: Wherefore sithe the right was his, the warre was his, and the charge was his, he sayde that the Citie ought not to be yelded to no other person, but to him, or to his vse and profite. By this little chaunce, succeded a great chaunge in the Englishe affayres, for a double mischiefe of this aunswere arose and sprong out. For first the Duke of Burgoyne began to conceyue a certein privile grudge agaynst the Englishemen for this cause: thinkyng them to enuy and beare malice agaynst his glory and profite, for the which in continuance of tyme he became their enemie, and cleued to the Frenche king. Secondly, the Englishemen left the siege of Orleaunce, which by this treatie they might have had to friend, or to have continued neuter, till their Lorde the Duke of Orleance, or the Erle of Angulosie his brother were deliuered out of the captivitie of the Englishe people. But if men were Angels and forsaw thinges to come, they lyke beastes would not runne to their confusion: but fortune which guideth the destenie of man will turne her wheele as shee lusteth, who so euer sayth nay. While 4 E 2

While this treatie of the Orleaunces was in hande, Charles the Dolphyn daily studied, and hourely laboured, to plucke the fauour and heartes of the Nobilitie of Fraunce, from the Englishe Nation, to the entent, that he might assemble a puyssaunce sufficient, to relieue his friendes, beyng shut vp in the Citie of Orleaunce. While he was studiyng and compassyng this matter, there happened to him a straunge chaunce, of the which I will write a little, because some of the Frenche Aucthours, and especially, Iohn Bouchet wryteth of it to much.

Ione a mayde commonly called by the french men la Puzelle de dieu.

For as he and other say, there came to him beyng at Chynon, a mayde of the age of xx. yeres, and in mannes apparell, named Ione, borne in Burgoyne, in a towne called Droymy besyde Vancolour, which was a greate space a Chamberlein in a common Hostrey, and was a Rampe of such boldnesse, that she would course horses, and ride them to water, and do thinges, that other yong maydens both abhorred and were ashamed to do; yet as some say, whether it were because of her foule face, that no man would desire it, either because she had made a vowe to live chaste, she kept her maydenhed, and preserved her virginitie. She (as a monster) was sent to the Dolphyn, by sir Robert Bandrencort Capteyne of Vancolour, to whome she declared, that she was sent from God, both to ayde the miserable citie of Orleaunce, and also to restore him to the possession of his realme, out of the which he was expulsed and ouercommed: rehersyng to him visions, traunces, and fables, full of blasphemie, superstition, and hypocrisye, that I maruevle much that wise men dyd beleeue her, and learned Clerkes would write such phatasyes. What should I reherse, howe they say, she knewe and called him her king, whome she neuer sawe before? That she had by reuelation a sworde, to her appoynted in the Church of Saint Katheryn, of Fierboys in Torayne where she neuer had bene? that she declared such privile messeges from God, our Ladie, and other saints, to the Dolphyn, that she made the teares ronne downe from his eyes? So was he deluded, so was he blinded, and so was he deceyued by the Deuilles meanes which suffered her to begin her race, and in coclusion rewarded her with a shamefull fal. But in the meane season, such credence was geuen to her, that she was honored as a saint of the religious, and beleued as one sent from God of the Temporaltie, insomuch that she (armed at all poyntes) rode from Poyters to Bloys, and there founde men of warre, vitaile, and municions, readie to be conueved to Orleaunce.

The Englishemen perceiuyng that they within could not long continue for default of vitail & powder, kept not their watch so diligently as they were accustomed, nor scoured not the Countrie enuironed, as they before had ordeyned: which negligence, the Citizens beyng shut in perceyuyng, sent word thereof to the French Capteynes, which with Puzell in the dead time of the night, and in great raine and thunder, with all their vitaile and artillerie entered into the City. And the next day the Englishemen boldely assaulted the towne, promisyng to them that best scaled the walles great rewardes. Then men mounted on Ladders couragiously, and with Gonnes, Arowes and Pikes, beate their enemyes from the walles.

The Frenchmen, although they marueyled at the fierce fighting of the Englishe people, yet they were not amased, but they defended themselves to the darke night, on which day no great private feate worthy of memorie, was eyther attempted or done. The Bastarde of Orleaunce (seyng the puissaunce of the Englishe nation) beganne to feare the sequele of the matter: wherefore he sent worde to the Duke of Alaunson, advertisyng him in what case the towne then stoode, and that it could not continue wythout hys hasty speede, and quick diligence. Which delaiyng no time, nor deferring no space, came with all his army within two leagues of the City, and sent worde to the Capitaynes, that on the next morowe they should be ready to receive them. Which thing the next daye they accomplished, for the Englishe men thought it to be much to their availe, if so great a multitude entered into the Citie, vexed with famine and replenished with scarcenesse. On the next day in the morning the Frenchmen altogether issued out of the towne, and assauted the Fortresse or Bastile, called the Bastile of Saint Loure, the which with great force, and no little losse they tooke and set it on fyre, and after assauted the Towre at the bridge foote, which was manfully defended. But the French men being more in number, so fiercely assauted it, that they tooke it or the Lorde Talbot could come to succours, in the which Wylliam Gladdisdale the Capitayne was slaine, and the Lorde Morlyns, and the lorde Pownyngs also.

The Frenchmen puffed vp with this good luck, seing the strong Fortresse was vngotten. which was vnder the defence of the lorde Talbot, fetched a compasse about, and in good order of battayle marched thetherward. The lorde Talbot lyke a Capitayne without feare or dread of so great a multitude, issued out of his Bastile, and so fiercely fought with the french men, that they not able to withstand his puissaunce, fled (lyke sheepe before the Wolffe) agayne into the Citie, with great losse of men and small artillerie: and of the Englishe men were lost in the two Bastiles sixe hundred persons. Then the Erle of Suffolke, the lorde Talbot, the lorde Scales, and other Capitaines, assembled together, where causes were shewed, that it was both necessary and convenient eyther to leave the siege for euer, or to deferre it till an other time, more luckey and conuenient. And to the intent that they should not seme eyther to flie or to be driven from the siege by their enimies, they determined to leave their fortresses and Bastiles, and to assemble in the plaine field, and there to abide all the day, abyding the outcomming and battayle of their enimies. This conclusion taken, was accordingly executed. The French men weried with the last The siege of bickering, held in their heades, and durst not once appere: and so they set fyre in their Orleaunce becolodgings, and departed in good order of battayle from Orleaunce. The next day, which was the eyght day of May, the Erle of Suffolk, ryding to Iargeaux with foure hundred Englishe men, and the Lorde Talbot with an other company returned to Meum. Which towne after that he had fortefied, he incontinent assauted and wanne the towne of Lauall and the Castell, sore vexing and punishing the townes men, for their hard hartes, and cancarde obstinacie: and leaving there a garrison, reculed to Meum. After that the Englishe men were thus retired from the siege of Orleaunce, and seuered themselues in dyuers townes and fortresses, holding on their parte: The Duke of Alaunson, the Bastard of Orleaunce, Ione the Puzell, the Lorde of Gancort, and divers other french men, came before the towne of Iargeaux, where the Erle of Suffolke, and his two brethren soiourned, the twelue day of Iune, and gaue to the towne a great and terrible assault, which the Englishe men, (being but a handefull) manfully defended on three partes of the same. Poyton of Sentrailes, perceyning one part of the towne to be vndefended, scaled the walles on that part: and without any difficultie tooke the towne, and slue sir Alexander Pole brother to the Erle, and many other, to the number of two hundred: but they not much gayned, for they lost three hundred good men and more. Of the Englishe men were taken. xl. beside his brother Iohn. After thys gayne and good luck, the french men returning towarde Orleaunce, fell in contention and debate, for their captiues and prisoners, and slue them all, sauing the Erle and his brother.

After the gayning of the towne of Iargeaux, the same armie came to Meum, and tooke the towre at the bridge, and put therein a garrison, and from thence removed to Bangency. Which garrison being not vittayled rendered the towne, so that they might depart with bagge and baggage, frankly and freely: which desire to them was graunted. At this towne of Bangency met with the Duke of Alaunson, Arthur of Britayne the false forsworne Gentleman to the king of Englande, newelve made Constable of Fraunce (as you have heard) with whom was the Lorde Delabret with xij. hundred men, to whome daylie repayred freshe ayde out of every parte, as the Erle of Vandosme, and other to the number of. xx. or. xxiij. thousand men. All these men of warre, determined to go to Meum, and to take the towne, but they were informed, that the Englishe men had left the towne desolate, and were returned to the Lorde Talbot to Ieneuile. Then they concluded to passe towarde that towne. But as they marched forward vpon a Saterday, they had perfite knowlege, that the Lorde Talbot with five thousand men, was comming to Meum. Wherfore they intending to stop him a tyde, conueyed their company to a small Vyllage called Patay, which way they knewe that the Englishe men must nedes passe by. And first they appointed their horsemen, which were well and rychely furnyshed, to go before, and sodainely to set on the Englishe men, or they were, eyther ware or set in order. The Englishe men comming forwarde perceyued the horsemen, and imagining to deceyue their enimies, commaunded the footemen to enuirone and enclose themselues about with their A sore skirmish stakes, but the french horsemen came on so fiercely, that the archers had no levsure to set themselves in aray. There was no remedie, but to fight at adventure. continued by the space of three long houres. And although the Englishe men were ouerpressed, with the number of their adversaries, yet they never fled back one foote, till their Captayne the Lorde Talbot was sore wounded at the backe, and so was taken. Then their heartes began to faint, and they fled, in which flight, there were slayne aboue twelve hundred, and taken. xl. wherof the Lorde Talbot, the Lorde Scales, the Lorde Hungerford, and Sir Thomas Rampstone, were the chiefe: Howbeit divers archers which had shot all their arrowes, having onely their swordes defendyng themselves, and with the helpe of some of the horsemen, came safe to Meum.

wherein the Englishe men had great losse.

The Lorde Tal bot, the lord Scales, and the lorde Hungerford taken.

> When the fame was blowen abroade, that the Lorde Talbot was taken, all the French men not a little reioysed, thinking surely that nowe the rule of the Englishe men should shortly asswage and waxe faynt: for feare whereof, the townes of Ieneuile, Meum, Fort, and dyuers other returned from the Englishe parte, and became French, to the great displeasure of the Regent. From this battayle departed without any stroke striken, syr Iohn Fastolffe, the same yere, for hys valyauntnesse elected into the order of the Garter: For which cause the Duke of Bedford, in a great anger toke from hym the Image of saint George, and his Garter: but afterward, by meane of friends, and apparaunte causes of good excuse by him alleged, he was restored to the order agayne, agaynst the minde of the Lorde Talbot.

Charles, calling himselfe French king, being advertised of this victory, thought nowe that all things succeeded, according to his opinion and good hope, which ever was of that high courage and haute minde, that in hys most adversitie, he never dispayred in good lucke at length: so that the Erle of Salisburie being dead, and the Lorde Talbot lyuing in captiuitie (which were the glory of his enimies) he thought to enterprise great and waighty things, where before he medeled with small and little doings. For fulfilling of his minde and appetite, he determined, first to conquere the Citie of Reynes, to the intent that he being there, might according to the fashion of his progenitors, with all accustomed Ceremonies, be sacred and annoynted king, that all men might see and perceyue. Wherefore he assembling that he was by all lawes and decrees, a just and a lawfull king. together a great armie, and hauing in his companie Ioan the Puzell, whome he vsed as an Anxer besieged. Oracle and a Southsayer, passed thorough Champaigne by the Towne of Anxer which he besieged, they within sent to him Messengers, praying him of certaine dayes of abstinence of warre, in the which (if they were not rescued) they promised to render the Towne. He not wylling to recompence with ingratitude the louing hartes of the Citezens, graunted gently to their peticion, and leauing there certain persons, to see that they should not juggle with hym, departed from thence to Troys, being the chiefe Citie of Campaigne, which he besieged twelve dayes. Sir Philip Hall Captayne there, vnprouyded both of vitayle and men, mistrusting that ayde would not come in time, vpon composition rendered the towne, so that he and his, with all their mouables might in safetie departe the Citie: which demaunde was agreed to. After that Troys was yeelded, the commonaltie of Chalons rebelled against sir Iohn Awbemond their capitayne, and constrayned him to deliuer the towne vpon like composition, which against his will he was faine to doe: and likewise Reynesdelivered did the citizens of Reins, desiring him to geue safe conduite to all Englishe men, safely to Troys besieged and yelded to the French men.

When

When he had thus conquered Reyns, he in the presence of all the Noble men of his Charlesthe Dolfaction, and the Dukes of Lorayne and Barre, was sacred king of Fraunce, by the name king of Fraunce, of Charles the sixt, with all tytles and ceremonies thereto apperteyning. They of Anxer which were not rescued within the time appointed, brought the kayes to him, and submitted themselues to hys obeysaunce: lykewise did all the Cities and townes adioyning gening thankes to almightie God, which hauyng compassion on their miserie, had restored them to libertie and freedome.

The Duke of Bedford, hearing that these townes had returned to the parte of his adnersaries, and that Charles late Dolphin had taken upon him the name and estate of the king of Fraunce, and also seing that daylie Cities and townes returned from the English part, and became French, as though the Englishe men had nowe lost all their hardie Chiefetaynes and valyaunt men of warre, espyed and euidently perceyued, that the laste and vttermost point of recourry, was driven onely to overcome by battayle, and to subdue by force. By which victorie (as he put his confidence in God) he trusted not onely to scourge and plague the Cities, which were so sodainely chaungeable, but also to asswage and caulme the haute courage of the newe sacred French king and his companions, Wherefore he having together ten thousand good Englishe men (beside Normans) departed out of Paris in warlike fashion, and passed through Brie to Monstrell Faultyow, and there sent by Bedforde his Herault letters to the French king, alleging to him that he contrary to the lawes of God and man, yea and contrary to the finall conclusion, taken, concorded, and agreed betweene his noble brother king Henry the fift, and king Charles the fift, father to the sayde now vsurper, leaving all humaine reason and honest communication (which sometime appeaseth debates and pacefyeth strifes) onely allured and entysed by a deuelish Witch, and a fanaticall Enchaunteresse, had not onely falsely and craftely taken vpon him, the name, title & dignity of the king of France: but also had by murder, stealing, craft, and deceitfull meanes, violently gotten, and wrongfully kept, divers Cities and townes, belonging to the king of England, his most best beloued Lorde, and most deerest Nephew. For profe wherof, he was come downe from Paris with his armie, into the Countrie of Brye, by dent of sworde, and stroke of battayle, to proue his wryting and cause true, willing his enimie to chose the place, and he in the same would geue him

The newe French Kyng, departing from his solempne ceremonies at Reins, and removing from thence to Dampmartine, studiying howe to compasse the Parisians, eyther with money, or with promise, was somewhat troubled with this message, howbeit he made a good countenaunce, and a French bragge, aunswering to the Herault: that he would sooner seeke hys mayster the Duke, then that the Duke should pursue him. The Duke of Bedford hering his aunswere, marched toward him, and pitched his field in a strong place, and sent out divers of his raungers, to prouoke the Frenche men to come forward. The French king was in maner determined to abide the battayle, but when he heard say by his Espialles, that the power and number of the Englishe men were to his army equalt in power, he determined that it was more for his profite, to abstaine from battayle without daunger, then to enter into the conflict with icopardie: fearing least that with a rashe courage, he might ouerthrowe all his affayres, which so effectuously proceeded. And so well aduised, he turned with his armie a little out of the way. The Duke of Bedford perceyuing his faint courage, followed him by Mountaynes and dales, till he came to a Towne in Barre, not farre from Senlis, where he found the French king and his army. Wherefore he ordered his battayle, lyke a man expert in marciall science, setting the Archers before, and himselfe with the noble men in the mayne battayle, and put the Normans on both sides for the winges. The French king also ordered hys battayles, according to the deuise of his Capitaynes. Thus these two armies without any great doing (except a fewe skirmishes, in the which the Dukes light horsemen did very valyaunly,) laye eche in sight of other, by the space of two dayes and two nightes. But when the French king sawe, and perceyued, how glad, howe diligent and couragious the Englishe men were to fight and geue battayle, he imagined that by his taryeng, one of these two things must nedes chaunce: that is to say, eyther he should fight against his will, or lye still like a coward, to his great rebuke and infamie. Wherefore in the dead of the night (as priuely as he could) he brake vp his campe and fled to Bray. When this flight was perceyued in the morning, the Regent could scarce refraine his people, from following the French army, calling them cowardes, dastardes and loutes, and therefore, he perceyuing that by no meanes, he could allure the newe French king to abide battayle, mistrusting the Parisians, and geuing no great credite to their fayre, swete, and flattering wordes, returned agayne to Paris, to assemble together a greater power, and so to prosecute his enimies.

In this season, the Bohemians (which belike had espied the vsurped aucthoritie of the Bishop of Rome) began to Rebell against his Sea. Wherfore, Martin the fift, Bishop of Rome, wrote vnto them to absteyne from warre, and to be reconciled by reason. from their damnable opinions. But they (beyng perswaded to the contrary) neyther gaue eare vnto him, nor yet obeyed his voyce. Wherefore the Bishop of Rome, wrote to the Princes of Germanie, to inuade the Realme of Beame, as the den of heretykes. Beside this, he appointed Henry Bishop of Winchester, and Cardinall of Saint Eusebie. a man very well borne (as you have heard) but no better borne then high stomacked, to be his Legate in this great iourney, and to bring out men from the Realme of England, into the Countrie of Beame. And because the war touched religion, he licenced the sayd Cardinall, to take the tenth part of every spirituall dignitie, benefice and promocion. This matter, was declared in open Parliament in England, and not dissented, but gladly assented to, wherfore the bishop gathered the money, and assembled foure thousand men, and mo, not without great grudge of the people, which daily were with tallages and aydes weried, and sore burdened. And when men, municions, and money were redie for his high enterprise, he with all his people came to the Sea strond at Douer, redie to passe ouer the Sea into Flaundyrs.

But in the meane season, the Duke of Bedford consideryng, how townes dayly were gotten, and Countries hourely wonne in the realme of Fraunce, for lacke of sufficient defence and number of men of warre, wrote to his brother the Duke of Gloucester, to relieue him with ayde, in that tempestuous tyme and troubleous season. When this letter was brought into England, the Duke of Gloucester was not a little amazed, because he had no armie redie to sende at that tyme: For by the reason of the Crewe sent into Beame, he could not sodeinly rayse a new armie. But because the matter was of such importance, and might neyther be from day to day differred, nor yet long delayed, he wrote to the Bishop of Winchester, to passe with all his armie toward the Duke of Bedford, which at that tyme had both nede of men and assistaunce, consideryng that nowe, all stood vpon losse or gaine: which thing done, and to his honor achieued, he might performe his iourney agaynst the Bohemians. Although the Cardinall was somewhat moued with this countermaund, yet least he should be noted, not to ayde the Regent of Fraunce, in so great a cause, and so necessary an enterprise, he bowed from his former iorney, and passed the sea with all his companie, and brought them to his Cosin, to the Citie of Parys.

Charles the Frenche King, hauyng knowledge in the meane season by his espials, which went round about the Country, to intise & sollicite townes and Cities, to returne from the Englishe part, and become French, that the inhabitantes of Champaine, and Beuauoys, ought to him great loue and singuler fauour, and gladly coueted to renounce the subjection of England, and to be vnder his protection, and also offered to open him their Gates, so that they should not thereby, be in icopardic of their lyues, and losse of theyr goodes, with all hast and diligence remoued towarde Champaigne. The Duke of Bedforde beyng aduertised of his progresse, and hauyng his armie augmented, with the newe ayde, which the Cardinall had of late conducted, marched forward with great speede to encounter and geue battayle, to hys mortall enemie the French king. When the Duke was come to Senlis, the Frenchmen were lodged on the Mountpilioll, between Senlis and Champaigne. Every army knewe of other, and every host might beholde other. Then the Campes were trenched, and the battayles pitched, and the fieldes ordered.

Thus these great armyes laye two dayes, nothing doing but with skirmishes, in the which the Normanes sore vexed the French men. Wherefore the Lord Regent, gaue to them many high laudes and praisynges, and determined surely the next day to set on the French king in his Campe, if he would abyde battaile. But while king Charles did polletikely consider, what a variable Lady, Fortune was, and what a sodein and vnthought chaunce of a small thing, might do in a battaile: for the detrimentes and ouerthrowes, that he and his Nacion had taken and tasted by the Englishe men, were to them a learning, to auoyd open joining, mutuall conflict, and force to force. And besyde that, he had by his searchers and spyes, plaine and perfect knowledge, that many and divers Cities and townes in Fraunce, abhorryng the English libertie, and aspiryng to the French bondage and native servitude, (according to the nature of Asses, which the more they be charged with, the more they desyre) would (when they saw their tyme) not onely rebell and returne to his faction and part, but also were redie to ayde and assist him, in recourry of his desired realme and auncient dominion, in expellyng also the Englishe nacion out of the territories of Fraunce. And therefore he imagined that the Duke of Bedford, was so hastie to geue him battaile, thinkyng that if he then were ouercome, the game had for the Englishemen bene clerely gotten, and to the Frenchmen, a perpetual checkmate. Wherefore he determined neuer (except very necessitie compelled or constrayned him) to fight in open battaile with the Englishemen, nor by a field to aduenture his realme with them, of whome his predecessors so often tymes had bene vanquished, wherefore like a carpet Capteyne, he in the night, removed his Campe and fled to Crespie, and yet his number was double to the Englishe armie. The Duke of Bedford seeying that the French king, was thus cowardly retrayted, and as a man which durst not once assay the stroke of an Englishe arme, shamefully reculed; with all his power and armie, and returned againe to Parys, sore suspecting the deceytfull fayth of the polletique Parisians. The Bishop of Winchester, after the French kinges flight, went into Beame, and there did somewhat, but what it was Aucthours kepe silence, and so do I: But shortly he without any great prayse, and small gaine, returned into England, more glad of his retraite, then of his advauncyng forwarde. Sone after the Bishop of Rome without his agreement, vnlegated him, and set an other in his steede and aucthoritie, with which doyng he was neyther content, nor pleased.

On the sixt day of Nouember, beyng the day of Saint Leonard, king Henry, in the eight yere of his reigne, was at Westminster with all pompe and honor, crowned king of this realme of England.

But to returne to the troubleous warres in Fraunce. After that the French king was the sixt at Westfled from the Duke of Bedford (as you have heard before) and was come to Crespy in minster. Valoys, he was credibly informed, how the Citizens of Champaigne, desired greatly to be vider his gouernaunce and subjection. Wherefore he mindyng not to lese so fayre an offered pray, ceassed not till be came to the towne, where with al reuerence and benignitie. he was received and welcommed. And after that, were rendered to him the townes of Senlis and Beauoys. And the Lorde Longuenall tooke by stealth, the Castell of Aumerle, and slue all the Englishe men, and in short space, the Lorde Barbason, which long had beene prisoner in the Castell Gaylard, so muche, what with fayre wordes and large promises, perswaded his kepers, that he not only delivered his awne person, but also caused the towne, to turne from the English men, to the part of king Charles his Which king although he much rejoysed, at the good successe, that Fortune had to hym sent, yet he was somewhat desperate, how to recouer his countrie from the possession of the English men, except he vnknitted the knot and league, betwene the Duke of Burgoyn and them. Wherfore he sent his Chauncelor, and divers Ambassadors to 4 F the VOL. I.

The coronation of King Henry

the Duke of Burgoyn, first excusyng himselfe of the death and murther of Duke John his father, and after, declarying to him, that there could be nothing more foule, more dishonest, nor more detestable, then, for his awne peculiar cause, and private displeasure. to ioyne with hys auncient enimies, and perpetuall aduersaries agaynst his native Countrie and naturall Nacion: Not onely requiryng him of concord, peace, and amity, but also promisyng golden Mountaines, and many more benefites, then at that tyme, he was eyther able or could performe. This message was not so secrete, nor the downg so closely cloked, but the Duke of Bedforde, thereof was plainely enformed. Which, beyng sore troubled, and virguieted in hys minde, because he sawe the power of the Englishe nacion, dayly waxe lesse, he of all thinges first foreseyng, if any losse should of necessitie chaunce, of those townes and Countries, which his noble brother king Henry the fift had coquered, in the very Countrie of Fraunce, for lacke of tuicion or defence: yet for an Ankerholde, he determined to kepe, possesse, and defende, the Duchie of Normandie, the olde inheritaunce and auncient Patrimonie of the kinges of England, and from them onely, by force and not by iustice, by violence and not by right, sithe the tyme of King Henry the thirde, (the deuilish deuision then reigning in the realme) wrongfully deteyined, and iniuriously vsurped. Wherefore, he diligently prouidyng, for thinges that might chaunce, appointed gouernor of the Citie of Parys, Lewes of Luxenborough, Bishop of Turwyne and Ely, beyng Chauncelor of Fraunce, for the king of England, a man of no lesse wit. then of birth, leavyng with him a convenient number of Englishmen to defend both the Citie and territorie of Paris, and the Isle of Fraunce, then beyng in the Englishe mens possession and gouernaunce.

The duke of Bedford Regent a parliament at

These thinges thus ordered, he departed from Paris, into Normandie, and called at of frace calleth Roan a Parliament, of the three estates of the Duchie, in the which he declared vnto them, the great liberties, the manifolde privileges, the innumerable benefites, which they had received of the kinges of England, duryng the tyme that they were possessors, and Lordes of the same Duchie, not puttyng in obliuion, the miserie, bondage, and calamitie. which they had susteyned, by the intollerable yoke, and dayly tributes, continually layde in their neckes lyke Asses, by the cruell and couetous Frenchmen: And puttyng them also in remembraunce, how the kinges of England, were not onely brought foorth and discended of the Normans blood and progenie, but were the very true and vndoubtfull heyres, to the same Countrie & Duchie, lineally succedyng and lawfully discendyng from Rollo the hardie, first Duke and prince of the same Dominion: Requiryng them further, to live in love and amitie amongest them selfes, to be true and obedient to the king their sourreigne Lorde and to kepe their othe and promes, made and sworne to his noble brother, king

Henry the fift, promising to them, English libertie and princeleges royall.

While the Duke of Bedford was thus interteining and encouraging the Normans. Charles the newe French king, beyng of his departure aduertised, longyng and thirstyng for to obteyne Paris, the chiefe Citie & principall place of resort, within the whole realme of Fraunce, departed from the towne of Senlis wel accompanied, and came to the towne of Saint Denise, which he found desolate, and abandoned of all garrison, and good gouernace. Wherefore, without force and small damage, he entered into the voyd towne and lodged his armie at Mountmartir, and Abberuilliers, nere adioining, and living to the Citie of Parys. And from thence, sent Iohn Duke of Alanson, and his sorceresse Ioan (called the Mayde sent from God) in whom, his whole affiaunce then consisted, with three thousand light horsemen, to get againe the Citie of Paris, eyther by force, or by fayre flatteryng, or reasonable treatie, and after them, he without delay or deferryng of tyme, with all hvs power, came betwene Mountmartir and Parys, and sodeinly approched the gate of Saint Honore, settyng vp Ladders to the walles, and castyng Faggots into the diches, as though he would with a French brag, sodeinly have gotten the fayre Citie. But the Englishe Capteynes, enery one kepyng his warde and place assigned, so manfully and fiercely, with a noble courage, defended themselves, their walles and Towers, with the

The French king, seyng the great losse, that he had susteyned at this assault, and accompted his pretensed conquest in maner impossible, leauyng the dead bodies behinde him, and takyng with him, the wounded Captaynes, which were of no small number, returned into Berry. But in the meane way, the Citezens of Laignie became his subjectes, and made to him an othe, promisyng to continue from thencefoorth to him, both true and

The Duke of Bedford, beyng in Normandie, and heryng of this sodain attempt, lost no Bedford comtyme, nor spared no trauaile, till he came to Parys. Where he not onely thanked the mendeth the Ci-Capteynes, and praysed the Citizens for their assured fidelitie and good will, towarde their tizens of Paris. king and souereigne Lorde, but also extolled their hardinesse, and manly doyuges, aboue the Starres, and highe elementes: promisyng to them, honour, fame and great advauncementes. Which gentle exhortacion, so incoraged and inflamed the heartes of the Parisians. that they sware, promised and concluded, to be friendes ever to the king of England and his friendes, and enemies always to his foes and adversaryes, making proclamation by this stile. Friendes to king Henrie, friendes to the Parisians, enemyes to England, enemies to Parys. But if they spake it with their hearts, eyther for feare, that Charles the French king should not punishe them, if he once obtevned the superioritie over their Citie and towne, or that they flattered the Englishemen, to put themselves in credite with the chiefe Capteines, you shall plainely perceive, by the sequele of their actes.

Sone after these doynges, came to Parys with a great companie Philip Duke of Burgoyn, which was of the Regent, and the Ladie his wife, honourably received, and highly feasted. And after long consultation had, for the recourryng of the townes, lately by the French king stollen and taken, it was agreed, that the Duke of Bedford, should rayse an armie, for the recourrie of the sayd fortresses, and that the Duke of Burgoyn, should be his deputie, and tary at Parys, for the defence of the same. After this great businesse thus concluded, and appoynted, the Duke of Bedford himselfe, without any great resistance, recouered againe the towne of Saint Denise, and dyuers other Castells. And after that done, he sent the Bastard of Clarence, to lay siege to the Castell of Toursie, beyng both by the naturall situation, and mannes pollicie, very strong and in maner vnable to be beaten downe. The siege continued six monethes, but in conclusion, the Captaine discomfitted of all releue and succor, rendred the fortresse, the life of him and his souldiours onely saued: which offer was taken, and the Castell rased, and cast downe to the ground. Duryng this siege, Sir Thomas Kiriell, knight with foure hundreth Englishemen, departed from Gourney in Normandie, and road by Beauoys, spoilyng, robbyng and wastyng the Countrie, to the Suburbes of Cleremount. Whereof, heeryng the Erle of the same towne, assembled all the men of warre, of the garrisons adjoynyng to fight with the Englishmen: and so the French men with all diligence set forwarde, and found their enemies in a straight place, nere vnto Beauoys. The Erle of Cleremount seing that he could not hurt them with his men of armes, by reason of the straight, came downe on foote with all his companie, and fiercely set on the Englishe men. The fight was fierce, and the aduauntage doubtfull. But in conclusion, the Archers shot so terribly, that the Frenche men not able to abide the smart, and gaules of the arrowes, fled apace, and the Englishemen leauyng the straight, leaped on horsebacke, and followed the chase. In the which were taken two hundreth prisoners, and thrise as many slaine. The Erle, by the swiftnesse of his horse escaped his enemies, and came to the towne of Beauoys: and so Sir thomas Kiriell, with plentie of spoyle and prisoners, returned to Gournay, rendryng to God his hartie thankes for that good chaunce and happie victorie.

Yet fortune sent not this good luck alone, for the Erle of Suffolke at that same very season, besieging the towne of Aumarle, whereof was capitaine the Lorde Rambures (after, xxiiij. great assaultes geuen to the fortresse) had the towne and Castell to him simply rendered. Wherefore, he caused. xxx. of the townes men, for their vntruth to be hanged on the walles, and all the rest he raunsomed, and sent the Capitayne into England, where he remayned sixe yeres continually, and after by exchaunge was deliuered. After this, the Erle fortefied the towne with men, municions and vytaile, and so by a little and little, the English men recouered agayne many townes which before they had lost, without any great losse of their people. Which thing the Frenche men well consydering, imagined by what meanes, how to get againe the towne of Laual, which the Lorde Talbot (before as you have heard) gat by scalying in a night. Wherefore to possesse their desired pray, they with money and gay promises, first corrupted a Miller, that kept a Mill adjoyning to the wall, so that the Miller suffered the Lorde Homet with three hundred other, to passe thorough his Mill into the towne, in a very darke night. When they were entered, they slue the keepers of the gate, and let in the Lorde Bertrand de la Ferrier, with five hundred men of armes: which eyther slue or tooke prisoners, all the Englishe men within the towne. And shortly after, syr Stephin de Vignoles called the Heire, tooke by scaling, the towne of Louiers in Normandy, and did much dammage to all the townes adjoyning.

While these chaunces happened, between the Englishe men and French men. Philip towne of Laigny, in the which was the Puzel and dyuers other good Capitaynes. But the weather was so colde, and the rayne so great and continuall, that they of force compelled, not by their enemies, but by the intemperate season, reysed their siege: and in their returne, the Puzell and al the garrison within the towne, issued out and fought with the English men, where (after long fighting) both parties departed without eyther great gaine or After this enterprise done, the Duke of Burgoyne accompanied with the Erles of Arundell and Suffolke, and the Lorde Iohn of Luxenbrough, wyth a great puyssaunce, besieged the towne of Compeigne: which towne was well walled, manned and vytailed, so that the besiegers must eyther by assault or long taryeng, wearie or famishe them within So they cast trenches, and made mynes, and studied all the wayes that they could deuise, howe to compasse their conquest and interprise. And it happened in the night of the Ascention of our Lorde, that Ponthon of Xentrales, Ione the Puzell, and five or sixe hundred men of armes, issued out of Compeigne by the gate of the bridge towarde Mountdedier, intending to set fyre in the tents and lodgings of the Lorde of Baudo which was then gone to Marigny, for the Duke of Burgoyns affayres. At which time syr John of Luxenborough, wyth eyght other gentlemen (which had riden about the towne to serche and viewe, in what place the towne might be most aptly and conveniently assaulted or scaled) were come nere to the lodging of the Lorde of Baudo, where they espyed the French men, which beganne to cut downe tents, ouerthrowe paulions, and kill men in their beds. Wherefore shortly they assembled a great number of men, as well English as Burgonions, and couragiously set on the Frenche men. Sore was the fight and great was the slaughter, in so much that the French men, not able lenger to indure, fled into the towne so fast, that one letted the other to enter. In which chace was taken, Ione the Puzell, and divers other: which Ione was sent to the Duke of Bedford to Roan, where (after long examination) she was brent to ashes. This witch or manly woman (called the mayde of God) the French men greatly glorified and highly extoled, alleging that by her Orleannce was vitayled: by her king Charles was sacred at Revnes and that by her, the Englishe men were often times put backe and ouerthrowne. O Lorde, what disprayse is this to the Nobilitie of Fraunce? What blot is this to the Frenche Nation? What more rebuke can be imputed to a renowmed Region, then to affirme, write and confesse, that all notable victories, and honorable conquestes, which neyther the king with his power, nor the nobilitie with their valiantnesse, nor the counsayle with their wit, nor the commonaltie with their strength could compasse or obtaine, were gotten and achieved by a shepherdes daughter, a Chamberlein in an hostrie, and a beggers brat: which blinding the wittes of the French nation, by reuelations, dreames and phantasticall visions, made them beleue things not to be supposed, and to geue fayth to things impossible. For surely, if credite may be geuen to the actes of the Clergie, openly done, and commonly shewed, thys woman was not inspyred with the holy ghost, nor sent from God (as the French men beleeue) but an Enchanteresse, an organe of the Deuill, sent from Sathan, to blinde the people, and bring them in vnbeliefe: as by a letter sent from the king of England may appere: But for that the same is long, I thought it sufficient to rehearse the effect thereof, which was as followeth.

First that she two yeres and more, contrarie to Gods lawe, and the honest estate of womanhood, was clothed in mans apparell, and exercised the office of a Capitayne in the warres.

Also, she affirmed that she was sent of God, and that she had spoken personally with

Also, she caused her selfe to be honored and worshipped of many, as a woman sanctified.

And for a true declaration of the falsitie and lewdnesse of her doing, she being called before the Byshop and the Vniuersity of Paris, was there with great solempnity adjudged and condempned, a superstitious Sorceresse, and a diuelishe Blasphemeres of God, and as an erronyous wretch was consumed with fyre. And at the time of her death, she confessed how the Deuill had deluded and deceaued her.

This letter, the king of England, sent not onely to the Duke of Burgoyne and other Princes, to declare the veritie of the matter, and the administration of Iustice, but to admonishe all rude and ignoraunt persons, in all other countries, to refraine from the credite and beliefe of the sayengs, of suche prophane prophecies, and craftie imaginers, as this pieuishe painted Puzell was. Yet notwithstandyng, this lawfull processe, this due examination and publike sentence, Iohn Buchet, and diuers French wryters affirme her to be a 10hn Buchet. saint in heaven. But because it is no point of our fayth, no man is bound to beleve his iudgement, although he were an Archdeken. But Paulus Emilius, a famous wryter, re-Paulus Emilius. hersing that the Citezensof Orleaunce, had buylded in the honor of her an Image or an Idole, sayth that Pius Byshop of Rome, and Anthony Byshop of Florence, much maruayled and greatly wondered at her actes and doings. With which saiyng I can very well agree, that she was more to be maruayled at, as a false prophetisse, and seducer of the people, then to be honored or worshipped as a Saint sent from God into the realme of Fraunce. For of this I am sure, that all auncient wryters, as well divine as prophane, allege these three thinges beside dyuers other, to apperteine to a good woman. First Three properties shamefastnesse, which the Romaine Ladies so kept, that seldome or neuer they were seene that appertains openly talking with a man: which vertue at this day amongst the Turkes, is highly es- to a good woteemed. The second is pittie: which in a womans hart, abhorreth the spylling of the bloud of a poore beast, or a siely birde. The thirde is womanly behaviour, advoyding the occasion of euill iudgement, and causes of slaunder. If these qualities, be of necessitie incident to a good woman, where was her shamfastnesse, when she daylie and nightly was conversant with comen souldiours and men of warre, amongst whome is small honestie, lesse vertue and shamefastnesse least of all exercised or vsed? Where was her womanly pittie, when she taking to her the heart of a cruell beast, slue man woman and childe, where she might haue the vpper hande? Where was her womanly behaulour, when she cladde her selfe in a mans clothing, and was conversaunt with every losell, geuing an occasion to all men to judge, and speake evill of her, and her doings. Then these things, being thus plainely true, all men must needes confesse, that the cause ceasing, the effect also ceaseth: so that if these morall vertues lacking, she was no good woman, then it must needes consequently follow, that she was no saint.

Now leaving this woman, consumed to ashes, let vs returne agayne to the siege of Compeigne, which still contynued. During which tyme, the Regent sent to the Duke of Burgoyne, lyeng at the siege, the Erle of Huntyngdon, sir Iohn Robsert with a thousand Archers, which daylie skirmished with them of the towne, and made suche Bastiles and fortresses, that the towne must nedes be rendered, or else they within famished. But see the chaunce, when victorie was at hande, tydings were brought to the Duke of Burgoyn, that Philip Duke of Brabant, was departed out of this worlde, leaving behinde him no heire of his body: To whome the sayde Duke pretended to be next heyre, wherefore he taking with him, his best Capitaynes, for the recourry of so great a Duchy, departed from the siege, leaving his poore people behinde him, and ordevned in his place, for his Lieutenaunt, Sir Iohn Luxenborough, which being of small strength and lesse courage, after the Dukes departing, aduised the English men to depart for that time, till the next Sommer: which thereto at the first, would in no wise agree. But there was no remedy, for he was Capitaine generall, and had the ordinaunce under his rule, so that without that, they could nothing doe: Wherfore in great displeasure, they returned into Normandy. After whose departure, the Captaine set fire in all the Bastiles, and secretly departed, leaving behinde him dyuers peeces of ordynaunce, for lack of cariage. Wyth which returne, the Dukes of Bedford and Burgoyn, were sore displeased: for if he had continued his siege eyght dayes lenger, the towne had bene rendered without dent of sworde. For pestilence and famine, had almost consumed all the Souldiours, and left the towne without safegard or defence.

After this siege broken vp, Iohn Duke of Norffolke tooke agayne the townes of Dampmartyn, and the Chasse Mongay, & dyuers other townes. And the Erle of Stafforde tooke the towne of Brie, in Countie Robert, and from thence, forraged all the Countrey to Sens, and after tooke Quesnoy in Brie, Grand Puys, and Rampellon, with many prisoners, as sir Iaques de Milly, and sir Iohn de la Hay. During which time the French men tooke Louiers, and Villuence. And then the towne of Melune rebelled, and had suche ayde of other townes adioyning, that the English Souldiours, were fayne to leave Melune, Morret, and Corbell. Thus, according to the chaunce of warre, the one parte gat, and the other lost. Thus the Englishe affayres (as you have heard) within the realme beganne to wauer, and waxe variable, which caused the Englishe Capitaynes to be of diuers opinions. For one part being sorie and pensiue, adjudged the things present, light and of no moment, in comparison of them which they saw likely to followe: and another sort, adjudged that present time to be most jeoperdous, and perillous: Because they sawe the power of their enemies nowe increased, and their awne strength rather decayed, then conserved. And so every man studying on this businesse, advised secretly with himselfe, what counsayle was best to be taken, and what way was best to be followed, to remedie these things, thus waveryng in a doubtfull Ballance, did at the last conclude, that it was most apt and mete, for the time present, that king Henry in his royall person, with a new armie, should come downe into Fraunce, partely to comfort and visite his awne subjects there: partly eyther by feare or fauour (because a childe of his age and beautie doth commonly allure to him, the hartes of the elder persons) to cause the Frenchmen to continue in their due obeysaunce towarde him. Wherefore after a great host, conuenient for that purpose, assembled, and money for the maintenaunce of the warre, redy gathered, and the realme set in order, and the Duke of Gloucester appoynted Gouernour (which during the kings absence, appeased dyners riottes, and punished many offenders) the king King Henry the with a great power, tooke shypping at Douer, and landed at Calice, and there taried a sixt goeth with good space, and from thence, he remoued to Roan, where with all triumph, he was re-Fraunce. ceyued, and there sojourned till the middest of August, hys nobles daylie consulting on their great businesse, and waightie affayres.

In the Month of Nouember, he removed from Roan to Ponthoise, and so to saint Denice, to the intent to make his entrie into the Citie of Paris, and there to be sacred

There were in his company of his awne Nation, his Vucle the Cardinall of Winches- The coronation ter, the Cardinall and Archebyshop of Yorke, the Dukes of Bedford, Yorke, and Norf- of king Henry the sixt in Paris. folke, the Earles of Warwike, Salisburie, Oxford, Huntyngdon, Ormonde, Mortayn, Suffolke, and of Gascoynes, the Erle of Longuile, and Marche, beside many noble men of Englande, Guyan & Normandy. And the chiefe of the French nation were the Dukes of Burgoyn, and Lewes of Luxenbrogh Cardinall and Chauncellour of Fraunce for king Henry, the Byshops of Beauoys and Neyon, both peeres of Fraunce, beside the Byshop of Paris, and dyuers other Byshops, the Erle of Waudemount, and other noble men, whose names were to tedyous to reherse. And he had in a garde about his person, three thousande strong archers, some on horseback, and parte on foote. And as he was comming, between Saint Denice and Paris, he was met at the Chapell, in the meane way, by Syr Simon Moruer Prouost of Paris, with a great company, all clothed in redde Satin, with blewe Whoodes, which did to him due reuerence and lowe obeysaunce. After whome came dyuers riche and notable Burgesses of the towne of Paris, all appareled in Crimosyne cloth. After they had done their reverence, there approched to the king the. ix. worthies, sytting richely on horseback, armed with the armes to them apperteyning. Next after them, came the knight of the watch, for the prouost Marchants, and with him, all the officers of the Courte, appareled in blew, and Hattes redde. And in a long space after, came Master Philip de Noruillier, chiefe president of the Parliament, appareled in a robe of estate: and all the other Presidentes of the Parliament, clothed in robes of Scarlet, and in lyke robes followed the Lordes of the chamber of accomptes, and of the finaunce, the Masters of the requestes, the Secretaries, and Regesters, and every company, as their course came, saluted the king with eloquent Orations and heroicall Verses, and so conneved him to the gate of Saint Denice, where the Prouost of the Marchauntes, and the Shriefes of the towne received him with a Canapy of blew Veluet richely embraudred, with flower Delices of Golde, and bare the same ouer him, through the towne, which on enery side was hanged with riche clothes of Arras and Tapissery. And at every porte and bridge where he passed, was set a Pageaunt of great shew and small cost, which because they were but trifles, I ouer passe, and speake but of one deuise, made before the gate of the Chastelet, where vpon a stage stoode a goodly childe, clothed with habite royall, set full of flower Delices, having two crownes on his head, representing the yong king, and on his right hande stoode two noble personages, in the armes of Burgoyne and Flaunders: and on the left side of him, stode three personages clothed in the armes of Bedford, Salisburie, and Warwike, which to him delyuered the sworde of England. This Pageaunt was well regarded, and highly praysed. From thence he departed to the Palace, and offered in the Chapell, and from thence he departed to the house of Tournelles, and there tooke his repast. And the next day he was conueyed to Boys de Vincennes, where he reposed himselfe till the fiftene day of December: on which daye, he returned to the Palace of Paris. And on the xvij. of the sayde Moneth, he departed from the Palace in great triumph, honorably accompanyed to our Lady church of Paris: where with all solempnitie he was announted and crowned king of Fraunce by the Cardinall of Winchester: (the Byshop of Paris not being content that the Cardinall should doe such a high ceremonie in his Church and jurisdiction.) At the offering he offered Bread and Wine, as the custome of Fraunce is. When the divine service was finished.

ed, and all ceremonies due, to that high estate accomplished, the king departed towarde the Palaice, having one crowne on his head, and another borne before him, and one scepter in his hand, and the second borne before him. What should I speake of the honorable service, the daintie dishes, the pleasaunt conceytes, the costly Wynes, the sweete Armony, the Musicall instruments, which were seene and shewed at that feast, sithe all men may conjecture, that nothing was omitted, that might be bought for Golde, nor nothing was forgotten that by mans wyt could be inuented. Yet this high and joyous feast, was not without a spot of displeasure, for the Cardinall of Winchester which at this time, would have no man to him egall, commaunded the Duke of Bedford, to leave of the name of Regent, duryng the time that the King was in Fraunce: affirming the chiefe ruler being in presence, the aucthoritie of the substitute was cleerely derogate: according to the common saying: in the presence of the high power, the small aucthoritie geueth place. The Duke of Bedford tooke such a secret displeasure with thys doing, that he neuer after fauored the Cardinall, but repugned and disdayned at all things that he did or deuised. And so because the Cardinall would have no temporall Lorde eyther to him superiour or with him egall, he set foorth this proude and arrogant conclusion, thorow which vnhappie division, the glorie of the Englishe men beganne first to decay, and vade away in Fraunce.

The next day after this solemne feast, were kept triumphant Iustes, and Turneys, in the which, the Erle of Arundell, and the Bastard of Saint Poll, by the iudgement of the Ladies, wan the price, and gat the honor. When he had kept open house to all commers, by the space of xx. dayes, because the ayre of Paris was somewhat contrariant to his pure complexion, he was aduised by his counsaile, to returne to Roan. But before his departure, he caused all the Nobilitie, the Presidentz of the Parliament, the Prouostes of the Citie, and of the Marchantes, and the chiefe Burgesses of the Towne and Citie, and all the Doctors of the Vniuersitie, to be assembled in his presence: to whome the Duke of Bedford made a long and solempne Oracion, perswadyng the Frenchmen to the loue and obedience of king Henry, whom he termed they naturall souereigne Lorde and Prince, discended from the Ladie Isabell, daughter & sole inheritrice to king Philip

When the Duke had finished and ended his Oracion, the people beyng glad, and reioy-syng at his saiynges, cryed: Viue le Roy: Liue king Henry, liue king Henry. After which crie passed, the Noble men, aswell of Fraunce, as of Normandie, did to him homage, and the common people, sware to him fealtie: to whome (although he were a childe) he gaue both pleasaunt and good words, with harty thanks, to the great admiration of the french people.

After he had feasted the Nobles and Commons of Fraunce, within the Citie of Paris, he with a great companie, departed from thence, and by smal iourneyes came to Roan, where he kept with great solumnitie, the high feast of Christmasse. While these noble Ceremonics were thus in doyng, in the Citie of Paris, sundrie chaunces diversly happened in severall places, to the displeasure of the one part, and to the gaine of the other. For Sir Fraunces Surrien Arragoys, a noble Captaine in Normandie, toke by force and pollecie, the towne of Mounterges, with a great pray of treasure and prisoners, and therein he put a garrison, and vitailed the towne, to the great displeasure of the French About the same season, the Erle of Arundell, beyng truely informed, that the Lord Bousac, Marshall of Fraunce, was come to Beauoys, intendying to do some feate in Normandie, assembled the number of xxiij. hundreth men, & layd himselfe priuely, in a close place, not farre from the sayd towne, and sent a great number of light horsemen, to ron to the barriers of the Citie. The Frenchmen, like valiant men of warre, issued out, & manfully fought with the Englishmen: which sodainly fled toward the stale. Frenchemen couragiously followed, thinkyng the game gotten on their syde: But when they were entered into the straight, the Erle set freshly on them, so that after long fight-

Homage. Fealtie. yng, there were slain and taken, in maner all the french men, saue a few which fled into the towne with the Marshall. Amongest the Captaynes was founde prisoner, the valiaunt Captaine, called Poynton of Sanctrayles, which (without delay) was exchaunged for the Lord Talbot, before taken prisoner, at the battaile of Patay. There was also taken one called the shepherd, a simple man, and a sely soule, whom the Frenchmen reputed, to be of such a holinesse, that if he touched the wall of a towne, of their enemies, that incontinent, it would fall to the ground, and ouerturne. Such false phantasticall fayners, were at that tyme muche regarded, and no lesse beleved in Fraunce.

This chaunce succeded not fortunately alone: For Richard Beauchamp Erle of War- Richard Beauwike, had a great skirmish before the towne of Gournay, where he discomfitted and re- warwike. pulsed his enemies, and besyde the carious which were left dead on the ground, he tooke prisoners, three score horsemen, all Gentlemen of name and armes. Like chaunce of infortune, happened at the same tyme, to Renate or Reyne Duke of Barre, a great friend to Charles the French king, both in lendyng him money, and also in ministryng to him ayde and succors. This Duke bearing displeasure to Anthonie Erle of Vaudemont his Cosyn and kinseman, gathered together a great army, and besieged the towne of Vaude-Vawdemout bemont. The Erle before the Dukes approchyng, to the entent that he would not be en-sieged. closed and compassed aboute by his enemies within a wall, leaving behinde him a conuenient crew of men of warre, to defende the towne for a tyme, with all diligence rode to the Dukes of Bedford, and Burgoyne, beyng then at the great triumph at Paris, whose parte he had euer taken. After long consultacion, it was agreed that Sir Iohn Fastolfe should go with him, having in his companie sixe hundreth Archers, and the Duke of Burgoyn sent to him his Marshall, called Sir Anthonie Doulongon, with, xv. hun-

The Erle of Vaudemont thus beyng accompanied, marched towarde his enemies. Duke Reine heering of his commyng toward him was somewhat dismayed, fearing least if his enemies should approche to the walles, and be espyed by the garryson within the towne, that at one tyme he should be assayled before, by them that would issue out of the towne, and behind, by the Erle and his armie. Wherefore like a hardie Captein, he brake vp his siege, and met face to face with the Erle and his companie: between whome, was a cruell and mortall battaile. The horsemen endured long, but in conclusion, the Englishe Archers, so galled the horses, and so wounded the men, that the Barrovs and their friendes were compelled to flie: In which chase was taken, the sayd Duke of Barre, the Bishop of The Duke of Mies, the Lord of Rodemaque, Sir Euerard of Sasebery, the Vicount Darcy, and two Barre taken. hundreth other, besyde three thousand men, which were slayne. In this lucky tyme also, no lesse occasion of victorie, was offered to the Englishe men, beyng in another part, if when the pigge had bene profered they had opened the poke: For Robert Lord Willoughby, and Mathew Gough, a valiaunt Welsheman, with. xv. hundreth Englishemen, layd siege to a towne in Aniow, beyng both by situation and pollecie, very strong and defensible, called Saint Seueryne. The Englishemen assayled it not so couragiously, but they within, Saint Seueryne with egall audacitie, boldely made defence: so that fortune seemed, to way both the parties in egall ballaunce. Charles the French king, beyng thereof aduertised, sent with all speede the Lorde Ambrose de Lore, with many noble and valiaunt personages, to ayde and relieue his friendes, inclosed in the towne by his enimies. This Lorde de Lore, beyng Capteyne of the towne, made much hast to comfort his Deputie and Capteine within the same, and so marched forward with great speede: but fearing to be sodeinly compassed about, he targed still at Beaumont, looking for the armie and Capteynes that should followe, and then altogether to set on their enemies, and so to rayse the siege. While he made there his abode, and tooke his leasure, the Englishemen, by their espials were assertayned and aduertised, what progresse their enemies made, and what they intended. Wherefore they polletikely prouided, to fight with the one part, before the whole puyssaunce were ioyned. And so a great part of them departed secretly in the night, toward VOL. I. 4 G their enemies, and found the watche so out of order, and ouersene, that a thousand men were entered into the camp before they were espyed. But the sleaving of men and cuttying downe of Tentes, awaked the Captaynes, whome this sodeine feare, and vnlooked chaunce so greatly abashed, that no man in maner, eyther could here his felowe or himselfe, or could make signe to expulse or drive out their enemies out of their campe. But when the day beganne to appere that all thing might be sene and perceyued, the Englishemen geuen to couetousnesse of spoyle, and desyre of rauine, neither chased, nor followed their enemies, but beyng content with their pray and gaine, began to retreat towarde the siege againe. But see the chaunce: the French men which were comyng after, and heard by the noyse of the people, that some fray was then in hand, put the Spurres to the horse, and set on their enemies, beyng laden with bagges and wallettes, of prayes and spoyles. other part which before fled, returned againe and assayled their enemies. The Frenchmen egerly assayled, and the Englishemen manfully defended, which beyng out of order, were compelled to flie, of whome Mathew Gough and diverse other were taken prisoners, and yet of the other part many were slaine, and a great number taken, amongest whom, was the Lorde of Lore, which for all the battaile, was kept and not deliuered.

The Lord Willoughby, heeryng of this chaunce, raysed the siege and departed, very sore displeased. Therefore let every Captain take good heede of victorie, the which as she is harde to obtein, so she is quicke to flie away: for it is dayly sene, that he which thinketh surely, that he hath her in his handes, before he can catche her, is deceyued, and ronneth into a great losse and dauger: and on the other side, when she is gotten, (except good watch be hourely kept) she will steale away, with much hurt and detriment, to the first gayner. Thus the Englishemen, for the greedie appetite of gayne, lost the triumphant victorie, which they had in their handes. While the Englishe and French nacion thus stroue and contended for preeminence principally, yea, and for y superior power of life, by the vnreasonable rage of war in Fraunce, the riche men were spoyled of their goodes, the spirituall persons were taxed and brought low, the common people were slaine, murdred and trodden vnder the foote, women were defyled, virgines were rauished, townes were destroyed and wasted, towne dwellers and Citizens were robbed and exiled, bewtifull buyldynges, were cruelly brent, and nothyng was spared, which by fire, blood, or famine, might be catched or destroyed, besyde a hundreth more calamities, that dayly vexed and troubled the miserable French nacion.

Although Fraunce were at this tyme thus miserably afflicted: yet England was not without some trouble: for dayly Englishemen, as well noble as meane personages, were slaine, taken, wounded, or hurt, their substaunce were continually exacted, and consumed for maintenaunce of the warres, so that mischiefe and calamitie was indifferent to both the nacions, and quietnesse and gaine, were expulsed and banished from them both: in so much that the lamentacion and dolor of both the Countries, were heard through the whole west part of the worlde, and of their continuall dissencion, all Europe and Affrik, had their eares and mouthes full, so that all men, not onely marueyled, that Fraunce could so much trouble so long tyme sustaine, but more wondered that the realme of Englande, beyng but an Isle, was able so to scourge, plague, and trouble the large Frenche region, for which cause Eugenie the fourth beyng Bishop of Rome, intendyng to bryng this cruell war to a friendly peace, sent his Legate called Nicolas, Cardinall of the holye Crosse, into Fraunce, to the entent to make an amitie, and a concord betwene the two princes, and their realmes. This wise Cardinall came first to the French king, and after to the Duke of Bedford beyng at Parys: exhortyng concorde, and perswadyng vnitie, shewyng, declaryng, and arguing peace to be most honourable, and more profitable to Christian Princes, then mortall warre, or vncharitable dissencion.

When the Legate had thus perswaded the Princes on euery part, they both gently aunswered, that they were content to come to a reasonable ende. But when the first communication was moued, and by Commissioners treated, their doynges were so farre disagreeable from their wordes, that not onely reasonable and honest condicions of peace. could be neyther heard nor accepted, but more frowardnesse, pertinacye, and malice, was kindled and sprong vp in their stomacks, then before that tyme had bene seene. The Cardinal being in vtter dispayre, of concludyng a peace betwene the two realmes (least he should some to depart empty of al things, for y which he had taken so much trauaile) desyred a truce for sixe yeres to come, which request, as it was to him by both parties hardly A truce taken graunted, so was it of the french men sone and lightly broken after his returne: For wyth Fraunce the Bastard of Orleaunce, newly made Erle of Dumoys, tooke by treason the towne of for sixe yeres. Charters from the Englishe men: affirming by the lawe of armes, that stealing or biyng a towne, without invasion or assault, was no breach of league, amity or truce. In the which toune, he slue the bishop, because he was a Burgonion, through which occasion, new malice encreased, and mortall warre began againe to rise and spring.

While these thinges were thus doyng in Fraunce: There chaunced in Englande by certeine light persons (who as some write bare no good will to priestes) dwellyng in Abyngton, that a tumult and an assembly was made, to the disquietnesse of the realme, but by wisedome of the protector, the same was sone pacified, and the chiefe Aucthour thereof, whose name was William Maundeuile, alias Iohn Sharpe, being apprehended, was put to execution, and so were sundrie other. After these thinges thus quieted, the Cardinal began to common with the Duke of Gloucester, cocernyag the affayres and businesse of Fraunce: But the Duke of Gloucester, suspecting that the truce would not long continue betwene both the realmes, (as it did not in deede) deuised how to send more ayde, and men to the Duke of Bedford, and gathered vp more money and treasure, for the further maintenaunce of the warres, and resistence of their enemies. Wherevoon the Duke of Gloucester called a Parliament, in the which money was assigned, and men were appoynted. Duryng which Parliament, Iames the king of Scottes sent Ambassadors, to conclude a peace with the Duke of Gloucester, which (because the king was absent) referred the matter to the thre estates. After long consultacion, not without great argumentes, a peace was A peace congraunted and cocluded, which all men judged should long continue, because king James cluded with the was then vexed with civile warre, and intestine dissencion, and also the Frenche men had Scottes. taken truce, as you have heard for six yeres.

When this Parliament was finished, the Cardinall well garnished with men & money, departed out of England, & came to Roan to the king, to whom also resorted from Paris, Iohn Duke of Bedford, to debate and consulte of things, not vulikely to happen and Wherfore a great counsaile was celebrate win the Castell of Roan, & many doubts were moued and disputed.

After this disputacion, with many argumentes ended, the Dukes of Bedford and Yorke, and Edmond late Erle of Mortain, and nowe by the death of John Duke of Somerset, (which died without heire male, leaving behinde him, a sole daughter called Margaret, after Countesse of Richmod) erected to the name and tytle, of Duke of Sommerset, liked and approued, the first argument, and first moued reason: affirming best, that warre must be prouided for, and that money ought to be disbursed, and to anoyde all doubtes, that a greater armie was necessary to be gathered together and assembled. When all things were agreed, king Henry departed to Calice, and from thence to Douer, and so by easye iourneys he came the xxj. day of February, to the Citie of London, where he was re- King Henry the ceyued not only with great pompe and triumph, but also highly presented with giftes and sixt returneth money, as in the Chronicle of Robert Fabian, you may rede at large, which I ouerpasse. out of Fraunce into Englad.

After that the king was departed into England, the Duke of Bedford, Regent of Fraunce, and Captaine of Calice, taryed behinde in the Marches of Picardie: where he was informed, that certein souldiours of Calice, grudgyng at the restraint of woolles, began to mutter souldiours of and murmure agaynst the king and his counsaile, so that the towne of Calice was like to Calice murmour stand inieopardie. Wherefore the Duke foreseyng the mischiefe that might insue, and think- of Woodles. yng it wisedome to withstand the first mocion, caused the Chieftaynes of this faction to be apprehended, & after due examinacion had, divers were put to death, and many banished and exiled the Marches for euer. After that he had purged the towne of that vngracious and sedicious companie, and had furnished it with new Souldiours and discrete men of warre, he was determined, first to repayre againe to Parys, but his heart would not serue him: for sith his departure, Ladie Anne his wife and Duchies, was departed to God, and honorably enterred in the Celestins at Paris: by whose death, and for other causes, (as partly you have heard) the sure love, and approved fidelitie, betwene the Duke of Burgovn. his brother in lawe and him began to wax faint and colde. For which cause, he beyng perswaded by the Lorde Lewes of Luxenborough, Bishop of Tyrwine and Elv a Chauncelor of Fraunce for king Henry, agreed to mary the Lady Iaquet, daughter to Peter Erle of Saint Paule, and neece to the sayd Bishop, and to Lorde John of Luxenborough to the intent that by this newe affinitie the olde acquaintaunce and familiaritie, which he had with the noble family of Luxenborough shoulde be renued and inforced, and with a more sure knot, knit and confirmed. Wherevoon, he departed from Calice to Tirwyne. where he was highly received of the Erle of Saint Paule, and his brethren, and there he maryed the fayre and freshe Ladie laquet, of the age of. xvij. yeres with all tryumph and nuptiall solempnitie. After which ceremonie ended, he returned with his new spouse to Calice, and so into England, where he with his wife remayned vntill August next, and then The Duke of Burgoyn, (whose mynde began to incline, a little returned againe to Parys. and little, toward king Charles) was sore grieued and angrie, that the Duke of Bedford was joyned in affinitie with the noble and famous house of Luxenborough; by the which he sawe, that the power of the Englishemen should be greatly advaunced. But the mariage was fully ended, and he could find no remedy.

This yere the Standard of Chepe (at the charges of John Welles a Citezen and Maiour of London) was buylded.

While these things were doing thus, in other places, the French souldiours lacking wages (and amongest them a great number, which in hope of pray, and desire of spoyle, had cast vp the Plough, and left their labour) beganne prively (as time served, and occasion gaue place) to take both English men and Burgonions, and raunsomed and spoyled them at their pleasures. And although they were prohibited thus to doe (during the time of truce and peace) yet in conclusion they spared not openly to rob, spoyle and burne: yea and to steale townes, which they affirmed to be no breache of truce. The Englishe pricked and vexed with these open wrongs and manifest injuries, prepared for warre, after the sixt Moneth that the truce was taken and concluded. And by this meanes, the warre was renewed and begonne agayne. The vntrue French men breakers of peace, and not keepers of truce, reysed a crewe of men, and sodainely tooke the towne of saint Valerie, standing in Normandy on the River of Some: and another army vnder the conduct of Sir Ambrose, Lorde of Lore, wasted and destroyed all the Countrie about Caen. Duke of Bedford not minding to lye still in ydelnesse, sent the Erle of Arundell, the Erle of Warwicks sonne, the Lord Lisle, Adame Marshall of Fraunce for king Henry, and twelve hundred men with ordinaunce and municions, to besiege the towne of Laigny, vpon the river of Marne. Which Erle, with the shot of a Canon, brake the Arche of the bridge, and gat from the French men their Bulwarke, and set it on fire. Dyners assaults were attempted, but the towne was well defended: for wythin were shut vp eyght hundred men of armes, beside other meane Souldyours.

The Duke of Bedford being thereof aduertised, gathered an armie of sixe thousand men of warre, and having all things necessary, he came to the siege before Laigny. He there made a bridge of Boates, and brought his ordinaunce so neere the towne, that to all people, it seemed not long able to resist. But the Erle of Dumoys Bastard of Orleaunce, with dyuers hardie Capitaines, as valyauntly repulsed, as the Englishe men assauted. Thys siege continued, as fyre agaynst flame, and sometime flame against fyre. For although the English men slue the more number, yet they gat neyther pray, nor botie: and

although the French men kept valyauntly the walles, and defended the loupes, yet they both lost men and Capitaynes, and were long secluded from their ayde and succors, till Charles the Frenche king perceyuing this towne, to be the three corner key betweene the territories of the English men, the Burgonians, and his awne, and that the losse thereof, should turne him to innumerable dammages and hurtes, sent the Lorde of Rieu, Poyton the Heire, the Lord Gancort, and sixe thousand men wyth great plentie of vittayles, to the intent either to rayse the siege, or to vittayle the towne. The French Capitaynes made a bragge, as though they would fight with the English men within their field and Campe. The English men would not issue out, but kept themselves in good order, ever loking for their entrie and invasion. The Regent percevuing, that they approched not, sent to them an Herault of armes, declaring his intent, and the courage of hys company, which nothing more desired then battayle. And to shewe himselfe as a Capitaine, meaning that which he offered, and not dissimuling that which he spake: he incontinent divided his men into thre battayles, no more wisely ordered, then politiquely gouerned: as who would saye, come on French man, if thy hart wyll serue. But hys adversaries more craftie then hardy, more politique then courageous, framed themselves in suche order of battayle, as they were able to doe all thing, and yet in conclusion (concerning martiall feates) they did nothing. For while they made a proude bragge, and a stoute skirmish with the English men, they appointed dyuers rude and rusticall persons, to conuay into the towne. xxx. Oxen, and other small vytayle, but thys swete gayne was sowrely payde, for if the losse with the gaine be pondered in one balaunce, for having regarde to. xxx. leane Oxen, in the conflict were slavne, the Lorde Sentrayles brother to Pothon, the valyant Capitayne John, brother to the Lorde Gawcort, and fiftie other noble and valyaunt personages, beside other common people, which bought that bargaine, aboue the price of the common The French men perceyving their infortunate chaunce, and not onely considering, the vnspeakable heate which then wearied their people, being in the beginning, of the hote month of August: but also perceyuing the Englishe men to be planted and setled, in a place vnable to be wonne, and in a grounde both daungerous to inuade, and hard to assayle, like men desperate of gayne, and without hope of victorie, departed to Fort vnder Yeere, where by a bridge of Tonnes, they passed into the Isle of Fraunce.

The Duke of Bedford (like a wise prince) not minding to lease the more for the lesse, nor the accident for the substaunce, fearing that Paris and other townes more necessarie to the Englishe men, and of more estimation would returne to his adversaries, thinking if the greater power were holden, the lesse should be sone obtayned, reysed his siege and returned to Parys, nothing lesse minding then to try hys quarrell with dent of sworde agayust his enemies: and so sent Bedford his herault to the Lorde Gawcort, and other Chiefetaynes of his army, offering him battayle, and a pitched field, within a convenient graunde, where so euer he would, within the Isle of Fraunce, assigne or appoynt. the which officer of Armes, the Capitaynes aunswered, that battayle they feared not, nor the Englishe puyssaunce, they not much regarded, but they sayde: that time was to gayne, and time was to lose, of the which two, they doubted not to espie the one, either for their great gaine, or to their apparaunt losse. Wherevpon they sent the Lorde Ambrose de Lore with, vij. C. horsemen to rob and spoyle the poore people, comming to the fayre, on the day of Saint Michaell the Archangell, kept in the subburbes of the towne of Caen. But when Dauy Hall Esquire, Capitayne of the towne for the Duke of Yorke, issued out to fight with him, he departed by flight, without eyther botic or gayne of the fayre. The Frenchmen perceyuing that neyther power, force, nor pollicie could auayle against the English nacion, determined to trip and deceyue them, by their accustomed servaunt called Mayster Treason, and so by money corrupted Piers Audebeuffe, Constable of the Castell of Roan, that the Marshall of Fraunce, and the Lord Fountaynes, with two hundred persons disguised, entred into the Castel, but they were sone espied, and driuen to the Dongeon, where they were taken and yelded: whereof some were hanged, some headed, and some raunsomed at the pleasure of the Regent: and such ende had the Traytors, which would by treason rather then by battayle, obtayne their praye and desired purpose.

Thys Pageaunt played, the Regent sent Peter of Luxenborough Erle of Saint Paule. and Robert Lorde Willoughby, with a competent crewe of men to besiege the towne of Saint Valerie, which the French men a little before had taken. These valyaunt Capytaines not minding to slepe their businesse, enuironned the towne with a strong siege. Within the towne were Sir Lewes de Vancort, syr Philip de la Toure, and syr Reignold de Verseilles Capitaynes, with three hundred good fighting men, which by the space of Saint Valery re- three weekes, manfully defended the same. But at the xxj. day, they perceyuing the fiercenesse of the English men, and the weaknesse of themselves (having no hope of reliefe, nor confidence in any ayde) rendered the towne, their horse and harneis onely saued. The Erle put in the garrison of the towne freshe and valyaunt Souldiours, and appointed Captaine there, Sir Iohn Awbemonde: in the which towns sodainely, whether it were by infection of the ayre, or by corrupt vittayle by long lyeng, which the townes men did eate, a great pestilence sprang in the infortunate Countrey. Which after so many calamities and euill chaunces, being two times besieged by the French men, and thrise recourred by the English Nation, was now infected and corrupted with the pestilent plague: whereby two partes of the people, within short space were destroyed and consumed.

After this towne gotten, the Erle of saint Paule, and the Lorde Willoughby returned to the Regent, where they were wel welcomed. And after, the saide Erle departed from Paris, to lay siege to the Castell of Monchas, but being encamped nere to the towne of Blangy, he by a sodaine Maladie, finished his dayes, and departed the worlde, leaving hys seigniories to Lewes his sonne and heire. For which dead Erle were solempne obsequies kept, both in Paris and in London, because he was father in lawe to the Regent. In the meane season, the French men entered into the costes of high Burgovne, and brent, tooke and destroyed townes: for which cause, the Burgonions beyng sore displeased, assembled a great armie, both to reuenge their quarels, and also to recouer agayne the townes, from them vniustly taken: to whom, as to his friends the Duke of Bedford sent Robert Lorde Willoughby, and syr Thomas Kiriell, with a convenient company of Souldiours, which entering into the laundes of Laonoys, were encountered with a great number of their enemies: Notwithstanding, after long fyght, the French men were slavne and dispersed: where were left dead in the field, an hundred and sixtic horsinen, beside prisoners, which after in a furie, were all killed and put to death. Whyle these chaunces thus happened in Fraunce, John Lord Talbot gathered together

John Lorde Tal- into Normandie, and passed by Roan towarde Paris, and in his way he toke the strong bot sayleth into Castell of Ioinge, between Beauoys, and Gisors, and caused all the French men within, to be hanged on the walles, and after rased and defaced the Castell, & came to the Duke of Bedford to Paris. The presence of which renowmed Capitayne (a maruellous thing it is to see) so encouraged the hartes of the English nation, that they thought nothing able to resist their puyssaunce, and so discouraged the hartes of the French men, that they were in doubt, whether it were better to fight or to flie. And thys was not without a cause: for surely he was a chosen Capitaine, and in martiall feates a man fully instructed, and hys courage and practise in warre, was fearefull to the French nation, and to his awne Countrymen an especiall hope, and a sure defence. When this hardye Baron had commoned with the Regent, & agreed what waye he should take, without long delay or prolonging of tyme, he departed from Parys with hys armie, and besieged the Castell of Beaumont vpon

a crewe of chosen men of warre in England to the number of eyght hundred, and sayled

Oise, whereof was Capitayne, syr Amadour de Vignolles brother to the Heire. Castell was sone rendered vpon condition. After that he regayned without long siege, the townes of Creile, the bridge of Saint Maxens, the newe towne in Esmoy, Crespi in Valloys, and Cleremount in Beauoys: and so with great riches and fatte prisoners, he returned agayne to Paris. Thus prosperous successe happened not to the Lorde Talbot alone: but also the very same season, the Erle of Arundell tooke the Castell of Bomeline. and rased it to the grounde, and after tooke by force the Castell of Dorle, and from thence came to Saint Seleryne, where the Lorde Ambrose of Lore was Capitayne, which issued out and fought with the English men so egerly at the first, that he droue them back an arrow shot by fine force. But the Erle so incouraged his men, that they tooke newe courages to them, and set so fiercely on the French men, that they slue a great number, and droue the remnaunt into the towne.

couered againe by the English-

After this victorie he besieged Louiers, whereof was Capitayne, the Heire and his brother, which rendered the towne, without stroke or assaut. For all this good luck, the Erle forgat not to returne, to the towne of Saint Seleryne, but assembled a great armie, and enuironed the Towne about with a strong siege. When he had lien there almost three moneths, every day attempting or doing somewhat, for the performance of his enterprise, in conclusion at the three Moneths ende, he gaue so fierce an assault, that by force he entered the towne, and slue Iohn Allemagne and Guillam sent Aubyne, the chiefe Capitaynes, and eyght hundred other men of warre, and the children of the Lorde Lore were taken captiues: he replenished and fortefied the towne againe with newe men, and municions, and made there Capitayne Sir Iohn Cornewall. Which act thus accomplished, he departed, and came before the strong towne of Silly, and there pitched hys Campe. The inhabitaunts of the same, somewhat dismaied with the chaunce, that late happened to the towne of Saint Seleryne, delyuered to him pledges, vpon this condition: that if they were not rescued within thirtie dayes next insuyng, then they (their lyues saued) should render the towne into his possession: which offer was taken. The Capitaynes within the towne sente a Poste to the French king, to advertise him of their hard chaunce, which incontinent sent vnto them Arthur Erle of Richmond (but after some wryters, Iohn Duke of Alaunson) with a great company of men. When the Erle sawe the French succours appere, he restored agayne the pleges to the Gouernours of the towne, and issued out of his Campe, taking a place most mete and convenient for to abide battayle, for which he sore thirsted and longed. The Duke or the Erle (take which you list) lyeng by a brooke side, which a man might stride ouer, seyng the Englishe men so warlike and strongly embattayled, thought it not for his profite to geue battayle, or to set forwarde: but in the dead time of the night cowardly fled, and with shame returned: although some French wryters affirme, that he looked that the Erle of Arundell should have given him battaile, and because he profered not forward, therefore the French men departed. This appereth to be an apparaunt lye, and a French bragge: for if they came to rescue the towne, why did not they geue battayle, and so drive away the English men from the towne? If they came to fight, why departed they without any stroke striken? But it seemeth that they came, to make a French face, and for to doe nothing. For they without skirmishe or succouring the towne, departed in the night secretly (as you have heard.) When they within the towne knew that their succours fayled, they rendered themselves to the mercy of the Erle of Arundell, which gently received them, and leaving a garrison in the towne, departed to Mauns, and in the meane way, tooke the Castels of Mellay and saint Laurence. About this time the Lord Willoughby, and Syr Thomas Kiriell, returning with great victories out of the parties of Burgoyne, tooke in their waye, the towne of Louiers, and furnish it, both with men and municions.

Amongest so many good chaunces, some euill are accustomed to fall, and happen, or else the gayners will not know themselues. So it happened, that a great number of rude and rusticall persons in Normandie, dwellyng by the sea coast, eyther prouoked or intised therevnto by the French king, or desyrous of alteracion and chaunge (which thing the An insurrection common people muche couet and desyre) made an insurrection, and put on harnesse, and in Normandie by force expulsed certein garrisons out of their holdes, and tooke certeine townes: publishyng and proclaimyng openly, that their onely purpose and intent was, to expell and

* that is a man of Inde, commonly called a black Moryan. banishe the whole Englishe Nacion, out of their Countries and coastes. Wherefore it may cuidently appere, that the blacke Ethiopian* or the blacke colored Rauen, will soner turne their colours, then the vniuersall people bred in Fraunce, will hartily loue, and inwardly fauor an Englishe borne childe. And yet the Normans of long tyme, louingly and gently, have obeyed to the subjection of England, and have of the Englishe Nacion bene well accepted and regarded, but now they forgetting their dutie, and remembrying theyr hurtes, did not feare to rebell agaynst theyr Prince and souereigne Lorde.

This mischieuous companie, thus frantikely gathered together, with al speede marched towarde Cane, to the intent there, both to assemble a greater number of people, & also to consult what way they should follow in their new begon attemptate. But the Dukes of Yorke and Sommerset, which then were living in Normandy, heryng of this vugracious faction, and troubleous commocion, and hauving knowlege by theyr espyals what journey they intended to take: incontinent without delay, sent the Erle of Arundell, and the Lord Willoughby, with vi thousand Archers, and xiij hundreth light horses to stay and kepe them eyther for settyng foorth, or making further progresse. The Erle of Arundell going one way, appoynted the Lorde Willoughby, with two thousand Archers, and a certaine number of horsemen, to go before him, to lie in watche and stale, secretly by the way, to stoppe the journey and passage of the rebelles, when they should approche. The Lorde Willoughby, couertly couered himselfe and his companie, sendyng worde to the Erle, of the place where he laye, to the entent that he might make a signe and token (when tyme should be most luckey and fortunate) to inuade and set on their enemies. Which thing done, the Erle followed at the backe, the ragged route, and mischieuous multitude, as a man, that draue the Deere before him into the Buckstalle, or the sely Conies into the secrete Hay. When the ignoraunt multitude approched nere to the place of the stale, the Erle made a token, and shot a Goon for a signe. Then the Lorde Willoughby, set on them before, and the Erle behinde, shotyng so fiercely, that the dastard people partly amased with the sodaine chaunce, and partly galled and wounded with the shot of the arrowes, threwe away their harnesse, desiryng nothyng but death. The Erle of Arondell (moued with compassion) caused his souldiors to leave of and stay, from farther murther or bloodsheddyng, and apprehendyng such as he thought to be leaders, and chiefe stirrers of the people, let the other returns home frankley and freely: but yet there were a. M. and more slain, before the souldiors could be brought again under their stadards.

The Rebels slaine.

> After this commocion appeased, and the sodeine rage in the beginning stayed and brideled, diligent inquirie was made of the malefactors, and such as were found gilty, by diuers terrible execucions (accordyng to their deserts) miserably ended their trayterous liues. Duryng which rebellion, Peter Rokefort and his companie, gat by treason the towne of Depe, and dyuers other holdes, therevuto adioining. After the Erle of Arondell, had obteyned so many Conquestes, and notable victories (as you have heard) he attempted another, which was the last worke and extreme labor of his living dayes. For the Duke of Bedford, beyng informed, that his aduersaries, had sodainly surprised and taken the towne of Rue, and therein had put a garrison, which sore vexed the Countries of Ponthiew, Arthoys, and Bolenoys, sent worde to the Erle, that he without delay, shoul dbesiege the sayd towne. The Erle obeyed to his commaundement, and incontinent, sent for all the people under his gouernaunce, and in his marchyng forwarde, came to Gouerney, where he heard tell, how that there was a certain Castle, nere Beauoys, called Gerborye, which eyther by force of rasyng, or violence of weather, was sore decayed and defaced. And because this place was opportune and very necessary, to prohibite, let and stop the Englishe men, to make sodein runnynges in, or rodes into the Countrie of Beauoys: Charles the French king commaunded Sir Stephen de Veignolles, commonly called the Heire, to see the Castell reedified and fortified. The sayd sir Stephen with a great companie, came to the ground, and lackyng neyther stuffe necessary, nor artificers sufficient, in small tyme erected the Castell, and began to defende the fortresse. The Erle of Arundell, beyng credibly informed of their doyngs, and perceiuyng that this newe edification was verye prejudiciall to the Englishe part, determined first to take the Castell, supposyng to finde there little or no resistence, but he was deceyved, for there was the Heire, wyth many good and valeaunt Captaines. The Erle with flue hundreth horsemen, encamped himselfe in a little close, not farre from the Castell: The french men which were three thousand men, perceiuyng that the Erle and his horses were wery, and that his archers were not yet come, determined for their advantage to set on him, before the commyng of his footemen, which they knewe to be little more, then a myle behind the Erle. Wherefore for a pollecie they set forth fiftie horsemen, as though there were no mo in the Castell. The Erle perceiving that, sent forth Sir Randolfe Standishe, to encounter with them, having in his companie a hundreth horses: the Frenchemen fought couragiously a while, and sodainly came out all the remnaunt, and slue Sir Randolfe Standishe, and all his companie, and boldely set on the Erle and his bande, which manfully defended them, so that the Frenchemen gat little aduauntage for all their great number. The Heire perceiuyng the courage and defence of the English people, caused thre Culuerines to be shot amongest them, whereof, one strake the Erle on the Ancle, and so brake his legge, that for paine he fell from his horse, then the French men entered amongest the Englishe armie, and tooke the Erle beyng on the ground, prisoner, and Sir Richard Wooduile, and sixe score more, and there were slain almost two hundreth. The remnaunt saued themselues as well as they might. The Erle was caryed to Beauoys, where, of this hurt he shortly dyed, and was The death of the buried in the Friers Minors. He was a man of a singuler vertue, constancie, and gra-Erle of Arundel uitie, whose death in so troubleous a world did sore appall the heartes of his nacion. By this infortune, Rue was not besieged, nor Gerborie taken, such is the chaunce of warre.

About the Moneth of Iune, Iohn Duke of Burbon, and Auerne, taken prisoner at the The death of battaile of Agyncourt. xviij. yeres past, (as you before haue heard) nowe paiyng his raun-lohn Duke of Burbon, some, which was. xviij. thousand pound sterlyng, and hauyng redy prepared all thinges necessary, for his triumphaunt returne into his countrie, was taken with a most sore and grieuous Feuer, whereof shortly he dyed, in the Citie of London, on the day appoynted for his departure into Fraunce: whose corps was enterred in the Gray Friers of the sayd Citie: So by this, every creature may see: that man purposeth, and God disposeth.

I may not forget a chaunce which happened this yere, to the example of Princes, and a spectacle for gouernors. For the deuill himselfe, to set further division betweene the Englishe and French Nacion, did apparell certaine Clawpoules & Parasites, commonly called Titiuils, and tale tellers, to sow discorde and discencion, betwene the Dukes of Bedford, and Burgoyne, not faynyng trifles nor phantasies, but thinges of reproche, repugnaunt to both their honours, estates, and dignities, with the which, eche of them was as well pricked, as hastely spurred, so that all loue, betwene them ceased, all affinitie was forgotten, and all olde familiaritie was cast by disdaine, into the caue of obliuion. Such a pestilent breath hath Flattery, and such mischiefe ensueth of Princes light credence. This grudge was perceyued, by their mutuall friendes, which by charitable exhortacion and Godly aduertisement, exhorted them to renue their olde loue and familiaritie, and to mete and entervieu, in some place decent and convenient. The Duke of Bedford gladly The fallying out condiscended to come to saint Omers, beyng the Duke of Burgoyns towne, and thither or breche of friendship beaccording to his appointment, he in honourable estate came and resorted, and likewise twent the Duke did the Duke of Burgoyne. The Duke of Bedford, beyng Regent of Fraunce, and sonne, the Duke of brother, and vncle to kinges, thought that the Duke of Burgovn, should first haue visited Burgovne, and saluted him: Duke Philip on the other part, beyng Lorde and soueraigne of the towne, judged it not mete, nor to stand with his honour, to go to him, where he was lodged, but was content by intreatie of friendes, to mete him in a place indifferent, betwene both their harberowes: which offer was not accepted, & so both parties departed discontent, and neuer after saw or commoned with other. What should I speake of the courage of these two prowde princes, the Duke of Bedford mindyng to have no peere, and the Duke 4 H VOL. I.

of Burgoyne willyng to haue no superior, by whose prowde disdaine, and enuious discorde, shortly England lost, and Burgoyne gayned not long, as you shall perceyue in thys

The Bastard of Orleaunce, called the Erle of Dumoys, the Lorde Rochford Marshall of Fraunce, with other, in the beginning of this. xiii, yere, tooke the towne of Saint Denise by treason, and skirmished with them of Paris, and leauving behinde him a great garrison, toke the towne of Howdone, and the bridge of Saint Maxence by composition, and at that time was taken the towne of Pount Meulan, by sodeyn scalying of two fishermen: which entered vp at a common privile, standyng on the wall. Thus townes vnwalled, were prayes to rauenous men of warre, so that the poore inhabitantes within them (not beyng able to keepe their fidelitie or allegeaunce, when shield and defence lacked) were constrayned and compelled to yelde and render themselues to the more power, and vpper hande: least they being nedy and innocent people, should be vexed and tormented, with the vnreasonable men of warre: So that in all Christendom, no region was more vnquiet, more vexed, more poore, nor more to be pitied, then the Countrie of Fraunce. And although the rude and poore people, suffered many plagues and adversities: yet the Souldiours prospered not in all thinges. For although pray and spoyle sometyme refreshed their mindes, and did comfort their stomackes, yet at another tyme they were slaine, taken and licked vp, or they were ware. For every Prince studied and circumspectly compassed, how to kepe defend & releue, the Cities and townes, of their severall faction, and priuate fidelitie. Wherefore when sacietie of slaughters, and aboundance of murthers, had replenished the stomackes of both the Nacions, and that both in generall had perceyved their hurtes, pondered their losses, and considered their ruynes, and dayly afflictions: although their stomackes were haute, and their hearts stonie, yet they waxed soft, privily enclining to peace, and wishyng concorde, and not without an vrgent cause: For all thinges necessarie to mannes liuing, penury shewed her selfe forth, and abundance was hidden in a Caue. The corne fieldes lay vntilled, the medowes were ouertroden, the woodes were spoyled, so that all men went to harnesse, and no man to the Plough. The Churches were seldome vsed for devocion, but many times spoyled for desyre of gaine. These and such innumerable mischiefes, caused both the people beyng enemies, to desyre peace, and yet the one part disdeyned openly to offer it, or the other privately to receive it.

The nature and property of warre,

The crie and noyse of this perillous and insaciable warre, was blasted through Europe, detested through Christendome, and especially at the counsaile of Basill, where then the Emperour Albert, and all the Princes and Potestates of Christendome, or their Deputies were assembled, for the vnion of that vngracious Scisme, in the vsurped Sea of Rome. Wherfore, the Emperour and the temporall Princes, supposying the exhortacion of discrete fathers, should more profite amongest the two highe stomacked nacions of England and Fraunce, desired Eugeny then Bishop of Rome, to be the aucthour and Arbitrer of that great strife & contencion: so that by his meanes, counsaile, and exhortacion, the weapon might be taken out of the handes of two so inuincible nacions, which neuer would yelde or bow, the one to the other, neyther yet once heere of abstinence of fight yng, or refusyng from war: so much were their heartes hardened, and so princely were their stomackes. And one thing put them in good comfort of some good conclusion, because the Duke of Burgoyne was willyng (so that it were not of his awne sute) to returne and reconcile himselfe to Charles, his mortall enemie and auncient aduersarie. Wherfore by aucthoritie of this generall Counsaill, two Cardinals came to the towne of Arras in Arthoys, whither were sent for the king of England, Henry Beuford, Cardinall of Winchester, Henry, Archebishop of Yorke, William de la Pole, Erle of Suffolke, and John Holland Erle of Huntyngdon, with divers other knightes and Esquiers: and for the French king were there present, Charles Duke of Burbon, Lewes Erle of Vandosme, Arthure of Briteyne, Constable of Fraunce, the Archebishop of Reyns, and Sir Philip Harcort. There was the Duke of Burgoyn in proper person, accopanied with the Duke of Gelders, & the Erles of Estamps, Lygny, Saint Paule, Vaudemont, Neuers, and Daniell, sonne to the prince of Orange, with a great gard and a galland companie.

Vpon the day of the first session, the Cardinall of Saint Crosse, declared to the three parties, the innumerable mischiefes, the multitude of inconveniences, which had succeded through all christendone, by their daylie discorde and continuall discention: exhorting and requiring them for the honor of God, for the love that they bare to the setting forth of Christes religion, and for the aduauncement of the publique wealth of all Christendome. that they would laye all rancour aparte, represse all wrath and anger, and conforme themselues to reason, and to godly concorde, by the which, they should receive honor, profite, and continuall quietnesse, in the worlde, and of God, a reward everlasting. After which admonition thus to them geuen, and after divers dayes of communication, every parte brought in their demaunde, which were most contrary, and hard to come to a good conclusion. The Englishe men required, that king Charles should have nothing, but at the hande of the King of Englande, and that not as duetie, but as a benefite by him of hys meere liberalitie given and distributed, to which the Frenchmen aunswered that; king Charles would have the kingdome frankely and freely, without begging it of an other man: requiring the king of England to leave the name, armes, and tytle of the king of Fraunce, and to be content with the Dukedomes of Aquitayn and Normandy, and to forsake Paris and all the townes which they possessed in Fraunce, betwene the Ryuers of Loyre and Some, being no parcell of the Duchy of Normandy. The English men loth to lese so good a botie as Paris, did not esteme and allow the demaunds of the French Ambassadors, and they on the other side, couetyng and desyring to obtayne agayne the renoume and glorye of their Region, which was Paris, would in no wise condiscend, to any parte of the Englishe requestes. Thus the pride of the one parte, and the ambition of the other letted concorde, peace, and quietnesse. The Cardinalles seing the frostie hartes, and hardened mindes of both parties, determined not to dispute the titles, but offered to them honest and reasonable condicions of truce and peace, for a season: which articles both parties, eyther for frowardnes, or for disdayne openly refused: In so much as the English men in great displeasure departed to Calice, and so into England. One writer affirmeth, that they beyng warned of a secret conspiracie moued agaynst them, sodainely removed from Arras, and so sayled into their countrey.

Whiles this treatie of peace was thus in communication at Arras, the Lorde Talbot, the Lorde Willoughby, the Lorde Scales, with the Lorde Lisle Adame, and five thousand men besieged the towne of Saint Denise, with a strong bande. The Erle of Du- S. Denise bemois hearing thereof, accompanied with the Lorde Lohac, and the Lorde Bueill, and a sieged. great company of horsemen hasted thetherward to raise the siege, and in the meane way they encourred with syr Thomas Kiriell, and Mathew Goughe, ryding also towarde S. Denise, between whome was a great conflict, and many slayne on both parties: but sodainely came to the ayde of the Frenche men, the garrison of Pount Melance, which caused the Englishe men to returne without any great harme or dammage, sauing that Mathew Gough by fondering of his horse was taken and caried to Pount Melance. During which fight, the towne of saint Denise, was rendered to the Lorde Talbot and the other Lordes, which caused all the walles to be rased, and abated downe to the grounde, sauing the walles of the Abbay, and a Tower called Venyn. After this towne gotten, the Lorde Willoughby left Sir Iohn Ruppelley at Pounthoyse, and departed to gouerne Paris, which then began to smoke, and sone after brast out in flame (as you shall shortly perceine.) After whose departure the inhabitants of Pounthoyse rebelled, and droue out the English men by very force, and rendered themselues subjectes to king Charles. This towne was small, but the losse was great, for it was the very convenient Kay betwene Paris and Normandie, so that nowe the gate betweene them both, was set open and the passage at large.

Let vs now agayne returne to the counsayle at Arras. After the Englishe Ambassadors 4 H 2

dors were departed, the French men and the Burgonyons beganne familierly to common of a peace, and talke of an amitie, to the which mocion, Philip Duke of Burgoyne, was neyther deafe nor straunge: for he in the beginning of his rule, being much desyrous to reuenge and punishe the shamefull murther done to his father, and to kepe himselfe in his highe estate, and preheminence, beganne to be associate, and to reigne with the English power, and to serue the king of England, thinking that by his amitie and joyning, he shoulde neither harme nor hurte the common wealth of the Country, wherof at that time he bare the whole rule, nor yet lose one iote or point of his aucthoritie, or governaunce. But when it happened contrary to his expectation, that the king of Englande by the right course of inheritaunce, tooke vpon him the whole rule and gouernaunce, within the realme of Fraunce, and ordered by the aduise of his counsayle, all causes, judgements, warres and concordes, and that the Duke judged that he was not had in great confidence, nor in perfite trust, as he thought, because the Duke of Bedford would not suffer the towne of Orleaunce to be rendered to him, (as you before haue heard:) He therefore imagined, and determined with himselfe to returne into the pathe againe, from the which he had strayed and erred, and to take part and ioyne with his awne bloud and Nation; so that some honest meane might be sought by other, and not by himselfe, least peraduenture by his awne seeking, he might binde himselfe in conditions hurtfull and sore inconveniences, to the Frenche king, and also be noted of vntruth and traytorous behaviour toward the king of England and his nation: to whom he had done homage, league, and sworne fealtie. Now this counsayle was to him a cloke for the rayne, as who should say, that he sought not amitie of the french king (which thing in hys hart he most coueted and desyred) but was therevnto perswaded by the generall counsayle, and by the Bishop of Rome, to whome it was reason, in all honest requests that he should submit himselfe, and humblye obey. And so shadowed with this counsayle, wythout long argument or prolonging of time, he toke a determinate peace, and a final conclusion vpon these conditions: that he should have to him delywered the Counties of Arthoys, Ponthiew, and Bullonoys, & the townes of Amience, Corby, Mondidyer, Peron, Saint Quintine, and Abbeuile, with many other seigniories, & superiorities, which be not for my purpose to reherse. Prouyded alway, that the French king paying in redy money to the Duke or hys heyres foure C.M. Crownes, should have the sayde townes and Countries to be redelivered againe: and many other things the French king graunted to the Duke of Burgoyne, which after he was not able to performe nor accomplish, for he had no power to make deniall to the Duke, of any demaunde or request, which the Duke eyther phantasied or moued: as who would say, that he thought in himselfe, that such an aduersary which desired so honest, and so reasonable condicions (considering the state of the time, and the occasion of concord, most apparauntly offered to him) ought neyther to be refused nor cast awaye, the which chaunce was to him luckey and fortunate; for surely the thing foreseene and looked for, succeeded and tooke place, as you shall perceyue. This concorde was so pleasaunt to the French king, that he not onely sent for him: but as a Swan that swimmeth after her make, mette hym in proper person, at the Citie of Reynes, and forthwith they entered into a league with perfite amitie and friendship.

A peace concluded betweene the French king and the duke of Burgoyn.

When thys league was sworne, and this knot knit, the Duke of Burgoyne, to set a vayle before the king of Englandes eyes, sent Thoison Dor, his king at armes to king Henry with letters: that he being not only waxed faint, and wearyed, with continuall warre, and daylie conflictes, but also chafed daylie with complaints and lamentation, of his people, which of the french men suffred losse and detriment, embrayding and rebuking him openly, affirming that he onely was the supporter and mainteiner of the English people, and that by his meanes and power, the mortall warre was continued and set forward, & that he more diligently studied, and intentiuely toke paine, both to keepe and maintaine the Englishe men in Fraunce, and also to aduaunce and promote their desires and intentes, rather then to restore king Charles his Cosyn, to his rightfull inheritaunce, by reason of which things and many other, he was in maner compelled and constrayned to take a peace, and conclude an amitie with king Charles, exhorting king Henry when honest and reasonable conditions were offered, to take them, and to make an ende of the warre which so long had continued, to the decaye of both the realmes, and to the effusion of christen bloud, beside the great displeasure of almightie God, which is the aucthor of peace and vnitie: promising him his ayde and furtheraunce in that behalfe, with many glosyng and flatteryng wordes, which I passe ouer.

This letter was not a little looked on, nor smally regarded of the king of England, and his sage counsayle: not onely for the waightinesse of the matter, but also for the sodaine chaunge of the man, and for the straunge superscription of the letter, which was: To the high and mightie prince, Henry by the grace of God, king of England his welbeloued Cosyn: Neyther naming him king of Fraunce, nor his soueraigne Lorde, according as (euer before that time) he was accustomed to doe. Wherfore all they which were present, being sore moued with the crafty doing and vntrue demeanor of the Duke, whom they so much trusted, could neyther temper their passions, nor yet moderate their yre, nor yet bridle their tongues: but openly called him Traytor, deceyuer, and most inconstant prince. But when the rumor of the Dukes reverting was published amougst the common people, they lefte wordes and went to stripes: for they being moued and pricked with this vnhappie tydings, ran fiercely vpon all the Flemings, Hollanders, and Burgonions, which then inhabited within the Citie of London, and the suburbes of the same, and slue and hurt a great number of them, before they by the kings proclamation could be prohibited to leave of and abstayne from suche violence and injurious doing: for the king nothing more minded, then to save innocent bloude, and defend them which had not offended.

After the letter twise red, and wisely brooked, he willed the officer at armes to tell his mayster, that it was not convenient, nor honorable for him, to be enimie to the English nation, without cause or occasion geuen: but his duetie, all things considered, was to have kept his auncient truth and olde allegeaunce rather then to be the occasion of newe warre and freshe discention: aduertising him farther, that it was not the point of a wise man, to leave and let passe the certaine for the vncertaine, admonishing him also, not to mingle and mixe his safetie and surenesse, with the vnstablenesse and vnsuretie of his

When the Messenger was departed, the king of Englande and hys counsayle thought and determined to worke some displeasure to the Duke, and to set some conspiracie against him in his awne Countrey, wherefore by rewardes, they did suborne and corrupt certaine Gouernors and rulers of townes and Cities, within the Dukes countries and dominions (which nations surely be euer procline and readie to commocion and rebellion.) But the Gauntoys, which of that feate euer bare the Bell, and were the common rysers agaynst their souereigne Lords, some of them imagening that the power of the Englishe men was not long lyke to continue within the realme of Fraunce, more for feare then loue of their Duke, sat still and moved not, but let other townes alone, which sore troubled the Dukes wittes, and a great whyle did disquiet and vexe his senses.

But in this time, and the xiiij. day of September, died Iohn Duke of Bedford Regent The death of of Fraunce, a man as politique in peace, as hardy in warre whose bodie was with great Bedford Regent funerall solempnitie buried in the Cathedrall Church of our Lady in Roan, on the North of Fraunce. side of the high aulter, vnder a sumptuous and costly monument: which tombe and sepulture, when king Lewes the xj. sonne to this king Charles, which recourred agayne Normandie did well advise and beholde, certaine noble men in his company, having more youth then discretion, and more enuie in their hartes then considerations of their parents, counsayled him to deface and pluck downe the tombe, and to cast the dead carcasse into the fieldes: affirming that it was a great dishonor both to the king and to the realme, to see the enemy of his father, and theirs, to have so solempne and riche memoriall.

moriall. King Lewes aunswered agayne, saying; what honor shall it be to vs. or to you to breake this monument, and to pull out of the ground and take vp the dead bones of him, whome in his lyfe, neyther my father nor your progenitors with all their power, puissaunce and friendes were once able to make flie one foote backward, but by his strength. wyt, and pollicie, kept them all out of the principall dominions of the realme of Fraunce, and out of this noble and famous Duchy of Normandy: wherefore I say, first God have his soule, and let his body now lye in rest, which when he was alvue, would have disquieted the proudest of vs all: and as for the tombe, I assure you, it is not so decent, nor convenient for him, as his honor and actes deserved, although it were much richer and more beawtifull.

This yere chaunced a maruellous great frost, the which beganne the, xxvj. of Nouember and continued untill the. x. daye of February next following, in the which tyme the Thames was so feruently Frosen, that no ship nor other Vessell could come within the By reason whereof the ships that came from Burdeaux, were forced to valade at Douer & other places, and were copelled to bring their Wines by land ouer shoters Hill to London.

After the death of thys noble prince and valyant Captayne, the Duke of Bedford, the bright Sunne that commonly shone in Fraunce fayre and bewtifull vpon the Englishe men, beganne to be cloudie, and daylie to waxe darker: for the French men seing the chiefe Capitaine taken awave, beganne not onely to refuse their obedience and loyaltie, which they had sworne and promised to the king of Englande, but taking sworde in hande, rebelled, persecuted and openly defyed the Englishe men, yet all these mischaunces, not one point abated the valyaunt courages of the English people: for they nothing mistrusting God, nor good fortune, set vp a newe sayle, and beganne the warre newe agayne, and appointed for Regent in Fraunce, Richard Duke of Yorke, sonne to Richarde Erle of Cambridge, althoughe the Duke of Yorke, both for birth and courage, was worthy of this honour and preferment, yet he was so disdayned of Edmonde Duke of Somerset beyng Cosyn to the king, that he was promoted to so high an office (which he in very deede gaped and looked for) that by all wayes and meanes possible, he both hindered and detracted him, glad of his losse, and sorie of his well doing, causing him to linger in England without dispatch, till Parys and the Flower of Fraunce were gotten by the The Duke of Yorke perceyuing his euill will, openly dissimuled that, which French king. he inwardly thought, eche working things to the others displeasure. This cancarde malice, and pestiferous division so long continued, in the hartes of these two Princes, till mortall warre consumed them both, and almost all their lines and ofsprings, as within fewe yeres you shall perceyue.

Richarde Duke of Yorke made Regent of Fraunce.

The Normans of the Countrie of Caux, beyng somewhat hartened, by the death of the Duke of Bedford, beganne a newe rebellion, and slue divers Englishe men, and robbed many pretie townes, which were of king Henries faction and part, and tooke the towne of Harflew by assault, and divers other townes. The Lord Talbot beyng advertised of this rebellion, sent for the Lord Scales, Sir thomas Kiriell, and the Lord Hoo, which afflicted and plagued the people of Caux, that they slue aboue fiue thousand persons, and brent all the townes and villages in the countrie, not beyng walled, so that in that part, was neither habitacion nor tillage, for all the people fled into Briteyn, and all the beastes of the Coun-Good chepe vic- trie were brought to Cawdebec, where a good sheepe was solde for an Englishe penny, and a Cow for. xij. pence. Dayly was skirmishing and fightyng in euery part, in so much that the Lorde Scales with foure hundreth Englishmen, discomfited at the Rye beside Roan, the Heire and fiftene hundreth valiaunt Frenchmen, and Sir Richard Reignold de Fountaynes, Sir Aleyne Gerond, Alayne de Monsay, and Geoffrey Grame Capteyne of the Scottes, and three hundreth and mo, were taken prisoners, besyde seuen fayre and pleasant Coursers. But thys victorie stayed not the hartes of the French nacion, for their myndes were so so full of treason, and their malice so great agaynst the Englishmen, that many townes turned to the part of king Charles, without conquest or desyre, and divers were sold for couetousnesse, and many were deliuered by treason, as Depe, Boys de Vincenes, and other.

Thomas Lorde Beamond, which of late was come to Paris with eight hundreth men, issued out of Parys with six hundreth souldiers, onely entendyng to see and vieue the doynges and number of the French armie, but he was sodeinely espyed, and compassed about: so that within a small space, he was discomfited and taken, and with him foure score prisoners, beside two hundreth which were slaine in the fielde, and the remnant chaced to the very gates of the Citie. The Parisians, and in especiall the Master of the Hales, and some of the Vniuersitie, and Michaell Laillier, and many notable Burgesses of the towne (which ever with an Englishe countenaunce covered a French heart) perceiving the weakenesse of the Englishemen, and the force and strength of the Frenchmen, signifivng to the Frenche Captaynes theyr mindes and intentes, willed the n to come with all diligence, to receive so rich a pray, to them without any difficultie offered and geven. The Constable delaying no tyme, came with his power, and lodged by the Charterhouse: and the Lorde Lisleadam, approchyng the walles, shewed to the Citizens, a Charter, sealed with the great seale of king Charles, by the which he had pardoned them their offences, and graunted them all the olde liberties and auncient privileges, so they would hereafter be to him obedient, true, and seruiceable: which thing to them declared, they ranne about the towne criving: Saint Denise, liue king Charles. The Englishe men perceiuyng this, deter- The Parisians mined to kepe the gate of Saint Denise, but they were deceyued, for the Cheynes were rebell drawen in euery strete, & women and children cast downe stones, and scaldyng water on the Englishe mens heades, and the Citizens persecuted them, from strete to strete, and from lane to lane, and slue & hurt, divers and many of them. The Bishop of Tyrwine, Chauncelor there for king Henry, and the Lord Willoughby, and Sir Simon Moruier, tooke great paine to appease the people, and represse their fury: but when they saw that all anayled not, they withdrew themselves, to the Bastile of Saint Anthony, which Fortresse they had well vittayled and furnished, wyth men and municions.

Whiles this rumor was in the towne, the Erle of Dumoys and other scaled the walles, and some passed the river by Boates, and opened the gate of Saint Iames, at the which the Paris is velded Constable with his Banner displayed entered, at whose entrie the Parisians were verye glad, to the French and made great ioy. The Bishop and the Lorde Willoughby, with their small companie, defended their fortresse, tenne dayes, loking for ayde, but when they sawe that no comfort appered, they yelded their fortresse, so that they and theirs with certain baggage, might peaceably returne to Roan, which desire was to them grauted. Then as they departed, the Parisians rayled, mocked, and taunted the English men, with the most spitefull wordes, and shamefull termes, that could be inuented or denised: so that all men may apparauntly perceyue, that their heartes neuer thought, as their tongues vitered.

After this glorious gaine, the French king besieged the towne of Craile, vpon Oyse. whereof Sir William Chamberlain was Captain, which with fine hundreth Englishmen issued out of the towne, and after long fight, discomfitted his enemies, and slue two hundreth, and tooke a great number prisoners: the remnant not likyng their market, departed to Compeigne, and other townes adioining. Duryng which season, xij. Burgesses of the towne of Gysors, solde it for money to Poyton of Xantrayles, but he had not the Castell deliuered. Wherfore with all his power, he besieged the same, wherof the Lorde Talbot beyng aduertised, sent for the Lord Scales, and they both with xviij. hundreth men, rescued the Castell, tooke the towne, and discomfited their enemies, and slue of them aboue foure hundreth persons. Nowe was the olde prouerbes verefied, that he that commeth a day after the fayre, commeth to late, and when the steede is stolen, it is no boote to shut the stable dore. For when Paris, Saint Denise, Saint Germaynes in Lay, and many other townes in Fraunce were taken and betrayed, for lacke of succours and sufficient garrisons, then the Duke of Yorke appoynted at the Parliament before to be regent of Fraunce, and by the disdeyn and enuy of the Duke of Somerset and other, not till now dispatched, was sent into Normandie, with. viij. thousand men, and in his company the Erles of Sarisbury, and Suffolke, and the Lorde Fauconbridge, and diuers valiaunt Capteynes. When he was landed at Harflew, the Erle of Sarisburie besieged the Castell of Chamboys, which shortly was to him rendered. Then the Duke removed to Roan, where he set good orders, and did great justice in the Countrie, wherefore the Normanes in their Chronicle, highly extoll and much magnifie him, for that poynt: Howbeit, they say, that he gate by long siege, the towne and Abbey of Fecampe, and did none other notable act, duryng the tyme of his rule and gouernaunce.

Philip Duke of Burgoyne, which (as you have heard) brake both his otherand promise with the king of England, imagined with himselfe, that the Englishe men were like shortly to be expulsed out of all the townes on that syde the sea, and that they had no certein refuge nor place to resort to, out of ieopardie, but only the towne of Calice. Wherefore he assembled his counsaile, and the heades of the Cities and townes of Flaundyrs, Brabant, Holland and Zeland, in the towne of Gaunt, where was declared vnto them, the right, title, and interest, that he had to the towne of Calice, and the countie of Guisnes, as a very patrimonie belonging to his inheritaunce: shewing further, that the sayd towne was the golfe and swallower vp of all the golde and siluer of his Countries and dominions, for so much as there was the staple of wooles, tynne, lead, and other marchandise, for the which the Englishe men would take no common current money, but onely gold and siluer, to the great impouerishment of his seigniories & Regions: saiving further, that Calice only was the common stop, between his Countries and Briteyn, and Spaine, so that Southward, nor Westward, his subjectes could not passe, without the daunger of Wherefore these detrimentes considered, he determined if they would assent, shortly to recouer and conquere that towne and the Countie of Guisnes. To this purpose all the counsayle, and common people, not onely agreed, but also promised ayde, both of men and money. Lorde howe the Fleminges bragged, and the Hollandyrs craked, that Calice should be wonne, and all the Englishemen slaine, swearyng, and staryng, that they would have it within three dayes at the most: thinkyng verely, that the towne of Calice, could no more resist their puyssaunce, then a pot of double beere, when they fall to quaffyng.

To tell you what ordenance was new cast, what powder was bought, what engines were deuised, what harnesse was prouided, what vitaile was purueyed for that great enterprice: I will not comber you, in rehersyng euery thyng particulerly, because the Flemynges write, that the provision was more then tongue could speake, or heart could thinke, yet you may beleue as ye list. These doynges were not so privie, but Sir Iohn Radeliffe Deputy of the towne of Calice, was thereof enformed, and shortly of the same aduertised king Henry, and his counsaile, which incontinent sent thether the Erle of Mortayne, sonne to the Duke of Sommerset, and the Lorde Cammeys, with. xv. hundreth men, and great foyson of vitaile, which issued out of Calice, and came before Grauelyne where they were encountered with a great number of Fleminges, which were shortly discomfited, and foure hundreth of them slaine, and six score taken prisoners, and caried into Calice. And within two dayes after, the Englishemen draue by fine force, the Lords of Wauraine and Bado, to the Barriers of Arde, and discomfitted the companie to the number of. xv. hundreth, and slue. vij. valeaunt Captaynes, & toke many Gentlemen prisoners. Philipe Duke of Burgoyn, abidyng still in his high and warlike enterprice, assembled together of Flemynges, Picardes, Hollanders, and Henowiers, a great armie, to the number of. xl. thousand, so well armed, so well vitayled, so well furnished with ordenaunce, and well garnished in all thinges, that they thought in their heartes, and blasted among themselves, that the Calicians, would leave the towne desolate, and flie for their sauegarde, heeryng onely of the approchyng of the Gauntoys. But they reckned before their host, and so payde more then their shot came to. When this gallant armie was passed the water of Grauelyn, Grauelyn, the Duke entendyng to begyn his great conquest, besieged and assaulted the little and poore Castell of Oye, which havyng in it but fiftie souldiers, of the which xij. solde their lives derely, the remnant compelled by necessity, yelded themselves simplie to the Duke, which to please the Gauntoys, beyng of the most puyssaunt companie in his armie, liberally gaue to them both the Castell and the prisoners, as a signe and token of good lucke, and fortunate victorie. Which rade and beastly persons, nothing expert in warre, or lawes at armes, not onely rased and abated the Castell, but also hanged. xxix. of the captines, and had so done with all the remnant, if the Duke, (disdayning their cru-eltie) had not entreated for the rest.

After this victorie, little honourable, and Icsse profitable, the Picardes besieged the Castell of Marke, and thre times assaulted it, more to their losse then gaine. The English men within, whereof Sir Iohn Geddyng was Captevn, set out the banner of Saint George, and rang the belles, to the entent to have succours from the towne of Calice. But the Capteynes there, myndyng not to lease the more for the lesse, nor the substance for ' the accident, wished them good luck, & good fortune without any ayde sendyng. doubt of the Dukes great armie and power. The souldiers within Marke, beyng but two hundreth and sixe, seyng no hope of succour, & desperate of comfort, rendered themselues to the Duke vpon condicion that their liues and limmes should be saued, and so they were conueved in sure custodic to the towne of Gaunt, and the Castell of Marke was rased and defaced.

After this act done, the Duke of Burgovn, accompanied with the duke of Cleues, the Calice besieged Erle of Estampes, the Lords of Dantoynge, Croy, Cresquy, Humiers, and many other Burgoyn. valeaunt Barons, and Knightes, with his great army, came before the towne of Calice, and placed his siege about the same, most to his advauntage, and to the most displeasure of his enemies. He gaue three great assaultes to the towne, but his people were not so fierce to assaut, but the Englishmen were as quicke to defende, so that he gaining so little at these three enterprises, was content to abstaine from further approchyng toward the walles. At the first assault the Heire, which was come to see the Duke of Burgovo, was sore wounded and hurt. Besyde this, the Duke had dayly one great eye sore, which was because that at every tyde, shippes arrived in the Hauen, out of England, openly before his face, laden with vitaile, municions, and men, and also the Calicians would for the nonce, put out cattaile into the marish, vnder the towne walles, to the entent to prouoke the Fleminges to come within their catchyng and daunger, which beyng couetous of pray and gaine, often aduentured, and seldome returned againe: for many by this meanes were taken prisoners, but many mo slaine with ordinaunce. The Duke one day road about, to vieue and beholde the situacion, and the walles of the towne, to the intent to take his most advauntage, either by assault or shot of ordenaunce. He was quickly espyed, and with the stroke of a Canon, a Trompetor which road next before him, and three horses in his companie were slaine out of hand. When he sawe that all thinges succeded not to his purpose, he first set the Lorde of Croy, and a convenient number, to besiege the Castell of Guisnes, where the sayd Captain gat little profite, and did lesse harme; And after deuised howe to stop the Hauen, so that no succours should enter there, and also to prohibite them within the towne to make any egresse or road outward, and so by this meanes to famishe and compell them to yelde and render the towne. This device was set forwarde, and nothing slept: for foure great Hulkes were laded with great square stones, semented and ioyned together with lead, to the intent that they should lye still like a mount, and not to seuer a sonder. These shippes with the remnant of the Dukes nauie were conveyed into the mouth of Calice hauen, and in a full sea by craft and pollecie, were sonke downe to the ground, but whether God would not that the hauen should be destroyed, eyther the conveyers of the Hulkes, knewe not the very Channell, these four great shippes at the lowe water, lay openly vpon the sandes, without any hurt downg to the rode or Channell, which when the souldiers had perceyued, they issued out of the towne, VOL. I.

towne, and brake the shippes, and caryed both the stones and the tymber into the towne, which serued them well to their fortifications. The seconde deuise was also accomplished, which was a strong Bastell, set on a little mountaine, furnished with foure hundreth men and much artillery, which fortresse did let the Englishe men to issue out, when they would,

to their great displeasure and disturbance.

Whiles these thinges were in doing, there arryued into the Dukes armie an Herault of Englande called Pembroke, belonging to the Duke of Gloucester, which declared to the Duke of Burgoyne, that the Protectour of England his Mayster (if God would send him wind and weather) would geue battayle to him and hys whole puyssaunce, eyther there, or in any other place within his awne Countrey, where he would appoint: but the day he could not assigne, because of the inconstancie of the winde, and mutabilitie of the aire. The Duke (like a noble man) aunswered the Herault: Sir, say to your mayster, that his request is both honorable, & reasonable, howbeit, he shall not neede to take paine, to seeke me in mine awne Countrey, for God wylling he shall finde me here, till I haue my will of the towne, readie to abide him, and all the power that he can make. After this aunswere made, the Herault was highly feasted, and had a Cup, and a hundred golden Gyldens to him delyuered for a rewarde, and so returned to Calice. After whose departure, the Duke called a great counsayle in the chiefe Pauilion of the Gauntoys, and there declared both the Heraults message and his aunswere desyring them to regarde his honor, the estimation of their Countreis, and the honesties of themselves, and like men to receyue their enemies, and valyauntly to defend their aduersaries, promising to them victorie, gaine, and perpe-

Whiles this great matter was in consultation, the Calicians, not well contented with the Bastell, which the Duke had newly buylded, issued out of the towne in a great number, part on foote, and part on horseback. The footemen ran to assaut the Bastile, and the horsemen went betwene the armie and the assaylaunts, to stop the ayde and succors which might come. The alarmy was sounded, in so much that the Duke in proper person was commyng on foote to releue his people, but by the meanes of the horsemen, he was stayed and kept back a space, in the which delay of time, the Englishe men by fine force gat the place, and slue a hundred and sixtie persons, the remnaunt were taken prisoners, and defaced the fortresse, and set it on fyre: caryeng with them all the ordinaunce and artillerie into the towne of Calice, to the great displeasure of the Duke and his counsayle. next day after, there sprang a rumor in the armie (no man could tell how) that the Duke of Gloucester with a great puissaunce was already embarked and shipped, and would arryue at the next tide, and come downe before Calice, and raise the siege. What was the very cause, I can not truely write: but surely the same night the Duke fled away, and sent in all hast to the Lord of Croye, to raise his siege before Guysnes, which tydings were to him very joyous, for he neither got nor saued: so these two Capitaines departed leauing behinde both ordinaunce, vitaile and great riches. The french writers, to saue the honor of the Duke of Burgoyne, say that there was a certaine discord and commocion amongst the Flemings and duche Nation: affirming that the great Lordes and the Picardes, (whome the Frenche men greatly extoll) would betray and sell the Flemings and their friends, and that for the same cause, in a great furie they cried home, home, and would not tarrie, for no request the Duke could make, nor no exhortation that could be genen: and so by their misgouernaunce, the Duke was enforced to rayse his siege and to departe. The Flomishe authors affirme the contrary, saving: that they were readie to abide the comming of the Duke of Gloucester, but the Duke of Burgoyne fearing to be trapped, betwene the Duke of Gloucesters armie before, and the garrison of Calice behinde, so that he could escape by no way, fled away in the night, geuing to them no warning be-So that for lack of time, and convenient space, to lade and carry their stuffe, and being commaunded to retire with all speede and diligence, they were compelled to lose, and leave behinde them their vitayle and tents, to their great losse and detriment. Now

The Duke of Burgoyne rayseth his siege before Calice and departeth. it is at your liberties (gentle Readers) whether you will geue credite to the French men (which were absent and no doers in the act) or to the Flemings, which were partakers of the losse and dishonor. But the infallible veritie is, that he fled the. xxvj. day of Iuly in the night, & the next day in the morning the Duke of Gloucester landed in Calice hauen, and straight went into the Campe, where his enimies the night before were lodged, and there he found many goodly peeces of ordenance, and in especially one called Dygeon, named after the chiefe towne of Burgony, beside paulilions, Wine, Beere, Meale, and innumerable vittavle.

The Duke of Glocester seing his enemies reculed, having in his company. xxv. M. The Duke of men, entered into Flaunders, burning houses, kylling such as would resist, destroyeng the Gloucester Countrey on every parte, setting fyre in the townes of Poporniche and Baillens, and spoyleth Flaum-dyrs. wasted the suburbes of many faire Cities, and in all this way, they lost no man, nor sawe any creature appere to defend the Countrey. After they passed by Newe Castell, and destroyed Rymesture, & Vallon Chapell, and then entred into Arthoys, to Argues and Blandesques, setting fyre in euery part where they came. Thus they passed by Saint Omers, to Guysnes, and so to Calice at sixe weekes ende, where they were well refreshed: for in all this iorney, they had little plenty of good bread, which caused much faintnesse, and divers diseases in the armic. When the Duke of Gloucester had sufficiently plagued and wasted the Countreys of the Duke of Burgoyn, and brought great prayes of beastes and spoyle to the towne of Calice, he setting there all things in good order, returned into Englande, where he was aduertised, how Iames king of Scottes, contrary to his othe, league and promise, had besieged the Castell of Rokesborough, with thirtie thousand men, whereof Sir Raufe Gray was Capitaine which manfully defended it twentie dayes, but the Scottishe king being aduertised, that the Erle of Northumberland was comming to fight with him, fled with no lesse losse, then dishonor to his towne of Edenbrough.

After this daungerous businesse finished, and for a time ended, by meane of friends, and desire of Princes, a truce or abstinence of warre for a certaine time was moved betwene the king of England, and the Duke of Burgoyne, for which cause were sent to Grauelyne for the king of England, the Cardynall of Winchester Henry Beaufford, John Lorde Moubrey Duke of Nortfolke, Humffrey Erle of Stafford, and dyners other well learned and honorable personages: and for the Duke there appered the Duches his wyfe, the Byshop of Arras, the Lorde of Croy, and divers other. At which treatie, a truce was A truce taken taken for a small time, and for a lesse space observed. Which abstinence of warre was between the Duches of Burconcluded between the king of Englande, and the Duches of Burgoyne (leauing out the government) Duke and his name.) Some thinke that the king of England would not enter in league king of England. with him, because he had broken his promise, wryting and fidelity, written, sealed, and sworne to him, and to his father. Other imagened this to be done by a cautell, to cast a mist before the French Kings eyes, to the intent he should beleue, that this feat was wrought by the Duches, without assent or knowledge of the Duke or his counsayle, and so he was not bounde to accomplish anye act or thing done in his wyfes treatie.

About thys season, Katheryn Quene and mother to the king of Englande departed out Katheryn moof this transitorie lyfe, and was buryed by her husband, in the Minster of Westminster. wombe descended, created Edmond Erle of Richemond, and Iasper Erle of Pembroke. which Edmond engendered of Margaret daughter and sole heyre to John Duke of Somerset, Henry which after was king of thys realme, called king Henry the seauenth, of whome you shall heare more hereafter. This Owen after the death of the Quene bys wyfe, was apprehended and committed to warde, because that contrarie to the statute made in the sixt yere of thys king, he presumptuously had maried the Quene, without the kinges especiall assent and agreement, out of which prison he escaped, and let out other with hym, and was agayne apprehended, and after escaped agayne.

The Duches of to Sir Richard Wooduile.

The Duchesse of Bedford, syster to Lewes, Erle of Saint Paule, minding also to mary, Bedford maried rather for pleasure then for honor, wythout counsaile of her friendes, maried a lustie knight called Sir Richarde Wooduile, to the great displeasure of her Vncle the Byshop of Tyrwyne, and the Erle her brother: but they now could not remedie it, for the chaunce was cast and passed. This Sir Richard was made Baron of Riuers, and after Erle, and had by thys Ladye many noble sonnes, and fayre daughters: whereof one was Lady Elizabeth, after Queene of Englande, maried to king Edward the fourth (as hereafter you shall perceyue.)

Jane the Queene of England deceassed.

Whiles this mariage was celebrating, Iane late Quene of England, and before Duches of Britayne, daughter to the king of Nauerre, and wife to king Henry the fourth, died at the mannor of Hauering, and was buried by her husbande at Cauntorbury, in which tyme disceased the Countesse of Warwike, and Henry Archebishop of Yorke.

And here I may not forget the double dealing, and craftie demeanour, of Iames King of Scottes: which being (as you have heard) late prisoner in Englande, not onely was garnished with learning and civilitie (which things were rare and straunge before that time, within the realme of Scotland) but also set at libertie, and honorably sent home. And to the intent that his amitie might be perpetuall, and that love might continually succede betwene both the realmes, by his meane and accorde: first, his great raunsome was abridged, and diminished, and after he was joyned in mariage with one of the bloud royall, as before you have heard: yet this vngentle prince, and forgetfull friend, putting in obliuion both the duetie of his obeysaunce, towarde his soueraigne and liege Lorde, and the othe and promise that he made to king Henry, when he did to him homage, and fealtie at the Castell of Windsore (as before you have heard) turned his back to his friend and kinsman and loked to the French parte, which neuer did him honor nor profite, not onely sending into Fraunce daylie and succours, agaynst the Englishe nation, but also by newe alliaunce sought and practised wayes and meanes, how to joyne himselfe with forrein princes, to greue and hurte his neighbours and adioynaunts of the realme of Englande. And although his awne power were small, to doe them any great damage, yet he thought that he being lincked in suche noble houses, should the lesse feare the malice of his enimies: vpon which feeble foundation, he concluded two mariages, the one with Lewes the Dolphin, sonne to Charles the French king, and the other with Fraunces Duke of Britayne. Which mariages were not desired for loue or riches, but onely for ayde to resist and drive out the English men out of Fraunce. For the Lady Margaret maryed to the Dolphin, was of such nasty complexion and cuill sauored breath, that he abhorred her company, as a cleane creature doth a caryon: wherevpon she conceyued such an inwarde griefe, that within short time after, she ended her dayes. Although this Lady had such impediments (as you have heard) yet her sister Isabell, marved to Fraunces Duke of Britayne, lacked neyther exceeding bewtie, nor pleasaunt breath: but as for wyt, womanhood, and civile behavior, she never had, nor exercised. Wherefore when the Duke before his maryage, was by his counsayle admonished to refuse and forsake so innocent a creature, he more moved with her fayre face, then her womanly wisedome aunswered: that it was ynnough for a Woman to judge the difference betweene the shyrte and the doblet of her husbande, and to knowe him in the darke from another man.

For these mariages, king Iames demaunded of his commons a great subsidie or tallage, which

which was sore grudged at, and in maner denied: so that he maried them with fayre promises, and ayde and succour agaynst the Englishe men, rather then with bagges of monev, or Chestes of Plate. Thys forreyn alliaunce little profited or analysed the realme of Scotland, nor this newe amitic defended not, king Iames: for Walter Steward Erle of Athole, which pretended a tytle to the crowne, by reason that he was begotten of king Robert the second, by his first wyfe, and by whose occasion, Robert Duke of Albany, murdered David Duke of Rothsay, elder brother to thys king Iames (as in the story of king Henry the fourth, you have heard declared) after the coronation of king lames the first in Scotland, ernestly solicited him to put to death Duke Murdo, and all the ofspring of Robert first Duke of Albany, trustyng that after he had destroyed that lyne (which was a stop in his way) to inuent some meane how to destroy the king and his children, and so to obteyne the Crowne and preheminence of the Realme. Wherefore he perswaded Robert Steward his Nephew, & Robert Grame hys Cosyn, and divers other, to murther and slay the king their souereigne Lorde, which thereto by deuilish instigation incensed and procured, came to the towne of Pertho (commonly called S. Johns towne) and there entered into the kings privie chamber, and slue first divers of hys servauntes, which made resistaunce, and after kylled the king with many mortall strokes, and hurt lames king of the Quene, which in defense of her husband felled one of the Traytors. When this vn- ed in his Chamgracious deede was blowen about the towne, the people rose in great plumpes, and found ber. out the princequellers, and them brought to straight prison, which afterward (according to their deserts) were with most terrible torments put to death and executed.

After Iames the first, succeded Iames the seconde, his eldest sonne, which fearing sedicion and civile discord, vexed more his awne nation, then the Englishe people did.

Nowe leavyng Scotland, let vs returne to the businesse of Fraunce. Whiles the Scottes were compassing how to destroy their king: the Lorde Talbot with a great companie layd siege to the Castell of Tankeruile, which after foure monethes was to him simplie rendred and genen vp. This towne was no great gaine to the Englishe men: for in the The Castell of meane season the French king in his awne person besieged the strong towne of Mon-taken. streau Faultion, whereof Thomas Gerard was Captein: which more for desyre of reward, then for feare of enemies, solde the towne to the French king, and had of him great giftes, and good chere, which afterwarde was well knowen, to hys shame & reproch. This towne had bene reskued or the French king foughten withall, it one chaunce had not happened: Warwike made For the Duke of Yorke was discharged of his office of Regent, and the Erlc of Warwike Regent of preferred to the same, so that the Duke of Yorke liyng at Roan, would have gladly rescued Fraunce. the towne, if his aucthoritie had not surcessed, and the Erle could not, for the winde was so clene contrary to him, that he & his armie targed for the winde aboue ten weekes. And so between the discharge of the one, and the charge of the other, this Towne of Monstreau, was deliuered and solde.

This present yere was a Parliament kept at Westminster, in the which were divers A paaliament. notable conclusions orderned and taken, as well for the preservation of peace and concorde at home, as for the maintenance of warre, and hostilitie in outward regions: in the which Parliament, (who so will loke on the actes) shall perceyue that one act made, for biyng and sellyng by straungers, was profitable for the publike wealth of this realme, if it were well kept (as a fewe good actes or none be, eyther by the negligence of the gouer-nours, or by the insolencie and lewdnesse of the people.)

Nowe must we speake somewhat of Charles the French king: which after he had gayned againe the Citie of Paris, and diverse other townes, was so puffed vp with pride, that he thought it but a trifle to conquere Normandie, and expulse all the Englishe nacion out of his Countries and seigniories. Wherefore he sent Arthure of Britcyne Constable of Fraunce, and John Duke of Alanson, into Normandie with a great army, wanth besieged the towne of Auranches, standyng vpon the knop of an hill, nere to the Initishe sea, both well walled and well manned. While they lay there long, little gettyng and much spendyng, the Lorde Talbot with a valiaunt companie of men approched nere the French men, and encamped themselues in the face of their enemies, to prouoke and intice them to battaile and fight. The french men refusyng this offer, kept themselues within their trenches, dayly fortifiyng and repairyng their Campe. The Englishemen perceiuyng their doynges, remoued their armie halfe a Mile farther, geuyng their enemyes rowne to issue out and to fight, but all this little analyted: for the Frenchmen lay still and stirred not. The Lorde Talbot seyng their faint heartes, raysed his field, and in the open sight of them all, entred into the towne, and the next day issued out, and found the French men ridyng abroad, to destroy the plain Countrie, whom he entironed, bet, and discomfited, slayeng many, and takyng diverse prisoners.

This yere, sayth Cooper, all the Lions in the Tower of London dyed, which before had lived there a long tyme.

On the sixt day of Nouember this present yere, the Erle of Warwike as Regent of Fraunce, passed the sea, after he had bene seven times shipped and vashipped, and landed at Humflew, with a thousand freshe Souldiers, and came to Roan, and then the Duke of Yorke returned into England, neyther wholy pleased, nor half content. For he secretly smelled, that some men privily disdeyned his advancement, and envied his promocion: yet (like a wise man) he kept his tongue close, whatsoener his heart thought. Betwene the chauge of these two Capteines, the Duke of Burgoin (which sore enuied the glory of the Englishe men) besieged the Castell of Croitoy with ten thousand men and mo, hauving with him great plentie of Goonnes, and goodly ordenaunce. The Erle of Warwike heryng of this feate, sent the Lord Talbot, the Lord Fauconbridge, sir Thomas Kiriell, sir Iohn Mountgomery, Thomas Limbrike, Thomas Chandos, Dauy Hall, & divers other knightes and squiers, and many tall yomen, to the number of five thousand men, which passed the river of Some, besyde the towne of S. Valery: for the passage of Blaunche Taque was very daungerous to go through, because the Duke of Burgoyn had layd there ordinaunce, and other engines, to let, trouble, and stoppe the Englishemen to go over at that foord. And yet, where the Lorde Talbot passed, his men went in the water vp to the Chinne, so glad were the men to rescue their felowes. When the Duke of Burgoyn was informed of the approchyng of the Lord Talbot and other, he with all his power sauvng foure which were left in a Bastile, by him there newly buylded, fled to Abbeuile, which Bastile was sone gayned, and the men within eyther slain or taken.

After this towne receyued, the Lorde Talbot sent worde to the Duke of Burgoyn, that he would vtterly waste and destroy the Countrie of Picardie, except he (like a valiant Prince) would geue him battaile. And accordyng to his promise, he brent townes, spoyled, and slue many people in Picardie, but for all his doynges, the Duke would not appere, but stale away from Abbeuile, & fled to Amias. So the Lorde Talbot was. xx. dayes full in the Countries of Picardie, and Arthoyse, destroiyng and brennyng all that they could see or come to, and after departed. And in the meane season, Sir Thomas Kiricil had gotten all the Dukes cariages, and ordenaunce, and left as much vittaile in the towne of Croytoy, as would serue sixe hundreth men a whole yere, and conueyed the remnant in safetie to the Erle of Warwike, which not onely receyued the Capteynes with good semblaunce, and louyng chere, but also highly magnified their actes, and much praysed theyr hardynesse.

After this enterprise atchieued, Henry Erle of Mortaine, sonne to Edmond Duke of Sommerset, arrived at Chierburgh with foure hundreth archers, and three hundreth speares, and passed through Normandic, tyll he came into the Countie of Mayne, where he besieged a Castell, called Saint Anyan, in the which were three hundreth Scottes, besyde French men. This Castell he tooke by a strong assault, and slue all the Scottes, and hanged the Frenchmen, because they were once sworne Englishe, and after brake theyr othe: and after he gat also another Castell, two miles from Saint Iulians, called Alegerche, which was shortly after recoursed, and the Lord Cameuis which came to the rescue of the same, in the meane way was trapped and taken. Thus the victorie flowed sometyme on the one part, and sometyme on the other, but the treason of the Frenchemen farre surmounted in gettyng, both the pollecy & strength of the English Capteynes: for by the vntruth and falshode of the very Burgesses and inhabitauntes of the townes, of Meaux in Brie, and Saint Susanne, the same yere were solde and delivered to the French part in the ende of this. xvi. yere.

This yere king Henry caused a solempne obite and terrement to be kept within Paules Church of London, for Sigismond the Emperour, who also was knight of the Garter.

This yere happened many vntemperate stormes, whereof rose suche a scarcitie, that wheate was solde at three shillynges foure pence the Bushell, wine at. xij. pence the Gallon, Bay salt at. xiiij. pence the Bushell, and mault at. xiij. shillynges foure pence the quarter, and all other graynes were sold of an excessive price, above the olde custome.

In the Moneth of Iune, the Erle of Huntyngton (as Stewarde of Guyen) with two thousand Archers, and foure hundreth speares, was sent into Gascoyn, as a supplement to the Countrie, and the Comons of the same. For the king of England and his counsaile, were enformed that the Erle of Dumoys, lay on the Frontiers of Tholose, secretely by rewardes and fayre promises, entisyng and prouokyng divers townes in Guien to become french and leave the Englishe nacion. Wherefore, this Erle (like a pollitike warriour) altered not onely the Capteynes in euery towne and Citie, but also remoued the Magistrates, and chaunged the officers, from towne to towne, and from rowne to rowme, so that by this meanes at that tyme, the Erle of Dumoys lost both trauaile and In the same moneth also, Sir Richard Wooduile, Sir William Chamberlain, Sir William Peyto, and Sir William Storie, with a thousand men, were sent to stuffe the townes in Normandie, which surely at that tyme had thereof great neede: for the Englishe Captaynes had small confidence in the Normans, and not to much in some of their awne Nacion. For that harlot bribery, and her felow couetousnesse, ran so fast abroad Two shrewd with French Crownes, that vnneth any creature, (without an especiall grace) could holde companions. either hand close, or purse shut, such a strong percer is monie, and such a gredie glotton is auarice. You have heard before, howe that king Charles heart by gettyng of Paris, was set vpon a merye Pinne, and thought dayly that all thinges more and more, would both apply to his purpose, and follow his appetite. Which invented imagination, sodainly both deceyued him, and also abated his haute courage & prowde stomache. For sodainly there arose a straunge storme, and a quick pirie, so mischieuous and so pernicious, that nothing more execrable, or more to be abhorred, could happen in any christian Region. Which sedicious tempest, if wise counsaile had not with all speede repressed, no doubt, but king Charles, and the whole publike welth of Fraunce, had bene turned vp, and clene ouerthrowne. For Lewes Dolphin of Vien, and heyre apparant to I-ewes Dolphyn of Vien conking Charles, a yong Prince of a froward stomacke and euill condicions, desyryng libertie, spired against and to be out of warde and rule, with such as were of his nature and condicions, began French king beto conspire against his father, and souereigne Lord. The chiefe of this vngracious fac- yng his father. tion with him, were John Duke of Alaunson, and John Duke of Burbon. These confederates gathered together a great power, and the Dolphyn tooke vpon him, the rule and gouernaunce of the Realme ordering causes, not in his fathers name, nor by his aucthoritie, but after his awne will, affection, and phantasie. When king Charles his father, had knowlege of this vnnaturall disobedience, and insolent & prowde doyngs, he was (and no maruaile) greatly moued with this sodaine commocion: thinkyng himselfe borne, and predestinate to trouble, remembrying that it was no small thing, in his awne Countrey so many yeres, both with straungers, and with his awne Nacion, to fight and striue for rule and dignitie, but nowe to be constrayned to contend and make warre with his awne sonne, for the Crowne and Regiment of his realme and Dominion. Yet these thinges did not bring him, beyng a man of great wit and counsaile, dayly troubled and vnquieted with calamities lamities and displeasures, into vtter dispayre, or extreme wanhope: but like a pollitike prince, determining to withstand and resist the smoke at the beginning, before the fyre and flame brast out abroad, called together all such as he had eyther in great confidence, or especiall fauour, communicating to them all his inwarde thoughtes and prinie purposes. After long consultacion had, it was agreed by the most part, that this sore was more mete to be cured by polletique and wittie handlyng, rather then by force, and dent of sworde. Wherefore, letters were written, and postes were sent to every Citie and Borough, straightly prohibityng all and singuler persons, either to heere, or obey, any precept or commaundement, set forth or published by the Dolphyn himselfe, or by other, or in his name, and all offences done in that confederacie, were by open proclamacion freely forgenen and remitted. And besyde this, diverse grave and sage persons, were sent to the Dolphyn, and his alies, to common and conclude a peace, and reconciliation betweene the French king and them, declarying to them, that their civile warre, and inward dissencio, was the very meane to cause their enemies, vtterly to plague and destroy their native Country, which was almost desolate, & brought into subjection, by the continual practised war before. By which meanes and perswasions, the knot of this sedicious faction, was losed and dissolued: and the king with his sonne, and other confederates, openly agreed and apparauntly pacified. And so the spring of these mischieuous sect, was stopped and repulsed, or the flood had any thing encreased, or flowen farther.

The English men (which ever sought their advauntage) hervng of this domesticall diuision in the realme of Fraunce, raysed an army, and recourred againe divers townes. which were stollen from them before by the Frenche nacion; and made great prouision to recouer againe the Citie of Paris, but when they heard that the Dolphyn was returned againe to his father, and that all his Mates were joyned with the French king, they left of from that enterprise, and reuoked their purpose.

This yere the Conduyt in Fletestrete in London was begon to be builded by Sir William Eestfield knight, and late Maior of London, and the same was finished at his costes and charges, without any charge of the Citie, by the handes of his executors.

In the Month of Nouember this present vere, there was such a great frost, and after that so deepe a snowe, that all the ground was covered with white, and al the diches hardened and frosen, which weather put the English men in comfort to recouer againe the towne of Ponthoise, by the French king gotten before, by corrupting with money diuers Burgesses of the towne. Wherfore the Englishemen being clothed all in white, with Iohn Lorde Clifforde their Capitaine, came in the night to the diches, and passed them without daunger, by reason of the frost, and sodaynely scaled the walles, slue the watche, and tooke the towne with many profitable prisoners. When this towne was thus gotten, Lorde Richard Beauchampe Erle of Warwike and Regent of Fraunce, died in the Castell of Roan, and was conucied into England, and with solempne ceremonics was buryed in his College of Warwike, in a very solempne and sumptuous Sepulture.

Then was the Duke of Yorke agayne made Regent of Fraunce, which accompanied with the Erle of Oxforde, the Lorde Burchier, called the Erle of Ewe, Sir lames of Ormond, the Lorde Clinton, and dyuers other Noble men, sayled into Normandy: Before whose arryuall, the Frenche king beyng sore greeued with the taking of the towne of Ponthoyse, assembled a great army, and besieged the sayde towne himselfe, and made rounde about it Bastiles, Trenches, and diches, and daylie shot ordynaunce, and gaue therevuto dyners great and fierce assautes. But Iohn Lord Clifford, lyke a valyaunt Capitayne desended the towne with such valyauntnesse, that the French men rather loste then gayned. The Duke of Yorke at his landyng, having true knowledge of this siege, sent for the Lorde Talbot, and a great number of souldiours, and so came nere to the towne of Pounthoise, and there encamped himselfe, and sent worde to the French king, that he was there, readie to geue him battayle, if he would come out of his Campe and Bastiles. King Charles was ruled by his counsayle, which in no wise would suffer him to aduenture his person,

The death of the Erle of Warwike Regent of Fraunce.

Ponthoyse besieged by the French king.

with men of so lowe and base degree: bydding him to remember, what losses he and bys auncesters had susteyned, by gening to the English men battayle: which thing they principally desire, wylling him to keepe his ground still, and to bid them enter at their perill, and in the meane season, to stop the passage of the River of Oyse so that no vyttayle could be brought to the Englishe armie by that waye, by which meanes he should not onely obtaine his purpose, but also cause the Englishe men to recule back againe, for lack of vittayle and succours. The Duke of Yorke perceyuing that the French king was nothing minded to fight, determined to passe ouer the ryuer of Oyse, and so to fight with him in his lodging, wherevoon he removed his Campe, and appointed the Lord Talbot and other, to make a countenaunce as they would passe the River by force at the gate of Beaumont, and appointed another company with boates of timber and leather, and bridges made of cordes and ropes (whereof he had great plentie, caried with him in Chariottes to passe ouer the ryuer benethe the Abbay. While the Lorde Talbot made a cry as though they would assayle the gate, certaine Englishe men passed the water over in boates, and drewe the bridge oner, so that a great number were come ouer, or the Frenche men them espied. When they sawe the chaunce, they ran lyke mad men, to stop the passage, but their labour was lost, and all their paine to no purpose: for the most parte of the Englishe people were sodainely transported, in so much that they chased their enemies by fine force into the towne agayne, and tooke Sir Guilliam de Chastell, Nephew to the Lorde Canehy, and dyuers other gentlemen prisoners. The French men seyng their dammage irrecuperable, returned to the French king, accompting to hym their cuill chaunce and vulucky fortune, which therewith was not a little displeasaunt: and well perceiuyng, that if he taried the comming of the Englishe men he was like to be eyther in great leoperdy, or sure to sustayne much dishonour and great dammage. Wherefore he removed his ordinaunce into the Bastile of Saint Martyne, which he had newly made, and leavyng behinde him the Lorde of Cotigny, Admirall of Fraunce, with three thousand men to kepe the Bastiles, dislodged in the night from Maubuysson and came to Poissye: for if he had taryed still in that place, the Lorde Talbot with certaine of his trustie souldiors, which passed the riner of Oyse in two small leather boates had eyther slayne or taken him in his lodging the same night. The Englishe men the next daye in good order of battayle, came before the towne of Pounthoise, thinking there to have found the French king, but he was gone, and in his lodging they founde great ryches, and muche stuffe, which he could not have space to convey for feare of § sodaine invasion. Then the Duke of Yorke with his company entered into the towne, and sent for newe vittayle, and repayred the towres and bulwarkes about the towne, and dyners times assayled the Bastile of the French men, of the which he passed not greatly because they were not of power, eyther to assault, or stop the vittayles or succours from the towne. The Duke lyeng thus in the towne of Ponthoise, was advertised that the French king and the Dolphin with all the Nobilitie of Fraunce, were lodged in Poysye, wherefore he intendyng once agayne to offer hym battayle, left behinde him there for Capitayne, syr Geruays Clifton, with a thousand souldiours, and remoued his armie, and came before Poysye, and set hymselfe and his men in good order of battayle, readie to fight. There issued out divers gentlemen, to skirmishe with the Englishe men, but they were sone discomfited, and foure valyaant borsemen were taken prisoners, and dyuers slayne. The Englishe men perceiving the faynt hartes, and colde courage of their enemies, which nothing lesse desyred, then to encounter wyth the English nation in open field, dislodged from Poysye, and came to Mant, and sone after to Roan.

When the Regent and the Lorde Talbot, were returned agayne into Normandy, the French king (for all his euill luck) forgat not the towne of Ponthoise, and first he considered what charges he had susteyned, both during the tyme of the siege, and also in making Bastyles, trenches, and other deuises: and after remembred, that his people, and especially the Parisians (to whome this towne was an euill neighbor) would rayle and say, vol. 1.

Ponthoys agayne recourred by the French king.

that he was not able, or lacked courage to get so small a towne, or to discomfite halfe a handefull of amased people. Wherefore these things set in order, he assembled all his puyssaunce, and returned sodainely againe to Ponthoise: where he first by assault gat the Church, and after the whole towne, and tooke the Capitaine prisoner, and dyuers other Englishe men, and slue to the number of foure hundred, which deerely sold their lyfes: for one French wryter affirmeth, that the French king lost there three thousand men and mo, and the whole garrison of the Englishe men, was onely a thousand: so they gayned the towne, but they gat no great bootie of men. When the fame of thys victorie was blowen abroade, the hartes of the townes men waxed faynt, in so muche that Melune, Corbuell, Eureux, and divers other townes, yeelded and turned at a prowde crake, or a French bragge, without stroke striken, or any blowe geuen.

After these hote rages, the weather beganne to waxe more temperate, for king Henry. and king Charles were agreed to send Ambassadors to common and treate some good peace and conclusion betweene them and their realmes. So the king of Englande sent the Cardinall of Winchester, with divers other noble personages of his counsayle to Calice, with whome was also sent Charles Duke of Orleaunce, yet prisoner in Englande, to the entent that he might be both the aucthor of the peace, and procurer of his deliueraunce. The French king sent the Archebishop of Reyns, and the Erle of Dumoys: and the Duke of Burgoyne, sent the Lorde Creuecuer, and divers other, because that the Duke of Orleaunce was passed the sea with the English Ambassadors, they would meete in none other place to common but in Calice. The french Ambassadors perceyuing their mind, came to Calice, where the Duke of Orleaunce, gently receyued the Erle of Dumoys (his bastard brother) thanking him hartely for his paine taken, in gouerning his countrey, during the time of his captiuity and absence. Divers communications were had, as well for the deliveraunce of the Duke, as for a finall peace: in so much, that after much consultyng and little doing, another tyme was appointed for a newe assembly, and every parte to declare to their soueraigne, the request and desire of the other. So these Ambassadors tooke their leave and departed, and the Englishe commissioners conveyed agayne the Duke of Orleaunce into England, which had nothing then to pay hys raunsome, and yet he could not be deliuered without payment. The cause why these commissioners did not agree, was (as the French writers saye) that the Englishe men demaunded, not onely to have and possesse peaceably the two Duchies of Aquitayne and Normandy, to their kinges and princes discharged of all resort, superioritie, and souereigntie, frankely and freely, agaynst the realme of Fraunce, the kings and Gouernors of the same for euer: but also required to be restored to all the townes, Cities, and possessions, which they, within thirtie yeres next before gone and past, had conquered in the realme of Fraunce. The English men thought that they demaunded but right and reason: and the French men, thought their request to be most hurtfull to their realme, and auncient glorie. So both parties, rather minding to gayne or saue, then to lose, departed for that time (as you have heard.) After which diet proroged for a time, Philip Duke of Burgoyne, partly moued in conscience, to make some amendes and recompence to Charles Duke of Orleaunce (then being prisoner in England for the death of Duke Lewes his father whome Duke Iohn father to this Duke Philip, shamefully slue, and cruelly murdered in the Citie of Paris) as in the time of king Henry the fourth, is plainely mencioned (and partly intending the aduauncement of his niece. Ladie Marie daughter to Adolph Duke of Cleue, by the which aliaunce, he trusted surely to knit suche a firme knot, and friendly amitie with the Duke of Orleaunce, that all olde rancor should cease, and all discord should be forgotten: and in their places concord should be stablished, and perpetuall love embraced) sent messengers into England, to the sayde Duke, declarying to him his good will, deuise and entent. The which proffer he not onely accepted, but also was most ioyfull thereof. And as some wryters affirme, the sayde Duke of Burgoyne payde for his raunsome and delyueraunce foure hundred thousand crownes, but other say three. C. M. and so he was deliuered out of Englande

The delyuerye of the Duke of Orleaunce, who had bene long prisoner in Engand. into Fraunce at that time, both speaking better Englishe then French, and also swearing, neuer to beare armor agaynst the king of England. After his arrivall in Fraunce, he came to the Duke of Burgoyne his speciall friend, gratifying and thankyng him of his libertic and deliueraunce: and according to his promise and convention, he maryed the fayre Lady Mary in the towne of S. Omers, on whome he begat a sonne, which after was French king, and called Lewes the. xij. After his deliueraunce from captivity he forgat not hys Vncle Iohn Erle of Angolesme, which had bene as a pledge in Englande for the debt of Duke Lewes of Orleaunce his father, sithe the last yere of king Henry the fourth (as in his storie is declared): but made friends, borowed money, and morgaged land, and so set him at libertie, and brought him into his Countrey: This Iohn engendered Charles, father to Fraunces, the first of that name, which after the death of Lewes the. xij. obteyned the crowne of Fraunce.

Here is to be noted, that olde rancor newely appeased, will commonly spring out agayne: for although the vnhappie division, betwene the two noble families of Orleaunce and Burgoyne, were by this great benefite and mariage for a time genen over and put in oblivion, and so continued by the space of twentie yeres and more, yet their children and Cosyns, within fewe yeres after, fell so farre at square, that the house of Burgoyne was spoyled of the fayrest flower of his garlande, as you shall here afterwarde at large declared, and in especiall in the time of king Fraunces the first, the very heire of the house of Orleaunce, which not onely continually vexed with mortall warre, Charles the fift, Emperor of that name, lineall successour to Philip Duke of Burgoyne: but also did as much as in him lay, to deprive the sayde Charles of his honor and possessions (as men wryting their lyues,

In the beginning of this. xix. yere, Richard Duke of Yorke Regent of Fraunce, and gouernor of Normandie, remembryng the great charge, and waightie office to him deliuered and committed, determined (after long consultacion) to invade the territories of his enemies, both by sundrie armies, and in divers places, to the entent that the French people being vexed within their awne Countrie and peculiar Dominion, should make no rodes nor enterynges into the Duchie of Normandie, the returnyng whereof, was somewhat This deuise for that season, semed both profitable and necessarie, wherefore, without long delaying of time, he sent Robert Lorde Willoughby, with a great crue of souldiers, to inuade and destroy the Countrie about Amias, and John Lorde Talbot, was appoynted to besiege the towne of Depe, and he himselfe, accompanied with Edmond Duke of Sommerset, set forward into the Duchie of Aniow. The Lorde Willoughby, accordyng to his commission, entred into the Countrie to him appoynted, and to the entent that his trauaile should not be espyed nor knowen, he straightly forbad and inhibited all maner of fire and burnyng of townes, which is the most open and plaine token of warre and invasion. By reason whereof the poore paysantes and rusticall people goyng abroade without feare or suspicion of euill, were ouerronne or taken with the horsemen, or they could attain to any towne, or forcelet: so that innumerable people were slaine, and taken, or they heard any tidynges of their enemies approchyng. The French men in the garrisons adioynyng, astonicd at the clamor and crie of the poore people, issued out in good order, and manfully set on their enemies. The fight was sore, and the victorie long and doubtfull: But in conclusion, the French men seeying their people in the forefront of the battaile, to be killed without mercie, like men desperate turned their backes and fearefully fled, the Englishe men folowed, and slue many in the chase, and such as escaped the sworde were robbed and spoyled, by Lewes Erle of Saint Paule, which was commyng to ayde the Englishe nacion. In this conflict were slaine, aboue sixe hundred men of armes, and a greater number taken: so the Lord Willoughby, like a victorious Captein, with riche spoyle and good prisoners, returned againe to the Citie of Roan. The Dukes of Yorke and Sommerset, lykewise entered into the Duchie of Aniow, and Countie of Mayne, destroiyng townes, spoiling the people, and with great pray and profite, repayred again into 4 K 2 Normandie.

Normandie. The Duke of Sommerset, not filled with this gayne, entered into the Marches of Briteyn, and tooke by a fierce assault, the towne of Gerche, apperteining to the Duke of Alaunson, and spoyled and brent the same, and after that, departed to Ponzay, where he soiourned two monethes, from whence he sent daily men of warre, which destroyed and wasted the Countreys of Aniow, Traonnoys and Chatragonnoyes.

The French king in all hast, sent the Marshall of Loyache, with foure thousand men, to resist the inuasions of the Duke of Sömerset, which Capteyne determined to set on the Duke and his people, in the dead tyme of the night. This enterprice was not so secrete, but it was reueled to the Duke, which marched forwarde, and met the French men halfe way, and after long fight, by fine force they were manfully discomfited, and they slue a hundreth personnes and mo, and tooke captiues. lxij. whereof the chiefe were the Lord Dausigny, Sir Lewes de Buell, and all the other almost, were Knightes and Esquiers. After this encounter, the Duke tooke the Towne of Beamot le Vicount, and manned al the fortresses on the frontiers of his enemies, and with riche bootyes, and welthie captiues came againe to the Duke of Yorke.

Duryng these fortunate chaunces and victories, the Lorde Talbot also, the vnweried Chieftain and manly warriour, enuironed the towne of Depe, with depe trenches, and great mountaynes, and did set vp vpon the Mount de Poulet, a strong and defensible Bastile, at which tyme was Capteyne of the same towne, Charles de Maretz, a man of more force in battaile, then polletike in defence of a siege: for the Englishemen beyng a small number, had to them delivered with fayre wordes, and faint strokes, the Castell of Charlemesnyll, and diverse other fortresses adioynyng to the towne. Duryng the siege, many encounters were had, and many great assaultes geuen, the Englishemen sometime saued, and sometime gayned, but the most losse lighted on the Frenchmen for a while. But of three Capteynes sent forth at one tyme (as you before haue heard) all cannot returne with egall honour, and euen botie. For the Lord Talbot perceiuyng the Towne of Depe, to be strongly defended, both with men, vitaile, and ordinaunce, and that he lacked all the sayde furnitures for the accomplishing of his stout enterprice, deliuered the custodie of the Bastile, with the gouernaunce of the siege, to his Bastard sonne, a valeaunt yong man, and departed to Roan, for ayde, money, and municions. The French king, was quickly aduertised of the Lord Talbots absence, and of the estate of the Englishe men: wherefore without delay, he meanyng not to lose so great a pray, sent his eldest sonne Lewes Dolphyn of Vien accompanied with the Bastard of Orleaunce, called the Erle of Dumoys, and diverse other nobles of Fraunce, to the number of xv. thousand persons, well armed, & no lesse garnished with all thinges necessary for theyr purpose. Three dayes they assayled the Bastile, and so many times they were put back, but poulder fayled in the fortresse, and weapon wherewith to defend, was very scant, so that in conclusion, the Englishe men were vanquished, and the Bastile taken, and in it the Bastard Talbot, Sir William Peytow, and Sir Iohn Repeley, which were shortly after redemed: The other English souldiers seyng the Bastile gayned, stood all day in good order of battaile, and in the night polletikely returned to Roan, without losse or dammage. At this assault, the French men say, that they slue two hundreth Englishemen, and denie not, but they lost fiue hundreth persons, and by this meanes, the one nacion lost the Bastile, and the other saued the towne, to the great displeasure of the Lorde Talbot.

While these thinges were a doyng, Phillip Duke of Burgoyn, hauyng an enuious heart, at the glory and fortunate successe of the Englishe people, intendyng to bereue them of one of their assured friendes, called Lewes of Luxenborough Erle of Saint Paule, made sharpe warre vpon his Countreyes, and tooke divers townes and fortresses from him, so that in conclusion more for feare, then for love, he vtterly refused his fayth and promise, made to the Duke of Bedford his brother in lawe, and turned to the Frenche part, and became a luke warme enemy to the realme of England. little good, yet he of malice should do to them no great hurt or damage.

The Englishe Capteynes beyng in Guyen, hauvng knowledge of the valeaunt doynges of their Countrimen in the realme of Fraunce, determined to do some notable and noble enterprice on the French coastes adioining to Aquitain; and so they besieged the strong towne of Tartas, belonging to the Lorde Delabreth, their olde and auncient enemie. The Capteynes and gouernours of the towne considering their weakenesse, and the force of the Englishe men, tooke this appropriment with the Englishe Capteynes, that the towne should remaine neuter, and for y assuraunce thereof, they deliuered Cadet the sonne of the Lorde Delabreth in pledge, vpon this condicion: that if the Lord Delabreth would not assent to their agreement, then he should signifie his refusall, to the Englishe Capteynes, within three monethes next ensuying: and he to have his pledge, and they to do their best. The Frenche king, at the request of the Lordes of Guyen, which were not able to defende themselves, toke this matter in hande, and caused the Lord Delabreth to certifie his disagrement to the Erle of Huntingdon, Lieuetenant for the king of England, in the Duchie of Aquitaine. And to please the great Lordes of Guien, he assembled. lx. thousand men, and came to Tholose, and so to Tartas: to whom the Chieftaynes of the towne, seyng no succours commyng, rendered the towne, and Cadet Delabreth, which was left there as a pledge, was deliuered, the French king after the yeldyng of Tartas, removed to S. Seuere, a strong towne in Gascoyn, but smally peopled with men of warre, which he toke by force, and slue three hundreth persons, and toke Sir Thomas Rampstone prisoner. After this towne gayned, he with all his power besieged the Citie of Arques, and toke the Bulwarke of the same, which was smally defended, and sone gotten. The inhabitauntes of the towne, began sore to be afrayed, and came to the Lorde Mountferrand, Capteine for the king of Englande, requiryng him to haue mercie vpon them, and to render the towne to the French king, vpon some honest couenaunt or composition. The Capteyne perceiving the faint heartes of the Gascoynes, and knowing that without their ayde, he was not able to resist the puissaunce of the Frenche king, toke an agreement, and departed with all the Englishe crue to Burdeaux, where he found the Erle of Longuile, Capdaw of Bueffe, and Sir Thomas Rampston, which was a little before delivered.

After this, the fortresses of Rioll and Mermandie, yelded them to the French king. Although these townes thus submitted them to him, yet he had them not long, nor made much tariyng in the Duchie of Guien, for the Englishe men not onely prohibited the Gascoynes to minister to his armie vitaile, and sustenaunce, but also gat into their handes, and toke such vitailes as were conveyed to him from Tholose and Poyters: So that in maner constrayned with famine and lacke of provision, he retired his armie againe into Fraunce. After whose departure, the English Captaines recovered again the Citie of Arques, and the other townes by the Frenche king gayned, and tooke prisoner his Lieutenant, called Reignault Guillam the Burgonyon, and many other Gentlemen, and all the meane Souldiours, were eyther slayne or hanged.

While the Frenche king was in Guien, the Lorde Talbot tooke the towne of Couchete, and after marched towarde Gayllardon, which was besieged by the Bastard of Orleaunce Erle of Dumoys: which Erle heeryng of the English mens approchyng, raysed his siege and saued himselfe. A little before this enterprice, the French men had taken the towne of Eureux, by treason of a fisher. Sir Fraunces Arragonoys heeryng of that chaunce, apparelled sixe strong men, like rusticall people with sackes and baskets, as cariers of corne and vitaile, and sent them to the Castell of Cornill, in the which divers English men were kept as prisoners: and he with an imbushment of Englishe men lay in a Valey nie to the fortresse. These sixe Companions entered into the Castell, vususpected and not mistrusted, and straight came to the Chamber of the Capteyne, and layde handes vpon him, genyng knowlege thereof to their imbushement, which sodainly entered the Castell, and slue and toke all the French men prisoners, and set at libertie al the Englishe men, which thing done, they set the Castell on fire, and departed with great spoyle to the Citie of Roan. Thus the Ladie victorie, sometime smiled on the Englishe part, and sometime on the French syde. Thus one gayned this day, and lost on the next. Thus fortune chaunged, and thus chaunce hapned, according to the olde prouerbe, saiyng: in warre is nothing certaine, and victorie is euer doubtfull.

A new variance betwene the Duke of Gloueester, and the Byshop of Winchester.

Nowe let vs leaue the Marciall feates, practised betwene the Englishe and French Nacion, in the Region of Fraunce, and speake a little of a smoke that rose in England, which after grew to a great fire and terrible flame, to the destruction of many a noble man. You have heard before, howe the Duke of Gloucester sore grudged at the prowde doynges of the Cardinall of Winchester, and howe the Cardinall likewise, sore enuied and disdayned at the rule of the Duke of Gloucester, and howe by the meanes of the Duke of Bedford, their malice was appeased, & eche was reconciled to other, in perfit loue & amitie, to al mens outward iudgements. After which concorde made, the Cardinall and the Archebishop of Yorke did many things without the consent of the king or the Duke, beyng (duryng the minoritie of the prince) gouernor and protector of the realme, wherewith the Duke (like a true harted prince) was neyther content nor pleased: and so declared in writyng to the king, certein articles, wherein the Cardinall and the Archebishop had offended, which articles were here to long to reherse, and specially for that they were neyther regarded nor tooke any effect.

When the king had read the articles, he committed the hering thereof to his counsayle. whereof the most parte were spirituall persons, so what for feare, and what for fauour the matter was winked at, and dalved out, and nothing sayde to it: & fayre countenaunce was made to the Duke, as though no displeasure had bene taken, nor no malice borne eyther in heart or in remembraunce agaynst him. But venime will once breake out, and inwarde grudge will sone appere, which was this yere to all men apparaunt; for divers secret attempts were advanced forward this season, agaynst the noble Duke Humfrey of Gloucester, a farre of, which in conclusion came so nere, that they bereft him both of lyfe and lande, as you shall hereafter more manyfestly perceyue. For first this yere, dame Elyanour Cobham, wyfe to the sayde Duke, was accused of treason, for that she by sorcerie and enchaunment, entended to destroy the king, to the entent to advaunce and promote her husbande to the crowne: vpon thys she was examined in Saint Stephens Chapell, before the Bishop of Canterbury, and there by examination conuict and judged to doe open penaunce, in three open places, within the Citie of London, and after that adjudged to perpetuall prison in the Isle of Man, vnder the keeping of Sir Iohn Stanley knight. At the same season were arrested as ayders and counsaylers to the sayde Duches. Thomas Southwell priest, and Chanon of saint Stephens in Westminster, John Hum priest, Roger Bolyngbroke, a cunning Nicromancier, and Margery Iourdayne, surnamed the Witch of Eye, to whose charge it was layde, that they at the request of the Duches, had devised an Image of waxe, representing the king, which by their sorcery, a little and little consumed, entendyng thereby in conclusion to wast, and destroy the kings person, and so to bring him to death, for the which treason, they were adjudged to dye, and so Margery Iordayne was brent in Smithfield, and Roger Bolyngbroke was drawen and quartered at Tyborne, taking vpon his death, that there was neuer any such thing by them imagined, Iohn Hum had his pardo, and Southwell died in the towre before execution: the Duke of Gloucester toke all things paciently, and sayde little. The counsayle of England, forgat not the late enterprise of the french king, done in sarie and convenient. About this season, the king remembring the valiaunt service, and noble actes of John Lorde Talbot, created him Erle of Shrewsburie, and with a com-John Lorde pany of three thousand men, sent him agayne into Normandie, for the better tuicion of Erle of Shrewsthe same, which neyther forgat his duetie, nor forslowed his businesse, but dayly labored bury.

In thys yere dyed in Guyen, the Countesse of Comyng, to whome the French king, and also the Erle of Arminake pretended to be heire, in so much that the Erle entered into all the landes of the sayde Lady, as very inheritour to her of right, and toke homage of the people of the countrey. But to have a Rowlande to resist an Oliver: he sent solempne Ambassadors to the king of England, offering him his daughter in mariage, not onely promising him siluer hilles, and golden Mountaynes with her, but also would be bound to delyuer into the King of Englands hands, all such Castels and townes, as he or his auncestors, deteyned from him, within the whole Duchy of Acquitayn or Guyen, eyther by conquest of his progenitors, or by gift or deliuery of any French king: offering farther to ayde the same king with money, for the recovery of other Cities, within the sayde Duchye, from him and his auncesters, by the French kings progenitors, the Lorde de Albreth, and other Lordes of Gascoyne, vniustly kept and wrongfully withholden. Thys offer seemed both profitable, and honorable to King Henry and his realme, and so the Ambassadors, were both well heard, and louingly entertayned, and in conclusion, with a gentle aunswere (not without great rewardes) they departed into their countrey: after whome were sent for the conclusion of the sayde mariage into Guyen, Sir Edward Hulle, Syr Robert Roos, and doctor Iohn Grafton Deane of Saint Seuerines with an honorable company, which (as all Englishe Cronographiers affirme) both concluded the mariage, & by proxie affied the yong Lady. The French King was not ignorant of all these conclusions, wherefore he disdeyning that the Erle of Arminack, should both vsurpe agaynst him the Countie of Coming, and also ioyne himselfe with his mortall enemie the king of England: To recouer his right, and to punishe his rebell, he sent Lewes his eldest sonne Dolphyn of Vyen, into Couergne with a puissaunt army, which sodainely tooke the Erle of Arminack at the Isle in Iordayne, and his yongest sonne, and both his daughters, and by force obteyned the Countries of Arminack, Lonuergne, Rouergne and Moullesson, beside the Cities of Seuerac and Cadenac, and chased the Bastard of Arminack out of his Countrey, and constituted governour of all those seigniories, Sir Theobald de Walpergne, Bailif of Lyon. So by reason of this infortunate chaunce, the mariage concluded was differred, yea, and so long differred, that it neuer tooke effect, as you shall heare more playnely declared.

This yere the Steple of Paules Church in London, was set on fyre by lightning, and lastly quenched by the great labour of many.

Thus while England was vnquieted, and Fraunce sore vexed, by spoile slaughter and burning, all christendome lamented the continuall destruction of so noble a realme, and the effusion of so much christian bloud, wherfore to appease the mortall warre, so long continuyng betwene these two puyssaunt kings, all the princes of christendome so much labored and trauayled, by their Orators and Ambassadors, that the frostie hartes of both the parties were somewhat mollified, and their indurate stomacks greatly asswaged. there was a great diet appointed, to be kept at the Citie of Tours in Tourayne, where for the king of England appered, William de la Pole Erle of Suffolke, Doctor Adame Molyns, keeper of the kings privie seale, and Robert Lorde Roos, and divers other: And for the French king were appointed, Charles Duke of Orleaunce, Lewes de Burbon Erle of Vandosme, and great Master of the French kings houshold, Sir Piers de Bresell Stewarde of Poytou, and Bartram Beauriau, Lorde of Pricignye. There were also sent thether, Ambassadors from the Empire, from Spaine from Denmarke, and from Hungary, to be Mediators between these two princes. The assemble was great, but the cost was much greater, in so much that euery parte for the honor of their prince, and praise praise of their countrie, set forth themselves, as well in fare, as apparell, to the vttermost point and highest prick. Many meetings were had, and many things moved to come to a finall peace, and mutuall concorde. But in conclusion, for many doubtes and great ambiguities, which rose on both parties, a finall concord could not be agreed, but in hope to come to a peace, a certaine truce as well by sea as by lande was concluded by the commissioners for xviii, monethes, which afterwarde agayne was prolonged to the yere of oure Lorde, 1449, if in the meane season it had not beene violated and broken, as hereafter shall be declared.

In the treating of thys truce, the Erle of Suffolke, extending his commission to the vttermost, without assent of his associates, imagened in hys phantasie, that the next way to come to a perfite peace, was to mooue some mariage between the French kings kinswoman, and king Henry his souereigne: and because the French king had no daughter of ripe age, to be coupled in matrimonie with the king his master, he desired to have the Ladye Margaret, Cosyn to the French king, and daughter to Reyner Duke of Anjow, callying himselfe King of Sicile, Naples, and Ierusalem, having onely the name and style of the same, without any peny profite, or foote of possession. This mariage was made straunge to the Erle a good space, in so much that he repented him of the first motion, but yet lyke a bolde man, entending not take a foyle in so great a matter, ceassed not still daylie to sollicite and advaunce forward his cause. The wily french men perceyuing the ardent affection of the Erle, towarde the conclusion of the mariage, declared to him that this mariage was not like to come to conclusion, as he desired, because the king his Master, occupied a great parte of the Duchie of Aniow, and the Citie of Mauns, and the whole Countey of Mayne, apperteyning (as they sayde) to king Reyner, father to the

The Erle of Suffolke (I can not say) eyther corrupted with bribes, or to much affectionate to this vnprofitable mariage, condiscended and agreed to their mocion, that the Duchie of Aniow, and the Countie of Mayne, should be released and deliuered to the king her father, demaunding for her mariage neyther penny nor farthing (as who would say) that this newe affinitie excelled ryches, and surmounted Golde and precious stone. And to the entent that of this truce, might ensue a finall concord, a day of enterviewe or meeting was appointed betwene the two kinges, in a place convenient, betwene Charters and Roan. When these things were concluded, the Erle of Suffolke with his company, thinking to have brought joyfull tydinges, to the whole realme of England, departed from Toures, and so by long iorneys arrived at Douer, and came to the king at Westminster, and there openly before the King and his counsayle, declared how he had taken an honorable truce, for the safegarde of Normandy, and the wealth of the realme, out of which truce, he thought, yea, and doubted not, but a perpetuall peace, and a finall concorde should shortly proceede and growe out. And much the sooner, for that honourable mariage, that inuincible alliaunce, that godly affinitie, which he had concluded: omittyng nothing, which might extoll and set forth the personage of the Ladie, not forgetting any thing of the nobilitie of her kinne, nor of her fathers high stile: as who would say, that she was of suche an excellent bewtie, and of so high a parentage, that almost no king or Emperour was worthie to be her make. Although this mariage pleased well the king, and dyuers of his counsayle, and especially such as were adherents, and fautors to the Erle of Suffolke, yet Humfrey Duke of Gloucester, Protector of the realme, repugned and resisted as muche as in him lay, this newe alliaunce and contriued matrimonie: alleging that it was neyther consonant to the lawe of God nor man, nor honorable to a prince, to infringe and breake a promise or contract, by him made and concluded, for the vtilitie and profite of his realme and people, declaring that the King by his Ambassadors sufficiently instructed and authorised, had concluded and contracted a mariage between his highnes, and the daughter of the Erle of Arminack, vpon conditions both to him and his realme, as much profitable as honorable. Which offers and conditions, the sayde Erle sithe his comming comming out of his captiuitie & thraldome is redy to yelde and performe, saiying: that it was more conuenient for a Prince, to mary a wyfe with ryches and friends, then to take a make with nothing, and disherite himselfe and hys realme of olde rightes and auncient seigniories. The Duke was not heard, but the Erles doings were condiscended vnto & allowed. Which fact engendered such a flame, that it neuer went out, till bothe the parties with many other were consumed and slayne, to the great vnquietnesse of the king And for the performance of these conclusions, the French king sent and his realme. the Erle of Vandosme, great master of his house, and the Archebyshop of Reyns, the first peere of Fraunce, and dyuers other into England, which were joyously received, and friendly enterteyned. Which Ambassadors, after instruments on both parties, sealed and delivered (not vnrewarded) returned into their Countrie. When these things were thus done, the king both for the honour of his Realme, and to assure to himselfe more speciall friendes, he created Lorde Iohn Holland Erle of Huntyngdon, Duke of Excester, as his father was, and Humfrey Erle of Stafford, was made Duke of Buckingham, and Henry Erle of Warwike, was erected to the tytle of Duke of Warwike, and the Erle of Suffolke, made Marques of Suffolke, which Marques with his wife, and many honorable personages of men and women richely adorned, both with apparell and Iewels, having with them many costly Chariots, and gorgeous horselitters, sayled into Fraunce, for the conveyaunce of the nominated Quene, into the realme of England. For king Reyner her father, for all his long stile, had to short a pursse, to send his daughter honorably to the king her spouse.

This noble company came to the Citie of Toures in Tourayne, where they were honorably receyued, both of the French king, and of the king of Sicile. Where the Marques of Suffolke, as procurator to king Henry, espoused the sayde Lady, in the Church of saint Martins. At which mariage were present, the father and mother of the bride, the French king himselfe, which was Vncle to the husbande, and the French Quene also, which was Awnte to the wyfe. There were also the Dukes of Orleaunce, of Calaber, of Alaunson, and of Britayne, seauen Erles. xij. Barons. xx. So that after these high solempnities finished, and these honorable ceremonies ended, the Marques had the Lady Margaret to him delyuered, which in great estate, he conueyed through Normandy to Deepe, and so transported her into Englande, where she landed at Portesmouth, in the Moneth This woman excelled all other, as well in beautie and fauour, as in wyt and pollicie, and was of stomacke and courage, more lyke to a man, then a woman. land, and that for many causes. First the king had with her not one pennie, and for the fetchyng of her, the Marques of Suffolke demaunded a whole fiftene in open Parliament: also for her mariage, the Duchie of Aniow, the Citie of Mauns, and the whole Countie of Mayne, were deliuered and released to king Reyner her father, which Countries were the very stayes, and backestandes to the Duchie of Normandie. Furthermore for this ma-riage, the Erle of Arminacke tooke such great displeasure, that he became vtter enemie to the realme of England, and was the chiefe cause, that the Englishmen were expulsed out of the whole Duchie of Aquitain, and lost both the Countries of Gascoyne and Guyen. But most of all it should seme, that God with this matrimonie was not content.

This mariage seemed to many, both infortunate and vnprofitable to the realme of Eng-

The Duke of Somerset made Regent of Fraunce. And nowe to consult for some good order to be taken for Fraunce, the king called his high Court of Parliament, in the which aboue all thinges, it was concluded, diligently to foresee, that Normandie should be well furnished and strongly defended, before the terme of the truce should be expired: for it was openly knowen, that the French king was redie in all thinges, to make open warre, if no peace or abstinence of warre, were agreed or concluded. For which consideracion, money was graunted, men were appoynted, and a great armie gathered together, and the Duke of Sommerset was appoynted Regent of Normandie, and the Duke of Yorke thereof discharged. In which Parliament, to please the people withal, it was enacted, that when wheate was solde for six shillynges, viij. pence the quarter, and Rie for foure shillynges, and Barlie for three shillynges, it should be lawfull to every man to cary the sayde kindes of corne into the parties beyond the Sea, without licence, so it were not to the kings enemies or rebelles: which Act king Edwarde the fourth for the vtilitie of his people, approved and confirmed.

The Marques of Suffolk is highly fauoured of the Queene.

The Marques of Suffolke, beyng in high fauous with the king, and in no lesse grace with Queene Margaret, for concluding the marvage between them two, somewhat infected with the seede of vainglorie, and thinking that his proceedynges and doynges in Fraunce (duryng the tyme of his legacion) had as well pleased all men, as they pleased himselfe, the seconde day of Iune, in the first session of this Parliament, before all the Lordes spirituall, and temporall, in the higher house assembled, openly, eloquently, and boldely, declared his paine trauaile and diligence, which he had taken and susteyned of late tyme, in the realine of Fraunce, as well for the takyng and concludyng a truce or abstinence of warre, betwene the realmes of England and Fraunce, as in making of the mariage between the king his souereigne Lorde and theirs, and the noble Princes Ladie Margaret, daughter to the king of Sicile and Hierusalem: Openyng also to them, that the sayde truce should expire the first day of Aprill next commyng, except a finall peace or a further truce were concluded in the meane season; aduising them to provide and foresee all thinges necessary for the warre (as though no concord should succeede, nor agreement could take place) least the French men perceiving them upprovided, would take their advantage, and agree neyther to reason nor amitie: saiying vinto them, that sithe he had admonished the king, & them, according to his dutie and allegeaunce, if any thing quayled, or if daunger ensued, he was thereof innocent and guiltlesse, and had acquited himselfe like a longing subject, and a faythfull counsaylor, praising the Lordes to have it in remembraunce. Likewise the morowe after, he with certeyne Lordes, discended into the common house, where he declared agayn all the sayd matters, to the Knightes, Citizens, and Burgesses, omittyng nothing that might soud to his glorie, nor opening any thing which might redound to his disprayse: praiving the Commons for his discharge, that aswell all his doyngs and procedynges in the kinges affayres beyonde the Sea, as also his advertisement and counsaile, opened to the Lordes and commons now together assembled, might be by the king and them, enacted and enrolled in the Recordes of the Parliament: Wherevoon the morowe after, William Burley, speaker for the Commons, and all the companie of the neyther house, repayred to the kinges presence, sittyng in his throne, amongest his Lordes in the Parliament Chamber, where the sayde William Burley, by the counsaile of the Commons (whether they did it more for feare then for loue, or were therevnto entised by the Marques friendes, as some men doubted) most humblic commended to the kinges highnesse, the foresayd Marques of Suffolke, and all his actes and notable workes, which he had done, to the pleasure of almightic God, the honour of the king, and the vtilitie of the Realme: as in takyng the truce, concluding the mariage, and the good admonicion geuen by him in open Parliament, for provision of warre to be made, duryng the time of truce, least to much trusting of peace, might encourage the Frenche men, the sooner to begin warre and invasion: beseching the kinges highnesse, in the name of the Commons, to imprint in his heart and remembraunce the sayd Marques, and his labors and actes, to his honour and renoume, which should be an example to all other, which the king should call to like service, to employ themselves in like endeuor, faythfully and honourably to serue their king and souereigne Lorde: praiying also the Lordes spiritual and temporal, that they for the considerations before rehersed, woulde vouchsafe to make like peticion to the kinges Maiestie, and that all the actes and demeanor of the sayde Marques, might by aucthoritie of Parliament, be to his honour, and perpetuall fame, in the rolles of the same Parliament, recorded and substancially regestred.

At which humble intercession, the Lords, as well spiritual as temporal, rose from their seates, and on their knees made to the king like request and peticion, as they of the commons before were desired: wherevoon the king by the mouth of the Archebishop of Cauntorbury his Chauncelor, made aunswere, that their requestes were so reasonable and so honourable, that he in no wise could but louyngly accept, & gently allowe the same, saiying also: that their desyres were to him a singuler pleasure, and an especiall comfort, and that he would from thenceforth accept and take the sayd Marques to his benigne grace, and especiall fauour, as a person which hath done both true, faythfull, and notable seruice to him and to his Realme, to the entent that all men put in like trust, should enforce themselues to do like or better seruice to their souereigne Lorde or Mayster: agreeyng also (according to their requestes and peticions) that the labors, demeanors, diligences. and declaracions of the sayd Marques of Suffolke, and the sayd commendacions and desyres, not onely of the Lordes, but also of the Commons, aswell for the honour of him and his posteritie, as for his acquitall and discharge, should be enacted and enrolled in the Recordes of the same Parliament, which was so done. This Marques thus gotten vp into fortunes trone, not content with his degree, by the meanes of the Queene was The Marques of Suffolke mode shortly erected to the estate and degree of a Duke, & ruled the king at his plea- Duke of Suffolk. sure, in somuch that he obteyned the wardeshippes, both of body and landes of the Countesse of Warwike, and of the Ladie Margaret sole heyre to Iohn Duke of Sommerset (which Ladie was after mother to king Henry the seventh) and besyde that, caused the king to create Iohn de Foys, sonne to Gaston de Foys, Erle of Longuile, and Capdawe of Bueffe, Erle of Kendale: which Iohn had maried his niece, and by his procurement, the king elected into the order of the Garter, the sayd Gaston, and Iohn his sonne, genyng to the sonne, towardes the maintenaunce of his degre and estate, landes and Castelles in the Duchy of Guien, amounting to the somme of one thousande poundes by the vere, which landes, name and stile, the issue and line of the sayd Erle of Kendall at this day haue, and enioy.

Here a man may beholde, what securitie is in worldly glory, and what constancie is in fortunes smylyng: for this Duke of Suffolke, in open Parliament of the Lords praised, of the commons thanked, and into the kings fauour entierly received, within foure yeres after, was in the same place, by the commons of the Realme accused of many treasons, misprisions, and offences, done and committed agaynst the king, and the common welth of his realme, and in conclusion, beyng exiled the realme, he was taken vpon the Sea, and made shorter by the head, which chaunce had not happened to him, if he had remembred the counsaile of the Popyngay, saiyng: when thou thinkest thy selfe in Court

There thinges beyng in doyng, the French king seyng that the towne of Mauns, and diners fortresses in Mayne, were not to him deliuered, according to the appointment 4 L 2 made, gathered together a great number of people, for to recour the same; whereof the king of England beyng advertised (least the breche of truce should begin by him) caused the towne to be deliuered, without any force.

A combat betwene a Master

and his seruauat.

This yere an Armorers seruaunt of London, appeled his Master of treason, which offered to be tried by battaile. At the day assigned, the frends of the master, brought him Malmesye and Aqua vite, to comforte him with all, but it was the cause of his and their discomfort: for he poured in so much, that when he came into the place in Smithfelde, where he should fight, both his witte and strength fayled him: and so hee being a tall and hardie personage, ouerladed with hote drinkes, was vanquished of his seruaunt, being but a cowarde and a wretch, whose body was drawen to Tiborne, and there hanged and behedded.

An insurrection in Norwiche.

In which yere was a great insurrection in Norwiche, against the Prior of the place, in so much that the Citezens kept the gates, against the Duke of Norfolke, which came thether to appease the matter: but in conclusion, they opened the gates, and submitted themselves. The chiefe offenders, were (according to their desertes) straightly punished, and executed, and the Maior was discharged of his office, and sir Iohn Clifton was made gouernoure there, till the King had restored the Citezens to their auncient lyberties. and franchises. This commocion was for certaine newe exactions, which the Prior claymed and toke of the Citezens, contrarie to their auncient freedoms and vsages; but this was not the dewe meane to come to their right and purpose, and therefore because they erred and went out of the path, they were by punishment brought againe to a very straight trade, and the right way.

This yeere Symon Eyre Alderman of London, whoe also had beene Maior of the same, builded at his owne costs and charges, the Leaden hall, in the saide Citie, and a faire Chapell joyning to the same, chefely to have the same made a store house in Sommer, for Wood and Cole to be bought, and there layd vp, and in the winter to be solde vnto the poore people at a reasonable rate, without gaine, the stocke beyng saued, and he left in stocke there one thousand pounde, which afterward was borowed by King Edward the fourth, and neuer payd againe (as it is said) and so that prouision decayed.

A description of king Henry the sixt.

The description of the wife of king Henry.

During the time of this truce or abstinence of warre, while there was nothing to vexe or trouble the mindes of men within the Realme, a sodayne mischiefe, and a long discorde, sprange out, by the meanes of a woman: for king Henry, which raigned at this tyme, was a man of a meeke spirite, and of a simple witte, preferring peace before warre, rest before businesse, honestie before profite, and quietnesse before laboure. And to the intent, that all men might perceive, that there coulde be none, more chaste, more meeke, more holve, nor a better creature: In him raigned shamefastnesse, modesty, integritie, and pacience to be maruayled at, taking and suffering all losses, chaunces, displeasures, and such worldly tormentes, in good parte, and with a pacient maner, as though they had chaunced by his owne faulte, or negligent ouersight: and he was gouerned of them whome he shoulde have ruled: and brideled of such, whom he sharpely shoulde have spurred: He gaped not for honor, nor thristed for riches, but studied onelye for the health of hys soule: the sauing whereof, he esteemed to be the greatest wisedome, and the loss thereof, the extremest folie that coulde be. But on the other parte, the Queene his wife was a woman of a great witte, and yet of no greater wit, then of haute stomacke, desirous of glory, and couetous of honor, and of reason, pollicye, counsaill, and other giftes, and talentes of nature, she lacked nothing, nor of diligence, studie, and businesse, she was not vnexpert: but yet she had one pointe of a very woman: for often times, when she was vehement & fully bent in a matter, she was sodainly like to a wethercock, mutable and turning. This woman perceyuing that her husbande did not frankely rule as he would, but did all thing by the aduise and counsayle of Humfrey Duke of Gloucester, and that he passed not much on the aucthoritie and gouernaunce of the realme, determined with her selfe, to take vppon her the rule and regiment, both of the king and his kingdome, and to deprive and and remove out of all rule and aucthoritie the sayde Duke, then called the Lord Protectour of the realme: least men should say and report, that she had neyther wyt nor stomack, which would permit and suffer her husband, being of perfite age and mans estate, like a yong Scholer or innocent Pupile, to be gouerned by the disposition of an other man.

This manly woman, this courageous Queene, ceased not to prosecute forthwith, her invented imagination and purpose, and practised daylie the furtheraunce of the same. And although this invention came first of her awne high minde and courage, yet it was furthered and set forward by such as of long time had borne malice to the Duke, for declaring their vntruth as you before haue heard. Which venemous Serpents, and malicious Tigers, perswaded, incensed and exhorted the Quene, to loke well vpon the expences and revenewes of the realme, and thereof to call an accompt: affirming plainely that she should euidently perceyue, that the Duke of Gloucester, had not so much aduaunced and preferred the common wealth, and publique vtilitie, as his awne private things and peculiar estate. Beside this, Reyner king of Sicile, wrote to his daughter, that she and her husbande should take vpon them the rule and gouernaunce of the realme, and not to be kept vnder, lyke yong wardes and desolate Orphans. The Queene perswaded and encouraged by these meanes, tooke vpon her and her husband, the high power and aucthoritie ouer the people and subjectes. And although she joyned her husbande with her in name for a countenaunce, yet she did all, she sayde all, and she bare the whole swinge, as the strong Oxe doth, when he is yoked in the plough with a poore siely asse: and first of all she excluded the Duke of Gloucester, from all rule and gouernaunce, not prohibityng suche Gloucester reas she knewe to be his mortall enemies, to inuent and imagine causes and griefes agaynst him moued from all and hys: so that by her permission and fauour, dyuers noble men conspired against him, rule and gouernof the which, dyuers wryters affirme, the Duke of Suffolke, and the Duke of Buckyngham to be the chiefe, not vnprocured by the Cardinall of Winchester, and the Archebishop of Yorke. Dyuers articles both heynous and odious were layde to hys charge in open counsayle, and in especiall one, that he had caused men adjudged to dye, to be put to other execution, then the law of the land had ordered or assigned: for surely the Duke being very well learned in the law civill, detesting malefactors, and punishing their offences, gat great malice and hatred of such as feared to have condigne reward for their vngracious actes and mischieuous doyngs. Although the Duke (not without great laude and prayse) sufficiently answered to all things to him objected, yet because his death was determined, his wisedome little helped, nor his truth smally analled: but of this vinquietnesse of minde, he deliuered himselfe, because he thought neyther of death, nor of condempnation to die: such affiaunce had he in his strong truth, and suche confidence had he in indifferent iustice. But his Capitall enemies and mortall foes, fearing that some tumult or commocion might arise, if a Prince so well beloued of the people, should be openly executed, and put to death, determined to trap and vndoe him, or he thereof should have knowledge or warning. So for the furtheraunce of their purpose, a parliament was sommoned to be A parliament kept at Bury, whether resorted all the peeres of the realme, and amongst them the Duke kept at Burie. Gloucester, which on the second day of the session, was by the Lorde Beamonde then high Constable of Englande, accompanied with the Duke of Buckyngham and other, ar- The Duke of rested, apprehended, and put in warde, and all his seruaunts sequestred from him and dainely arrested xxxii. of the chiefe of his retinue, were sent to divers prisons, to y great admiration of of treson. the common people. The Duke the night after his imprisonment, was found dead in his Gloucester sobed, being the. xxiiij. day of Februarij, and his bodye shewed to the Lordes and com-dainely murdermons, as though he had died of a palsey or impostume: but all indifferent persons well ed. knewe, that he dyed of no naturall death, but of some violent force: some judged him to be strangled: some affirme that a hote spit was put in at his fundament: other write, that he was suffeled or smoldered betwene two feather beds. After whose death, none of his servauntes (although they were arraigned and attainted) were put to death: for the Duke of Suffolke, when they should have beene executed, shewed openly their pardon, but, this doyng appeased not the grudge of the people, which sayde that the pardon of the seruaunts was no amendes for murdreing of their master. The dead corps of this Duke was caryed to saint Albons, and there honorably buryed. Thus thys noble Prince, Sonne, brother, and Vncle to kinges, which had valiauntly and politiquely by the space of xxv. yeares gouerned this realme, and for his demerites, called the good Duke of Gloucester, was by a bone cast by his enimies, choked and brought to his fatall fine, and last ende. So all men may openly see, that to men in aucthoritie, no place, no not the Courte the chiefe refuge of all, nor the dwelling house, nor yet a mans privie Castell, or his bed or-devned for his quietnesse, is out of the daunger of deaths dart.

This Humffrey Duke of Gloucester, descending of the blood royal, was not onely noble and valyant in all his actes and doings, but sage, pollitique, and notably well learned in the Civile lawe. And among other his worthy prayses, this following is not to be forgotten, which most lively and plainely declareth him to be both prudent and wise, & to his great laude and praise is written and set forth by Sir Thomas Moore knight, in a booke of hys, entituled, a Dialogue concerning heresies and matters of religion, and in the xiiii. chapter of the same booke, in this wise following. In the time of King Henry the sixt (sayeth he) as he roade in Progresse, there came to the towne of Saint Albons a certaine begger with hys wyfe, and there was walking about the towne begging five or sixe dayes before the kinges comming thether, saying that he was borne blinde and neuer sawe in all his life, and was warned in his dreame that he should come out of Berwike, where he sayd that he had over dwelled, to seke Saint Albon, and that he had bene at his Shrine. and was not holpen, and therefore he would go seeke him at some other place: For he had heard some save sence he came, that Saint Albons body should be at Colyn, and in dede such a contention hath there bene. But of truth as I am certainly informed (sayth Sir Thomas Moore) he lyeth here at saint Albones, sauing some reliques of him, which they there shewe shryned. But to tell you foorth, when the King was come, and the towne full of people, sodainely this blind man at saint Albones Shryne had his sight, & the same was solempnly rong for a miracle, and Te deum songen, so that nothing was talked of in all the towne, but this miracle. So happened it then that Duke Humfrey of Gloucester, a man no lesse wise, then also well learned, having great joy to see suche a miracle, called the poore man vnto him, and first shewing himselfe joyous of Gods glorie, so shewed in the getting of his sight, and exhorting him to mekenesse, and to no ascribyng of any part of the worship to himselfe, not to be prowde of the peoples praise, which would call him a good & a godly man therby, at the last he looked well vpon his eien, & asked whether he could euer see any thing at al in all his life before. And when as well his wife as himselfe affirmed fastly, no, then he looked aduisedly vpon his eyen agayne, and sayde, I heleve you very well, for me thinketh that ye can not see well yet. Yes Sir quoth he, I thanke God and his holy Martir, I can see now as well as any man: yea can, quod the Duke, what colour is my Gowne? Then anone the begger tolde him. What colour quod he is this mans Gowne? he tolde him also without anye staying or stomblyng, and tolde the names of all the colours that coulde be shewed him. And when the Duke sawe that, • Faytour, is as he bade him walke * Faytoure, and made him to be set openly in the stockes: For though he could have sene sodaynely by miracle the difference between dyuers coloures, yet could he not by sight, so sodainely tell the names of all these coloures, except he had knowne them wisely found out. before, no more then he coulde name all the men whome he should sodainely see, thus farre mayster Moore. And thus much for the noble prowesse and vertue, joyned with lyke Ornamentes of knowledge and learning shyning in this Duke: For the which as before hath appered, he was both loued of the commons, and well spoken of of all men, and no lesse descruing the same, being called the good Duke of Gloucester: so neyther yet wanted he backbiters and privile enuvers, as before hath bene expressed.

much to say as Loyterer, vagabod, or begger. A false miracle

> When the rumor of the Dukes death, was blowen through the realme, many men were sodainely amased for feare: many abhorred and detested the fact, but all men reputed it an abhominable abhominable crueltie, and a shamefull tyranny. But the publique wealth of the realme of Englande, by the vnworthy death of this pollitique prince, sustayned great losse, and ran into ruine, for surely the whole waight and burden of the realme, rested and depended vpon him, as the experience afterward did declare. For after his death, good and sage men fearing themselves, fled out of the flattering court, into whose places entered such, as desiring their awne promocion, set open the gates to newe factions, which could neuer be extinct, till all the seignories beyonde the sea (except Calice and the Marches) were lost, and king Henry in conclusion spoyled of his realme and lyfe. There is an olde sayde sawe, that a man entending to auoyde the smoke, falleth into the fyre: so here, the Quene minding to preserve her husband in honor, and her selfe in aucthoritie, procured and consented to the death of this noble man, whose only deth brought to passe that thing. which she would most fayne have eschewed, and tooke from her that Iewell, which she most desired: for if this Duke had lyued, the Duke of Yorke durst not have made title to the crowne: if this Duke had lyued, the nobles had not conspired agaynst the king, nor yet the commons had not rebelled: if this Duke had lyued, the house of Lancaster had not bene defaced and destroyed, which things happened all contrary, by the destruction of this good man. This is the worldly judgement, but God knoweth what he had predestinate, & what he had ordeyned before, against whose ordinaunce preuayleth no counsayle, and agavnst whose wyll anayleth no stryning.

And it is written of this good Duke of Gloucester, that he builded the divinitie Schole in Oxford, which is a rare pece of worke. And at this time also, William Wanyset a man of great deuocion, wisedome, and justice, was made Bishop of Winchester, and Chauncelor of England, who to the furtheraunce of learning, buylded Mary Magdalene

College in Oxford.

In this, xxvi, yere of the reigne of this king: But in the first yere of the rule of the Queene, I finde nothing done worthie to be rehersed, within the realme of England, but that Richard Duke of Yorke, beyng greatly alved by his wife, to the chiefe peres and potentates of the Realme, ouer and besyde his awne progenie and great consanguinitie, perceiuving the king to be a ruler not rulying, and the whole burden of the realme to depende in the ordinannce of the Queene and the Duke of Suffolke, began secretly to breake to his friends of the Nobilitie, and prinatly declared to them, his title and right to the Crowne, and likewise did he to certeine wise and sage gouernours and Rulers of divers Cities and townes: which privile attempt was so pollitikely handled, and so secretly kept, that his provision was redie, before his purpose was openly published, and his friendes opened themselves or the contrary part could them espie: but in conclusion time reveled truth, and olde hatred openly sprang out, as you shall hereafter both lament and here.

Durving these doynges, Henry Beaufford, Bishop of Winchester, and called the riche The death of Cardinall, departed out of this worlde, and was buryed at Winchester. This man was Henry Beauford Bishop of Winsome to Iohn of Gaunt duke of Lancaster, discended of an honourable linage, but borne chester. in Baste, more noble of blood, then notable in learning, haute in stomake, and highe in countenaunce, riche aboue measure of all men, and to fewe liberall, disdainefull to his kinne, and dreadfull to his louers, preferryng money before friendship, many thinges beginnyng, & nothyng performyng. His couetousnes insaciable, and hope of long life, made him both to forget God, his Prince, and himselfe, in his latter dayes: For Doctor Iohn Baker his priuie counsaylor and his Chapleyne, wrote, that he living on his death bed, sayd these wordes. Why should I die, hauving so much ryches: if the whole realine The fond and would saue my lyfe, I am able either by pollicie to get it, or by riches to bie it. Fye, will folishe talke of not death be hyred, nor will money doe nothing? When my Nephewe of Bedforde died, Winchester. I thought my selfe halfe up the wheele, but when I sawe mine other nephew of Gloucester disceased, then I thought my selfe able to be equall with kings, & so thought to encrease my treasure, in hope to have worne a triple Crowne. But I see nowe the worlde fayleth me, and so I am deceyued: praising you all to pray for me. Of the gettyng of this mans goodes.

goodes, both by power Legantine, or spirituall bribery, I will not speake, but the kepyng of them for his ambicious purpose, aspiryng to ascend to the Papisticall Sea, was both great losse to his naturall Prince, and native Country: for his hidden riches might well have holpen the king, and his secrete treasure might have relieved the Commonaltie, when money was scant, and importunate charges were dayly imminent.

After the death of this Prelate, which was a great stay to the king and the realme, the affayres in Fraunce, were neyther well loked to, nor the gouernours of the Countrie were well aduised. For an Englishe Capteyn, called Sir Fraunces Surrien the Arrogonoys, a man for his wit and activity, admitted to the order of the Garter, tooke by scalying sodainly in the night, a Towne on the Frontiers of Normandie, belonging to the Duke of Briteyn, called Fongiers, spoilyng the same, and killyng the inhabitauntes to the great destruction of the people, and more displeasure to the Duke of Briteyn, their sourraigne Lorde. The Duke being thereof aduertised, sent worde to the French king, declarying to him that in the tyme of truce (in the which, he as his allye and vassall was comprehended) he was spoyled and bereued of his towne of Fongiers: beseching the Frenche king, in that cause to see a recompence and amendment: Wherevoon he sent Iohn Haruart his Caruer, and Iohn Cosinet one of the Maysters of his requestes to the king of England: and to the Duke of Sommerset, he dispatched Peter de Fountaynes Esquier, and one of the chiefe of his stable, to whome by both the Princes, as it was aunswered. that the fact and enterprice was both done, contrary to their minde, will and knowledge. And for the truce to be kept not onely restitucion, but also amendes to be made to the Duke of Briteyn, a day of dyet and assembly was appropried to be kept at the towne of At the tyme appointed both the parties assembled: the French part demaunded amendes with no little recompence: The English Orators aunswered, that without offence, nothing by iustice ought to be satisfied: affirming the doing of Sir Fraunces Surrien, to be his onely act, without the consent or counsaile, eyther of the king of England, or the Duke of Sommerset his Lieutenant and Regent. Duryng this dayly communicacion and long delay, certaine Frenchmen, friendes to the Duke of Briteyn, desirying to be reuenged of the injurie done to him at Fongiers, and also imaging howe to do some newe displeasure to the Euglishemen, were aduertised by a wagoner of Louiers, that the towne of Pountlarche, was but meanly manned and slenderly furnished, & the watch was but negligently loked to: with which saiynges the French men beyng somewhat encouraged, deuised a waye how by pollecie, to take the towne: so the wagoner laded his Wagon, and passed forwarde, having in his companie two strong varlettes clad like Carpenters, wyth great Axes in their neckes. And for the furtheraunce of their purpose, the Lorde of Bressy with a chosen company of men of Armes, lodged himselfe in a bushement nere to the gate of Saint Andrewe. And Captayn Floquet, accompanied with Sir Iames of Cleremount, and another great companie, privily lurked vnder a wood toward Louiers. When al things were appoynted, early in the mornyng in the beginning of the moneth of October, the wagoner came to the gate, and called the Porter by name, praiving him to open the gate, that he might passe to Roan, and returne againe the same night. The Porter (which well knewe the voyce of his customer) tooke little hede to the other two companions, and so opened the one gate, and sent another felowe of his, to open the formost gate. When the Chariot was on the draw Bridge, betwene both the gates, the Chariotmaister gaue the Porter money and for the nonce, let one peece fall to the ground, and while the Porter stoup-Ambtile aleight, ed to take it vp, the wagoner with his Dagger stroke him in at his throte, so that he cryed for no helpe, and the two great Lubbers slue the other Porters, and with their Axes cut the Axeltree of the Wagon, so that the drawe Bridge could not be shortly drawen vp. thinges done, they made a signe to Capteyne Floquet, which without delay or tract of tyme, entered the towne, and slue and tooke the English men, which neyther heard nor thought of any such enterprice: amongest whome the Lorde Fauconbridge, Captein of the sayde towne, was apprehended as a prisoner; by this pretie cautele and sleight impos ture, was the towne of Pountlarche taken and surprised, which towne was the key and Pountelarch taken by the passage over the River of Some, from Fraunce to Normandie, beyng distant from Roan, Freuchmen. onely foure leagues: Thus wrong was added to wrong, and injury heaped to injury, whereby the terme of truce was violated, and mortall warre was revived. But because the taking of this fortresse had a certein colour of breakyng of truce: The Duke of Sommerset by Ambassadors, and not by force of Armes, deuised to recouer again this pretie towne, & sent for the restitution of the same, divers Ambassadors to the French king and his counsaile, which made aunswere againe, that if the Englishemen restored to the Duke of Briteyn, the towne of Fongiers with condigne amendes, for the dammages done and committed within the same, the towne of Pountlarche should again be rendered and delivered; for the Frenche king and his counsaile beganne nowe to perceyue and smell, that the affayres of England by the death of the Duke of Gloucester, were sore minished and decayed, and that good counsaile began to waxe faint and decay, and sedicion freshly began to spring and rise: By reason whereof they thought that Normandy might sone be conquered and recovered, and that the Englishe nacion out of that region might easely be expulsed and driven: wherefore they determined to take the good occasion to them openly offered, and to lose no tyme in so good a Bargaine. Wherevpon king Charles divided his armie into three partes, not doubtyng of victorye, by reason that the fame of the conquest of Pountlarche, was blowen and spread abroad ouer all the Countrie. So after divers assaultes (not without losse of divers of his men) he had rendered to him by composicion, the townes of Louiers and Gerbory, whereof William Harper was Captaine. Thus prosperous victorie dayly succedying to the Frenche kinges armie, he augmenting hys hoste, determined to get the Towne of Vernoyle in Perche, and gyrde it round about with a strong siege. The inhabitauntes whereof, although with the sodaine chaunce they were somewhat abashed, yet hauyng some succors, and hopyng of more reliefe, toke to them good courage, and manfully defended the towne. But when their ayde tarved longer then they eyther thought or desyred, they were compelled to compound with their enemies, vpon this condicion: that if the siege were not raysed within. xx. dayes, that then they should depart with bagge and baggage, which condicion was accepted: and because no rescues came, the towne, Castell and the great Tower, were delivered. The french Historians affirme, the towne to be taken by assault, and the Castell by composicion, but all writers agre, that the frenchmen obteyned it. Thus was warre reujued before the full terme of the truce expired, which was the most detestable and vnprofitable chaunce, that eyther could or might have happened or come to the realine of England. For by this sodaine dammage and losse, without thought arisyng, the Englishe Captaynes were so busied and vnquieted, that with appeasing dayly rumors within townes, and what with studie how to recouer Castels lost and taken, that they scarce wist what way to take: for while they studied how to kepe and defend one Citie, foure or fiue' other, following fortunes chaunce, turned to the Frenche part, and became their enemies. The chiefe cause of which revoltyng and turnyng was this: It was blowen throughout all Fraunce, that the realme of England, after the death of the Duke of Gloucester, by the severall faction of Princes, was divided into two partes, and that William de la Poole, late created Duke of Suffolke, and diners other, were the occasion of the death of the sayd Duke of Gloucester, which was the very father of the Countrie, and the shielde and defence of the poore Commonaltie, and that the forenamed Duke of Suffolke, onely for lucre of money, vexed, oppressed, and molested the poore people, so that mens mindes were not intentiue, nor geuen to outward affayres and foren Conquestes, but all their studie was. howe to drine backe and defende domesticall injuries, and dayly wronges done at home: by reason whereof men of warre were vnpayed, and no armie for resistence was eyther gathered or assembled together: which mischiefes whyle the king (as thinges of the worlde, and of no great moment) did neglect and omit, as he which preferred and extolled godly thinges, aboue all worldly affayres and mortall cures, and thought them most to be phantasied and labored: And while Queene Margaret his wife, in whome the whole rule 4 M of the realme consisted, beyng a woman of to much credence genyng to euill and flatteryng counsaylors, that by no meanes after they coulde be eyther ouercome or resisted: so that by this meanes, the French Nacion knewe in what case the state of the realme of England stood in, which elated and encouraged their heartes, and daunted the courages of the Normanes and Gascoynes, so much, that for lacke of ayde and reliefe, they turned to the French part, and forsoke their very soueraigne Lorde, the king of England in short space. as you shall after here.

A rebellion in frelande,

It was not enough, the realme of England this season thus to be vexed and unquieted with the businesse of Normandy, but also a new rebellyon began in Ireland, to the great displeasure of the King and his counsaill: for repressing whereof, Richard Duke of yorke, with a conuenient number of men, was sent thether, as lieutenant to the king, which not onely appeased the fury of the wilde & sauage people there, but also gat him such love and fauor of the countrey and the inhabitaunts, that their sincere love, and friendly affection coulde neuer be separated from him and his lignage, as in the sequele of this storie you shall more plainely perceive.

The Frenchemen having perfite vnderstanding of the infirmitye and vnreadinesse of the realme of Englande, displayed their Banners, and set forth their armies, and in short space Englande loseth gat by yelding, Constaunce, Gysors, Castel Gayllarde, Pontean du mere, sainct Lo, Feten in Fraunce, seampe, Newchastle, Alanson, Toncque, Manleon argenton, Lisiaux argenton, and diuerse other townes in Normandy: Likewise in Guien was the towne of Maulissone rendered to the Erle of Foys. These townes were not yelded voluntaryly by the English souldiors, but they were therevnto compelled by the Citezens and the inhabitauntes of the townes, which apparauntly perceiving, that the great flame of the English force, was ex-

tinct and consumed, rose against the Capitaines, & other opened the gates to their enimies, or constrained them to render upon a composicion. By which enforcement was the rich Rhoandelyuered Citie of Roan deliuered: for surely the Duke of Somerset and the lord Talbot Erle of Shrowesbury, had well kept and defended this Citie, if they had bene no more vexed with the Citizens, then they were with their enimies. For after the French king had once by his Herault sommoned the citie, the inhabitants not onely sought wayes and invented fraude, how to betraye the same, but also put on harnesse and rebelled against their Capitaines, menacing the death, and destruction of all the English people. The captaines perceiving their vntrouth, and trayterous demeanour, retraited themselves into the Castell or Palaice, where by a certaine space with arowes and handgonnes, they sore molested & vexed the vntrue citezens. But when they considered the great puissaunce of the French king, and that they were in dispaire of all aide or relefe, and that their victaile and artillerie beganne sore to minishe, they thought it better to compounde and agree with their enimies, rather then wilfully to be destroyed or die for famine: and so vpon condicion that all they should safely depart to Caen with all their goods and armure, and that certayne townes shoulde be deliuered by a daye, they were permitted to depart: leauing behinde them for hostages, till the saide townes (which were agreed to be rendred) should be deliucred, the Erle of Shrewsburie and the Lorde Butler, son to the Erle of Ormond. which were sent to the Castel of Eureux, because they sore feared the malice of the Ci-The Frenchmen following still the steps of victory, & elated with the tezens of Roan. bruit and fame of getting of Roan, determined, evther by force or offer to get the towne of Harfflew, & shortly assauted the same, wherof was captain sir Thomas Coneson, a man of a great wit & of no lesse force: which having knowlege of the heuy tidings brought from Roan, was therwith nothing abashed, but coragiously set vpon his enimies, & them to their great hurt, manfully repulsed & draue from the walles. The Frenchmen learning wit by this great perill, left their scaling, and deuised dayly, how to batter and break the walles & fortifications. This siege long continued, to the great losse of both parties. When sir Thomas saw small likelihode of ayd or gayn, but much apparaunce of losse & icopardy, he toke a convencion with his enimies, and so departed with all his goods. After

After which towne rendred, the fortresse of Hunflew, vpon the same composicion was yeelded. Thus you may perceive that Fortune is ever without measure, for eyther she to much fauoreth or to much hateth, for beside these townes surrendered in Normandy, the Duke of Britaine recouered againe Fongiers, saint Iohn de Buerne, & diuers other townes. In the meane season, the king of England sent into Normandie with a crue of a M. v. C. men, a valiant Capteyn called Sir Thomas Kiriell: a man of great stomack, if he had had a great army, but his power was to small, evther to recouer & which was lost, either to saue that which yet remayned vagotten: but surely in him lacked neither good will nor corage, for with his small number, he recourred againe the townes of Lyseaux, and Valongnes. After which feate, he joyned himselfe with Sir Henry Norbery, Sir Robert Veere, Mathew Gough, and other Captevnes, so that they were aboue fine thousand men of valiaunt heartes, and haute courages. After long consultacion, they determined to fight with the French men, which were going to the siege of Cane, but in their journey, they were encountered at a place called Formigny, betweene Carentyne and Bayeux, by the Erle of Cleremont, Lieutenant to the French king, the Steward of Poyton, and the Lord of Rays, Admiral of Fraunce, with six hundreth men of armes, and sixe thousand other, which skirmished with the Englishe men a great season. Duryng which skirmishe, there arryued Arthur Erle of Richmond, highe Constable of Fraunce, Tames of Luxenbrough, Erle of Lauall, with a great number of horsemen, and fresh footmen. After his commyng, he and all the Frenchemen set on the Englishmen beyng faynt and wery with the long skirmishe. This battail was sore fought, but in conclusion the Englishe men were discomfited, and put to flight, and of them slaine fiture gener to aboue foure thousand, and. viij. hundreth taken prisoners, whereof Sir Thomas Kiriell, the Englishmed. Sir Henry Norbery, and Sir Thomas Dreue were the chiefe, Sir Robert Veere and Mathew Gough saued themselues. This was the first foughten fielde, that the French men gat on the Englishe men in many yeres, wherefore I blame them not though they of a little make much, and set forth all, and hide nothing, that may sound to their glory. declare what number they slue, but they write not howe many of them were slaine or destroyed.

After this victorie obtayned, the French king hearing that the Duke of Somerset was in the towne of Caen, thought that he had nothing done, if he permitted the Duke, still to tarie in Normandy, which by newe ayde and freshe succours might turne the wheele of Fortune into a contrary part, and peraduenture recouer all y hath bene lost, or put the realme of Fraunce in a icoperdie: wherefore like a wise prince, entending to preuent thinges, imminent and at hande, assembled an armie royall, and in his awne person, having in his campe Reyner, called king of Sicile, father to the Quene of Englande, the Dukes of Calaber and Alaunson, the Erles of Cleremont, Richemonde, Mayne, Dumoys, Sent Polle, and Dampmartyne, beside many noble Barons and valyaunt knightes, when all things were readie, as oportunitie of time serued: He caused the towne to be Caenbesieged by enuironed on euery side, assigning to his Capitaynes severall places of the towne to be the French mon assauted, and there to proue their manhood. The Erle of Dumoys, with more losse then gaine entered into a bulwarke, and was beaten back. The Englishe men within the towne kept silence, as though they knewe not of their enimies approchyng, but euery man kept his loupe, and every Capitayne well overloked his warde. The French men with querels, morispikes, slynges, and other engines, beganne to assault the walles: but of the Englishe men within, some shot fiercely with long bowes, other cast dartes, and rolled downe great stones and barres of Yron: other cast downe lauelyns, fyrebrands, hote leade, and blockes with pitch and brimstone, lyke burning fyre flaming: so that neyther courage lacked in the assault, nor manhood, nor pollicie in the defence: for on the embattlements of the walles were set great rolles of timber, so mouing and vnstedfast, that neyther scaling ladder could catche any holde, nor no person that should clime vp, could set any sure footyng. The French king perceyuing that this assault little or naught preuayled him, sent for all his great ordinaunce to Paris, determining neuer to departe, till he had conquered the towne, eyther with sworde or famine. When the ordinaunec was brought, he daylie shot at the walles, and did some hurt: but to the Castell, which stood on a rock, and in it a dongeon vnhable to be beaten downe, he did no harme at all. In this towne was the Duke of Somerset, his wife and children, but he was not Capitaine, for the Duke of Yorke owner of the towne, by the kings gift, had appointed there has Capitaine generall, Sir Dauy Halle, and of the Castell, Sir Robert Veer, and of the Dongeon, syr Henry Radford. Daylie the shot was great, but more terrible then hurt-Sauing one day, a stone shot into the towne, fell between the Duches of Somerset, and her children, which being amased with this chaunce, prayed on her knees her husband, to have mercy and compassion of his small infants, & that they might be delyuered out of the towne in sauegarde. The Duke more piteous then hardie, moued with the dolour of his wyfe, and love of his children, assembled the Capitaines and Magistrates of the towne, declarying to them, the power and puyssaunce of the French king, and their debilitie and weakenesse, perswading them rather to yeeld and render voon honest conditions, then obstinately to resist, and foolishely to perishe. Sir Dauy Halle, Capitayne of the towne, aunswered to him, saiying: my Lorde, althoughe you be the kings Lieutenaunt generall, within thys countrie and dominion, and may by force of your aucthoritie, deliuer, sell or geue, any of the kings townes, to suche persons, eyther friends or enemies, as shall please you: yet I am sure that you cut your leather to large, to intreate or speake of the rendering of thys towne, apperteyning to my Lorde and mayster, Rychard Duke of Yorke, which thereof hath geuen me both the charge and custody, with other of my trusty friends and felowes, and which with the helpe of almightie God, I shall well defende, both agaynst the Frenche king and all hys puyssaunce, till the Doke my master come to succour me, for of men, money and municious, I trust I have sufficient. Why sayd the Duke, am not I here the kings Deputie, representing his person, and may commaunde all thinges according to my discretion? Yea sayde the Capitaine, so that you gene away no mans right but his, whose authoritie you have for the same: as for this towne, I assure you, without my Lordes assent, you shall neyther render nor yeelde, by my consent or agreement. The Duke was sore moued with thys saying, and so departed, and after sent for the rulers of the towne, and the poorest people of the same, declaring to them, that their lyues and goodes were in the french kings hands, and if they loked not shortly to their sauegarde, of death they were sure, and of mercie farre vncertaine: exhorting them to follow his louing monicion, rather then the hardened hart, of their to hardie Capitaine. The people of the towne thus perswaded (whose harts were rather French then English) beganne to rise against syr Dauy, boldely affirming, that if he tooke no composition within three dayes, they would open the gates, and let in the French king: and of this opinion were all the common souldiours. What should the poore Hare saye, when she is enuironned with a hundred houndes, or the silly Larke crie, when she is in the middle of a hundred Hawks, but take pacience, and seeke a way, to escape? so this Capitaine perceyuing, that neyther his wordes serued, nor his truth towarde his Master preuayled, bad the Duke of Somerset doe what he list, for he would in no wise be named in the composition. Then the Duke partly to please the townes. men, but more desirous to please the Duches his wyfe, made an agreement with the french king, that he would render the towne, so that he and all his, might departe in sauegarde with all their goodes and substaunce: which offer, the French king gladly accepted and allowed, knowing that by force, he might lenger have longed for the strong towne, then to have possessed the same so sone. After this conclusion taken, Syr Dauy Hall, with divers other of his trustie friendes departed to Chierburge, and from thence sayled into-Irelande to the Duke of Yorke, making relacion to him of all these doings: which thing kindled so great a rancour in his harte and stomack, that he neuer left persecuting of the Duke of Somerset, till he had brought him to his fatall point, and extreme confusion.

The Citie of Caen yelded to the french.

After the obtayning of this strong towne of Caen, the Erle of Cleremount besieged the City of Lyseux, wherof was Captein Mathew Gough, with three hundreth Englishe men. The Capteyne perceiving that when Cane was not rescued, that poore Lyseux was in dispayre of all succour, agreed to abandon and deliuer the Citie, so that he and his people might depart to Chierburge, hauyng no yron weapon nor armure, but onely theyr goodes. & whyte states in their handes. After the deliverance of this towne, the Frenche men still like good begles, folowyng theyr pray, besieged the towne of Fallayse, appertaining to the Lord Talbot, Erle of Shrewsbury: whereof were Capteynes for the sayd Eile, Andrew Trollop, and Thomas Cotton squiers, which beyng desperate of succors, and considering the puissaunce of their enemies, agreed to deliver the towne vpon two condicions, the one was, that the Erle their mayster, which remayned in pledge for certeyne condicions, agreed to be perfourmed at the deliueraunce of Roan, (as you have heard before) should be dismissed and set at libertie: the other, that if they were not rescued within, xij. dayes, that then they and theirs to depart with armure, and all their goods moueable whether it pleased them. After this agreement at the day prefixed, no rescues came, and so the towne was rendered, and incontinent after, the fortresse of Dampforde was delivered vpon like agreement. For the Frenchmen bragged, that they regarded neyther golde nor siluer, but desired rule, glory and fame: With which lightnesse, the other townes of Normandie beyng perswaded, voluntarily rendered themselues, vassalles and subjectes to the Frenche nacion.

Nowe rested Englishe, onely the towne of Chierburge, whereof was Capteyn. Thomas Gonuile, which surely and valiauntly defended the towne as long as vitaile and municion serued: but when these two handes were spent and consumed, he destitute of all comfort and ayde, vpon a reasonable composicion yelded the towne, & went to Calice, where the Duke of Sommerset and many Englishe men then soiourned: lamentyng their losse, and desperate of all recourty. Thus was the riche Duchie of Normandie lost, the which had Al Normandie is continued in the Englishe mens possession. xxx. yeres, by the conquest of king Henry the lost. fift. In the which Duchie were a hundred strog townes and fortresses, able to be kept and holden, besyde them which were destroyed by the warres, and in the same was one Archebishoprike, and sixe Bishoprikes. Some say, that the Englishemen were not of puissaunce, eyther to man the townes as they should be, or to inhabite the Countrie, which was the cause that they could not kepe it: according to the Frenchmens Adage, which sayth: A man can not long holde that, which he cannot grype. Other say, that the Duke of Sommerset, for his awne peculiar profite, kept not halfe his number of, Souldiors, and put their wages in his purse. These be mens imaginations and coniectures, but surely the losse of it, was the domesticall division within the Realme, every great man desiryng rather to be reuenged on his fo at home, then on his outward enemie. as you nowe shall manifestly see and perceyue.

For while these conquestes were obteyned in the partes beyond the sea, with sworde, speare, and target, by the adversaries of the Englishmen, three mischieuous Captaines. set the people of the realme (as well of the Nobility as of the meane sort) in a civile warre and intestine division: For among the high Princes and peeres, reigned inward grudge: among the Clergie flaterie, and among the Commonaltie disdaine of lascinious souereigntie, which the Queene with her Minions, and vnprofitable Counsaylors dayly tooke and vsurped vpon them. Wherefore they (not mindyng to be more charged, then their backes would beare, and perceiving that by negligent provision and improvident pollicie, the affayres and businesse in the partes beyonde the sea, dayly decayed, and more were like to do) began first to make exclamacion agaynst the Duke of Suffolke, af. thous counsailors, and the bringer in & advancer of vicious persons, common enemies. and apparaunt aduersaries to the publike wealth: So that the Duke was called in every mans mouth a traytor, a murtherer, a robber of the kinges treasure, and worthy to be put to most cruell punishement: By reason of this exclamacion, the Queene somewhat fearing the destruction of the Duke, but more the confusion of herselfe, caused the Parliament, before begon at the black Friers in London, to be adjourned to Leycester. thinkyng there by force and rigor of the lawe, to subdue and represse all the malice and euill will, conceyued agaynst the Duke and her: at which place fewe of the Nobility would appere, wherefore it was againe adjourned to Westminster, where was a whole companie and a full apperaunce. In the which session, the Commons of the nether house, put vp to the king and the Lordes, many articles of treason, misprision and misdemeanour. agavust the Duke of Suffolke: the effect whereof, with his aunsweres, hereafter ensueth.

1 First, they alleged, that he had traverously excited, prouoked, and counsayled, John Erle of Dumoys Bastard of Orleannee, Bertram Lorde Presigny, Willyam Cosynet, enemies to the king, and friendes and Ambassadors to Charles, calling himselfe french king, to enter into this realme, and to levie warre agaynst the king and his realme, to the entent to destroy the king and his friends, & to make Iohn his sonne king of this realme. mariyng him to Margaret, sole heire to Iohn Duke of Somerset, pretending and declaring her, to be next heire inheritable to the crowne, for lack of issue of the kings body

2 Item, the sayde Duke, being of the kings privile and neere counsayle, allured by great rewardes, and favre promises, made by the foresayde Erle of Dumoys, caused the king to deliuer and set at libertie, Charles Duke of Orleaunce, enemie to the King, and the Kings noble father, which delyueraunce, was prohibited by expresse wordes, in the last will of the kings most victorious father.

3 Item, that before the departure of the sayde Duke of Orleaunce, the aforenamed Duke of Suffolke, traytorously fast cleaning to Charles called the French king, counsayled, provoked and entised the sayde Duke of Orleaunce, to move the same King, to make warre agaynst England, both in Fraunce and Normandy: according to which procurement and counsaile, the sayde French king, hath recourred the whole realme of Fraunce, and all the Duchie of Normandie, and taken prisoners the Erle of Shrewesburie, the Lorde Fauconbridge, and many other valiaunt Capitaines.

These three articles aforenamed he denied either for fact or thought.

4 Farther, it was alleged, that he being Ambassador for the King of Englande, to Charles calling himselfe French King, promised to Reyner King of Sicile, and to Charles Dangiers his brother, enimies to the King, the relese of Angeow, with the deliveraunce of the Countie of Mayne, and the Citie of Maunt or Mauns, without the knowledge of the other Ambassadors, which him accompanied: which promise after his returne, he caused to be performed, to the kings disenheritaunce, and losse irrecuperable, and to the strength of his enemies and feblishement of the Duchy of Normandy.

To this article he aunswered, that hys commission was to conclude, and doe all things according to his discretion, for the obtayning of a peace, and because without deliuerie of those Countries, he perceyued that truce could not be obteyned, he agreed to the relese and deliueraunce of them.

5 Also, they surmised that the sayde Duke being in Fraunce in the Kings service, and one of the priviest of his counsayle there, traytorously declared and opened to the Capitaines and conduiters of warre, appertaying to the Kings enemies, the kings counsayle, purueiaunce of his armies, furniture of his townes, and all other ordinaunces, whereby the Kings enimies (enformed by his traiterous informacion) have gotten townes and fortresses, and the King by that meane deprived of his enheritaunce.

6 Item, the sayde Duke declared to the Erle of Dumoys, to the Lorde Presigny, and Wylliam Cosynet, Ambassadors for the French King, lyeng in London, the printies of

the

the Kings counsayle, both for the provision of farther warre, and also for defence of the Duchy of Normandy: by the disclosing whereof, the Frenchmen knowyng the Kinges secretes, preuented the tyme, and obtayned their purpose.

7 Item, that the sayde Duke at such tyme as the king sent Ambassadors to the French king, for the entreating of peace, trayterously before their comming to the French Court certefied king Charles of their commission, aucthoritie and instructions, by reason whereof, neyther peace nor amitie succeded, and the kings enheritaunce lost, and by his enemies possessed.

8 Item, the same Duke sayde openly in the Starre chamber, before the Lordes of the counsayle, that he had as high a place in the counsayle house of the French king, as he had there, and was as well trusted there as here, and could remoue from the French king.

the priviest man of his counsayle, if he would.

9 Item, when armies have bene prepared, and souldiours ready waged, to passe over the sea, to resist the kings enemies: the sayde Duke corrupted by rewards of the French king, hath restrayned and stayed the sayde armies to passe any farther.

10 Item, the sayde Duke being Ambassadour for the King, comprised not in the league as the kinges Alies, neyther the king of Arragon, neither the Duke of Briteine, but suffered them to be comprised on the contrary part, by reason whereof, the olde amitie of the king of Aragon, is estraunged from this realme, and the Duke of Britein become enemie to the same: Gyles his brother the kinges sure friend, cast in strong prison, and there like to ende and finishe his dayes.

All these objections he vtterly denied, or faintly anoyded, but none fully excused. Diuers other crimes were laide to his charge, as enryching hymselfe with the Kings goods, and landes, gathering together, and making a Monopoly of officies, fees, wards, and fermes, by reason wherof, the kings estate was greatly mynished and decayed, and he and his kin highly exalted and enriched, with many other pointes, which, because they be not notable, nor of great force or strength, I omit and ouerpasse.

The Queene which entirely loued the Duke, fearing that some commocion and trouble Suffolke commight rise, if he were let goe vnpunished, caused him to be committed to the Towre, where mitted to the he was kept with as much pleasure, as he that was at large, and out of all captivitie. But after that a moneth was expired, she imagening the people to be pacified with this open emprisonment, caused him both to be delyuered, and also to be restored to the Kynges fauour and grace, as much as euer he was before that tyme. But thys doing incensed the furve of the mutable commons, muche more then before: openly denouncing and saying, that it was a shame to all the Realme, to see such a person, infected with so many misdeeds, either to rule aboute a Prince or to be had in honor. Of these wordes sprange dedes, and of this talking, rose displeasure, which had growne to great mischief, if pollitique prouision had not with all celerity resisted the first furye: for the commons in sundrye places of the Realme assembled together, gathered great companies, and elected a Captayne, whome they called, Blew berde: but or they had attempted any enterprise, Blew ocard a their heades were apprehended, and so the members sodainely were dispersed, without Capitaine of reany hurt committed.

After this litle rage was asswaged, a new Parliament was holden at Leycester, whither came the King and the Queene in great estate, and wyth them the Duke of Suffolke, as chefe counsailor. The commons of the lower house, not forgetting their olde grudge, beseched the King, that such persons, as assented to the relese of Angeow, and deliueraunce of Maine, might be extremely punished, and tormented: and to be privile to this fact, they accused, as principall, the Duke of Suffolke, with Iohn Bishop of Salisbury, and sir Iames Fynes, Lord Say, and divers other. When King Henrye perceived that the comons were thus stomacked & bent, against the quenes dearling William Duke of Wyllyam Duke Suffolke, he plainely sawe that neyther glosing woulde serue, nor dissimulation coulde of Suffolke. appearse the continual clamor of the importunate commons: Wherefore to begin a short

pacification in so long a broyle: First he sequestred the Lorde Say, beyng threasorer of England, and other the Dukes adherentes, from their offices, and authoritie, and after

bauyshed and put in exile the Duke of Suffolke, for the terme of fyue yeres: meaning by this exile, to appease the furious rage of the outragious people, and that pacified, to reuocate him to his olde estate, as the Queenes chefe frend and counsailer. But fortune would not, that he should so escape, for when he was shipped in Suffolke, entending to be transported into Fraunce, he was encountered with a shippe of warre, appertaying to the Duke of Excester, the Constable of the Towre of London, being capitaine of the same barke with small fight, entered into the Dukes shippe, and perceiving his person present, brought him to Douer Rode, & there on the one syde of a cocke bote, caused his heade to be striken off, & left his body with the heade vpon the sandes of Douer, which corps was there founde by a Chaplayne of his; & conucied to Wingfelde colledge in Suffolke, and there buryed. This ende had William de la Pole the first duke of Suffolke, as men judge by Goddes punishement: for aboue all thinges he was noted to be the very organ, engine, and deciser of the destruction of Humfrey the good duke of Gloucester, and so the blood of the innocent man was with his dolorous death, recompensed and punished. But the death of this froward person, brought not the realme to quiet, nor deliuered it from all inward grudge and intestine division, which to all Realmes is more pestiferous and novsome, then outward warre, dayly famine, or extreme pestilence. For although Richard Duke of Yorke was in person (as the kings Deputie) in the realm of Ireland, continually resiant ther: yet his breath puffed, and his winde blewe dayly, in many partes of this realme. For many of the nobilitie, and more of the meane estate. wisely ponderyng the estate and condicion of the Realme, perceiving more losse then encrease, ruyne then aduauncemente, daylye to ensue: remembryng also that Fraunce was conquered, and Normandye was gayned by the Frenche people in short space, thought with them selves and imagined, that the fault of all these miserable changes happened, either because the king was not the true enheritor to the Crowne, or that he or his counsaile were not able of wit, pollecie or circumspection, to rule and gouerne so noble a Realme, or so famous a Region. Vpon this coniecture, the friendes, kinsmen, and allies of the Duke of Yorke, which were of no small number, began to practise the gouernaunce of his title: Infusyng and puttyng into mens heades secretly his right to the Crowne, his politique gouernaunce, his gentle behauiour too all the Irishe Nacion, affirmyng, that he which had brought that rude and sauage nacion to ciuile fashion, and English maners, would (if he once ruled in the realme of England) depose euill Counsaylors, correct euill Iudges, and reforme all matters amisse, and vnamended. And to set open the flood gates of these deuises, it was thought necessary, to cause some great commocion, and vrisyng of people to be made agaynst the king: so that if they preuayled, then had the Duke of Yorke and his complices, their appetite and desyre. And because the Kentishemen be impacient in wronges, disdeyning of to much oppression, and euer desirous of newe chaunge, and newe fanglenesse: The ouerture of this matter was put foorth in Kent, and to the entent that it should not be knowen, that the Duke of Yorke or his friendes were the cause of the sodaine risyng: A certaine yong man of a goodly stature, and pregnant wit, was entysed to take vpo him the name of Iohn Mortimer, although his name were Iohn Cade, and not for a small pollicie, thinkyng that by that surname, the lyne and lynage of the assistent house of the Erle of Marche, which were no small number, should be to him both adherent and fauourable. This was Chiefeteyne. Capteine not only suborned by teachers, but also enforced by privile Scholemaisters, assembled together a great company of tall personages: assuryng them that their attempt was both honourable to God and the king, and also profitable to the common wealth, promising them, that if either by force or pollicy they might once take the king, the Queene, and other their Counsaylors, into their handes and governaunce, that they would honourably entreat the king, and so sharpely handle his Counsaylors, that neither fiftenes should here.

A rebellion in Kent, wheref lack Cade who named himself Iohn Morrimer

after be demaunded, nor once any imposicions or tax should be spoken of. These perswasions, with many other faire promises of libertie (which the common people more affect and desyre, rather then reasonable obedience, and due conformitie) so animated the Kentishe people, that they with their Capteine abouenamed, in good order of battaile (not in great number) came to the plain of Blackheath, betweene Eldham and Grene-And to the entent that the cause of this glorious Captaynes commyng thether. might be shadowed from the king and his Counsail, he sent to him an humble supplicacion, with louving wordes, but with malicious entent: affirming his comming, not to be against John Mortymer him, but against divers of his counsaile, louers of themselves, and oppressors of the sheweth the cause of his repoore Commonaltie, flatterers to the King, and enemies to his honor, suckers of his bellion. pursse, and robbers of his subjectes, parciall to their friendes, and extreme to their enemies, for rewardes corrupted, and for indifferencie nothing doyng. This prowde Bill, was both of the king, and his Counsaile disdeinfully taken, and therevpon great consultacion had, and after long debatyng it was concluded, that such prowde rebelles should rather be suppressed and tamed, with violence and force, then with fayre wordes or friendly or gentle

Wherevpon the king assembled a great army, & marched toward them, which had lyen on black Heath, by the space of vij. dayes. This subtill Capitaine named lack Cade. entending to bring the king farther within the compasse of his nette, brake up his campe, and retyred backeward to the towne of Seuenock in Kent, and there expecting his pray, encamped himselfe, and made his abode. The Queene, which bare the rule, being of hys retraite well aduertised, sent syr Humfrey Stafforde knight, and Wylliam his brother, with many other Gentlemen, to follow the chace of the Kentish men, thinking that they had fled, but verily they were deceaued; for at the first skirmishe, both the Staffordes were slayne, and all their companie shamefully discomfited. The kings armie, being at this time come to black Heath, hearing of this discomfiture, beganne to grudge and murmoure amongst themselves, some wishing the Duke of Yorke at home, to avde the Capitayne his Cosyn: Some desiring the ouerthrow of the king and his counsayle: other openly cryed out on the Queene and her complices. Thys rumour openly spoken, and commonly published, caused the king and certaine of his counsayle not ledde by fauour, nor corrupted by rewardes (to the intent to appease the furious rage of the inconstant multitude) to commit the Lorde Say, Threasorer of Englande to the Towre of London: and if other agaynst whome like displeasure was borne had bene present, they had likewise bene served. But it was necessary that one should suffer, rather then all the nobilitie then should perishe. When the Kentishe Capitaine, or the couetous Cade, had thus obtained victorie, and slayne the two valyant Staffordes, he appareled himselfe in their riche armure, and so with pompe and glorie returned agayne towarde London: in the which retraite, dyuers ydle and vacabond persons, resorted to him from Sussex and Surrey, and from other partes to a great a number. Thus this glorious Capitaine, compassed about, and invironed with a multitude of euill, rude, and rusticall persons, came againe to the plaine of Blackheath, and there strongly encamped himselfe: to whome were sent by the king, the Archebishop of Caunterbury, and Humfrey Duke of Buckyngham, to common with him of his greeues and requestes. These Lordes found him soher in communication, wise in disputyng, arrogant in hart, and stiffe in his opinion, and by no waves possible, to be perswaded to dissolve his armie, except the king in person would come to him, and assent to all things which he should require. These Lordes perceyuing the wilfull pertinacie, and manifest contumacie of this rebellious Villeyn, departed to the King, declaring to him his stoute and presumpteous requestes. The king somewhat hearing, and more marking the sayengs of this outrageous losell, having daylie reporte of the concurse and accesse of people, which continually resorted to him, doubting as much his familier servaunts, as his vnknowen subjectes (which spared not to speake, that the Capitaines cause was profitable for the common wealth) departed in all haste to the 4 N Castell VOL. I.

Castell of Kylyngworth in Warwikeshire, leaving onely behinde him the Lorde Scales to keepe the Towre of London. The Capitaine being advertised of the Kings absence, came first into Southwarke, and there lodged at the whyte Hart, prohibyting to all men, murder, rape, or robbery: by which coulour he allured to him the harts of the common people. But after that he entered into London, and cut the ropes of the draw bridge, striking his sworde on London stone, saiyng: now is Mortimer Lorde of this Citie, and rode in every streete lyke a Lordly Capitayne. And after a flattering declaration made to the Mayre of the Citie of his thether comming, he departed againe into Southwarke. And vpon the third day of Iulij, he caused syr Iames Fynes Lorde Say, & Threasorer of England, to be brought to the Gylde hall of London, and there to be arrayned; which being before the kings lustices put to aunswere, desyred to be tryed by his peeres, for the lenger delay of his lyfe. The Capitaine perceiving his dilatorie ple, by force tooke him from the officers, and brought him to the standard in Chepe, and there caused his head to be striken off, and pitched it on a high pole, which was openly borne before him through the streete. And this cruell tyraunt not content with the murder of the Lorde Say, went to Myle ende, and there apprehended syr lames Cromer, then Shriefe of Kent. and sonne in lawe to the sayde Lorde Say, and caused him there likewise to be hedded. and his head to be fixed on a Pole, and with these two heades, thys blooddy Butcher entred into the Citie agayne, and in dispite caused them in euery strete, to kisse toge-

Philip Malpas Alderman of London.

After this shamefull murder, succeded open rapyne, and manifest robbery in dyuers houses, within the Citie, and in especiall in the house of Philip Malpas, Alderman of London, and divers other: over and besyde raunsomyng, and finyng of dyvers notable Marchantes, for the tuicion and securitie of their lyues and goodes, as Robert Horne Alderman, which payed five hundreth markes, and yet neyther he, nor no other person was either of life or substaunce in a suretic or sauegarde. He also put to execucion in Southwarke divers persons, some for enfringing his rules and preceptes, because he would be sene indifferent, other he tormented of his old acquaintaunce, least they should blase and declare his base birth, and lowsy lynage, disparagyng him from his vsurped surname of Mortimer, for the which, he thought and doubted not, both to have friendes and fautors, both in London, Kent, and Essex. The wise Major, and sage Magistrates of the Citie of London, perceiugng themselves neyther to be sure of goodes, nor of lyfe well warranted, determined with force to repell and expulse this mischieuous heade, and hys vngracious company. And because the Lorde Scales was orderned keeper of the Towre of London, with Mathew Gough, the often named Capitaine in Normandie (as you have heard before) they purposed to make them privile, both of their entent and en-The Lord Scales promised to them his ayde, with shooting of ordinaunce, and Mathew Gough was by him appointed, to assist the Mayre and the Londoners: because he was both of manhode, and experience greatly renoumed and noysed. So the Capitaynes of the Citie appointed, toke vpon them in the night to keepe the bridge of London, prohibityng the Kentish men eyther to passe or approche. The rebels, which neuer soundly slept, for feare of sodayne chaunces, hearing the bridge to be kept and manned, ran with great haste to open that passage, where betwene both parties was a fierce and cruell encounter. Mathew Gough, more expert in Marciall feates, then the other Chiefetaynes of the Citie, perceyuing the Kentish men, better to stand to their tacking, then his imaginacion expected, aduised his company no farther to procede toward Southwarke, till the day appered: to the intent, that the Citizens hearing where the place of the ieopardie rested, might occurre their enimies and relieue their friendes and companions. But this counsayle came to small effect: for the multitude of the robels draue the Citezens from the stoulpes at the bridge foote, to the drawe bridge, and beganne to set fyre in dyuers houses. Alas what sorrowe it was to beholde that miserable chaunce; for some desyring to eschewe the fyre, lept on his enimies weapon, and so died: fearefull women with - children children in their armes, amased and appalled, lept into the river: other doubting how to saue themselves betweene fyre, water, and sworde, were in their houses suffocat and smoldered. Yet the Capteynes nothing regarding these chaunces, fought on the drawe bridge all the night valyauntly, but in conclusion, the rebels gate the drawe bridge, and drowned many, and slue Iohn Sutton Alderman, and Robert Heysande a hardy Citizen, with many other, beside Mathew Gough, a man of great wyt, and of muche experience in feates of chiualrie, the which in continuall warres, had valyauntly serued the king, and his father, in the partes beyonde the sea (as before you have heard.) But it is often seene, that he which many times hath vanquished his enimies in straunge Countries, and returned againe as a conquerour, hath of his awne nacion afterward bene shamefully murdered, and brought to confusion, as in this skirmishe and bickeryng the sayde Mathewe Gough was. This hard and sore conflict endured on the Bridge till. ix. of the clocke in the morning, in doubtfull chaunce, and fortunes balaunce; for sometyme the Londoners were bet backe to the stulpes at Saint Magnus corner, and sodainly agayne the rebels were repulsed and driven backe to the stulpes in Southwarke, so that both partes being favnt, werie and fatigate, agreed to desist from fight, and to leave battayle till the next day, your condition: that neyther Londoners should passe into Southwarke, nor the Kentishe men into London.

After this abstinence of warre agreed, the lustic Kentishe Capitayuc, hoping on more friends, brake vp the gayles of the kings Bench and Marshalsea, and set at libertie a swarme of Gallants, both meete for his service and apt for his enterprise. The Archebishop of Cauntorbury, beyng then Chauncellor of England, and for his suretie lyeng in the Towre of London, called to him the Byshop of Wynchester, which also for feare, lurked at Haliwell. These two prelates seyng the furie of the Kentishe people, by reason of their beating back, to be mitigated and minished, passed the ryuer of Thames from the Towre, into Southwarke, bringing with them under the kings great seale, a generall pardon vnto all the offenders: which they caused to be openly proclamed and published. Lorde, howe glad the people were of this pardon (ye more then of the great Iubile of Rome) and how they accepted the same, in so much that the whole multitude, without bydding farewell to their Capitaine, retired the same night, every man to his awne home, as men amased and striken with feare. But Iohn Cade desperate of succours, which by the friendes of the Duke of Yorke were to him promised, and seyng his company thus without his knowledge sodainely departe, mistrusting the sequele of the matter, departed secretly in habite disguysed, into Sussex: but all his Metamorphosis or transfiguration little preuayled, for after a proclamation made, that whosoeuer could apprehend the sayde lack Cade, should have for his paine a thousande Markes, many sought for hym, but fewe espied hym, till one Alexander Iden Esquire of Kent, founde him in a garden, and there in his defence, manfully slue the caytife Cade, and brought his dead bodie to Lon- The miserable don, whose head was set on London bridge. Thys is the ende of all rebelles, and thys cade. fortune chaunceth ever to traytors. For where men strive agaynst the streame, their vote neuer commeth to his pretensed porte.

After this commocion, the king himselfe came into Kent, and there sat in judgement ypon the offendors, and if he had not mitigaged his justice, with mercie and compassion, more then five hundred by the rigor of his lawe had bene justely put to execution: but he considered both their simplicitie and innocencie, and howe they with peruerse people were seduced and deceyued: and so punished the stubburne heades, and delivered the ignorant and miserable people, to the great reiovsing of all his subjectes.

During this commocion about London, Raufe Bishop of Salisbury, was by his awne tenaunts and seruaunts murdered at Edington, and so from thence forth daylie succeded murther, slaughter, and dissention. And the cause, as some write, was for consenting to the geuing vp of the Duchie of Angeow and Mayne into the handes of the French king.

And

And about this time Quene Margaret beganne the foundation of the Queenes Colledge in Cambridge.

These variable channes in Englande were not vnknowne to the French King, wherfore he making foundation vpon the English discord, determined to get into his possession, the Duchie of Aquitayne, while the princes of England were in controuersie for their titles and superioritie: & therefore lyke a speedy Purueior, which slacketh not time, he sent the Erles of Ponthieure, & Perigot, with many valyaunt Capitaynes to lay siege to the towne of Bergerac set vpon the ryuer of Dordone, of which towne was capitayne, Iohn Geddyng, which heering of the yeelding of Roan, and conquest of Normandie, considering the puyssaunce of the French armie, vpon reasonable conditions rendered the towne: yet all this notwithstanding, the Lorde Cameyse, syr George Seymour, syr Iohn Arundell, and other valyaunt Capitaines, which had the gouernaunce of this countrie, manned townes, gathered people, and animated the colde stomackes of the fearfulk Gascones: requiring them to be constant in their fidelitie, true to their naturall Prince. and vindoubted sourreigne Lorde, sending daylie letters to the king of Englande and his counsayle, declaring to him the weakenesse of his subjectes, and the strength of his enimies, asserteyning him for a suretie, that without speedye ayde, and ready succours, the whole Countrey was like to be gotten from his possession. Many letters were sent, and many faire aunsweres were brought, but reliefe neither appered, nor one man of warrewas thether shipped. By reason whereof, the Gascoynes perceyuing their enemies at hande, intending as well to destroy the countrey, as to subdue the people, beganne every man for himselfe, to regarde nothing, but the sauing of their townes, goodes, and corne: neglecting defence, and fearefull of assaultes, least by small resistence, they might receive more detriment, then after they could recouer agayne, either with great force, or much But the Englishe men (whose natures are not to be faynt hearted, even at the very icopardie of death) with all their wits studied, both how to repulse and conuince their enemies, and to turne away the euill chaunces which they sawe lykely (if pollicie did not helpe) sodaynely to fall, and shortly to insue. But all their pollicies little prevayled in conclusion, because succours fayled, and force wanted. For after the Frenchmen had the towne of Bergerac to them rendered, the fortresses of Ionsac, of Bonefoy, and dyuers other places, wyllingly and freely yeelded themselues to the French subjection. During which time, the Lorde Doruall, thirde sonne to the Lorde Delabreth, with a great number of men, as well on horsback as on foote, departed from Basas, to conquere and destroy. the Isle of Madoce: whereof hearing the Maire of Burdeaux, with a convenient creweof men, issued out of the Citie, and encountered with his enimies, between whome was a harde fight and a deadly battayle: but the French men more with multitude then with force, vanquished the Englishe men, and killed and tooke prisoners aboue six hundred English men and Gascoynes, but of the frenchmen which were in double number, aboue their adversaries (as wryters affirme) there were slayne eight hundred persons. For which cause, the Capitaynes followed no farther the chase, least the Englishe people would agayne returne. Thys slaughter of the Englishe parte, the French wryters set foorth with the most, but of their awne losse they speake not one worde. Such indifferency, is in their Chronographiers. This discomfiture so amased the wits, and daunted the harts of the meane Gascons, that they offred many townes to the French parte, before the same were of them demaunded.

After this, the Bastard of Orleaunce, Erle of Dumoys, and Longuile, Lieutenaunt generall for the Frenche king, accompanied with his brother, Iohn Erle of Angulesme, which had bene long prisoner in England, and many valyaunt Capitaynes, and expert men of warre, besieged the Castell of Montguyon, which to them was rendered. After this, the sayde army besieged the fortresse of Blay, standing on the ryuer of Gyroud, which towne is the very Key of the porte of Burdeaux, and this towne was besieged both by water and by lande, and fiercely assaulted and manfully defended, and in conclusion by very force, for lack of resistence, conquered and gayned. The Bastarde of Kendale Capitayne of the Castell, seeing the towne lost, vpon certayne conditions deliuered his fortresse, into the possession of the Lorde Lieutenaunt.

After this towne gayned, the fortresses of Bourge & Liburne yelded but not without fine weekes besiegyng. The wittie Captaynes perceining fortunes fauour was not towardes them, thought it necessary to take the tyme while their good planet reigned. Wherefore to preuent the ayde of the Englishe men, whom they dayly looked for to come to the succor of their people: they appointed foure armies, to make warre in foure severall The Lord Charles Delabreth, accompanied with Iohn Lorde Tartas and Aymon, Lord of Doruall his sonnes, and the Erle of Foys, and the Viscount Lawtrec his brother, and many noble men of Guyen, layd siege to the towne of Arques, in the which be divers hote bathes. The Erle of Arminacke extreme enemie to the realme of England. for breakyng the maryage concluded betwene king Henry and his daughter (as before you have heard) besieged with a great puyssaunce, the strong towne of Rion. The Erle of Ponthieur, with many noble barons, besieged the towne of Chastillon in Perigot, and the Erle of Dumoys, enuironed with a great puyssaunce the towne of Fronsacke. The Englishemen within this towne, perceiving the great ordinaunce on the Frenche part, and the small provision on their syde, covenanted with the sayd Erle, that if the towne were not succored, & the Frenchmen foughte withal, before the feast of the nativity of S. Iohn Baptist next ensuying, y then the towne of Fronsacke should be yelded to them, which was the strongest fortresse of all that Country, and the very key of Guien, & cheif Chamber of Burdeaux: and for performance hereof, pledges were delivered, and writinges autentique sealed. This agreement once blowen through the Countrie, the Citie of Burdeaux and all other townes (except Bayon) made like agreement, and deliuered pledges. So did all the noble men and Gentlemen, which were subjectes and vassalles to the Crowne of Eng-Alacke, alacke, euery day was lookyng for reliefe, and euery houre was gapyng for comfort, but wishing serued not, nor hoping nothing helped: for the pestiferous division which reigned in England, so inveigled the braynes of the noble men there, that the honour of the realme was cleerely forgotten, and nothing earthly, but their private phantasies looked on and remembred. Now to conclude, the day appoynted came, but succor looked for came not: so that all the townes of Aquitaine (except Bayon) delivered their keyes, and became vassalles to the frenche Nacion, yet the Citezens of Burdeaux, hopyng of rescues, offered themselves to fight with the Frenchmen, and desyred a day of battaile to be appoynted, which request was to them graunted. But at the day assigned, they beyng in dispayre of all refuge and succor, rendered themselues and the towne, to their aduersaryes, their lyues and goodes reserved, with licence and safeconduite to all persons which would depart and sayle into England. When the Cities and townes of Gascovne were set in good order, the Erle of Dumoys and Foys, with great preparation of vittaile, municion, and men, came before the Citie of Bayon, where with mines and battery, they so dismayed the feareful Inhabitauntes, that neyther the Captaine nor the Souldiours, could kepe them from yeeldyng: so by force they delivered the towne, and their Captayne as a prisoner, offred a great somme of money for the sauegarde of their lives and goodes. Besides these agreementes taken with townes, divers noble men made several composicions, as Gaston de Foys, Capdaw of Buessz, whom king Henry the fift made Erle of Longuile, and knight of the Garter, whose auncestours were ener true to England, which agreed that he, and John de Foys his son, whome king Henry the sixt created Erle of Kendale. and made also knight of the Garter, should enjoy all their landes in Aquitaine, genen to them by the kinges of England, or by the Dukes of Aquitaine, And because their entent was still to serue the king of Englande their souereigne Lorde, they agreed, to deliuer into the custodie of the Erle of Foys, their Cosyn, the sonne and heyre of the sayd Erle of Kendale, beyng of the age of three veres, to the entent, that if he at his full age denied to become subject and vassall to the French king, or before that tyme deceased, that then after after the death of his father, and grandfather, all the sayde landes should wholy remaine to the next heyre of their blood, eyther Male, or Female, beyng vader the obeysaunce of the Frenche king, or his heyres. Many noble men, whose hartes were good Englishe, made like compositions, and some came into England, and other went to Calice, and were great officers there: as the Lorde Duras, which was Marshall there, and Monsire Vanclere, which was there Deputie, under the Erle of Warwike (as after shall be shewed.) Now have I declared to you, the losse of Fraunce, Normandie, and Acquitain: wherefore, having no more cause yet to speake of them, I will returne to the great trouble, dissencion and division, which long was cloaked, and nowe openly set abrode, and burst out in the realme of England.

You have heard before, howe the Duke of Yorke, as heyre to Lionell Duke of Clarence, pretended privily, a title to the Crowne, and howe hys friendes commoned secretly with divers persons of that matter, and excited them to set forward, and advance that part to the vttermost: and howe the sayde Duke was sent into Ireland, where he was dayly advertised by hys assured friendes, of all thinges done in England, and by them knew in what estate he stoode, both with the Nobilitie, and Commonaltie. Wherefore, he mindyng no lenger to dreame in his waightie matter, nor to kepe secrete his right title, returned out of Ireland, and came to London in the Parliament tyme, where he deliberately consulted, with his especiall friendes: as Iohn Duke of Norffolke, Richarde Erle of Sarisbury, and Lorde Richarde his sonne, which after was Erle of Warwike, Thomas Courtney, Erle of Deuonshire, and Edwarde Broke Lorde Cobham, a man of great wit and much experience: requiryng them, both of advice and counsaile, howe hee might without spot of treason, or colour of vsurpacion, set forth his title, and obteyne his right.

After long consultation, it was thought expedient, first to seeke some occasion and picke some quarell to the Duke of Somerset, which ruled the King, ordered the realme, and most might doe with the Queene: Whome the commons, for the losse of Normandy, worse then a Tode or Scorpion hated, disdained, and abhorred, in so much that diverse euill ruled persons, brake his house, and spoyled his goods, within the blacke Friers of the Cytie of London: which malefactors, according to their desertes, were justily executed and punished. For well knewe the Duke of Yorke and his adherentes, that if the Duke of Somerset sawe or smelled any point of their purposed enterprise, that hee woulde with speare and shielde, with might and mayne, wythstande and repell the same, to the extreme point of death, and to their vtter confusion. Wherefore to abridge his power and to minishe hys aucthoritie, they determined to brynge him into the hatred of the people, and into the disdayne of the Nobylitie. And to be the stronger in the setting foorth of their feate, they, what wyth rewards and faire promises, and what wyth declaration of great enormyties, committed by the kyngs counsailors, agaynst the common wealth, allected and allured to them, lustye bachelars, and actyue persons, of a great number, protesting and declaring, that they nether ment euill, nor thought harme, eyther to the kynges person, or to hys dignitie: but that their intent was, for the reuenging of great iniuries done to the publique wealth, and to persecute and reforme diuers rulers about the kyng, which dayly contrary to right and equitie, vexed and pilled the english people, without reason or measure: so that no man was in suretie, eyther of his owne goodes, or sure of his proper lands or possessions. These great enormities, they caused to be published to the intent that their chefe purpose shoulde not be espied or perceived.

The Duke of Yorke rebelleth, and claymeth tytle to the Crowne.

When the Duke of Yorke had thus framed the entry into hys long entended iorney, he with helpe of his friendes, assembled a great armye in the Marches of Wales, publishing openly, that the cause of his mocion was, for the publique wealth of the realme, and great profite of the commons: which faire tolde tale, allured to him much people, aswell of the chiualrye, as of the mean sort. The king much astonnied we this sodain commocion, by the aduise of his counsail, raysed a great host, and marched forward toward the Duke: but he being of his approch, credibly aduertised, by his espials, diverted from the kings wayes, and toke his iorney towarde London; and having knowledge, that he might not be suffered with his army, to passe through London, he crossed ouer the Thamese at Kingston bridge, and so set foorth towarde Kent, where he knewe that he had both friends, and good willers, and there on Brentheath, a Mile from Derford, and. x. miles from Lon- Brent heath. don, he embattayled himselfe, and encamped his armye very stronglye, both with trenches and artillery. The king being therof advertised, with great diligice brought his army to Blackheath, and there pight his tentes. While both the armies lay thus embattayled, the Black heath. king by the aduise of his counsaill, sent the byshops of Winchester and Elie to the Duke. both to know, what was the cause of so great a tumult and commocion, and also to make a concord, if the requestes of the Duke and his company semed to them consonant to reason, or profytable to the people. The Duke hearing the message of the two bishops, eyther doubting the variable chaunce of mortall battaill, or loking for a better occasion, or a more luckey daye, aunswered the prelates, that his comming was neyther to dampnifie the king, neyther in honor, nor in person, nor yet any good man, but his intent was to remoue from him certaine eaill disposed persons of hys counsayle, which were the bludsuckers of the nobilitie, the pollers of the cleargie, and oppressors of the pore people: amongst whom he chiefly named, Edmound Duke of Somerset, whome if the king would commit to ward, to answere to such articles as agaynst him in open Parliament should be both proponed and proued, he promised not onely to dissolue hys armie and dispatche his people, but also offred himselfe like an obedient subject to come to the kinges presence. and to do him true and faythfull service, according to his truth and bounden dutie. When the Messengers were returned with this reasonable aunswere: The king perceiuyng, that without great bloodshed, he could not bridle the Duke of Yorke, nor without war he could not appease the furious rage of the common people, beyng once set on fire, except he followed their mindes, and graunted their requestes, caused the Duke of Sommerset to be committed to warde, as some say: or to kepe himselfe prinie in his awne house, as other write, till the furye of the people were somewhat asswaged and pacified. Which thing done, the Duke of York the first day of Marche, dissolved his armie, and brake vp his campe, and came to the kinges tent, where besyde his expectacion, and contrary to the promise made by the king, he found the Duke of Sommerset set at large One Duke avand at libertie, whome the Duke of Yorke boldely accused of treason, of briberie, op-cuseth another. pression and many other crymes. The Duke of Sommerset not onely made aunswere to the Dukes objections, but also accused him of high treason towarde the king his sourreigne Lorde, affirming, that he with his fautors, and complices had consulted together, how to obteyne the Crowne and Scepter of the Realme. By meane of which wordes, the King removed straight to London, and the Duke of Yorke as prisoner rode before him, and so was kept a while. The King assembled together a great counsail at Westminster, to heere the accusacions of the two Dukes, the one objecting to the other, shamefull actes, and detestable crymes. But the Duke of Sommerset, which nowe conceived in his minde the thing that shortly followed, incessantly exhorted the Counsaile, that the Duke of Yorke. by compulsion or otherwise might be compelled to confesse his offence, and so beyng attaynted of treason, to be put to execucion, and his children to be taken enemies and aduersaries to their native Countrie: to the entent that by the losse of this onely Prince and his sequele, all civile warre, and inwarde division might cease and be repressed; beseechyng almightic God, that so great an enemie to the king and his blood, might neuer escape punishement, nor continue long in life. The Duke of Sommerset set forth this matter the more vehemently, because he knew perfectly, that the Duke of Yorke dayly studied, how to get the Crowne, and obteyne the gouernaunce, and to depose and destroy both the king and him. But the necessitie of destinie cannot by any mans denise, be eyther letted or interrupted: for many thinges (to common judgements) declared the Duke of Yorkes truth and innocencie in this case. First, his free and voluntary commyng to the king, when he with his power was able to encounter with the kinges puissaunce, which was an open token and manifest argument, that he neyther ment treason, nor yet fraude. Secondarily, his humble submission, his reasonable requestes, and profitable peticions for the poore commons, were judged no poyntes of a man, that desyred sourceigntic or rule aboue other, which thinges he did onely for a cautele (as afterwarde openly appered.) While the Counsaile treated of sauyng or losyng of thys Duke of Yorke, A rumor sprang throughout London, that Edward Erle of Marche, sonne and heyre apparaunt to the sayde Duke, a youg Prince of great wit and much stomacke, accompanied with a strong armie of Marchemen, was commyng towarde London, which tydinges sore astonyed the Queene and the whole counsaile. Beside this, the same very day came Ambassadors from the heddes and Magistrates of the City of Burdeaux, wherof the chiefe were, the Erle of Kendale, and the Lorde Lespar, which signified to the Counsaile, that if they would send an armie into Gascoyn, the Gascoynes would reuert and turne againe to the Englishe part: advertisyng them, that there was in those partes no puyssaunce or garrison of Frenche men, to withstand them, and therefore there was no doubt of the regainyng or reconquest: requiryng them with all diligent celeritie, to take so fayre a pray so openly to them offered, and to minde nothing before the regaining of so fruitfull a Coun-These two thinges sore troubled the heades of the Kinges counsaile, which least this dissencion between two persons, might be the let of outward conquest, they first agreed to set the Duke of Yorke at libertie, and permitted him to returne to his fayre Castell of Wigmore in the Marches of Wales, where he studyed, both howe to displease his enemies, and to obtevne his purpose: And so by meanes of the absence of the Duke of Yorke, which was in maner banished the Court, and the Kings presence, the Duke of Sommerset rose vp in high fauour with the king and the Queene, and his worde onely ruled, and his voyce was onely heard.

The Counsayle of Englande, not forgetting the offer of the Gascous, and that they might nowe have the Citie of Burdeaux, with the Countrie round about, by offer and request, which with great charge and long warre they could scant againe recover or repossesse, appointed the noble souldiour, and valyaunt Capitayne Iohn Lorde Talbot, and Erle of Shrewsburie, to be Chiefetaine of the armie, which should in all haste be transported and conveyed into Aquitayne. The Lordes of Gascoyne, both well pleased and glad of their aunswere, returned into their Countrie, in as secret maner as they from thence departed, declaring to their Nation, the Capitaynes and the power, that was to them comming: exhorting every man to be firme and stable to the king of England and his heyres, vnder whose liberty and freedome they had prospered and reioysed, above three hundred yeres, rather then now to fall into the French captivity: whose taxes were vnreasonable, and whose daylie exactions were to them importable.

When all things were shipped, and winde and weather served, the Erle of Shrewsbury toke his chaunce, and sayled into Gascoyne, where without resistence, he peaceably arryued in the Isle of Madre, where he reposed his armie, being scant three thousand men, and destroyed all the Countrey, betwene Burdeaux and Blay, and toke the strong towne and Castell of Fronsac, and divers other townes and fortresses. The inhabitaunts of Burdeaux hearing of the Erles arrivall, sent to hym messengers in the darke night, thanking and congratulating him for his thether comming, and also requiring him to hasten, and speede his journey towarde their Citie, enforming him, that now the time served for his purpose: and time not taken, was labor misspent. This auncient Fox, and pollitique Capitayne loste not one houre, nor spared one minut, till he came before the Citie of Burdeaux. The Citizens glad of his comming, made not the French Capitaynes, which had the gouernaunce of the towne, eyther parties or priviles of their intent; yet some of them would, that the French men, in securitie both of lyues and goodes should departe out of the towne, but their wyll was no will: for the multitude, abhorring the French seruitude, and embracing the Englishe libertie, which they and their auncestors of many yeres-had tasted, opened one gate, and let in a great parte of the Englishe armie. French Capitaines entending to escape secretly by a posterne, were slayne and taken by The Citic of Burdeaux recothe Lorde Lesper, and other of the Englishe army. After the regayning of Burdeaux, ar-uered by the rived at Blay the Bastarde of Sommerset, Sir Iohn Talbot Lorde Lisle, by his wyfe sonne Englishmen. to the sayde Erle of Shrewsbury, the Lorde Molyns, the Lordes Haryngton and Cameus, syr Iohn Haward, Syr Iohn Montgomerie, syr Iohn Vernon with xxij. C. men with vittayles and municions. When the Erle of Shrewsbury was thus according to his entent of all things furnished and adorned: first he fortified Burdeaux with English men and vittayle; after that he rode into the Countrey abroad, where he obteyned Cities, & gat townes without stroke or dent of sworde: for the poore and needie people being weried with the oppression of their new Landlords rendered their townes, before they were of them requyred, and beside thys the townes and Cities farre distaunt from Burdeaux, sent messengers to the Erle, promising to him both service and obeysaunce. And among other the towne and Castell of Chastillon in Perigot, was to him deliuered by the Frenchmen wpon composition, that they might with their lines safely depart: which towne, the Erle strongly fortified both with men and ordinaunce. The French king lyeng at Towers in Towrayne, being of the Erles actes in Gascoyn credibly enformed, was not a little exasperate and quickned: wherfore he minding to resist the first storme, & repulse the first surge, assembled a great army to the number of. xxij. thousand men, and entering into Aquitayne came to Lusigneum, and from thence accompanied with the Erle of Ponthyure, the Lordes of saint Seuere and Boucat, marched towarde Calice in Gascoyn, and with fayre promises obteyined the towne. And after that towne gayned, the French king diuided his armie into two parties, whereof the one was gouerned by the Erle of Cleremont, sonne in lawe to King Charles, and heyre to the Duke of Burbon, in the which were. xv. thousand men, in whom consisted the waight and peyse of the whole enterprise. This army he appointed to take the next way toward Burdeaux: the other armie whereof he was Capitayn and leader himselfe, accompanied with the peeres and noble men of his realme, he kept and reteyned still beside Caleys, and sent the two Marshalles of Fraunce with xviii. C. men of armes, beside Archers, to besiege the towne of Chastilon in Perigot, & in going thether, they gat a fortresse, which they manned, and so departed to Chastilon, which they enuyroned with a strong siege, and cast high trenches, and made deepe diches on enery side: and in a place where their enimies must come, they layde ordinaunce both great and small, whereof so great a number was never before seene in Fraunce. The Erle of Shrewesbury hearing of these newes, and perceyuing that he must of necessitie encounter and fight with two armies, determined with himselfe, first to assay the least power and weaker puissaunce: wherfore without longer delay, he assembled together eyght. C. horsemen, whereof the Lorde Lisle his sonne, the Lorde Molyns, the Lord Cameus, Syr Edward Hull, syr Iohn Haward, and Syr Iohn Vernon were chiefe, and so marched forward toward Chastylon, appoynting. v. M. foote men vnder the conduct of the Erle of Kendalle, and the Lorde Lespar to followe him with all spede. In his way he assauted the Towre, which the French men had taken, and by force entered, and slue all that he found within, and by the way he met five hundred Frenchmen, goyng a forragyng, of whome he slue the greatest parte, and chased the other to the The french men knowing by these good runners away of the Erles approching, with all diligence left the siege, and retired in good order into the place which they had trenched, ditched, and fortified with ordenaunce. They within the towne seing the siege remoued, sent out worde to the Englishe men that the French men fled. The courageous Erle hearing these newes, and fearing least through long taryeng the birdes might be flowen awaye, not tariyng till his footemen were come, set forward toward his enimies, which were in minde surely to have fled, as they confessed afterward, if the feare of the French kings rebuke, which was not farre of, had not caused them to tarie, and yet in this armie were present, the Marshalles and great Master of Fraunce, the Erle of Ponthyeure, the Senescal of Poythiew, the Lorde Bessire, and many valyaunt Barons and VOL. knights. When the Englishe men were come to the place where the French men were encamped, in the which (as Eneas Siluius testifieth) were three hundred peeces of Brasse. beside divers other small peces, and subtill engines to the English men vnknowne, and nothing suspected, they lighted all on foote, the Erle of Shrewsburie onely except, which because of his age, rode on a little Hackeny, and fought fiercely with the French men, and gat the entrie of their Campe, and by fine force entered into the same. Thys conflict continued in doubtfull judgement of victorie two long houres: during whichfight, the Lords of Montamban and Humadayre, with a great company of French men entered the battayle, and began a newe fielde, and sodainely the Gonners perceyuing the English men to approch neere, discharged their ordinaunce, and slue three hundred persons, nere to the Erle, who perceyuing the imminent icopardie, and subtile labirynth, in the which he and his people were enclosed and wrapped, dispising his awne sauegarde, and desiring the lyfe of his entierly and welbeloued sonne the Lorde Lisle, willed, aduertised, and counsayled him to departe out of the fielde, and to saue himselfe. But when the sonne had aunswered that it was neyther honest nor naturall for him, to leave his father in the extreme icopardie of his lyfe, and that he would taste of that draught. which his father and Parent should assay and beginne; The noble Erle and comfortable Capitaine sayde to him: Oh sonne, sonne, I thy father, which onely hath bene the terror and scourge to the French people so many yeres, which hath subuerted so many townes, and discomfited so manye of them in open battayle, and marciall conflict, neyther canhere die, for the honour of my Countrey, without great laude and perpetuall fame, nor flie or depart without perpetuall shame and continual infamy. But because this is the first journey and enterprise, neyther thy flyeng shall redounde to thy shame, nor thy deather to thy glorie: for as hardie a man wisely flyeth, as a rashe person folishely abideth, therefore the flyeng of me shall be the dishonor, not onely of me and my progenie, but also a discomfiture of all my company: thy departure shall saue thy lyfe, and make thee ableanother tyme, if I be slayne to reuenge my death, and to do honor to thy prince, and profite to his realme. But nature so wrought in the sonne, that neyther desire of lyfe, nor thought of securitie, could withdraw or pluck him from his naturall father: Who considering the constancie of his childe, and the great daunger that they stood in, comforted his souldiours, cheared his Capytaynes, and valiauntly set on his enimies, and slue of them-Ichn Lorde Tal- more in number then he had in his company. But his enimies having a greater company of men, and more abundaunce of ordinaunce then before had bene sene in a battayle, first shot him through the thighe with a handgonne, and slue his horse, and cowardly kylled hym, lyeng on the ground, whome they neuer durst looke in the face, while he stoode on his feete, and with him there dyed manfully his sonne the Lorde Lisle, his bastard sonne Henry Talbot, and syr Edward Hull, elect to the noble order of the Garter, and xxx. valyaunt personages of the Englishe nacion, and the Lorde Molyns was there taken prisoner with. lx. other. The residew of the Englishe people fled to Burdeaux and other places, whereof in the flight, were slavne, aboue a thousand persons. At this battayle of Chastillon, fought the. xiij. day of Iulij, in this yere ended his lyfe Iohn Lorde Talbot, & of his progenie the first Erle of Shrewsburie, after that he with muche fame, more glorie, and most victorie had for his Prince and Countrey, by the space of. xxiiij. yeres and more, valyauntly made warre, and serued the king, in the partes beyonde the sea, whose corps was left on the grounde, and after was found by his friendes, and conueyed to Whitchurch in Shropshyre, where it is intumulate. This man was to the French people a very scourge, and a daylie terror, in so much that as his person was fearefull and terrible to his adversaries present: so his name and fame was spitefull and dreadfull to the common people absent, in so much that women in Fraunce to feare their your children, would crie, the Talbot commeth, the Talbot commeth. After this discomfiture, diders Lordes fled to Burdeaux, but the Erle of Kendall, the Lordes of Montferrant, of Rosayne, and of Dangladas, entered into the Castell of Chastillon, which they by the space

After thys towne was yeelded, the townes of Saint Million, Bybourne and all other, which the Erle of Shrewesbury had conquered, rendered themselves to the Frenche obeysaunce, Burdeaux onely except. The which City being the last refuge, and onely consolation of the Englishe people in Gascoyn, the french king in person with all his puyssaunce strongly besieged and daylie assauted, in the which he more lost then gayned: beside thys, the Englishe men issued out, and courageously fought with their enimies: lykewise did the Citezens, which looking for no fauour at the French kings hande, because of their late conjuration agaynst him, manfully defended themselves, and sore noved and hurt their enemies. But in conclusion both garrisons and the inhabitants oppressed with much penurie, & extreme famine were enforced to render the Citie vpon reasonable conditions, to them by the French king sent and offered: the effect whereof was that no offence, before time committed or done by any of the Citezens should hereafter be imputed, or layde to the charge of any of them. Also that all Englishe men and Gascons might safely depart into Englande, or to Caleys with all their substance, and that the Lordes Lespar Duras, and. xxx. other, should neuer vpon payne of death be found within any of the French kings dominions, which Lord Lesparre after being taken disguised in Gascoyne, was made shorter by the head. When this composition was agreed and sealed, the Englishe men had their shippes and all things necessary for their journey to them deliuered, which when winde and weather serued, were shortly transported into Englande, in the month of October this present yere.

The keping of which duchy was neyther costly, nor troublesome to the Realme of Englande, but both pleasaunt and profitable: for by the soueraigne of that country, yong gentlemen learned the experience of warre, & expert men were promoted to many ryche offices, and great liuinges within the same. The division beswene the two houses of Lancaster and Yorke.

clusion: domesticall'dyscorde, and cyuill discencion began againe to renewe and arvse, within the Realme of Englande, for when the care of outwarde hostilytie (which kepte the myndes of the Princes, in the realme occupied, & in exercise) was taken away and vanished, desire of souereintie & ambicion of preheminence, sodainely sprang out so farre. that the whole Realme was divided into two severall factions, and privat parts. For kyng Henry, discended of the house of Lancastre, claiming the croune from king Henry the fourth, his graund father, first aucthor of this division: and Rycharde Duke of Yorke, as heire to Lionell, the thirde sonne to kyng Edwarde the thirde, wresteled for the game, and stroue for the wager. By reason whereof, the Nobles, aswell as the common people, were into parts divided, to the destruction of manye a man, and to the great ruyne and decay of this regyon. For whyle the one parte studyed to vanquishe and suppresse the other, all common wealth was set asyde, and justice & equitie was cleerely exiled. For the Duke of Yorke, which sore gaped and more thirsted for the superioritie and preheminence, studied, deuysed, and practised all wayes, and meanes, by the which he myght attayne to hvs pretensed purpose, and long hoped desire. And amongest all imaginations, one seemed most necssarye for his purpose, which yet againe was to stirre and prouoke the malyce of all the people, against the Duke of Somerset, who onely ruled the King, and ordered all things at hys pleasure and will: Imaginyng, that he beyng made out of the way, his purpose shoulde shortly come to a good conclusion. Wherefore, to the nobles of the Realme he complayned, & lamented the miserable state and dayly ruine of this noble countrey: noting and affirming, the Duke of Sommerset to be the very roote, & cause of the same, whome he named, and called, an vniust man, a mischeuous person, a tirannicall gouernor, and a couetous counsailor: laiving also great offences to king Henry, saiving, that he was a man, neyther of wit, nor stomacke, neyther meete to be a king, nor apt to gouerne a common wealth, and therefore it was the dutie of the noble men, and great Princes, not onelve to thinke on this weightie matter, but speedely to prouide a remedy, and to set the Realme in an other stay. By which complaints, and perswasions, the Duke of Yorke, so altered the minds of many persons of highe estate, that they liked not the worlde, as it then wauered, nor approued the actes of the king or his counsaile. And because that ambicion and auarice was newly entred into their hartes, they studied sodainly to chaunge all things, and tourne the worlde vpsedowne. When the Duke saw mens appetites, and felt well their mindes, he chieflye entertayned two Richardes, and both Neuelles, the one of Salisburye, the other of Werwike beyng Erles, the first the father, the second the sonne. This Erle of Salisburie was second sonne to Raufe Neuell, Erle of Westmerland, whose daughter the Duke of Yorke had maried, and the sayde Richarde was espoused to Lady Alice, the only childe and sole heire of Thomas Montacute Erle of Salisburie, slaine at the siege of Orleaunce (as before I have declared) of which woman he engendered Richard, Iohn and George: Rycharde the eldest sonne espoused Anne, the sister and heire of the entire blood to Lorde Henry Beauchampe Erle, and after Duke of Warwike, in whose right and tytle he was created and named Erle of Warwike, and not by his awne progeny or parentage. This Richard was not only a man of excellent qualities, but also from his youth, by a certaine practise or naturall inclination, to set himselfe forwarde with wittie and gentle demeanour, to all persons of high and of lowe degree, that among all sortes of people, he obteyned great loue, fauour and credence: which things daylie more and more encreased, by his abundant liberalitie, and plentifull house keeping, then by his riches, aucthoritie, or high parentage: by reason of which doings, he was in suche fauour and estimation amongst the common people, that they judged him able to doe all things, and that without him, nothing to be well done. For which causes his aucthoritie shortly so fast increased, that which way he bowed, that way ranne the streame, and what parte he aduaunced, that side gat the superioritie.

When the Duke of Yorke had fastened his Chaine, betwene these two strong pillers, he with his friendes, so seriously wrought, and so pollitiquely handled his businesse, that the Duke of Sommerset was arrested in the Quenes great Chamber, and sent to the Towre The Duke of of London, where he without great solempnitie kept a heavie Christmasse: agaynst whome Sommerset arrested of Treain open Parliament, were layd diners & heynous articles of high treason, aswell for the son. losse of Normandie, as for the late mischaunce which happened in Guien. The king at this tyme was sicke at Clarendon, and so conueyed to London, by reason whereof, no finall determinacion proceded, in this great & waightie cause, but it was put in suspence, till the next assemble of the high Court of Parliament. Duryng which tyme the king either of his awne minde, or by the Queenes procurement, caused the Duke of Sommerset, to be set at libertie: by which doyng, grewe great enuy and displeasure, betwene the king and divers of his Lordes, and in especiall, betwene the Duke of Yorke and the kinges linage. And to aggravate more the malice newe begon, the Queene, which then ruled the rost, and bare The Duke of the whole rule, caused the Duke of Sommerset to be preferred to the Captainship of Ca-Sommerset alice, wherewith, not onely the Commons, but also many of the Nobilitie, were greatly grieued and offended, saiyng: that he had lost Normandie, and so would he doe Calice. The Duke of Yorke and his adherentes perceivyng, that neyther exhortacion serued, nor accusement preuayled agaynst the Duke of Sommerset, determined to reuenge their quarrell, and obteyne their purpose, by open warre and Marciall aduenture, and no lenger to slepe in so waightie a businesse. So he beyng in the Marches of Wales, associate with his speciall friendes, the Erles of Sarisbury, and Warwike, the Lorde Cobham, and other, assembled an army, and gathered a great power, and like warlike persons, marched toward London. The Londoners heeryng of so great a multitude, commyng toward the Citie, were greatly astonied and much abashed: for every person considered his awne part, that eyther with holdyng with the one side, or beyng contrariant to the other, or medlyng with no part, he should incurre indignacion or displeasure. The King beyng credibly enformed, of the great armie commyng toward him, assembled an host, intendyng to mete with the Duke in the North part, because he had to many friendes aboute the Citic of London, and for that cause with great speede and small lucke, he beyng accompanied with the Dukes of Sommerset and Buckingham, the Erles of Stafford, Northumberland, and Wilshire, with the Lorde Clifford, and divers other Barons, departed out of Westminster, the. xx. day of May, toward the towne of Saint Albones: of whose doynges the Duke of Yorke beyng advertised by his espials, with all his power coasted the Countries, and came to the same towne, the third day next ensuyng. The king heryng of their approchyng, sent to him messengers, straightly chargyng and comaundyng him, as an obedient subject, to kepe the peace, and not as an enemie to his naturall Countrie, to murder and slea his awne Countrimen and proper Nacion. While king Henry, more desyrous of peace than of The first batwarre, was sendyng foorth his Orators, at the one ende of the towne: the Erle of War- tayle at S. Alwike with the Marchemen, entered at the other ende of the towne, and fiercely set on the bons. Kinges forwarde, and them shortly discomfited. Then came the Duke of Sommerset. and all the other Lordes with the kinges power, which fought a sore and cruell battaile, in the which many a tall man lost his life: but the Duke of Yorke sent euer fresh men, to succor the werie, and put new men in places of the hurt persons, by which onely pollecie, the kinges armie was overthrowne and dispersed, and all the Chieftaynes of the fielde almost slaine and brought to confusion. For there dyed under the signe of the Castel, Edmond Duke of Sommerset, who long before was warned to eschew all Castelles, and besyde him, lay Henry the second Erle of Northumberlande, Humfrey Erle of Stafford, sonne to the Duke of Buckingham, Iohn Lord Clifford, and. viij. thousand men and more. Humfrey Duke of Buckingham beyng wounded, and Iames Butler Erle of Wilshire and Ormond, seyng Fortunes lowryng chaunce, left the King post alone, and with a great number fled away. This was the ende of the first battaile at Saint Albones, which was fought on the Thursday before the feast of Pentecost, beyng the xxiij. day of May. In this. xxxiij. yere of the kinges reigne, the bodyes of the noble men were buried in the Monasterye, and the meane people in other places. This Edmond Duke of Som-

merset left behinde him three sonnes, Henry, Edmond, and Iohn, which to the extremitle of death, tooke part with the line of King Henry.

After this victoric obteyned by the Duke of Yorke and his companions, he remembred that he had oftentymes declared and published abrode, the only cause of his warre to be. for the advancement of the publike wealth, and to set the realme in a more commodious estate, and a better condicion. Wherfore, he vsyng all lenitie, mercie, and bounteousnesse would not once touch or apprehende the body of King Henry, whome he might both haue slaine, and vtterly destroyed, considering that he had him in his warde and gouernance. But with great honor and due reuerence conveyed him to London, and so to Westminster, to the which place was sommoned and appoynted a great assemble of the three estates, commonly called a Parliament, which beganne the. ix. day of July, in the which session, the Duke of Gloucester was openly declared a true Prince, both to the king and the realme. Besyde this it was enacted, that no person should eyther judge or reporte, any poynt of vntruth, of the Duke of Yorke, the Erles of Sarisbury, and Warwike, for commyng in warlike maner agaynst the king at Saint Albones, considering that their attempt and enterprice, was onely to see the kinges person in safegarde and sure kepyng, and to put and aliene from him, the publique oppressors of the common wealth: by whose misgouernaunce, his life might be in hazard, and his aucthoritie hang in a very small threede. In which Parliament also the Duke of Yorke was made Protector of the Realme, and the Erle of Sarisbury was appoynted to be Chauncelor, & had the great Seale to him deliwered: and the Erle of Warwike was elected to the office of the Capteyne of Calice, and territories of the same. As this device was pollitiquely invented and so was the sequele therof to the first aucthors, both honourable and profitable, if fortunes ship had sayled all one way. For by this practice, the rule and regiment of the whole realme, consisted onely in the heades and orders of the Duke and the Chauncelor, and all the warlike affayres and businesse, rested principally in the Erle of Warwike, and so among them it was agreed that king Henry should stil reigne, in name & dignity, but neyther in dede, mor in aucthoritie: not myndyng eyther to depose or destroy the sayde king, least they might sodainely proubke and stirre the fury and yre of the common people against them: which for his holinesse of life and abundant elemencie, was of the simple sort much fa-After which aucthoritie geuen, these three persons ruled uoured, and highly estemed. the realme, and did all thinges after their awne discrecions (which without battail or manslaughter, might have easely deprived the sayde king both of life and land.) And first they amoued from the privile counsaile, all such persons as the King loued, or the Queene fauored, puttyng in their places men of their sect and confederacie, & chaunging officers throughout the realme at their will and disposition: so that the olde spoken prouerbe here tooke place: New Lordes, newe lawes: such lippes, such lettuce. And yet in all their rule, I finde no mencion made of differryng justice, or of their pollyng, or their brybery, as was openly proued by suche as gouerned before their time: sauving that they toke out of § Sanctuary of Westminster, John Holland Duke of Exceter, being repugnant to the order taken and concluded, in the last Parliament, and conveyed him to Pomfret Castell. Which takvng out, was accoumpted an execrable and a dampnable offence, of diverse of the spiritualtie, and especially of the Abbot of Westminster, and his Monkes, and this is the most spot that was (as I could read) euer most to be cast in the Dukes fame, duryng his Protectorshippe, or of his connsayle.

But that venemous worme, that dreadfull Dragon, called disdaine of superioritie, which hath consumed the blood of so many abble Princes, and destroyed the linage of so many gouernors, in all Realmes and kingdomes, aswell Pagan as Christian, could not abstaine from incensyng the hartes of Lorde Henry Beauford, newly come to the Duchie of Sommerset, by the death of Duke Edmond his father, which at the battaile of Saint Albons, (as you have hearde before rehersed) lost his life, and of Humfrey Duke of Buckingham, whose sonne and heyre named Humfrey, Erle of Stafforde, tasted the same cup, at the forenamed conflict, and of other Lordes and men of authoritye, fauouryng and folowyng the part of King Henrye, whiche not onely bewayled and had compassion of the vasure condicion, and waveryng estate of hys rule and Lordeshippe, perceiving openly, wherevnto the cloked gentlenesse, and subornate fashion of the Duke of Yorke tended and crept vppe: But also thought it necessarye and convenient, to purvey for a remedy, or the mischiefe happened. Wherefore with open mouthes and fierce courages, they came to Quene Margaret, informing her that it was not honorable, but a reproche and infamy to the king, to have one to be a Protector and governor of him and his realme, as who woulde say: that he was eyther a childe, which had neede of a Norice to feede him with pappe, or an innocent creature, which must be ruled by a Tutor, asserteyning her father, that the Duke of Yorkes onely intent was, under the colour of his Protectorship, sodainely to destroy and depose the king, when he least thought of it, and therefore willed her in so quick a mischiefe, to prouide a hastie remedie, if she loued the safegarde of her husbande, or the tuition of her selfe. The Quene having a wit, more then the common sort of women haue, and considering the estate of her husband, the condition of her selfe, and the perill of her onelye sonne, thought it necessarye to plucke the sworde of aucthoritie out of their handes, which vnder colour of rulyng vnder others, desired to be gouernors, and superiors themselves. Wherfore, a great counsaile was called at Grenewich, where the Duke of Yorke was discharged of his Protectorship, & the Erle of Sarisbury also, was dismissed of his office: which malicious mutacion among the Nobilitie, caused sodaine alteracions and sedicious commocions to spring and aryse in the commonaltie, and in especiall within the Citie of London. For a youg Merchaunt, which before tyme had bene in divers Cityes, within the Coun-

trie of Italy, and there prohibited by the Magistrates and rulers, to vse or weare any weapon, eyther inuasyue or defensive, chalenged an Italian in Chepeside, for wearing of a dagger, confutyng him with the lawes of his awne Countrey, which like a colerick knaue and presumpteous person, so disdainefully and with suche tauntes and checkes autiswered! the Marchaunt, that he not wylling to suffer so open a reproche, in so publique a streete, and that of so proude a villeyne, toke by force from him his dagger, and with the same a little cut his crowne, and cracked his pate. This Italian in great haste, complayned tothe Mayre of this offence, which at the next Courte, holden at the Guyldhall, by the consent of the whole senate, sent for the offender, and declarying to him his cryme, commaunded him to warde, whereof divers other light Marchauntes within the Citie, sore abhorring the Italian nation, for licking the fat from their beardes, and taking from themtheir accustomed lyuing, by reason that the sayde straungers imported and transportedinto and out of this realme, all such marchaundises, commodities, and necessaries, as the Englishe men onely were accustomed to doe, assembled together in great plumpes, and by force compelled the Major to deliner the prisoner out of Newegate: and yet this multitude, with thys doyng nothing saciate nor appeased, like madde persons and frantique folcs. ranne to the severall houses of dyners Venecians, Lucases, and Florentines, and them spoyled, robbed and rifled, without reason or measure. The Maire perceyving this great Aleade riot in enormitie, assembled a great number of substanciall & graue Citezens, which not without the Citic of London. great blodshed, & mayming of sundric persons, finally appeased their rage, and caused the people to depart to their houses. The beginner of this commocion, and sodaine vprore, eyther perswaded by his friendes or fearing his chaunce, which for his first fact might sodainely ensue, departed to Westminster, and there regestred himselfe as a sanctuary man. The Quene which ruled all things, hearing of this great riote and vnlawfull! misdemeanour, sent the Dukes of Excester and Buckyngham, accompanied with many other noble men to London, with a commission of over and determiner, for the punishement of thys outragious offence, and sedicious crime. When the Maior of the Citie, the two Dukes, and the two chiefe Justices, were set in Guyldhall for the performance of their commission, and began to call the empanels for the enquirie, as the vse and order is, di-uers light witted, and lesse brayned persons of the citie, priuely armed them, and by the ringing of Bow bell, thought to assemble together a great multitude of their minde and opinion, and so by force and might to take from the kepers all such prisoners, as were before apprehended, for the late committed robbery and riot, as they were goyng to their triall or arreignment. But thys great tumult and sodaine furie was by discreete and sage Citezens a little and little appeased, and finally quenched, but in the meane season, the Dakes and other commissioners, beyng vntruely aduertised, that they were in icopardie of their lyfes, sodaynely departed from the Guyldhall, and left their inquirie for that day. The Major on the next day perceyving how the grudge rose, called a common counsaile, wherof the number was, one hundred, foure score and odde persons, and by aucthoritie of the same, orderned that all Wardeyns of misteries should assemble their felowship in their particular Halles, where they should exhort them to the observation of the kings peace, and keeping of good order within the Citie: and if they espied any man, eyther prone or redie to rayse a rumour or desirous of the deliveraunce of such as were accused. and in captive custody, that their names should be secretly written, and covertly delyvered to the Lorde Major: which pollitique doyng, finally ended the outragious doing of the insolent people, after which appearing the commissioners returned to the Guyldhall, where many of the robbers were attainted, and after condignely put to execution, beside divers great fynes and raunsomes payde, which were set vpon many Marchaunts, for winking at these doings, or assenting to the same.

The French men inuade the coastes of England.

The French nacion, heavyng of this domesticall diuision, and civill dissencion, within the realme of Englande, much desiryng to be reuenged of old displeasures, and great damages, which they had so many yeres borne, and sustayned by the englishe people, appointed two Nauies to inuade and destroy the townes and portes, adioyning to the riuage of the Sea. The Capitayne of the one armye was William Lorde Pomiers, and of the other, sir Piers Bressy, a great ruler in Normandy. These two Captaynes, when opportunitie of wether served, set vp their sayles at the mouth of Sayn, & there severed themselues, the one Westward, & the other Eastward, which was sir Peter de Bressy. lusty captayne sailyng al the cost of Sussex, and Kent, durst not once take lande, till he arrived in the downes, and there having by a certayne espial perfite notice, that the towne of Sandwich was neyther peopled, nor fortifyed, because that a little before, the chiefe rulers of the towne, were from thence departed, for to auoyde the pestilenciall plague, which sore there infected, and slew the people, entred the hauen, spoyled the towne, and after such poore stuffe as he there founde, riffled and taken, he fearing an assemble of the countrey, shortly returned. The Lorde Pomiers likewise toke his course Westwarde, and by night brent certayne houses in Foulnay, and with a little pillage retired into Brittayn. These two aduentures and fortunate chaunces, which to them in comparison of their great expences, in their iorneys were scant worth one poore mite, or single farthing: The Frenche writers delate, setforth, and paint with penne, as thoughe they had gotten Cresus riches, and Alexanders kingdoms: forgetting how manye hundred thousande pounds they had lost in few yeres before preceding, as to all men, being indifferent readers of this History, playnely appereth. But verelye some breade is better to the hungrye persone, then no breade, and a small gayne of him, which desireth recourry, is a great pleasure, and therefore the French aucthors make of a litle, much, and yet their much, (all things consydered) is in effect nothing at all.

The Scots in-

The Scottes also not degenerating from their olde mutabilitie, nor altering their auncient conditions, from their accustomed and vsuall vntruth, entered into Northumberland, king Iames the second, then beyng there in person, and burned small houses, & little cotages: but in the very middes of their great enterprise, they hearing of the Duke of Yorke, marching towarde them with a great armie, with much paine, and no gaine in all haste reverted to their Countrey. Let vs passe over for a time all outward invasions, and returne to our owne domesticall debate and daylie discorde.

First

First not forgetting, that whyle forreyp enimies inuaded the outwarde partes, and extreme confines of thys troublous realme, a great conflict was attempted betweene the Lorde Egremond, and the sonnes of the Erles of Salisburie: in the which fray, many persons were slavue, and a great number hurt. The Lorde Egremond in thys great tumult could not escape, but by force was taken and brought before the kinges counsayle, and there the king and the Quene to shew themselves to all persons indifferent, adjudged him to pay to the Erle of Salisburie a great summe of money, and for his heynous offence, done agaynst the kinges lawes, he was committed to the Gayle of Newgate, within the citie of London, out of the which prison, by helpe of his fautors, he secretly escaped, and sodainely departed, to the great vexation of the Shriefes of London, at the time being. Quene Margaret whose breath ruled, and whose word was obeyed about the king and his counsayle, wythin the realme of Englande, entending the destruction of the Duke of Yorke and his friendes, which deuise shee thought not meete to be practised neere to the Citie of London, because she well perceyued the Duke of Yorke to be had in more estimation among the Citezens and commonaltie, then the king her husband, or her awne person: caused the king to make a progresse into Warwikeshire, for hvs health and recreation, and so with Hawking and hunting, came to the Citie of Couentrey, where were divers wayes studied prively, to bring the Queene to her hartes ease, and long desired purpose: which was the death and destruction of the Duke of Yorke, the Erles of Salisburie and Warwick. And for the furniture of thys matter, all these three poble men were sent for to Couentre by the kings letters under his privile seale, to which place the foresayde Lordes, suspecting no treason, nor putting diffidence in any creature, obediently resorted, but in the Serpent lurcking under the grasse, and under sugred speeche. was hid pestyferous poyson, so that if these noble men admonished by their friends, had not sodaynely departed, theyr lyues had bene shortned, but by secret admonicion of their good wyllers (to whom no earthly treasure is comparable) they anoyded this net, and narowly escaped the snare, wherevpon for the securitie and tuition of their lyues, the' Duke of Yorke departed to Wygmore in the Marches of Wales, the Erle of Salisburie resorted to his fayre Castell of Middelham in the Northcountrie, and the Erle of Warwike sayled to the towne of Caleys. Although the bodies of these noble personages were by this seditious and fraudulent meanes a sunder separated as ye have heard: yet their hartes were knit and coupled in one, neuer forgettyng, but daylie studyeng, both howe to be revenged of the olde dispites and malicious attempts, agaynst them committed and imagened, and also howe to compasse their purposes, and to get the superioritie and ouer hand about their euill wyllers, and apparaunt enemies: for which causes their letters neuer ceased, their messengers neuer slept, nor their pursses were at no time shut. what for entertayning olde friends, and obtayning of newe confederates, till king Henry and his alves were driven away, and expelled clerely out of this realme, as after shall lawe: but whatsoeuer the cause was, in suche sorte as before I have declared, he was vsed. Thus much Hall.

King Henry and his adherentes, perceiving that the Duke of Yorke lay still, and made no open apparaunce of assemble or commocion, returned to London, and there called a great counsaile, openly declaring how the French king perceiving the realme of England vexed, and troubled with civile dissencion, and mutuall discord, was not afeard to sende his Admiralles on the coastes of Kent, and Deuonshire, and there to spoyle townes, burne houses, and murder the Englishe people: which cause also animated the Scottes to make Rodes and incursions, into the confines and Marches of the realme, to the great losse and detriment of the kinges liege people: which two Nations were set continually to grieve and vexe this his realme of Englande, till they perceyued a perfite concorde, and an vnfayned amitie to be concluded and knit together, between him and his consanguinitie, and the other sort of the contrary part and confederacie. And to the entent that he would be the chiefe aucthor of peace, and principall styrrer of this vertuous concorde, he promised so gently to entertaine the Duke of Yorke, and his fautors, that all olde grudges, beyng not onely inwardly forgotten, but also outwardly forgeuen. should be the cause of perpetual love, between them & their friendes: of which concorde should ensue familiaritie among the Lordes, and concorde among the Commons, which to all vtter enemies shoulde be an inwarde grudge, and to this realme a great glorie and profite. This deuice was of all men present well taken and adjudged, both honourable to the king, and profitable to his realme. Wherevoon divers grave and sad persons were sent to the Duke of Yorke, and all other the great estates of the realme, which sence the battaile of Saint Albones neuer met, came, nor commoned together, commaundyng them for reasonable causes, and great consideracions, to resort vnto the kinges Palayce, without delay. At this commaundement came to London Richard Duke of Yorke, and Richard Erle of Sarisburie, accompanied with a great number of meniall seruauntes, and friendes, least peraduenture they for lacke of ayde, might have bene betrapped, or they had knowlege, or were warned. After them came from Calice to London, the Erle of Warwike, whose seruitures were apparailed in red Cotes, embraudered with white ragged These three Lordes were lodged within the Citie: the Duke, at Baynardes Castell, the Erle of Sarisbury at the Herber, and the Erle of warwike at his place besyde the Gray friers. About the same season, with no lesse companie of men, came to the Citie, the yong Duke of Sommerset, the Erle of Northumberland, and the Lord Clifford, whose fathers were slain at S. Albons: and after them resorted the Dukes of Excester and Buckingham, the Lorde Egremond, and most of all the nobilitie of this realme. The Duke of Yorke and his mates were lodged within the Citie, and the Duke of Sommerset and all his friendes, soiourned without Temple barre, Holborne, and other places of the Suburbes: as who sayde, that as the Iewes disdayned the company of the Samaritans, so the Lancastrians abhorred the familiaritie of the Yorkishe linage. After the commyng of these Lordes to the Citie, the king, the Quene, with all their familie shortly followed, & were lodged in the Bishoppes Palayce of London. These Lordes had such great companies attendyng on them (for one had five hundreth, other had five hundreth, and divers foure hundreth persons in a band) that continuall watch was kept by the Major and senate of London, aswell by day as by nyght, for the preservacion of the peace, and continuance of good order. The Lordes which lodged within the Citie, kept a dayly cousaile at the black Friers, within the Citie. The other part solournyng without the walles, assembled likewise in the Chapter house of Westminster. Thus every part both studyed his awne profite and aduauncement, and also howe to reuenge thinges done to them, by their foes and aduersaryes. But the Archebishop of Cauntorbury, and other vertuous prelates, so exhorted, applyed, and perswaded both the parties (although a great while they were neyther heard, nor regarded) that in conclusion, they brought them to a communicacion, where after long altercation, aswell of olde injuries, and newe displeasures, by the one

faction, agaynst the other comitted, the feare of outward hostilitic, and foren invasion so mollefyed their indurate heartes, that they outwardly promisyng to forget all olde rancors, and auncient displeasures, sealed and signed writynges, the one euer after to be friend to the other, and altogether to be obedient to the king, and fauorers to his friendes. and enemies to his enemies. This concorde was so joyfull to the superiors, and so embraced of the common people (who euer beare the burthen when Princes be at controuersy) that for the open apparaunce, and demonstracion of this godly concord, publike Processions were appoynted, to be solempnly celebrate within the Church of Saint Paule, in the Citie of London, on the day of the Conception of our Ladie, in the Moneth of Marche. At which solempne feast, the king in habite royall hauyng his Diademe on his Agenerall proheade, kept his estate in Procession, before whome went hande in hande, the Duke of by the King and Sommerset, the Erle of Sarisburie, the Duke of Excester and the Erle of Warwike, and y Peres of the so one of the one faction, and another of the other sect, and behinde the king the Duke of Yorke led the Queene, with great familiaritie to all mens sightes: But wo worth dissimulacion, and false flattering countenaunce: fye on double entendement, and cloked adulacion, which hath bene the common seruitures in all Palaces, both Emperiall, and Regall, and by their onely pestiferous venime, and secrete malice, hath bene the destruction of many a noble man, and the confusion of a great number of true meaning and faythfull persons. But the wise man, whiche sayth: Wo to the that hast a double heart, meant, that dissimulacion once espyed, should be the arrowe wherewith the dissembler should be wounded. As by this cloked Pageant, and dissemblyng Procession, hereafter A dissimuliag shall plainely be declared. For their bodies were joyned by hande in hand, whose heartes were farre asunder: their mouthes louingly smyled, whose courages were enflamed with malice: their wordes were swete as suger, and their thoughtes were all enuenomed: but all these dissimulyng persons, tasted the vessell of wo, as the wise man sayd: and fewe or none of this companie were vnblotted, or vndestroyed by this dolorous drinke of dissimulacion. But this cancard worme and pestiferous Coccatrice, not onely at this tyme reigned in England, but also did much harme in the Court of Fraunce: for John Duke of Alaunson, which before had bene prisoner, and well enterteyned in the realme of England, and after Captain generall of the warres in Fraunce against the Englishe men, highly fauoured, and of great estimacion in the Frenche kinges house, was by such as he most trusted, and vsed most familiaritie withall, and whom he had greatly promoted, and highly exalted, accused of high treason, as enemie to his king, and traytor to his Countrie, allegying that he long before that tyme had conspired with the Englishe men, to cause them once againe to recouer the Duchie of Normandie: wherevoon by the order of the lawe, he there suffered death very vniustly, as divers Aucthours affirme, whereof one sayth: John Duke of that kinges seekyng treason, shall finde lande, and the deniall of a princes desyre, was Alaunson executed in the invented destruction of the innocent Naboth. Well let vs nowe leave the cloked col- France. lusion, that remayned in Frauce, and returne to the open dissimulacion, which nowe appered in England.

As fier being enclosed in a straight place, will by force vtter his flame, and as the course of water astricted and letted, will flow and brust out in continuaunce of tyme: so this cancard Crocodile, and subtile serpent, could not long lurke in malicious heartes, but in conclusion she must (according to her nature) appere and shewe her selfe. For after this apparant concord (according to the very nature of dissimulacion) diverse noble men of birth, but not stable of worde, puttyng from them honour, truth, and honestie, forgat their oth, and brake their promise, and advanced forth the Banner of displeasure, and the flagge of malice. So a man may see, that such persons regarde neyther their awne peculiar profite, nor the publique wealth of theyr native Countrie, nor yet passe of an othe, or promise breakyng, to whome discorde is pleasant, and dissencion is dilectable. For not long after this dissimuled amitie, a certeine fray, eyther by chaunce, or of a thing A fray made prepensed, was made vpon a yoman of the Erles of Warwike, by a seruiture of the kings, when the Erles of Warwikes ser-

in the which the Assaylant was sore hurte, but the Erles man fled. The kings meyniall servauntes, seing their felow hurt, and the offendor escaped, assembled in great number, and watched the Erle, returning from the Cousaile towarde his Barge, and sodainly set on him the yomen with swordes, and the Blacke garde with spittes, and fyre forkes. After long fight and many of the Erles men may med and wounded, by helpe of his friendes, he toke a Whirry, and so escaped to London: whome the Queene incontinent commaunded to be apprehended, and as a captive and prisoner, to be sent to the Tower of London, where (if he had bene then taken) he had shortly ended his dayes. By this vuhappy fray, and sodaine chaunce of malice, there arose such dayly and terryble warre, that every man was in trouble, and no person was in quiet. For after this displeasure done to the Erle, and the Queenes good minde toward him, by his secrete friendes privily reveled, he with all diligence, tooke his journey to Warwike, and after into Yorkeshire, where he found the Duke of Yorke, and the Erle of Salisbury, declarying to them the assault of the Kinges servauntes, and the pretensed purpose of the fraudulent Queene. After which complaint made, he fearyng least by long absence, he might be deposed or defrauded of his Captainship of Calice, with great speede embarked himselfe, and sayled thither, dayly expecting and lokyng what wave the Duke of Yorke would take, for atchieuyng his long intenced purpose. After whose departure, the Duke of Yorke, and the Erle of Salisbury, somewhat styrred and moued with his double dealyng, began to grudge and murmure: affyrmyng that in the Queene rested nothing but fraude and feminine malice, which rulyng the king at her pleasure and will, studyed nothing so much, as the destruction of the nobilitie, and peeres of the realme. After long consultacion had, it was agreed, that the Erle with a warlike company, should march toward the king, & complaine both to him of the manifest injury done to his sonne, and also of the vnkinde breache of the sworne amitie and late agreement, in which sute, if he did prevaile, he then should not omit the occasion to him geven, in reuengyng the displeasures to him done, by the Queene and her sinister Counsaylors, which euill and vngodly ordered the subjectes of the whole Realme.

After this deuise made and concluded, the Erle of Salisburye removed from Middleham castell, accompanied with foure or five thousand men, and toke his way through Lancashire, and Shropshire, towarde London. In the meane season the Queene, which was assisted and ruled, by the Dukes of Somerset and Buckingham, having the vigilant eie and circumspect braine, of a pollytique governor: imagined that the Erle of Warwicke had kindeled this fire, and begun this tumult, to the entent (according to his pretensed purpose) to set the Duke of Yorke in the siege royall, and high throne of the realme; For which causes, she beyng a woman of no small wit, nor litle pollecie, conceiving in her opinion, that it was no boote to make any farther concord or league with her aduersaries, and heavyng of the Erle of Salisburies setting forwarde, wyth a company of armed men and archers: assembled together a great cousail, to provide a remedie, for that imminent mischiefe, and (as in a multitude oftentimes it happeneth, so many heades, so many wits) so dyuers were in opinion, that neyther people nor weapon should be stirred, till the Erle approched: doubting whether he came to demaunde warre or peace, or to aske iustice, and to reforme wrong. Other, otherwise thought, and were of a contrary opinion, making the foundation of their argument, that the raysing of people, and assemble of Souldiours by him, could signifie no peace, nor treatie of concorde: except a man should saye, that intreating for fauour with naked sworde in hande, were an humble submission and a meeke request: which onely consideration, moved them to say, that as force with force, ought to be repelled, so he with a great power, or he came into the middest of the realme, should of necessitie be encountered and (if fortune would serue) vtterly destroyed. This sentence toke place, and without delay, Syr Iames Twichet Lorde Awdeley, because his seignorie and power lay in those partes, where the Erle should passe, was appointed to meete with him, and to geue him battayle, if he sawe cause or place conuenient, and the Queene followed after. The Lorde Awdeley, according to his commission, assembled aboue ten thousand men, and knowing by his Espials, which way the Erle kept, approched neere to him on a faire plaine, called Blore heath, within a myle of the Blore heath field, towne of Drayton, in the countye of Salope, commonly called Shropshire. The Erle perceyning by the liverie of the Souldiours, that he was circumvented and likely to be trapped with the Queenes power, determined rather there to abide the aduenture with fame and honor, then farther to flie, with losse and reproche: and so encamped himselfe all the night, on the side of a little brooke, not very brode, but somewhat deepe. In the morning early, being the day of Saint Tecle, he caused his Souldiors to shoote their flightes, towarde the Lorde Awdeleys company, which lay on the other syde of the sayd water, and then he and all his company made a signe of retraite. The Lord Awdeley, remembryng not onely the trust that he was put in, but also the Queenes terrible commaundement, (which was to bring to her presence the Erle of Salisbury, quicke or deade) blew yp his trumpet, and did set foorth his vaward, and sodainely passed the water. The Erle of Salisbury which knewe the sleightes and pollicies of warlike affayres, sodainly returned. and shortlye encountered with the Lorde Awdeley and his chiefe Captaynes, or the residue of his armie coulde passe the water. The fight was sore and dreadfull. The Erle desirying the sauving of his lyfe, and his aduersaryes couetying his destruction, fought sore for the obtaining of their purpose, but in conclusion, the Erles army, as men desperate of ayde and succor, so egerly fought, that they slue the Lorde Audeley, and all his Captaynes, and discomfited all the remnant of his people. In this battaile were slaine, xxiiii. hundreth persons, but the greatest plague lighted on the Chesshire men, because one halfe of the shire, was on the one part, and the other on the other part, of the which number were sir Thomas Dutton, sir Iohn Dunne, & sir Hugh Venables. But the Erles two sonnes, the one called sir Iohn Neuell, and the other sir Thomas, were sore wounded, which soberly iourneigng into the North Countrie, thinkyng there to repose themselves. were in their iorney apprehended by the Quenes friendes, and conveyed to Chester: but their kepers deliuered them shortly, or else the Marche men had destroyed the Gayles. Such fauour had the Commons of Wales, to the Duke of Yorkes band and his affinitie, that they could suffer no wrong to be done, nor euill worde to be spoken of him or his friendes.

Also this yere one named Iohannes Fauscius, a Germain, first found out the noble Printing science of Imprintyng in the Citie of Mentz. But Polidore sayth, it was first inuented by one Iohannes Euthenlergius, a knight, who also within. xvj. yeres after did inuent the ynke which the Printers now vse.

After this battayle, the Duke of Yorke not only perceyuing that the destruction of him and his friendes was intended (as by this last conflict was apparauntly declared) but also remembring, that all his counsailes and privile intents, were nowe opened to the king and the Quene, thought it meete neyther lenger to dissimule, nor farther to keepe scilence: did therefore with a courageous hart, as well for the obteyning of the crowne, as for the tuition and safegard of him & his friendes, determine no lenger to sleepe in hys den, but with all diligence to set forth his businesse and avaunce forth his bunner. And therefore sending for the Erle of Salisbury his felow and compere in all his doings, counsailes, and fortunes (after long communication had of the Queenes misgouernaunce, and how she without their assent, did all things at her will and pleasure) determined to raise a great armie, and by fine force either to die or win their purpose. What should I say, men were assembled, friends were sent for, and a puyssaunt armie was gathered, both of Northren men and Welshmen, which in good order came into the Marches of Wales, adioyning to Shropshire, where they determined either to abide their enimies, or to meete them if they marched forward.

The king was not ignoraunt of this assemble, nor yet vnaduertised of the Dukes intent: wherefore to resist the mischiefe at the beginning, he caused commissioners to be made, and sent into every parte of the realme, where he suspected eyther to have assured friendes.

friendes, or indifferent favorers, for men and money: by reason of which commaundement, a great number was assembled. Many for the love they bare to the king, but more for the feare that they had of the Queene, whose countenance was so fearefull, and whose looke was so terrible, that to all men, agaynst whome shee tooke a small displeasure, her frowning was their vudoing, and her indignation was their death. The king accompanied with the Dukes of Sommerset & Excester, and other of the lyne of Lancaster, determined cleerely to set on the Duke of Yorke and his confederates, and them by force eyther vtterly to vanquishe, or by pollecie to attrap, and bring to confusion, wherevpon in hope of good luck, the king with his armie by long marching, came neere to the Duke of Yorke, which was strongly incamped, a little from the towne of Ludlow, neere adjoyning to the confines of Wales, to whome not long before, was come his trustie friend Richarde Erle of Warwike, with a great number of expert men in marciall feates, whom he had brought with him from Calice, wherof two were men of approved pollecy, in the warres of Normandie and Guyen, the one called Andrew Trollop, and the other John Blunt. These armies thus lyeng, the one in the vewe and sight of the other, studied all meanes and policies, how to take advantage eche of other, and how with lesse icoperdy, the one might set on the other. The Duke perceyuing by reason of his expert Capitaynes, a way how he might easely dampnifie and discomfite his enemies, thought no lenger to sleepe his purpose, but manfully to geue the onset and so with his secret friends and Captaines, determined the next morning early to beginne the battayle, and set on the king and his armie, or he were readie or in aray. But of this deuise succeeded nothing, nor of this imagination proceded any effect: For Andrew Trollop and other the Calicians, which were men of great knowledge and of much experience, and had lived by the kings wages, more then a few yeres, perceyuing now y they should fight agaynst their souereine Lorde himselfe (whose friend they esteemed before that time, the Erle of Warwike ever to have bene taken and reputed, and not his enemie or destroyer) in the dead of the night, before the day of battayle secretly departed from the Dukes Campe, & submitted themselves to the King, admonishing him of all things prepared and deuised, for his losse and destruction. If these auncient Capitaynes were welcome to the king, or if he ioyously them receyued, I referre that to all men, which have reliefe in their destresse, or have a sodaine good chaunce, when they thinke least vpon it. When the Duke of Yorke was aduertised of their departing, no maruayle though his senses were moued, and his wittes disturbed, as a man that sodainely ryseth out of a traunce, woteth not what to doe or say: For he first considered the power and aucthoritie of the king, and sawe that Andrew Trollop of his friend was sodainely transformed into the image of his extreme enemie, whose force and pollecie, as muche nowe discomforted hym, as by the trust which he put in hym, he was before incouraged: wherefore he euydently perceyuing that all his counsayle, and purpose, was by the fore named Andrewe, reueled and disclosed thought it better for him and hys to depart in surety, then to abide the chauce, of mutable Fortune, which turneth the wheele at her wyll and pleasure: whervpon he with his yonger sonne Edmond Erle of Rutlande, secretly departed into Wales, and so passed into Irelande, where he was with all ioy and honor gladly receyued. The Erle of Marche, sonne and heire apparant to the foresayde Duke, accompanied with the Erles of Salisbury and Warwike, and syr Iohn Wenlock, stale away the same night, and came into Deuonshire: where by the meanes of Iohn Dinham Esquire (which after was high Treasorer of Englande, in the time of king Henry the. vij.) they bought a ship, which cost. C. x. Markes at Exmouth, and sayled to Gernsay, and after came to Calice, and were let in at the posterne, and iovfully welcomed of their friendes.

The next day in the morning, the king beyng aduertised of the departing of the Duke of Yorke and his partakers, caused all his horsemen to follow them by every passage, but they were neyther seene nor espied, as they that followed made report. The king perceyuing that the Lordes were escaped, pardoned all the poore souldiours, saving certaine Ryng leaders, whereof some he punished and fined, and some he hanged and quartered. After this, he removed to Ludlowe, and there dispatched his hoste, and spoyled the towne and the Castell, and sent the Duches of Yorke, with her two yonger sonnes, to be kept in warde, with the Duches of Buckyngham her sister, where she continued a certayne space. After this, he proclaymed these Lordes traytors to him, enemies to their Countrie, and rebels to the Crowne: confiscating all their landes, goodes and offices, committing the gouernaunce of the North partes, to the Erle of Northumberland, and the Lorde Clifford, as to his trustie and most faithfull friends, and of his towne of Calice, he made Capitaine Henry the newe Duke of Sommerset: but the olde husband man sayeth, that as to hastie sowing often time deceaueth, so to late, neuer well proueth. For in this businesse, protracting of time onely, hurted and harmed the king and his sequele. For if he at the beginning, had dispossessed his adversaries of that refuge and hold, no doubt but that he had eyther tamed or vanquished them, with little labor and small daunger.

The Duke of Sommerset, reiovsing much in his newe office, elected dyuers hardie and valyant souldiours, and with great pompe sayled toward Calice: and when he thought surely to have entred into the Hauen, the artilerie shot so fiercely, both out of the towne and Risebanke, that he suffering there a sore repulse, was faine to lande at Whitsandbay, and sent worde to the Capitaynes of the towne, to receyue him as the kings Lieuetenaunt, and shewed to them his letters patents, but neyther he nor hys wryting was once regarded or loked on: so of necessitie he resorted to the Castell of Guysnes, daylie skirmishing with the garrison of Calice, more to his losse than gaine. After his arrivall, as is aforesayde, divers of these Mariners, owyng more good wyll to the Erle of Warwike, than to this yong Duke, conveyed their shippes into the Hauen of Calice, and in them divers of the Erle of Warwickes enemies, as Ianyn Fendill, Iohn Felowe, and dyuers other, and presented them to the sayde Erle, which incontinent caused their heades to be striken off. Thys daylie conflict still continuing betweene the Lordes, which soiorned at Calice, and the Duke of Sommerset, liyng at Guisnes, no small number of the commonaltie, daylie resorted to the Erle of Marche and his confederates: by reason whereof, although they daylie lost people, and had slaine many, yet their number was restored, and the gap euer filled, which was the continual losse, and daylie detriment to the Duke of Sommerset. Yet he like a valyant Prince, nothing lesse minding, then for lacke of ayde to be expelled from the great office and renoumed aucthoritie, which the king had to him ginen, in the partes beyonde the sea, sent letters to the king, and messengers to the Queene, desiring of them avde and succor, in defence of the quarell and lawfull assistance. His postes were not vnheard, nor hys requestes vnprouided. For without delay Richarde Lorde Riuers, and syr Anthony Wooduile his valyaunt sonne, which after was Lorde Scales, accompanied withfoure hundred warlike persons, were appointed to passe the Seas, and to be coadiutors to the Duke of Sommerset. These martiall Capitaynes endeuoring themselves to the point, for the which they were assigned came to the porte of Sandwiche, and there abode the winde and the weather, which obeyeth neyther king, nor serueth Emperour.

The Erles of Marche and Warwike, and other being at Calice, had knowledge of all these doings, and secret conventicles: wherfore to prevent the Dukes purpose, they sent Iohn Dinham the valyaunt Esquire, with a small number of men, but with a multitude of courageous hartes, to the towne of Sandwiche, which sodainely entred the same, and tooke The towns of the Lorde Rivers in his bed, and his sonne also: robbing houses, and spoyling shippes of Sandwich with great ryches and marchaundise, and beside this, they tooke the principall ships of the is taken. kings nauy then living at the Port, wel furnished with ordinance & artilerie, but not without the fauor of the Mariners, which fauored more the one parte then the other. But although Iohn Dinham, Capitaine of the Lordes parte, was sore hurt and mayined on his legge, by reason whereof he cuer after halted, and somewhat limped: yet his courage and pollecy was so much, that he vanquished his enimies, and brought the shippes royall laded with pray and prisoners, to the towne of Calice, and them presented to the Erle of Marche, not knowing then that the Lorde Rivers daugh ter should be the Erles wife, which then had an husband lyuing, nor thinking that her father for her sake, should after be destroyed. But who can knowe the secrets of God, or without him, declare the chaunce that after shall ensue.

After this bootie gotten, and good luck obteyned, diuers of the best ships taken in the hauen of Sandwich, were wel victualled and manned, and with them the Erle of Warwike, transfreted and sayled into Ireland, to common with the Duke of Yorke, of his great affayres and businesse. The weather was so fayre, and the winde so fauourable to the Erles purpose, that within lesse then xxx. dayes, he passed and repassed from Calice to Deueline, and asserteyned the Erles of Marche and of Salisbury, what was the Duke of Yorkes deuise and intent, both for his entrie and theirs, into the realme of England. The Erle of Warwike had come to short home to tell these tydings, if the Duke of Exceter, which being admirall of the sea, laye in the west Countrie to stop the Erles passage, might haue had his awne will: but the Capitaines of his Nauie murmoured agaynst him, and the Mariners dispraysed and disdayned him, glad to heare of the Erle of Warwikes good successe, by which occasion he neyther would nor durst once meddle or cope with the Erles Nauie.

A Parliament holden at Cotientry.

During thys tyme, the king called a Parliament, in the Citie of Couentre, in the which the Duke of Yorke, and all his confederates were attaynted of high treason, and their goodes and landes confiscate and forfeted: and to prohibite their landing in al portes, hauen townes were watched, and the sea costes were garnished with Bekons. And syr Simon Montfort with a great crew was appointed to keepe the downes, and the five Portes, and all men passing into Flaundyrs, were voon payne of death prohibited to passe by Calice, least the Lordes there should borowe of them any money, as they did prest of the Marchaunts of the Staple. xviij. M. pound late before, which was a great displeasure to the king, and a more corrosey to y Quene. The Lordes liyng at Calice were not ignorant of all these doynges and prouisions, but dayly were assertayned what was done in the kings privy chamber: wherefore first they sent a companie to Sandwiche, which conquered the towne, and apprehended sir Simond Mountfort, and brought him with all his Mates to the hauen of Calice, where incontinent he with xij. of his chiefe felowes, lost their heades on the Sandes, before Risebanke. After the Kinges nauje gayned, and his Captaines on the arrivall of the Sea taken and destroyed, the Lordes living at Calice, hopyng in their friendes within the Realme, determined to passe the sea, and to lande in England. And after they had put the Castell and towne of Calice, in sure and safe custodie to their onely vse, they passed the sea and landed at Sandwiche. And so passyng through Kent, there came to them the Lorde Cobham, John Guildefforde, William Peche, Robert Horne, and many other gentlemen, which conveyed them to the Citie of London. But the fame of their landyng once knowen, gentlemen repayred, and yomen resorted out of all the South partes of the Realme: vpon which rumor, Thomas Lorde Scales, a man in great fauor with the King and Queene, accompanied with the Erle of Kendall a Gascoyne, and the Lord Louell, resorted to London, with a great company of armed men: declarying to the Maior of the Citie, that their repayre onely was to defende, and kepe the Citie, from the spoyle and robbery of such traytors, as the king was credibly informed, would thether make accesse: to whome the Major aunswered, that he well knewe both his othe, and bounden dutie towarde his souereigne Lorde and Prince, and neded neither of promter, nor yet of coadiutor, eyther to defende or gouerne the Citie, to him committed in charge. With which aunswere, the Lorde Scales and his associates not a little displeased, entered into the Towre of London, dayly with new inuencions, doyng displeasures and domages to the Citizens of the Citie, whome they sore suspected, rather to fauor then to hate, the Erles of March, and Warwike, and other of their band and affinitie. Which Erles with a great armie came shortly to London, and were of the Maior and Citezens ioyously received, to whome resorted the Archbishop of Cantorbury, the Bishops of London, Ely, and Excester, with many Prelates and religious persons.

These Lordes nothing slackyng the purpose, that they came for, dayly consulted and as: sembled together in the house of the gray Friers within the Citie. And after long debating, and secret consultacion had, it was agreed, that they with theyr whole puissance should marche forward, toward the King: determining eyther by force or fayre meanes, to bring their purpose to a coclusion. When this counsaile was dissolved, the Erles of Marche & Warwike, Thomas Lord Fauconbridge, Henry Lord Borchier, called Erle of Ewe, with 'a great nuber of men, which came out of Kent, Essex, Surrey & Sussex, to the number as some writers affirme of, xxv. M. persons departed from London, toward the King, living at Couentre, then called the Queenes secrete arbor, leaving behinde them to kepe the Londoners in their fidelitie, from reverting from their part the Erle of Sarisbury, the Lorde Cobham, and Sir Iohn Wenlocke: which Lorde Cobham, with certaine Aldermen of the Citie so kept the West syde against the Towre, and Sir John Wenlocke with other, so vigilantly watched the East part toward Saint Katherynes, that no person eyther could issue out, or enter in, to the great displeasure of the Lorde Scales and his companie. which dayly shot their ordenaunce out, and had likewise great ordenaunce shot at them, to the hurt, and no pleasure of both partes. The king not ignoraunt of all these doynges, assembled a great armie, and accompanied with the Duke of Sommerset, which was lately come from Guisnes, and the Duke of Buckingham, and divers other great Lordes of his part and faction, came to the towne of Northhampton, where the Queene encouraged her friendes, and promised great rewardes to her helpers: for the king studied nothing but of peace, quiet and solitarie lyfe.

When the kinges hoste was assembled, and that the Queene perceived that her power The battaile of was able to matche with the force of her adversaries, shee caused her armie to issue Northapton. out of the towne, and to passe the river of Sene, and there in the newe fielde, betwene Harsyngton and Sandifforde, the Capitaines strongly emparked themselves with high bankes, and depe trenches. The Erle of March beyng lustic, and in the flower of his couragious youth, living betwene Towceter and Northampton, determined to set on the kings armie, without longer protractyng of tyme. And in the night season he remoued his campe towarde Northampton, and in marchyng forwarde set hys men in good order of battaile, whereof the vawewarde was conducted by the Erle of Warwike, which either by strenght or stealth Mauger the Lord Beamond, which kept a straite goyng towarde the kinges campe, entred freshely, and began the battaile about, vij. of the clocke, the, ix, day of Julye. After whome followed the Erle of Marche, with the banner of his father. This fight continued in doubtfull judgement, till the houre of nine, at which tyme the Kinges armie was scattered, and discomfitted, and of the same slain, and drowned in the riuer, fewe lesse then ten thousand tall Englishe men, and the king himselfe left alone disconsolate, was taken and apprehended, as a man borne, and predestinate to trouble. miserie, and calamitie. At this battaile were slaine, Humfrey Duke of Buckingham, Iohn Talbot Erle of Shrewesbury, a valiaunt person, and not degenerating from his noble parent: Thomas Lorde Egremond, John Viscout Beaumond, and Sir William Lucie, which made great hast to come to part of the fight, and at his first approche was striken in the head with an Axe. Divers other Gentlemen were slaine in this civil battaile, whose names are not remembred nor published by any author that I have read. Beside these dead persons, many were taken prisoners, because they left their horses, and discended to fight on foote. The Duke of Sommerset and other, which narowly escaped, fled with the Quene and prince Edward, into the Bishoprike of Durham, in which place they determined to gather a newe armie and power, and if no hope were of recourry, then they agreed to flie into Scotland: there to abide a time of better lucke. The Erles beyng victors in this bloody battaile, conveyed the king that night againe to the towne of Northhampton, and the next day with great solemnitie and small comfort, they set forwarde the king, and by easie journeys brought him to London the. xvj. day of July, where he was faintly received, and febly welcomed, and was lodged in the Bishops Palace. A parliamet holden at Westminster.

The Duke of Yorkes Oracio made to all the Lords of the Parliament.

commyng to the Citie, the Tower of London was deliuered to the Erle of Marche, vpona certaine composicion. But the Lorde Scales, suspectyng the sequele of the delivery. of the same, tooke a Whirry privily, entendyng to have fled to the Queene. But he was espyed by diuerse watermen belonging to the Erle of Warwike, which wayted for his foorthcommyng on the Thamys, and sodainly taken, and shortly slaine with many dartes and daggers, and his bodie left all bloody and naked at the gate of the Clynke, which after was buryed in the Church adioinyng. Then were dyuers persons apprehended, and endited of treason, whereof some were pardoned, and some executed: But Thomas Thorpe, seconde Baron of the Exchequer, great friend to the house of Lancaster, and extreme enemie to the familie of Yorke, was taken disguysed in a Monkes apparell, with a shauen crowne, and so brought to the Erle of Warwike, which sent him to the tower of London, where he long remayned. Duryng this trouble was a Parliament sommoned to begin at Westminster in the moneth of October next following. Before which tyme, Richard Duke of Yorke beyng in Ireland, by swift currers, and fliving postes, was advertised of the great victory, gayned by his part at the fielde of Northhampton, and also knewe that the king was nowe in case to be kept, and ordered at his pleasure and will: Wherefore losyng no tyme. nor sluggyng one houre, he sayled from Deuelyn to Chester with no small companie, and by long journeys came to the Citie of London, which he entered the friday next before the feast of Saint Edward the Confessor, with a sworde borne naked before him, and tooke his lodgyng in the Kinges awne Palace, whervoon the common people babbled, that he should be King, and that King Henry should no longer reigne. Duryng the time of this Parliament, the Duke of Yorke, with a bolde countenaunce, entered into the Chamber of the peeres, and sate downe in the trone royall vnder the cloth of estate (which is the Kinges peculier seate) and in the presence aswell of the Nobilitie, as of the spiritualtie (after a pause made) sayde these wordes in effect. My singuler good Lordes, maruaile not that I approche vnto this throne. For I sit here as in the place to me by verye justice lawfully belonging, and here I rest, as he to whome this Chayre of right apperteyneth. not as he, which requireth of you fauour, parcialitie, or bearing, but egall right, friendly indifferencie, and true administracion of iustice: for I beyng the partie grieued, and complayment, can not minister to my selfe the Medicine, that should helpe me (as expert Leches and Chirurgians may) except you be to me both faythfull ayders, and also true Counsaylers. Nor yet this noble realme, and our naturall Countrie shall neuer be vnbuckeled from her dayly feuer, except I (as the principall Phisition, and you as true and trusty Appothecaryes) consult together, in making of the pocion, and trie out the cleane and pure stuffe, from the olde, corrupt and putrifyed drugges. For vndoubtedly, the roote and bottome of this long festured canker, is not yet extirpate, nor the feble foundacion of this fallible buyldyng, is not yet espyed, which hath bene, and is, the dayly destruction of the Nobilitie, and the continual confusion of the poore Commonalty of this realme and Kingdome. For all you knowe (or should knowe) that the high and mightie Prince King Richard the seconde, was the true and vndoubted heyre, to the valiant Conquerour, and renoumed Prince King Edward the thirde, as sonne and heyre to the hardy knight and couragious Captain, Edward prince of Wales, Duke of Aquitain and Cornewall, eldest sonne to the said king Edward the thirde, which King was not onely in deed, but also of all men reputed and taken, as the very true and infallible heyre, to the wise and politique prince king Henry the thirde, as sonne and heyre to king Edward the second, sonne and heyre to King Edward the first, the very heyre and first begotten sonne of the sayde noble and vertuous prince, king Henry the thirde. Which king Richarde of that name the second, was lawfully and justly possessed of the Crowne, and Diademe of this Realme and Region, till Henry of Darby, Duke of Lancaster, and Herforde, sonne to Iohn of Gaunt Duke of Lancaster, the fourth begotten sonne, to the sayde king Edward the thirde, and yonger brother to my noble auncester Lyonell Duke of Clarence, the thirde begotten sonne of the sayde king Edward, by force and violence, contrary both to the duetie of his allegiaunce, and also to his homage, to him both done and sworne. raysed warre and battaile, at the Castell of Flynt in Northwales agaynst the sayde king Richard, and him apprehended and imprisoned within the Tower of London. Duryng whose life and captiuitie, he wrongfully vsurped and entruded vpon the royall power, and high estate of this realme and region, takyng on him the name, stile, and aucthoritie of king & gouernor of the same. And not therewith satisfied and contented, compassed and accomplished the death and destruction of his naturall Prince, and most worthy souereigne Lord, not as a common homicide and butcherly murderer, but as a regicide and destroyer of his king. After whose piteous death and execrable murder, the right and tytle of the Crowne, and superioritie of this realme, was lawfully reverted and returned to Roger Mortimer, Erle of Marche, sonne and heyre to Lady Philip, the onely childe of the aboue rehearsed Lionell, Duke of Clarence, to which Rogiers daughter called Anne, my most derest and welbeloued mother, I am the very true and lyneall heyre, which discent all you cannot justly gayne say, nor yet truely denie. Then remember thys, if the tytle be mine, why am I put from it: if I be true heyre to the crowne (as I am in deede) why is my right witholden: if my clayme be good, why haue I not justice: for surely learned men of great science and knowledge, say and affirme, that lyneall discent, nor vsurped possession can nothing preuayle, if continuall clayme be lawfully made, or openly published. For anoyding of which scruple & ambiguity: Edmond Erle of Marche, my most welbeloued Vncle, in the time of the first Vsurper, in dede, but not by right, called king Henry the fourth by his Cosyns, the Erle of Northumberland, and the Lorde Percy, he being then in captiuitie with Owen Glendore, the rebell in Wales, made his tytle and righteous clayme, to the destruction of both the noble persons. Likewise my most deerest Lorde and father, so farre set forth that right and tytle, that he lost his lyfe and worldly ioye, at the towne of Southampton, more by power, then indifferent iustice. Sithe whose death, I comming to my full age, have never desisted to pursue my tytle, and require my right, which by meanes of sinister counsaile and injust detention, I can nevther obteyne nor recouer. So that of fine force, I am compelled to vse power in stede of prayer, and force in stede of request (not as I sayde before) for my private emolument and peculiar profite, but to restore peace, loue, and quietnesse to this our naturall region: which euer sythe the first vngodly vsurpation of the forenamed Henry, vntruely called king Henry the fourth, hath bene cleerely banished, and out of the same injustly exiled. What murders and manslaughters hath bene perpetrated and committed within this Countrey, sythe the beginning of that vngracious vsurpation: what number of noble men haue beene slayne, destroyed, and executed, sithe that vnfortunate day: it is to lamentable and to manifest. For although Henry of Lancaster Erle of Derby, tooke vpon him the Scepter and the crowne, and wrongfully beare the name and style of a king, and was not much tyckeled with mine Vncle, the Erle of Marche, at that time being within age: Yet was hee neuer in suretie of himselse, nor had, or enloyed any perfite quietnesse, eyther in minde or in body: for surely a corrupt conscience feeleth neuer rest, but looketh when the sworde of vengeaunce will discend and strike. His sonne also called King Henry the fift, obteyned notable victories, and immortall prayses, for his noble actes done in the realme of Fraunce: yet God for the offence of his vntrue parent sodainely touched him, vnbodiyng his soule in the flower of his youth, and in the glorie of his conquest. And although he had a fayre sonne, and a yong apparant heyre: yet was this Orphan suche a one, as preachers saye, that God threatned to sende, for a punishment, to hys vnrulye and vngracious people: saiving by his prophet Esay: I shall geue you children to be your princes, and infaunts without wisdome, shall have the governaunce of you. The prophet lyed not, if you note all things in an order: For after this Henry the fift (whose fame no man can justly reproue or deface) succeded his sonne whom all we have called our naturall prince, and obeyed as his heyre: in whose time and wrongfull reigne, I require you diligently to consider, with what great torments and afflictions God hath 4 Q 2

whypped and scurged this miserable Isle, yea, with such and so many scourges and plagues. as no nation (the Egyptians onely except) were euer tormented, or afficted withall. It will not speake of rebellious murders and oppressions, which of late haue bene done, and exercised here among vs: but I will declare and manifest to you how the crowne and glorie of this realme, is by the negligence of this silly man, and his vnwise counsayle, minished, defaced, and dishonored. Is not Normandy, which his father gat, regayned and conquered agayne, by the insolencie of him, and his couetous counsayle? Is not the whole Duchy of Aquitayne by two hundred and odde yeres, peaceably possessed by the kings of this realme, in one yere and a little more, gotten out of our hands and seigniorie? What should I speake of Angeow & Mayne, or the losse of the Isle of Fraunce, with the riche Citie of Paris. Alas it is to apparaunt, neither will I molest you with the recitall of all the perticulers thereof: But nowe in the middes of this affliction, and to make an ende of the same, God of his eneffable goodnesse, looking on this countrey, with his eyes of pitie and mercie, hath sent me in the truth to restore againe his decayed kingdome, to his auncient fame and olde renoume. Whereof here in open parliament, according to my just and true title, I have and do take possession of this royal throne, not putting diffidence, but firme hope in Gods grace, that by his deuine ayde, & the assistance of you the peeres of this realme. I shall bewtifie and maintaine the same, to the glorie of hym, honor of my blood, and to the publique wealth, as well of you all herepresent, as of all the poore commons and subjectes, of thys kingdome and Regiment.

When the Duke had thus ended his Oration, the Lordes sate still lyke Images grauer in the wall, or dumme Gods, neither whispering nor speaking, as though their mouthes had beene sowed vp. The Duke perceyuing none aunswere to be made to his declared purpose, not well content with their sober silence, aduised them well to digest and ponder the effect of that which he had sayde, and so neither fully displeased, nor all pleased, departed to hys lodgyng in the kings Palace.

Whyle he was thus declaryng his tytle in the Chamber of the Peres, there happened a straunge chance in the very same time, amongst the commons in the nether house, then there assembled: for a crown which did hang in the middle of the same to garnishe a braunche, to set lights vpon, without touch of any creature or rigor of winde sodainely fell downe, and at the same time also fell downe the crowne, which stoode on the topper of the Castell of Douer: as a signe and prognostication that the crowne of the realmeshould be deuided and changed, from one line to another, such was the judgement of the common people.

The Lordes of the realme, forgate not the Dukes demaunde, nor long protracted the time, to see some good ende, in so waightie a cause: wherfore divers Lordes, as well spirituall as temporall, with many grane and sage persons of the commonaltie daylie assembled at the black Friers and other places, to treate and common of this matter, being of no small importaunce. During which time, the Duke of Yorke, although he and the king, were both lodged in the Palace of Westminster, yet for no prayer or intercession, he would once visite or see the king, till some perfite conclusion were taken, in this great and waightie purpose, saiying and affirming, that he was subject to no man, but onely to God, and he was his Lord and superior, and none other, I will a little space leave the Lordes consultying together, and speake of outward attemptes and forreyn doings.

This civill discention within the realme of Englande, did much animate and incourage Iames the seconde of that name, king of Scottes, to make warre on the Englishe nation, partly for the displeasure which he conceyued for the death of Edmond Duke of Sommerset hys mothers brother, and partly to shew himselfe amongst his people, to be both valyaunt and couragious. Thys king Iames from his first rule, beganne to enter into suspition with Wylliam Erle Douglas, a man both of great kinne and more power, ever mistrusting that he nothing more desyred, then to deprive hym from his aucthoritie, and to vsurpe the same. This cancard suspicion was so rooted in the kings harte, that so-dainely dainely it branched out, in so much that the king sending for the Erle (which trusting on his awne innocencie, humbly came to his presence) caused him shamefully to be slayne Wylliam Eale and murdered, with which iniury, his two brethren, Archibald Erle of Murrey, and dred, and dred, Hugh Erle of Ormount, not a little pricked and incouraged with the Erles of Angus and Morthone, being all of one line and surname, made open warre on the saide king lames: but in conclusion he preuaited, and suppressed the great power of the Douglasses. And then thinking himselfe a king, without eyther peere or fere, assembled a great armie, and entred into the Marches of Northumberlande, and besieged the Castell of Roxborough, and there caused his newe Bumbard lately cast in Flaunders, called the Lyon and dyuers other peeces to be shot agaynst the Castell, whereof one being weake and slender, brake in peeces, and one of the fragmentes slue the king, standing amongest a great companye King lames of of his people, and wounded the Erle of Angus. The Scottes not dismayed with the death with a peece of of their King, seyng the Castell easie to be wonne, manfully assauted and with much a Gonne. paine gat it, and the same long defended, till Rychard Duke of Gloucester it conquered and destroyed. This king Iames of Queene Mary his wyfe left three sonnes, Iames which succeeded him, Alexander Duke of Albany, and John. This yong king lames, was put vnder the tuition of Iames Kenede, Byshop of Saint Andrewes, which during his noneage, ruled the realine to the kings great honor, but more to his awne profite and peculiar gayne: For he made sumpteous houses, and builded Colleges, which this yong pupill king lames, neyther could, nor was able to do.

About this very season, and during this vanaturall controversic within the Realme of The death of Charles the Englande: Charles the French king, which onely by trouble and calamitie gat to him a french Kyng. perpetual name, and amongst his Nation about the starres exalted, ended the point of his fatall fine, which Prince in hys youth, neuer regarded wanton pastyme, nor lasciulous dalliaunce, for his wittes were set, and his industrie onely applied, to recour agayne hys Princely inheritaunce: So that more plainely then in a Glasse, all men may perceyue that paine often profiteth, and labor commonly analeth, but ydlenesse sildome, and dalliannce never. To this Charles succeded king Lewys, of that name the. xi. of whose doings you shall heare after: and shall both study and marueile, at the straungenesse of his demeanor, and the craftie policie of his secret compasses. Now I will returne to the great counsayle of the Lordes, celebrate about London, for the Duke of Yorkes.

After long arguments made, and deliberate consultation had among the Peeres, Prelates, and commons of the realme: vpon the vigile of all Saintes, it was condescended and agreed, by the three estates, for so much as king Henry had beene taken as king, by the space of, xxxviii, yeres and more, that he should enjoy the name and tytle of king, and have possession of the realme, during his life naturall: And if he eyther died or resigned, or forfeited the same, for infringing any point of this concorde, then the sayde Crowne and aucthoritie royalk, should immediatly dissende to the Duke of Yorke, if he then lyued, or else to the next heyre of his line or linage, and that the Duke from thenceforth should be Protector and Regent of the land. Prouided alway, that if the king Articles of did closely or apertly studie or go about to breake or alter this agreement, or to compasse agreement between king or imagine the death or destruction of the sayde Duke or hys bloud, then he to forfeit Henrie the sixt, the crowne, and the Duke of Yorke to take it. These articles with many other, were and Rychard the crowne, and the Duke of Yorke to take it. not onely written, sealed and sworne by the two parties: but also were enacted in the high court of Parliament. For ioy whereof, the king having in his company the sayde Duke, rode to the Cathedrall Church of saint Paule, within the Citie of London, and there on the day of all saintes, went solempnly with the Diademe on his head in procession, and was lodged a good space after in the Bishops Palace, nere to the sayd Church. And vpon the Saturday next ensuying, Richard Duke of Yorke, was by the sound of a trumpet, solempnly proclaimed heyre apparaunt to the crowne of Englande, and Protectour of the realme.

IM6's

After

After thys, the Parliament kept at Couentry the laste yere, was declared to be a denilishe counsayle, and onely celebrate for the destruction of the nobility, and no lawfull Parliament, because they which were returned, were neuer elected, according to the due order of the law, but secretly named by them, which desired more the destruction, then the advancement of the publique wealth and common profite. When these agreements were done and enacted, the king dissolved his parliament, which was the laste parliament that ever he ended. Such was the pleasure of almightie God, that king Henry beyng a good and verteous man, which had tasted innumerable adversities and calamities of the worlde, should be deprived of his terrestriali crowne, to be recompensed with an heavenly garlande, and a joyfull place: for surely a perfite good man, although he be plagued with a thousande displeasures cannot be but blessed.

The Dake of Yorke well knowyng, that the Queene would spurne and impugne the conclusions, agreed and taken in this Parliament, caused her and her sonne, to be sent for by the king: but she being a manly woman, vsyng to rule and not to be ruled, and thereto counsayled by the Dukes of Excester and Sommerset, not only denyed to come but also assembled together a great armie, intendyng to take the king by fine force, out of the Lordes handes, and to set them to a newe schoole. The Protector living in London. having perfite knowledge of all these doynges: assigned the Duke of Norffolke and the Erle of Warwike, his trustie friendes, to be about the king, and he with the Erles of Salisbury, and Rutland: with a convenient companie, departed out of London the second day of December, Northwarde, and sent to the Erle of Marche his eldest sonne to followe him with all his power. The Duke by small journeys came to his Castell of Sandall, besyde Wakefielde on Christmasse eue, and there began to assemble his tenantes and The Queene beyng therof asserteyned, determined to couple with him while his power was small, and his ayde not come: And so hauving in her companie, the Prince her sonne, the Dukes of Excester and Sommerset, the Erle of Deuonshire, the Lorde Clifforde, the Lorde Rosse, and in effect all the Lordes of the Northpart, with xviij. thousande men, or as some write. xxij. thousand, marched from Yorke to Wakefield, and bad base to the Duke, even before his Castell, he havyng with him not fully five thousand. persons, determined incontinent to issue out, and to fight with his enemies, and although sir Dauy Hall, his olde seruaunt and chiefe Counsaylor, aduised him to kepe his Castell, and to defend the same, with his small number, till his sonne the Erle of Marche were come with his power of Marchmen and Welshe soldiors, yet he would not be counsayled, but in a great fury sayde, a Dauy, Dauy, hast thou loued me so long, and nowe wouldest haue me dishonoured? Thou neuer sawest me kepe fortresse when I was Regent in Normandie, when the Dolphyn himselfe, with his puyssaunce came to besiege me, but lyke a man, and not lyke a birde inclosed in a Cage, I issued and fought with mine enemyes, to their losse euer (I thanke God) and to my honour: If I have not kept my selfe within walles, for feare of a great and strong Prince, nor hid my face from any man liuyng, wouldest thou that I for dread of a scoldyng woman, whose weapon is onely her tongue, and her nayles, should enclose my selfe, and shut my gates? Then all men might of me wonder, and all creatures may of me report dishonour, that a woman hath made me a dastard, whom no man euer to this day could yet proue a coward: and surely my mind is rather to die with honor, then to line with shame, for of honour commeth fame, and of dishonour ryseth infamie: Their great number shall not feare my spirites, but encourage them, for surely I thinke that I have there, as many friendes as enemies, which at joining, will either flie or take my part: Therefore auaunce my Banner, in the name of God and saint George, for surely I will fight with them, though I should fight alone. The Erle of Salisbury and other his friendes, seyng his courage, resolued themselves to his opinion, and ordered their men, and set them forth in warlike fashion, for their most advauntage. The Duke of Sommerset and other of the Queenes part, knowing perfectly, that if the Duke gat the victorie, their dayes were minished, nished, and their livyngs left bare, like men quickned and pricked forwarde, for the safegarde of their lyues, and defence of their goodes, determined to abide the chaunce, and to espie their most advauntage and so appoynted the Lorde Clifforde to lie in the one stale, and the Erle of Wilshire in the other, & they themselves kept the maine battaile. The Duke of Yorke with his people, discended downe the hill in good order and array, and was suffered to passe forwarde, towarde the maine battaile: but when he was in the plaine ground, betwene his Castell and the Towne of Wakefielde, he was inuironed on The battaile of euery syde like a fishe in a Net, or a Deere in a Buckstall: so that he manfully fightyng, was within halfe an houre slaine and deade, and his whole army discomfited, and with him The duke of dved of his trusty friendes, his two bastard Vncles, sir Iohn and sir Hugh Mortimer, sir Yorke slaine. Dauy Hall his chiefe Counsaylor, sir Hugh Hastyngs, sir Thomas Neuel, William and Thomas Aparre, both brethren, and two thousand and eight hundreth other, whereof many were yong Gentlemen, and heyres of great parentage in the South part, whose linages revenged their deathes, within foure Monethes next and immediately ensuing. In this conflict was wounded and taken prisoner, Richard Erle of Salisbury, syr Richard Limbrike, Raufe Stanley, Iohn Harow, Capitaine Hauson, and divers other. While this battaile was in fightyng, a priest called Sir Robert Aspall, Chaplaine and Scholemaister to the youg Erle of Rutland, the second son to the abouenamed Duke of Yorke, scarce of the age of, xij. yeres, a fayre Gentleman, and a maydenly person, perceiuvng that flight was more sauegard, then tariyng, both for him and his Mayster, secretly conueved the Erle out of the field, by the Lorde Cliffordes bande, towarde the Towne, but or he could enter into a house, he was by the sayde Lorde Clifforde espyed, followed, and taken and by reason of his apparell, demaunded what he was. The yong Gentleman dismayde, had not a worde to speake, but kneeled on his knees crauyng mercy, and desiryng grace, both with holdyng vp his handes, and makyng a dolorous countenaunce, for his speeche was gone for feare. Saue him sayd his Chapleyn, for he is a Princes sonne. and paraduenture may do you good hereafter. With that worde, the Lorde Clifforde marked him and sayde: by Gods blood, thy father slue mine, and so will I do thee and all thy kinne, and with that worde, strake the Erle to the hart with his Dagger, and bads his Chapleyn beare the Erles mother and brother worde what he had done and sayde. In this act the Lorde Clifforde was accompted a tyraunt, and no gentleman, for the propertie of the Lion, which is a furious and an vnreasonable beast, is to be cruell to them that withstand him, and gentle to such as prostrate or humiliate themselues before him. Yet this cruell Clifforde, not content with this, came to the place where the deade corps of the Duke of Yorke lay, and caused his head to be striken off, and set on it a Crowne of Paper, and so fixed it on a pole, and presented it to the Queene, not living farre from the fielde, in great despite and much derision, saiyng: Madame, your warre is done, here is your kinges raunsome, at which present was much ioy, and great rejoysing, but many laughed then, that sore lamented after, as the Queene her selfe, and her sonne: And many were glad then of other mens deathes, not knowing that their awne were nere at. hande, as the Lorde Clifforde, and other.

But surely, mans nature is so fraile, that thinges passed be sone forgotten, and mischiefes to come, be not foresene. After this victorie by the Quene and her part obteyned, she caused the Erle of Salisbury, with all the other prisoners, to be sent to Pomfret, and there to be behedded, and sent all their heddes, and the Dukes head of Yorke, to be set vpon poles, ouer the gate of the Citie of Yorke, in despyte of them, and their linage: whose children shortly reuenged their fathers quarrell, both to the Queenes extreme perdicion and the vtter vndoyng of her husband and sonne. This ende had the valiant Lorde,

Richard Plantagenet Duke of Yorke.

The Erle of March so commonly called, but after the death of his father in dede and in right very Duke of Yorke, liyng at Gloucester, heeryng of the death of his noble father, and louyng brother, and trusty friendes, was wonderfully amased, but after comforti fort geuen to him, by his faythfull friends and sure allyes, he remoued to Shrewesbury, and other townes upon the Riuer of Seuerne, declarying to them the murder of his father, the ieopardie of himselfe, and the unstable state and ruyne of the Realme. The people on the Marches of Wales, which aboue measure fauored the linage of the Lorde Mortimer, more gladly offered him their ayde and assistance, then he it eyther instantly requyred, or hartily desyred, so that he had a puyssaunt armie, to the number of. xxiii. thousand, redy to go agaynst the Queene, and the murderers of his father. But when he was settyng forwarde, newes were brought to him, that Iasper Erle of Penbroke, halfe brother to king Henry, and Iames Butler, Erle of Ormond and Wilshire, had assembled together a great number, both of Welshe and Irishe people, sodainly to surprise and take him and his friendes, and as a captive to convey him to the Quene. The Duke of Yorke called Erle of Marche, somewhat spurred and quickned with these nouelties, retired backe, and met with his enemies in a fayre plaine, neere to Mortimers crosse, not farre from Herford East, on Candlemasse day in the morning, at which tyme the Sunne (as some write) appered to the Erle of Marche like three Sunnes, and sodainely joyned all together in one, and that voon the sight thereof, he tooke such courage, that he fiercely set on his enemyes, and them shortly discomfited: for which cause, men imagined that he gave the Sunne in his full brightnesse for his Cognisaunce or Badge. Of his enemyes were left deade on the ground, three thousand, and viij. hundreth. The Erles of Penbroke and Wilshire fled, and Sir Owen Tewther, father to the sayde Erle of Penbroke, which Owen had maryed king Henryes mother (as you have heard before) with David Floyde, Morgan ap Reuther, and divers other were taken and behedded at the Citie of Harfforde. Duryng this season the Queene was greatly encouraged with the victory, obteyined late at Wakefielde, partly because the Duke of Yorke, her vtter enemie was rid out of the worlde, and partly, because she perceyued the Lordes of the North Countrie to adhere and cleue to her part and faction: Wherefore with a great multitude of Northren people, she marched toward London, of whose approche the Londoners were nothing glad: For some affirmed that she brought that rustie companie, to spoyle and rob the Citie: other sayde that she would be reuenged, of such as fauoured the Duke of Yorke. So the poore Citizens hangyng betwene the water and the fire, were much amased, but the Magistrates and gouernours caused great watches to be kept, and good order to be observed. The Queene still came forwarde with her Northren people, entendyng to subvert and defaict all conclusions and agreementes, enacted and assented to, in the last Parliament. And so after her long journey, she came to the towne of Saint Albones: whereof the Duke of Norffolke, the Erle of Warwike, and other whom the Duke of Yorke had left to gouerne the king in his absence, beyng aduertised, by the assent of the king, gathered together a great host, and set forward toward Saint Albons, hauyng the king in theyr company, as the heade and Chieftain of the warre, and so not mindyng to deferre the tyme any farther, vpon Shrouetuesday early in the mornyng, set vpon their enemies. Fortune that day so fauored the Queene, that her part preuayled, and the Duke & the Erle were discomfitted, and fled: leauving the King accompanied with the Lorde Bonuile, and Sir Thomas Kiryell of Kent, which vpon assuraunce of his promise, targed still and fled not, but theyr trust them deceyued. For after the victorie obteyned, and the King brought to the Queene, they two were deteyned as prisoners, and so continued till the Kinges departing from that towne. In this battaile were slaine. xxiii. hundreth men, and not aboue, of whom no noble man is remembred, saue Sir Iohn Gray, which the same day was made Knight, with xij. other at the Village of Colney. Happy was the Queene in her two battayles, but vnfortunate was the King in all hys enterprises, for where his person was present, there victorie euer fled from him to the other part, and he commonly was subdued and vanquished. When Queene Margaret had thus well sped, first she caused the King, to dubbe Prince Edward his sonne Knight, with. xxx. other persons, which in the mornyng fought on the Queenes syde, agaynst his part. After she sent to the Maior of London, comaundyng comaundyng him without delay, to send certaine Cartes, laden with Lenten vitail, for the refreshing of her and her army. The Mayor, incontinent made provision, laded Cartes, and sent them towarde the Queene. But the moueable Commons, which fauoured not the Queenes part, stopped the Cartes at Cripplegate, and boldely sayd, that their enemies which came to spoyle and robbe the Citizens, should neyther be relieved, nor victayled by them. And notwithstandyng gentle aduertisement to them genen, of the mischiefes which might ensue of their doyngs; yet they remayned still in one obstinate minde and wilfull will, not permittyng the carvages to passe or go forwarde. Duryng which controuersie, diverse of the Northren horsemen came and robbed in the Suburbes of the Citie, and would have entred at Creplegate, but they by the Commoners were repulsed, and beaten backe, and three of them slaine: whervpon the Mayor sent the Recorder to the kinges Counsaile to Barnet, to excuse the matter, and the Duchesse of Bedford, and the Ladie Scales, with divers sad fathers of the Spiritualtie, went to the Queene to mollifie her rancor, and asswage her melancoly, which she had concevued agaynst the Citie. At this humble request, the Queene and her Counsaile appoynted certaine Lordes and Knightes, with foure hundreth tall persons, to ryde to the Citie, and there to viewe, and see the demeanor and disposition of the people: and divers Aldermen were appoynted to mete them at Barnet, and to convey them to London. But whatsoever man purposeth, God disposeth: for al these decises were shortly transmuted into an other forme, because true report was brought, not onely to the Citie, but also to the Queene, that the Erle of Marche had vanquished the Erles of Penbroke and Wilshire, and that the Erle of Warwike, in whome rested the chiefe trust of that faction, after the last conflict had at Saint Albones, had met with the sayde Erle of Marche at Chippyng Norton, by Cottesolde, and that they with both their powers were commyng towarde London. These true tales turned the Queenes purpose, and altered all her long deuised entents, insomuch that she little trustyng Essex, and lesse Kent, but London least of all, with her husband and sonne, departed from Saint Albones, into the North Countrie, where the roote and foundation of her ayde and refuge onely consisted. But at the day of her departing, she caused the heades of the Lorde Bonuile, and Sir Thomas Kiriell, to be cut of, in the presence of her sonne, contrary to the minde and promise of her husband, but amongest men of warre, favth or othe, seldome is performed.

The Duches of Yorke, seying her husbande and sonne slayne, and not knowing what should succeede of her eldest sonnes chaunce, sent her two yonger sonnes, George and Rychard ouer the sea, to the Citie of Vtrechte in Almayne: where they were of Philip Duke of Burgoyne well received and feasted, and so there they remayned till their brother Edwarde had obteyned the realme, and gotten the regiment. During which time divers Marchaunts mistrusting the mutation of the worlde, fled out of the realine, amongst whome, one Philip Malpas a man of great ryches, sailyng into Flaunders, was taken by Philip Malpas Iohn Column a French man, and payde foure thousand Markes for his raunsome. The taken. Erles of Marche and Warwike, having perfite knowlege, that the king and Quene with their adherentes, were departed from saint Albones, determined first to ryde to London, as the chiefe Key and common spectacle to the whole realme, thinking there to assure themselves of the East and West parte of the kingdome, as king Henry and his faction nesteled and strengthened him and his alies, in the North partes: meaning to have a bucklar against a sworde, and a southrene Byll, to counteruayle a Northren bastard. And so these two great Lordes, resoluyng themselves upon thys purpose, accompanied with a great number of men of warre, entred the Citie of London, in the first weeke of Lent. What should I declare how the Kentishmen resorted: howe the people of Essex swarmed, and how the Counties adioyning to London, daylie repayred to see, ayde, and comfort this lustic Prince and flower of Chiualrie, as he in whome the hope of their ioy, and the trust of their quietnesse onely then consisted. Thys wise and prudent noble man, perceyving the most parte of the Realme, to him friendly and adherent, minding to take time when time serued, called a great counsail both of Lordes spirituall and temporall, and to them repeated the tytle, and right that he had to the realme, and dignitie royall: rehersing the articles of the agreement, not only concluded between King Henry, and hys Noble father, Rychard Duke of Yorke, by their writings signed and sealed: but also corroborated and confirmed by aucthoritie of the high Courte of Parliament: the breaches whereof, he neither forgat, nor omitted vndeclared. After the Lordes had considered and weighed his tytle and declaration, they determined by aucthoritie of the sayde counsayle, for as much as king Henry contrary to his othe, honor and agreement, had violated and infringed the order taken and enacted in the last parliament, and also because he was insufficient to rule the realme, and unprofitable to the common wealth, he was therefore by the aforesayde aucthoritie, depriued and dejected of all kingly honor, and regall souereintie. And incontinent, Edwarde Erle of Marche, sonne and heyre to Richarde Duke of Yorke, was by the Lordes in the sayde counsayle assembled, named, elected, and admitted, for king and gouernour of the realme: on which day, the people of the Erles parte being in their muster in saint Iohns field, and a great number of the substantiall Citezens there assembled to beholde their order: sodainely the Lorde Fawconbridge which tooke the Musters, wisely declared to the multitude, the offences and breaches of the late agreement done and perpetrated by king Henry the sixt, and demaunded of the people, whether they would have the sayde king Henry to rule and reigne any longer ouer them: To whome they with a whole voyce, aunswered nay, nay. Then he asked them, if they would serue, loue, and obey the Erle of March, as their earthly prince, and souereigne Lorde. To which question they aunswered, yea, yea, criving king Edward, with many great showtes and clapping of handes. The Lordes were shortly aduertised of the louing consent which the commons frankely and freely of their free will had geuen, whervoon incontinent, they all with a convenient number of the most substanciall commons, repaired to Baynardes Castell, making just and true reporte to the Erle of their election and admission, and the louing assent of the faythfull commons. The Erle after long pausing, first thanked God of his great grace and benefite, then to him declared and shewed, and the Lordes and commons also, for their hartie fauour, and assured fidelitie, and notwithstanding that like a wise prince, he alleged his insufficiencie for so great a rome and weyghty a burden, as lacke of knowlege, want of experience and divers other qualities to a governour apperteyning: yet in conclusion he beyng perswaded by the Archebishop of Cauntorbury, the bishop of Excester and other Lordes, then being present, graunted to their peticion, and tooke vpon him the charge, and vpon the next day, beyng the fourth day of Marche, he as king rode to the Church of Saint Paule, and there offered. And after Te deum song, with great solempnitie, he was conveyed to Westminster, and there sat in the Hall, with the Scepter royall in his hand, where to all the people which there in great number were assembled, his tytle and claime to the crowne of England was declared by two maner of waies: the first, as sonne & heyre to Duke Richard his father, right enheritor to the same: the second, by aucthoritie of Parliament and forfeiture committed by king Henry. Whervpon it was againe demaunded of the commons, if they would admit and take the sayde Erle as their prince and soueriegne Lorde, which all with one voyce cryed, yea, yea. Which agreement concluded, he entred into Westminster Church vnder a Canapy, with solempne procession, and there as king offred and after the homages taken of all the nobles there present, he returned by water to London, and was lodged in the Bishops Palace: daylie making prouision to go Northwarde agaynst his aduerse faction and open enemies, and on the morow he was proclaymed king, by the name of king Edwarde the fourth, throughout the Citie. these things were in doyng in the Southpart, King Henry being in the Northcountrie, thinking because he had slayne the Duke of Yorke, the chiefe Capitayne of the contrary lypage, that he had brought all thing to purpose and conclusion as he would, assembled a great great armie, trusting with little paine, and small losse, to destroy the residewe of his enemies, whome he esteemed to be of no force. But he was sore deceyued: for out of the dead stock, sprang a strong and mighty braunch, which by no meanes could either be broke, or made sere: which was this king Edward the fourth, which was so beloued and fauored of the people, that no man was spoken of, no person was remembred but onely he: for he was so much estemed, both of the nobility & commonalty, for his liberality, clemency, integrity, and courage, that aboue all other, he was extolled & praised to the very heauen. By reason wherof men of al ages & of all degrees to him daylie repayred. some offering themselves and their men to jeopard their lifes with him, & other plentcously gaue him money, to support his charges and maintaine his war. By reason wherof, he assembled together a puyssant army, to the intent to geue to his enimies a fierce and a sharpe battaile, & so in one day to obtein his purpose, & make an ende of al his trouble. When his army was redy, & al things prepared, he departed out of London the. xij. day of March, and by easy iourneis came to the Castel of Pomfret, where he rested, apointing the Lord Fitzwater to kepe y passage at Ferybridge, with a great number of talle personages. Let no man thinke or yet imagine, y either the counsayle of king Henry, or his vigilat Quene, either neglected or forgat to know or serch what their enimies did, but they prepared to their power al the men, that they eyther could perswade or allure to their purpose to take their part. And thus thinking themselves furnished, comitted the governance of the armie to the Duke of Sommerset, the Erle of Northumberland, & the Lorde Clifford, as men desiring to revenge v death of their parents slain at the first battaile of S. Albons. These noble Captaines, leaving king Henry, his wife & sonne, for their most safegard in § City of Yorke, passed the river of Wharfe with all their power, entending to prohibite king Edward to passe ouer the river of Ayre, & for the more expedition & exployt of their purpose (after many comparisons made between the Erle of Northumberland, and the Lorde Clifford, both being in lusty youth, & of franck courage) the Lord Clifford determined with his light horseme, to make an assay to such as kept the passage of Ferybridge, & so departed from the great armye on the Saturday before Palmsonday, & early or his enimies were ware, gat the bridge, and slue the kepers of the same, & all such as did withstand him. The Lord Fitzwater hering the noise, sodainly rose out of his bed, and vnarmed, with a Pollax in his hand, thinking that it had bene a fray amongst his men, came down to appese the same, but or he eyther began his tale, or knew what the matter ment, he was slaine, & with him the bastard of Salisbury, brother to the Erle of Warwike, a valiant yong gentleman, & of great audacity. When the Erle of Warwike was informed of this feat, he like a man desperate mouted on his hackney, & came blowing to king Edward, saiyng: syr, I pray God haue mercy of their soules, which in y beginning of your enterprise have lost their lives, and because I see no succours of the world, I remit the vengeance & punishment to God our creator and redemer, & with that lighted down and slue his horse with his sword, saiyng: let him flie y wil, for surely I will tary with him that wil tary with me. The lusty king Edward, perceiving the corage of his trustie friend the Erle of Warwike made proclamation that al men, which were afraid to fight, should incontinent depart, & to al them that taried the battaile, he promised great rewards with this addition, that if any Souldiour, which voluntaryly would not abyde, & in or before the conflict flye, or turne his back, that then he that coulde kyll hym, shoulde have a great rewarde, and double wages. After this proclamacion ended, the Lorde Fawconbridge, sir Water Blont, Robert Horne wyth the foreward, passed the ryuer at Castelforde three myles from Fere- The conflict at bridge, entendyng to haue enuyroned, and enclosed the Lorde Clyfforde, and hys com- Furebridge. pany, but they being thereof aduertised, departed in great haste towarde kyng Henryes armye, but they met with some that they looked not for, and were attrapped or they were For the Lorde Clyfforde, eyther for heate or payne, putting of his Gorget, sodaynely wyth an arrowe (as some say) wythout an hedde, was striken into the throte and incontinent rendered his spirite, and the Erle of Westmerlandes brother and all his company almost were there slayne, at a place called Dintingdale, not far from Towton. This ende had he which slew the yong Erle of Rutlande, kneelyng on his knees: whose yong sonne Thomas Clifforde, was brought vp with a Shepperd, in poore habite, and dissimuled behaviour euer in feare, to publish his linage or degree, till king Henry the. vii. obtavned the Crowne, and gatte the diademe: by whome he was restored to hys name and possessions. When this conflict was ended at Ferebridge, the Lorde Fawconbridge, having the forewarde, because the Duke of Northfolke was fallen sick, valiauntly vpon Palmsunday in the twylight, set forth his army, and came to Saxton, where he myght apparauntlye perceyue the host of his aduersaryes, which were accompted. lx. M. men, and thereof aduertised kyng Edwarde, whose whole armye, they that knewe it, and paved the wages, affirme to be. xlviij. M.vj. C. and. lx. persons, which incontinent with the Erle of Warwike set forward, leavyng the rereward vnder the gouernaunce of Sir Iohn Wenlock, and Syr Iohn Dynham and other. And first of all he made proclamation, that no prisoner should be taken, nor one enemie saued. So the same day about nine of the clock, which was the xxix. day of Marche, beyng Palmesunday, both the hostes approched in a plaine fielde, betweene Towton and Saxton. When eche parte perceyued other, they made a great showte, and at the same instant time, there fell a small suite or snow, which by violence of the winde was driven into the faces of them which were of king Henries parte, so that their sight was somewhat blemished and minished. The Lord Fawconbridge, which led the foreward of king Edwardes battayle (as before is rehersed) being a man of great pollecie and of much experience in marciall feates, caused every archer vnder his standard, to shoote one flight (which before he caused them to prouide) and then made them to stand still. The Northren men feeling the shot, but by reason of the Snowe, not well vewyng the distaunce betwene them and their enemies, like hardy men shot their sheafe arrowes as fast as they might, but all their shot was lost, and their labor vaine, for they came not nere the Southren men, by. xl. Taylors yardes. When their shot was almost spent, the Lorde Fawconbridge marched forwarde with his archers, which not onely shot their whole sheues, but also gathered the arrowes of their enimies, and let a great parte of them flie agaynst their awne Maisters, and another part they let stande on the ground, which sore noved the legges of the owners, when the battail ioyned. The Erle of Northumberland, and Andrew Trollop, which were chiefetaynes of king Henries Vawgard, seyng their shot not to preuayle, hasted forward to joyne with their enimies: you may be sure the other parte nothing slacked, but valyauntly fought with their enimies. This battaile was sore foughten, for hope of lyfe was set on side on every parte, and taking of prisoners was proclaimed as a great offence, by reason whereof euery man determined, eyther to conquere or to die in the field. This deadly battayle and bloudy conflict, continued ten houres in doubtfull victorie. The one part sometime flowing, and sometime ebbing, but in conclusion king Edwarde so courageously comforted his men, refreshing the werie, and helping the wounded, that the other part was discomfited and ouercome and like men amased fled toward Tadcaster bridge to saue themselues: but in the meane way there is a little brooke called Cock, not very broad, but of a great deepenesse, in the which, what for haste of escaping, and what for feare of followers, a great number were drent and drowned, in so much that the common people there affirme, that men alvue passed the ryuer vpon deade carcasses, & that the great riuer of Warfe, which is the great sewer of that brooke, & of all the water comming from Towton, was coloured with blood. The chase continued all night, and the most parte of the next daye, and euer the Northren men, when they sawe or perceyued any advauntage, returned againe and fought with their enemies, to the great losse of both parties. For in thys three daves were slayne (as they that knew it wrote) on both partes. xxxvj. M.vij. C.lx. and. xvj. persons, all Englishe men and of one Nation, whereof the chiefe were the Erles of Northumberland and Westmerland, and the Lorde Dakers, the Lorde Welles, syr Iohn Neuel, Andrew Trolop, Robert Horne, and many other Knightes and Esquiers, and the Erle of Deuonshire taken prisoner, but the Dukes of Sommerset and Excester fled from the field and saued themselues. This conflict was in maner vnnaturall, for in it the sonne

The conflict at Saxton on Palme sonday.

The battaile of Towton or Sherborne.

A great slaughter of Englishmen. fought against the father, the brother against the brother, the Nephew against the Vincle, and the tenamt agaynst hys Lorde, which slaughter did sore and much weaken the puyssance of thys realine, considering that these dead men, when they were liuving had force yough to resist the greatest princes power of all Europe: But also gaue a courage to outward enimies, and forreyn Potentates, to inuade and make warre in this realme, which thing was not valikely to have ensued, if eyther Lewys the french king had bene at this time quiet in his realme, or lames king of Scottes had bene of age and Maister of himselfe, yet thanked be God, for although the gate of a conquest were opened, yet it was shut againe or it was espyed. After this great victorie, king Edwarde rode to Yorke, where he was with all solempnitie receiued: and first he caused the heades of his father, the Erle of Salisbury, and other his friendes to be taken from the gates, and to be buried with their bodyes. And there he caused the Erle of Deuoushire and three other to be behedded, and set their heades in the same places. After that, he sent out men on light horses, to espie in what part king Henry lurked, which heering of the discomfiture and losse of his friendes, departed incontinent with his wyfe and sonne, to the towne of Barwike, and leaving the Duke of Sommerset there, came to the Kinges Court of Scotland, requiring of him and his counsaile, ayde, succour, reliefe and comfort. The yong king having compassion on the miserable fate and great mischance of this sorowfull man, not onely comforted him with favre words and friendly promises, but also assigned to him a competent pencion to live on, during the time of hys abode within the Realme of Scotland. King Henry considering the great humanitie, shewed to him by the Scottish king, in whome onely nowe consisted the whole hope and especiall trust of his ayde and succour, thought to binde King Henry the the sayde king with some great benefite to his parte, and for y cause delivered to him the sixt delivered the towns of towne of Barwike vpon Twede: which towne the Scottes many yeres had desired, but Barwike into yet they neyther by force nor fayre promises, could obtevue their desire or purpose be- lames king of fore that time. Some wryters affirme that he not voluntarily, but constreyned by neces- Scotlande. sitie, rendered the same towne, or else he coulde not be permitted once to enter, or haue any succour in the realme of Scotlande. But whatsocuer the cause was: after king Iames had taken possession of the towne, he friendly entertayned and faythfully supported the part and faction of king Henry, and concluded a mariage between his sister and the yong prince of Wales, which mariage, Philip Duke of Burgoyne, enemie to Quene Margarets father, labored much to breake and interrupt: but by the consent of both the friends the matrimony was agreed, but it was never solempnised, as after you shal heare. When king Henry was somewhat setteled in the realme of Scotland, he sent his wyfe and hys sonne into Fraunce, to king Reyner her father, trusting by his ayde and succour to assemble a great armie, and once agayne to possesse his realme and dignitic, and he in the meane season determined to make his abode in Scotlande, to see and espie, what waye his friendes in Englande woulde studie or invent for his restitution and advauncement. But whether it were his destinie or his follie, he so imprudently demeaned himselfe, that within short space, he came into the handes of his mortall enimies. Quene Margaret thus being in Fraunce, did obteyne and impetrate of the yong French king, that all fautors and louers of her husband and the Lancastreall bande, might safely and surely have resorte into any part of the realme of Fraunce, prohibityng all other of the contrary faction, any accesse or repaire into that Countrie.

Thus you have hearde the variable chaunce and lamentable history of King Henry the sixt, which had reigned ouer this realme. xxxviij. yeeres and odde Monethes, which the tenth yere after his deposicion, was agayne erected to his throne and estate royall, as after shall be declared. Now leaving kyng Henry with the Princes of his faction, consultyng together in Scotland, and Queene Margaret his wyfe gathering men together in Fraunce,

I will returne to the actes of King Edwarde.
